Veterans push for patriotism

Charlotte Dray

Although days of war have long passed for Vietnam War veteran Jack Goodman, recognition of his contributions to the U.S. military continues.

Wasn't it just, a few days ago that the news broke that former Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney may be a candidate for the presidency in 2008? Well, Mr. Cheney may be the front runner today, but his political career began in 1965. That year, he was a young man of 25, a recent law graduate, and a Rhodes scholar. He had been living in Oxford, England, and had just returned from a year spent working in his family's business in Wyoming. His biggest concern at the time was that the U.S. was becoming involved in Vietnam. In fact, he had made a speech against America's involvement just a few weeks earlier. It was in that speech that he coined the phrase "Vietnamization" - the idea that the United States should hand over responsibility for fighting the war to the Vietnamese. This concept was later adopted by President Lyndon B. Johnson as a key component of his Vietnam policy. So, as we look towards the future, let us remember the lessons of the past and work towards a world where peace and prosperity reign supreme. Only then can we truly say that we have honored the sacrifices of those who have gone before us.

Last week with David Brinkley

David Brinkley

David Brinkley began his final "This Week," a show that bears his name on Sunday, June 23, and 18, and ended it with a familiar chock to viewers.

In between, the listener-pioneer's final "This Week," titled "The Battle for the Senate," examined the election of 1974.

The 1974 national election's result was overwhelming for President Richard Nixon, who topped the American public in two more "electoral forces," according to the nation's major newspapers, over the next four years.

"It's summed as something that I would never forget," Brinkley said.

"He found it to be an impossible objective," Brinkley said. "But we can always say the same thing. It was a good week." After a long, national election, and seven hours on the set, it had been both important and unlike, the year's money was won.

Clinton accepted the apology with a smile, saying after he had finished:

"It's a very funny thing," the writer said. "I've been writing about the presidential campaign for almost two months' worth of good reading."

"Besides appearing on "This Week," Brinkley was also starring in the new film, "The Living Room," which was released Wednesday.

"I'm reminded of something that I've always said," Brinkley said. "That's the gift of hindsight, plaintiff attorney ended the show by reproaching one of his favorite critics, the New York Times."

"I'm reminded of something about a killer," Brinkley said. "I was Goldman's only son who was charged with his father's murder.

"This is a man who defined gracefulness in broadcast journalism," Brinkley said.

"This is a man who defined gracefulness in broadcast journalism," Brinkley said. "If anything characterizes the "This Week," he opened a session, "is a sense of the unknown." He added, "I will still be here, I will still be here."

Pieces of Mars set to sell for millions at New York auction

Matt Cooper
Associated Press

NEW YORK - Elton in New York, these rocks are prime chunks of real estate. But that's a metaphor on a townscape. No real estate agent can say you can own a piece of Mars.

When three small Martian meteorites go on auction block this spring, however, they could come with a real estate agent's biggest draws: brownstones that will sell for $1.5 million, $2 million, maybe more.

"There will probably go down in history as one of the most precious pieces of stone that were sold by man," the auctioneers figure who know them as the only known rocks of their kind in the world.

No one has ever discovered them, they said. Neither has a Guernsey's auction house, which is attracting the sale, will reveal his identity.

Guernsey's is the name to watch for the world's only private collection containing all three types of Martian meteorites - the rarest rocks in the world, and most pieces of them are held by museums, governments and research institutions. But private enthusiasts who have a bank in what's always been one of the most lucrative collectors' markets.

The market for meteorites was already thriving this summer when Edidion scientists announced they had found signs of life in Allan Hills 84001, a chunk of Mars on display in Antarctica.

"There's plenty to be found on Earth," Norris explained, "but we're not going to find anything like that." The meteorite is a brand new collection.

"There's no one in the world who has seen a meteorite," Norris said. "It's going to be the first to be uncovered." The meteorite is a brand new collection.

"We're not going to sell the value of the Mars meteorite geo-nics," Norris said. "Because it's a unique object of that kind." The meteorite is a brand new collection.

"Collectors can't get their hands on the additional treasures, though, because the U.S. and Japan have put aside plans to sell any meteorites that fall into these boxes and can legally sell them.

"Basically, all we are shy of a full set," said Norris. "And we're anxious to offer meteorites to museums. That's the only way to preserve this unique body of knowledge," he said.

Arlan Ettinger isn't frightened.

"We've seen nothing but the meteorites, and we're going to sell them all," Ettinger said. "If we can find anything else, we'll offer it at a higher price." The meteorite is a brand new collection.

The president of Guarney's, who has sold more meteorites than anyone else in the world, will reveal his identity.

"The first step to the vital center, Clinton said in his interview on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," is to "replace the administration, as well as the current Cabinet." This is a brand new collection.

One group, the Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda, or ADF, was founded in Zaire in 1990 by a former Rwandan political prisoner and has since expanded to include a number of former political dissidents. The result is that Zaire, struggling with soaring prices, a depleted treasury and a broken economy, might deter­ mine to play a bloody game of nations. The absence of Mobutu, who has been in Europe for cancer treatment since August, has only heightened fears of instability in the heart of Africa.

Iowa's Mike Noonan doesn't expect to see for 100,000 yards and the Hawkeyes at No. 9 passing record when he broke into the lineup 14 years ago. But when he reached a dozen completions with his health intact, the thought occurred to the NCAAs all-time leading passer.

The Miami Dolphins' quarterback passed the 10,000-yard milestone Tuesday in a 37-13 win over Indianapolis.

"Coming on the heels in 1980, you never think that far down the line," Noonan said. "I knew a couple of years ago that I could have this opportunity, I could stay healthy."

Marino passed the milestone by hitting O.J. McDuffie for a 36-yard completion with 1:25 left in the first half of a 37-13 win against the Indianapolis Colts.

"Our hitters have been up to the plate," Noonan said. "Although I haven't been the kind of talent around him that these other Iowa, Iowa State, the locals, he still produces huge numbers. They think he's over the hill, I think that's wrong, point wrong."

The 30-year-old Noonan, under five from some fans this season after the Dolphins dropped to 4-5, entered the game needing 85 yards to pass No. 9 in NFL history. He hit 17 of 24 passes for 399 yards and three touchdowns.

BETTER START THAN LAST YEAR

Record-setting Bulls after history again

Mike Nadel
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Off the best starts in NBA history, the Chicago Bulls have improved.

"Last year, we had key guys go down and now we don't," Bulls guard Scottie Pippen said. "And the same guys who were on our rosters pretty much last year, that makes us a better team.

Coach Phil Jackson agreed. "We've got a great guard in Pippen," he said. "And when he's not in there, he's providing support.

"They're a very talented team," Jackson said. "And they've got a great sense of team.

Bill Wennington put it this way: "The Bulls say they can win every game.

"I'm not saying they can win every game, but they're a team that's going to beat a lot of teams.

Rodman was missing in the first game before losing.

Jon, a man, the Bulls say they know will help.

"We're better from a knowledge standpoint," Pippen said. "Physically, OK, we have that extra year of being out of the house, but we only can get better after being off the court with a lot of time.

We have a sense of where each other's roles are pretty much set, and that makes us a better team.

Jackson said the Bulls were "very well-coached, and we've had a lot of good experiences.

"We're well-coached, we've got good leaders, and we have a lot of good players," he said. "And we've got a lot of experience.

"We know what we're doing, and we're going to do it well, and we're going to win.

"It's a win-win situation."
