Remembering the UI's darkest hour

5 years ago today, graduate student Gang Lu killed 5 people, then himself

Jennifer Cassell
The Daily Iowan

Five years ago today, a distraught UI doctoral student gunned down six UI staff members and students, killing five and permanently paralyzing one before turning the gun on himself.

Gang Lu, a student in the physics department, killed two physics professors, Christoph Goertz and Robert Smith, because he did not receive an academic award.

Linhua Shan, a student who won the D.C. Priestersbach Dissertation Prize, the academic award Lu wanted, was the first to be fatally shot at 3:42 p.m. in Room 208 of Van Allen Hall. Goertz and Smith were in the seminar room with him and were killed immediately afterward. Lu also shot and killed Dwight Nicholson, chairperson of the UI Department of Physics and Astronomy, and T. Anne Cleary, associate vice president of academic affairs.

The shootings occurred Nov. 1, 1991, in Van Allen and Jessup halls with a registered .38 caliber gun. The only survivor of the shootings is Miya Rodolfo-Sioson, a student who was working in Cleary's office.

Rodolfo-Sioson was shot in the mouth and is now permanently paralyzed from the neck down. All of the shootings occurred within a 20-minute time period before Lu shot himself in the head.

Lu, who was from Beijing, China, blamed the physics department for not being able to find a job. Friends of Lu said he worried if he didn't receive the dissertation prize money he would be forced to return to China.

Physics Professor George Knorr was in his office on the third floor of Van Allen Hall when he heard several gunshots down the hall. He thought the gunshots were just a belated Halloween joke, he said.

But Knorr found out a few minutes later the shots were not a practical joke. Knorr saw Nicholson lying dead on his office floor, and he saw the bodies of Goertz, Smith and Shan, who were all killed in the same seminar room. It was a sight Knorr said he would never forget.

"It was a terrible experience. It stays very vivid in my memory," Knorr said. "It's good to be able to remember it. It helps to get over it."

"It was being in the completely different environment that allowed me to work again."

Russian Professor Ray Parrott also was in his office in Van Allen Hall at the time of the shootings. He said the event served as a rude awakening to crimes occurring at the UI.

"Nobody knew what was going on. No one knew someone was being shot," Parrott said. "As the stereotype goes, we all thought things like that don't happen in Iowa City."

The perception that Iowa City is a college town free from crime may be nothing more than a fantasy created by wishful thinking, said Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations. She called the mass shooting a "loss of innocence" for the UI campus.

"People began to recognize that (crime) could happen here," Rhodes said. "We're not immune just because we're in Iowa."

Rhodes and Parrott said those who were on campus when the shootings occurred will never forget what happened. Parrott said seeing Rodolfo-Sioson in a wheelchair around campus was a constant reminder tragedy can strike at the UI.

Rodolfo-Sioson now lives in California near her relatives. Most of the victims' families no longer live in Iowa City because they found it too difficult to live here with the memories of what happened, Rhodes said.

However, one of the widows, Jane Nicholson, is dealing with the stress of living in Iowa City while being a vocal advocate for the prevention of gun violence.

Nicholson was the wife of Dwight Nicholson for 22 years and is an active member of the statewide organization Iowans for the Prevention of Gun Violence.

In light of the Nov. 1, 1991, murders, there has been an ongoing debate about prevention of gun violence and whether stricter gun-control laws should be enforced throughout the state of Iowa.

Jane Nicholson, whose husband was one of the four UI faculty members killed by Gang Lu, began speaking out against gun violence as an active member of Iowans for the Prevention of Gun Violence.

"My advocacy began last December," Nicholson said. "I went through my own personal grievance before I became dedicated to this cause."

On Nov. 2, 1991, a group of concerned citizens started the Novem-

She and Dwight were high-school sweethearts and dated seven years before they were married.

Halloween has special meaning to Nicholson because it was the last time she talked to her husband before the murders. Learning to cope with her husband's untimely death has been an evolving process for her.

"Everything I've learned has been through the help of caring professionals and nonstop reading," Nicholson said. "I have personal rituals that I go through the night before Nov. 1."

Yet, grieving for the lives lost on Nov. 1 isn't something family members have to deal with alone. The Iowa City community comes together annually to mourn those whose lives were taken by Lu.

Right: As a memorial to the victims of the Gang Lu shootings, a rock is engraved with each name outside Van Allen Hall.

In order to commemorate the lives of the victims, the flag atop the Old Capitol will fly at half-staff today, and there will be a candlelight walk starting outside of Van Allen Hall at 5 p.m. The walk will lead to reading the victims' names and a moment of silence at the T. Anne Cleary Walkway in the Pedestrian Mall. In addition, a forum will be held by the Iowans for the Prevention of Gun Violence.

Passenger jet crashes in Brazil, 90 passengers dead

SAO PAULO, Brazil — The passenger jet was in the air for less than five minutes Thursday before it clipped an apartment building and skidded through the Vila Santa Catarina neighborhood, spilling fuel and igniting cars and homes.

All 90 passengers and six crew members aboard TAM Regional Airlines Flight 402 were killed. At least three Americans were among the dead.

After Halloween, UI senior Jason Alley knows what it's like to be a woman and spend hours in the bathroom getting ready for a night on the town.

"It took a lot of time to create this look. I now know what a girl goes through," Alley said.

"Alley," as his friends call him, dressed up as a woman, complete with a short, black dress and a full bosom with a long, red wig. Alley hasn't dressed up since high school and said this is his most original costume.

"I'm kind of worried about getting felt up after the bars close," Alley said. "But, I'll slap them like any other girl would."

Third-year law student Paul Sigwarth, who has done stand-up comedy for several years, said he has always wanted to dress up as Groucho Marx because one of his comedic influences is the Marx brothers.

Judy Ambrose (Elvira) poses with Michelle Pyatte (scarecrow) at G.A. Malone's Thursday night during the Halloween festivities.

"I've always wanted to dress up as Groucho for Halloween and this is the perfect excuse," Sigwarth said. "I'm the hugest Groucho Marx fan."

Not every trick-or-treater out on the town last night had to dress up as a living person. UI senior Charlie Kierscht came as the face of a missing child on a milk box carton.

Kierscht built a milk box that would fit over the top of his head with a square cut out to show his face. His shirt read "Have you seen this Child?"

Although this costume may sound like it was easy to design, Kierscht said it took him 3 days to create the entire look.

"I got it off a skit from 'Mystery Science Theater,' and I figured that not that many people watch that show, so it's purely original," he said.

Andrew Roogin was in town for Halloween all the way from New Jersey, and went to the Deadwood, 6 S. Dubuque St., but he didn't bring a costume.

"I didn't have a costume that would fit on the plane," Roogin said.

THE CANDIDATES:

• BILL CLINTON: Campaigned in Arizona, which has not voted for a Democratic presidential candidate since Harry Truman. Clinton urged America to reject "racial, ethnic, tribal and religious divisions." Despite allegations that foreign campaign donors bought access to the Oval Office, Clinton aides refused to allow the president to be questioned by reporters.

Clinton

• BOB DOLE: Announced a 96-hour, virtually nonstop final push through 15 states, beginning today. "I want to shake up this race," he declared in Miami.

Dole

The campaign will take only 90-minute stops every 24 hours so Dole and his entourage can freshen up. "Gonna wear you out," he told reporters. Trailing badly in the polls with five days to go, Dole also appealed to Ross Perot's supporters for their votes.

• ROSS PEROT: Has saved about 75 percent of his more than $29 million in government financing to use during the election home stretch. So far, he has aired many TV commercials, but made only weekly public appearances. Perot is now attending daily campaign rallies, hitting hard on Clinton's ethics and the need for an outsider to reform the political system.

NEWS OF NOTE:
• The growing use of absentee ballots, particularly in Western states, is likely to complicate the reporting of election returns Tuesday night and could delay for days the determination of who controls the House of Representatives. If the outcome hinges on a half-dozen or fewer seats — a distinct possibility — close races on the West Coast, where polls close latest, could be the determining factors.

Business college 'invests' in election

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Clinton is going to be re-elected, the Republicans are going to maintain control of Congress and anyone who invested in Bob Dole is going to be a little short on cash after Nov. 5.

These are the prophecies investors have made on the Iowa Electronic Market (IEM), a real-time futures market run by the UI College of Business Administration that has made remarkably accurate predictions of political races since it began in 1988.

"Our traders are fairly certain that Clinton's going to win. He's been around the 90 cent level all of October," said Robert Forsythe, associate dean of the UI College of Business Administration and one of the founders of the IEM. "The traders think Dole's chances are pretty dim."

Four years ago, Clinton's price never rose above 80 cents, even on the night before the election, Forsythe said. His price now, however, is about 95 cents — meaning only 5 percent of investors think Dole can pull off a victory.

IEM traders are also predicting Republicans will maintain control in the House and Senate. These predictions took the national spotlight last week when there was a sudden rise in investment in the Democrats regaining control of the House. The percentages jumped from a 30 percent chance of regaining control to a 44 percent chance in a week, but have since fallen back down to 35 percent.

"Our traders are fairly certain that Clinton's going to win. He's been around the 90 cent level all of October. The traders think Dole's chances are pretty dim."

The IEM also predicted Dole's nomination long before San Diego, and Steve Forbes' surprising achievements in early caucuses and primaries.

Matthew Mihm, a UI graduate student in business, is one of the traders keeping Clinton's stock high. He bought $500 worth of contracts in Clinton in February for 60 cents apiece and is expecting more than $400 in profit.

"It was obvious even in February that Dole was kind of a loser," Mihm said. "So I decided to put my money where my mouth was."

The IEM, which has 7,081 investors risking more than $213,000, also has categories for international elections and off-year contests for congressional seats. Investors can also choose between a winner-takes-all format and a vote share format.

Market Administrator Maggie Jesse said the presidential winner-take-all contest is the most popular, and pays a dollar per share to the election winner. The vote share market predicts the percentage of the vote each candidate will get and has been within 0.5 percent accurate in the last two presidential elections.

Although Clinton is leading handily in both markets, Forsythe said people haven't been deterred from investing.

"Even now, if you invest in Clinton you can make a 5 percent return on your money in less than a week," he said. "You have a hard time making a 5 percent return in a bank in a year. There is some risk involved, but if you're right you can make some money."

Mihm said he will probably cash in on his investment after the elections, but said the IEM is a great indicator of a candidate's real standing in the race.

"The great thing about the IEM is that even if you like Dole, if you're a hard-core Republican, when you have your money in front of you you'll go for Clinton," he said. "It's where the return is not what you necessarily want. It's a clear indication of what people really think rather than their opinion."

CAMPAIGN ISSUES

Economic plans influence job market

Laura Heinauer
The Daily Iowan

When UI sophomore Nicole Lake told her parents she was going to major in history and political science, her parents scoffed. "So, you want to be a waitress?"

Many UI students are asking themselves the same questions this election year.

Marc Beltrame, president of the UI Student Government, said the ever-decreasing number of jobs available after graduation compels students to look to the candidates for answers.

"When students worry about the economy, they are worrying about whose policies to consider," Beltrame said.

Lake, a member of the University Democrats, said President Clinton's economic plan has had a positive impact on the job market and students can expect to benefit most from the plan.

"In the past four years, Clinton has worked to create 10.7 million new jobs," Lake said. "Depending on his re-election, I hope we can look for this same example of economic process that has created so many opportunities for graduates and tax incentives for businesses."

Even when faced with such gloomy prospects, Greg Hanson, a UI senior and future medical student, said the economy should provide a prosperous avenue, just not

"Students don't vote, and the candidates have been focusing on issues that will win the election. They have been talking about improving the economy and balancing the budget, but they've been rather vague when it comes to the future of the job market."

"For people my age things have a way of working out, though it might not be what they expect," Hanson said. "They won't be living the high life three years out of college."

GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole plans to downsize the federal government by accelerating his quest for a balanced budget. He also promises to provide a $500 per-child tax credit and to repeal the 1993 tax on Social Security benefits.

Dole called his economic proposal the "opening salvo in a battle to repeal the current tax code," and it's crux is a 15 percent across-the-board-tax cut.

Lake said Dole's plan should present a frightening scenario to college students preparing to enter the job market.

"I think it's a scheme," Lake said. "I haven't heard any evidence on how it will be possible to reduce taxes and cut the deficit."

Hanson said the candidates haven't been specific in addressing students' job concerns.

"Students don't vote, and the candidates have been focusing on issues that will win the election," Hanson said. "They have been talking about improving the economy and balancing the budget, but they've been rather vague when it comes to the future of the job market."

The Clinton administration has targeted a minimum-wage increase as part of its economic plan. Republicans resisted, saying such moves would cost jobs, although polls showed Americans support the hike.

Lake said Clinton also pushed for tax breaks for the middle class and a special $1,500 tax credit for college students.

"I think tying economic worries with education problems is a very responsible and far-sighted approach," she said. "Helping people get more money by encouraging them to get an education makes for a strong economy and a better nation."

CAMPAIGNING

Gore: GOP has drifted from Lincoln roots

Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

GALVESTON, Texas — Republicans have strayed far from their roots as the party of Abraham Lincoln, Vice President Al Gore asserted Thursday in pressing Texas voters to help re-elect President Clinton and return Democrats to control of Congress.

Gore strongly criticized former Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, the presidential challenger, and House Speaker Newt Gingrich in his remarks. He has been emphasizing the importance the Democrats place on retaking the House and Senate, which they lost to the Republicans in 1994.

He said of Dole and Gingrich, "They are following the siren song of the right wing that has now captured control of the modern Republican Party in 1996. This is not the party on the other side that Abraham Lincoln founded. They have strayed far, far from their roots."

"Most people in both political parties have long since decided that Newt Gingrich and Bob Dole simply went way too far over to the extreme right wing edge and Nov. 5 is a chance to send a message to them: 'Don't ever do that again!'"

Gore spoke to approximately 1,000 Democratic supporters on a cloudless but muggy day.

With a tall ship festooned with colorful flags in the background, Gore spoke on Pier 21 at the historic Port Galveston. The ship, usually docked at another pier close by, was moved. The campaign rented the vessel for $6,000.

In 1992, President Bush, a Texan himself, won the state over Clinton and Ross Perot. With 32 electoral votes, Texas is the nation's third-largest electoral prize.

Later, in Shreveport, La., Gore struck the same theme, using a Halloween metaphor in remarks to Democratic supporters at Louisiana State University.

Congress "is a haunted House of Representatives with Newt Gingrich and Bob Dole, and we have a chance now to make a big change because we have an opportunity to say that it's time to move forward in America."

Stumping for House candidates, Gore implored; "Newt Gingrich doesn't need any more reinforcements in Washington!"

Mystery trip

Chris Gardner
The Daily Iowan

One day before her flight is scheduled to depart, UI alumna Marjorie Walsh will receive a phone call from someone telling her the weather forecast for her vacation destination. Until then, she won't know whether to pack a bikini or a wool sweater for her trip because she has no idea where she is going.

On Nov. 15, Walsh and a friend will board a plane, and they won't know where they are going until minutes before the plane takes off.

Walsh is going on a two-day mystery trip offered by Western Pacific Airlines.

Western Pacific Airlines, based in Colorado Springs, Colo., starts offering mystery vacations last fall where passengers book a flight for two- or three-night stay with airfare, hotel and car rental. However, the passengers have no idea where they will end up.

"I'm not scared at all; it's something I've never done before," Walsh said. "I'm kind of just going to go out of Iowa City."

Sara Russell, spokeswoman for Western Pacific, said 6,000-7,000 people have taken advantage of the unknown-destination trips out of Colorado Springs.

Mystery trips offer sense of surprise

Chris Gardner
The Daily Iowan

One day before her flight is scheduled to depart, UI alumna Mary Walsh will receive a phone call from someone telling her the weather forecast for her vacation destination. Until then, she won't know whether to pack a bikini or a wool sweater for her trip because she has no idea where she is going.

On Nov. 15, Walsh and a friend will board a plane, and they won't know where they are going until minutes before the plane takes off.

Walsh is going on a two-day mystery trip offered by Western Pacific Airlines.

Western Pacific Airlines, based in Colorado Springs, Colo., started offering mystery vacations last fall, where passengers book a flight for a two- or three-night stay with airfare, hotel and car rental. However, the passengers have no idea where they will end up.

"I'm not scared at all; it's something I've never done before," Walsh said. "I'm kind of just going to get out of Iowa City."

Sara Russell, spokesperson for Western Pacific, said 6,000-7,000 people have taken advantage of the unknown-destination trips out of Colorado Springs.

"The response has been so outstanding," Russell said. "We knew there were people that liked to travel, but we didn't know there were so many adventurous travelers."

All passengers fly from the departure city of their choice to Colorado Springs, where they change planes and continue on to their mystery location. Some travelers' mystery stay may even be Colorado Springs.

The mystery location may be one of 22 cities, including New York, Seattle and Los Angeles. Walsh said she hopes her destination is San Diego or Phoenix because she has sisters in both cities.

Even the reservation agents don't know where the passengers will be going, Russell said. There is a special mystery department that places passengers with their destination.

Russell said it is common for people coming to Colorado Springs from the West to end up at an Eastern city, and people traveling from an Eastern location to end up in a Western city.

Customers have their choice of taking a two- or three-night stay, unless they live in Colorado Springs, in which case they have the option of a one-night excursion.

The average package for flying out of Colorado Springs is a two-person, two-night stay with air, hotel and car rental, which sells for $338. A person can upgrade to a three-night stay for $100.

The trips will continue to be offered in the fall of each year, because the mystery surrounding the trips coincides with the Halloween season and fall is generally a slow travel time, Russell said.

"It's a great way to fill seats in a slow period," Russell said. "But it's also a great way for people to take a vacation who wouldn't normally have the chance."

Walsh will depart from Chicago on Nov. 15 and return on Nov. 17. Although her trip will be short, Walsh said she can't wait to leave Iowa City.

"I need a break from work," she said. "There will be something to do no matter where we go."

Only portions of seats are available on regular flights on Western Pacific; the company does not reserve entire planes for the promotion, Russell said.

Travel for the mystery trips must be completed before Nov. 21. Russell said weekend availability is filling up quickly. However there are still some spaces available. The original deadline for reservations was Oct. 31, but, due to high demand, the deadline has been extended until Nov. 17.

Students volunteer abroad through program

Eric Neubauer
The Daily Iowan

Students looking for more than a vacation during the upcoming school breaks need look no further. Global Volunteers, a nonprofit organization, will send students to aid communities in helping themselves through their program Partners In Development.

In the program, which was founded in 1984, students teach English to natives of another country or help with projects the community cannot do without help. It is not necessary for the volunteers to know the language of that country, said Michelle Gran, vice president and director of communications of Global Volunteers.

"The volunteers go in teams and they teach conversational English to the people. Everything is in English to give them the effect of total immersion in the language while in the classroom," Gran said. "The teaching is simply communicating with them. The volunteers are not teaching grammar."

The program sends volunteers to Russia, Poland, Turkey, Mexico,

Costa Rica, Tanzania, China and Vietnam. Students can also travel to the Rio Grande Valley or the Mississippi Delta regions of the United States.

Jim Swiderski, volunteer coordinator for the program, went to Jonestown, Miss., as a volunteer and worked with city leaders on projects that lacked time, money or workers to complete.

He helped build a baseball field, renovated the community center and did community beautification.

Swiderski was also a team leader on a trip to Dobczye, Poland, where he taught English to the children of neighboring villages.

"The volunteers and students fell in love with each other. They were very appreciative and very receptive," Swiderski said. "They couldn't give you enough to show their appreciation."

Global Volunteers President Bud Philbrook said students are useful to their programs because of their energy.

"Past student volunteers have discovered that they can make significant difference in the lives of the people we serve," he said. "But I think what surprises most students is the extent to which their own lives are changed by such an experience."

Maria Hope, adviser for the UI Study Abroad Program, said volunteering abroad is a good opportunity for students to experience the social situation of other countries. But the academic experience is important as well, she said.

"These programs are excellent, but it depends on what the student wants," Hope said. "There is a time to study and a time to experience. Most of that knowledge comes from studying and putting in hours in the classroom."

Each program has its own cost, including lodging, meals and air fare, which is paid by the volunteer, but is tax deductible, Gran said. The organization exists to help others, she said, not to turn a profit or further a religious cause.

If students have any questions they may contact Gran at Global Volunteers, 1-800-487-1074.

I.C. school officials feel weapons aren't a problem among kids

Kelley Chorley
The Daily Iowan

Michael Finley II, 15, a student at Iowa City High School, was caught carrying a concealed 5-inch knife and a miniature baseball bat in his front pocket at a school football game on Sept. 20.

Finley faces charges of carrying weapons and public intoxication in the Johnson County Juvenile Division of District Court.

"I know kids who bring knives, not guns to school," said a City High student who wished to remain anonymous. "They bring (weapons) because they think they're cool, but I'm not worried about getting hurt. I can understand why they are worried about our safety, but they make a big deal out of nothing."

Shirley Fouts, assistant principal at City High School, 1900 Morning-side Drive, said possession of weapons is an unusual occurrence at City High.

"The students are very conscientious about the no-tolerance policy the school has," Fouts said. "They know it will not be acceptable and it hasn't been a major issue with the school system."

City High freshman Phil Ochs said he has not come into contact with weapons at school.

"I never have heard of anyone carrying or even having a weapon at school," Ochs said.

West High School, 2901 Melrose

Ave., and Iowa City High School authorities and the Iowa City Police Department feel the number of students carrying weapons is decreasing and has never really been a major issue.

Iowa City public schools have a board policy defining what a weapon is and the measures the school will take to punish anyone who brings a weapon into a school environment.

"A 'dangerous weapon' is any instrument or device designed primarily for use in inflicting death or injury upon a human being or animal, and which is capable of inflicting death upon a human being when used in the manner for which it was designed ... Dangerous weapons include, but are not limited to, any offensive weapon, pistol, revolver, or other firearm, dagger, razor, stiletto, switchblade knife or knife having a blade exceeding five inches in length." (Iowa Code Section 702.7)

Dr. Jerry Arganbright, principal at West High School, said he has run into two incidents with students carrying weapons in the 13 years he has been principal there.

"The most recent one happened over one year ago," Arganbright said. "A student was caught with a track starter pistol, and even though it wasn't a real gun it was treated like one. Luckily we haven't run into many incidents like that."

When a child is caught with a weapon, punishments range from school expulsion to court hearings.

"Since the school system has zero-tolerance for weapons of any kind, the student is usually expelled," ICPD Sgt. Craig Lihs said. "Legally they can be charged as juveniles and brought to juvenile court. The court usually gives the child counseling as punishment."

Arganbright is confident his students are not carrying weapons behind his back.

"We find out about the weapons through the grapevine. Kids are quick to communicate, and one of the teachers or personnel will overhear their conversations," Arganbright said. "Children have a problem keeping things to themselves."

250,000 kids serve in world's armies

Carl Hartman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An estimated 250,000 soldiers under 18 — so young as 5 years old — are serving in wars around the world according to a report Thursday. Save the Children.

The report counted 33 armed conflicts, many of them civil wars where children have been fighting this year.

Save the Children is promoting a U.N. pact that would raise the minimum recruitment age to 17. The 1979 Convention on the Rights of the Child sets the age at 15, but in all countries follow it.

"Even a generation ago, battlefield weapons were heavy and cumbersome," the report said. "The development of lightweight automatic weapons — archetypal but by no means exclusively, the Soviet AK47 — has transformed the capacity of children to serve combatants."

Some of the weapons weigh less than 7 pounds.

Young soldiers include girls as well as boys.

"The girl soldiers were stationed at the front in all military actions and so bore the brunt of any casualties," said a case study on Cambodia, quoted in the report.

The use of girls as suicide bombers was cited in Sri Lanka and Lebanon.

Sexual abuse of both girls and boys was widely reported.

"Soon after recruitment the girls are divided up and allocated to rebel men to be their 'wives,'" said the report on Uganda.

A study of pro-communist forces in Afghanistan between 1978 and 1982 said:

"Child soldiers ... were encouraged/forced to render sexual services, perform dance in public and do robbery. ... Performing dance

SAFETY

Gas dangers rise as temperatures drop

Charlotte Eby
The Daily Iowan

As temperatures outside drop, the risks of carbon-monoxide poisoning from furnaces and space heaters increase.

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, potentially deadly gas produced by improperly working furnaces and fuel-burning appliances.

Iowa City Fire Marshal Roger Jensen said keeping furnaces and appliances well-maintained can help prevent carbon-monoxide leaks. Jensen said having furnaces, especially older ones, checked by a trained service technician each year reduces the risks of poisoning by carbon monoxide.

He also recommended having a carbon-monoxide detector in the home.

It can be impossible for people to tell if there is a presence of carbon monoxide in their home without a detector. Symptoms of carbon-monoxide poisoning often resemble those of the flu, and many victims are unaware they have been affected.

Victims of carbon-monoxide poisoning often experience fatigue, dizziness, headaches, nausea and diarrhea, and in the most serious cases, loss of consciousness and death.

Margaret Sibling, a community relations specialist for Mercy Hospital, 500 E. Market St., said if people experience these symptoms they should leave their homes immediately to get fresh air and call the gas company.

Children are at increased risk for carbon-monoxide poisoning, and nearly 1,700 children under the age of 5 are poisoned each year by carbon monoxide.

"The children are so much smaller (in body), the toxicity builds up much more quickly in their systems," Sibling said.

Placing carbon-monoxide detectors around the home can warn of gas leaks from an improperly working furnace or fuel-burning appliance before they make people ill.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission recommends detectors be placed throughout the home, especially in sleeping areas, but outside of individual bedrooms.

Electronic detectors sound an alarm when they detect carbon monoxide and can alert people who are sleeping. Patch tests, a cheaper alternative to electronic detectors,

Carbon Monoxide

To prevent dangerous levels of carbon monoxide in your home:

- Have your furnace, water heater and gas dryers checked annually by a qualified technician.
- Make sure the room where a gas or kerosene heater is used is well-ventilated.
- Install carbon-monoxide detectors near sleeping areas in your home.

only change color and don't sound when carbon monoxide has reached dangerous levels.

Jerry Meis, general manager of Leno and Cilek True Value Hardware, 130 S. Dubuque St., said around this time of year he sees an increase in the sale of carbon-monoxide detectors.

Meis said new electronic detectors have become more popular as people realize the risk associated with carbon monoxide.

"It's a relatively new phenomenon," Meis said of the electronic detectors, which range in price from $32.99 to $69.99 in his store.

Patch detectors, which last for three months, are also available for $5, he said.

public according to the Afghan culture codes is regarded as a strong negative act."

The report — "Children: The Invisible Soldiers" — quotes from 27 such studies on fighting in countries from Afghanistan to the former Yugoslavia. It was written by Rachel Brett and Margaret McCallin of the Quaker United Nations Office in Geneva and the International Catholic Child Bureau.

Save the Children describes itself as a nonprofit, nonpolitical, nonsectarian organization working in 41 countries.

"We must not close our eyes to the fact that child soldiers are both victims and perpetrators," retired Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa wrote in an introduction.

"They sometimes carry out the most barbaric acts of violence. But no matter what the child is guilty of, the main responsibility lies with us, the adults."

Most of the child soldiers are in Africa, but many are in Asia and Latin America.

At least one 5-year-old was reported in Khmer Rouge forces in Cambodia and another in Sierre Leone, while 7-year-olds were found in paramilitary groups in Sudan and among the Kurdish rebels fighting in Turkey.

Reports show evidence of more level economy

John McClain
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More signs of a moderating economy appeared Thursday.

A Commerce Department report showed consumer spending — two-thirds of the nation's economic activity — increased a tiny 0.1 percent in September.

At the same time, Labor Department figures showed the number of laid-off workers seeking unemployment benefits rose by 23,000 last week to 342,000, a bigger increase than the 15,000 that many analysts had expected.

The fresh data sent stock and bond prices higher. Many investors believe the slower economy will keep inflation in check and permit Federal Reserve policy-makers to hold interest rates steady when they meet Nov. 13.

The Dow Jones industrial average ended up 36.15 points at 6,029.38. Other indexes also were higher.

A new survey by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce showed many businessmen agree the economy is moderating from its strong April-June performance.

The Business Confidence Index, charting the outlook for economic growth, employment and sales, fell to 53.5 in October from 54.8 in August. It was the lowest level since last February.

"The October index confirms our belief that the economy will slow in the second half," Chamber of Commerce economist Martin Regalia said. "But even with the slowing, the economy should continue to grow at its long-run trend rate."

Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole says the weaker economy threatens a recession. The Clinton administration maintains the moderation will prolong what is already the third-longest recovery since World War II.

Debunking myths and releasing angst

It is a rather frustrating time to be a conservative. After seeing the Republicans triumph in 1994 and over two-thirds of the Contract With America become law, the downturn of 1996 has been a bit harsh on my sensibilities. Bob Dole is well behind in the race, the Democrats have trashed the Republicans with "Medicare" and even Rush Limbaugh's TV show has gone off the air. Arrrrggghhh!

Needless to say, I have a great deal of pent-up anxiety I need to release. Yet, being a sensitive, '90s type of guy, I want to do it in a therapeutic, constructive manner.

I noticed after Dole announced a plan to cut taxes 15 percent that there were all sorts of liberal myths about tax cuts flying around. So, I have decided to vent my spleen and do society a favor in the process by puncturing these myths.

Myth No. 1: How are we going to pay for the tax cuts? This question is usually asked in a feeble attempt to say the federal government supposedly doesn't have the money to pay for Dole's 15 percent tax cut. This begs the real question, "Whose money is it in the first place?" The money belongs to the taxpayers, so tax cuts put the money back where it belongs, with those who earn it. So, when tax cuts are proposed, we should look at all of the programs the government spends money on and ask, "How is the government going to pay for them?"

Myth No. 2: Tax cuts originated with Ronald Reagan in the greedy 1980s. Wrong. Tax cuts were first tried by John F. Kennedy and were quite successful. Liberals usually seem to forget this little historical fact. Gee, I wonder why.

Myth No. 3: The 1980s showed tax cuts don't work. The 1980s saw manufacturing growth triple and a larger percentage of jobs in high-skilled areas than in the 1970s. The 1980s were years of unprecedented growth in America, and tax cuts were a large part of it. Tax cuts spur economic growth because when people have more money, they tend to spend more. More spending means an increase in demand for products and services, and more jobs are created to meet the increase in demand. This is a basic economic fact — an increase in demand yields an increase in supply. The reason so relatively few people understand it in our society perhaps is due to an economic education in our schools that resembles an endorsement of the economic policies of the politburo.

Myth No. 4: Tax cuts only benefit the rich at the expense of the poor. Wrong again. From 1981-82, those making less than $25,000 paid 12 percent less in taxes. Under the Carter administration, the poorest fifth saw their income drop an average of 17 percent. Under Reaganomics, the poorest fifth saw their income rise 12 percent, the same rate as the wealthiest fifth. How was the rise in income among the poor possible? Simple — tax cuts create new jobs, remember?

Myth No. 5: Tax cuts will "blow a hole" in the budget deficit. The Clinton campaign has repeated this so often I think I'm going to throw up. The argument goes like this: If we cut taxes, the government will have to borrow money to make up the difference, thereby increasing the deficit. The huge deficit increase in the 1980s proves this. Oh, boy. The deficit increase in the 1980s was due to two things, an increase in defense spending and no cuts in domestic spending by Congress. Reagan's tax cuts actually increased government revenues from $500 billion in 1981 to about $900 billion in 1989. How is that possible? Simple — again, just remember tax cuts create jobs. More jobs mean more taxable income, which results in more government revenue.

Myth No. 6: Tax cuts don't work because no one else around the nation has used them. Arrrrggghhh! Many governors — such as New Jersey's Christine Todd Whitman, Massachusetts' Bill Weld and Michigan's John Engler — have cut taxes. The results have been spectacular. Whitman's and Weld's tax cuts have reduced unemployment and turned around economies that were reeling from the tax-and-spend policies of their liberal predecessors. Engler's tax cuts have given Michigan its best economy since the late 1970s. The economy there has diversified into more high-tech jobs, and personal income is up 25.9 percent, the fastest growth in the nation. Isn't that just too bad for liberals?

Ah, there now, I feel so much better. Of course, since it is almost certain Dole will lose the election, we won't get a 15 percent tax cut. That means we won't see economic benefits from a tax cut and I won't see an increase in my personal income. And that means I won't be able to buy more self-help books and 12-step programs and ... ARRRRGGGGHHH!!!!

Combating 'Devil's Night' in Detroit

Devil's Night — this alternative "holiday" has struck fear into the hearts of thousands. It is an occurrence that started in Detroit during the 1980s and spread around to other East Coast cities. It is a night full of terror and violence. Many gangs have rivaled each other, set fire to abandoned vehicles and buildings and caused havoc in general.

If you have seen the movie "The Crow," then you would have an idea of what Devil's Night can be like. It can make a city look like a giant fireball well into the early morning hours.

But it doesn't have to be like that. Even though each year it seems to get progressively worse, this year there is a glimmer of hope.

Representatives of six southwest Detroit gangs agreed to a three-day Halloween truce to help stop all of the arson and general violence that has plagued the Motor City and make the holiday more friendly for the younger children — for whom Halloween should be aimed.

One reason for this truce might be many gang members have children of their own who are starting to grow up. According to the Detroit News, one of the gang members said, "It just ain't worth it for the younger kids to go through what we've been through."

Another gang member said, "I don't want to see my kid grow up with the way things are out here."

Not only is there a six-way gang truce, but there are more than 32,000 volunteers in Detroit enlisted by the mayor to help stop the arson that has become so common in that area. There are thousands of Million Man March participants who will help patrol the high risk areas after midnight.

With this truce, there is hope. If gangs can put aside their differences to try to make a more peaceful and less violent Halloween holiday, maybe they can carry the truce over into everyday life and reduce violence. Everything has to start somewhere, and this is a good starting point. If gangs can tolerate it and stick to what they promised, then it is possible peace could last even longer.

UI's charm: It's no material world

With no need for a car in Iowa City and many students just wishing to pay their next U-bill, materialism has flown out the window. Gone are the high-school days where gold chains and sparkling new rims on cars mattered to anyone. Is this a case of maturity, or a question of money? It is both, but it is also an attitude within the student body that others will not be judged upon tangible belongings.

At the UI, students have a place no matter what socioeconomic background they come from. The pressures of having a nice car and expensive clothing are gone, which makes for an environment where everyone can be themselves without having to impress others. This possibly stems from the poverty factor for college students, but the effects are more prevalent at the UI than at other universities.

Many students at other colleges are still in the materialism rat race. At Northern Illinois University, students are still running around with gold watches and new cars they can't afford. One person who goes to NIU actually said, "I need a Rolex, so what I'm going to do is work and save money, then ask my parents to pay the rest for Christmas." Why does a college student need a Rolex? Maybe the answer is to gain friends. But what this person needs more than a Rolex is a good clubbing on the head.

Many people are still living under the gold standard, where they do not have to be a real person. They hide behind their Polo shield. This image is supposedly saying, "I have money. I am successful," when in actuality it is saying, "I am shallow. I want people to like me for my money." This is not to say wearing nice clothing or having nice things makes one materialistic, but the flaunting of those possessions does.

Materialism goes beyond owning items, though. Some students show their materialism in other ways. Instead of saying, "I am dating John Doe," the person would say, "I am dating a football player," or "I am dating a Delta Beta." It almost seems like the people are dating something, not someone.

UI students are a more mature bunch who welcome people as individuals regardless of possessions or accolades. There are too many people at this university to keep track of who has what or who does what. Without the competition for the best stereo, students are free to explore and expand who they are and to form themselves socially without regard for money. The freedom from materialistic chains is what makes the UI so special.

UI must not forget Nov. 1

The last time there was a Friday, Nov. 1, the weather was cold, windy and unyielding. The University of Iowa campus was numb, devastated. It was the day a UI physics graduate student killed his professors, his colleague and one administrator. He also rendered an undergraduate student paralyzed from the neck down. Miya Rodolfo-Sioson's range of movement is confined to blowing on the tube attached to her wheelchair, speaking and moving her eyes. Earlier this year, Miya left Iowa to live in a warmer climate with her brother. Now that she has left, her presence, a visual, public reminder of that horrible day, no longer pains our eyes and jogs our memories.

But Miya is still alive. She still suffers, even though we do not see her. And the partners, friends and colleagues of those killed are still here. They still have to walk around the campus, passing the buildings where their loved ones were shot, remembering deep conversations and friendly exchanges in restaurants and coffee shops. The presence of those killed lingers not only in Jessup and Van Allen halls, but on the streets and in the homes where these lives used to dwell.

How should a university community deal with a tragic event in its history? What is the best way to handle the Nov. 1 shootings now, five years later? Should we ignore it and move on, hoping we will forget the killings? Should we acknowledge it, and risk reliving the shock and horror of that day?

I have not been satisfied with what I have seen us do each year since the wake of this tragedy. There are differing strategies for coping with a painful past. I realize, I happen to disagree with the ones we have used so far. On Nov. 1, there is usually one brief article in the paper reminding us of the killings. There is an even briefer ceremony, at noon, on the T. Anne Cleary walkway at which there is a wreath, a very short speech, a moment of silence and a few media photographers both capturing and interrupting our solemnity on film. Then, the crowd scatters. A few people remain to hug and talk. Others go back to their cubicles.

I value the idea of a silent, meaningful gathering on the walkway named after Cleary. I even think the brevity of the ceremony has some merit. But I don't think this observance is enough to commemorate what happened on our campus five falls ago.

All universities have skeletons in their closets: scams, tragedies or unsavory acts. To me, a university of integrity is not necessarily the one that has nothing to be ashamed or embarrassed about, but the one that acknowledges the events in a forthright way.

With regards to the 1991 shootings, the UI does not do this as much as it could. So, today, on this Friday, Nov. 1, I offer a charge to the administration: Here are some of my ideas about what might happen at a university of integrity:

Each Nov. 1, the UI should have a colloquium on some topic relevant to the shootings. There could be speakers, panels, films and discussions. Possible topics might include gun control, violence, intercollegiate competition, the pressures of dealing with graduate school or being in a foreign country, disability issues, grieving, coping with anger and healing from loss. We have already let four anniversaries go by without using any of these topics; let us not waste another Nov. 1.

That evening, we would have a memorial service, indoors, perhaps in a chapel or even in one of the rooms where the shootings took place. Friends, family and colleagues could share memories of those who were killed. It would be a time of mourning and healing, sponsored by a university that is not afraid to remember a tragic and painful event. Sometimes, those places where there has been the most pain can engender the most healing.

Rather than trying to cover up the shootings, or deny and bury them, let us make the UI a leader in addressing the very concerns that caused the shootings to occur. Let us honor those who were killed and those who remain by refusing to shy away from our memories and from our pain. Let us remember fully, so each Nov. 1 we can feel enough of the horror to vow this will never happen again.

The No

W e remember the drizzle of Nov. because of the weather, but it was the day of tragedy.

Those not in Iowa City at the time also recall the occasion. For those who heard about shootings at the University of Iowa from the mass media, yet another incident of violence, yet another example of a tragedy taking out frustrations by taking out another outcome of the easy access to guns in our society.

For many people in China, the killings became a morality tale of a young man growing up in a confusing, evil times.

The young man was Lu Gan. He referred to himself as Gang Lu in the U.S. press. Lu had grown up in the Chinese capital city of Beijing and attended the prestigious Beijing University. The recipient of a doctorate from the UI, he believed he was slighted by his department over for awards and jobs. In the afternoon of Nov. 1, 1991, he shot a fellow Chinese researcher he envied, three professors he considered treated him unfairly and a UI professor, and wounded an undergraduate.

One of the leaders of the UI's tradition of the in-depth journalism tabloid news.

Letters from

From a veteran

To the Editor:

The recent Vietnam veterans' endorsement of Congressman Jim Lightfoot for U.S. Senate was called extreme by Susan McCue of the The Daily Iowan campaign. Gen. Patrick Brady, a medal of honor winner during the Vietnam War, also condemned Harkin's vote on the Flag Amendment.

Every member of Congress and the Senate who has served in the military has released their military records. Could be that Sen. Harkin exaggerated his military service? Is it also true that the American Legion released information about Democratic Sen. Harkin and Republican member of Congress Jim Leach, revealing if they are re-elected that they will vote against the Flag Amendment in the 105th Congress?

None of the local media carried the story about the Flag Amendment favored by 82 percent of Iowans. Harkin has finally admitted he owns a half-million-dollar home in the Bahamas, that he does not live in a home in Iowa and that his wife has $200,000 government political job with the Clinton/McDougal Administration.

Sen. Harkin needs to release his military records so voters can know the truth.

Harkin gets nod

To the Editor:

Iowa's candidates for U.S. Senate offer Iowans a clear choice on the issue of gun control. As a member of the U.S. House of Representatives, Lightfoot voted against the Brady bill and the assault weapons ban in the 103rd Congress, and for the repeal of the assault weapons ban in the 104th Congress in a blatant disregard for public safety. On the other hand, Harkin voted both for the Brady bill

Yeltsin cancels radio address in preparation for surgery

Candice Hughes
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin canceled his weekly radio address on Thursday at the insistence of doctors who are preparing the Russian president for heart bypass surgery.

The American doctor consulting on the surgery, meanwhile, disclosed he had sent state-of-the-art equipment to Russia and might also bring a team of specialists with him.

"Most of this stuff is hardly ever used," Dr. Michael DeBakey said in a telephone interview from his Houston office. But "if you need it in only one out of 500 patients, you need it for that one."

Yeltsin has been in seclusion all week at a government health resort outside Moscow, undergoing tests for the upcoming bypass surgery.

On Thursday, Kremlin spokesperson Sergei Yastrzhembsky said doctors had forbidden Yeltsin to tape his weekly radio address because of "intensive preparations" for the operation.

Yeltsin, 65, began the radio talks in early October after rumors he had died shook the financial markets. The radio addresses are part of a frantic Kremlin campaign to portray the ailing president as still in charge.

Every day, presidential spokespeople issue statements, decrees and decisions in Yeltsin's name and, until this week, he was on TV for at least a few seconds every night.

The Kremlin campaign has had limited success: Chief of Staff Anatoly Chubais is widely regarded as the man who is really running Russia.

The Moskovsky Komsomols newspaper mocked the Kremlin spin doctors Thursday, asking in a front-page story how a president too ill to even see his staff could generate such a blizzard of paper.

"Does he slip a decree under the door? Send a pigeon? Throw a bottle with documents into a nearby pond?" the newspaper asked.

As preparations continued for Yeltsin's surgery, DeBakey said by phone he wasn't certain when he would leave Houston, but he expects to be in Moscow by Monday. Then, he and the president's doctors would decide on a date for the surgery.

The Kremlin and DeBakey have both said the operation could be next week, and DeBakey said it would probably be a triple or quadruple bypass.

DeBakey said he might bring other specialists with him, including a surgeon and experts on hematology and blood transfusions.

DeBakey said he has sent state-of-the-art equipment to Moscow at the request of Yeltsin's medical team. Doctors in Russia and abroad have expressed concern that even Russia's best heart centers lack the latest equipment.

"It's backup support. It's routine support that any cardiovascular center has. That's all. There's nothing special about it," he insisted.

The Kremlin has ranked at any suggestion the bedraggled Russian health care system or Russian doctors are not up to handling Yeltsin's case, and DeBakey seemed anxious to play down the issue.

"They have pretty much state of the art," DeBakey said. "All I did was consult with them on those aspects that I thought would make it complete." Although bypass surgery is routine, especially in the West, it is likely to be the cardiologist's major operation that involves stopping the heart and letting a machine take over while surgeons graft arteries.

The Kremlin has not said when the operation will take place, but it is likely to be the cardiologist's center where Yeltsin's surgeon, Renato Akchurin, usually operates.

Compared to most hospitals in Russia, where the health care system has suffered steep funding cuts since the Soviet collapse, the center is clean and modern with imported equipment.

U.N. aid workers to evacuate Zaire

Karin Davies
Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — Warfare and looting choked off relief supplies for 700,000 refugees Thursday, sending tens of thousands streaming south in a desperate search for food and safety.

Ethnic Tutsi rebels closed in on the Zairian-held city of Goma, and aid agencies said looting by Zairian troops had forced them to halt food distribution in the area, which now includes the world's largest refugee camp. The agencies also said they would evacuate foreign workers.

Cars packed with people and their salvaged household goods sped south. Streams of others trudged on foot, carrying reed mats and sacks on their heads and babies on their backs.

The fighting threatens to escalate the refugee crisis into a disaster as bad as the one Goma experienced in 1994, when 1.1 million Rwandan Hutus fled into Zaire. Tens of thousands died then for lack of food, water and medicine.

Artillery battles raged all morning around Goma's airport — the only route for food supplies to the 700,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees living in sprawling camps near the shores of Lake Kivu.

Even that lifeline was cut Thursday; the airport remained in Zairian hands but was closed by fighting. Roads from Rwanda, Burundi and Uganda into Zaire were already shut.

The Tutsis are fighting to repel Zairian army attacks and to push the Rwandan Hutu refugees further into Zaire. After capturing the provincial capital of Bukavu on Wednesday, they closed in on Goma, 60 miles to the north.

After a late meeting, Zaire's parliament urged Hutus from Rwanda to join Zaire's army in fighting the Tutsi rebels. It also urged Zaire's government to identify and expel all Rwandan Tutsis.

Shells fired from the hills across the border in Rwanda bludgeoned areas north of Goma on Thursday. From dawn into night, thudding booms and crackling gunfire sent thousands scurrying for safety.

Reports of a two-pronged Tutsi attack on Zairian positions north of Goma sent more than 110,000 Rwandan refugees from the Kahindo refugee camp and 20,000 local residents fleeing along dirt paths towards Goma's Mugunga camp.

Mugunga — swollen and miserable with some 400,000 inhabitants — is already the largest refugee camp in the world.

"This concentration is a recipe for rapid deterioration," said Ruth Marshall, spokesperson for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Geneva. "It could within days become catastrophic in that camp."

In New York, U.N. spokesperson Sylvana Foa said aid warehouses and offices were looted in Goma and up to 60 vehicles stolen, bringing food distribution to an abrupt halt. Panic was spreading.

"The problem is we cannot control that fear because we can't even get out to the camps to show them we're still around," said another UNHCR spokesperson, Peter Kessler.

Food was becoming desperately short in Goma stores and prices of staples such as flour, beans and fruit have increased fivefold.

About 100 foreign aid workers and reporters in Goma were trapped in their compounds Thursday by encroaching artillery fire and nervous Zairian troops patrolling the near-deserted streets.

UNHCR spokesperson Sylvie Daillet said the agency decided Thursday to evacuate its staff from Goma, but doesn't know how they are going to get out.

An evacuation would take time, and would leave Zaire to deal alone with 700,000 hungry Rwandans, a task for which it has no resources.

Mariners' Rodriguez takes Player of the Year honors

NEW YORK (AP) — Alex Rodriguez, who began the season batting ninth for Seattle and became the top hitter in the majors at age 21, was voted The Associated Press major league player of the year Thursday.

Rodriguez hit .358 with 36 home runs and 123 RBI in his first full year in the big leagues. He set modern-day marks for shortstops in hits (215), extra-base hits (91) and runs scored (141).

"It was a very humbling year," he said.

"All they asked me to do was hit .240, hit 10 home runs and drive in 40. But I still need to improve."

Rodriguez received 103 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. San Diego third baseman Ken Caminiti was second with 12 votes, and Atlanta pitcher John Smoltz third with nine in balloting completed before the playoffs.

"I came to spring training this year and had to win a job," Rodriguez said.

Do-or-die Saturday

Must-win game for Hawks and Illini

Chris Snider
The Daily Iowan

Two teams with exact opposite records square off in Champaign, Ill., this weekend, and both of them are looking at this as a must-win.

The Illinois Fighting Illini (2-5 overall, 1-3 in the Big Ten) host the Iowa Hawkeyes (5-2, 3-1) at Memorial Stadium. Kickoff is scheduled for 11:20 a.m.

"We're looking at it just like us playing Ohio State or Penn State or even how the Iowa people play Iowa State," Hawkeye wide receiver Richard Carter said. "I think this is a do-or-die game for us to keep our goals going high. We still have a chance to become the Big Ten co-champions."

Another loss would all but eliminate the Hawkeyes' chance of tying for the Big Ten title. It would also mark Iowa's second loss in row. In each of the past three seasons, Iowa has suffered at least a four-game losing streak around this time of the year.

Illinois, whose only victories this season came against Akron and Indiana, needs to win all of its four remaining games to be considered for a bowl game. But the Hawkeyes are not about to overlook this week's opponent.

"Illinois has a very explosive football team," Iowa coach Hayden Fry said. "They played Northwestern off their feet (last week). Northwestern was real fortunate to win the ballgame."

Northwestern, which trailed 17-14 at halftime, used a late touchdown to escape with a 27-24 victory against the Illini in Evanston last weekend.

The Illini, known best for their defense the past couple of years, lost two key linebackers to graduation last season in Kevin Hardy and Simeon Rice. Led by linebacker Dennis Stallings, the Illini defense has not been as dominant this season.

Brian Ray/The Daily Iowan

Iowa tailback Sedrick Shaw leaps past a block against Ohio State Saturday in Kinnick Stadium.

Illinois has given up an average of 33.6 points per game and has allowed opponents an average of 186 yards rushing and 206 yards passing per game this season. Iowa, which rushed for just 104 yards (its lowest output of the season), last week against Ohio State, will try to get its running game going this week.

Tailbacks Sedrick Shaw and Tavian Banks are both healthier than last week, when neither player practiced.

"They've lost a couple key guys in the defense, but they're still good," Iowa quarterback Matt Sherman said of Illinois. "We need to be able to run the ball. I think we'll be able to, but if it comes down to throwing the ball, I think that's fine. I'd like that opportunity."

Sherman might also like an opportunity to avenge his performance against Illinois last season. The junior threw five interceptions in Iowa's 26-7 loss in Iowa City.

Despite three more interceptions last week, Sherman doesn't feel his confidence is down heading into this week's game.

"I didn't play as well as I wanted to on Saturday, but I did some positive things," he said. "I helped our team get in a situation where we had an opportunity to win. That's all I can ask for."

A huge key for the Hawkeyes the last two weeks has been the emergence of Tim Dwight. Dwight is averaging 16.1 yards each time

Free agency won't keep fifth title from Bulls

I hate to disappoint such a big guy with such a big smile, but Shaquille O'Neal, along with hundreds of thousands of bandwagon-hoppers, will be sorely disappointed when there is no Lakers-Bulls showdown next summer.

There are several reasons why Los Angeles won't even reach the Western Conference Finals this year, the top being that Shaq alone cannot bring a championship.

Yeah, I know. They also have Cedric Ceballos and Nick Van Exel in L.A., but Orlando's Shaq support was even better. I'll admit the Lakers will be good and probably win a championship before the year 2000, but it will take some time to adjust. So let's get rid of the false notion that O'Neal's arrival means the Bulls' 72-win record will fall.

For complete season picks, See Page 5B

Reason No. 2 for the disappointing L.A. finish is that the scenario is a little too perfect. Bulls vs. Lakers is a very obvious and popular choice for the 1997 NBA Finals, but life is not perfect, so one of them will slip up. That slip-up could come in Chicago if the dreaded injuries hit. But if senior citizens Scottie Pippen, Michael Jordan and Dennis Rodman can hold together, title No. 5 is on the way.

The Bulls' repeat will be just that next summer when Chicago again knocks off the Seattle SuperSonics. Why the SuperSonics? Because they were the best in the West a year ago and they haven't dropped off a bit.

Certainly both the Lakers and the Houston Rockets made giant steps with offseason acquisitions, but they didn't surpass Seattle, they just caught up. Watch for the Houston-Seattle conference championship series. It should be something!

Mariners' Rodriguez takes Player of the Year honors

NEW YORK (AP) — Alex Rodriguez, who began the season batting ninth for Seattle and became the top hitter in the majors at age 21, was voted The Associated Press major league player of the year Thursday.

Rodriguez hit .358 with 36 home runs and 123 RBI in his first full year in the big leagues. He set modern-day marks for shortstops in hits (215), extra-base hits (91) and runs scored (141).

"It was a very humbling year," he said.

"All they asked me to do was hit .240, hit 10 home runs and drive in 40. But I still need to improve."

Rodriguez received 103 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. San Diego third baseman Ken Caminiti was second with 12 votes, and Atlanta pitcher John Smoltz third with nine in balloting completed before the playoffs.

"I came to spring training this year and had to win a job," Rodriguez said.

Hawkeyes confident about Big Ten meet

Tony Wirt
The Daily Iowan

All season, men's cross country coach Larry Wiecek has insisted that his team keep its focus on the month of November and the Big Ten and NCAA District meets. This Saturday, the first of those two all-important meets will finally arrive when the 1996 Big Ten Cross Country Meet takes place at 10:30 a.m. at the Indiana University Cross Country Course in Bloomington, Ind.

Coach Wiecek won't say if the Hawkeyes are ready to pull off the upset and win the meet, but he feels very confident that his team will be right in the thick of the race. With everyone healthy and his squad coming off a great meet at Kenosha two weeks ago, he has a right to be confident.

"Bobby Knight has a saying, 'Make yourself tough to beat.' If we make ourselves tough to beat, I'll take whatever place that is. If we compete the way we competed at Kenosha, I'm going to come back a happy man," Wiecek said.

Iowa's main competition at this meet will come from defending champion Wisconsin, Michigan and Michigan State, all of whom hold high national rankings. Wiecek

The Iowa women's cross country team knows when it travels to Bloomington, Ind., Saturday for the 16th annual Big Ten Women's Cross Country championship it will carry along the label of underdog. But that doesn't necessarily mean Iowa will be playing the role. "There's a new enthusiasm on the team," Iowa coach Rachelle

Roberts said. "The team has worked very hard and have great attitudes going into the Big Ten."

A year ago the Hawkeyes placed eighth as Wisconsin ran away with the championship. This year, Iowa will be sending back four place-winners from last year's meet along with a trio of talented newcomers.

BULLS' SEASON OPENER

Quest for five gets underway tonight

By Mike Nadel

DEERFIELD, Ill. — It's time for the encore.

Fresh off the best season in NBA history — a 72-10 record followed by a fourth championship in six years — the Chicago Bulls expect only to be special again.

"Whether it's 72 wins or not, they want to make it a remarkable year," coach Phil Jackson said. "They want to be entertaining and exacting. They want people to remember this season."

The Bulls open Friday night at Boston with the same cast of characters that ruled the NBA a year ago. And they say they still have the drive to excel.

"If anything, we have more to prove now," Michael Jordan said. "We've got to prove it wasn't a fluke last year. Everyone's going to look at us with high expectations."

Indeed, has a team ever gone into a season with greater expectations?

Jordan simply expects to be the best basketball player on the planet. Dennis Rodman expects a sixth consecutive rebounding crown. Scottie Pippen expects to overcome an ankle injury and reclaim his unofficial title of top all-around player.

Toni Kukoc expects to repeat as the NBA's best sixth man. Luc Longley, Ron Harper, Steve Kerr and Bill Wennington expect to be solid role players — and to be rewarded with another championship.

"Last year was sort of anticipation and wonder. This year it's, 'Can we live up to it? Can we redo it?' That's a different dynamic, but I think we're up to the task," Longley said. "We're chomping at the bit. We had so much fun last year. We can't wait to start winning again."

Can anything stop the Bulls? "Boredom, inattentiveness, lack of urgency in play. Those are the things we've had to guard against," Jackson said. "I think this team is motivated. They want to do as well as last year. They don't know if numbers are important to measure that by, but they want to be the team that's on top."

Being the league's oldest team, health is a major issue. Three

BIG TEN FOOTBALL

Wildcats put win streak on the line

Dave Ivey
Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Northwestern has won 13 straight Big Ten games since losing 45-17 in its last visit to Penn State in 1994.

"In the league today, as tough as it is, that's an amazing feat," said Nittany Lions coach Joe Paterno. "It's extraordinary. They are playing with as much confidence as a football team can have."

Wildcats coach Gary Barnett is not intimidated about returning to Beaver Stadium, where Paterno's teams are 50-8 in November in his 31 seasons.

"We enjoy road trips. There are fewer distractions," he said. "You've got 60 or 64 guys who are really focused. This is where you want to be. It's what you do in November — that's when championships are made."

No. 11 Northwestern (7-1, 5-0), which has won four straight games in the closing minutes, travels to No. 15 Penn State (7-2, 3-2) Saturday. The 'Cats won last season's meeting, 21-10 in Evanston, Ill.

The main objective for both teams will be halting the run. Darnell Autry of Northwestern and Penn State's Curtis Enis are both nursing sore shoulders but are expected to play Saturday. Autry has 10 rushing TDs and is averaging 132.4 yards per game. Enis has also scored 10 touchdowns on the ground while averaging 95.5 yards per game this season.

Associated Press

Northwestern coach Gary Barnett and running back Darnell Autry are seen at the team's media day in August. The Wildcats travel to Penn State Saturday.

"I think Autry is as good a tailback as there is in the country," said Paterno, whose team has allowed 152.8 yards per game rushing. Indiana's Alex Smith had 130 yards on 30 carries a week ago.

In its 27-24 win over Illinois last Saturday, the Wildcats were scorched for 166 yards by Robert Holcombe.

"We have to stop the run and force 'em to throw the football," Barnett said. "No question about it."

The quarterbacking edge clearly belongs to Northwestern and Steve Schnur.

"He's smart. A great, great competitor," Paterno said. "He just loves to be in the situations he has been in. You can almost sense it. He is a kid who just loves competition — thrives on it."

Schnur's favorite targets are D'Wayne Bates and Brian Musso. Bates leads the Big Ten in receptions per game (6.38) and yards per game (107.8) and has caught nine touchdowns.

"Schnur may not be the fanciest guy, but performance-wise, he's as good as any quarterback in the country," Paterno said.

The passing game has been a big problem for Penn State, which ranks last in the conference at 161.7 yards per game.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL ROUNDUP

Saturday filled with blowouts

Associated Press

This is the weekend when college football couch potatoes will have no excuse. If there are leaves to rake or early Christmas shopping to be done, Saturday is the day.

The nation's top eight teams are overwhelming favorites. And if the oddsmakers are correct, it will be far from an exciting afternoon — traditional rivalries notwithstanding.

No. 1 Florida is a 34-point choice over Georgia in a rivalry gone as sour as that between No. 5 Nebraska and Oklahoma. The Cornhuskers are favored by 35 points, nine more than the margin by which North Carolina is expected to beat visiting North Carolina State.

In less traditional games, No. 2 Ohio State, No. 3 Florida State, No. 4 Arizona State, No. 6 Tennessee and No. 7 Colorado also figure to win. Among the top 10, only Michigan State at No. 9 Michigan has the appearance of a close game.

The Georgia-Florida game, aka "The World's Largest Outdoor Cocktail Party," returns to Jacksonville, Fla., and there is no question who will win.

"Us Georgia fans are just here for the fun," said Karen Smith, who drove down in her motor home expecting to see Steve Spurrier's Gators (7-0, 5-0 Southeastern) beat her beloved Bulldogs (3-4, 2-3). That's become a habit since Spurrier took over at Florida, and his players are expected to make him 7-0 against Georgia. A victory would tie Spurrier with former Bulldogs coach Wally Butts for the longest run of success in the series.

"Big game? Are you serious?" asked Nebraska's Mike Minter, once a redshirt freshman at Okla-

"Big game? Are you serious? When Oklahoma plays Nebraska ... everybody goes nuts down there."

Minnesota at No. 2 Ohio St.

The Buckeyes hope to continue their roll toward an unbeaten season, and Minnesota does not appear to be a stumbling block. No. 3 Florida St. at Georgia Tech

Bobby Bowden's Seminoles are making just their second and final trip out of the state, and this one could be closer than most believe. No. 4 Arizona St. at Oregon St.

Jake Plummer and the Sun Devils should have little trouble extending their winning streak. The ultimate goal is to stay unscathed, and hope it can play an unbeaten Ohio State in the Rose Bowl for a possible national championship.

No. 6 Tennessee at South Carolina

Peyton Manning, fresh off the Vols' big victory over Alabama, should lead Tennessee over the Gamecocks.

No. 7 Colorado at Missouri

In a series fraught with blowout games, the Buffs will attempt to win their 12th straight since Missouri last prevailed, 52-7 in 1984. Michigan St. at No. 9 Michigan

As with many traditional rivalries, this is no walkover — especially because Michigan State is averaging more than 32 points per game.

Eagles get second shot at Cowboys

Dave Goldberg Associated Press The Dallas Cowboys began their four-game winning streak a month ago in Philadelphia when they fell behind the Eagles 10-0, knocked out Rodney Peete and went on to win 23-19.

They haven't lost since and played by far their best game of the season last week when they beat Jimmy Johnson and the Dolphins 29-10.

The Eagles get their second shot this week, this time with Michael Irvin back and Dallas as healthy as it's been since the season opened.

Do the Eagles have a chance? Yes and no.

Yes, because everybody has a chance; because Ty Detmer may be better than Peete (347 yards last week, four TD passes the week before); because the Cowboys may let down after winning in Miami; and because any team coached by Ray Rhodes can win any game it plays. And because the Cowboys haven't played particularly well at home, blowing a 21-3 lead to Indianapolis and barely edging winless Atlanta.

No, because like last week the Cowboys have more talent and the team's leaders — Irvin, Troy Aikman, Emmitt Smith and Deion Sanders — won't tolerate a let-down.

Go with no. COWBOYS, 24-10 Washington (plus 3) at Buffalo The Redskins passed one test last week by beating the Colts. The law of averages says seven in a row is enough, particularly with this game at Rich Stadium. BILLS, 17-16 Denver (plus 1 1/2) at Oakland (Monday night)

The Raiders are a different team with Jeff Hostetler. Monday night still brings out the best in them and the Broncos are due to let down, even in Oakland.

RAIDERS, 24-21 Kansas City (minus 1 1/2) at Minnesota Neither team is playing particularly well.

CHIEFS, 13-11 San Diego (plus 5) at Indianapolis This could be called the Battered Bowl — both teams have been without some of their best players.

Without Stan Humphries ... COLTS, 27-17 Detroit (plus 11) at Green Bay Careful. When Wayne Fontes' job is in jeopardy, the Lions play hard.

PACKERS, 27-20 Miami (plus 4 1/2) at New England Jimmy Johnson thought his Dolphins would start slow and finish strong.

It's the opposite. PATRIOTS, 33-20 Carolina (minus 1 1/2) at Atlanta There probably will be more Panthers fans in the Georgia Dome than Falcons fans.

PANTHERS, 17-14 San Francisco (minus 8 1/2) at New Orleans. No matter who the 49ers find to play quarterback, Rick Venturi is 2-31 in his interim career.

49ERS, 21-7

Denver quarterback John Elway throws a 28-yard touchdown pass earlier this season. The Broncos play at Oakland Monday night.

St. Louis (plus 13) at Pittsburgh Jerome Bettis doesn't want this one much, does he?

STEELERS, 31-10 Houston (minus 1) at Seattle Two of the NFL's waifs.

OILERS, 22-12 Arizona (plus 5 1/2) at New York Giants A momentum game — Giants going up. Cards down.

GIANTS, 21-10 Tampa Bay (plus 6 1/2) at Chicago No offense, but there's no offense here.

BEARS, 6-3 Cincinnati (plus 3 1/2) at Baltimore No offense, but there's no defense here.

OUTSPOKEN OFFENSIVE LINEMAN

Cowboys' Newton answers team critics

Jaime Aron Associated Press

DALLAS — Nate Newton considers himself just another fat guy the Dallas Cowboys could replace at any time.

In body, maybe. In spirit, never. The loquacious offensive lineman tells it like it is, and he has a certain way of putting things. And if you don't like it — too bad.

Newton's wit and wisdom were on display Thursday for a national conference call. Although he didn't offer any of the side-splitting cracks he's known for, he still put on a pretty decent show.

But Newton was forced to go on the defensive when the conversation inevitably reached the topic of the Cowboys' off-field image.

"I really don't think about it, sir," said Newton, adding the formal title in obvious sarcasm. "I've got too many football games to play. I just go home to my wife and kids and we have fun."

Back when the seedy side of the Michael Irvin mess was unfolding, Newton tried quelling matters by saying: "We got us a little place over here where we're running some whores in and out, trying to be responsible, and we're criticized for that, too."

Anyway, on Thursday he insisted, "It don't make no difference what people say."

Newton described the team's critics as "the high-tech, corporate folks" and not "the guy at the filling station."

"He's the one who loves us no matter what we do," Newton said. "The owners make it where he can't even afford to go to the game."

As for the game itself, Coach Newton laid out his theory about Xs and Os.

"Running is the key, the answer," he said. "The (zone) blitz is going to come and go. Running is what's going to stay consistent over the years."

Or, consider it this way: "He who can run effectively, and blend the pass in real well, will win. Those who pass all the time, with no effective running game, hurts their team in the long run. Even if you score points, your defense is going to be tired. In the end, it's going to hurt you."

Rider charged with drug possession

Bob Baum Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Isaiah "J.R." Rider, who has said he looked forward to a fresh start in Portland, has been cited for possession of marijuana less than two days before he is to play in his first Trail Blazers game.

Rider, 25, was cited at 11:30 p.m. Wednesday when sheriff's deputies found him sitting in the back seat of a car parked alongside a highway in Lake Oswego, an affluent suburb south of Portland.

"They observed Mr. Rider holding a pop can and a lighter near his mouth," Clackamas County sheriff's spokesman Damon Coates said. "Deputies seized the items and found the can to be converted into a smoking device, which contained a small amount of marijuana."

Rider, already suspended for Friday night's season opener because he missed the team's final exhibition game last Sunday, said after Thursday's practice that he was only sitting in someone else's car.

"The bottom line is I happened to be a back seat passenger in someone's car," Rider said, "but I'm a big name. The cops didn't find a damn thing on me. But I'm a big name. I happened to be in someone else's car, so it's kind of messed up."

As a matter of fact, both conference championships will be thrillers. Despite Shaq's departure, the Bulls don't have themselves a cakewalk this year. The New York Knicks are almost as unrecognizable this season as football's Baltimore Ravens, but they didn't change cities or uniforms, just the entire lineup.

Patrick Ewing is still there, but he's now surrounded by Larry Johnson, Allan Houston, Chris Childs and three first-round draft picks, including Syracuse star John Wallace. Low-profile coach Jeff Van Gundy will have to make a name for himself if the Knicks want to make some noise.

So there you have the top five — the only five who really have a shot at the brass in 1997. But that doesn't mean the season isn't worth watching. There's still a handful of teams who may develop this season:

Orlando — The Magic still have Penny (both big and little) Hardaway, Nick Anderson, Dennis Scott and Horace Grant. That's a talented, athletic foursome even without a center. Just look what Seattle did last year without a decent center. I say the Magic still finish third in the East.

Washington — Superstar point guard Rod Strickland makes this team legitimate, but I've seen some too-lofty predictions. Still, Chris Webber, Juwan Howard, George Muresan should be happy to have a backcourt stud to play with.

Texas players ineligible again

Chip Brown Associated Press

AUSTIN — The University of Texas on Thursday declared four star football players ineligible after learning that an agent paid for their lunch during a weekend meeting.

Receiver Mike Adams, cornerback Bryant Westbrook and safeties Tre Thomas and Chris Carter will be held out of practices and Saturday's game against Baylor unless the NCAA rules otherwise, Texas coach John Mackovic said.

"We will hold them out until we find out from the NCAA," Mackovic said.

Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds said he hoped to hear something from the NCAA by midday Friday.

Bill Saum, an NCAA enforcement representative, said he hadn't received Texas' letter late Thursday.

"We will review their investigation and the results of their investigation," he said.

University officials concluded on Wednesday that the four players did nothing wrong when they met with agent Mike George at a lunch Sunday arranged by former Longhorns linebacker Winfred Tubbs, now with the New Orleans Saints.
