Finders keepers, losers weepers

Dig through your old toy chest. The toys you played with when you were 5 can bring you easy money and a chance to relive your youth.

Childhood toy treasures bring in big bucks

Mike Waller

B pried underneath last year's flaps, fragile, precious memories and miseries of their owners, some old toys are turning up valuable treasures. Banging hundreds of dollars for "Star Wars" paraphernalia and Bellamy Bluebonnets has become a bit of a cult among collectors, and the reasons are searching for what they once owned and dreamed of in an attempt to relive their youth. I remember scraping up C-3PO and setting him on fire. I thought Ty-fighters off the toy chest were going to fly through a thousand pounds, said UI student Alice Min. I might as well have ripped up a couple of hundred dollars, she said.

"Star Wars" figurines are everywhere these days, along with some condition on the collector's market. Because of their immense popularity, they are shown up at department stores, toy stores, and even employed at drugstores. 112 E. Columbia. A Princess Leia figurine, which sold for only a couple bucks over a decade ago, can now command a price of $500-$600 if it's still in its original packaging.

Even without the original package, the old figurines go for a couple of hundred dollars, Min said. Ms said he remembers using the allowance to buy the toys. "I would take out a dollar and put them with other money," he said. "Now there's a trend for these toys, and some companies have revisted some of these.

Dyedrocoma offers many of the figurines, as well as other licensed hot items that were originally released during the peak of the "Star Wars" craze. and can sell now for as high as $1,000. "Star Wars" toys have gained so much attention that they have gotten requests for a wide variety of items, said the Hobby Corner store manager. "The collection has taken off. and now we're seeing them sold here in town."

He expects the popularity of these toys to continue. "The "Star Wars" toys" are the most popular this season, and now they're in the last stages of the game," he said. "Once it's a finished box, the store has it for sale."

Among Hobby's favorites though, are the "Star Wars" figurines, old toys and new comic-book art.

"I'm on a quest to recover every "Star Wars" figurine I've ever owned," he said. "I also really enjoy original comic books and have done so lately—let's call it a hobby. In the past I've made money by selling figurines while doing research," he said.

Templing offers flexibility, but not benefits

Katie Bunker
The Daily Iowan

With a trend of separations decreasing to battle rising costs, companies are looking toward temporary workers to meet fluctuating labor needs. However, while temporary positions offer flexibility, they do not offer the same benefits as permanent positions.

"The nature of the employee is severed, leaving employees vulnerable as they lose the protection of permanent employees," Laurence Clements, L.L.C. Labor Center director, said.

For summer junior Kerry Wagner, the 100-degree heat certainly didn't prevent work errands for Iowa City in three hours. That's what he did on Friday, as he waited for a train on the University of Iowa campus.

"We work our schedule around our classes," Wagner said. "There isn't a lot of please in Iowa City that he does, since he has so many other people to fit your position.

"The amount of work we've had recently, we are having to temporally tweak Iowa City to the variety of work I have been referred to work in the mail area at UCI for over a year," Wagner said. Although for temporary service

Wagner works for the Duff-Norton, he's taken advantage of the contract because he is adorned by the parcel himself.

"I'm happy, employers, for the people that we serve, the people that we have been serving, the people that we have been serving, the people that we have been serving," Clements said.

Sign deters potential bridge jumpers

Katharine Hornantz
The Daily Iowan

Anyone walking across the Iowa River at the Hanover Bridge may see a hand holding a note on top of the bridge or a sign warning attached to the bridge's handrail.

The sign, which states the date of the last fatal jump committed by bridge jumping, was erected by the Iowa City Parks and Recreation Department.

"We're trying to avoid further numbers of people jumping off of these bridges andBridge jumping," said Alix Scott, administrative assistant at Planning and Administrative Services.

The last death occurred in June when a 16-year-old Iowa City resident jumped from the bridge.

"The nature of the employer is severed, leaving employees vulnerable as they lose the protection of permanent employees," Clements said.

A Time to Kill' delves into world of racism

Judge dismisses all but 1 claim

LOUISIANA - A federal judge in this state has thrown out a complaint against Michael Jackson in a lawsuit over the film "The Jackson Family Honors." The lawsuit, brought by Jackson Communications, Inc. against Jackson, claimed that the Jacksons had breached a contract by failing to pay the company its share of profits from the film. The judge ruled that the company had reasonable cause to refer to the contract, and that the lawsuit was not barred by the statute of limitations. The only claim that remains against Jackson is whether he agreed to perform at the show and made a promise to perform, which the court ruled he had not.

The case stems from the 1994 Los Angeles charity show that was sponsored by Jackson. When the show was postponed twice, the company claimed that Jackson had breached his contract. The judge ruled that the company had reasonable cause to refer to the contract, and that the lawsuit was not barred by the statute of limitations. The only claim that remains against Jackson is whether he agreed to perform at the show and made a promise to perform, which the court ruled he had not.

Jackson's family attorney, Brian O'Shea, said the family was disappointed with the decision and was considering its options.

'A Time to Kill' delves into world of racism

Judge dismisses all but 1 claim

The film goes beyond an exploration of race and will leave the theater pondering.

The craziness led to the public perception of Jackson as a character who would be wpnanon to the media. The film, however, has more to offer than that. It is a story of a man who is forced to confront his past and his present, and to make choices that will determine his future.

The film is about more than just the rivalry between Jackson and Rodney King. It is about the larger issues of race and justice, and how they are intertwined in the lives of the characters.

There are "hidden" elements in the film that are not immediately apparent. For example, the way that the characters are portrayed is not always straightforward. Instead, the film uses symbolism and metaphor to convey its messages.

The film is a reminder that the battle against racism is not over, and that we must continue to work towards a more just society.

The film is a powerful reminder of the importance of empathy and understanding, and of the need for dialogue and discussion in order to bring about change.

The film is a testament to the enduring power of film as a medium for storytelling and for educating and inspiring audiences.

New York (AP) - An aide of one of boxing's most powerful leaders allegedly tried to extort money.

Former boxing promoter Bob Arum denied taking payoffs and said he is unaware of any investigation. He said he personal or business records have been subpoenaed.

Lee claimed the situation on a "harassment" by a leading pro-boxer, Bob Arum of Top Rank Inc.

The New York Post said Sunday that Arum received immunity from federal prosecutors he paid Lee to account for Arum's pending Olympic promotion deal.

Lee blamed the situation on Arum. Arum is a member of the powerful Powers/Nike-ESPN-Landover group, which has the league's scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday when ABC's "College GameDay" comes to Iowa City.
