UI President Mary Sue Coleman held her first monthly "fireside chat," without a fire, before an audience of approximately 25 students Wednesday night in the Triangle Ballroom of the Union.

Coleman, along with special guests UI Vice President for Research David Skorton and UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones, fielded questions from curious students and even asked a few of their more people, some might have

Five hundred students were randomly invited to attend a discussion between administrators and students. Despite the small turnout, students and administrators both said they thought the event was a success.

"I had no idea how many students would show up," Coleman said. "I loved it. I was really pleased with the high-quality discussion. If there would have been been intimidated and afraid to Students brought up questions and concerns that covered all aspects of life at the UI. There were questions about safety, drinking, tuition and fees and even a question about why Cambus routes are "Red" and "Blue" rather than "Black" and "Gold."

Skorton said the crowd was a perfect one for the type of discus-

"We weren't looking for a huge crowd, especially the first time," he said. "We wanted to get enough students here for a good discussion and this was just about the perfect size crowd."

UI freshman Leann Thoms said she thought the crowd was just about the right size.

"I thought it was very helpful," she said. "If there would have been 500 people, I'd have been intimidated and probably not spoken."

Quick verdict no surprise to UI Chinese students

Charlotte Eby The Daily Iowan

UI Chinese students expressed fear, but little surprise Wednesday upon learning of the 11-year sentence of Wang Dan, one of the leaders of the Tiananmen Square movement.

The DI spoke to three Chinese students who offered their comments, but refused to be identified for fear of government reprisal should they visit their homeland.

"My family is in China," one student said. "If I go to visit them, I could be arrested."

Chinese authorities condemned Wang to 11 years in prison after a trial that lasted four hours; the UI one big reason."

"It doesn't matter what he did or said; they didn't give him a fair trial," the student said.

The student said he will not go back to his home country because of the government's oppressive attitude toward dissent. The student said Wang's trial and sentencing is similar to the experiences of other pro-democracy leaders in China.

"They set up an example like this to show the society they want to control it," the student said. "I'm not planning to go back to China. What happened today is Jian Wang, a UI graduate student in journalism and a native of China, said the government is trying to encourage Chinese people to become more patriotic by punishing dissidents.

"I shouldn't say I expected it, but I wasn't surprised," Jian Wang said.

"I think the government is trying to change the orientation of ideology in the country, which is doing well economically."

Randy Damon, a Chinese teacher at Central Campus High School in Des Moines, said the sentence did not surprise him. Damon was in Beijing when thousands of pro-democracy Chinese were killed in Beijing's Tiananmen Square over a period of days beginning June 4, 1989.

"A trial like that is very calculated to send messages to people,' Damon said.

Damon said the pro-democracy movement may be helped by the sentencing.

BEIJING - The trial lasted four hours, and the verdict was harsh: 11 years in prison for Wang Dan, one of the last active leaders of the 1989 Tiananmen Square democracy movement.

With Wednesday's swift judgment, China's Communist Party leaders signaled their resolve to silence critics. But they also revealed worries about anti-government sentiment and the potent memories of the military assault that crushed the 1989 demonstra-

CAMPAIGN Activists feel presidential election overlooks environmental issues

Laura Heinauer The Daily Iowan

It's not easy being green, espe-

Public opinion polls show only 1-5 percent of the electorate views environmental issues as a priority in this election. Many environmental activists feel unrepresented, they said.

Ben Lewis, a UI sophomore and environmental activist, said the environment is an important issue the Democrats and Republicans have overlooked.

The environment is going to determine the future of the human race, and it's not where it needs to be in the presidential campaign," Lewis said. "Ralph Nader is definitely an environmental choice."

Nader is the Green Party's candidate for president and publicly speaks on behalf of the environment. Jackie Gharib, a Nader supporter, said low voter turnout reflects the two-party system's poor response to the will of the people.

"(Nader) provides a true alternative and a voice that I have a tremendous amount of respect for," Gharib said.

UI biological science Professor Stephen Hendrix said the two presidential candidates have placed the environment on the back burner in this campaign because they feel they don't need to address environment issues to win the election.

'There's no real discussion and nobody seems to be paying much attention to environmental issues."

"The environment is going to determine the future of the human race, and it's not where it needs to be in the presidential campaign."

Democrats have backed down on environmental issues concerning land development when faced with stiff Republican resistance on the national level, he said.

"I definitely wouldn't want the future of the environment to rest on (GOP presidential candidate Bob) Dole and the Republican Party's shoulders, but (President) Clinton hasn't done much to protect it either," Hendrix said.

David Ridenour, the vice president of the National Center of Public Policy and Research, said Clinton has touched on a few environmental issues during his presi- vision will do a better job."

dency, but he didn't follow through with most of his rhetoric.

"Bill Clinton will be supporting the same old policy, and I'm certain that things will not get much better," Ridenour said. "He measures the worth of an environmental policy by the number of bureaucrats that the new program requires and the number of taxpayer dollars spent."

Ridenour said Dole has a record for doing what he promised and a compassion for people who have lost the right to use their property. "I think Bob Dole takes a realistic approach," Ridenour said. "He is looking for a cost-effective way to keep federal standards high while giving a greater say to state and local government on how to meet these goals."

Ridenour said Americans have a great deal at stake in the environment, and he doesn't doubt both Dole and Clinton believe the environment must be protected.

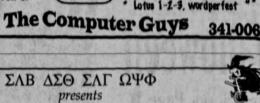

"Everyone needs clean air and clean water to survive," he said. "The difference is how people choose to achieve it. Do we want a government that increases taxes and takes away jobs or one that increases incentives for a better environment? I think Bob Dole's

In response to Iowa Democratic Sen. Tom Harkin's explanation for not maintaining a domicile in his home state, the Iowa Federation of College Republicans (IFCR) used its group funds to buy him a ticket for a cruise to the Bahamas.

Harkin told The Des Moines Register he was not wealthy enough to maintain a residence in Iowa, a statement that has been criticized by the campaign of his challenger, Rep. Jim Ross Lightfoot. Low census tally shocks officials

Tracy Potocki The Daily Iowan

Hoping to gain an additional $200,000 a year in state funds, Iowa City officials spent $198,000 for a special census, expecting population numbers to have risen in the last six years. Instead, census results indicated a lower number of residents, and consequently, Iowa City will receive only $25,000 a year in state clerk and co-chairperson of the funds - $175,000 less than officials originally sought.

ed population numbers to rise from eral Census Bureau's 1990 housing 59,738 in 1990 to 63,700, but were count, which demonstrated area surprised by preliminary findings totaling only 60,087 citizens.

3,900 residents was expected to bring the city an additional $200,000 per year, but an actual increase of about 349 people will only result in an additional $25,000. The cost for the $198,000 special census will now take the city eight years to regain, which is paid for by local taxpayers' funds.

The last federal census was conducted in 1990. Six years ago, Iowa City's population was found to total 59,738. City officials predicted growth had occurred based on the number of housing units built since and persons per household.

The special census was needed in order to verify population expansion, allowing the city to collect additional road-use tax funding and population-allocation revenues, City Manager Steve Atkins

"Based on our projection factors, we determined that there was enough growth to warrant the special census," said Marian Karr, city Special Census Committee.

Iowa City officials are extremely puzzled by the low population numbers the census revealed.

How can you have all the land development the Iowa City area has had but virtually no change at all in population?" Atkins said.

The 1990 Federal Census Bureau's housing-unit count might have been overstated, Franklin

Atkins said officials still have plenty of work ahead of them.

They think the size of the family Census takers finished their might be shrinking, Atkins said.

Karr said the census bureau office is currently undergoing a "Were You Counted" campaign, which may possibly alter the outcome of their preliminary findings.

The campaign began on Oct. 26, and respondents have until Nov. 8 to return their forms. This effort allows individuals who were not counted to be counted by filling out a form and submitting it to the Federal Census Bureau's regional office. New site sought for library expansion

Melanie Mesaros

The Daily Iowan

The previous plans drawn up for the Iowa City Public Library expansion have been scrapped, and planners have gone back to the drawing board.

At a work session of the Iowa City City Council and the Library Board of Trustees Wednesday night, three sites were chosen as possibilities for future public library expansion. More specific plans will not be made until the groups agree on the project's basic details, Councilor Karen Kubby

"The city staff have decided that this council is so fickle (that) until the council can give them a better idea of the site, they don't want to draw up any more detailed designs," she said.

The three publicly owned properties being considered are: the parking lot between the current public library, 123 S. Linn St., and ter, 410 E. Washington St.; and the corner of Iowa Avenue and

Gilbert Street, near the bus depot. "Within 30 days we should begin feasibility studies on the properties," said Karin Franklin, director of city planning and development. Although the new library building will be bigger and better, the site should not move far from its current location, Councilor Larry Baker said.

"As soon as you take it across Gilbert Street, you change the dynamics of who uses the library," Baker said.

"What you will have is people going directly to the library and not going downtown."

Members of the council and the library board have come to the conclusion that its 47,000 square feet are not enough to meet the needs of the Iowa City community.

"We need 80,000 square feet of library," Library Director Susan the Holiday Inn, 210 N. Dubuque Craig said. "The library board's

If the new library building is built at the parking lot near the Holiday Inn, it will be capable of containing a wide range of facilities, such as retail space and office space, as well as multipurpose and conference rooms. There is a clear preference for mixed use on the Holiday Inn parking lot site," City Manager Steve Atkins said.

Councilor Dean Thornberry said the site near Gilbert Street would make parking more accessible for librarygoers because there is an existing parking lot there.

My main concern is having a library that is for existing and future generations," he said. "To be available, they've got to be

Courageous struggles against capital punishment

ister Helen Prejean, author of the best-selling "Dead Man Walking" and advocate against capital punishment, visited the UI campus Tuesday to speak about her experiences in counseling death-row inmates. Prior to her speaking engagement, Prejean held a press conference at the Boyd Law Building. When she sat down to speak with the media, I felt like I had known her for a long time; I could have spoken Prejean began counseling inmates in 1982 when a friend asked her if she would correspond with a death-row inmate at Angola State Penitentiary in Louisiana. She agreed, and later became his spiritual adviser. The inmate was Elmo Patrick Son-

Sonnier and his brother, Eddie, kidnapped a high-school couple on a date. They raped the teen-age girl, forced the them execution-style with three bullets in the back of their heads. This brutal murder and others like it make me wonder why Prejean, a nun with an illuminating smile and a heart-warming Louisiana accent, fights to save the lives of cold-blooded murderers.

James McCurtis Jr. Prejean said she battles against the death penalty because, "Once you put yourself in the business of killing the people who killed other people, how do you distinguish your actions ... you're agreeing (to) torture and kill people."

It is cheaper to keep prisoners alive than to kill them. In Florida, an execution costs about $3.18 million. It only costs $516,000 to keep someone in prison for 40 years. Politicians feed the American public phrases like justice was served after an execution has taken place, and use the death penalty as a campaign booster to show they are tough on crime. But our justice system has proven to produce fatal flaws in capital punishment.

A 1995 report showed 350 people were wrongfully convicted of capital offenses between 1900 and 1985. In the last two decades, 48 people have been released from death row because of their innocence. However, 23 of the 350 wrongfully convicted of a capital crime have been executed. Innocent people died by the hands of "justice."

The process of the death penalty is racially and economically biased. It attacks poor people and African-Americans. Legal experts say African-Americans are more likely to receive the death penalty than whites, especially if the victim is white. African-Americans comprise 12 percent of the U.S. population, but 40 percent of prisoners on death row are black — 84 percent are there for killing whites. Experts also say whites who kill blacks most likely will not receive the death penalty. The graphic action of an execution affects the lives and minds of the prison staff. According to Prejean, a warden at the Louisiana State Penitentiary said he could not perform his job anymore even though he felt he was legally right. Despite the team of psychiatrists that meet with the staff before the execution, the wardens and guards say they "can't sleep at night and (they) can't eat because (their) conscience knows (they are) doing the wrong thing."

on Cabana, a Mississippi warden who published a book about his experiences with death-row inmates, had to quit his ob because it took too big of a toll on him. He had gotten to know one particular inmate rather well before the execution. The inmate, on his way to the gas chamber, asked the warden, "How am I going to get through this?" Cabana consoled him by answering, "breathe deep and right away" so it will be less painful.

Prejean, who has witnessed three executions, said if everyone could view an execution, the people of America would say, "We do not want capital punishment to exist anymore.'

The film "Dead Man Walking" is the closest American people have come to seeing an execution. The movie was the most intriguing film of last year, and it has made an impact on America's view of the death penalty. It is the kind of movie I would recommend, but I don't think I will see it again because of the empty feeling I had after leaving the theater.

Prejean said these criminals are fellow human beings and no one should be killed. She has stared into the eyes of men in the electric chair. She counsels them until the day they die, because "it is the right thing to do. I say to them, 'look, you may have done the most horrible thing any human being could do and I don't condone that, but you're a human being and you have dignity and you should not die alone.'

I asked Prejean to autograph my book and she signed it: "To James — Choose life." No matter what your stance on capital punishment is, whether you are for it, against it or indifferent, you must admit Prejean is a courageous person.

ON ELECTION NIGHT, GOOD GRIEF.

Three days of honoring the dead

Tt's Halloween, and most people at the UI will party this week-Lend and wear costumes depicting fictional characters, rock musicians or socioeconomic stereotypes. Some people will drink until they think they see ghosts.

However, in Hispanic communities, Halloween is the first day of a three-day celebration called El Día de Los Muertos, the Day of the Dead, which celebrates the dead.

On All Hallows Eve, the spirits of children, angelitos, are welcomed back from the great beyond. Food is laid out for the spirits. From this, Americans have derived the tradition of children going from door to door to collect food for the spirits.

The next afternoon, on All Saints Day, adult spirits are welcomed back, usually with the tolling of church bells. Signs of the spirits' arrival vary. If a glass of wine is knocked over or candles are blown out, the dead have returned.

On the last day, All Souls Day and fireworks explode. The spirits mon decorations in Mexican shop.

In remembering and celebrating the dead, Hispanic culture embraces death as an essential part of life, and even mocks death.

El Día de Los Muertos is a joyful holiday. When the spirits return, there is a feast of Pan de Muerto, a sweet bread, and the dishes the deceased enjoyed in life. People reminisce about good times with friends and relatives who have died. There is comfort in remembering the dead are still with the living and are not lost.

In remembering and celebrating the dead, Hispanic culture Calacas, skeletons shown at work and get a good rest until next year. ly, are common decorations. people tend grave sites and have While there probably aren't many T.K. restaurants in the Southwest. Calacas are reminders there is a skeleton beneath everyone's skin, and everyone is bound for the graveyard eventually.

El Día de Los Muertos is generally associated with Catholicism because Mexico and most Latin American countries have large Catholic populations. It is a actually a relic of the old Aztec and Mayan religions and a form of ancestor worship, but the celebration continues as part of Hispanic culture.

So, this weekend when you are celebrating Halloween and a glass of punch tips over though no one touched it, or your guests go through far more food than you thought they would, perhaps there is another explanation. Perhaps your relatives have come for the party, and you should sit with them and discuss their lives and embraces death as an essential yours. Then, lead them back to the part of life, and even mocks death. cemetery, where they can lay down

Halloween should be scary and fun

Ts Halloween still a holiday for children? It just does not seem Llike it could be that much fun anymore. For one thing, it rains every year. This, coupled with the fear of not going to any strange house because you might get a razor in a candy apple, relegates kids to trick-or-treating in malls.

Not only that, but costumes can't be offensive or violent anymore, according to many schools. After you take away witches, superheroes and karate men, you are left with only fruits and vegetables. And one day soon, someone will take up the cry for fruit and vegetable rights, too.

There are other reasons to be afraid on Halloween. In 1978, a new fear was put into the head of every parent, or parent-to-be. This was the year the first "Halloween" movie came out. There is a direct correlation between this and feelings of insecurity in the dark October streets.

In 1967, horror writer Ivan Butler wondered if horror movies presented a bad example to viewers. He answered himself with, "One would feel fairly safe in asserting that not a single werewolf or vampire stalks the streets of our cities as a result of an audience watching a monster film ...

Adults shouldn't be afraid to let their kids have a great Halloween.

The problem with this conclusion is it is no longer 1967, and instead of monsters in our movies, there are slashers in our movies. Older movies depended on suspense and left much of the terror to the imagination. Today, horror in the movies is blood and sex.

During 1978-81, America was flooded by the largest number of horror films in history, mostly slasher movies, and mostly because of the success of John Carpenter's "Halloween." That movie was made for a reported $325,000, and has since grossed more than $80 million - giving it one of the highest proportional returns of any film

Many films tried to duplicate this success. One of these was "Friday the 13th," of which one film reviewer said, "With no intelligence, no characterization, no socially redeeming value whatsoever, 'Friday the 13th' embodies everything wrong with the latest cycle of horror films -it's totally mindless bloodletting ... wretched film."

Unfortunately, horror movies as a whole have become known as bloody sex romps. Many of these movies were made using the killer's point-of-view. According to writer Gregory Waller, this makes the slasher film seem more real than any monster movie: "Characters in point-of-view shots are the object of sexual investigation ... the stalker film is almost always positioned in a middle-class American community, which fosters a degree of likeness to the viewing audi-

Horror movies can have lasting effects on young viewers. Many people still peer around shower curtains. Many refuse to swim, even in streams, because of "Jaws." But adults must realize slasher movies are mostly fantasy, and they must provide guidance.

Adults shouldn't be too afraid to let their kids have a great Halloween. It's supposed to be the night the wind howls and sinister shadows loom. The way things are going now, the Halloween of the future features fruits and vegetables wandering aimlessly around the mall, and that is scary and ast week, astronomers announced they had discovered another planet circling a distant star. Although they stress this planet couldn't support life, it's in our nature to be intrigued by the possibility that there might be other forms of life somewhere out there maybe even intelligent life.

Rev. Jerry Falwell advises us not to waste our time. Falwell, TV evangelist and founder of the Moral Majority, said there is no intelligent life elsewhere in the universe because God's work was done for the descendants of Adam and Eve on this planet alone. I'm no theologian, but doesn't it belittle God and glorify mankind in an unseemly manner - to sug-

• If that fad has run its course for you, try the oxygen bar. Entertainment Weekly reported the existence of clubs where you can pay $13 to inhale pure oxygen for 20 minutes. We all have our recreational substances of choice, but for my money, it's much easier to strike up a conversation with a drink in your hand than it is with a tube up your nose

· Is it my imagination, or are more political candidates using their mothers in TV ads this year? U.S. Senate candidate Jim Ross Lightfoot is just one of many who have called on mom for support. I suppose the idea is to get us feeling all warm and fuzzy about the candidate - but even Jeffrey Dahmer had a mother. This is not to equate politicians with serial killers, but OF COURSE mom is going to say her son is a fine boy. It proves nothing, except the discourse of Campaign '96 has become almost completely free of meaningful content.

. Speaking of TV, have you noticed how the media is to be laboring in an attempt to work up inter est in the civil trial of O.J. Simpson? The sense of resignation - "Oh, God, here we go again" - is easy to spot. The entertainment channel E!, which broadcast the Simpson criminal trial (to the puzzlement of most observers), is doing a nightly re-enactment of each day's courtroom events. It's another indication of what seems to be E!'s mission statement: "If it doesn't happen in front of a camera, it doesn't really

· A few weeks ago, I related the sorry tale of two Ohio schoolgirls who were nearly expelled from junior high for possessing a Midol tablet. I understand the impulse behind zero tolerance for drug use in schools, but zero intelligence in applying the policies is not helpful. In Gettysburg, Pa., a highschool boy was recently nabbed for possessing an Alka-Seltzer tablet. Plop, plop, fizz, fizz, a 10-day suspension there is.

· On the subject of drugs, I've tried for four years to maintain that what Bill Clinton did or didn't do in college doesn't make any difference in his job performance now. I can't keep up the facade any longer when Clinton talks about how bad drugs are, he lacks credibility. Part of me doesn't believe it when Bob Dole says it's Clinton's fault that teen drug use has gone way up since 1992. Another part of me thinks Dole might be onto something. But most of me believes the likelihood of a kid using drugs has more to do with his upbringing than with anything else - and since we're not electing a National Day next Tuesday, what difference does it make?

 We are, however, electing a president, and I still haven't decided how I'll vote. I believe Dole's agenda isn't what the country needs. Clinton's beliefs are closer to my own, but I can't be sure he won't compromise them for political expediency. I remember enough about the Watergate era to fear the national paralysis that could result if the alleged Clinton scandals turn out to be more than political witch hunting. Dole's integrity is beyond reproach, but he's the standard bearer for some groups that scare me.

So who do I vote for - the man or the issues? Research into voters' attitudes tells us that despite our avowed intentions to decide based on issues, we decide based on personal characteristics, especially when the issues are difficult.

I need to go someplace where I can clear my head and think about this. Suddenly, the idea of an oxygen bar doesn't sound so absurd

We wish we could tell you the Imnaha attack was an isolated incident, but we cannot, not in light of a news item from the Detroit Free Press, written by Kate McKee and sent in by many alert readers, concerning a Michigan man who was struck in an extremely sensitive area - you guessed it, his rental car - by a 5pound sucker fish falling from the sky. We should start monitoring. these programs closely, because the fish on those programs are probably SICK AND TIRED of always playing the role of victims. It is only a matter of time before. there is a situation where a couple of televised angling professionals are casting their lures out on a seemingly peaceful lake and they happen to yawn, and suddenly the water erupts in a fury as dozens of vengeful bass launch themselves like missiles and deliberately lodge themselves deep into every available angler orifice. And we would NOT want to miss that.

Tired? Read this

I'm tired all the time. What should I do?

If you are feeling tired all the time, you are not alone. Fatigue is a very common complaint among college students. The most common cause of fatigue seen at Student Health Service is "college life." The mental strain and other stressors of college - combined with not always eating and sleeping properly - often result in significant fatigue. Excessive alcohol or mood-altering drug use can also cause fatigue. If you have been experiencing excessive fatigue, the first thing you should do is make sure you are getting adequate rest, exercise and nutrition. This means approximately eight hours of sleep, some type of exercise - even walking to class rather than taking the Camt is - and adding some vegetables, whole grains and fruit to your meals - especially if the bulk of your diet comes out of a box or from fast-food restaurants. Time management, biofeedback or muscle-relaxation techniques may also Student HealthLog counselor or other mental-health professional.

Two of the most common physical causes of fatigue are anemia and hypothyroidism. You should come in to Student Health to be evaluated for anemia if you experience symptoms of shortness of breath (especially with exertion), heart palpitations, rapid heart rate or pale skin. Also come in if your symptoms include constipation, dry skin or hair, weight gain and cold intolerance, which can signal hypothyroidism. Attention to adequate iron intake is especially important for vegetarians and menstruating females.

Another well-known illness for causing fatigue is mononucleosis, more commonly known as "mono." However, in addition to feeling tired, you should also have the other more common mono symptoms of sore throat and swollen glands.

If you continue to experience excessive fatigue despite adequate rest and healthy lifestyle habits, come to Student Health for an evaluation.

Q: My dad has high blood pressure. He is bugging me to be careful, but I don't have time to worry about it, and I'm too young to need to do anything now anyway, aren't I?

A: The fact that your father has high blood pressure does mean you are at more risk for high blood pressure than people with no family history of it, and you should have your blood pressure checked.

If your blood pressure is consistently high, then a detailed history and physical exam, along with a small number of lab tests, will be done to search for possible, correctable causes of the problem.

Most people with high blood pressure, however, have "essential hypertension," which is a sophisticated way of saying doctors don't exactly know why the blood pressure is high.

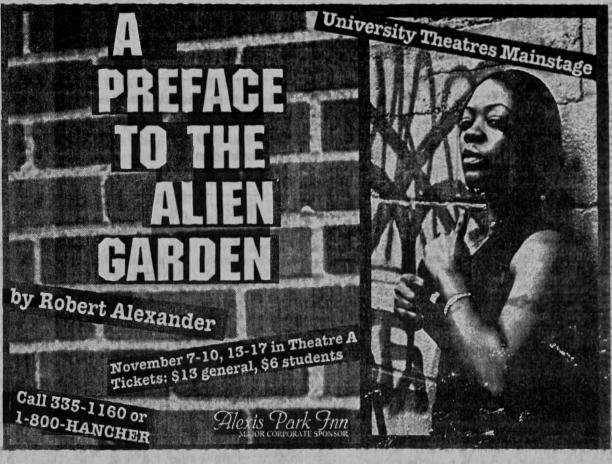

High blood pressure seldom makes a person feel ill in the short run, but many studies show in the long run, untreated high blood pressure increases a person's risk of stroke, heart disease and kidney damage. Unfortunately, in many cases, the first sign of these complications may be death, which, while definite, is not treatable.

Studies have also shown definite reductions in death rates and complications in those who reduce their blood pressure through treatment (diet, weight loss, exercise and medications may all be options), compared to those who do not treat their blood pressure. CYANGUGU, Rwanda - Rwandan army commandos crossed the border to help rebels rout the Zairian army from a major city in eastern Zaire Wednesday. The region's Roman Catholic archbishop was killed in the fighting.

Zairian troops dodged enemy fire and took up defensive positions around the provincial capital of Bukavu on Wednesday, as shells fired from the city peppered their positions, sending white puffs of smoke into the air around a solitary whitewashed house.

The battle for Bukavu, on the south end of Lake Kivu, killed Rev. Christophe Munzihirwa Mwene Ngabo, a 70-year-old ethnic Tutsi. He died Tuesday "during a military attack on the city," a Vatican spokesperson said on condition of anonymity. Details of the death Munzihirwa was the second prelate in the region slain in the past two months. Archbishop Joachim Ruhuna of Burundi was killed Sept. 9.

Zairian troops in South Kivu province are fighting Tutsi rebels who have defied the government's order to leave the country. The rebels, known as Banyamulenge, are descendants of Tutsis who immigrated to the region at least 200 years ago.

The fighting has sent hundreds of thousands of refugees fleeing from camps, prompting aid workers to warn of a humanitarian dis-

French President Jacques Chirac urged the United Nations and the Organization of African States to organize a conference on the crisis and called on world leaders to help Africa's Great Lakes region.

The United Nations on Wednesday appointed Canada's ambassador to Washington as an envoy to deal with the crisis. Raymond Chretien, who previously served as ambassador to Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi, is expected to leave for Africa on Nov. 6.

Rwanda insists it is not at war with Zaire, but its Tutsi-dominated military exchanged cross-border fire with Zairian troops on Tuesday. One Rwandan was killed and 10 were wounded. Zairian casualties were not known.

Rwandan side of the border, Zairian troops could be seen digging in about three miles outside Bukavu.

The thud of mortar rounds echoed off the hillside, and Zairian troops were seen scurrying for cover as shells fired from Bukavu landed around them.

Jean-Baptiste Nzabakirana, a Hutu refugee who left Bukavu on Wednesday and crossed into Rwanda, said he had seen no Zairian troops in the town or on the road to the border. The main border post was deserted.

Communists criticize Yeltsin's top aide

Candice Hughes Associated Press

MOSCOW - With Boris Yeltsin's heart surgery drawing nearer, the president's foes have set their sights on the man many say is running Russia in his stead his powerful chief of staff.

Anatoly Chubais, who ousted several rivals for the president's ear in a series of power plays this summer, came under attack Wednesday from two of the country's most prominent Communists for allegedly abusing his powers.

Communist leader Gennady Zyuganov and parliament speaker Gennady Seleznyov unleashed a fierce barrage of criticism after the president put one of Chubais' wealthy associates - auto and media mogul Boris Berezovsky on the Security Council.

Seleznyov called the appointment an invasion of the "holiest of holies" - the inner sanctum of national security - and demanded Chubais' resignation.

The bad blood between the liberal Chubais and the Communists goes deep. For one thing, Chubais masterminded Yeltsin's re-election staff, one of the most powerful men campaign against the Communists this summer. Moreover, he is known as a proponent of market ation, Chubais is moving even reforms, and used to run the government's sell-off of state enterprises, which the Communists bitterly oppose.

"We've never trusted Chubais," Zyuganov said Wednesday.

Kremlin infighting has intensified in recent months with Yeltsin sidelined by heart trouble, and Chubais seems to have emerged from the fray on top.

The Kremlin said Wednesday Yeltsin's doctors would set a date for the president's surgery early next week The announcement came the day after the American consultant on the case, Dr. Michael DeBakey, said Yeltsin might undergo triple or quadruple coronary bypass surgery as early as next week.

He said Yeltsin's prognosis is good, but the 65-year-old president will need six to eight weeks of recovery before he can return to the Kremlin full time.

That makes Chubais, as chief of in Russia. And with the president secluded and facing a long recupermore into the forefront - an easy target for those who scoff at Kremlin assurances that Yeltsin is really still in charge.

Apartheid killer sentenced to 2 life terms

Duncan Guy Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa - A former South African police colonel - who once admitted he doesn't know how many antiapartheid activists he killed was sentenced Wednesday to two life terms in prison. He became the highest-ranking officer convicted of apartheid-era crimes.

Eugene de Kock, 47, has already appealed for amnesty to a government commission. De Kock claimed during his trial he carried out attacks on the orders of superiors, and was told some of those orders sometimes came from former President P.W. Botha.

De Kock headed a unit notorious for killing and torturing antiapartheid activists and was convicted of six murders and 83 lesser tenced him to 212 years in jail. He called de Kock's crimes revolting, calculated and coldblooded. He said the sentence should serve as a deterrent to others with power.

Van der Merwe said many of the victims were "innocent people who posed no physical threat to the accused or the police."

De Kock will now take his case to South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Headed by retired Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the commission is hearing evidence of apartheid-era crimes in an effort to heal the wounds from more than 30 years of official seg-

Tutu said Wednesday de Kock should not be made the "fall guy" for those in higher authority.

"If we are going to heal the country then the whole truth must come out - that means those who had ultimate responsibility and who had final authority," he said.

A member of de Kock's legal team, Schalk Hugo, said the application for amnesty was more important at this stage than an appeal. The case will probably be heard next year.

Catherine Mlangeni, the mother: of one of de Kock's victims, Bheki Mlangeni, said after the hearing she felt de Kock should have been killed, "like he killed my son."

SEQUEL OF THE CENTURY Lawyers ponder when to play police tape

Associated Press SANTA MONICA, Calif. -

Lawyers have a key decision to make in the O.J. Simpson civil case whether to play a never-beforeheard police interrogation tape during a detective's testimony or wait until Simpson takes the stand. Retired Detec tive Tom Lange helped question Simpson the morning after the slayings of Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman. He's scheduled to testify in the civil case today, and could be used to introduce the tape.

The interrogation was controversial because Simpson didn't have an attorney present when he first discussed his alibi. The tape wasn't used in the criminal trial at which Simpson was acquitted, nor has it been released by police.

Goldman's family and Brown Simpson's estate are suing Simpson for his money, claiming he is responsible for the deaths despite his acquittal on murder charges. And unlike in his criminal trial, Simpson is required to testify if Simpson was absent from court half of Monday and all day Tuesday. According to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity, Simpson was attending to matters related to the custody dispute over his two young children, Sydney and Justin.

A new commissioner has been assigned to the custody case, and Simpson and the children's maternal grandparents - Lou and Juditha Brown - are trying to forge an out-of-court settlement, the sources said.

Attorneys could use the tape to challenge Simpson about how he cut his hand before the interrogation. He has offered different explanations for the cut; plaintiffs contend the gouges were caused by the victims' fingernails.

Lange also could introduce jurors to some of the most damaging physical evidence, which they have only seen in photographs up to now a glove, a knit cap, a blood-spattered envelope and a pair of eyeglasses. All were found near the blood-soaked bodies.

Loyola University Law School Dean Laurie Levenson said Lange might best be used to start bringing out the physical evidence, even though there is a down side to showing jurors the bloody gloves. "It will just bring back memories of the botched glove experiment at the first trial," Levenson said. "But it's certainly better to put the glove in Lange's hand than anyone else's, because he's a credible witness.'

Of the four detectives who handled the murder investigation, Lange has fared best as a witness. Mark Fuhrman pleaded no contest to perjury for lying during the trial, Philip Vannatter was accused of lying on the search warrant request at Simpson's home and Ron Phillips was forced to recant part of his testimony about his phone call to Simpson a few hours after the murders.

Still, Levenson said there's a danger to going over too much old material.

"Everyone knows the story," said Levenson, who has attended both trials. "You have to set out the facts in the civil trial. But if you could go to the jury now and ask them what they want to hear, they'd probably say, 'Just tell us

"If you want to try to start a business, it's really the only place in Iowa City that allows you to do that," Kevin Perez, owner of The Peaceful Fool, said of the Hall Mall. "There are also other small businesses up there that become a

The draw of the businesses and the key to the Hall Mall's continued success - is an attempt to keep art alive, Stephan said.

"It's stayed around because there's a vast niche for this kind of thing," he said. "It's mostly artists - or at least 'artsyness' - and no place else exists in Iowa that can offer that. And the reason it has maintained that niche is because 90 percent of the students in this town think they're going to be artists. The possibility that a place like this exists is fascinating for young artists.

The Virginia Tech football team has had seven players charged with various crimes since November 1995, and at least 15 more have been accused of beating up a member of the school's track team.

Of the seven Virginia Tech players who faced a combined total of 13 charges, ranging from shoplifting to malicious wounding, nine charges were dismissed and the remaining charges were carried out as suspended sentences.

"The Virginia Tech football team has had a series of violent and nonviolent crimes over the past year," Carter said. "The problem is that the athletes are getting away with it. They're having charges dropped or given light sentences. It's not always a non-biased process."

Carter said many athletic departments handle the charges internally in an attempt to keep publicity at a minimum. They conduct their own investigations to determine wrongdoing. The Ohio State University men's basketball team had several incidents involving its players, which led to the dismissal of three mempers of the squad during the 1994-95 season.

Michelle Willis, Ohio State University women's associate athletic director, said the athletic department lets campus police handle any investigations.

"The student-athletes were suspended pending the investigation of the allegations," she said. "After investigations by university police proved true, they were dismissed from the team."

Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations, said the UI does as much as it can to prevent public controversy.

"Generally, we try to recruit people that we don't think will have trouble obeying the law," she said. "When we run into trouble, we take it on a case-by-case basis to decide what measures will be tak-

She said while "innocent until proven guilty" is a guarantee in criminal proceedings, athletes are often withheld from competition until the situation is resolved.

"Sometimes an incident involves the breaking of team rules," she said. "But we do not take the position that we're just waiting for the courts to decide everything."

John Bennett, assistant professor in the UI School of Journalism and Mass Communication, said it's important not to overgeneralize when studying the role of athletes in campus crime.

"I don't think most of us look at the media systematically enough to be able to make valid generalizations about much of anything," he said. "To make generalizations you need to do thorough research and define who the athlete is."

Bennett said it's important to identify athletes because some get more publicity than others.

"Certain high-profile athletes do

Another popular topic was student activities and alcohol issues. Jones discussed plans for a committee that will try to sponsor alcohol-free alternative weekend activities at the Union in which students can take part.

Coleman said the alcohol issue is important at any university campus. She said the UI needs to work closely with the city and the bars to crack down on underage drink-

Beyond the serious topics, there were some lighter sides to the discussion. Students provided input for Coleman on areas of advising and how to get general information out to the students, a point Skorton said the administration needs to improve its performance on.

Pentagon, CIA accused of deception

Donald Rothberg

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Records of U.S. military units deployed in the Persian Gulf War contain abundant evidence of exposure to Iraqi chemical weapons, a former CIA analyst said Wednesday. He accused the Pentagon and CIA of engaging in "a pat-tern of deception and denial."

"There's no way you can even begin to get a complete picture of what happened over there unless and until they declassify every single unit log," said Patrick Eddington, who resigned from the CIA earlier this year.

During the 1991 Gulf War, Eddington analyzed satellite photos of Iraqi troop movements. Later, he and his wife, Robin, also a CIA analyst, began collecting information on their own initiative about the possible use of chemical weapons during that brief conflict. Robin Eddington also resigned from the CIA earlier this year.

"The idea that the Defense Department has engaged in any sort of conspiracy to cover up any information regarding Gulf War illness is simply not true," Pentagon spokesperson Bryan Whitman said. "We have nothing to hide. As we learn new information, we provide it as rapidly as possible. All of the information Mr. Eddington brought forward was looked at by the CIA and provided to the presidential advisory commission," CIA spokesperson Mark Mansfield said. The commission is reviewing allegations U.S. troops were exposed to

In an interview with the AP, Eddington said logs of the 101st Airborne Division from January 1991 showed during a period of two or three hours "one unit repeatedly detected chemical agents" using kits issued to every soldier.

He also said top Pentagon officials including Defense Secretary William Perry and Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairperson of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, falsely denied the existence of evidence of U.S. forces' exposure to chemical agents during the conflict with Iraq.

Eddington said in May 1994, Perry and Shalikashvili issued a memorandum which "stated categorically, no caveats on this, that there was no information, classified or otherwise, that indicated that any kind of chemical agent exposures had occurred or that any munitions were in the theater. That was a false state-

In June, when it first announced the possibility troops may have been affected in the incidents, the Pentagon said only about 300-400 Army engineers may have been exposed.

More recently, Pentagon officials have said thousands of U.S. troops may have been exposed to nerve gas when Iraqi ammunition dumps were blown up in March 1991.

The Pentagon has appealed for information from 20,000 troops who were in the vicinity of one of the ammunition depots

Ruby Ridge cover-up brings guilty plea

Richard Keil Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A senior FBI official pleaded guilty to obstruction of justice Wednesday for destroying a report that criticized the FBI's role in a deadly 1992 shootout at the Idaho cabin of white separatist Randall Weaver.

E. Michael Kahoe, who entered his plea before U.S. District Judge Ricardo Urbina, agreed to cooperate with prosecutors investigating other FBI officials involved in the case and whether they were involved in a cover-up of the FBI's handling of the siege.

The highest ranking of four suspended FBI officials still under investigation is former FBI deputy director Larry Potts.

Prosecutors said Kahoe destroyed the documents to keep them from attorneys representing Weaver, whose wife and son were killed during a nine-day standoff with government agents at Weaver's rural Idaho cabin in

U.S. donates $7.3 million to feed Kurds

Barry Schweid Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The United States is giving $7.3 million to help feed destitute Iraqi Kurds, and the Clinton administration urged other countries to join Wednesday in answering a U.N. appeal for $39.9 million to feed Iraq's hungriest people.

The $7.3 million earmarked for Kurds goes to the appeal and represents four and a half times as much as the rest of the world had pledged by Monday.

While urging others to help Wednesday, the administration again blamed President Saddam Hussein for the plight of the Iraqis. "He is letting children die because he prefers to build palaces for him and his family," State Department spokesperson Nicholas Burns said.

Overall, Burns said, Saddam has spent $2 billion in the last four years on 48 palaces and other residences for himself and his family and on a yacht plus millions of dollars on rebuilding the Iraqi armed forces.

On Tuesday, Burns said lavish spending by Saddam and his family during the six years Iraq has been under U.N. sanctions is contributing to severe food shortages for hundreds of thousands of Iraqis.

That money could be used to buy food around the world, which is permissible even with the sanctions designed to punish Saddam's policies by choking off purchases of Iraq's bountiful petroleum reserves, Burns said.

Nevertheless, the Clinton administration had no quarrel with a U.N. report about donor countries' lackluster responses to the U.N. appeal and the fighting in Kurdish areas that have caused severe food shortages for Iraqis dependent on aid

Without greater response, the situation will worsen for more than 2 million Iraqis dependent on donated food, said Holdbrook Arthur, director of the U.N. World Food Program in Iraq. He said distribution is stopping next month in southern and central Iraq where stocks are depleted.

Already, about 4,500 children under 5 are dying each month from hunger and disease, UNICEF Executive Director Carol Bellamy said Monday at the United Nations.

The country of 18 million people has been under U.N. sanctions since it invaded Kuwait in August 1990. The sanctions include a ban on the country's oil exports and a freeze on its overseas assets.

LaRussa named AP manager of the year

NEW YORK (AP) - Tony La kussa, who brought his intense style to a new league and led the St. Louis Cardinals to the NL Central championship, won The Associated Press manager of the year award Wednesday.

La Russa earned the honor for the third time. He also won in 1983 with the Chicago White Sox and in 1992 with Oakland.

La Russa received 49 votes in balloting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Bruce Bochy of NL West champion San Diego was second with 30 votes and Johnny Oates of AL West champion Texas was third with 27. Joe Torre of the World Series champion New York Yankees was fourth with 19. Voting was completed before the start of the playoffs.

Francona takes over at Phillies' helm

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Terry Francona, named Philadelphia Phillies manager on Wednesday, said he wants his team to overachieve next season, which is proba sly the only way it will be any better than the past three seasons.

The Phillies, 190-231 since winning an unexpected NL penhant in 1993, will go with prospects in 1997, and aren't expected to spend large sums on veteran free agents who could provide immediate help.

"It's not starting over, it's a different direction," Francona said.

Hawkeye point guard eyes NBA

Chris Snider The Daily Iowan

Four years ago, Andre Woolridge was a freshman point guard at the University of Nebraska with dreams of one day playing in the NBA

Now, thanks in part to his decision to leave Nebraska and come to the University of Iowa, that dream is on the brink of coming true.

"The first day I practiced here, I knew this was going to be a special place," Woolridge said of Iowa. "I knew just from Coach (Tom) teach a point guard like B. J. Armstrong what it takes to make it.'

13.1 points and six assists per game for the Hawkeyes, earning first team all-Big Ten honors and emerging as one of the premiere point guards in the nation.

He's the type of person that I'll be able to tell my grandkids that I got to play with Andre Woolridge," Iowa senior Jess Settles said. "I think he's that good and I have that much respect for him. And it's my job to make him look good."

Had Woolridge never left Nebraska and joined Settles at Iowa, the 6-foot, 190-pound senior doesn't think he would be preparing for a career in the NBA now.

taught me a lot about basketball, taught me how to make myself a better player and here I am now."

Here he is, heading into his senior campaign with a chance to break Iowa's career assist record, currently held by Armstrong. Woolridge needs just 134 assists to tie the record and has averaged over 190 per season thus far with the Hawkeyes.

Barring injuries, Woolridge should also become just the 31st player in Iowa history to go over 1,000 points in his career (he has 880) and could Davis' approach, Coach Davis being able to finish as one of the top 10 scorers in Iowa history.

This season, he'll focus mainly on those two areas: scoring to help his current team and Last season, as a junior, Woolridge averaged dishing out assists to impress the NBA scouts of his future team.

"In actuality, going to the NBA, it's more important to show that I can set up players," Woolridge said. "The NBA is nothing but five players who specialize at their position. The two-guard shoots and that's all he has to be able to do is stick it.

"For me to be successful on the next level, I feel that I need to be a great point guard. But at the same time, to help my team this year, I need to pick up my scoring.

The Hawkeyes need more scoring due to the departure of Russ Millard, Kenyon Murray, Chris Kingsbury and Mon'ter Glasper, who together accounted for 48.5 percent of the team's scoring last season.

Picking up his scoring should be no problem for Woolridge, who feels he is ready to become dominant player in the Big Ten.

"I feel I can," he said. "With our system the point guard being a coach on the floor, with the ball in my hands, bringing it up every play - if it's called for, I feel I have the ability to take over a game.' It's this system which Davis feels may benefit Woolridge in taking his game to the next "I've had a good number of point guards head coach Hayden Fry and ridiculing of startingquarterback Matt Sherman were enough to make me nau-First off, these people were convinced Matt Sherman was the reason Iowa was losing the football game and that by putting Ryan

Driscoll in at QB, Iowa would have a better shot against the Buckeyes. Wrong. Although Sherman obviously didn't have one of his better days on the field, throwing three interceptions on 18-of-37 passing, there was no way Driscoll was going to save the day. Besides his shoulder injury, a healthy Driscoll would have been eaten alive by the Buckeye secondary. Sherman's interceptions were caused because of a combination of factors that sprang up at different times. These included receivers running the wrong routes, poor pass blocking by the offensive line and the overall talent of the Ohio State secondary. Shawn Springs and Darryl Moore both swarmed on any pass Sherman threw. I would have hated to see what happened if Driscoll relieved Sherman.

The second place these so-called fans went wrong was with their booing. No, Iowa didn't play good, but we were playing the No. 2 team in the country. To boo Fry

Chris Snider The Daily Iowan

This week's game against Illinois will be somewhat of a homecoming for Iowa center and Chicago native Bill Reardon.

Then again, it will be homecoming for all involved.

The Illini chose Iowa as their homecoming opponent this year, making this the last homecoming game in the Big Ten this season and the only conference homecoming game in the month of November.

"That's pretty late for a home-

The players' bulky frames attracted bemused curiosity from the Dubliners there to meet relatives and friends from other flights. Five Notre Dame students hollered their support at pointblank range, belting out the first few lines of the school fight song and even cheering the arrival of a trolley full of the Notre Dame band's instruments.

Yet Springs doesn't even have an interception through the secondranked Buckeyes' seven victories.

"Everybody else in the secondary has at least one. Even Gary Berry, a freshman, has an interception and I don't have one," Springs said. "You all don't have to worry about me. You all stop talking about it and I'll get one, man.'

A year after leading the team in interceptions with five, Springs is teased constantly by teammates.

"We get on him every day," safety Damon Moore said with a big grin. "Even coach Cooper said, 'Shawn, maybe if Rob (Kelly) and Damon get a couple more picks, maybe they'll pitch one to you.'

Springs takes the kidding in stride, but it still grates him that Ohio State has 13 interceptions by eight other players. It has not affected his confidence.

"I don't think there's no one in the country I couldn't cover," he said.

Bulls look to coast now, win later

Mike Nadel Associated Press

CHICAGO - The Chicago Bulls won't win 72 games again.

They're too old, too brittle and, apparently, too disinterested to have the kind of sensational start that carried them to their history-making 1995-96 season.

"Being that we've had some injuries and some surgeries and we haven't had time to practice together as a unit, it seems we were made to get off to a slow start," Michael Jordan said. "And that's not so bad — as long as we finish strong.

"It's going to take away some expectations, but I like to think that this team is mature, that we're not going to try to live up to the expectations of others, anyway. We're going to play our style, and hopefully end up with a championship."

Last season, led by the magical Jordan, the maniacal Dennis Rodman and the magnificent Scottie Pippen, the Bulls won 41 of their first 44 games.

They finished 72-10, becoming the first NBA team ever to reach the 70-win mark, and then rolled through the playoffs for their fourth championship of the 1990s.

Jordan, driven to show that he could dominate in his first full season after coming out of retirement, won his eighth NBA scoring title and fourth MVP award. Rodman, determined to prove he could be more of a boon than a distraction after two difficult years in San Antonio, captured his fifth straight rebounding crown. Pippen was a first-team All-Star, Toni Kukoc was the league's best non-starter and Phil Jackson was the NBA's top coach.

Although they're all back, "the urgency's not there, the intensity, the lish ourselves. Michael and Dennis desperation," Jackson said.

Jordan has a $30 million contract and Rodman signed for $9 million. Both have the same intensity now," backup er said. "But I think you'll see us outhave movies coming out soon - Jordan guard Steve Kerr said. "The entire smart teams when it really matters."

THUMB BROKEN IN THREE PLACES Bears' Cox to play despite injury

Mike Nadel

Associated Press

LAKE FOREST, Ill. - Bryan Cox's thumb is broken in three places, but he said today he's changing the date for surgery and plans to play Sunday against Tampa Bay.

The surgery he expected to have Friday, which would have forced him out of Sunday's game, will now take place Monday. After consultations with numerous specialists, he decided to give it a try against the Buccaneers. Doctors approved of his decision.

Cox broke the bone at the base of his left thumb in the third quarter of Monday night's win in Minnesota.

"It didn't hinder me from making plays in that game, so that gives me reason to believe I can play with this type of injury this week," Cox said.

He added that surgery was still necessary so the bone wouldn't heal incorrectly.

"I guess there is probably a danger of doing some more damage," he said. "... We are going to get a special cast made up and try to play with it, so I don't see any reason where there should be any more damage.'

Earlier Tuesday, Bears trainer Fred Caito said the normal healing time for any fracture is 4-6 weeks. Football players, however, have been known to take the field with broken bones protected by casts or splints.

Cox said an assessment will be made after surgery on how long he will be out.

Cox remained in Monday night's game and made a crucial play, sacking Brad Johnson to force a fumble and then recovering the football at the Bears' 35-yard line with 1:47 to go.

"It's my decision. My wife wasn't very happy and my agent is not really happy with it," Cox said. "I just feel now is the time for the team to make strides in the right direction and I want to be out there playing.

"As long as I can continue to hit people and not worry about if my hand is going to hurt, I should be fine." The linebacker also has been bothered by shoulder and back problems, and he came under fire for criticizing teammates after a game earlier this season. "With the things that have happened to me, I feel fortunate and blessed that I'm still standing," he said. "You can only play through so much. "My wife was worried about the lingering effect this would have after my career. The position of the break is potentially dangerous. I could lose the use of my thumb."

COLLEGE FOOTBALL PICKS

Top eight picked to win, and win big

Richard Rosenblatt Associated Press

If the oddsmakers are on their game, the nation's top eight teams should have little trouble remaining the nation's top eight teams.

No. 1 Florida, No. 2 Ohio State and No. 5 Nebraska are favored by nearly five touchdowns each on Saturday, while No. 4 Arizona State, No. 7 Colorado and No. 8 North Carolina are favored by more than three TDs apiece.

Florida State and Tennessee, meanwhile, are favored only by two-plus TDs - the No. 3 Seminoles are at Georgia Tech and the No. 6 Vols are at South Carolina.

In typical coachspeak fashion, Nebraska's Tom Osborne dismissed the fact his team should breeze past Oklahoma (2-5) in their annual showdown.

"We expect a tough game and we need to prepare well for them," Osborne said.

"I think we will. I think we'll play well."

True, this rivalry has decided many a Big Eight championship. But the teams are now part of the Big 12 and the Sooners, under first-year coach John Blake, are not in the same class with the Huskers this season.

The Gators, led by Danny Wuerffel and a tenacious defense, play SEC foe Georgia (3-4) as the "World's Largest Outdoor Cocktail Party" returns to Jacksonville and a renovated Gator Bowl.

Florida has outscored its last two opponents - Top 25 teams LSU and Auburn - 107-23, but Gators coach Steve Spurrier never worries about points. Last year, Florida threw a TD pass in the closing minutes of a 52-17 rout of the Bull-

Anyone who believes Shakespeare's tales are out of touch with modern society should check out Director Baz Luhrmann's ("Strictly Ballroom") ambitious film interpretation of "Romeo and Juliet." Set in a fictional, contemporary city in Florida, Luhrmann has placed the doomed duo in a world of gang violence and flashy neon colors. The adorable Clare Danes ("My So-Called Life") and Leonardo DiCaprio ("Basketball Diaries") will use American accents to win over a younger audience, but convincing them "Where art thou?" is a cool way to pick someone up may be more difficult. "Romeo and Juliet" opens Friday at Campus Theatres, Old Capital Mall.

Holiday stems from Christian tradition

Greg Kirschling The Daily Iowan

When you think of Halloween, probably come to mind.

This notion seems so ingrained in our society that it might spook more than a few die-hard trick-ortreaters to learn their favorite demonic holiday actually has very Christian roots.

Halloween, or All Hallows Eve, was the Celtic festival at the end of the summer in medieval times. It was a celebration before All Saints Day on Nov. 1. (All Hallows Eve and All Saints Day once shared a relationship that resembles today's Christmas Eve and Christmas Day.)

"There has been a long tradition in the liturgy of church that a feast day can begin at sundown the night before," said John Boyle, a UI professor of religion. "From there you get an eve of the feast of All Hallows, and that's what Halloween is."

In those days, the power of evil was exalted on Halloween to reflect the dark and barren changes in the weather that November brought. Yet, the very next day saw a rebound, as the festival exalted the saints, not the ghouls.

But when U.S. immigrants (particularly the Irish) brought the custom into this country in the late 19th century, they mainly introalloween seems to gradually lose its importance as people grow older. Still, with a little determination, some "grown ups" have found plenty of ways (a few of which are very bizarre and not so grownup) to celebrate this eerie holiday.

Here's a list of Halloween activities to make your outh pale in comparison:

Steam tunnels

Underneath the UI campus, there is a network of "steam tunnels" that are dark, humid and (most importantly) accessible. Mazelike in nature, rumor has it these tunnels are a popular place for high-school students to spend Halloween scaring each other senseless. Not only are the tunnels hot and uncomfortable, they are also dangerous - they are not lit or monitored in any way so think twice before heading underground.

Vandalism

This is the most time-honored tradition of Halloween, next to dressing up. If you thought t.p.-ing, shattering pumpkins and tossing eggs were strictly for juveniles, think again. Every year you can still find plenty of buildings around the UI campus recovering from a Halloween night bombardment.

Trick-or-treating

At some point in their youth, most people pledged they treating. However, the painful truth is by junior high, most felt they had become too cool to go out and hunt for goodies on Halloween. While this is still the case with most of us, there are still some UI students who are willing to go door to door for sweets. While it might sound somewhat bizarre, it is still better than stealing candy from little chil-

Scaring children

Good clean fun ... for you at least. Halloween is the only time during the year when you can be nasty to small children without repercussions. Some people will find joy in simply scaring children, but an unfeeling minority actually steal the tykes' candy sacks.

Haunted houses

It may not be as adventurous as some of the other activities, but venturing to area haunted houses is a favorite among the milder participants of Halloween. Often featuring imitations of horror-film stars Jason or Freddy Krueger, perwould never give up trick-or- formers run around with a > ou have a serious dilemma: There is hundreds of dollars in prize money on the line for best costume and you are sitting at home with a pair of scissors and a sheet. It may be too late to snag a top prize, but you can still wow your friends with a little ingenuity.

It is possible to just take the easy route and quickly create a costume the way Adam Sandler did on "Saturday Night Live" ("Look at me! I'm sausage man! Gimme some candy!"). While you are working on last-minute outfits, here is a list of the DI staff's favorite costumes to give you some inspiration.

This is perhaps the lamest costume. All it takes is some black clothes, some facial hair and a beret. Add a copy of "On the Road," and you're on your way. It may not be the most intricate or creative costume, but it is a safe bet for those who do not relish public embarrassment.

The beer-can dress

Finally, you can put all those empty beer cans laying around the room to use. You will need some thread and a really long needle or some super glue. String or glue the cans together into a mold that fits your body. For accessories, simply make a necklace or earrings out of yourself up with Christmas lights. However, this will mean you'll have to stand next to an outlet the whole night, but at least you'll light up the room!

Ghost

If you are really desperate for a costume, take a cue from the Peanuts gang. Grab an old sheet, cut out two eye holes and hope you don't get any rocks thrown at you. If you're feeling bold, feel free to experiment with the print and color of your sheet. A tie-dyed sheet can make you into a psychedelic phantom, or a darker sheet can make you look like a gothic ghoul.

Judge rules Jenny Jones can testify in trial

B.J. Reyes Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. - Talkshow host Jenny Jones can be called to testify in the trial of a guest charged with murdering a fellow guest who revealed a homosexual crush on him during a show taping, a judge ruled Wednesday.

Judge Francis O'Brien ruled Jones can be questioned about her involvement in the episode during which Scott Amedure revealed his crush on Jonathan Schmitz.

Schmitz is on trial on a firstdegree murder charge in Amedure's shotgun slaying three days after the taping. The defense had sought Jones' testimony. The trial recessed Tuesday and is to resume today. Schmitz, 26, of Orion Township, Mich., appeared with Amedure, 32, of Lake Orion, Mich., on the March 6, 1995, taping of a "Jenny Jones" segment about secret admirers. The segment, during which Schmitz said he was a heterosexual and not interested in Amedure, never aired but has been played in court.

Schmitz's attorneys have argued twice that Jones' testimony was key to their defense.

O'Brien ruled before the trial Jones' testimony would be irrelevant, but changed his mind in the ruling released Wednesday. He said Jones could be questioned about details of the show that were brought out during the prosecution phase of the case.

Defense attorney James Burdick said her testimony will help jurors determine what role Jones and her show played in causing the slaying. Defense lawyers say the humiliation of being ambushed on the show triggered Schmitz's emotional and physical problems and led to the shooting.

In a deposition videotaped in December, Jones denied knowing how her show operates

'Having Our Say' chronicles lives of 100-year-old sisters

Rob Merritt The Daily Iowan

With a touch of sarcasm, the Delany sisters invite the audience into their kitchen to talk about the way things used to be.

Recounting a century of history, the play "Having Our Say" will be performed Sunday night at Hancher Auditorium at 8.

The surprise hit of the 1995 Broadway season, "Having Our Say" retells the real-life stories of two African-American sisters -Sadie, 101, and Bessie Delany, 103.

"The sisters were the first at so many things," said Micki Grant, who plays Sadie and is a veteran of NBC's "Another World." "Young people have only to ready themselves to walk through the doors that Sadie and Bessie opened for them."

The play is based on "Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters' First 100 Years," a book the sisters co-wrote with Amy Hill Hearth. As witnesses to more than a century of African-American history, the Delanys talk about everything from the advent of segregation in the 1890s to Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas and David Duke in the Writer/producer for several big-name singers releases heartfelt album

Millions of fans have enjoyed the sounds of Madonna, Boyz II Men, Toni Braxton, Eric Clapton and Whitney Houston, yet few recsuperstars' hit singles.

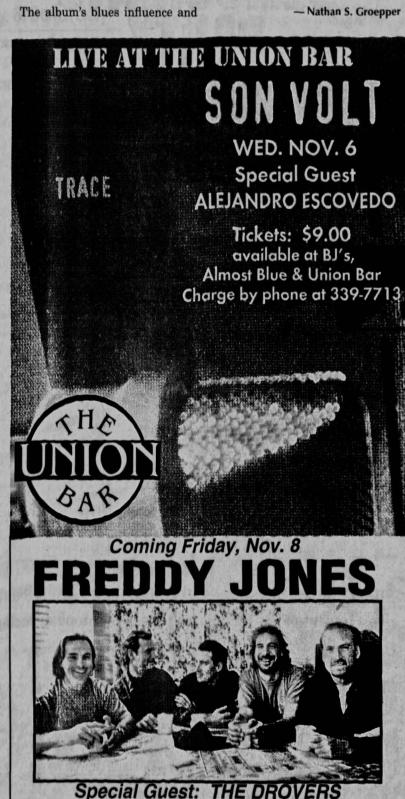

After writing and producing topselling songs and albums, Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds has released The Day, his first solo project in years. The album - a mixture of mature ballads, folksy sentiment and contemporary R&B swing - is a testament to Babyface's increasing musical diversity and his ability to craft unforgettable tunes.

Unlike the star-studded artists he builds songs for, Babyface does not possess an overpowering voice.

On tracks, including the devotional 'I Said I Love You" and "Seven Seas," the artist's understated crooning lends his songs a sense of heartfelt sincerity, instead of the annoying vocal acrobatics that accompany most contemporary

UI alumna bases 1st film on own life

The Daily Iowah

UI alumna Naomi Wallace said she doesn't really mind the fame associated with being the latest upand-coming playwright. She considers it inspiring.

"It definitely keeps me busy," she said. "It's nice when you get out there, but I'm still as involved as anyone else. The scary part about it is all the money involved, but hell it's not my money."

Wallace, who received her master's in fine arts degree from the UI Department of Theatre Arts in 1993, is currently working on her first independent film and screenplay, "Lawn Dogs." It is produced by Duncan Kenworthy of "Four Weddings and a Funeral," and is directed by John Duigan, director of "Sirens."

Set in Louisville, Ken., where Wallace grew up, "Lawn Dogs" is about the unlikely friendship between a 10-year-old girl and a 21year-old working-class boy who mows lawns in her affluent Louisville suburb.

Wallace said the script was loosely based on her childhood experiences in Louisville.

"Some of the stories come from people I know," she said. "I grew up in an area where it was largely working class at the time. So it's interesting to see how things have changed. I see these tensions devel-

Another play, "Slaughter City," had a world premiere at the Royal Shakespeare Company last January. Wallace recently received the National Arts Club Kesselring Prize for "One Flea Spare," a play first produced at London's Bush Theatre, and will be presented at the New York Shakespeare Festival next January.

"Lawn Dogs" is Wallace's first screenplay, and she plans to continue writing for film.

"My involvement isn't as intense as it is in theater and surrounded by a theater world," Wallace said. "Much of the film happens in editing, but so far still 80-90 percent of what I wrote is included in this film. My experience in film has been good because I have a producer who believes the writer is an important element to the concept."

Wallace said she is planning to write another screenplay as soon as "Lawn Dogs" is completed. The film is scheduled to be released sometime next year.

"I wouldn't call her fame good "What Naomi always showed luck so much as talent and having a clear point of view and vision in the end," MacVey said. "She's got the stuff. She has strong opinions

'Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon' connects star to any celebrity using movie titles "Jon Stewart Show" a couple of can think of (and even non-

Greg Kirschling

The Daily Iowan

At college campuses around the country, thousands of serious, deep-thinking students have reached the startling conclusion that the center of the universe is actually ... Kevin Bacon?

Yes, it's true. For many movie buffs, the star of "Footloose" is the very heart of the American entertainment industry. In the country's most rapidly spreading game fad, movie lovers test their knowledge by using Bacon's filmography to connect him to any celebrity (alive or dead, and the more obscure the better) through film titles.

Here's how it works. Take Charlie Chaplin as an example. Chaplin appeared in "The Countess From Hong Kong" with Marlon Brando. The Godfather himself starred in "The Freshman" with Matthew Broderick, who earlier appeared in "She's Having a Baby." That film starred - you guessed it -Kevin Bacon.

The idea premiered on MTV's years ago, and UI junior Brian Kinney has seen the game rise in popularity over the years.

Kinney said he has noticed people tend to play by their own rules; some people put limits on the number of steps you can take to get to Bacon, and others avoid certain Bacon films altogether (like the ensemble film "JFK").

"A lot of different campuses have their own versions of the game," said Kinney, who throws his own twist on the game by using Bacon as a way to find the connection between two movies. The thing that works best is movies that people forgot he was in, like 'Planes, Trains and Automobiles' and 'Friday the 13th.' "

The game threatens only to get bigger. Now out in bookstores is "Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon" (Plume, $7.95), which connects Bacon to other actors in six steps or less.

actors like Hulk Hogan and Maya Angelou). Rumor has it that both a Kevin Bacon board game and a Kevin Bacon computer game are on the way, too.

Luckily, the fad has yet to acquire the fever that surrounded the Macarena, but Kinney said the Kevin Bacon game is steadily growing in popularity on many college campuses around the country.

"I think a lot of people here haven't heard of it, but I have a lot of friends at Northwestern and it seems to be pretty popular out there," Kinney said.

In fact, the "phenomenon" is mainly reserved for idle coffee conversation here at the UI, but movie fans should try it as a way to stretch their movie IQ, UI senior Laura Burkhalter

"I just think it's sort of a fun way to test your memory and your knowledge of what you know about movies," she said. "A lot of people think they know way to find out if you really do.

Famous faces strike a pose in celebrity advertising campaigns

Yes, yes and yes.

Advertisers' use of celebrities is at an all-time high - from the omnipresent "milk mustache" campaigns to celebrity endorsements for ready-to-wear. If models once dreamed of becoming actresses, today's actors and actresses are wannabe models.

But why would Willis, who now commands more than $15 million per film, and his $12 million-a-picture wife need to appear in fashion magazines?

"It gives them yet another kind of persona - a fashion persona, which they don't really have as yet," said Jeff Buchman of the Fashion Institute of Technology. "And now they do."

Hoping to add freshness to her collections, New York designer Nicole Miller usually shuns the same faces, used over and over.

"I always question why these major advertising campaigns use the same girls. Everybody should develop their own image," said Miller, who last year lined up eight actresses for the runways, including Minnie Driver from the movie "Big Night" and Jill Hennessey from TV's "Law and Order."

Those changes lasted for good. All Saints Day is still celebrated by Christians, but it no longer receives the attention the candy, monsters and terror do.

Pentagon weighs in on movie scripts

Jennifer Brown

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - In an early script for "Forrest Gump," the likable but dim character went to Vietnam in a unit full of slow-witted soldiers like himself.

They had everybody ... of reduced intellect except the lieutenant," said Phil Strub, who coordinates the Pentagon's film liaison office. "And the Army said it never would have happened that way."

So Strub's office used some creative persuasion on the producers. And in the final version, Gump's fellow soldiers were smarter.

It was just one part of a big movie. But to the Department of Defense, the things Americans learn in movie theaters endure, so it often uses the carrot of its cooperation to ensure films reflect accurately, and positively, on the military.

We feel strongly that the images people see of the military in Hollywood are the most formative images," said Major Nancy LaLuntas, director of Marine public affairs in Los Angeles.

'(We've) maintained all along that if we have the ability to accurately influence those images, the American public will have a better image of the military," she said.

Of course, some filmmakers balk at the interference. For example, "A Few Good Men," starring Tom Cruise and Jack Nicholson, was made without help from the Pentagon, which objected to the portrayals of some Marines.

The Pentagon gets a few hundred requests each year for tanks, aircraft carriers, active-duty officers to play extras or just technical advice to make a story more accurate.

Filmmakers send scripts with wish lists to the military film offices one in Washington, D.C., and four in Los Angeles for each of the military branches.

The Pentagon then uses its leverage to try to persuade filmmakers to change parts of the story deemed inaccurate or too negative.

You can do anything in the movie business with enough money. But it's easier with (Pentagon) approval," said producer Mace Neufeld, who worked with the military on "Hunt for Red October," "Patriot Games," "Clear and Present Danger" and "Flight of the Intruder."

How much filmmakers are willing to revise depends on how much help they need, Strub said. A movie like 'Top Gun," about fighter pilots, could not have been made without the military — because "you can't just rent aircraft carriers.'

Usually, he said, both sides bend

"We say "These are areas that are unrealistic. We know this isn't a documentary, we know this isn't news, but you've got to have some plausibility," said Strub.

Pentagon approval certainly makes life easier, said Amy Lemisch, who co-produced "Renaissance Man," starring Danny DeVito if it likes the plotline.

as an Linglish teacher hired to educate U.S. troops.

talked to a lot of people who didn't get approval ... and we were lucky," Lemisch said. "They gave us the locations. They gave us the attention. They gave us military makers pay the Pentagon the costs of operating the expensive equipment, such as helicopters, planes or tanks, they rent. The military says the charges cover only costs, and do not bring in a profit. Moviemakers' demands for help from the Pentagon's film liaison - opened in 1949 - have increased markedly since 1986's "Top (Gun," a tale of supermacho but ive Navy fighter pilots. But while many get the Pentagon nod, secores did not, including:

Crimson Tide," about an ed mutiny on a submarine. ng a gun on a submarine is stupid and would never happen," Strub said.

Courage Under Fire," this critically acclaimed film starring Meg Ryan and Denzel Washington about a disputed "friendly fire" incident during the Gulf War.
"They had scenes that we just felt were wildly unrealistic," Strub said. "And the production company, they thought it was just fine, and we were at an impasse.

Of course, there may be more to the rejections than just being unrealistic, since the military helps with some extremely unrealistic movies
