the first Dutch player to capture a major championship, and the second unseeded player ever to win
 Wimbledon, Krajicek dealt out 14 aces, punishing overheads and sixzig passing shots to beat American Andre Agassi 6-3, 6-4, 6-3.

A bizarre Wimbledon of unthinkable upsets, freak injuries and untimely rain delays could hardly have let the final Sunday pass without more wackiness — starting with the first streaker on Centre court and continuing with showers that halted play three times.

No sooner had the players picked up their rackets to pose for photog-

 21-year-old blond woman leaped from the stands, raced down the center of the court and, in front of the Royal Box, flipped up her only garment, a tiny white apron.

"The Duke of Kent was laughing like mad," said Peter Goord, a Centre court spectator. "She then ran into the policemen's arms. There was no way she was trying to get away."

Both players broke into laughter, and did most of the 14,000 fans, at the stunt by the woman who had been working at Wimbledon with a catering service.

"It was a little bit tight, and then she comes out," Krajicek said. "At least for me, it put a smile on my face. In a way, it was good. It broke the tension a little bit."

Walking back to the baseline,
 Agassi lifted his tennis shirt to bare his own chest and received a standing ovation.

Meat quality concerns Iowans

Kevin Ho
 The Daily Iowan

A recent incident of E. coli poisoning in an eastern Iowa restaurant and an announcement by President Clinton that sweeping changes in meat inspection will be made as soon as next week have many local citizens concerned about the prominence of disease in the meat products they consume.

Such businesses as the New Pioneer Co-Op, 22 S. Van Buren St., have benefited from this rise in concern and say the organically fed meat they sell reduces any possibility of disease.

"Personally, I think it's a premium product and it's handled with each step along the way and that it's a better choice," said Theresa Carbrej, education director of New Pioneer Co-Op. "It's slaughtered and handled with care because these people take so much pride in their product."

Maurice Finn, meat and seafood manager of New Pioneer Co-Op, said there has been a steady increase in demand for the store's organically fed meats over the past 15 years, even though consumers can expect to pay as much as $2 more per pound.

However, Jim Dickson, a microbiology and preventative medicine professor at Iowa State University, said there isn't a difference between regularly processed meat and organically fed meat.

"There is nothing inherent in an organically grown steer that makes it better than a regular steer, strictly from a microbiological (bacterial) standpoint," he said. "Contamination occurs from the process we use to convert a live animal to meat."

Concern about meat-borne diseases rose recently after a 2-year-old Marion boy was hospitalized after eating what his mother believes was an E. coli-infected cheeseburger at a local fast-food restaurant. State health officials are currently investigating the restaurant.

Iowa Department of Health spokesperson Kevin Teale said Friday there is one confirmed case of an E. coli infection and seven "possibles" in the Cedar Rapids/Iowa City area. There have also been reports recently in the Ottumwa and Waterloo areas.

Clinton announced his moves to improve meat quality during his weekly radio address Saturday. After 90 years of "poke and sniff" methods of meat inspection, new tests for meat and poultry products will be implemented to

Wen's life full of learning, questions

Jenn Snyder
 The Daily Iowan

A 13-year-old Coralville boy who was a talented artist, cellist and student died Thursday night due to asphyxiation by hanging — a tragedy his family calls an accident rather than suicide.

Felix Wen, a Northwest Junior High school student, was experimenting into the realm of death — one of his many interests — when his experiment failed and he was killed, his family said. His mother, Judy Wen found him Thursday evening hanging in his closet.

"There was no sign of a suicide," Judy Wen said. "There was nothing to cause it, no previous attempts. He wouldn't have tried to get out of it if it was a suicide."

Felix's parents said he was wearing his favorite kimono when they found him, presumably to protect his neck from the noose so he could release himself at the last moment before dying.

Judy Wen and Felix's father, B-Chen Wen, worried about their son's interest in death, but never saw it as suicidal tendency. One of Felix's closest friends, seventh-grader Kevin Bower, also said Felix's interest in death wasn't an obsession. "To him, death was the great unknown," Bower said. "He didn't fear death, he respected it. He saw death as an important part of life." Friends and family were still

As athletes from around the globe vie for Olympic gold, a group of 25-30 Cambus drivers will be taking part in the Atlanta games in their own way — by shuttling spectators and media personnel to and from the three weeks of events.

This Friday, the group of UI drivers will stray from their normal routes around the UI campus to drive shuttle buses from surrounding airports and lodging to the Olympic grounds for $9 per hour, free room and board and an opportunity to win tickets to events.

"It seems like a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to be able to say that I was a part of it, not just to say that I went to Georgia one summer," UI alumnus Aaron Jones said. "It's also an opportunity to make good money."

UI senior James Ericson heard about the need for bus drivers through a friend and sent a

IDENTIFIES MUTATIONS

UI researcher advances battle against AIDS

Katharine Horowitz
 The Daily Iowan

A UI medical researcher has made an important step in the struggle to understand an elusive HIV mutation that evades medication and renders some anti-HIV medication ineffective.

Naturally occurring mutations in HIV-infected patients have important implications on the outcome of HIV research and therapy. However, little has been known about the prevalence of such mutations.

Dr. Michael Kozal, a UI assistant professor of internal medicine, has found a way to identify these HIV mutations that may cause the body to resist protease inhibitors, a class of anti-HIV medications approved during the past year.

Using new technology developed by Affymetrix Inc. of California, Kozal analyzed viruses taken from 102 HIV-positive people from around the country using a technique that involved placing a sample of the virus' genetic material on a DNA silicon microchip, which was then scanned by a computer.

"We are using a new technology that can sequence genes of the virus in 15 minutes and amplify portions of it," Kozal said. "Using a DNA chip and a scanner, we scanned the chip and read the DNA sequence."

"We found a high prevalence rate of these mutations which suggest doctors may want to screen their patients for any evidence of drug resistant mutations prior to therapy."

Kozal assessed the molecular characteristics of the HIV protease gene that governs the production of an enzyme necessary for the virus to reproduce. He found a large number of variations in the gene, some of which are associated with resistance to medications and treatments that interfere with protease production.

"The enzyme that replicates in the HIV virus is very sloppy," Kozal said. "It puts a lot of mutations within its own genome, which is one way it's able to elude the immune system. This is the reason it's so difficult to develop a treatment for the HIV virus."

Kozal said many HIV-infected patients have developed negative reactions to anti-HIV serums. Many of the amino acid changes that are known to contribute to drug resistance occurred as natural polymorphisms in isolates from patients who had never received protease inhibitors.

"Within the genes of some viruses, we found some patients had HIV drug-resistant mutations already," Kozal said. "Those patients might develop resistance quickly even though they haven't seen any drug or treatment."

Kozal's discovery is the first clin-

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — A generation of young gay men across the industrialized world, tragically ignoring the lessons of the AIDS epidemic, risk a new wave of HIV infection by engaging in dangerous sex, researchers reported Monday.

The trend means substantial numbers of gay men who came of age after the AIDS epidemic was recognized are already infected, and many more will get the virus in the near future.

First spotted in San Francisco a few years ago, the pattern has now been documented across the United States, Europe and Canada.

"The epidemic of HIV among young gay men is not only an individual tragedy, but is certainly also a major public health concern," said John de Wit, a psychologist at the University of Utrecht in the Netherlands.

Spending three to five hours a day at Finkbine Golf Course perfecting his skills, UI junior John Rhomberg understands why golf's popularity is soaring.

"People enjoy golf because it's relaxing," said Rhomberg, a member of the UI golf team. "You can do it all your life. The trend is moving away from sports for young people like baseball and basketball to other types for participants of all ages."

Rhomberg and other golf enthusiasts are drawn to the sport as a summer escape to the great outdoors.

"It's an excuse to get out into the sun," UI junior Brad Graham said. "To be outside, throw back a few beers and have a good time with friends."

Graham said his favorite course is Pleasant Valley Golf Course.

"It's cheaper than Finkbine," he said. "It's a nice course, located nearby. It's a challenging course, but its not too hard."

Other top local choices are Finkbine Golf Course and the Amana Colonies Golf Course.

"Finkbine has a good layout," Rhomberg said. "None of the local courses are very difficult, but I play this one the most."

"My favorite hole is No. 13. It's the water hole with the island green. I make a lot of bogeys there, but it's a fun hole."

Iowa City resident Vernon Boenish agrees that Finkbine is the best local course.

"There are lots of holes with character," he said. "You can be as aggressive as you want, or, if your game isn't going well, you can play as conservatively as you need to and still be able to shoot a good round."

Other golfers look beyond Finkbine for their games.

"I like that there are a lot of blind shots," UI junior Nate Messingham said about the Amana Colonies course. "It's very hilly and makes for a very challenging course."

Often an expensive hobby, golf prices vary dramatically, even within the Iowa City area. Hi Point Golf Course, a nine-hole course in Iowa City, is the cheapest, charging only $6 on weekdays for nine holes, $3 for each additional nine holes.

The most expensive golf course is the Amana Colonies Golf Course, charging $27.50 for nine holes on weekdays and $49.50 for 18 holes.

This charge does, however, already include the rental of a motorized cart.

Only Finkbine has any sort of student discount rate. The course's daily rate is a flat rate for everybody, $20 for weekdays and $25 for weekends. The course does, however, have a five-play pass for students that costs $63 and allows the student to play the course five times.

Another popular way to play discount golf is to play twilight golf or sunrise golf. Courses offer twilight golf as a way to draw golfers in the late afternoons and evenings, providing cheaper rates that allow golfers to play as daylight runs out. The times vary from course to course, but the rates generally go into effect about 5 or 6 p.m.

Brown Deer Golf Club in Coralville offers sunrise golf in addition to twilight golf. Golfers who tee off between 7 and 8 a.m. play for the twilight rate of $10 for nine holes or $14 for 18 holes.

All local courses offer motor carts for rent, as well as pull carts and even clubs. Several also offer pro shops where equipment such as clothing, clubs and shoes can be purchased.

"People enjoy golf because it's relaxing. You can do it all your life. The trend is moving away from sports for young people like baseball and basketball to other types for participants of all ages."

Wage increase won't affect I.C. area

Kate Merkel-Hess
The Daily Iowan

As a divided Senate hashes out the details of the minimum-wage bill scheduled to meet its self-imposed vote deadline today, UI officials and Iowa City businesses say the increase would have little effect on the area.

The proposed wage increase may, or may not, affect the number of on-campus jobs available, said Cindy Seyfer, assistant director of the UI Office of Student Financial Aid. Many students already make well above the Iowa minimum wage of $4.65, Seyfer said, estimating the average student wage at about $5.25.

"Each department will have to review its budget to see if they can hire as many positions as before," Seyfer said. "There are going to be no additional funds for next year, so it's going to have to be an issue each deals with itself."

The proposed bill, which will raise the national minimum wage to $4.75 immediately and to $5.15 on July 1, 1997, has already passed the House by a vote of 281-144.

"The wage increase will not affect us at all," Victoria Gilpin, co-owner of Preferred Stock, 114 S. Clinton St., said. "As a matter of policy we pay even people in starting positions above minimum wage."

Other local businesses agreed, saying the bill will have little impact on their hiring practices or pay scale. At Hy-Vee Food Store, 501 Hollywood Blvd., many of whose employees are high-school and college students, the lowest wage paid is $4.85, but most employees make at least $5, Manager Alan Dix said.

"In some places (the increase) will make quite a difference, but here at Hy-Vee it won't be an issue," Dix said. "I don't think it will affect as many people as the politicians would have you think."

However, UI students say the increase, no matter how small, will make it easier for people to make a living and get through school.

"A lot of people are working to pay rent — the cost of living in Iowa City is so high," UI senior Jason Kendrick said. "Not everyone has their parents paying for everything."

Even if the increase makes things more difficult for small businesses, it is still necessary, Iowa City resident Brad Baker said.

"It's going to make it a little rough — some businesses are just getting by," Baker said. "But some people are just getting by."

Although Gilpin said she understands the importance of paying a living wage, she said she has mixed feelings about a bill which may hurt business.

"I'd rather see a business stay in business and pay $4.65 an hour than go out of business and not be able to pay anyone," Gilpin said.

Students bring hope to poverty-stricken Mexico

Peggy Kozal
The Daily Iowan

Two UI students chaperoned a journey to Mexico last month that involved with since 1988.

The shelter gives medical attention and meals to people with little or no means who would otherwise be left on the streets, said Bob Buckley, who has made the trip more than 10 times. Typical injuries seen at the shelter include badly broken bones, tuberculosis, pneumonia, snake bites and breach births.

Bodensteiner

"The Mexicans were very proud of what they had finished since the last time we were there. They wanted us to be visitors more than anything. Our role was more of an ambassador than a missionary."

UI senior Kelly Bodensteiner, who spent time in Mexico on a two-week mission

"It's mainly a pediatric unit where the people often come as a family unit," Buckley said. "The various indigenous people normally take care of their problems up in the hills, but come to the hospital when their curaderos, or spiritual healers, can't treat a very serious accident that needs sophisticated attention."

UI senior Chad Ragsdale said because he had been to Mexico once before and knows Spanish fairly fluently, he felt he could help the high-school students get the most out of the trip. Knowledge about how bartering worked and Mexican customs was beneficial in getting around, he said.

"They don't have a government like ours and would be destitute and left on the streets without us," Ragsdale said. "The people that we helped were really friendly and didn't ever beg us for money out of respect for what we were doing."

Bodensteiner said, however, the city of Oaxaca was very poverty-stricken and there were always many children begging for money.

"I have been told not to call it a Third-World country, but rather a developing nation," Bodensteiner said. "One of the only things keeping them from being like the U.S. is money."

"I never did get used to beggars approaching all the time. Most of the street vendors would send their kids, but you never saw the men begging. The little kids were the cutest and all over, but we tried our best to give everyone a peso or two."

Scholarships reward lefties, obese and even prostitutes

Helen O'Neill
Associated Press

Growing up in Michigan, Michele Schimmo's right-handed brothers loved to tease their kid sister about her squiggly, upside-down writing and the funny way she clutched a baseball bat.

But "little lefty" sis had the last laugh when her scorned hand turned golden.

It won her a scholarship to a private Pennsylvania college she could never have afforded as a run-of-the-mill "righty" and pointed the way to a post-graduate degree and career.

"It's my biggest asset," said the 24-year-old school social worker, who discovered the obscure scholarship for left-handed people at Juniata College in Huntingdon, Pa., after checking out dozens of other grants and scholarships.

Juniata's gem is one of thousands of oddball endowments scattered around the country. Many of these billions of dollars in private funds go untapped because people simply don't know the money is there — for the right candidate.

No wonder. The right candidate for one scholarship could be an overweight high school senior from New England, for another a teetotaling, non-smoker from Pennsylvania who loathes sports.

For a time, it was a "lady of the night" from Seattle. That short-lived educational adventure stemmed from a judge's efforts to clear Seattle's streets by providing prostitutes with the financial incentive to trade night work for college courses.

To be eligible, however, the women had to have been convicted and acknowledge it on their application — one likely reason the scholarship bombed.

But other weird and wonderful routes to higher education abound.

Whether you plan to study wild apes or loons, funerals or fungus, sex, Esperanto or pipe organs, someone somewhere is willing to pay.

"Private endowments total about $9 billion a year," said David Cassidy, president of the National Scholarship Research Service, which compiles an annual "Top 10" list of wacky scholarships. "There is a scholarship for everyone and every interest."

Of course, to get the money you must abide by the rules, which can be specific.

Take the Gertrude J. Deppen scholarship at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pa., awarded each year to a student from Mt. Carmel, Pa., a town some 30 miles distant, who "shall not be a habitual user of tobacco, intoxicating liquor and narcotics and shall not participate in strenuous athletic contests."

The scholarship was founded by Joseph Deppen, a millionaire bachelor lawyer known for his frugality and abstemiousness, who graduated from Bucknell in 1900. It is named for his sister.

"We don't act like Deppen police and go into the rooms and see if they are drinking beer," said Bucknell spokesperson Kathie Dibell, recalling one student who worried about losing his funding after he admitted to downing some weekend suds. "And, while they can't be on the football team, we tell them a little weekend golfing is OK."

MAY HAVE SMALL CONVENTION ROLE

Powell: Still no plans to campaign for Dole or Republican Party

John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Disappointing Republican leaders eager to tap his enormous popularity, Colin Powell said Monday he did not plan to campaign for presidential hopeful Bob Dole or any other GOP candidate this fall.

In an interview with AP Network News, Powell again said flatly he was not interested in serving as Dole's vice presidential running mate. He said he had been in touch with officials planning next month's Republican National Convention but "I don't know that I will play a role."

Dole has said recently he takes Powell at his word when the retired general says he is not interested in sharing the ticket. In any event, Powell's views on abortion and affirmative action would make him a tough sell to conservative GOP delegates.

Still, Dole has said he would turn to Powell for advice on defense and foreign policy matters and on several occasions has talked eagerly of the prospect of taking Powell along on campaign trips.

Other GOP leaders have spoken of finding ways for the party to involve Powell in congressional campaigns and perhaps fund-raising.

But when asked if he would help fellow Republicans this fall, Powell told the AP. "I don't want to go out. I don't plan to go out on the campaign or fund-raising trail. I am practicing my own politics privately."

Later, Powell told reporters he planned to vote for Dole and was certain he would speak to the GOP standard-bearer from time to time. He said he might appear publicly with Dole, but there were "not any plans to go out on the campaign trail."

Dole aides were disappointed by Powell's remarks but publicly played down their significance. "We still expect him to be an active supporter of Bob Dole," said campaign spokesperson Nelson Warfield. Dole and other leading Republicans, including GOP Chairperson Haley Barbour, have also talked of giving Powell a prominent role at the August nominating convention in San Diego. Powell said he did not want a major part but he was in touch with planners "seeing if there is a role I can play."

Spokesperson Bill Smullen said later Powell was not interested in being a candidate or the convention keynote speaker but was open to another role.

Powell conducted the AP interview as he promotes the paperback version of his best-selling memoir, "My American Journey." He said he had no second thoughts about his November decision to declare himself a Republican while ruling out a run for the presidency or any other elective office in 1996.

"I am a Republican and pleased to be a Republican," Powell said. "I am not anxious to be a major political figure at this time."

He did not rule out seeking political office in the future. "I haven't passed over yet," he said. "I'm not ready to go down to Hilton Head and sit in a rocking chair and drink gin fizzes."

As for his reluctance to campaign for other Republicans, he said, "I am still a retired general and I don't feel comfortable going around the country" telling people how to vote.

Powell said he had made only one exception to this policy, by attending a fund-raiser for Virginia GOP Sen. John Warner. Powell said Warner was a personal friend and Virginia was his adopted home state.

Powell noted he was "out of step with some of my political friends" in believing it was vital to continue affirmative action programs. Several months before he quit the Senate, Dole introduced legislation to end most federal affirmative action programs, although he rarely raises the issue in campaign speeches.

In a later interview on "The Derek McGinty Show" on public radio, Powell also said he believed it "shortsighted" to deny public education to the children of illegal immigrants. Dole has endorsed legislation that would give states that power. Powell said the United States should "solve our illegal immigration problem without taking it out on children."

Powell also restated his view that while he wished there were no abortions in America, "at the end of the day a woman should have the right to choose."

Dole supports a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion, with exceptions for rape, incest and to save the life of the mother.

But Dole also has called for softening the anti-abortion plank in the Republican platform by including a declaration of tolerance acknowledging differing views on the issue.

Without mentioning Dole by name, Powell spoke favorably of efforts to "find some bridges between these two positions (on abortion) so the party can appeal to a wider range of citizens."

UI doesn't need 4x4s

■ The UI is buying expensive four-wheel drive trucks for the Department of Parking and Transportation and other UI departments. These trucks are an unnecessary luxury, and a waste of student funds.

It can usually be counted on that UI tuition will increase every year. The UI is even raising parking rates. Inflation is a fact of life, but when overindulgent university expenditures show up in the form of a brand new fleet of Ford Ranger XLT four-wheel drive trucks, there is just no excuse.

Motor Pool, the division of the UI that buys vehicles through public bid and then rents out the vehicles to UI departments for a monthly fee, did not buy the trucks at retail price. Instead, they paid $17,000 per truck, said Motor Pool administrator Dennis Hogan. The Department of Parking and Transportation asked Motor Pool to specifically purchase a four-wheel drive vehicle for them.

Why are UI Department of Parking and Transportation officials and employees who dole out UI parking tickets driving trucks that have a $22,000 retail value, four-wheel drive and all the amenities?

It is ridiculous that the parking office, which has given parking tickets during winter days without the help of four-wheel drive, suddenly needs to use student money to buy themselves these luxury vehicles.

Dave Ricketts, director of the UI Department of Parking and Transportation, said the reason the department wanted a four-wheel drive vehicle was because of winter and the fact that other UI departments will be using the trucks for transporting people, confiscating and transporting illegally parked bicycles and other tasks.

Ricketts said when Motor Pool receives all of the requests from each department, they notify car companies, who put certain brands up for public bid. Motor Pool then considers the price, maintenance and other expenditures of the vehicles on public bid.

Motor Pool missed the fact that four-wheel drive vehicles cost more in repairs and general maintenance, and four-wheel drives use more gas. The Ford Ranger gets 16 miles per gallon in the city. A Ford Aspire, although not as luxurious as the Ford Ranger, could do just as good a job and get a more economical and Earth-friendly 34 miles per gallon. If the Department of Parking and Transportation hadn't asked for a four-wheel drive vehicle to give tickets, they could have gotten a Ford Aspire for about $11,000 less. The 1991 Dodge Shadows they have been driving cost around $8,000 less and also get better gas mileage.

The need for four-wheel drive parking transportation vehicles is insane. The UI Department of Parking and Transportation were just fine in the Dodge Shadows (now being removed after only four years of service). Students should not have to pay just so the parking officials who give them tickets can drive a vehicle with four-wheel drive. Motor Pool needs to set their sights lower and think of UI students first.

Mistakes in the O.J. case

■ In a new book by Vincent Bugliosi, the man who prosecuted Charles Manson and wrote the bestseller "Helter Skelter," the prosecution in the O.J. Simpson case gets raked over legal coals for what Bugliosi considers mistakes "beyond incompetence."

It has been a little over two years since the bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were found brutally murdered. The topic has been addressed in many bestsellers since then, by everyone from Faye Resnick to Christopher Darden to Simpson himself.

Most recently, Vincent Bugliosi, the man who prosecuted Charles Manson and his "family" in 1971 and subsequently co-authored "Helter Skelter," has written "Outrage: The Five Reasons Why O.J. Simpson Got Away With Murder." In the book, Bugliosi has some very choice words for Marcia Clark, Christopher Darden and other members of the prosecution. According to Bugliosi, "The criminal prosecution of Simpson was the most incompetent I have ever seen, by far."

Bugliosi's reputation as a lawyer is legendary. Bugliosi lost only one case in the 106 felony jury cases he defended while he was deputy district attorney for Los Angeles county. He won convictions in all 21 murder cases he tried. In a famous story about the prosecution of the Tate-Bianca murders of which the Manson "family" were accused, one of Manson's lawyers told the Los Angeles Times, "There's no case against Manson and the other defendants. All the prosecution has are two fingerprints and Bugliosi." That was enough to put Manson and his followers away for life.

Bugliosi has demonstrated an uncanny ability to make complex legal cases understandable to the public. "Helter Skelter" is the best-selling true crime book in publishing history.

According to Bugliosi, the prosecution in the Simpson case did not admit a vast amount of incriminating evidence against Simpson, which was a mistake "beyond incompetence." For example, the jury was never presented Simpson's suicide note or told about the slow-speed police chase of Simpson's Ford Bronco, both of which suggest guilt. Instead of introducing such crucial evidence as the transcript of his police interrogation, the prosecution bombarded the jury with esoteric and often confusing DNA evidence.

Prosecutors Darden and Clark, whose own book will soon be published, need to account for these mistakes. Darden has recently sold his book "In Contempt" to a major Hollywood studio to be turned into a movie. Just as Simpson should be behind bars, and not practicing his golf game, Darden should not get rich as a result of a movie deal.

Darden seems to be too accepting of the verdict. "Sometimes evil wins," he recently explained on Dennis Miller's HBO talk show. Darden also needs to admit that sometimes the good guys make incredibly costly mistakes.

Unfortunately, many people may be sick and tired of the entire Simpson affair. This is surprising, considering it has all the elements of a Dostoevski novel. Hopefully, Bugliosi's book will not be spurned by a society too jaded for the truth.

At the twilight's last gleaming

Ruth McIntosh

It was dusk on the Fourth of July. We threw the lawn chairs in the back of the old station wagon and the kids piled in. As we drove toward the Iowa City Municipal Airport, we spotted skydivers floating slowly down from the sky. One carried a huge, stiff American flag that seemed to guide his path.

We joined other American families in the grassy areas lining the airport fence. Spreading the blanket for the kids and handing out Cokes, we waited for the show to begin. A moment of homesickness passed over me as I gazed across the scum-covered rain ditch and remembered the small, clean lake where I used to watch fireworks in my home state. I missed the music, too, the outdoor orchestra stimulating the patriotic emotions with lively Sousa marches.

My smallest daughters sang with me, "God Bless America" and "Oh Beautiful, for Spaceship Skies." Yet inside I was questioning my loyalty to our government.

I got excited at the loud crack of the fireworks that follows the burst of color. My favorites were the sizzling flying saucers and the big rockets that bust open BOOM! and fill the sky with a graceful fire fall of sparkling lines. The contrast intrigued me, the play of force against delicacy, strength vs. gentleness.

Our guest at this year's celebration was Juan Corpas, a high school exchange student from Madrid, Spain, who wants to improve his already excellent English. "It's the international language now," he tells me. "When someone from Spain meets a German, they talk to each other in English." I tease him, "Since it's the U.S. that exerts the greatest social influence today, don't you think this world tongue should be called 'American' instead of 'English'?"

Chuckling, I was feeling proud of my America as the colored pinpricks pierced the dark sky above. My smallest daughters sang with me, "God Bless America" and "Oh Beautiful, for Spaceship Skies." Yet inside I was questioning my loyalty to our government.

It bothers me terribly that our Constitution has been changed so drastically by 200 years of Supreme Court interpretations. Justices, after all, are just former law students whose high ideals have been altered by good money and good politics. I don't trust politicians; I even feel uncomfortable when my kindergartners speak with awe of "our president."

What is the America I love? My personal loyalty is to the original set of American ideals, not to any political agenda or group of leaders. I laughed my head off at Eddie Murphy as the con man congressman in the hilarious film "Distinguished Gentleman," but I felt angry, too, because the political corruption was so believable.

Americans have stopped expecting leaders to be honest. Ever since Watergate, we've become desensitized to dishonesty. Don't we hold our small-town mayors to a higher ethical standard than our highest elected officials?

Maybe we have the leaders we deserve to have. Maybe we accept a lack of integrity in our leaders because we tolerate a certain lack of integrity in ourselves. Some teens I knew were short on cash, so when the movie box office lady asked, "Adult or child?" it was no big deal to say "child." When I heard about it, I asked, "Did you feel something bad inside you when you said it?" A quiet answer: "Well, yeah, maybe a little."

"Listen, every time you ignore that tiny bad feeling, it gets weaker. Someday you'll take supplies home from work, because they have plenty and you don't get paid enough, and you'll hardly notice that bad feeling. Then you'll be grown and you'll find yourself involved in a land deal that looks a little shady, but you'll stay in it anyway because you can't even hear your own inner voice anymore."

Of course, dishonest land deals are an American tradition older than Independence Day, just ask any Muskegee or Cherokee. Land fraud is nothing new in America; it's just that individual citizens are not supposed to do it.

Another thing individual citizens can't do is get a loan we can't possibly pay back, yet our government gets away with spending more money than it takes in. But as long as citizens keep filling out those credit card applications, spending what we haven't earned yet, how can we complain if our government practices the same sort of optimism?

There was a pause in the fireworks and my thoughts fell to Earth. The kids bristled with expectancy. The grand finale began, filling the sky with bursts of brilliant color, filling our ears with the rapid pop-pop-pop of excess. I wanted to feel proud, but I felt scared. Hope my America doesn't evaporate in such a burst of glory.

The magic of 'Twister': tornado paranoia

more active on sunny, warm days and slower on extremely hot or cold days.

I saw the blockbusting, house-shredding, summer-smash movie "Twister" a few weeks ago.

The acting was stiff, the script was painfully predictable and the directing was, at times, very oddly paced.

Of course, people aren't flocking to the picture just to watch the acting attempts of stars Helen Hunt and Bill Paxton. The crowds are going for the special effects, which are like nothing ever before created for the big screen.

People want to watch cows and 1,000 pound farm equipment get tossed around by the wind like dandelion seeds during a dark, spring storm. And "Twister" delivers.

What "Jaws" did to swimming in the ocean, "Twister" has done to living in the Midwest during tornado season.

Why shouldn't it? It's from the folks who gave us Jurassic Park, including co-writer Michael Crichton and co-executive producer Steven Spielberg. From its inception, "Twister" had hit written all over it. It was expected to be the big moneymaker of the summer; that's why some Hollywood wits dubbed the movie "Jurassic Trailer Park."

The movie advertises "Twister" as "the dark side of nature." Which nature? The universe, or the human character?

"Twister" appeals to our dark side. The part of human nature that compels us to gawk at a traffic accident or marvel at the destructive forces of the weather.

Weather reaches in and touches us deeply in a base, animalistic way. Barometric changes affect humans just like other animals. We're all wind - I'm beginning to face new fears of the big winds, and I'm obviously not the only one.

But this isn't the first time a movie has created a collective fright.

Spielberg's 1975 smash hit "Jaws" won three Academy Awards and terrified beachgoers for many years. Based on Peter Benchley's best-selling novel, the story of a very big, very hungry shark made people afraid to go in the water for years.

What "Jaws" did to swimming in the ocean, "Twister" has done to living in the Midwest during tornado season. The small difference is you can usually avoid the ocean, but living in the Midwest, all we can do is watch the skies.

And since "Twister," I find myself watching the skies more and more often.

I tell friends back East that being in Iowa during a tremendously powerful tornado-producing storm is like standing under a large water-filled colander: You know it will come pouring down, you just don't know when and where.

When one of those holes opens up in the colander and a tornado drops through, like an earthquake, it's usually over rather quickly. And like earthquake aftershocks, more may follow.

So far this year, the tornadoes in Iowa have usually come in groups of two or three. In "Twister" there were more than half a dozen.

Paxton's character had the Hollywood-invented ability to not only accurately predict when a tornado would strike, but also what direction it would take once it hit the ground.

If only we all could be so lucky.

One of Felix's most obvious talents was his ability to draw anything realistically and beautifully.

"He drew so vividly," Judy Wen said. "When he would draw anything violent, he would cover it up so I wouldn't have to see it." Bower said Felix's drawings of death were only a small part of the drawings he did. "He was so creative," Bower said. "If you gave him a blank square, he could turn it into something fantastic; something no one else would think of."

"He respected his elders and he was respectful to his family. He believed disrespect was pathetic."

Kevin Bower, friend of Felix Wen

Felix's elementary-school art teacher, Colleen Ernst, agreed. She spoke of when Felix was in sixth grade, when his artwork was chosen from all the other students at Horn Elementary School to be displayed in an Iowa State Bank & Trust calendar.

"He drew very realistically, and he could draw everything," Ernst said.

"He was very gifted. Gifted in every area."

Felix also had an extraordinary talent for music. He was a cellist in the Northwest Junior High orchestra, and performed both solo and with his sister.

"He would practice every day," Judy Wen said. "But when there was a performance, he would practice for hours and hours. He wanted to be as perfect as the recording. And when the performance was over, he would refuse to play for days."

Judy Wen said Felix's taste in music was another trait that made him unique among his peers. Felix enjoyed Bach and Mendelson, among other composers.

"He never enjoyed contemporary, teenager rock and roll," she said. "He loved classical music." "He loved all beautiful things," B-Chen Wen said. "He loved jewelry, his bonsai trees, his swords."

Felix grew bonsai trees as a hobby.

His oldest and most developed tree, which he named George, is 5 years old and stands delicately in a pot on his windowsill among his other trees, his collection of Army medals and his collection of samurai swords.

B-Chen and Judy Wen said Felix's interest in Japanese culture was a key part of his personality.

"The Japanese culture is one of honor," Judy said.

"And Felix had very high self-esteem, and believed in his own honor."

Bower said this belief in respect and honor was a part of himself to which Felix always stayed true.

"He respected his elders and he was respectful to his family," Bower said.

"He believed disrespect was pathetic."

Felix's fascination with the Japanese culture guided him through all of James Carville's Japanese literary monsters like "Sho-Gun" and "Gai-Jin," books most adults can't say they've tackled.

Felix was baptized 2 years ago as a Catholic. His parents and friends say he was deeply religious and admired Catholic figures like other teens admired rock stars.

"His favorite was Pope John Paul 23," Judy Wen said. "So I bought him a little picture to put on his desk."

The picture sits on Felix's desk, among Pepsi cans and rubber bands, exactly as he left them Thursday afternoon.

"It's so hard for me," Judy Wen said, as she walked through his room Monday night. "It's just like he's still here."

Bertha tears through Caribbean islands

Kay Johnson Associated Press

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, U.S. Virgin Islands — Battering buildings and ships at sea, Hurricane Bertha slammed into the Virgin Islands on Monday with torrential rains and winds that gusted to 103 mph.

The first hurricane of the Atlantic season powered over a string of northeastern Caribbean islands, growing to a 400-mile-wide menace heading directly for St. Thomas, the main U.S. Virgin Island.

An American surfer was missing in the rough seas and high winds off Puerto Rico. Police said Lilton Jones, 35, of New York City was Bertha's first victim.

A Venezuelan boat carrying 42 people was said to be drifting in the hurricane, off Puerto Rico. Ham radio operators said they had reports that half of those on board were already missing. The U.S. Coast Guard said it was having problems finding the ship to attempt a rescue.

At 2 p.m. EDT Monday, Bertha was near St. Thomas and about 80 miles east of San Juan, Puerto Rico, advancing west-northwest at 15 mph.

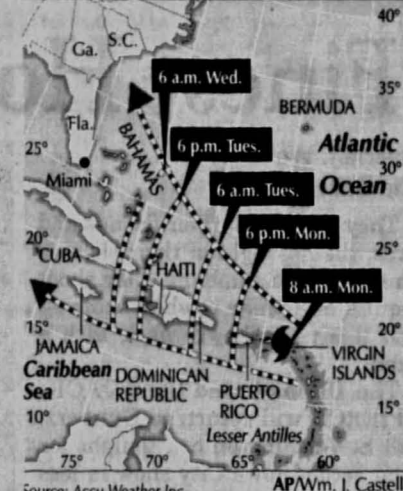

Hundreds of people crowded government shelters in the U.S. Virgin Islands, and another 1,280 people did the same in Puerto Rico.

A St. Thomas school building weakened by Hurricane Marilyn counseling services for friends of Felix Monday afternoon, and for parents Monday night. Van Leary said she planned not to discuss suicide at the meetings.

"I want to respect his parents' wishes," Van Leary said. "Because they feel it was an accidental death, not a suicide."

Lawrence Bastian. He said some people refused to leave their unsafe trailers, which were brought in as temporary housing for victims of Hurricane Hugo in 1989.

Earlier Monday, Bertha passed over St. Kitts and Nevis, Anguilla and the British Virgin Islands, uprooting trees but doing relatively little damage.

The British Virgin Islands' ZBVI Radio said Bertha tore the roofs of several homes and a government clinic in Tortola.

Also in Bertha's way were Saba, St. Eustatius, Guadeloupe and St. Barthelemy. Most of the islands were hard-hit last year, when Hurricanes Marilyn and Luis struck within days of each other, destroying thousands of homes in the worst Atlantic hurricane season in 60 years.

ical application of high density oligonucleotide array sequencing, a genetic scanning technique developed by Affymetrix. The technology could become an important device to understand genetic factors associated with a variety of diseases. "Our hope is to make this — the HIV virus — into a chronic disease instead of a universally fatal one; to extend life of HIV-infected patients," Kozal said.

Dr. Brad Britigan, a UI professor of internal medicine, said Kozal's work is the first step to rapid susceptibility testing for anti-HIV medications.

"Up until now, we were just guessing which combinations of medicines would work based on statistics," he said. "His work is a step towards rapidly determining which drugs will work on particular strains of the virus for specific patients."

Kozal's research and findings are published in the July issue of the journal Nature Medicine.

résumé to the Olympic Staffing Service.

He said he immediately began to get feedback from other Cambus drivers who also were interested in the job.

"It is a good opportunity that I couldn't pass up," Ericson said. "I'm hoping to meet some people, drop off some résumés and do some internship hunting."

UI law student Brenda Masters helped Ericson organize the trip and the drivers' applications.

"Terri Henderson from the Olympic Staffing Service was thrilled we were a bus system that employed university students," Masters said. "I think it was the first group of college-age students she had thought of."

The group's size began to multiply when word spread that the drivers would get to preview a dress rehearsal of the opening ceremonies and enter a lottery raffling tickets for different events.

The group is planning to car-pool to Atlanta and is responsible for funding their own expenses other than room and board, which will be provided by the Olympic Staffing Service. When the group arrives, they will attend a weekend orientation to learn their driving routes.

UI senior Brent Bock, a Cambus supervisor, said even though a large group of drivers will be gone for three weeks, Cambus is staffed well enough that it won't affect business and drivers were encouraged to take the opportunity.

"Some of the newer drivers that started later in the summer and didn't get many hours will now have the chance to step up and take over the more experienced drivers' hours," Bock said.

For UI sophomore Geoff Coffelt,

the opportunity was even worth throwing off his normal routine.

"I am taking an incomplete for my class right now, but my professor said it would be OK to take the final when I get back," he said.

"I'm really excited to meet different people from different countries."

States, as many as one in 10 gay men under the age of 25 carries the virus, and the risk seems to be especially high for nonwhite minorities.

"The figures are high, very high, especially if we consider that these young men have become sexually active in an era in which massive effort was exerted to increase awareness of HIV risk behaviors and to promote safer sex," he said.

De Wit outlined the accumulating evidence of youthful AIDS infection at the 11th International Conference on AIDS.

"The young feel invincible and that they won't get sick from anything," said Dr. Michael Rekart, the conference co-chairperson.

A variety of surveys have found that about one-third of young gay men in their 20s engage in anal sex without condoms, the riskiest form of homosexual behavior.

The research suggests young gay men are two to three times more likely than older gay men to get infected with HIV, the AIDS virus. In San Francisco, about 3 percent of young homosexuals catch the virus annually.

Surveys in other U.S. cities show gay black youngsters are about twice as likely as whites the same age to be infected this way.

In the United States and other Western countries, homosexual sex is still the leading cause of HIV infections, although the numbers of gay men getting the virus have fallen dramatically since the start of the epidemic. It now accounts for just under half of all newly reported U.S. AIDS cases.

Dangerous sex fell dramatically among older gay men after the epidemic emerged in the early 1980s. Experts believe one reason risky behavior continues among the young is they have not yet seen their friends die of the disease.

Another is simply the kind of risk-taking common among the young — the same impulse that prompts teenagers to drive fast or take up smoking.

At the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, epidemiologist Linda Valleroy has studied gay men in their teens and 20s in seven areas of four states. She found that seven of every 100 are infected. By comparison, the infection rate among youngsters who apply for the federal Job Corps program is two per 1,000.

"This is just coming to light," she said. "It is really surprising."

De Wit said new AIDS prevention strategies should be aimed directly at the young and go beyond simply telling them what's safe and what isn't. One idea is to train young gay men who are influential among their peers to set an example and spread the message.

De Wit said a generation of homosexual men is already being destroyed by HIV. "Let us prevent this from happening to a second generation of gay men," he said.

MEAT

check for bacteria that cause diseases such as E. coli and salmonella.

UI students say they are concerned about incidents of meat contamination like the one that happened to the Marion family and welcome the industry changes.

"I think they can always do more to change the meat industry," UI senior Laurel Ibe said. "Ever since Upton Sinclair's book — 'The Jungle' — they need to concentrate on meat packaging. I'm glad President Clinton has focused on this. Too many people have died from E. coli and salmonella."

Teale also said he was in favor of increased inspections, although cases of contamination are relatively rare.

"Imagine how many hamburgers are eaten in Iowa each day," Teale said. "Although (E. coli and salmonella) can be fatal if not treated, the odds of getting them are slim."

"Certainly, we are always encouraged by any efforts that ensure that America's meat supply is safer. The new regulations should make it easier to find food problems before they get to the public."

Teale said Clinton's inspection changes are part of a two-year move to increase safety and are not related to poisoning incidents such as the one in Marion.

However, Dickson said the new tests won't be earth-shattering and cutting bacteria will be a difficult task.

"Bacteria are remarkably indifferent to our politics," he said. "I don't know if it will change the quality level of meat. On meat you can take a sample and move 3 inches away — there could be 10 times more bacteria or there could be none.

"The new regulations are trying to take the current system, which has done a good job so far, into the 21st century. It's not like in three years from now you'll walk into a retail store to find new and improved meat products; it's a gradual process."

However, UI graduate student Lisa Guagliardi said she is disappointed by the current inspection system and is glad it will soon be improved.

"You would think the U.S. would be more advanced than (poke and sniff)," she said. "(New tests) would definitely make me feel better."

Barkley accuser hopes there are no criminal charges

CLEVELAND (AP) — A man who accused Charles Barkley of assault said Monday he hopes criminal charges will not be filed because he doesn't want the NBA star to miss the Olympics.

Jeb Tyler, 23, of Spencerport, N.Y., told a city prosecutor his version of what happened in a bar fight early Sunday. Barkley and Tyler filed police complaints against each other after getting into a scuffle at The Basement, a popular club in Cleveland's partying district.

Tyler, who bought a $500 airline ticket to return to Cleveland to meet with lawyers and prosecutor George Pace, said he was leaning toward filing a civil complaint.

"I really don't want to see Charles Barkley get arrested and detained for this," Tyler said.

Tyson-Seldon fight will likely take place Sept. 7

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Mike Tyson's fight with WBA heavyweight champion Bruce Seldon will likely be held Sept. 7, assuming Tyson recovers normally from the bronchitis that forced Saturday's scheduled fight to be postponed.

Promoter Don King has asked the Nevada Athletic Commission to reschedule the fight Sept. 7 at the MGM Grand hotel-casino.

The new date is expected to prompt rival promoter Bob Arum to move back a title fight between Oscar De La Hoya and Miguel Angel Gonzalez that had been set for Sept. 14 at Caesars Palace.

Arum said Monday he will move the De La Hoya fight to Oct. 11 if King reschedules the Tyson-Seldon fight for Sept. 7.

Arum said, however, that King is concerned that Tyson may not be fully recovered in time to train properly for the Sept. 7 date, and that the fight could possibly be held in October.

Snow forces shorter tour route; Riis takes lead

SESTRIERE, Italy (AP) — Denmark's Bjarne Riis took the overall lead in the Tour de France on Monday, winning the ninth leg after snow forced organizers to eliminate two mountain climbs.

"It was cold out there, but I'm happy," said Riis, who leads Russia's Yevgeny Berzin by 40 seconds. "I'm always strong when it's warm, but I'm happy the way things turned out in the cold weather."

Riis made a long solo breakaway and won by about 24 seconds over France's Luc Leblanc in the stage shortened from 117.5 miles to 28 miles. Berzin finished 14th, 1:23 behind Riis.

Initially, the organizers were to skip the Col de l'Iseran, the highest scheduled point on this year's tour. Then high winds and snow forced the cancellation of a second climb on the 8,731-foot Col de Galibier.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — John Boles, vice president of player development for the Florida Marlins, was hired as the team's manager Monday.

Boles replaces Rene Lachemann, who was fired Sunday.

Injuries, interleague play top All-Star talk

Ben Walker

PHILADELPHIA — Ken Griffey Jr. and Tony Gwynn already were gone, and then Matt Williams got banged up. Now there's a chance Roberto Alomar and Frank Thomas may not be able to play, either.

No doubt, attrition is taking its toll on Tuesday night's All-Star game.

"I was really looking forward to seeing Tony hit," said NL teammate Greg Maddux, who may not be able to pitch because of a cracked nail on his big right toe. "He's one of the guys I like to watch." More than injuries, however, there's another factor that many feel will truly hurt future All-Star games — interleague play.

By this time next summer, AL starting pitcher Charles Nagy of Cleveland may have faced Cincinnati's Barry Larkin earlier in the season. There may be no mystery about how NL starter John Smoltz of Atlanta will match up with Baltimore's Cal Ripken because they might have seen each other only a few weeks earlier.

"From the National League fan's standpoint, they want to see the American League stars play," said Gwynn, sidelined with a heel problem. "And probably, we should feel the same way."

"But this game is a special occasion and a special time that a lot of guys don't have the opportunity to enjoy," he said. "My feeling is interleague play may take away from this event."

PTL offers first look at future Hawkeye

Chris Snider

The Daily Iowan

Yes, Hawkeye fans, there is a Jeff Walker.

Although he won't take the court for the Iowa basketball team until this winter, the 6-foot-4, 185-pound guard has already become somewhat of a legend in the state.

No sooner did Walker, a two-time first team all-state selection in Illinois, sign on the dotted line to attend the University of Iowa than speculation began regarding whether or not he was "the star" who could put Iowa back into the Big Ten title hunt.

He was chosen as a second-round draft pick in Iowa City's Prime Time Basketball League, despite the fact he would miss the entire first half of the season.

So naturally, when Walker finally arrived at the City High Gym for his first PTL game last week, all eyes were on the Hawkeye-to-be.

"It's kind of like you have to play good," Walker said Sunday night after scoring 20 points for Hills Bank in a 114-76 PTL loss. "Everybody has been hearing things. This is everybody's first look (at me). You've got to come out and play your best, let everyone get a positive thought on you."

Walker averaged 23.5 points per game as a junior and 24.7 points as a senior at Lanphier High School in Springfield, Ill., taking conference Player of the Year honors both seasons.

Over his high school career, he averaged 19 points, 5.5 rebounds and 4.5 assists per game. A three-time MVP, Walker feels he is ready for the next level.

"The Big Ten is a big game," he said. "To have the opportunity to come in and play right away as a freshman, I've just got to prepare myself physically for it. I think I'm ready for it mentally."

Walker was named MVP of the Illinois basketball coaches all-star game, but his final decision as to which school to attend came down to Michigan State, Indiana and Iowa.

In the end, it was Iowa Head Coach Tom Davis and his staff that made the difference.

"The coaches are always positive," said Walker, who will wear jersey No. 23 at Iowa. "If you mess up, it's never negative. I came to a few games and I've never seen coach Davis get mad."

"If you mess up, you don't have to worry about looking over your shoulder to see if he's mad at you or not. You can just keep playing. And playing is something Walker plans to do. He hasn't given redshirting a second thought. With his three-point shooting, his ability to penetrate and his defensive skills, Walker feels he can contribute right away.

"My goals are probably to be

DREAM TEAM III

Basketball just isn't enough anymore

Why do we keep calling the U.S. Olympic men's basketball team the "Dream Team?"

When Michael Jordan joined Larry Bird and Magic Johnson on the floor in 1992, we did, in fact, have a Dream Team before us. That was once in a lifetime.

But what's so special about this year's team? Sure, we still have the best basketball players in the world coming together to kick some intercontinental butt, but using the word "dream" is simply overdoing it. The way I figure, one of two things has to happen before the 1996 squad can earn the title, "Dream Team."

1. Bring back Jordan, Johnson and Bird.
2. Show the incredible skills of today's superstars by allowing them to compete in other Olympic events.

If the 12 members of the so-called "Dream" Team III can bring home 24 gold medals this year instead of a measly 12, I'll give them the respect they feel they're due. And to prove I'm a good sport, I've even come up with what I feel are the ideal opportunities for our hardcourt ambassadors.

Charles Barkley, Boxing — Already one step ahead of me, Barkley has begun training for his second gold medal. The bald brawler is a natural heavyweight. Just ask sparring partner Jeb Tyler, who swears he got in a few punches after Barkley punched him in the nose Sunday night during a Cleveland bar squabble.

Scottie Pippen, Archery — Ever since Pippen got busted for carrying a gun in his car a few years back, he's switched over to a bow and arrow, ala Bo and Luke Duke. Pippen has become so skilled with his protective device, he's a shoe-in for gold.

CLEVELAND — What's this, a pennant race in the American League Central? The Chicago White Sox act like they haven't even noticed.

At the All-Star break last season, the Cleveland Indians were running away with the division. They ran all the way to the World Series, winning the Central by 30 games.

The White Sox were in fourth place at the break last year, 17 1/2 games out. After taking three of four at Cleveland over the week-

Shaquille O'Neal can listen to the Lakers, Reggie Miller can telephone the Knicks, Dennis Rodman can assess his post-title value and even Michael Jordan can go shopping.

As of noon EDT Tuesday, the largest and gaudiest free agent market in NBA history will open for business as soon as the collective bargaining agreement between the league and players is ratified. Nearly unanimous approval is expected.

"Then all the madness begins," Miller said Monday.

About 150 players whose contracts have expired will be available. Money and location will be the prime considerations. The teams with the most room under the salary cap will have the most options, but any team can exceed the $24.3 million limit to retain one of its players.

"The market will be dictated by the superstars and the time frame is immediate. Teams that have salary cap room won't take chances with waiting to spend the money," said David Falk, the agent for Jordan, Alonzo Mourning, Juwan Howard, Kenny Anderson and several other free agents.

Jordan, who wants a minimum of $18 million to stay with the Chicago Bulls, has threatened to play elsewhere if Bulls owner Jerry Reinsdorf tries to lowball him. But almost no one around the league expects such a scenario.

Jordan's deal could be done by July 18, when Falk is taking his family to Europe for vacation. Falk also expects the rest of his flock to have new deals by then, too.

UI sees growth in summer enrollment

Matt Johnson

The Daily Iowan

Summer enrollment increased this year, an eight-year decline in the number of students taking summer classes.

According to a report from the UI Registrar's Office, enrollment at the UI this summer was 10,651, from 10,567 in last year's summer session. This is a slight increase, a trend of decreasing enrollment since the summer of 1987, when 11,800 students took summer classes.

For many students, the draw that keeps them at UI during the summer is more to do with the environment.

UI sophomore Nicole taking a class this summer said her primary motivation in Iowa City are the hills. "I heard it was a great really did not want to leave this summer," she said, who is living with friends in the summer. She said, however, she does appreciate the advantages of the summer.

"It's easier to concentrate just one class, and my sort of on summer know," Vierra said.

Doug Lee, assistant summer school program director, said the addition of a three-week session at the end of May gave the opportunity to graduate quickly. This session offers an entire 16-week session of work in 15 days, or approximately a week's worth of work.

Lee also said a broad summer classes to credit and an increase in the student population over the 96 school year were of the increase.
