In the wake of a serious carbicycle accident last Friday, the Iowa City Police Department is stressing to the public the dangers involved when a cyclist chooses not to obey traffic laws.

The police department has stepped up their enforcement effort with the addition of permanent bicycle patrols in the downtown area. The patrols enforce traffic laws for bicyclists as well as vehicles.

Troy Kelsay, a bicycle patrol officer, said he has been busy enforcing Iowa City's bike codes. Kelsay's patrol includes the downtown commercial district, including the Pedestrian Mall. Bicycling is illegal on the sidewalks in the commercial district.

Just don't expect many UI students to offer the service of Internet-order brides a favorable endorsement.

"It is degrading to women," said UI junior Joanne Chang. "First of all, I don't think there should be mail-order brides. This is selling yourself."

Chang is talking about the new crop of Web sites that cater to men on the lookout for would-be brides. Women from all over the world, especially the Philippines and Russia, have posted pictures and biographies on the Web through companies for men to browse.

"I would never do something like this," Chang said. "I know this is a hi-tech sort of way to do it. They don't have to go through the mail. Now it's like you say: click and matrimony."

Although Chang said she disagrees with having such sites on the Web, she said individuals should be allowed to decide for themselves.

r bike on the sidewalk," Kelsay said. "In some cases, you can ride your bike on one side of the street, but not the other."

Kelsay tickets cyclists for violations such as riding on the sidewalk, riding the wrong way in traffic and riding across the Pedestrian Mall. Each of these violations is a $28 ticket.

"It's a bit harsh," Kelsay said, "but it's going to stop people from doing it again."

Although he said the number of Pedestrian Mall violations have decreased in recent years, he attributes most of the violations to the lack of signs around the Pedestrian Mall. Kelsay said the signs warning cyclists of the illegality of riding in the Pedestrian Mall are missing in some places and poorly placed in others.

Other violations Kelsay sees are cyclists running red lights and stop signs, riding the wrong way on a one-way street and generally not behaving in accord with bicycle traffic laws - laws which are nearly identical to that of cars.

"You can be a pedestrian," Kelsay said, "or you can be a vehicle. You can't be both."

Kelsay said the penalties for a cyclist running a stop sign or a red light can be as high as $48 - the penalty given to a car driver for the same viola-

'A joke turned deadly': 8 die in fireworks store

Mark Williams Associated Press

12 INJURED

SCOTTOWN, Ohio - One minute, about 40 shoppers were browsing the aisles of a store packed floor to ceiling with fireworks. The next, a customer yelled, "It's going to blow!"

The crowd stampeded for the front door as firecrackers and bottle rockets exploded in every direction inside Ohio River Fireworks, a cinderblock building about the size of a double-wide trailer.

Sheriff Roy Smith said a young man, egged on in a prank by two others, had set fire to a box of firecrackers with a lighted cigarette or a lighter.

Neighbors of the 24-year-old suspect said he had the mental capacity of a 12-year-old and a history of odd behavior.

All three escaped out the back door, according to the store owner's daughter, who said she had refused to sell them fireworks the day before.

Eight people, including two children, were killed, and 12 were injured.

"In 15 seconds, it was all over," Freddie Burcham, assistant fire chief in Windsor Township, said Thursday. "It was awful."

The store was packed along the walls and on three center aisles with fountains, bottle rockets and other small fireworks.

Panic erupted so quickly that Goldie Mann, a 38-year-old Scottown woman who stacks fireworks at the store, said she never saw the fire - she dashed for the door as soon as she heard the customer yell.

"It was going bang bang and I was getting out of there," said Ms. Mann who was pushed out by a wave of people pressing for the door.

The dead were found packed on top of each other just a few feet from the front door.

Adventurers re-enact Mormon pilgrimage

A century and a half after Brigham Young led the Mormons across the Midwest to the Rocky Mountains, modern day pioneers from all over America are re-enacting the great migration.

Participants are joining hands in recreating the long journey that began in 1846 when wagons were ferried across the Mississippi River from Nauvoo, Ill., to Montrose, Iowa. From there a migration by foot, handcart and covered wagon began, which spanned nearly 13,000 even Brazil have come to take part.

"I think anybody that had the determination that they had is worth the trip to see what they experienced," said J.C. Davison of Corydon, Iowa. Davison, along with partner Terry Jost, sold the Corydon State Bank in order to purchase a team and wagon and have the free time to be able to make the trip. Mark Seely, a Utah State University student, agreed with Davison.

"I had ancestors on my mom's side that actually pulled handcarts from Iowa City," he said. "I wanted to take on this challenge for the adventure, but primarily I want to honor my ancestors who did it before me, to develop a love for them. You can't really know how a person actually felt when they came across Iowa until you do it yourself."

Although the goal of Seely and some others is to recreate the experience of their predecessors, many are only able to join the procession for a short time.

> "If you're gonna be a bear, you might as well be a grizzly," he said of his desire to see the trip through.

Known to some as "Tennessee" John, he has a unique, adventurous spirit seemingly misplaced in today's hectic world.

Stewart brought his team of mules up from Tennessee at the request of trails director Mike Foley.

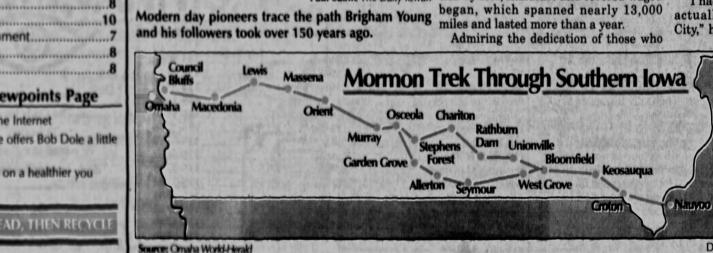

"John is a real character and very good with the animals," Foley said. "He has lots of trail experience and was director of the Bicentennial Tennessee Wagon Train.'

Stewart hitched his team up with two wagons owned by Floyd Hohl. The two wagons soon became one train after an unfortunate accident early in the trip.

"One morning we found some wet pavement and the mule slipped and ran his leg into a metal guardrail," Hohl said. "So John hitched the two wagons together and now we have three mules pulling two wagons."

The request for an IRS records check for Emery was made Dec. 17, 1993, by Anthony Marceca, according to Marceca's documents. Marceca is the Army civilian employee at the center of the controversy over hundreds of confidential FBI background files the Clinton White House improperly gathered on former Reagan and Bush administration employees. Marceca's documents suggest the White House believed Emery hadn't had a background check in seven years, even though all White House employees are supposed to be investigated every five ears. Emery, however, said Wednesday he made it clear to the FBI and to his boss that he had had a

"Everyone in the office thought it was very unusual," Emery said in an interview. "We were convinced that this was part of a purge, that they felt we were not loyal.

Marceca's boss - ex-White House personnel security chief Craig Livingstone - and former presidential lawyer William Kennedy have testified to a House committee they did not believe any White House employees were forced to undergo background checks out of order.

But an FBI agent who worked at the White House has told Senate investigators there was another White House residence worker's background probe done prematurely

Marceca's documents show he had requested IRS checks on at least 100 current employees during his stint in Livingstone's office from late 1993 to early 1994. The request for Emery was included with those of 27 other employees, most working in the White House residence.

Emery was fired March 3, 1994 after nine years as a White House usher, over Rodham Clinton's concerns that he had telephoned former first lady Barbara Bush to help her with a computer problem. At the time, Rodham Clinton's office said the firing occurred because Emery showed "an incredible lack of discretion." News reports said Rodham Clinton's staff was concerned Emery had discussed personal matters about the Clintons with Barbara Bush.

Phi Beta Kappa's membership list boasts U.S. presidents and Fortune 500 CEOs. But now, some students are rejecting the prestigious society, calling it nothing but a résumé pad.

Phi Beta Kappa's national governing body released a survey in May that found 15 percent of all students invited to join in 1995 refused membership to the honorary society. The statistic is a mystery to Phi Beta Kappa's directors, as well as to UI Phi Beta Kappa faculty adviser Laird Addis.

Phi Beta Kappa is a national organization with 248 active chapters, and about 375,000 members. Not every university has a chapter. Addis said the UI's chapter is very old and very active.

Addis said despite the national decline, the UI's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa is unique because it is the only chapter in the nation that has students serving as club officers. Every other club has faculty officers.

UI senior Tom Stricker, who will be serving as co-treasurer of Phi Beta Kappa during the 1996-97 school year, said he had no reservations about joining the society.

"It's a pretty well-reknowned society," Stricker said. "And there are lots of advantages to being a member."

Stricker said the society's main functions are bringing in lecturers and planning the initiation of new members each semester.

Phi Beta Kappa membership strong at UI

Addis said Phi Beta Kappa has grown in the five years he has been serving as adviser.

"Of course, not everyone invited to join does join," Addis said. "But my impression is a decrease is not the case.

Stricker said he didn't know of anyone who was invited to join Phi Beta Kappa and chose not to join.

"I don't know why anyone wouldn't," Stricker said.

Phi Beta Kappa is a traditionally senior honors society composed of the top 10 percent of each senior class. Members are invited to apply based on their academic record and are selected by a committee composed of student officers.

David Klemm, director of the UI Honors Program, said the opportunities for honors students at the UI are many, only one of which is membership in Phi Beta Kappa.

"We help Phi Beta Kappa out, but they're not sponsored by the Honors Program," Klemm said. "We give them a place to meet, a place to keep their files and a mailing address.

Klemm said there are several other honors societies students can be elected to at the UI. These include mortar board, Omicron Delta Kappa and the freshman honors society Phi Eta Sigma.

Klemm said Phi Eta Sigma is a very active chapter at the UI whose. membership has been increasing.

"There are other societies out there," Klemm said, "but the most prestigious of them all is Phi Beta Kappa."

Addis attributes the steady participation in Phi Beta Kappa to the society's long history and distinguished reputation.

"I think it remains the case that Phi Beta Kappa is the most prestigious organization of academic achievement," Addis said. "It's a mark of a very high level of academic achievement, and wherever that's important it can be an indication of better opportunities."

Stricker said he is already utilizing Phi Beta Kappa's status as a résumé booster.

Selling brides on the Internet isn't a new concept. The commodification of marriage and love has been around for a long time.

't's an American tradition even though it's morally reprehensible. Having long been regarded as almost comical, it maintains an uneasy acceptance in our culture. Now buying a bride through the mail has become easier thanks to the miracle of the Internet. The buying and selling of humans has moved into the so-called Cybernetic

Age. The Net is idealistically conceived as a medium of exchange in The Net is idealistically conceived as a medium of exchange in which information is the commodity. It is now more a home for advertisements, flyers and billboards dressed in new terminology: home pages, interactive programs — anything one can prefix with the abstraction "virtual" becomes as ultramodern as brushed stainless steel. But it's still the same tired schlock Madison Avenue hucksters have been pedaling for years. It was inevitable that flesh merchants should join the high-tech fray and conceive their grotesque offspring, as the mad computer Proteus did with Julie Christie in "Demon Seed."

Like the unnatural spawn of that sci-fi horror flick, the union of capitalism and emotion dehumanizes the idyllic concept of marriage as a joining and a commitment founded on a combination of mutual trust, attraction and love. Sex, as it's practiced, is an important defining feature of our humanity, but by itself is insufficient to base a marriage on.

This commodification of the body has seen many forms throughout the centuries of human civilization, slavery being the most appalling example, beauty pageants the silliest. E-mail order bride services rank somewhere in between.

Yet the Internet is a strangely appropriate venue for that kind of market. Advertising has always suggested the possible outcome of using certain products; the suggestion is usually sex. Virtual sex and sex on-line likewise imitate physical delights without the baggage of emotion and commitment attached. Science fiction has portrayed a similar vision for decades, from the robot seductress in the 1926 film "Metropolis" to the beautiful women (and men) available for use on one of "Star Trek" 's holodecks.

Unlike these virtual people, the brides for sale on the Internet do come with emotions, yet are willing to subject themselves to becoming trade merchandise to escape whatever bad situations they are in. They enter into these transactions in the hopes that their new American husbands can provide not only a better life materially, but emotionally as well.

There are no such guarantees. The fleshmongers running this market do not hold themselves responsible for any happiness but for that of filling their own pocketbooks. Their type will always be with us, finding new angles and oozing into the cracks of society until we decide not to put up with their kind of business anymore.

You don't know me, but you should. Two summers ago, I offered my political consultant services for a pittance to Kathleen Brown, Democratic gubernatorial candidate in California. She never responded. The result was her comfortable lead evaporated, and Pete Wilson went on to win.

I can't take complete credit for Wilson's victory, since I wasn't in California at the time, but the snub did turn me bitterly against the Democrats, and while I haven't actually gotten around to registering Republican, my heart's in the right place.

Anyway, I've got some bad news for you, in case you haven't heard. The latest Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll has you trailing Bill Clinton by 17 points. Even though 51 percent of

Take it from me here at The Daily Iowan, the voice of the heartland. People don't really care about superior moral values in a president. Maybe after Richard Nixon they did - briefly. He was a war criminal, but he was our war criminal. You get my drift. Forget the character thing.

No, the real problem, Bob, is one of perception. People just perceive you as too durned old. Jim Meisner's editorial on the drinking age (DI, June 26, "No reason to change the drinking age law") was a nearsighted commentary that totally neglected the issues of education and personal responsibility. Meisner's analogy between the lowering of the drinking age and legalization of crack cocaine exemplifies this inane attitude by a puritanical pundit. Such rhetoric does nothing constructive for our society, which already makes drinking a taboo issue for young adults. Rather than educate our youth on how to drink responsibly (as done in many European countries where drinking age limitations are rare), our society creates sneaky generations.

'Credence' to important academic issues

To the Editor:

In making the claim that "rigorous Intellectual endeavor has given way to facile ideological moralizing" in today's universities, (DI, June 28, "The new norm in academia") Gary Levine states that "there aren't too many (job) openings for lazy radical moralists." He follows this smug excuse for insight with a brilliant example of lazy conservative moralizing: "Whether we like it or not, we live in Western Civilization ... we might even conclude that Western Civilization is not such a bad thing after all. '

Perhaps if Levine were to give the lightest bit of credence to issues of "race, class (and) empire" in today's literary studies (pay attention in class, perhaps), it would dawn upon him that the comforts of his Western ways come largely thanks to an impressive history of exploitation, extermination and denigration of indigenous non-Western populations by Europeans. Is Levine's crude, cartoonish evocation of Native Americans as huddled wigwam dwellers supposed to make the few Native Americans about the issue, but if Meisner is so worried about people drinking and driving, why doesn't he focus on the relatively weak penalties offenders in this country receive compared to the lifetime bans some Scandinavian countries have enacted?

be a result of societal education

Meisner is right on one point however. Legal or not, young adults are going to drink if that is their choice. Prohibition didn't work in the '20s and it doesn't work now. Unfortunately, today's youth doesn't have the political voice to ask "If we're not hurting anyone else, then why does it matter?"

remaining on this continent feel better about the often miserable conditions on reservations that began as little more than concentration camps so Europeans could "properly use" the land? Gee, Levine, I suppose the Hutus and Tutsis of Rwanda, along with the rest of Africa, have been completely unaffected by Western colonial exploitation and the subsequent drawing of artificial boundaries in the name of benevolent Western patronage

If only they would pay heed to the shining beacon of the West! Then they might take the time and trouble to travel to far off places and exterminate absolute strangers, justifying their actions based on such unassailably right criteria as skin color or religion. And Levine, how about another torched Black church for a "charming, home-grown example of how to resolve cultural antagonisms in a multi-ethnic state"?

Your column reeks of the over-simplifying, self-righteousness of the typical lazy conservative moralist. Keep on chewing your intellectual cud, bud. The truth is thorny - heaven forbid academia serve up anything other than the same old fodder of our fathers.

Superman never had an Abdominizer

What I want to know is: Why is it important to have visible stomach muscles?

I grew up in an era (the Paleolithic) when people kept their stomach muscles discreetly out of sight. Most of us didn't realize we HAD stomach muscles; the only people who ever actually saw them were courageous surgeons willing to cut through fat layers the thickness of the Cleveland white pages.

I'm not saying we weren't in shape. I'm just saying we had a different concept of what the shape should be. For example, our idea of a stud-muffin prototype male was somebody along the lines of George Reeves, who starred in the black-and-white TV version of "Superman," playing the role of the mild-mannered newspaper reporter Clark Kent, whom nobody ever suspected of being Superman because he disguised himself by wearing glasses. (It is a known fact that if you put on glasses, even your closest friends will not recognize you; that's why, despite all the eerie similarities, nobody has ever figured out that Sally Jesse Raphael and Mike Tyson are actually the same person.)

The TV Superman, who was more powerful than a locomotive, did not have visible stomach muscles. In fact, he didn't have much muscle definition at all; he pretty much looked like a middle-aged guy at a Halloween party wearing a Superman costume made from pajamas, a guy who had definitely put in some time around the onion dip. From certain angles he looked as though he WEIGHED more than a locomotive. But he got the job done.

When Superman arrived at the crime scene. he would knock down the door, played by a piece of balsa wood, and confront the criminals, who were usually suit-wearing men with harsh voices. (You had better-dresssed criminals in those days.)

"Superman!" the criminals would say. This was the signal for Superman to put his hands on his hips so the criminals could shout their revolvers at his chest, an effort that always caused Superman to adopt a bemused expression because, as a native of Krypton with special powers, he knew the criminals were shooting blanks. Then Superman would turn the criminal over to the police, played by Irish char-acter actors in the mid-'60s, after which he would fly in a horizontal position back to his secret fortress of onion dip.

The point is, in my era, Superman did not have visible stomach muscles, and neither did Hercules or Tarzan, who needed steel-reinforced vines. But now, suddenly, everybody is supposed have rippling abdominals. They are hot. If muscle groups were rock bands, the abdominals would be Hootie & the Blowfish. Turn on your television, and you will see the Abdominals People - and I do not wish to generalize here, but these people display the intelligence of sherbet - selling abdo al devices. demonstrating abdominal devices and of course, proudly showing off their abdominal muscles, which bulge and writhe beneath a thin sweaty layer of skin so the people look as though their smuggling pythons down there.

What I want to know is, why is this consid-ered attractive? And how important, really, are abdominal muscles? I mean, I'm sure they serve some medical function, such as keeping your intestines from falling into your lap, but do they have to be HUGE? Do these people who spend 17 hours a day building up their abdominals ever actually use them for any practical purose? If so, what? Moving furniture? ("OK, Thad, you push your awesome stomach muscles against THAT end of the bureau, and I'll push mine against THIS end, and we'll just ... Huh!

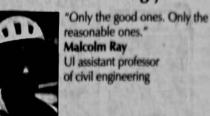

It's not moving!") What I also wan to know is: What's next? I mean, when the Abdominals People - formerly the Biceps People; formerly the Thighs People; formerly the Buns people - have made all the noney they can from our stomachs, where will they go? Are they going to work all the way through all of our muscles? Will there come a time, say 10 years from now, when they're going to announce we all need to build up, say, our eyelid muscles? Will we turn on the TV and ee commercials for the Lid-A-Cizer, featuring enthusiastic men and women with form-fitting workout outfits and bulging eyelids the size of golf balls? Are we going to fall for THAT, too? Or are we going to draw the line somewhere? Think about it!

And while you're thinking, pass the dip.

FDA approves over-the-counter nicotine patch

1WASHINGTON - A nicotine patch to help smok-lers kick their habit will go on sale in stores this month, after the government approved its sale without a prescription.

But Nicotrol by prescription hasn't proved a cureall for the cravings smokers experience as they try to quit. And the over-the-counter version won't either, the Food and Drug Administration said.

About 20 percent of smokers who tried non-pre-acription Nicotrol in tests succeeded in quitting for a month - about the same success rate as various other anti-smoking aids.

"If you still have cravings after six weeks, check with your doctor," said Dr. Debra Bowen, the FDA's director of over-the-counter drugs. "It can take a couple of tries for people to quit."

Smokers began buying nicotine chewing gum over the counter in April. But they also have called for non-prescription patches to send nicotine straight into the bloodstream.

The FDA approved Nicotrol on Wednesday, giving McNeil Consumer Products a jump on its competi-tors with one-dose nicotine patches smokers are supposed to apply once a day for six weeks. McNeil said smokers can buy the first non-prescrip-tion Nicotrol on July 18. An exact price wasn't named. Although it will be comparable to today's prescription price before insurance coverage kicks in, the switch may result in many smokers paying more because few insurers pay for over-the-counter drugs.

Attorneys familiar with Burrell say he won't hesitate to bar lawyers in the case from holding grandstanding news conferences in front of the John E. Moss Federal Building.

New hitches occur in finding a spot for Sharon in Netanyahu's government

JERUSALEM - Delaying resolution of Israel's latest political crisis, a partner in the governing coalition refused Thursday to contribute to a new ministry cobbled together to suit retired Gen. Ariel Sharon Deputy Housing Minister Meir Porush, head of the ultra-Orthodox United Torah Judaism party, refused to give up control of a rural construction agency.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu had promised a top ministry to Sharon, who helped secure Netanyahu's come-from-behind victory over Shimon Peres in the May 29 election. But Sharon, a champion of Jewish settlers and architect of Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon, was left out in the coalition negotiations to form the government.

On Wednesday, foreign minister David Levy threatened to leave the government, taking his Gesher Party with him, unless Sharon was brought in. Netanyahu needs Gesher to maintain his majority in parliament.

Dutch commander says he was unaware of alleged Srebrenica massacres refugees in a U.N. safe area defended his actions 1980. But the museum was outbid. Thursday, saying he and his troops had no inkling that thousands were about to be massacred.

Col. Ton Karremans told a U.N. war crimes tri- attack bunal Thursday that he was powerlessness against Gen. Ratko Mladic when Bosnian Serb troops overran the Muslim enclave of Srebrenica a year ago.

Karremans, whose picture holding wine glasses with Mladic was transmitted around the world, became a symbol of the United Nations' failure to prevent atrocities in Bosnia. He said he was hamstrung by unresponsive superiors.

"I asked for air strikes several times, I asked for close air support and when it finally came (a week after the attack on Srebrenica started) it was too late and too little," he said.

The tribunal is hearing evidence to spotlight charges of genocide and war crimes against Mladic and Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, who remain free.

The seven-day hearing focuses on prosecutors' claim Mladic was directly involved in massacring Muslim refugees forced out of the safe area of Srebrenica.

It is not a trial in absentia; no verdict will be rendered. Judges are expected to issue international arrest warrants for the two Bosnian Serb leaders.

After Bosnian Serb troops attacked July 6, 1995, most of the 40,000 Srebrenica refugees fled to a U.N. compound.

80 people killed in Burundi rebel

BUJUMBURA, Burundi - Armed gangs 4 attacked a tea factory in eastern Burundi, killing 80 people, Burundi radio reported Thursday.

The victims of Wednesday's attack included factory workers and residents of a nearby refugee camp, 15 miles northeast of the capital of Bujumbura, the radio said.

The attackers, who were not identified, caused considerable damage to the factory, burning all the stocks of tea, 20 vehicles and administration offices. The attack coincided with a stepped up campaign by the Tutsi-dominated military against Hutu rebels in the far northwest Cibitoke province. The campaign has forced about 4,500 refugees, most of them Hutus, to flee to neighboring Zaire and Rwanda since June 22.

At least 150,000 Burundians have died in spiraling ethnic violence since October 1993, when Tutsi paratroopers assassinated the country's first Hutu president.

U.N. officials have said they fear the simmering ethnic tensions in this Central African nation could calate into open war or a genocidal slaughter.

Black said his organization uses program called "Effective Cycling," which teaches the rules of the road to bikers and encourages such safety measures as helmets and hand signals to cyclists.

Kelsay said bicyclists often complain they don't receive respect from motorists. He attributes this to the lack of responsibility some cyclists exhibit when riding on roadways.

"What often happens," Kelsay said, "is that bikers weave in and isn't responsible behavior for a cyclist."

Black said he thinks most motorists respect cyclists, and the few who do not have probably had a bad experience with a cyclist who did not obey traffic laws.

"When a cyclist weaves in and out of traffic or rides through red

Dora Redmond, 36, the owner's daughter, told The Associated Press that a young man she spotted inside a police cruiser after the fire was one of three people she had refused to sell fireworks to the day before because they wouldn't sign a form promising to abide by Ohio law banning their use in the state

Redmond also said that she had seen the same three young men inside the store just before the fire, and that they fled through a rear door as the store went up in flames, The Columbus Dispatch reported Thursday.

"I believe that two of them put the third one up to it," the sheriff said. "They just wanted a little excitement. They just got a lot more than they wanted.'

Todd Hall of Proctorville was charged with eight counts of involuntary manslaughter. The charge carries up to 25 years in prison.

Lawrence County Prosecutor J.B. Collier Jr. said Hall suffered a head injury years ago that may have affected his mental behavior. He wouldn't elaborate, but said a psychological evaluation was planned.

A friend of family who answered the door Thursday at the one-story house where he lives with his father said the family wouldn't comment.

Several neighbors in the uppermiddle class subdivision several miles north of the Ohio River said Hall had the mental capacity of a 12-year-old and could have been talked into setting the fire.

Tom Nibert, who lives up the street, said Hall's behavior had become more troublesome in the past few months.

NEW YORK - Andy Pettitte became the American League's first 13-game winner and the New York Yankees stayed hot, beating the Milwaukee Brewers 4-1 Thursday. Hours after the Yankees shook up their mix by re-signing outfielder Darryl Strawberry, Pettitte (13-4) showed why the team may not need any re-tooling at all.

He won for the seventh time in eight starts, scattering eight hits over seven innings. He struck out four and walked none.

tal failure in the 1988 Seoul Olympics. Mitch Richmond and David Robinson were members of the U.S. team that lost to the Soviet Union in the men's basketball semifinals and came home with bronze medals. "It was a disgrace," Robinson said. "We shamed our country. I remember the feeling that everyone had, and it wasn't a fun feeling."

"It left a really bad taste in my mouth, and I think everyone felt that way,"said Richmond, ho hasn't even unpacked his bronze medal yet. He flew home eight years ago on "the longest airplane ride of my life," went to his mother's house in Fort Lauderdale and dropped off his bag.

"I haven't pulled it out, haven't looked at it. Sometime I'm going to, but I've got to get the gold medal first," he said Thursday.

The 1988 Olympics was the last time a team of collegians represented the United States in basketball. In 1989, a specially convened FIBA congress voted 56-13 to allow "open competition" in the Olympics.

Robinson was member of the 1992 team, and was able to derive a sense of atonement for the such chance - until now.

"I really want it," Richmond said. "It'll be sweet for some guys, but it'll be more sweet for me to get that gold. It would be my second gold medal, and we could be talking about me and Carl Lewis instead of the bronze medal."

"The one thing I remember is going up to get the medal," Robinson said. "Guys didn't even want to go up to the stand.

"All the years I had watched the Olympics on loss four years earlier. Richmond has had no TV, all those guys were so proud to get their medals. But I was right in the middle of it and we felt like we let everybody down. When your country wins every Olympic Games, and then you're the first team to go out there and lose without a major controversy, it's a distinction you don't want," Robinson said.

7. Purdue — Best of the rest. 8. Wisconsin - Tough midseason

10. Illinois - Needs to develop quality offense to go along with fine defense.

This year, Iowa faces Penn State,

"It's a difficult situation to be in," Martin said of the many downpours. "I don't remember ever being in a similar one, where there were so many rain delays. But I felt like the timing of the rain delays didn't affect the flow of the match."

Martin will play Washington, who came back from two match points in the fourth set and survived a barrage of 32 aces to beat Germany's Alexander Radulescu 6-7 (7-5), 7-6 (7-1), 5-7, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4.

"It's huge for me," said Washington, who hadn't gone past the second round in his previous six Wim-bledons. "Making the quarterfinals was nice, and if I had happened to lose the match today I wouldn't have gone home very happy, even though I would have had my best Wimbledon. But making the semifinals, that's pretty big. Especially fighting through a match like I did today. It adds a little something to the victory."

"It's so hard to accept some imes. Some of the line calls and the bounces, things don't happen for you every time you walk out there, and it definitely didn't happen for me.

"It's tough with all these rain delays. You really never feel like you're into the match. You just feel like it's so sporadic that you don't feel like you have any rhythm. WIMBLEDON, England - Pete Sampras' three-year dominion over Wimbledon ended with the longest and most frustrating match of his life, a 30-hour affair that left him looking hopeless and haggard on the court he thought was his home.

Two sets down when he took the court after a restless night and a second day of rain, a gaunt and unshaven Sampras lasted just 23 minutes Thursday against boyishfaced Dutch giant Richard Kra-jicek before falling 7-5, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4 in the quarterfinals.

Krajicek, a first-round loser the past two years at Wimbledon, closed out another in a stunning string of upsets at this year's tournament when he cracked his 29th ace and a service winner that Sampras barely touched with his racket frame.

One of the most bizarre Wimbledons in history has a men's semifinal lineup of Krajicek vs. Australian Jason Stoltenberg, and Todd Martin vs. fellow American MaliVai Washington. Martin, at No. 13, is the only seed among them, and a No. 13 seed has never won any Grand Slam tournament. Only one of the women's finalists was certain by nightfall last year's runner-up Aranxta anchez Vicario, who b ith McGrath 6-2, 6-1. Steffi Graf's rule as women's champion hung in abeyance in the dusky evening as she split sets in the semifinals against Japan's Kimiko Date. Graf won the first set 6-2 and held a 2-0 lead in the second set before Date swept six straight games to even the match in the fading light. They'll finish up Friday, weather permitting. Sampras, who had won so many close matches during a run of 25 victories at Wimbledon, knew he was probably headed for defeat when he left Wednesday night after seven hours of going on and off the court. He knew it more certainly when he was serving at 3-3 in the third set Thursday and Krajicek mis-hit a forehand that clipped the net cord and landed

Which Big Ten football team has gone the longest without reaching the Rose Bowl?

See answer on Page 9.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL Big Ten breakdown; Hawks are in the hunt

Now that the baseball All-Star break is upon us, we can all begin to put our focus where it really belongs - on the upcoming college football season.

More importantly, it's time to take a closer look at the Big Ten race. With any of five teams having a shot at the Rose Bowl, this could turn out to be one of the best Big Ten seasons in a long time. And the fact that Iowa is in that hunt makes it even more interesting. Keep in mind these findings are preliminary, and could easily be changed based upon the intimidation factor of the Iowa's new uniforms. 1. Ohio State - Eddie George, Bobby Hoying, Terry Glenn and Rickey Dudley are gone, but 10 defensive starters return to a team that was in the national title hunt late into last season.

Replacing their four stars will be a big concern for the Buckeyes, but if tailback Pepe Pearson and the new quarterback (whether it is Stanley Jackson or juco transfer Mark Garcia) stay behind All-American tackle Orlando Pace, Ohio State will find itself in Pasadena Jan. 1.

Another advantage for the Buckeyes is their schedule. They'll get an indication of where they are at into the B when they play at Notre Dame Sept. 28, and their two biggest inconference rivals - Penn State and Michigan - both travel to Columbus this year. 2. Penn State - The Nittany Lions finished fourth in the Big Ten last season, that after a year when they were 12-0 and nearly won a national title. I don't think Joe Pa and company are about to let the program slip any further. The Nittany Lions have to travel to Ohio State, Wisconsin and Michigan this year, which could make for some long plane rides back to Happy Valley. But if Paterno and company can manage to win two of these three road tests, they could still be reaching for roses in their season finale versus Michigan State. Paterno is going to have to reach

Yankees give Strawberry another chance

NEW YORK (AP) - Darryl Strawberry, proving his power is more important than his past problems, got yet another chance Thursday.

George Steinbrenner gave himself a big 66th birthday present and shook up his New York Yankees on the Fourth of July, re-signing the turbulent outfielder to a one-year contract with an option for 1997.

Strawberry, unwanted by Yankees general manager Bob Watson, immediately responded with his own fireworks. He hit a tworun homer in each of his first two at-bats with Columbus, the Yankees' Triple-A farm team.

"He never surprises me," said Dwight Gooden, Strawberry's once and future teammate. 'That's when he's at his best."

Strawberry hit .276 with three homers and 13 RBIs in 87 at-bats for the Yankees last summer, but was let go Nov. 30 after Steinbrenner hired a new manager and GM

After no major league club showed interest, Strawberry signed with the St. Paul Saints of the independent Northern League.

Rodriguez replaces Gwynn on NL All-Star team

NEW YORK (AP) - Montreal Expos outfielder Henry Rodriguez was picked Wednesday to replace the injured Tony Gwynn on the National League All-Star team.

Rodriguez, going into Wednesday, was hitting .292 with 25 homers and 69 RBI. He was tied for second in homers and tied for fourth in RBI.

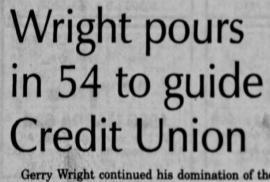

Rodriguez was chosen over Chicato Cubs outfielder Sammy Sosa, whose 26 homers lead the league.

Tim Dahlberg Associated Press

LAS VEGAS - Mike Tyson, suffering from bronchitis, pulled out Wednesday of his July 13 fight with WBA heavyweight champion Bruce Seldon, the third time in his last five scheduled fights he has had to postpone or cancel a bout.

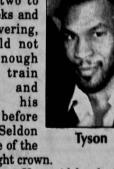

Doctors said Tyson had been sick for two to three weeks and was recovering, but would not have enough time to train properly and regain his strength before last night Tyson could not be prepared in time to fight.

"He is recovering, but not fast enough," Voy said. "In my opinion, he will not be ready for a heavyweight title fight in the next 10 days."

Promoter Don King said he will announce next week when the fight will be rescheduled. The prime date reportedly is Sept. 7, which would still allow Tyson to meet former champion Evander Holyfield in November.
