Drop-out rate at UI below average

Peggy Kozal The Daily Iowan

The UI compares favorably to the findings of a national study conducted by The American College Testing (ACT) Program concerning the steadily upward trend in college drop-out rates and the downward trend in students graduating within five years. According to the study, the national drop-out rate of college students after their freshman year has reached a new high of 26.9 percent – a nearly  $2\frac{1}{2}$  percent increase since ACT began collecting enrollment data in 1983. However, the UI ranks below this average, with 19.2 percent of its freshmen not returning to the UI in the fall of 1995. UI Associate Provost John Folkins said financial factors affect students' ability to remain in college, but the two biggest factors in student departures are healthrelated problems with either themselves or family and not doing well in classes. Folkins said the UI takes a number of measures to encourage freshmen to stay in school. "There certainly is an attitude that the faculty has to keep students from becoming discouraged," he said. "We give a lot of attention to advising students during their freshman year." Kelley Hayden, director of corperate communications for ACT, said one explanation for the high freshman-to-sophomore drop-out rate is that only 60 percent of entering freshmen have taken college preparation courses. "One major reason students drop out when they are freshmen is they get into classes that are over their heads," she said. "We need to increase the level of preparation for high-school graduates who are on their way to college." Jim Polston, who dropped out of the UI after his freshman year in 1995, said taking a year off helped him decide to change his major from journalism to pharmacy. "I was tired of school," Polston said. "It wasn't worth the money my parents were paying for me to get D's and C's." Polston said he plans to return to the UI this fall. Another finding by ACT is that the national percentage of students at four-year colleges who graduate within five years has decreased from 57.5 percent in 1983 to 53.3 percent in 1996 - an all-time low. The 1995 graduating class at the UI remained above this level, with 56.9 percent finishing in five years. Hayden said the stall in graduation rates can largely be accredited to economic forces - such as increases in tuition and the number of loans students need. "Colleges must realize every tuition increase means it will take longer for students to graduate," Hayden said. "Much of the money for tuition is being borrowed, newest forces in popular culture, and the music and film industries, among others, are capitalizing on the plethora of phrases flying these days. "Hollywood has a marketing term called 'high-concept,' " said visiting assistant film Professor Corey Creekmur. "If they can push a simple concept for a movie, it's all you need to get people to see it.

"Along those lines, a simple phrase might come from a movie, like 'as if' from 'Clueless.' Everybody might be using that on talk shows, and people will be wonder-ing where that came from and go ee the movie."

Creekmur said Hollywood has been using slang in its films from the beginning.

"There's always been slang," he said. "If you watch a movie from the '50s, you'd laugh at all the beatnik 'cool cats' stuff.'

UI senior Logan Shannon, who is minoring in English, said phrases go in and out of style, and most people's speech has been influenced by older siblings and cultural

In the recent controversy surrounding AIDS research and animal rights, UI researchers and local animalrights activists have taken def-inite stances on the issue, each claiming the other side has no merit to their claim.

Though the debate on medical research at the expense of animal rights has been going on since animal research began in the late 1800s, it has taken a particularly noticeable turn with a recent experiment last December that involved a bone-marrow transplant from a baboon into an AIDS patient, Jeff Getty, 38, of Oakland, Dreading your GRE? Well, you now have one less reason to put off registering for the test.

Educational Testing Service, based in Princeton, N.J., produces such examinations as the SAT, GRE and LSAT. Last May, ETS put up a home page on the World Wide Web that allows students to register for the tests, search for a college and even take practice tests

When people think of Generation X, they think of a crowd of slackers in baggy clothes moshing at an outdoor music festival. But members of this overly stereotyped group remember a time when concerts were one-band affairs held in auditoriums with assigned seats.

Single-band concerts, which last a couple of hours at most and usually charge outrageous amounts for big-name groups with mediocre opening acts, have virtually become a thing of the past - especially during the summer. Instead, music festivals that feature anywhere from four to 20 headline-quality bands have become the entertainment of choice for today's youth.

KRUI music director Todd Hodgkinson said the festival forum most concerts take today simply has to do with convenience

"It's just sort of like the Wal-Mart chain," Hodgkinson said. "There's a McDonald's in there and you can go to the grocery store, too. People want things accessible because they're too lazy. They want to see a bunch of bands at once, like they want to the THC level is so low." Dr. David Carew, UI professor of medicinal chemistry in natural products, said while there are very little THC fibers in hemp, it is still simply a synonym for marijuana.

The hemp that is used for rope and other fibers is made from the same fibers of the stem from a marijuana plant," Carew said.

"You're using the plant's stem, and those plants can grow pretty tall.'

In fact, the taller the plant, the more uses you can get out of hemp, Engelby said. Hemp has been used in business and industry for clothing, paper, cosmetics, food and other products.

"Hemp is a weed," Engelby said. "It grows everywhere. One acre of hemp will produce four times as much pulp as any tree and hemp is also renewable.

bringing debts to many students even after just a year or two. There is an increase in the number of students who have to take a light course load so that they can work." UI junior Sara Smith said she anticipates taking more than five years to graduate because she has to work while taking classes.

"I'm putting myself through school and don't qualify for financial aid," Smith said. "My father makes too much money per year to fall into the financial-aid brackets. It really makes it difficult for students like me.'

Hayden said a number of factors complicate the situation, and since the federal government has stopped giving a mix of student grants and loans, lower-income students are being hit particularly hard.

"The federal government is starting to back off, and we need to put the pressure back on them to help," Hayden said.

Last year, a four-year graduation program was established at the UI. This program assures students the lack of availability of required courses won't prevent them from graduating in four years.

"The program provides more attention to long-term planning," Folkins said. "The caution is, however, to make sure students understand that getting the most out of your education is the most important thing, not graduating in four years."

AIDS or animals

Viewpoints

Nobody wins in the war between animal-rights activists and AIDS activists when the arguments become squabbling and the activism becomes laughably over-the-top.

ecent clashes between AIDS and animal-rights groups are a warning against a larger issue: people who become so obsessed With a cause that genuine compassion can be overwhelmed by self-interest. There are apparently extremists in both animal-rights groups, such as People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA), and in groups that promote AIDS research, such as ACT UP

Last December, Jeff Getty, an Oakland, Calif., man with AIDS, underwent an experimental treatment that required the killing of a baboon and the grafting of its immune cells into Getty's body. While he was recovering, Getty claims he personally received harassing phone calls from animal-rights extremists.

Doctors have not determined whether the transplant was successful, but Getty, along with nine other AIDS patients, was healthy enough to block traffic at a March for the Animals rally last month in Washington, D.C. One protester's sign read, "Rights for Lab Rats Over My Dead Body."

PETA is also notorious for going to extreme measures to preserve rights for animals, which its members believe are being violated by scientists and researchers. Often there is no middle ground. Animal research is "immoral, even if it is essential," the national co-director for PETA, Ingrid Newkirk, recently said in The Washington Post.

Newkirk then compared the killing of animals to the Holocaust. "Six million people died in concentration camps, but six billion broiler chickens will die in slaughterhouses this year." Such a facile comparison not only fails as an analogy, but is also offensive because it trivializes the tragedy of the actual Holocaust.

There probably are some abuses committed by animal researchers. Still, animal research has helped diseases such as polio be wiped out. Hopefully one day AIDS will meet a similar fate.

Since animal rights and AIDS awareness are pet causes for many celebrities, the clash between the two groups is sure to cause some cognitive dissonance in Hollywood. For instance, which awareness ribbon will they wear to the Academy Awards? Although awareness ribbons started out as an admirable idea, they have lost some of their meaning. Obviously, a person who does not wear a ribbon can still be concerned about these issues.

Extremists in the dispute between the animal rights and AIDSawareness movements seem to be in a contest to say "WE have suffered more ...". Such bickering is childish and takes away from the real issues.

Bald and beautiful, even in lipstick

few weeks ago, I shaved my head. Actual-ly, I had a friend do it for me while I sat in a chair in her dining room. She tried to do it tentatively in stages, but I insisted, "No. Shave it all off." And so she did. I went home that night, irrevocably bald.

I did it for a lot of reasons. One of these is The Daily Io..wan. The most influential column I ever read was written about four years ago by a beautiful bald woman. She wrote that every woman should shave her head at least once in her life, just to see what it is like. I never forgot that advice, and finally got the gumption to try it myself, four years later.

Things that prevented me from doing it sooner: the vehemence with which various lovers decried the idea, a presentation at a conference, serving on various university committees, a fear that my head would be shaped funny. But eventually I decided to take the risk of a bumpy scalp and societal disapproval, mostly because l wanted to see what it would look like.

Everybody gets involved in what we look like. I am sure this is true for all kinds of appearances, but I had never known the public gaze to be so vocal as when I shaved my head.

One of the most interesting things about shaving my head is being the recipient of a variety of unsolicited comments from people whom I do and do not know. It seems appearance, whether it is considered attractive, acceptable or repulsive, merits public reaction. I began to understand why I had been so tentative about doing it. It was no longer my private hair, but everybody's public scalp about which they could comment at will.

The body's appearance is simultaneously private and public; It is both our own and everybody else's. There is no such thing as making such a drastic change in appearance merely "for oneself." There is no such thing as unobtrusively shaving one's head. Other people's reactions are part of the experience. Everybody gets involved in what we look like. I am sure this is true for all kinds of appearances, but I had never known the public gaze to be so vocal as when I shaved my head.

Here are a few choice entries from my running tab of comments I get about my scalp:

From two women, both of whom are quite a bit older than me, at the swimming pool: "You need to get some boobs now so they won't think you're a boy," and "You're smart. I'd never do it, but I admire you."

From my guitar teacher: "You could be a rock star."

From my rabbi: "You wanted to take a load off your feet?"

From a potential employer: "I'm not sure I like it ....

From a groovy teenager in the Pedestrian Mall: "I like your hair!"

From a bald guy I don't know: "Great haircut!" Me: "You, too

And, in the tasteless and inappropriate category: "I have to ask, is that a statement or some kind of chemotherapy?" Lea Haravon's column appears Fridays on the Viewpoints Page.

A fair number of young women have said I am "brave." Being voluntarily bald does not seem like it should require bravery. A good pair of electric clippers and a steady hand, surely, but not bravery. Bravery normally refers to slaying lions or protesting injustices, not to shaving one's head.

But I know what they mean. In a society in which women are still judged by their conformity to "feminine" standards and appearance is an important reflection of this conformity, a woman removing the hair on her head blatantly defies this social norm. Does it take bravery for a woman to experiment with an "unfeminine" (read: bald) appearance? In our society, it unfortunately does.

But maybe I am not as brave as they think I am. I noticed when I became bald that I wanted to wear more dresses, skirts and earrings than I ever had before. I bought makeup. I paid even more attention to my appearance and spent more time in front of the mirror. Did I like the way I looked in dresses, or was I "apologizing" to society for removing my hair by compensating in other areas? Is a bald woman with lipstick brave?

But I did not shave off my curls to be "brave." I did it for fun and to see what it looked like. And maybe that's why I am trying these other things, too. Playing with appearance and with gender assumptions can be fun, perhaps ecause it takes people aback.

Being bald is a very interesting sociological experiment. It has taught me that bodies, whether or not we want them to be, are public commodities that elicit public commentary.

Slang isn't a sign of lack of education or an ignorance of the

It's groovy and all that

ang. Is it cognate with "sling," suggesting the act of hurling or throwing? Is it a shortening of either of the terms "rogues' language" or "beggars' language"? Linguists don't know for certain. But every group that is in some way on the margins of decent society truck drivers, police officers, Mary Kay agents, college students has its own lexicon that serves many social purposes

First of all, slang usage is not a sign of laziness or lack of education. Nor is it juvenile. Slang is creative, linguistically vivacious. Coinages show a real adroitness of thought and an awareness of the possibilities of lexical motility. The processes of slang making are as complex and sophisticated as those that spawn the most sublime neologisms of standard speech.

Unlike the language of, say, business or organized religion, which also identify the users as belongers, slang is dynamic and rapacious it's always looking for new media meat to feast on and convert into metaphor. When a slang form grows old or rote, a new one is all ready to move in and steal its thunder. The group demands the same freshness of its members: To stay in the group, you must stay current with the slang. Wolves eat their weak for breakfast, you know.

Slang is also a mild kind of protest. Anthropologist M.A.K. Halliday called slang "anti-language" because it is anti-establishment. When a speaker uses slang, it's not just to show belonging to a particular group, but also to demonstrate his or her exclusion from pedestrian society. This corresponds to the often anti-intellectual attitude of the college group. A person who studies a lot can still be one of the Archies if she or he explains it away with the softening power of slang: "I'll go out tonight, guys, but I've gotta geek out a few more pages on this paper." In another way, slang celebrates what decent society normally deems improper. For example, drinking to excess and vomiting are spoken of in a way that implies shared experience and camaraderie: "Jones got boohonged last night and ended up talking to Ralph on the big white telephone.

Defining what is and what is not slang is sometimes difficult, but there is one word that must be adamantly rejected as slang, as it does not demonstrate creativity in any form. Inserting "like" every third or fourth word is not slang. It is a lazy conversational tic. It's not a good pacing device, and it's worse than saying "uhh ..." because it's often overused to the point of distraction or, like, annoyance and stuff. If you need to slow down to think of the right word, then throw in a silent pause and stare your listener. This will give the impression you are really churning the headbutter and, as a happy side effect, make the other person feel horribly uncomfortable.

Use the slang available to you whenever you can - be assertive through slang, break the ice in uncomfortable situations and amaze and offend your parents and friends through the deft reinterpretation of terms relating to the body or bodily functions. Above all, do not use "awesome," "sweet" or "bitchin', dude" unless you can do it with extreme sarcasm.

It ain't me, babe, it's those corporate bad guys

n a recent hit movie, two teams of scientists chase tornadoes: the entrepreneurial hero's team, whose motley group of vehicles is held together by baling wire, and the imitative bad guys with "corporate financing," paramilitary clothing and a fleet of shiny new black vehicles with four-wheel drive.

What interest a corporation might have in tornadoes is wisely never explained. Whatever it is those corporations are up to, it is clearly no good, and their lackeys signify it by driving sinister black trucks and wearing mirrored shades. In the popular imagination, corporations are simply greedy, evil, faceless entities. Of course, this does not include the studio that made millions of dollars producing the movie. The innocence with which the film lays out its stock premise, ingrained in the American psyche, is more than a teensy bit ironic.

Many of us, or our relatives, work for corporations; We own stock in them, either directly, or indirectly through mutual funds and pension plans; we enthusiastically consume their goods and services. Yet we lambaste them every the planet, we think, as we bring home our new teak dining table. Certainly it's not little old us! Perhaps the most maligned corporations these days are the drug companies. "Greed kills! Access for all!" shouted ACT UP activists at the opening ceremonies of the 11th International Conference on AIDS. Though ACT UP activists always shout something to this effect, it took on added significance this year because of a major breakthrough in treating the disease: a new class of drugs called protease inhibitors. And who is responsible for this technological advance? That's right, Hoffmann-LaRoche, Merck and Abbott Laboratories - all big, bad, greedy corporations. After spending millions and millions of their own money to develop these drugs, and millions more on drugs that didn't work, the bad corporations actually want to charge money for their drugs. Quite a bit of money, too: about $12,000-$16,000 a year for the full three-drug treatment, which is a lot if you spend all your time chaining yourself to buildings and stopping commuter traffic on the Golden Gate Bridge to draw public attention to your ailment.

One clever thing we can do to stop these bad corporations from creating expensive AIDS drugs is to force them to give the medicines Gary Levine's column appears Fridays on the Viewthru. It's those bad corporations that deforest away as soon as they've invested the $500 mil- points Page.

lion or so it takes to create a new one. Or, we could give in, and agree to pay for the drugs through social programs such as Medicaid. That will ensure the drugs go to the poorest and neediest, including the estimated 250,000 or so who contracted the disease through intravenous drug use. Three billion dollars a year is a pittance when compared to the societal benefits of keeping a quarter million drug addicts fit and vigorous for such tasks as burglarizing homes and eluding police. Besides, many of these addicts will be unable to stick to the regimen of ingesting the 20 pills a day, and will thus create new drug-resistant forms of the virus. That'll

In 1990, the world spent over $1 billion on AIDS research, but only $60 million on malaria, which kills far more people in tropical climates. Luckily, we don't live in a tropical climate, at least not yet, though once the rest of the globe starts burning fossil fuels at the rate we do you might want to start taking your mefloquine, if all the malaria strains aren't drug-resistant by then.

Man crushed to death in Yosemite rock slide

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. - A 200foot-wide granite slab broke loose from a cliff with what sounded like a thunderclap, causing a blast of wind that flattened trees and crushed a man to death at an ice cream stand.

The rock slide threw up a dust cloud that blotted out the sun.

"It was the most terrifying thing I have ever seen in my life," John Lydon of Torrance said of the dust cloud hundreds of feet high Wednesday. It "looked like a tornado. You could see it coming toward you."

The unidentified man, crushed by a tree at the ice cream stand, was the only confirmed death. Crews wearing surgical masks to avoid inhaling the dust used dogs and fiber-optic equipment to search the rubble and make sure no one else was trapped.

As many as 11 people were reported injured.

The massive rock broke loose from a ledge on Glacjer Point and roared into Yosemite Valley on Wednesday evening.

"The dust cloud was so big that it was like driving through the worst fog you could imagine," Assistant Chief Ranger Don Coelho said.

It sounded "kind of like thunder," Mike Gonzalez of Whittier said. "It got louder, and it wouldn't stop. As Gonzalez hustled his family into their motor home, the blue sky turned black, "as dark as you can imagine."

MOSCOW - A bomb hidden in a bag of vegetables ripped open a bus in downtown Moscow Thursday, the capital's second transit blast in a month. Five people were injured.

There was no claim of responsibility for the bombing, which Russia's new security chief, Alexander Lebed, called "mindless terrorism.

Special police units were deployed on the Moscow subway, scene of a bombing last month, after Thursday's blast.

The bomb, equipped with a timing device, was placed on the bus 13 minutes before it exploded at about 9 a.m., Russian television said. The bus was approaching Pushkin Square, about half a mile from the Kremlin, and it had just passed the buildings housing the lower and upper houses of parliament. A passenger on the No. 12 bus spotted the bag and handed it to the driver. It exploded as he was opening the bag, eyewitnesses and police said.

The blast tore off the roof and turned the front of the vehicle into a twisted tangle of blackened metal. fowl. A Volkswagen mini van also was damaged, and the windows of a disco were shattered.

Rescue crew prepares spelunkers for ascent from flooded cave

OAUTRANS, France - A rescue crew readied four dexhausted spelunkers for the steep climb out of one of Europe's deepest caves on Thursday, five days after a flash flood trapped them there.

Two other explorers were killed in the cave flood, Aphrodisiac gum which was triggered by heavy rains and a summer snowstorm.

Rescuers recovered the bodies and rescued the four other explorers Wednesday after a two-day search complicated by high water levels in underground passages of the cave.

A medical team entered the cave at the foot of the French Alps early Thursday to aid two injured survivors. Rescuers said they were suffering from exhaustion and hypothermia.

"Before even thinking of bringing them back to the surface they have to recuperate and sleep," a local official said.

The body of Nicola Perrin, 31, was found almost 2,400 feet from the cave's entrance. She had been lants, is not from Israel. The HIV-infected women trapped under a waterfall and drowned, rescue team sauntered onto the pages of the weekly Al-Arabi, eader Albert Oyhancabal said. She was the only woman in the group of six British and Hungarian explorers.

Circumstances around the death of the second explorer, a Hungarian whose body was found almost 2,700 feet from the entrance, were not clear, Oyhancabal said. He did not release the man's name.

Injured were William Stead, a British citizen, and Karoly Tompa, a Hungarian. Authorities did not dentify the other survivors.

The diesel oil was first spotted in the southern Baltic Sea about a month ago and has since contaminated the coasts of Russia and Lithuania. The size of the slick is not known.

The source of the oil is also unknown, but some experts suspect it came from a ship near the Russian port of Kaliningrad on the southern Baltic, the report said.

Israel unleashes latest weapon:

CAIRO, Egypt - To believe Egypt's opposition press, Israel has launched a new war against Egypt - but an altogether different kind.

The weapons are HIV-infected women who tempt Egyptian youth, hormone-laced gum that sends young girls into a sexual frenzy and even aphrodisiac makeup that sets the wearer aflame with desire when it touches the skin.

This is the sex war, fought out on the pages of opposition newspapers that charge Israel with plotting to despoil Egypt's youth, undermine conservative Muslim values and corrupt Arab society. Of course, it's all very far-fetched.

The sex gum, which contains no sexual stimuthen disappeared. The latest weapon - makeup that drives you wild - seems to be a fanciful count by the press.

Still, headlines like "Israel Launches Sex War" and "Pharmacists Sell Sex Bombs" had the desired effect of casting suspicion on Israel for a threat to the virtue of young Egyptian women, a sensitive subject in this conservative Muslim country.

PIONEER ATTEMPT

Daniel Haney Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia In a pioneering attempt to cure AIDS, doctors are giving a powerful combination of drugs to newly infected men to see if they can permanently wipe out all traces of the virus.

The idea is to hit HIV fast and hard before it becomes deeply established in the body. No one knows if it will work, but the doctors believe they may have an answer next fall when they stop giving the medicines to their patients.

"We are treading in an area where no one has tread before," Dr. Martin Markowitz of the Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center in New York City said Thursday.

Drug cocktails made up of two older AIDS medicines plus a new class called protease inhibitors are the hottest innovations in AIDS therapy. Many experiments are under way, and several preliminary reports have been presented here at the 11th International Conference on AIDS.

The combinations can eliminate all measurable traces of HIV in the blood, even when given to people who have been infected for several years. Many, however, doubt this approach will kill every last trace the virus, especially if it has burrowed into the brain and other parts of the body that are hard to reach with drugs

Still, doctors believe they have the best chance of a cure - the ermanent, complete eradication of the virus from the body - if they start treatment very early in the infection. If that works, they might also be able to clear out the virus in some people with longer infections, especially as new drugs become available.

Dr. David Ho, another Diamond researcher, said that within two weeks, the three-drug approach kills all viruses in the blood stream as well as infected cells that are producing new copies of the virus. But the virus lingers in diseasefighting T-cells and macrophages. He estimated it would take one to three years for all of the infected cells in these so-called viral compartments to die off.

At that point, theoretically, the infection is cured - assuming it is not hidden somewhere else, such as the brain. Testing that is the expect it will soon start reproducgoal of the new experiment, being ing again and be detectable.

conducted on nine volunteers. "No patient has been cured," Ho said, "but we want to find out if it is possible or not to have each of the viral compartments burn out." People frequently don't learn they are infected until many years after infection, when a blood test shows they are producing antibodies to HIV. But the initial infection often causes a brief, flu-like illness, which can be a tip-off to an infec-

> The study subjects, all homosexual men, suspected they had caught the virus and volunteered for the tests between last August and February. Tests revealed high levels of the virus, so all began treatment within about two months of infection.

So far, all evidence of the virus has disappeared from the patients' blood. When the first volunteer finishes a year of therapy in September, doctors hope to sample his lymph nodes to search for traces of the virus. If none are found, they plan to stop giving him the drugs and see what happens. If the virus is still hidden somewhere in his body, the doctors Baseball

A Roman Catholic nationalist raises his fist in defiance after torching a mini bus in Ireland Thursday. Protestants march as Catholics pushed aside

Shawn Pogatchnik Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland -Giving in to Protestant demands after five days of rioting, police dragged away Catholic protesters and lined their neighborhood with armored cars so Protestants could march through in a traditional parade.

The unexpected move ended the showdown between more than 1,000 police officers and crowds from the Orange Order, Northern Ireland's dominant Protestant fraternal group. But it outraged Catholics, the Irish government and even some Protestants.

"It's very difficult to interpret what has happened this week, and particularly today, as anything other than a victory for intimidation and thuggery," said Steve McBride, a Protestant politician in the middle-of-the-road Alliance Party.

The senior police chief in charge defended the shift.

"We had reached the stage this evening and tomorrow where potentially tens of thousands of Orangemen stood to face thousands of policemen and soldiers," said Sir Hugh Annesley, chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. WASHINGTON - Eight days before a bomb killed 19 Americans at a military housing complex in Saudi Arabia, a Pentagon intelligence report said a pattern of suspicious incidents there "warrants improved security efforts."

Pentagon officials insisted Thursday this did not amount to a call for stepped-up security, but rather was a statement of support for improvements already under way at the eight-story Khobar Towers building destroyed in the June 25 attack.

"There was nothing new in this report," spokesperson Kenneth Bacon said, referring to a June 17

Defense Secretary William Perry and other top defense officials already were aware of a heightened security threat in Saudi Arabia, although there had not been signs of organized terrorist groups targeting Americans here, Bacon said.

Bacon disputed a Washington Post report Thursday that said the DIA report had warned of security flaws at Khobar Towers and urged additional measures be taken to safeguard the more than 2,000 Americans living in the mplex.

The trade was announced just hours after the 5 p.m. EDT expiration to the moratorium on player movements until the collective bargaining agreement between NBA players and owners was signed.

"We're very excited to get a player with Kobe's talent and ability," Lakers vice presi-dent Jerry West said. "We feel his potential in this league is unlimited, but we'll be patient in letting him develop.

"On a sad note, we're sorry to have to part ways with Vlade. He's been a key player for us for seven years, as well as a wonderful person. We'd like to thank him for his contributions to the Lakers and we wish him the best of luck with the Charlotte Hornets." Bryant, 17, son of former NBA player Joe

FORMER HAWKEYE Slutzker reports to training camp

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - The last of the Indianapolis Colts' eight draft picks, third-round choice Scott Slutzker, reported to camp Thursday after missing five days while contract talks continued.

Slutzker, a 6-foot-4, 254-pound tight end from the University of Iowa, said he was glad to be off the sidelines.

"It was nice to finally get signed and get it all done with. Now it's for real. I'm no longer a draft pick. I'm an NFL player," he said. "... I haven't been doing much running since I've been sitting around. I feel good. It was a good day. But my head is kind of spinning trying to learn the new offense.' Colts coach Lindy Infante said he was glad to see Slutzker. "It's good to have him here, he kind of apologized. But I told him not to worry about it. I khow this business works. He does have some catching up to do. But I think he'll do it," Infante said. Quarterback Jim Harbaugh was impressed with Slutzker in his first day. "He looked good out there today. He looks like a good prospect." In only one day of practice, Slutzker is drawing comparisons at least in appearance — to Ken Dilger, last year's standout Colts rookie tight end. Slutzker was pleased with the comparison. He said he would like to see himself line up with Dilger some this season. "Hopefully with Coach Infante's offense - I know he likes to run two tight-end sets - I'll be able to do a little something there," he said. Playing at Iowa, a team that has favored the pass in recent seasons, Slutzker sees himself as a receiver developing into a blocker at the tight end position. "I've been working on my blocking over the last couple of years in college," he said. "But typically, I've been a receiving type tight end. That's my forte. But at his level you've got to be able to do both if you want to get onto the field."

Police spokeswoman Kathleen Kelly had no information on injuries or arrests but said: "There was a confirmed riot there, that's all I know."

Lou Duva, Golota's 74-year-old trainer, was carried from the ring after being hit by a walkie-talkie. An oxygen mask was on his face while he was removed by stretcher while suffering chest pains.

Kathy Duva, Duva's daughter-inlaw, said he was resting comfortably at NYU Medical Center. "He's stable," she said.

She did not indicate if he had suffered a heart attack or any other ailment.

Among the players who can now negotiate with any club they choose are Michael Jordan, Shaquille O'Neal, Reggie Miller, Juwan Howard, Dennis Rodman and Gary Payton.

The Los Angeles Lakers and Charlotte Hornets didn't wait long. The Lakers sent Vlade Divac to Charlotte for the rights to high school phenom Kobe Bryant, the 13th pick in last month's draft.

By trading Divac's $8.5 million salary for the next two years, the Lakers freed money for a lucrative offer in hopes of luring O'Neal from Orlando.

In another expected move, Milwaukee acquired center Andrew Lang from Minnesota for a firstround draft pick.

CHICAGO - The guilty plea of a sports collectibles dealer who distributed thousands of jerseys, shoes and balls forged with famous athletes' signatures could be the first step in exposing a nationwide scam, federal authorities said Thursday.

Anthony Alyinovich, 29, of Chicago, is cooperating with authorities, who expect more arrests and more charges in the investigation they labeled "Operation Foul Ball. He distributed items that feasome experts estimate the majority of autographed sports collectible items on the market are counterfeit. "We've seen an explosion in the market over the last several that's why the bad guys are getting into it more and more heavily, because there is simply so much money out there."

Alyinovich pleaded guilty to mail fraud. He could face a maximum of five years in prison and a $4.8 million fine when sentenced, but that will probably be reduced because of his cooperation

Alyinovich sold more than 1,700 items of forged memorabilia during a five-week period in May and June, authorities said. And over two years, customers ended up paying about $2.4 million for the counterfeit items he produced, uthorities said.

Charles Richards Associated Press

ROCKWALL, Texas - Bam Morris, a high school and college football star in Texas and leading rusher of the Super Bowl, was sentenced Thursday to six years' deferred adjudication and fined $7,000 for a March 22 felony marijuana possession charge.

Morris was to have gone on trial Thursday on charges that also included a felony count of possession of cocaine. But on June 27, he changed his plea to guilty in exchange for a recommendation of no prison time and dismissal of the cocaine charge.

He had faced up to 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000. State District Judge William B. Lofland also sentenced Morris to 200 hours of community service.

But Morris' future in the NFL is uncertain. The Pittsburgh Steelers, after distancing themselves from Morris since his arrest, told him to stay away from training camp, and on Tuesday released him.

Under the NFL's drug policy, any player with a drug conviction faces discipline determined by commissioner Paul Tagliabue. The suggested guideline for a first-time violation is suspension for four reg. ular-season games.

CHICAGO - Ryne Sandberg's three-run homer highlighted a four-run first inning and Jaime Navarro pitched a five-hitter Thursday as Chicago beat St. Louis, 6-0.

Navarro (7-8) pitched his fourth complete game in 20 starts and his first shutout, striking out four and walking two.

The Cubs went ahead in the first when Doug Glanville reached on an error by second baseman Luis Alicea and scored following singles by Mark Grace and Sammy Sosa. Sandberg then hit a 3-1 pitch into the left-center field bleachers for his 15th home run and a 4-0 lead. Marlins 9, Braves 8

ATLANTA — Florida manager John Boles won in his major-league debut, the first baseball game he's managed in 10 seasons.

Rene Lachemann on Monday, had previously managed only in the minor leagues.

Greg Colbrunn had three RBI, and Gary Sheffield, Jeff Conine and Devon White all had three hits. Pirates 5, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Orlando Merced and Al Martin had three hits apiece and Jeff King stole home off an outof-sync John Smiley (8-8) as Pittsburgh won for the fifth straight time at Riverfront Stadium.

Cincinnati has lost its last three games and five of seven. Mets 8, Astros 2

NEW YORK - Mark Clark won his fifth straight decision and drove in two runs, and rookie Alex Ochoa drove in two more runs as New York won for the fifth time in six games.

Ochoa went 3-for-4 as the Mets improved to 10-6 since Ochoa's recall from the minors June 21. The right fielder improved his allowed three hits over seven average to .355 with 17 RBI in 16 innings for his first win in nine games. Clark (9-6) allowed four starts and Reggie Jefferson hit two hits over eight innings.

Although his latest release, "Courage Under Fire," is the first film about the Gulf War, Zwick strays little from his patented formula. Ripe with melodrama and visually manipulative images, "Courage Under Fire" balances a hefty amount of oozing emotion with a barrage of thought-provoking issues.

Unfortunately, the film pivots on a distracting plot devise that keeps viewers from becoming completely engrossed by Zwick's talented direction and the many brilliant performances.

The movie stars Denzel Washington as Lt. Colonel Nathan Stera respected field commander who is pushed to a grumbling pencil jockey after mistakingly order-

"When I see anyone with power doing something utterly and absolutely dumb, I lose I my cook-ies," he said. "We have a bunch of morons controlling people's lives. That's wrong and I say so in my cartoons.

Although Sharpnack said he does not affiliate himself with one political party, many of his cartoons question GOP policies and acts.

"I would say my cartoons probably lean to the left," he said. "I just happen to pick on the GOP more because they do a lot of idiotic things. If Democrats were that stupid. I would slam them too."

Sharpnack said his cartoons add humor and bring levity to a subject that often lacks humor of its own.

"Funny is the best way to get something across," he said. "My cartoons are definitely not lighthearted. Well-developed ironic humor comes from knowing just how important issues really are.'

After leaving the music business and receiving a high-school equivalency diploma, Sharpnack completed a two-year degree in art from Iowa Western Community College and began to attend the UI. During his first year at the UI, he submitted a cartoon to the DI. It was published the next day. And the rest, as they that are told from the different perspectives of the storytellers. Although this technique may keep the audience in suspense, the repetition soon becomes an annoyance. Viewers are given so many different versions of "the truth" that when the ending finally arrives, it is hard to accept it.

The script by Patrick Sheane Dundcan ("Mr. Holland's Opus") also fails in a serious attempt to discuss an enormous amount of social issues. While the film raises many interesting concerns, including the position of women in the military, how families deal with losing a loved one and the way "the truth" is constructed, "Courage Under Fire" attempts to cover so much ground that it can only scratch the surface.

Fortunately, Zwick chooses to The film's other star, Meg Ryan, rely on his strength of tugging at the audience's heart. NASHVILLE, Tenn. - Scan the country music fans at the Atlanta Motor Speedway Saturday and be secure in one fact: They all have fresh, clean underwear.

They had to buy it to get in. The All-Star Countryfest '96 is sponsored by Chicago-based clothing manufacturer Fruit of the Loom, which is putting its stamp on country music with a daylong show headlined by red-hot Alan Jackson.

"You buy seven men's underwear or seven ladies' underwear for the price of six," said Fruit of the Loom CEO Bill Farley. "But you also get a ticket to this concert."

The underwear set back cus-tomers $12-$15, Farley said. Receipts were exchanged with the company for tickets.

The show, held a week before the Olympics arrive in Atlanta, is billed as the largest ticketed event in country music history. Already, the W-word has been bandied in referring to the Fruit fest. The 1969 Woodstock festival drew up to 500,000 to upstate New York, many of them gate-crashers, and became a touchstone for baby boomers.

Loveless said the largest crowd she had ever played to was 80,000, at one of Willie Nelson's Farm Aids. Estimates for Countryfest range from 200,000-300,000.

"If there is that many in atten-dance, the phrase would be 'Country Woodstock,' " Loveless said. "As far as an audience in country as controversial as taking money music, I don't look at them as from a beer or tobacco company.

New Meat Beat Manifesto, Nas releases sure to quench music hunger

It Was Written

While Coolio and the Fugees may have grabbed mainstream attention with their latest popfriendly releases, all eyes in the rap world are focused on the follow-up from industry's most gifted poet.

On his debut album The World is Mine, Nas set a new standard for lyrical complexity and flawless execution. His sophomore release It Was Written provides a platform plagued Nas' career. for Nas' ability to paint haunting, multi-layered images, but the often inaccessible and repetitive production featured on the album will leave many listeners wondering what all the fuss was about.

Even for hardcore rap fanatics, Nas' vocal delivery takes some getting used to. Unlike the major-or sing-a-long choruses.

Although Nas often illustrates tired themes, including smoking rest of the world finds out. up and an obsession with the mafia, his attention to the smallest descriptive detail and command of the English language is completely compelling.

Nas' unique talent is best served when tackling enormous social or philosophical issues. On "I Gave You Power," the rap artist describes existence through the eyes of a gun. Hiding under a mattress or being tossed into the back seat of a car, the lyrics takes listeners on a journey they will not soon forget.

The road on It Was Written is not always so smooth. Potholes like the G-funked "Watch Dem Niggas" and "The Set Up" bury the impressive lyrics in the type of lackluster production that has the commonplace theme of excess in dance music: It's a double album over two hours long. But unlike much of their contemporaries, Meat Beat Manifesto is worth checking out.

A testament to capable production is the Dr. Dre-produced single "Nas is Coming." Dre provides the album's most approachable track by incorporating a driving baseline with some eerie keyboard notes, which manages to spark some much needed emotion out of Nas' focused delivery.

Jack Dangers, whose songwrit-ing prowess shined on MBM's groundbreaking single "Radio Babylon" in 1989 and on the 1992 LP Satyricon, employed some new faces for Subliminal Sandwich. The result is a record that is more diverse than any MBM release to date.

Gone from full-time duty is Jonny Stephens, who appears on only three tracks. In his place are bassist John Wilson, formerly of the Supreme Love Gods, and PJ Harvey guitarist Joe Gore, who team up to provide both snappy grooves as well as layers of nearly ambient feedback. The album's first CD flows through sample-heavy dub explorations as well as more mellow funk, taking on more styles than on previous albums. Gore's glittering guitar work is magnificent on the mellow "Future Worlds,"

Folks with boogie fever have a new way to cut the rug on Sunday nights.

From around 9 p.m. to close, disc jockeys Spencer and Big D fill Gunnerz, 123 E. Washington St., with "Soundz," a mix of music, live entertainment and video guaranteed to engage the senses.

Part rave, part dance party and part multimedia experience, "Soundz" is also a good way to work off steam before the start of the work week, Don Russom, a.k.a. Big D, said.

"Wear something that can easily be taken off," he warned. "Because it's gonna get hot in there."

Big D has been spinning the tunes since 1991 in both Chicago and Iowa City. He said Sunday nights at Gunnerz tend to be #### musically eclectic.

"We've mixed Stevie Wonder in with Boz Scaggs," he said. "Basi-cally, it's just a big party, but we

"Soundz" draws an equally diverse crowd. Kevin Carlson, drummer for Iowa City's Lucas Street Playboys and occasional

"Soundz" participant, said it's "a early '90s - fashionable kids, completely different experience." "You can just sit and listen, you music and industrial-park locacan watch the DJs work and they've got a complete show going Big D said what he and Spencer on onstage," he said. "It's films, videos and freaky shit."
