Already studying abroad at the UI since 1993, Abu-Ghazaleh spent the summer of 1995 studying at a university in Jordan, her first experience at a Jordanian university. She then spent the spring semester of 1996 studying abroad through the Webster University Program in Vienna, Austria, with about 400 students from around the world. "It's been fascinating," she said. Through my experiences here and in Vienna I've gotten to meet people from so many different cultures. Abu-Ghazaleh said the teaching philosophies of American and Jordanian universities differ dramatically. "The way students are treated in Jordan and the U.S. is totally different," she said. "Students here are more respected. They are treated the way students should be treated. "(In Jordan) it's more like the students are still in high school. The teachers ask you things like 'Why are you late?' At least the ones that I had." Lois Gray, international media coordinator for the Office of International Education and Services, said Abu-Ghazaleh's situation is an unusual one.

City council designates 36 landmark properties

Brian Buehler The Daily Iowan

Two votes at Tuesday's Iowa City City Council meeting displayed the council's strong division on the issue of property owner's rights vs. those of the community.

"This is just one more ordinance that takes landowner's rights away from them," said Councilor Dean Thornberry of an ordinance designating 36 properties in Iowa City as historic landmarks.

The ordinance passed on a 4-3 vote over the objections of Thornberry and councilors Dee Vanderhoef and Ernie Lehman.

Another property considered for protection under the ordinance was located at 832 E. Washington St. and was voted on separately because the owner, Bruce Glasgow of Iowa City, was opposed to its designation. In the separate vote, a super majority of six votes was required for the property to be designated an Iowa City historic landmark. The vote resulted in an identical UI junior Jennifer Brown, also a co-supervisor at Wild Things, said she wears them for stressrelieving breaks from life.

Dole names N.Y. rep. as convention keynoter

Tom Raum Associated Press

WASHINGTON - She voted for the Clinton assault-weapons ban. She backed family-leave. She supports abortion rights.

While some religious conserva-tives grumbled Tuesday about New York Rep. Susan Molinari, Bob Dole's choice to deliver the GOP convention keynote address, most Republicans seemed genuinely delighted to welcome the perky and dynamic new mom to their San Diego podium.

And that included Dole's vanuished - but hardly silenced -GOP rival, Pat Buchanan. "While we disagree, deeply, over the issues of life and social policy, Susan is an articulate, passionate voice inside our great and diverse party," Buchanan said.

For just as Dole, 72, epitomizes the old guard among the Grand Old Party, to many Republicans Molinari, 38, represents the GOP's new face.

"She reflects our interest and concern about women and mothers and cities," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi. "I just don't think we ought to be nitpicking every candidate's position on every issue.

Dole praised her for her "vitality and message, reaching out to people" when he unexpectedly announced her selection Monday night on CNN's "Larry King Live." Molinari was reveling in the attention, appearing on morning television talk shows and telling reporters at a news conference, "I can tell you this, I don't intend to let him (Dole) or the Republican party down." Holding her sleeping 2-month old daughter over her left shoulder, and with husband Rep. Bill Paxon.

R-N.Y., at her side, Molinari said she still remains "much in shock" over her selection. She confessed to a combination of exhaustion and jubilation."

As for her pro abortion-rights stance, Molinari hinted she may not even bring it up. "I fought long and hard as a pro-choice advocate, but a convention is a time to rally around the important positions and the character and the integrity of a man like Bob Dole. And that's certainly going to take at least three full nights of speeches."

Even Molinari's strongest detractors - those with the religious right - did not criticize her personally

"I like Susan and I'm not going to say anything critical about her," said Ralph Reed, executive director of the Christian Coalition.

But Reed, in an interview, cautioned, "It's not a recipe for energizing the base in the fall.'

Christie Hamrick, of the antiabortion Family Research Council said, "The issue isn't who specifically speaks, but whether or not (they) get the grass roots mobilized. This is a step in the wrong direction."

One reason conservatives aren't more riled, according to several GOP strategists, is that Dole, having picked a moderate keynoter, away from his earlier attempt to might now turn to an anti-abortion candidate as running mate.

WASHINGTON - The White House scoffed Tuesday at promised congressional hearings into the background checks of 21 White House staffers who entered a special testing program because of recent, illegal drug use.

Lamm has said he is interested in debating Perot, although he acknowledges the two share most views on reforming and trimming government and "there is not much to debate about."

Lamm sees the state conventions . as a chance to get out his message and not necessarily as an opportunity to contrast himself with his formidable billionaire opponent, according to his spokesperson, Eric Anderson.

"Nothing special will be done in regards to Mr. Perot. We're just trying to get the governor out there around the country as much as we can," he said.

Rape statistics differ

The statistics on campus rape that freshmen get during summer orientation may be much higher than what the Schedule of Courses reports, but the source of the statistics and the definition of rape used to create the statistics make the difference.

rientation Services teaches incoming freshmen much more than how to register on ISIS. One of its missions is to raise awareness of rape, with the hope of preventing unsafe behavior. The Rape Victim Advocacy Program provided the rape statistics for this year's orientation session, which were discussed with incoming students. For these statistics, rape was defined as "any sex act done by force or against the will of another person.'

According to RVAP, 134 rapes were reported to the center in 1995. Not all of these necessarily occurred in Iowa City, as RVAP does not track that information. It is, however, safe to assume many were local, as there are other centers for different locations.

The numbers in RVAP's statistics are disturbingly high, evoking the question from many students, "How realistic are they?"

The number RVAP provided conflicts with information printed in the UI fall Schedule of Courses, which claims just five sexual abuse cases were reported in 1995.

This discrepancy can be explained by two important factors. First, the Schedule of Courses only counts those sex abuse crimes reported on UI-owned property, whereas RVAP counts all reported cases (to their center).

Secondly, many victims do not report rape to the police. They prefer a center, where support and help is offered without the pressure to prosecute.

Why would a victim not report a rape? There are many reasons. Both men and women fear no one will believe them or they will be ridiculed. Because 80 percent of rapes nationally and 77 percent locally are performed by acquaintances, the victim may fear retaliation. Also, the victim may be embarrassed and ashamed.

The initial investigation for evidence (albeit necessary) furthers the humiliation. First, a paper towel is placed under the victim's buttocks and his or her pubic hair is combed for evidence. These, along with everything to follow, are sealed in an envelope. Any debris is scraped from the body and clothes. A file is scraped under the fingernails. A sample of sputum is taken. Twelve head and pubic hairs are cut off. Cotton swabs are wiped internally and externally around the vagina and anus, and then a blood sample is taken. It ought to be evident why this procedure is difficult to endure.

Incoming freshmen are also told that one-third of all women are raped in their lifetime, a number that agrees with many national statistics. Nine percent of known rape survivors in 1995 were male. Many students aren't even aware that men are raped.

When the national average is one-third of all women, 134 rapes reported to RVAP should come as no surprise. What is truly frightening is how many go unreported. Those who are shocked by the numbers need rape education the most.

OK, read. The book police are at the movies ollywood is raving about the comeback of science fiction. "Independence Day" is breaking records at the box office. Yet science-fiction literature is still in the ghetto.

Crowds are mobbing the theaters to see "Independence Day," as if it will disappear sometime soon. Yet anyone who buys a sciencefiction novel, even an award-winning sciencefiction novel, receives raised eyebrows from the bookstore clerk and verbal abuse from friends.

"When are you going to read serious fiction?" they ask, as if science-fiction writers are "just kidding."

"Science fiction is stupid," they say, never having read any. Even better: "Science fiction isn't literary." I guess they never thought of writers like George Orwell, Ray Bradbury, Harlan Ellison and Kurt Vonnegut as "literary."

I know there are thousands of you out there who read mysteries, best sellers, Sylvia Plath, etc. and have to hide them in public.

They sure do like the movies, though, even though Hollywood's vision of science fiction is a series of half-baked nonconcepts that turn into macho shoot-em-up orgies of violence with bad dialogue and stereotyped characters. There is rarely a point to science-fiction movies except to show off and make money. Even the worst science-fiction novels are better than the movies.

I saw "Independence Day" last weekend. Nothing could have prepared me for its awful-

eddie @ icaen. uiowa.edu

ness. The ineptness of the filmmaking and the writing is profound. Yeah, the explosions were neat. But I could have saved five bucks and just watched the preview if that's all they had to offer.

I have seen very few Hollywood science-fiction films that can compare to the good writers of science-fiction novels. "Blade Runner," "1984" and "Brazil" are rare exceptions.

I like to read science fiction. The movies are terrible, but some of the books are great.

And you wouldn't believe the amount of grief I have to put up with when I get "caught" with a science-fiction book.

I am not just a journalist. I am also a fiction writer. Sometimes I write science fiction, because, after all, I've always enjoyed reading the stuff.

My good friend Chris also works as a sciencefiction writer. He saw "Independence Day" with me. On the way out of the theater, he said to me, "I wrote a story just like that when I was 12. Only I did it better."

And he probably did. That movie was so utterly ridiculous, so downright awful that it's easy to see how a 12 year old could do better.

Of course, now Chris is a mature, educated adult who has moved beyond the simple-minded alien invasion schlock. And he, like me, gets sneered at for what he writes and reads. Yet "Independence Day" is enthusiastically consumed.

I've noticed an interesting thing about the book police. They criticize you if you're not reading Melville or Joyce. Yet, when I ask one of them how much classic literature they have actually read, it is usually paltry. Most often, the book police have a single bookshelf with a few expensive copies of classics, all of them unread

They feel inferior, so they put down other people to make up for the difference.

(Incidentally, I encounter the opposite of the book police when I read on Friday nights. "Why would you read a book on a weekend?!" they ask, shocked.)

I don't know what you read. But chances are good you have encountered the book police yourself (unless you're a member). I know there are thousands of you out there who read mysteries, best sellers, Sylvia Plath, etc. and have to hide them in public.

The next time you encounter the book police, especially if they criticize science fiction, simply ask if they paid five bucks to see "Independence Day." If they say yes, hit them over the head with their unread copy of "Moby Dick." That'll teach 'em.

Bosnian outrage

The United Nations was angered enough to take action when 60 people were killed during a rebel attack in Bosnia in 1993. Now, over 8,000 Muslims have been exterminated and a war criminal has been re-elected as chairperson of the Bosnian Serb's ruling party. Where is the outrage today?

".N. officials expressed outrage over the carnage left in the town of Srebrenika after Serbian rebels rained artillery shells on trapped civilians in one of the most shocking attacks in Bosnia-Herzegovina's year-old war," wrote an L.A. Times staff writer in April 1993. In this "most shocking attack," 60 people were killed. Now, almost three years later, an estimated 8,000-10,000 have been methodically exterminated. Where's the outrage today? It seems as if the world has lost its will to act. When Nazi Germany fell and the Holocaust was revealed, the world promised it would never happen again. But it has. The leadership of Western powers in international issues has been weak and efforts by international forces of the United Nations have been failures in prevention.

In the spring of 1993, after the Bosnian Serbs nearly took the town of Srebrenika, the U.N. Security Council designated the town and five other Muslim cities "safe areas." This meant the people in these towns would be protected by U.N. troops and air power if necessary

In July 1995, Srebrenika was the first U.N. safe zone to fall. The Serbs violated international law, took U.N. peacekeepers hostage and shelled U.N. Dutch soldiers. For three days, the Serbs fought furiously and won. The city, which was harboring 40,000 Muslims, is a monument to the impotence of the international community, who failed to prevent the mass murder of civilians.

The world failed the first test in Bosnia, and it dare not fail the second. The prosecution of war criminals is vital to bring closure to an embarrassing and horrific war. Arrest warrants have been issued for top officials, including Bosnian Serb military commander Gen. Ratko Mladic and Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic. But their prosecution is a difficult process.

According to the Dayton accords, which ended the Bosnian War, anyone guilty of war crimes was banned from leadership positions in post-war Bosnia. But Karadzic was just elected to another four-year term. Furthermore, in an insulting move, he flew in a slick legal team, including two lawyers from Los Angeles who have previously represented drug czars, to defend him.

The international community is frustrated with the lack of international law. Fifty years ago, the Nuremberg trials established an important moral and legal precedent: An international tribunal to bring justice to those charged with war crimes against humanity. Today, this needs to be extended. An official International Criminal Court should be established to bring to justice those accused of war crimes and stop the perpetrators before their actions lead to war.

Up the Judean cliffs to beautiful, historic Masada

MASADA, Israel - My tour bus is churning down a highway adjacent to the Dead Sea. The sand and flint-stone cliffs of the Judean Desert flow for miles over the horizon.

Then a jewel sparkles in the desert. Masada, nestled among miles and miles of similar desert, gives off a radiance, a radiance that tells me something special happened there

The majority of my group from Tel Aviv University opts to take a cable car that stretches to the summit of the mountain. But eight of us gather our strength (and plenty of water bottles) and begin to hike in the blistering sun.

I squint at the sun easing its way directly above our heads as I smooth lotion onto my already-burnt cheeks. The outlines of the surrounding mountains, as jagged as the lines of a cardiogram, grab my view. Hikers that have neared the top of Masada look like ants to us as we begin our ascent.

My desire to reach the top is fueled only partly by the little bit of history I know of Masada — that a group of Jews, the Zealots, who fended off a large Roman army took their own lives when they could no longer survive.

My desire to reach the top is fueled only partly by the little bit of history I know of Masada that a group of Jews, the Zealots, who fended off a large Roman army took their own lives when they could no longer survive.

I am more driven to reach the top because of the physical challenge of the towering cliffs peering down on me. Beads of sweat congregate on my forehead, and I imagine Roman soldiers trekking up the path we are on, the Snake Path, in full armor. I am only wearing hiking boots, shorts, a T-shirt and a bandana, but my clothes are dripping with sweat.

My breath quickens and my heart pounds with each footstep, which causes loose pebbles to tumble over the side of the path and come to rest far below in the excavated ruins of a Roman camp. Soon, my roommate Jay vomits over the edge, fatigued. Later, Alice misses a step and falls, the dusty path peeling her knee Cold water rushes down my throat as we take a break. The salty, turquoise water of the Dead Sea lies below, separating Israel from the mountains of Jordan.

Sweat pools on my chest and drips in my eyes as the soft humming of the cable car is heard overhead. Its passengers shout encouragement to us as we rehydrate ourselves.

The pinnacle looms only a few hundred feet ahead as the steps steepen. A feeling of accomplishment fuels our worn bodies and we squeeze enough energy out of our legs to make it to the top, where we collapse with our water bottles. Now the sandstone bench burns on my legs and back as I relax in one of the oldest synagogues in the world, atop Masada.

Roman armies had been camped at the base of Masada, unable to scale its steep walls, and were waiting to drive the Zealots out by cutting Wednesdays on the Viewpoints Page off their supplies. But the Zealots had a store-house of food and water that could last 70 years

The Romans found a weak spot by using Jewish slaves to build a ramp to the gate on Masada, knowing the Jews would not shower their brothers with hot oil or knives.

The Zealots built another wall, made of wood and sand, that the Roman battering ram would not be able to break. One night the Zealots set fire to the battering ram as the Romans slept at the bottom of the hill. Things were looking favorable until the wind shifted and set fire to the wall, which soon burnt to the ground.

Knowing when day broke the Romans would swarm Masada, the Zealots met that night in panic. Their leader gave a spirited speech and there was complete silence. They knew what they had to do.

Ten names were chosen from those at the meeting. Those 10 promptly went home and slayed their families, then their friends and finally themselves.

As I look at the original pillars in the syna gogue, a chill snakes down my spine. These peo ple, who fully understood they were breaking Jewish law by committing suicide, did so in order to not succumb to slavery. They died with pride

Before they finished the suicide they set fire to everything in the city but their full storage houses, proving to the Romans they died by free . will and not starvation.

I sprint down the last part of the hill, reflecting on the difficult deed the Zealots performed in the name of pride, as the Israeli flag flutters atop Masada.

Gore: Yeltsin looks 'in good health'

Lynn Berry

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Somewhat stiff and slow-moving but quick with a smile, Boris Yeltsin met with Al Gore Tuesday and eased some of the concerns about his fragile health.

"He looked good to me," said Gore, the first Western leader to see Yeltsin since the latest speculation about his health flared up before the July 3 presidential election.

The worries surged again Monday when Yeltsin suddenly canceled a planned meeting with Gore and went off to a government health resort outside Moscow. Aides described him as "very tired" and in need of rest.

With slow, cautious movements, Yeltsin paced back and forth in the moments before Gore came in to greet him at the resort. He was alert, grinning as he and the U.S. vice president joked.

Monday's postponement was the latest in a string of no-shows that began near the end of Yeltsin's vigorous campaign for a second term.

Since then, Yeltsin had been seen only in official TV footage and carefully scripted Kremlin events. "He seemed to be in good health, relaxed, smiling and seemed very actively engaged in the subjects we discussed during our conversation," Gore said after the meeting in Barvikha, seven miles from Moscow

Concerns about Yeltsin's health are sure to persist.

Aides say Yeltsin is exhausted from the grueling campaign schedule, but not sick.

The Clinton administration was a strong supporter of Yeltsin's reelection bid against a Communist challenger. Gore congratulated Yeltsin on his victory and praised his dancing at a campaign rock concert.

You learn all kinds of things when you're running for office, Yeltsin replied with a laugh. Gore said the two had a "good

He called the talk "enjoyable." Gore also met Tuesday with Yeltsin's new national security chief, Alexander Lebed.

Yeltsin did not speak with reporters, but spokesperson Sergei Medvedev called his meeting with Gore "comradely and even friend-

He said Yeltsin pledged to work for parliament's ratification of the START 2 arms reduction treaty.

Despite the warmth, Gore carried what he described earlier as a appointments.

Yeltsin's meeting with Gore was stern message of disapproval over

Gore said he urged a cease-fire and new negotiations to end the 19-month-old war.

He said Yeltsin wants to negotiate but is also "determined that any attacks from the other side be met with a vigorous response."

Gore said he didn't raise Yeltsin's sudden cancellation of their meeting.

"Of course I didn't comment on that," he said.

"It's not at all unusual to have meetings postponed from one day to the next."

Gore arrived Saturday with much of the U.S. Cabinet for the biannual meeting of a commission on economic and technological affairs he and Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin head.

They wrapped up the commission session Tuesday evening by forecasting a big increase in investment in the Russian economy.

"We are on the verge of a new period of history in which investment capital flows into Russia in very large quantities," Gore said.

By law, Chernomyrdin takes over if anything happens to Yeltsin.

Chernomyrdin, who has been named to head Yeltsin's second administration, was at the Gore-Yeltsin meeting.

Medvedev said he and the president later discussed Cabinet

"Can't Buy Me Love," directed by Steve Rash (1987)

After convincing the beautiful Cindy Mancini, the most popular girl at school and the head cheerleader, to exchange a month of social school time for $1,000, Ronald Miller is transformed from "geek to sheik."

This cross between "Cinderella" and "Cyrano de Bergerac" is a light-hearted comedy with a high-school melodrama feel. Although it is a regurgitated version of the all-purpose love plot, this movie will make you feel like you're 15 again.

"Dead Alive," directed by Peter Jackson (1993) From the mind of twisted genius

Peter Jackson comes the silver screen's all-time most hilarious splatterfest. A simple businessman falls in love with a local gro-

"It Could Happen to You." directed by Andrew Bergmann (1994)

Many overlooked this charming and funny romantic comedy from writer/director Andrew Bergmann. It is a sweet, Capraesque tale of what happens when an average man (played with quirky charm by Nicolas Cage) wins the New York lottery and keeps his promise to a waitress (Bridget Fonda) he LYTHAM ST. ANNES, England -Tom Kite, Greg Norman and Seve Ballesteros have several things in common. They've been around a while, won major championships and have an eye on this British Open.

Kite, who loves the title he carries as Ryder Cup captain, wants to avoid a hyphenated phrase before his name, as in: "Non-playing Ryder Cup captain."

Playing his first full practice round on Monday, Kite, 46, made it clear he considered himself a contender at Royal Lytham and St. Annes Golf Club.

"It's nice to have a putting stroke back," Kite said almost to himself as he rolled in a 30-footer on No. 16, dropped down another ball and rolled it in, too.

"It's been a while," he said.

It's been since the 1993 L.A. Open that Kite won a tournament, just a year after he captured his only major championship at the 1992 U.S. Open.

"There's no doubt in my mind on No. 17 alone, Lytham is a that you can win out here at 46 or 47," Kite said. "I'm playing much and a little luck will mean a lot. better the last four weeks. I'm showing some definite signs of improvement."

Baltimore's Cal Ripken tosses the ball around between innings at his new position at third base in Baltimore Monday.

Ripken shrugs off Robinson comparison

David Ginsburg Associated Press

BALTIMORE - When it comes to playing shortstop, Cal Ripken sets the standard for excellence.

No shortstop played in as many consecutive games at the position, none hit as many homers and no shortstop other than Ripken went 95 straight games without an error.

Now that Ripken has been moved to third base, he finds himself in a position where he is being compared with others most notably, Brooks Robinson.

"It's a little premature, isn't it? No one deserves to be mentioned in the same breath as him until you've accomplished the things he's accomplished," Ripken said.

Manager Davy Johnson is trying to get a look at backup shortstop Manny Alexander, who has spent his entire major league career playing behind the most durable player in baseball history.

Ripken as a temporary move, himself."

but it might turn out to be permanent if Ripken continues to play the position as brilliantly as he did Monday against the Toronto Blue Jays.

In his very first chance, Ripken dived to his right to snare a sharp grounder down the line by Charlie O'Brien. Ripken then righted himself and delivered a perfect strike to first base while on his knees.

"Cal played great at third. You almost knew his first chance was going to a Brooks Robinson-type play," Johnson said.

The Blue Jays were well aware of this, so the first two batters attempted, unsuccessfully, to drop bunts down the line.

The Blue Jays couldn't get one ball by him. Ripken handled all five chances without a glitch and even started a 5-4-3 double play in the eighth inning of Baltimore's 8-6 win.

"He's just a special player," Johnson said. "He's a great shortstop and put on a clinic at third. He made it look easy, and it's a remarkable individual who The switch was presented to can do that. He's in a class all by

probation

Eddie Pells Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. - The NCAA put New Mexico State on three years' probation Tuesday and hit at the core of coach Neil McCarthy's recruiting strategy by eliminating junior college scholarships for two seasons.

McCarthy has built a 229-114 record in 11 seasons with the Aggies - including five NCAA tournament appearances - largely by using junior college transfers. Over the last six seasons, he has brought 34 junior college players to the Las Cruces school on scholarships.

School president J. Michael Orenduff said he would not appeal the sanctions. He said he was glad the school moved swiftly to address its own problems.

An internal investigation resulted in self-imposed sanctions in September. Many of those sanctions were accepted by the NCAA, but they did not include the junior college restrictions and only called for two years' probation. The NCAA Committee on Infractions said the quick response saved NMSU from further penalties.

Orenduff tried to put a positive spin on the sanctions, saying: "We will not be barred from television. We will not be barred from postseason play. Aggie basketball is again alive and well."

But four junior college players coming in this year will be the last on scholarship for two seasons, and that will drastically alter McCarthy's recruiting. He has traditionally gone after seasoned players who can execute his uptempo style and trapping defense as soon as they arrive.

The investigation began in 1994 and focused on two former assistant coaches accused of providing test answers and papers for players to gain fraudulent eligibility through correspondence courses at Southeastern College of the Assemblies of God in Lakeland, Fla.

The infractions committee's report blamed McCarthy and former full-time assistant Gar Forman for not exercising institutional control over the program. For-man, who joined the New Mexico State staff in 1988, left in 1994 to become an assistant coach for the Iowa State Cyclones.

But the report placed most of the blame on restricted-earnings coach Chris Nordquist, "who assumed he was expected to establish eligibility without regard for NCAA or institutional rules."

"If you don't have a novice, you don't have a varsity," UI junior Paul Everson, one of the two active varsity rowers, said. According to Elbe, the main reason for the low numbers wasn't lack of interest as much as it was the lack of a single coach to guide the team.

"I would like to see the club get to a point where there is one fulltime paid coach," Elbe said. One problem with this, however, would be the risk of the team losdent Jim Lynch said.

"Having someone commit full time to being responsible for coaching us and for getting us to regattas, and for making sure we do well, makes a huge difference. It makes the difference between guys who go out and row for awhile and a team," fifth-year

McCormick would like to see the men's program grow along with senior and last year's Club Presi-the women's team. "Rowing won't die at Iowa because the women are stable," he said.

McCormick plans to make the men's team the best and the largest it's ever been when the season starts up in the fall. By focusing on recruiting and quality training, he hopes to have two freshman heavyweight eights, two freshman lightweight eights, and a strong varsity four competing during the coming year.

Along with preparing for the fall, Ed McCormick is also introducing women's team. He said he could rowing to the general public hold his head up high on the East through summer classes and getting Iowa City educated about Coast after the Iowa women's what rowing as a sport is all about. novice eight took the gold at the Champion International Collegiate

Trail Blazers sign Anderson

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - Free agent point guard Kenny Anderson has agreed to a contract with the Portland Trail Blazers worth $50 million over seven seasons, ESPN reported Tuesday.

However, Blazers spokesman John Christensen said no announcement was planned and the team does not comment on such reports. Team president Bob Whitsitt was out of town and unavailable for comment.

A source close to the situation confirmed Anderson has spoken with the Blazers but did not confirm a deal.

Anderson is represented by David Falk, who also is the agent for Michael Jordan and many other top NBA players. Falk could not be reached for comment.

Anderson, a five-year NBA veteran, was traded from the New Jersey Nets to the Charlotte Hornets last year. He averaged 15.2 points and 8.3 assists last season.

Anderson likely is the highestpriced free agent point guard remaining. The other possibilities are Derek Harper, turned loose by the New York Knicks, and Robert

The receiver also apologized to fans, expressing regret that he had brought disgrace to the team only months after helping win a third Super Bowl in four years. "I worked so hard for the fans to bring Super Bowls here," Irvin said. "I want to apologize for the offseason of turmoil instead of an offseason of enjoying the fruits of our labor."

Irvin still faces punishment by the NFL. One league source said Tuesday the most likely suspension is four games, the same that run-

The NFL has said for months it wouldn't rule on Irvin's eligibility until the trial concluded. He could be suspended without pay for four games to an entire season

Greg Aiello, NFL spokesman, said Monday Irvin's status "will be reviewed under the terms of our substance abuse policy."

In sentencing Irvin, State District Judge Manny Alvarez warned him that violating terms of his probation could result in a far stiffer sentence, including a maximum 20 years in prison.

76ers pick up MacLean

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Don MacLean didn't get a nine-figure deal like some of his fellow NBA stars. He might not be the Philadelphia 76ers' most pressing need and he's had an injuryprone career.

But MacLean was available, so the team with the NBA's secondworst record last year was there Tuesday to sign him up.

Terms of the contract were not revealed, but sources indicated it's a four-year deal worth a little less than $3 million annually.

MacLean is 6-foot-10, and 235 pounds. He has played mostly small forward, averaging 12.2 points and 4.1 rebounds in 232 NBA games. The 76ers already have Clarence Weatherspoon, who has been their most consistent player over the last three seasons, at the position.

A lot like March Madness - except for a couple of things. For one, they play all-out defense in the NCAA Tournament. For another, when the top seed plays the league's cellar dweller in the NCAA, it's never a toss-up.

But that could be the case tonight when 10-1 Powers/Nike opens the tournament against 1-10 First National Bank at 6:30 p.m. at Iowa City City High. It all hinges on the status of Andre Woolridge.

Despite the 10 losses, First National is undefeated with Woolridge in the lineup; he scored 45 points and dished out 12 assists in the only victory. Without Woolridge, the team has struggled, to say the least. He has returned to Iowa City after traveling with an NIT college all-star squad. No word yet on whether he'll suit up tonight.

Powers/Nike will surely have star Ryan Bowen in the lineup. He hasn't missed a game yet and was at his best during Sunday's 155-97 win over none other than First National Bank. He scored 59 points and pulled down 20 rebounds.

17 Minnesota football players face charges

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS - Police records indicate 17 players from the 1995 University of Minnesota football roster have been accused of crimes, including assaults and thefts, a report said Tuesday.

Fourteen of them have been arrested within the last year, The Minnesota Daily said.

Ten of the athletes have been suspended or dismissed from the team, but seven others have not been disciplined and six of them are expected to be with the team when practice begins next month, the campus newspaper reported.

University Police detective Brad Herberg told the Daily the problem of unruly football players is the worst it's ever been.

"It seems that within the past year (the university) has had more problems with players than they've ever had." Herberg said. "And I don't know what the real issue is. It's just been one thing after another.'

The Daily cited as examples the cases of junior Raymond Baylor and sophomore Kahlen
