An interview with Mary Sue Coleman

The UI president answers questions about women's issues, termites and the laser building

Sarah Lueck
 The Daily Iowan

Once a month, UI President Mary Sue Coleman sits down with a DI reporter. She spoke with assistant metro editor Sarah Lueck on Monday.

DI: Were you disappointed by the low turnout at last week's fireside chat?

Coleman: We invite 500 people every time, and they're randomly chosen. My feeling is that people will come if they have something they're concerned about or want to talk about. I guess I'm not bothered by the turnout. We had a great time. ... The more important thing for me is to have it on a regular basis so that people can come. If people want to come, and they weren't invited that specific time, that's fine. People just need to know it's going to be happening on a regular basis. We had food there; people might come if they know there's food.

DI: At the first fireside chat, a student mentioned her concern, in light of the recent string of sexual assaults, about safety in Stanley Residence Hall. How did the administration respond to that concern?

Coleman: Some people from (the office of Residence Services) met with all the people on the floor. Apparently, they decided something to do. I'm not sure what the final solution was, but we responded ... I certainly encourage people to let us know about concerns, because we need to know about it and then we can try to do something.

DI: What are some issues for disabled people at the UI?

Coleman: What I did last week is I went (around campus) in a wheelchair. I really wanted to find out what some of the challenges are. We started (at Jessup Hall) and went to Burge (Residence Hall), and (also visited the Chemistry Building, the Union, Phillips Hall and Macbride Hall) ... We took notes the whole time, and those notes are going to be taken back to the Council on Disability Awareness, and they're going to send me a list of things that we talked about. We need to constantly be finding ways to make the campus accessible.

At the Chemistry Building, somebody had moved a concrete ashtray in front of the door that wheelchairs have to get through. People just don't think ... We need to make people aware that (getting around) is very different for somebody that's in a wheelchair ... What we're finding is that, as we keep making our campus more accessible, more students will come who are disabled.

DI: What is the laser building

(next to the Union) used for? Doesn't the rowing team store their equipment there?

Coleman: The Advanced Technology Lab (houses) very high-level research; it's packed with researchers. They're bringing in millions of dollars in grants a year ... There is a small part of the building that is not yet finished, with shelving space. That's going to be finished out for some new recruits - scientists - coming in. (The rowing team stores their boats) in a tiny little portion of (the building), but we have plans for finishing it.

DI: Is an increase planned in the amount of courses offered in the UI's Department of Spanish and Portuguese? Demand for Spanish classes is increasing, and many students take fifth-level Spanish to get credit for classes they took in high school (FLIP credit).

Coleman: All over the country, at least from what I've heard, Spanish is becoming extremely popular. The way that I've heard it is from people who want to increase their language skills rather than to become Spanish majors, and those are two different (things). But I hadn't heard about any specific difficulty with our Spanish department in terms of scheduling. I'll look into it. I just don't know.

DI: The UI received lower grades in several of the categories graded by the Council on the Status of

Reno's position in Cabinet questioned

Ron Fournier
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON - When a reporter asked Janet Reno if she would remain attorney general, she replied: Yes, "if the president wanted me to stay."

A stock answer, but it still irked White House aides who felt she was boxing President Clinton into a corner.

Shaking up the Cabinet, an almost painless task so far, is growing more ticklish as Clinton decides whether to reappoint Reno in the midst of Whitewater and other investigations.

Air Force One was still en route from Arkansas to Washington, within hours of the election, when word got out that three Cabinet members were leaving. Three more soon followed, and the news quickly spread about who was in and who was out.

But Reno remained a huge question mark.

When asked about her status Friday, Clinton passed up a chance to endorse her.

"I should have no comment on any personnel decisions," said the president, who is making the judgment against a backdrop of legal difficulties.

If he reappoints her, Clinton

A traditionally hectic UI Hospitals and Clinics hushed for a moment Monday as passersby looked into the eyes of women who lost their fight against breast cancer in "The Face of Breast Cancer, a Photographic Essay."

The photo exhibit, on display in the Colleton Atrium of the UIHC until Wednesday, presents portraits and biographies of women who have died of breast cancer.

Former Iowa City resident Sherrill Smith is among the 84 faces displayed in the exhibit. She was diagnosed with breast cancer at the age of 30 and died three years later from the disease.

"The exhibit gives tribute to the women who have died from cancer," said Mark Towner, director of project arts at the UIHC. "It is the best way to humanize and personalize the lives taken by cancer."

Quotes from friends, family members and the victims themselves accompany every portrayal in the essay.

"This isn't the path I chose to take, and I would never choose this path," Smith said before her death. "Even though this is a terrible thing, we have a lot of love in our family. I know a lot of people who have lived a lot longer than I have who have never experienced the love, the family."

Romance blooms for Barbra Streisand

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — Barbra Streisand's new romance? It's like buttah.

The actress-producer-director is loving every minute spent with actor James Brolin, saying in Monday's USA Today it's "more than dating."

"He's very strong and masculine, yet totally unafraid of his feminine side, totally accessible emotionally," she gushed. He is also "very proud of me, very supportive. It's like a dream. A dream man."

Streisand

The pair were matched up at a dinner by a friend four months ago and have been close ever since, talking for hours on the telephone while Brolin directed his first film in Ireland.

So are wedding bells in the Funny Girl's future?

"It's a really interesting thing to examine," said Streisand, once married to Elliott Gould and romantically linked to everyone from Omar Sharif to Andre Agassi. "I mean the spiritual side of marriage, that total sense of commitment. It's kind of frightening, kind of wonderful, too."

Mel Torme returns home after suffering from stroke

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The Velvet Fog is finally at home with his dog.

Three months after suffering a stroke, Mel Torme left a Los Angeles hospital over the weekend and went home to his family and dog.

Torme, 71, was accompanied by his wife, Ali, when he left, publicist Rob Wilcox said Monday. The name of the hospital wasn't disclosed.

"He went to his Beverly Hills home where he was met by his dog Petie," Wilcox said. "He was both thrilled to be home and thrilled to have a home-cooked meal."

Torme, known as the Velvet Fog because of his smooth voice, suffered a stroke Aug. 8. He can speak but will continue therapy to help him walk again.

"He very much wants to make a full recovery and wants to get back to performing, but it's going to take some time," Wilcox said.

Fergie tours to promote new biography

LONDON (AP) — Here's a switch — Fergie actually wants some press.

The debt-ridden Duchess of York left for Chicago on Monday to begin a U.S. tour to promote her partly self-deprecating biography, "My Story."

The former Sarah Ferguson has scheduled TV appearances and other events.

In the book, she describes herself as a "national disgrace" and unfit for royal life.

Fergie, 37, was divorced from Prince Andrew in May after the tabloids splashed stories of her sexual exploits across the front pages. She blames much of her downfall on prying media and unsympathetic royal courtiers.

Former friend Allan Starkie has also published a book, "Fergie: Her Secret Life," in which he describes her having an affair while pregnant with her second child.

Fergie has vowed to repay her debts which, according to news reports, are more than $5.5 million.

CNN's Novak to speak at UI

Laura Heinauer
The Daily Iowan

UI students can get caught up in the "Crossfire" with prominent journalist Robert Novak when he visits the UI Wednesday as part of the University Lecture Series.

Novak is co-host of the "Evans and Novak" interview program with Rowland Evans, and he appears on and serves as the co-executive producer of CNN's political round table, "Capital Gang." Novak is also an occasional co-host of CNN's "Crossfire" and often appears on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Novak's lecture, "A View from Washington," will focus on politics and how the media covered the 1996 election.

The lecture is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Main Lounge of the Union.

"He is a well-respected commentator with interesting views," University Lecture Committee member John Stibal said. "It should be pretty interesting."

The Novak/Evans pair also produced one of the longest-running syndicated political columns in the nation.

"Inside Report" is syndicated by Creators Syndicate to more than 200 newspapers and published three times a week with the Chicago Sun Times, its home paper since 1966.

Both columnists have circled the globe regularly covering politics, but on May 15, 1993, Evans retired from the column.

"Normally we don't have people who are so overtly political speak, especially since so many people are burnt out about the election," Stibal said.

"But I think this will be a good opportunity for students to get a detached view."

Novak's career began in 1948 as a reporter for the Joliet Herald-News and the Champaign-Urbana Courier, both in Illinois.

He went on to write for the Associated Press, the Wall Street Journal, the New York Herald-Tribune and the Chicago Sun-Times. He also has authored four books: "The Agony of the GOP: 1964," "Lyndon B. Johnson: The Exercise of Power," "Nixon in the White House" and "The Reagan Revolution."

DURHAM, N.C. — A 14-year-old boy who got away with casting a ballot in this year's state and national elections said he plans to exercise his civic duty again in 1998.

"I think it's pretty cool," said the teen-ager, a high-school freshman who filled out a voter registration form at a rock concert last summer and then voted a straight GOP ticket on Tuesday.

"I expected them to be like, 'You're not 18, go away.' But as soon as I stuck my little paper in the machine, I was like, 'Wow, I voted, all right!'" he told The Herald-Sun of Durham, N.C., which did not disclose his name.

At the summer concert, the teen went to a voter registration table, filled out a registration form, listed his birth year as 1956 and signed his real name, the newspaper said.

That's a felony in North Carolina.

The teen, who chose the GOP ticket because his parents vote Republican, said he looks grown-up for his age.

"I guess they let me vote because I look like I'm 18," he said. "I plan to vote again in two years, and then by the year 2000, I'll be 18."

Despite repeal of ban, local networks will not air hard liquor ads

Tracy Potocki
The Daily Iowan

Children nationwide may soon see television advertisements promoting hard liquor products such as vodka, whiskey, gin and tequila. But Iowa City's children will not.

On Nov. 7, the Distilled Spirits Council lifted the hard liquor industry's voluntary 48-year television advertising ban in an effort to better compete with beer and wine makers.

In defiance of the ban, the Seagram company has been running hard liquor commercials on several networks across the nation for months. It is unclear when other hard liquor distributors will join in with their own ads, but local ABC, CBS and NBC affiliates all said they have no plans to air the ads.

"We will not solicit or accept them," KWLL General Manager Jim Waterbury said.

KGAN President and General Manager Russ Hamilton said the commercials are more trouble than they are worth.

"We would get a lot of groups calling in protest," Hamilton said. "With such problems it's not worth it." UI junior Shannan Sacks disagrees with the apprehension exercised by local stations.

"If beer and wine companies can advertise on television, why shouldn't the hard liquor industry be able to?" she asked.

Waterbury said hard liquor ads don't serve the television audience.

"The industry has survived for 25 years without television promotion," he said. "No one really wants to see hard liquor promotions on television accept the distillers themselves."

UI freshman Khai Cam said showing hard liquor advertisements on television is not a good idea.

"Televised hard liquor advertisements are a bad idea," he said. "These commercials would influence more people to drink; not only adults, but teen-agers, too. During football games is when you see a lot of alcohol advertising, and there are a lot of young people watching."

KCRG General Sales Manager John Phelan said airing commercials promoting hard liquor is not appropriate.

The station has not viewed any commercials, but has declined to run them, he said.

"The station's refusal is not an element of content but of subject matter," Phelan said.

Hard liquor advertising is viewed similarly to that of cigarettes, Waterbury said. Hard liquor belongs to a product category broadcasters generally don't accept, he said.

"We have a responsibility to the community we serve not to run the ads," Hamilton said.

KFXB, the local Fox network, is the only local station that may decide to air such commercials.

"The network has not yet been approached," General Manager Tom Bond said. "We may possibly run them."

Bond said the station would view the spots and consider content and time slot before accepting them for public observance.

Waterbury said hard liquor still has no place on television.

"Whether it's entirely fair or not, hard liquor companies are under stricter standards," he said. "Beer and wine are more socially acceptable, and until attitudes change, I don't think we will see hard liquor ads show up on TV."

UI warns against costly phone scam

Carie Sadkowski
The Daily Iowan

Several UI students have fallen prey to a massive long-distance phone scam that tricks callers into ringing up a triple-digit phone bill.

In the scam, people get messages on their answering machines, e-mail accounts or pagers that urge them to call a number with an 809 area code.

When the message is returned, a recording is heard, in an attempt to keep people on the phone. The people who set up the scam then receive a profit from charges incurred on the phone bill.

The UI's Information Technology Services sent a warning letter to all UI students in their U-bills explaining the 809 scam and informing them how to avoid being a victim. At the UI, problems have been found with e-mail accounts and answering-machine messages.

"We've had quite a few reports," said William Cleveland, marketing group leader at Information Technology Services.

Cleveland said the people running the scam are outside of the United States. They have the technology to change the 809 into a 900, making the charges payable to them without the caller's knowledge.

"When you call the 809 number, they have the capability of turning it into a 900 number and charging you any amount," Cleveland said.

The 809 scammers leave e-mail messages marked "urgent" or "unpaid bill" and threaten legal action if individuals don't call the 809 number back.

UI junior Jason Coyne said he got an e-mail message requesting immediate response, but he suspected it wasn't legitimate.

"I got a message that looked like a collection notice, saying 'call this number.' It looks like normal e-mail, but I didn't fall for it," he said.

Coyne, who works at the help desk in Weeg Computing Center, said some have been tricked by the e-mail scam.

"It hasn't happened on a massive scale, but a few people have been caught by it," Coyne said.

The Better Business Bureau reported another scam involving advertisements where job seekers are urged to call a phone number in order to get high-paying jobs. Jennifer Adams, spokesperson for MCI media relations, said college students especially should be aware of such ads, since many of the numbers have an 809 area code.

Because the 809 area code is overseas, typically in the Caribbean Sea or Virgin Islands, there is no way to regulate the fraud, Cleveland said.

Adams said the best way to stop the scam would be to stop calling the numbers altogether, because there is not much the phone company can do.

"The main thing we can do is educate the public about the long-distance numbers," she said.

Residence halls to gain Internet access

Will Valt

Students living in Quadrangle Residence Hall will be the first to receive access to the Internet in a multimillion-dollar project to provide dial-in service from residence-hall rooms.

Construction will begin this summer to install copper wiring in Quadrangle rooms to give Internet access to students with computers. UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones said the project will be expanded to include all residence halls using fiber-optic cable by the end of 1998.

Jones said Quadrangle was selected to be the site of the pilot project because of the building's structure.

"With Quadrangle, there are many architectural and mechanical problems that are simpler to deal with than in other dorms," Jones said. "It's an older building with vertical pathways, which will allow the least amount of destruction to walls."

Jones said two copper cables will be installed in each residence-hall room in case of future changes in the number of room residents.

"Using two cables was the most reasonable way of going in terms of future use," he said. "Even if a double room becomes a single, you haven't lost (outlets for Internet access)."

The copper wiring used in Quadrangle has inferior sending capabilities to the fiber-optic wire in other residence halls, but Jones said there will be "no discernible difference" to users in the residence hall.

UI freshman Teri Groff, a Burge Residence Hall resident who has never used the Internet, said having Internet access in residence-hall rooms will increase the number of students who use it as an academic reference.

"We won't have to wait in line to use a computer for the Internet, and we'll have access to it 24 hours a day," Groff said.

Bill Decker, director of UI Information Technology Services, said it is "critically important" to get campus networking to residence halls.

"The vitality of UI dorms depends on this project," Decker said. "It's crucial for the attractiveness of students to the dorms. Most other institutions have done similar projects, or will do so in the near future."

Decker said it is unknown at this time how residence-hall students will be charged for the Internet access.

UI President Mary Sue Coleman said the project might lead to supplying UI classrooms with Internet access.

"We want to have classrooms with multiple hookups so that students who are bringing laptop computers to class will have a place under their seat where they can connect," Coleman said. "I think this project is going to have a positive effect on campus."

Quadrangle's Instructional Technology Center, which contains Internet-ready computers, was closed earlier this semester for construction.

Problems in the public schools

Something is going on in the nation's school system, and while we're not willing to do anything about it, we're more than able to complain loud and hard.

First grader Johnathan Prevette gained national attention recently when his teacher punished him for kissing a female classmate on the cheek. He was sent to another room, where he missed playtime and an ice cream party.

Johnathan's parents weren't embarrassed by their son's behavior; they were angry with the teacher's reaction. They didn't go to school to talk with the teacher about their son; instead, they called the newspapers.

The media said Johnathan was accused of sexual harassment. School officials called it "inappropriate behavior," which it was.

Johnathan's parents, the media and the entire nation overreacted. The teacher acted appropriately, if not a little too stringent, to teach Johnathan what he did was wrong. The attention he received taught him that he acted correctly. When will we ever learn otherwise?

In New York City, 7-year-old De'Andre Dearing was suspended from school for three days after kissing a girl and pulling a button off of her skirt.

Perhaps this was a strong punishment, but what was the alternative, pat De'Andre on the head and send him back to class? What about the little girl?

The problem with these recent occurrences isn't the actions of the teachers and school officials. It's the poor response of the parents to the misbehavior of their children.

If little boys aren't taught that little girls have rights, including the right to be left alone, what will happen when they grow up? If we excuse their actions as childish improprieties, when will these little boys learn? Their parents obviously aren't teaching them that it's wrong to touch other people in ways they don't like to be touched. If the schools don't teach these young people, who will? Television reporters? Newspaper columnists?

If society in the form of the school system doesn't teach little boys how to behave properly, and their parents fail to, then they grow up to be boorish adults and possibly criminals who see themselves as better than women — women who are little more than objects for their amusement.

For proof we need look no further than the most recent statistics on acquaintance rape and the pay inequities between men and women.

For more than 200 years in this country, public schools have always taught values. From strictly religious doctrines to universal mores and moral principles, our schools have re-enforced what was taught in the home. Increasingly, public schools expanded the teaching of values because parents weren't teaching them at home. In fact, today's parents are teaching very little at home.

According to a recent poll conducted by the National Parenting Association, 36 percent of the parents surveyed don't dedicate any time to their children's extracurricular activities.

The poll found that more than half of the parents would lengthen the school year, and 77 percent would keep schools open later. For a variety of reasons, parents are spending less time with their children, and they would rather have the children in school than anywhere else.

Parents are increasingly looking to the schools to do what they are unable or unwilling to do themselves. Parents are shifting their parental responsibility to teachers and the school system despite the growing movement in the Republican Party to abolish the U.S. Department of Education and the Cabinet-level position of the Secretary of Education.

Parents want schools to teach their children more information in longer hours, yet teachers are traditionally one of the lowest paid groups of professional college graduates. Parents want schools to serve as inexpensive babysitters, yet they are incredibly fickle when it comes to the content of the education.

Teach right and wrong, and morals? Yes. Teach sex education and family values? No. We as society are willing to let the schools assume many of our parental responsibilities; we're just not sure which ones.

Until we make up our minds, we'll continue to complain and we'll continue to send conflicting signals to our teachers and to our children.

Tennessee Williams and the 'genius'

In the current issue of the UI Alumni Association's magazine, The Alumni Quarterly, there's an interesting and well-written profile of E.C. Mabie, who helped the UI theater program attain a national prominence in the 1930s that continues today. The article is particularly provocative in its description of the rocky relationship between the temperamental Mabie and his then student, Thomas Lanier Williams.

Williams would years later revolutionize American theater after changing his first name to "Tennessee."

Mabie's failure to recognize the talent of the playwright who would eventually write "The Glass Menagerie" and "A Streetcar Named Desire" raises a fundamental question about the nature of genius: How tough-minded do you have to be in order to achieve artistic success? Is it necessary to be rude? To be flat-out mean?

Williams came to the UI from St. Louis in 1937 because of the strong reputation of its theater department. According to the Donald Spoto's biography of Williams, "The Kindness of Strangers," the aspiring playwright was generally a poor student who received D's in several drama classes and zoology. Although Williams had respect for

There is little doubt that Mabie did great things for the theater department and probably toughened up many young, sentimental playwrights, but the ends do not always justify the means.

Mabie as a critic and director, he also regarded him as a tyrant.

Williams thought about attending graduate school at the UI, and could have used a recommendation from Mabie for a scholarship. However, Mabie, who showed little faith in the young playwright, explained, "I've read his new stuff and I don't like it."

After Williams' first critical successes, Mabie was forced to justify his negative attitude toward Williams. "They can say what they want to about the fact that I didn't recognize Tom Williams' talent," Mabie once told a group of students, "but I'm the only damn professor at this damned university who even gave him a 'B'."

During his brief stay at the UI, Williams showed signs of his closeted homosexuality, which has been speculated as a source of conflict between Williams and Mabie in the biography "Tom: The Unknown Tennessee Williams." Although Williams was described as shy, he also showed a bawdy sense of humor. This conflict with Mabie presaged the controversy that would erupt over his early plays, which dealt explicitly with sexuality like no American playwright before.

There is little doubt that Mabie did great things for the theater department and probably toughened up many young, sentimental playwrights, but the ends do not always justify the means. It is certainly possible that the reputation of the department could have been made with someone as talented as Mabie, but not as temperamental and tyrannical.

The Alumni Quarterly article concludes by calling Mabie a "genius," a term that is vague and nebulous. It is somewhat puzzling to describe Mabie as a genius, because how, then, should we describe Williams, who had a far greater impact on American theater?

Most puzzling of all is so many people actually buy into the superficial attitude that meanness is a prerequisite of genius.

Why third parties are always third

Every four years, Americans are asked to choose an individual capable of running the country. With few exceptions, this century has seen the dominance of two parties, one of whose victory is nearly assured.

The recent presidential election was even more anti-climactic than usual, not only because the pollsters accurately predicted the winner months in advance, but because the two mainstream candidates differed little in their platform.

Besides Reform Party candidate Ross Perot who finished with 8 percent, third party candidates received 2 percent of the vote. This is a small percentage in a landslide election like this year's, but it would have been enough for Richard Nixon to defeat John F. Kennedy in 1960. The two major parties continue to shift toward the center with the hope of capturing as many votes as possible, and the result is that neither presidential candidate this year stood for anything. Without a mainstream candidate to get excited about, the lowest voter turnout since the 1920s was to be expected.

One reason some of the lesser-known candidates didn't get more of the vote is due to little or no media coverage. Though most newspapers covered third parties, all parties were usually clumped together in the same story. President Clinton, GOP candidate Bob Dole and Perot all received widespread media coverage ranging from their tax proposals to what they were like in high school.

The problem is if the media does not cover third party candidates, the electorate will not know what they stand for or whether they even exist. The media obviously has tremendous power in this area. If voters don't know who Ralph Nader or Harry Browne are, then they are not going to vote for them.

Another obstacle for third parties is the way campaigns are financed in America. In order to receive matching funds from the government, a party or candidate must have received at least 5 percent of the vote in the previous election. But with very limited resources, candidates cannot get their messages out, making it very difficult to get that 5 percent. Perot got 19 percent of the vote in 1992, but the billionaire drew from his personal funds to begin his campaign. It takes money to raise money.

Because most candidates are not independently wealthy, they ask for major contributions from this country's private concentrations of power, corporations who then expect a return on their investment. Few major companies outside of Ben and Jerry's want to give money to the likes of Nader.

America's best interests are not served when those with money are determining what is allowed into the public debate. Perot forced the Democrats and Republicans to take the deficit seriously in 1992, but only because he had the capital to get his message out. Third party candidates are giving voice to the tough issues this country faces, but the current systems of power will not permit them to reach voters.

Misogynist history still influences

I was eating dinner with a friend of mine when our conversation turned to women.

He said, "There's this girl at the grocery store. She doesn't wear a bra."

I stared at him. "Yeah, so?"

"How am I supposed to shop if she does that? It's distracting." He looked down at my chest, then made eye contact.

I explained to him that bras were uncomfortable for a lot of women, and therefore a distraction to them. The idea that women should bind, scrunch, pinch, strap and harness their bodies in the name of male comfort is ridiculous. Perhaps the problem lies in his own subtle sexism.

He laughed. "You wouldn't understand."

Women, he told me, did not suffer the same frustrations as men. Long legs barely covered by shorts.

Blouses with the top buttons undone. Tank Tops. He would have whistled at her if she weren't ringing up his groceries.

He considers catcalling "female worship," something women appreciate.

My friend is not alone in thinking women love to be objectified.

In Cheryl Bernard and Edith Schaffer's study of men who harass women on the street, it was found that most either hadn't considered women's feelings or believe women enjoy the attention.

Very few saw their behavior as harassment. "One 45-year old construction worker portrayed himself as a kind of benefactor to womanhood and claimed to specialize in older and less attractive women to whom, he was sure, his display of sexual interest was certain to be the highlight in an otherwise drab and joyless existence."

Strange that sexual attention should be considered the "highlight" of a woman's life. It couldn't be possible these women have intelligent minds and attractive personalities. Not a chance they were beset on rewarding career paths or married. Not a chance they could be ugly and happy.

Nineteenth-century German pathologist Rudolf Virchow said, "Woman is a pair of ovaries with a human being attached, whereas man is a human being furnished with a pair of testes."

The misogynistic implications are clear. Virchow denies anything feminine could be human. Her ovaries, in his view, are not human organs. Not only that, but they rule over her mind. Therefore, women are not as "human" as men.

Women are the sum of their parts.

Later, Sigmund Freud would theorize that women who break free of feminine roles were "hysterical" and had "penis envy." Her ovaries played an important role in the hysteria. Hysterectomies were performed as a treatment for a variety of psychological illnesses as a result of this thinking.

Freud rarely experimented, found no real evidence and excused himself from his own theories, yet they influenced psychology for many years. He is widely discounted today, but the fact unsupported theories lasted so long attests to widespread misogyny.

When men grow up believing women desire sexual approval and enjoy unsolicited sexual attention, the dangerous idea of victim-blaming takes hold.

I was walking home from a night class last week when three guys yelled from their car, "Hey, wanna go for a ride?" One of them patted the seat and licked his lips.

Had they not driven away so quickly, they might have noticed my disgust. It's the strangest thing to be walking, smelling the wet leaves and then suddenly be aware of your body.

It is as if your body and mind are detached from one another. And the body is crying out: I have breasts. I have a vagina. My hips are round. I am a female.

Then, the mind: He could rape me.

I told my friend about this and he asked what I was wearing.

I told him he had insulted his gender. If exposed female skin drives males to aggressive, harassing behavior, then Virchow had it backward. Man is a pair of testes with a human attached, enslaved to his sexual desires.

Not true.

Besides, what if I had been raped? According to my friend's thinking, I would be at fault.

Ask the police why men rape and they will say they don't know. Ask them how to protect yourself from it and they will tell you not to walk alone, and to lock your car and carry a weapon.

My friend, who is Latino, has been beaten up because of his skin color. He understands the culture of hate that encouraged the violence, no matter if he masters English or holds an honest job. Why, then, does he misplace the blame for rape?

I ask him this and he does not know.

Perhaps the victim has been profiled and studied enough. Why not place some careful attention on the men who rape and harass? Why not make some aggressive changes in a culture that encourages pain inflicted on women?

Karrie Higgins' column appears Tuesdays on the Viewpoints Pages.

Snow socks Great Lakes

Lisa Cornell
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — A storm made the Great Lakes states look like a Christmas card not even two weeks past Halloween, leaving up to 2 1/2 feet of snow Monday and catching some people off guard without shovels or other winter survival tools.

The heavy, wet snow combined with the leaves that were not even off the trees yet to drag down power lines over the weekend. Tens of thousands of people were still without electricity Monday.

"It's really rough, this early in the season," Dianne Strasshofer said, as she brushed snow off her coat in a mall where Christmas decorations have been up since before Halloween.

The "lake effect" storm, feeding on moisture from the Great Lakes, dumped more than 2 feet of snow on northeastern Ohio beginning Saturday. Chardon, about 20 miles east of the city, had 2 1/2 feet by noon Monday.

Flakes continued falling in Cleveland, and forecasters said an additional 20 inches were possible in parts of northeastern Ohio by this morning.

Munising, on Michigan's Upper Peninsula, had 27 inches by midday and Hurley, Wis., had 29 inches. At the eastern end of Lake Ontario, up to 18 inches fell on northern New York.

"It is nice to have it for Christmas, but not now," 80-year-old Delia Johnson said, while looking out her window in Hurley, where nearly 25 feet of snow fell last winter and wasn't all gone until May.

"It seems like every year it either gets earlier or I'm getting older. I'm not sure which," Janelle Bettinger said, at the Silver Mine Restaurant in Sandy Creek, N.Y., about 30 miles of Syracuse.

Although Snow Belt motorists have to cope with snow and ice every winter, many weren't prepared for this storm. One traffic death in Ohio was blamed on

SEX SCANDAL

Army delves

Susanne Schafer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Army "is casting its net very wide" to find out how pervasive sex harassment may be in light of the sex scandal at a Maryland training center, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairperson John Shalikashvili said Monday.

A separate Army investigation is looking into allegations of sexual misconduct, ranging from rape to fraternization, among supervisors at an Army training base in Missouri, but no charges have been filed, Army sources said.

Shalikashvili, making the rounds of television talks shows in honor of Veterans Day, was asked whether he had any evidence sexual abuse was occurring at other training sites.

"We certainly have to assume that it could be happening somewhere else, and that's why the Army is casting its net very wide all across the Army, and certainly all training centers, to get to the bottom of this," the four-star Army general said on CBS' "This Morning."

"But right now, I don't think we have all the evidence, or it's very difficult to determine just how big that problem really is," he added.

Meanwhile, more than 1,700 phone calls have been made to a toll-free hotline set up at the Army's Aberdeen Proving Ground, near Baltimore.

Ed Starnes, an Aberdeen spokesperson, said calls have been coming in constantly from across the country since the scandal broke last week.

"As soon as you are off, another rings," he said Monday, adding some complaints go back to World War II.

The Army has filed criminal charges against three military trainers and administrative charges against two more — all married — at the Ordnance Center in Aberdeen. The men, four drill instructors and a captain, were suspended along with 15 other instructors, who were placed on

States' gender gap varied widely in 1996 presidential election

Mike Mokrzycki
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The gender gap that assured President Clinton's re-election varied widely from state to state and sometimes was far smaller in races down the ballot.

And that gap — Democrats' tendency to do better among women than men — was biggest this year in some states where it was non-existent four years ago, according to an AP analysis of voter surveys.

"It is a big flip-flop. ... It's quite a mystery," Kathleen Jones, a political scientist at San Diego State University, said Sunday.

Clinton beat Republican challenger Bob Dole 54 percent to 38 percent among women, while among men Dole got 44 percent and Clinton 43 percent.

In other words, the difference between Clinton and Dole was 17 points greater among women than men.

Overall, Clinton won about 49 percent of the popular vote last Tuesday, Dole 41 percent, Reform Party candidate Ross Perot 8 percent and others 2 percent.

Four New England states were among the top five in presidential gender gap, but Jones noted that Clinton's overall strength in the East — where he did best of any region — doesn't explain differences between how men and women voted in some Eastern states.

Magnifying the effect of the gap: Women voters outnumbered men in all but a half-dozen states, comprising as much as 60 percent of the electorate in the District of Columbia and about 55 percent in Alabama, New Jersey and Virginia. Nationally, 52 percent of voters were women.

"That's only been a recent development," Jones said. The modern gender gap first appeared in exit polls in the 1980 presidential election. Ronald Reagan won election twice and George Bush once by carrying both men and women — men by a far bigger margin.

In 1992, Clinton fared 5 percentage points better among women than men, but won both sexes.

This year, the gender gap was at least as large as the biggest chasms of the 1980s — and it was the first time the winner didn't carry men as well as women.

Political scientists generally attribute much of the gap to economic and social concerns women

"It is a big flip-flop. ... It's quite a mystery."

Kathleen Jones, political scientist at San Diego State University face because of their changed role in society.

More women work now, but they tend to make less money than men and often raise children alone.

That can make traditional Democratic positions more appealing to some women.

This year's exit polls found, for instance, women are far more likely than men to say "government should do more to solve problems" and to view education as their top issue.

But exit polls conducted in every state — with some 70,000 interviews in all, including 16,000 on national questions — show the phenomenon was far from uniform.

The gap in the presidential race ranged from 29 points in New Hampshire, 27 in Maine and 26 in Massachusetts and Georgia to 5 in Indiana, 4 in Delaware and 2 points in Wyoming.

In 1992, there was no real gender gap at all in New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Maine. Connecticut's gap this year was 24 points, up from 6 in 1992.

There seemed to be little correlation between the size of this year's gap and which candidate won the state.

Dole won eight states where the gap was the national average, 17 points, or higher, and 11 states where it was lower; Clinton took 16 of each.

While it widened in many states from 1992, the gap closed considerably in some of the states where it had been biggest.

Oregon went from the largest 1992 gap, 27 points, to a 16-point difference this year; Iowa's was more than halved, to 12 points; and Wyoming's gap was 10 points smaller this year.

In the 34 Senate races, the 1996 gender gap ranged from 28 points in Georgia to no gap at all in New Jersey.

The presence of women candidates in some races seemed to make no difference, as in Maine, where men favored victorious Republican Susan Collins by 17 points and women preferred Democrat Joe Brennan by 5.

In 11 gubernatorial elections this year, the gap tended to be far smaller, with two major exceptions: In Washington, Republican Ellen Craswell lost by 29 points among women but by only 5 among men, and in North Carolina, Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt did 22 points better among women than men as he won re-election.

The exit polls by Voter News Service, a partnership of the AP and television networks, also detected an 18-point gender gap nationally in the vote for the House of Representatives.

A truck makes its way along a snowy roadway in Bainbridge, Ohio, Monday. More than a foot of snow has accumulated in Cleveland and its eastern suburbs since Saturday, with more on the way.

snow-slippery roads, and Wisconsin reported eight weather-related highway fatalities.

"I don't ever remember seeing things like this until about January," said Donna Asbury of Proctorville, Ohio, after a slow commute to work at Barbourville, W.Va.

It's too early to tell how bad it will get this winter, forecasters said, but that much snow caught peoples' attention.

"What worries me the most is that it probably means we'll have a really bad winter," said Kim Warren, 38, of Cleveland, as she trudged along a snow-covered sidewalk.

The snow-clogged sidewalks and driveways before some people had all their winter survival tools.

"We are selling out of all kinds of winter-related items," Lois Stiver-son, manager of Bostwick's True Value Hardware in Chardon, said.

"That includes snow shovels, lamp oil and wicks, batteries, snow blowers, kerosene heaters, and if we had them, we could sell lots of generators."

About 62,000 customers of Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. customers remained without power Monday in northeastern Ohio, down from 180,000 on Sunday.

Ordinarily, Clevelanders are used to snow, with an average winter total of 55 inches.

The National Weather Service in Cleveland doesn't have records on the earliest, heaviest snowfalls, meteorologist Daron Boyce said. But he said the most snow for the month of November at Cleveland was 22 inches in 1950, and places just east of the city like Chardon generally get twice as much.

On Sunday, an American Airlines jet arriving from sunny Burbank, Calif., slid off a snow-covered runway at the Cleveland airport. No injuries were reported among the 121 people on board.

About 30 miles to the east, the roof of the Faith Baptist Church in Perry Township collapsed under the weight of the snow. No one was inside at the time.

Not everyone was depressed by the early demonstration of winter weather.

"I think it's beautiful," 27-year-old Evelyn Franko said. "And it's just typical Cleveland for it to get here early and stay late."

Snow socks Great Lakes

CLEVELAND — A storm made the Great Lakes states look like a Christmas card not even two weeks past Halloween, leaving up to 2 1/2 feet of snow Monday and catching some people off guard without shovels or other winter survival tools.

The heavy, wet snow combined with the leaves that were not even off the trees yet to drag down power lines over the weekend. Tens of thousands of people were still without electricity Monday.

"It's really rough, this early in the season," Dianne Strasshofer said, as she brushed snow off her coat in a mall where Christmas decorations have been up since before Halloween.

The "lake effect" storm, feeding on moisture from the Great Lakes, dumped more than 2 feet of snow on northeastern Ohio beginning Saturday. Chardon, about 20 miles east of the city, had 2 1/2 feet by noon on Monday.

Flakes continued falling in Cleveland, and forecasters said an additional 20 inches were possible in parts of northeastern Ohio by this morning.

Munising, on Michigan's Upper Peninsula, had 27 inches by midday and Hurley, Wis., had 29 inches. At the eastern end of Lake Ontario, up to 48 inches fell on northern New York.

"It is nice to have it for Christmas, but not now," 80-year-old Delia Johnson said, while looking out her window in Hurley, where nearly 25 feet of snow fell last winter and wasn't all gone until May.

"It seems like every year it either gets earlier or I'm getting older. I'm not sure which," Janelle Bettinger said, at the Silver Mine Restaurant in Sandy Creek, N.Y., about 30 miles of Syracuse.

Although Snow Belt motorists have to cope with snow and ice every winter, many weren't prepared for this storm. One traffic death in Ohio was blamed on

WASHINGTON — The Army "is casting its net very wide" to find out how pervasive sex harassment may be in light of the sex scandal at a Maryland training center, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairperson John Shalikashvili said Monday.

A separate Army investigation is looking into allegations of sexual misconduct, ranging from rape to fraternization, among supervisors at an Army training base in Missouri, but no charges have been filed, Army sources said.

Shalikashvili, making the rounds of television talks shows in honor of Veterans Day, was asked whether he had any evidence sexual abuse was occurring at other training sites.

"We certainly have to assume that it could be happening somewhere else, and that's why the Army is casting its net very wide all across the Army, and certainly all training centers, to get to the bottom of this," the four-star Army general said on CBS' "This Morning."

paid administrative duty.

The men facing charges, ranging from rape to sending love letters to trainees, were accused of harassing at least a dozen women in their first weeks of training. The average age of the women was 21.

One instructor threatened to kill three trainees if they told superiors he was having sex with them, the Army said in documents released over the weekend.

"It's a great, great tragedy and our task now is to ensure that we find out exactly just how widespread it is and bring to justice all those who should be brought to justice," Shalikashvili said on ABC's

"Good Morning America."

At Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., an ongoing investigation is looking into several allegations of sexual misconduct, from rape to fraternization, a senior Army official said Monday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

No charges have been filed in connection with the allegations involving supervisors at the base.

The official said the Missouri investigation had been going on since September and was not started because of similar allegations emerging from Aberdeen. "There's no connection between the two," he said.

Five-year-old Ngalia Nyumbandogo sits in her bed in Goma's main hospital, recovering from a stomach infection Monday. The first boxes of emergency aid have arrived in Goma, but have yet to make it to the city's main hospital, where doctors are desperate for drugs and other supplies.

Zaire still lacks much-needed aid

Tony Smith
Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — After long delays at the Zaire-Rwanda border, 16 trucks and jeeps packed with food and medicine arrived Monday at the local soccer stadium, where aid workers haggled with rebel leaders over which supplies should go to each of Goma's three hospitals.

Just across the road, at the main hospital, doctors were desperate for any drugs or medical equipment — and despairing that whatever aid they do receive cannot possibly be enough.

"We're in a sad state," Dr. Patrick Baluba, the hospital's technical director, said. "More than half my staff has fled into the forests, and I'm having to turn away many patients because I don't have the right drugs to treat them."

Shelling wrecked Baluba's last ambulance. He's running out of antibiotics, and wounded Rwandan refugees fleeing a rebel offensive two weeks ago looted his remaining stretchers, wheelchairs and operating tables.

Rebel leader Laurent Kabila agreed over the weekend to allow aid agencies into eastern Zaire, where fighting between Tutsi rebels and Zairian troops has uprooted more than 1.1 million Rwandan Hutu refugees, nearly 150,000 Burundian Hutu refugees and an unknown number of Zairians.

The aid arriving Monday was enough to feed 2,500 people for a week, a fraction of Goma's 80,000 remaining residents, many of whom have had no access to fresh food for 10 days.

Without military protection, there was no hope of getting aid to the hundreds of thousands of refugees who fled west without food or water.

"The longer we wait, the more serious it gets," said Samantha Bolton, spokesperson for Doctors Without Borders, one of 12 groups that managed to get supplies in Monday after a long delay at the Rwandan-Zairian border. Many foreign-aid workers fled the region more than a week ago.

Townfolk were selling bananas, onions and cabbages at a roadside market, and bread rolls in plastic sacks were strung up in rickety kiosks. But prices were too high for most.

"We still have clients, but nobody has money to buy much more than bread and beans," Alain Bailly said at the Chez Greg bakery. "The situation is catastrophic."

Goma's main hospital has no electricity or running water. Its 40 patients lie in rancid-smelling wards, their dressings grubby and their faces lined with expressions of despair.

"We're in a sad state. More than half my staff has fled into the forests, and I'm having to turn away many patients because I don't have the right drugs to treat them."

Dr. Patrick Baluba, Goma's main hospital's technical director

"I'm having to turn people away because I have not even anti-malaria or anti-diarrhea drugs," Baluba said. "We'll accept any help — we have no choice now but to live from aid."

Baluba said only 80 of his 180-member staff had not fled the fighting, and those working have not been paid for months.

He told how doctors had tended hundreds of Zairians and Hutu refugees wounded in the fighting. Then, as the rebels approached Goma, even the most seriously wounded patients fled — taking wheelchairs, stretchers, trolleys and crutches. "Anything that helped them get away," he said.

Goma was quiet Monday, after two nights of mortar fire.

In Kisangani, Zaire's third largest city, Zairian soldiers reportedly were retreating, looting and shooting up this city where some 60,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees were believed to have fled.

The fighting has rekindled national concern for the region after the 1994 massacre of half a million Tutsis by Hutus in Rwanda and the Hutus' mass exodus into Zaire and other neighboring countries.

African foreign ministers met Monday in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to debate how to protect aid deliveries into Zaire.

Several African countries including Ethiopia, Mali, Senegal, Chad and Congo have offered troops.

Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi criticized the U.N. Security Council for failing to adopt a resolution that would have created — and funded — an intervention force.

The force would secure humanitarian corridors to get aid to Rwandan Hutu refugees in Zaire and to encourage them to return home.

The U.N. Security Council urged U.N. members on Saturday to prepare for a multinational force to be sent in, but delayed authorizing the deployment after the United States balked at immediate intervention.

U.S. State Department spokesperson Nicholas Burns denied the Clinton administration was blocking the intervention force.

"Given the level of fighting (in Zaire), there is a need for a security force," Burns said Monday, but added, "You have to consider the question before you send troops in."

Subject of Pulitzer-winning photo speaks at Vietnam Memorial

Harry Rosenthal
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nearly a quarter-century after a photo of her running naked and terrified from a napalm attack was seared into Americans' consciousness, a grown-up Phan Thi Kim Phuc placed a wreath Monday at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

"I have suffered a lot from my physical and emotional pain," she told a hushed crowd of veterans and their families. "Sometimes I thought I could not live, but God saved my life and gave me faith and hope."

Kim Phuc was 9 years old when she was photographed fleeing a napalm attack in Vietnam. AP photographer Nick Ut, who took the picture, won the Pulitzer Prize. Ut now works for the AP in Los Angeles.

On June 8, 1972, Kim Phuc's village of Trang Bang came under a fierce aerial attack from South Vietnamese bombers. The village, 25 miles west of Saigon, had been infiltrated by the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese.

Her family had taken refuge in a Buddhist pagoda, which took a direct hit. Two of her brothers died instantly. The jellied gasoline burned the clothes off her body and she ran out of the pagoda with her brother, Phan The Negoc, screaming with pain and fright.

"If I could talk face to face with the pilot who dropped the bomb, I would tell him we cannot change history, but we should try to do things for the present and for the future to promote peace," Kim Phuc said Monday.

Jan Scruggs, who started the fund to erect the Vietnam memorial, introduced the young woman, who now is married, has a child and lives in Toronto.

His voice broke as he described how Kim Phuc's suffering began "when an American commander ordered South Vietnamese planes" to drop the napalm.

Napalm is a very terrible weapon," Scruggs said. "It burns through the skin down to the bone." She has had years of skin grafts and still suffers other after-effects of her injuries.

The Vietnamese summoned her in 1984 to Ho Chi Minh City to be used in propaganda films. She went to Cuba in 1986, to study pharmacology, Scruggs said. There she met her husband, Huy Toan, and Moscow summoned them there for their honeymoon. On the way back, their jet stopped for fuel in Canada and they ran from the airport and sought asylum.

According to Scruggs, the first person she telephoned was Ut, the photographer who had taken her picture.

Kim Phuc told the audience she never thought she could marry or have children because of her burns, "but now I have wonderful husband, a lovely child and a happy family, thank God."

She said she only wants people to remember the tragedy of war "to do things to stop fighting and killing around the world."

Almost everyone in the audience facing the Vietnam wall, with its 58,000-plus names of fallen servicemen and women, wore some reminder of the war — be it a camouflage jacket, or a veterans organization hat, or simply a white flower with a handwritten legend, "Vietnam."

At another Veterans Day ceremony Monday, at Arlington National Cemetery, President Clinton placed a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns, and led the audience in applauding the military service of Bob Dole.

The president also used the ceremony to call for an end to nuclear arms and other "weapons of mass destruction."

SAN JUAN IXHUATEPEC, Mexico — Two gasoline storage tanks exploded Monday, sending a tower of smoke thousands of feet over North America's largest urban sprawl. At least 11 people were hospitalized.

The blasts occurred in the same complex as an explosion 12 years ago that killed at least 503 people in this suburb just north of Mexico City.

The installation of Petroleo Mexicanos, the government oil monopoly, stores home cooking gas and gasoline. One of the tanks held 3.4 million gallons of gasoline; the other held 1.1 million.

Firefighters sprayed a curtain of water to keep the flames from engulfing four other tanks nearby, and workers drained gasoline from the nearest tank, according to Humberto Lira Mora, an official of the oil company known as Pemex.

"We've just started our small-shop leasing, and the interest level is very high," Bergstrom said.

UI sophomore Laurie Dillon said she would not have to go home to shop if the new mall has stores she likes.

"Students are feeling the need to go to big cities for shopping," she said. "If they have good stores like The Gap, J. Crew, Abercrombie & Fitch and Banana Republic, I will do my shopping in Coralville."

The ground-breaking for the mall began in October, and the mall is set to open in March 1998, Coralville City Manager Kelly Hayworth said.

The uneasy consensus among White House aides is Reno will survive. She is a star of the Clinton Cabinet, mobbed by friendly crowds outside Washington and respected by many lawmakers inside the Beltway. Only the president gets more invitations for speaking engagements.

But one of Reno's greatest assets — a fierce sense of independence — may have caused some of her trouble.

She shouldered the blame for the 1993 disaster at Waco, Texas, in the hours after the Branch Davidian complex fire. The president, who let Reno go public alone, looked meek by contrast.

SAN JUAN IXHUATEPEC, Mexico — Two gasoline storage tanks exploded Monday, sending a tower of smoke thousands of feet over North America's largest urban sprawl. At least 11 people were hospitalized.

The blasts occurred in the same complex as an explosion 12 years ago that killed at least 503 people in this suburb just north of Mexico City. The installation of Petroleos Mexicanos, the government oil monopoly, stores home cooking gas and gasoline. One of the tanks held 14 million gallons of gasoline; the other held 1.1 million.

Firefighters sprayed a curtain of water to keep the flames from engulfing four other tanks nearby, and workers drained gasoline from the nearest tank, according to Humberto Lira Mora, an official of the oil company known as Pemex.

Shortly after nightfall, Lira Mora said the fires had been contained. But hours later, tall flames could still be seen from miles away.

At least 11 people, including nine Pemex workers, were hospitalized, according to Lira Mora. The Red Cross said hundreds were treated in nearby first aid stations, mostly for smoke inhalation.

Jesus Valdez, a local official, initially said a firefighter was killed, but the firefighter's father, Jose Colunga, told reporters at the hospital his son was in stable condition with burns. The fire department and the Red Cross confirmed no one had been killed.

Lira Mora said a faulty valve in one of the gasoline tanks caused a leak that led to the explosion. The second tank exploded hours later from the heat of the fire.

Firefighters had to bring water in from surrounding areas, because fire hydrants were either dry or had low water pressure. Power was cut off as a precaution throughout the area.

Smoke towered over the urban basin of some 17 million people. Environmental officials warned Tuesday was likely to be unusually smoggy.

The blaze forced the closure of several main avenues and caused immense snarls of evening rush hour traffic. People living within a mile of the plant were evacuated.

On Nov. 19, 1984, a series of liquid gas explosions ripped through a Pemex tank farm in the same complex as the gasoline storage tanks, killing at least 503 people, injuring about 1,000 and damaging more than 1,500 structures.

Pemex paid more than $4 million in compensation to 2,100 people who lost property, were injured or lost family members. The state government paid about $3.7 million to rebuild the suburb of about 200,000 people and to compensate victims.

Gunman enters apartment of UI student

Mike Waller

An unidentified man entered an unlocked apartment with a gun shortly before 1 a.m. Monday at 308 S. Gilbert St., Apt. 1138.

The Iowa City Police Department received a call about the incident at approximately 12:42 a.m. The man left the apartment nearly 20 minutes after he entered, according to the ICPD.

No one was hurt and nothing was stolen during the incident, and it is unclear what took place while the man was in the apartment. The incident remains under investigation by Detective Brian Krei of the ICPD.

Iowa City police are looking for a 6-foot white male weighing between 215 and 220 pounds with dark hair and a mustache. The man was last seen wearing a navy blue stocking cap, a beige nylon stocking mask and a black or navy blue sweatshirt and matching sweatpants. The pants had a white "No. 72" on the back.

UI sophomore Steve Kozerski, a downstairs neighbor, said he heard a commotion coming from the apartment above his, and shortly after a tenant climbed down the fire escape to his apartment.

"I heard a lot of noise and footsteps," Kozerski said. "It may have been the guy with the gun. Then one of the guys from upstairs climbed down the balcony to get away."

Kozerski said it was his understanding there were no other tenants in the apartment when the man with the gun entered.

"(The tenant) said there wasn't anybody else up there when he came down to my apartment," Kozerski said. "I think he might have walked in and found the man with the gun already there."

The upstairs tenant came down and just passed through his apartment, Kozerski said.

"He came down and said, 'There's a guy in my apartment with a gun,'" Kozerski said. "He didn't call the police from my apartment."

"He just went through. At first I didn't think much of it. I did hear a lot of footsteps after that. I think that's when the guy with the gun left."

Anyone who may have seen this person or who has any information about the incident can call the ICPD at 356-5275.

Apartment resident and UI freshman Nathan Stevens refused to comment on the incident, and his roommate was unavailable for comment.

Women. How do you think the UI is doing on issues like the advancement of women and how, as a woman, do you view the climate for women at the UI?

Coleman: (Vice President for University Relations) Ann Rhodes and I have gone through the report, and she has found a number of areas where the council feels we have improved, and that's real positive. We still have work to do; we need to keep working, and we will.

I do think this is a place where there is a lot of respect for people ... The expectation is that everybody is going to behave in a good way — that's kind of the unspoken expectation. I am absolutely sure that some things go wrong. I don't close my eyes to the fact that there probably are current problems out there, and we need to know about those so that we can try to help.

DI: What is being done about the termite problem in Seashore Hall?

Coleman: We have an entomologist here ... he's an expert on termites ... He's devising some plans (to get rid of them) not just using regular poisons, because then the colonies will just move to another place, but to really use a way that will kill all of them at once ... I think they're all over. Iowa is an ideal environment for termites ... They're not eating the buildings, but they are pests ... They're voracious. It never occurred to me that this would be a problem.

DI: Is Student Disability Services being overloaded because of increased testing for learning disabilities such as Attention Deficit Disorder?

Coleman: I don't know. I've met with people who do the testing. They seem to be very effective and very efficient. We didn't talk about their being overloaded, so I don't know about that. I think we have an extremely good unit that does (testing). I've been very impressed with their services.

DI: Is the UI planning to offer more classes in the environmental sciences?

Coleman: We have a big interest in environmental sciences. I know there is some discussion about pulling the curriculum together in more of a focused way for students ... We have a lot of strength on this campus (in that area).

The quotes are an extremely important part of the exhibit because they give the viewers a personalized history of each woman, Towner said.

"Through the quotes, people can see that these women were not famous, but they are all important individuals," Towner said. "The quotes from people who knew them best shows the importance of their lives."

Only lives lost to breast cancer are in the actual display. However, many survivors of breast cancer attend the exhibit to talk to viewers about the importance of awareness.

"Women have to be watchful," breast cancer survivor Helen Sheets said. "Our only defense is self-breast examinations and yearly checkups."

"Breast cancer does not mean death for women. I had it, and I survived it."

Sheets was the first in her family to be diagnosed with breast cancer four years ago. Two years later, cancer was found in her other breast. Now, Sheets said she has a hard time looking at the exhibit.

"Even though I can't look at the display for too long, because Sherri was a good friend of mine, I know this exhibit is a powerful one," Sheets said. "It is more realistic than just seeing statistics."

"Finally, it is a way of pulling faces and awareness of breast cancer together. People thank us for bringing in the exhibit because they never knew how many women suffer from breast cancer."

According to American Cancer Society, 2,600 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer in 1996. Of these, 620 will die.

MALL

smaller stores within the mall, General Growth Vice President John Bergstrom said.

"We've just started our small-shop leasing, and the interest level is very high," Bergstrom said.

UI sophomore Laurie Dillon said she would not have to go home to shop if the new mall has stores she likes.

"Students are feeling the need to go to big cities for shopping," she said. "If they have good stores like The Gap, J. Crew, Abercrombie & Fitch and Banana Republic, I will do my shopping in Coralville."

The ground-breaking for the mall began in October, and the mall is set to open in March 1998, Coralville City Manager Kelly Hayworth said.

The mall will also feature a 600-seat food court with two sit-down restaurants, an ice rink and children's museum, Bergstrom said.

"The ice rink will be attached, but will not be a part of the mall," Bergstrom said. "It is going to be an NHL-size rink that will be open to the public."

Bergstrom said the mall is going to be one of the largest malls in Iowa, with a total of 913,913 square feet.

"We are of comparable size to the Cedar Rapids mall," he said.

Hayworth said only Dillard's and Sears have officially announced they will occupy the mall.

However, Target and Scheels All Sports, a sporting goods store, confirmed they will occupy places in the mall. The Target store in Coralville will relocate to the new Coral Ridge facility.

"This store will close on the exact day that store will open," Target Store Manager Brooke Willey said. "All of the employees will come with us."

In addition to the current Target positions, Willey said 100-150 new jobs will be added at the new Target store.

Willey said the new store, at its 120,000 square feet location in Coral Ridge Mall, will have a greater selection of general merchandise.

"As it stands right now, it will be larger than most Targets," she said. Scheels All Sports Manager David Revier confirmed his store, which already has locations in Waterloo and Cedar Falls, is going to be an anchor store at Coral Ridge.

"We are already designing the height of the ceilings," Revier said. "We are going to be a 52,000-square foot, full-line sporting goods store."

Although there has been speculation JCPenney would move from Old Capitol Mall to Coral Ridge, JCPenney spokesperson Stephanie Brown would not confirm the move.

"We are always researching, evaluating and exploring to better our customers," she said. "The Coral Ridge Mall is an opportunity that we are aware of. We are always looking at markets and it is an ongoing effort."

Chuck Black, manager of JCPenney at Old Capitol Mall, said he has not been notified the store would be relocating.

"Nothing is official that we are going," he said.

RENO

will have to deal with an attorney general whom some aides view as a bit too independent. But if she goes, critics will accuse him of ousting her to help escape legal woes.

"It would be viewed by some in a very dark light," said Joseph diGenova, a Republican who has served as a special prosecutor. "But I don't think he cares."

The uneasy consensus among White House aides is Reno will survive. She is a star of the Clinton Cabinet, mobbed by friendly crowds outside Washington and respected by many lawmakers inside the Beltway. Only the president gets more invitations for speaking engagements.

But one of Reno's greatest assets — a fierce sense of independence — may have caused some of her trouble.

She shouldered the blame for the 1993 disaster at Waco, Texas, in the hours after the Branch Davidian complex fire. The president, who let Reno go public alone, looked meek by contrast.

She wasn't "muscular" enough on crime, some aides argued, because of her personal objections to requiring minimum sentences for certain crimes and to the death penalty. But she rarely talked publicly about those objections.

She sought court-appointed independent prosecutors to investigate Whitewater, former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy, former Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros.

Just last week, the Justice Department announced the formation of a task force to examine allegations of improper fund raising by Democrats and Republicans. The action bypassed a more direct route toward the naming of an independent counsel, but the internal inquiry could still embarrass Clinton.

At her weekly news conference Thursday, the attorney general told reporters three times it was up to the White House to comment on her future. Pressed to say whether she would stay, Reno replied, "As I have said all along, if the president wanted me to stay, I would be honored to do so."

That upset some senior Clinton advisers, who argued that Reno was using the media to send a signal — something they said the president would never do. However, the president's aides have used the media, too. A steady stream of leaks carry an unmistakable message to Reno: Some of us want you out.

Justice Department officials say Reno wants to keep her job, but would go quietly upon request. Indeed, the officials said Reno carefully crafted her public statement — "if the president wanted" — to give Clinton room to seek her resignation.

They also said Reno recently rejected at least two chances to make public appearances that could have been interpreted as attempts to campaign for her job.

In the first hours after the election, White House advisers predicted Reno was safe — if for no other reason than her resignation would look heavy-handed. But a senior White House official close to the decision said after the Friday news conference Reno could still go.

"The president is not powerless here," said the official, who has defended Reno in the past. "He has not decided her fate."

Government weighs new rules after E. coli outbreak in juice

Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Alarmed by another E. coli bacteria outbreak that killed a child and sickened dozens of others in Western states, the government is considering forcing all apple juices — and possibly other fruit juices — to be pasteurized.

Also under debate are measures such as chemically washing fresh produce or forcing manufacturers to adopt programs that prove foods stay pure from harvest to the dinner table.

The deliberations come after at least 49 people, mostly children, were sickened from E. coli in trendy, unpasteurized fruit juices. One child died Friday in Denver.

Once thought a threat only in undercooked meat, the virulent E. coli O157 strain now has surfaced repeatedly in apple cider and even in lettuce.

But health experts weren't alarmed until two weeks ago when Odwalla Inc., based in Half Moon Bay, Calif., recalled its gourmet juices that contained tainted apple juice. That outbreak showed even large companies known for quality are vulnerable.

"The number of outbreaks are significant in the past year," John Vanderveen of the Food and Drug Administration said. But "there's no doubt this is a different problem this time."

Just hours after the recall began, Vanderveen called a special meeting to warn apple-juice makers "to ratchet up their quality control" while the government decides the next step.

Meanwhile, Vanderveen is advising parents of young children and people with weak immune systems, who are most at risk from food-borne illnesses, to buy only pasteurized juices. Unpasteurized juices, a minority on the market, must be sold cold, so shoppers should check the label when buying any chilled juice, he added.

Many people say unpasteurized juices taste better. But pasteurization, a heating process, kills E. coli, while simply washing fruit with water does not.

If the FDA mandates pasteurization, the rule could apply both to the upscale, all-natural juices sold in supermarkets and perhaps even to the cider farmers who sell juice at tiny roadside stands.

Although the government is looking first at apple products, they are not the only threat. Salmonella has poisoned Americans who ate alfalfa sprouts, cantaloupes, watermelon and unpasteurized orange juice. Guatemalan raspberries are the prime suspect in last summer's outbreak of the parasite cyclospora.

At least four U.S. outbreaks of E. coli O157, a particularly dangerous strain discovered in 1982, were linked to raw lettuce in the past year. Last month, it sickened 10 people who drank apple cider in Connecticut.

While bacterial outbreaks are increasing, so is Americans' consumption of all-natural foods — an industry growing about 25 percent a year.

People don't understand that fresh or natural "doesn't necessarily mean better for you," said Dr. Mitchell Cohen, bacterial diseases chief at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. One worry: Organic foods often are fertilized with cow manure, even though E. coli flourishes in cattle.

When the Odwalla outbreak hit, the Clinton administration already was planning a broader initiative to better safeguard all foods. One step is expected to be an expansion of the nation's fledgling early-warning system for food-borne risks, which now operates in just five states.

But the latest E. coli outbreak has the FDA considering what steps fresh food makers should take immediately. Options include experimental chemical washes that promise to purify produce, additives that might kill the bacteria or pasteurization.

"You're going to have a tremendous outcry of individuals" if the FDA mandates pasteurization, warned Cornell University food scientist Bob Gravani. "The unique flavors will not be there, but that's the price you pay for safety."

The government also could require the natural food industry to adopt strict quality-control programs similar to ones now mandated for seafood and meat companies. These force firms to prevent contamination at every step of production, from harvesting food to selling it.

The industry fears the government will move too fast — all, nobody yet knows how Odwalla's juices were tainted.

One of the largest natural producers, Odwalla passed plant inspections and even had its own special quality-control program. One possibility is Odwalla had dropped from orchard into cow or deer feces.

But in all these outbreaks, a worker also could simply have handled food with dirty hands, noted John Aguirre of the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association, which is studying better safeguards.

"Nobody's suggesting putting carrots and lettuce down and more hot dogs," he emphasized. "We are taking adequate steps ... minimize the possibility of becoming ill."

MEDICINE

Tiny cut may replace open heart surgery

Daniel Haney
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Coronary bypass patients recover faster, have lower hospital bills and suffer much less pain if doctors fix their hearts through a tiny slit in the chest instead of splitting open the rib cage, the standard approach for the past 30 years, a study found.

Surgeons have been experimenting with the new approach, called keyhole surgery, for about two years. On Monday, they released the first head-to-head comparisons with the traditional operation, which is performed on more than 400,000 Americans annually.

So far, doctors are using it on patients with single blockages, which make up only about 5 percent of all bypass patients. But the field is moving so quickly that experts expect more complicated operations will be done this way within a year or two.

"This is just the beginning," said Dr. Renee Hartz of Illinois Masonic Medical Center in Chicago.

In a presentation at the annual scientific meeting of the American Heart Association, Dr. James Magovern of Allegheny University of Health Sciences in Pittsburgh compared 48 patients who got keyhole surgery and 55 who underwent the usual operation.

"It's fair to say patients get better at least twice as fast with this procedure," Magovern said.

Instead of the typical two to three months of recovery, he said, many people feel completely back to normal within two weeks.

Among the differences:

- 40 percent of the standard surgery patients needed blood transfusions, compared with 8 percent of keyhole patients.
- Standard surgery patients needed seven days in the hospital, compared with three and a half days for keyhole patients.
- Keyhole patients' hospital bills were 40 percent lower.

Another study by Dr. James Fonger of Johns Hopkins University found keyhole surgery costs $10,000, compared with $17,000 for the standard operation.

Bypass surgery is done to reroute blood around blocked heart arteries.

Typically, doctors make a foot-long cut in the chest, saw through the breastbone and pry apart the rib cage with a steel retractor, exposing the heart. Then the heart is stopped with medicines, and a machine pumps the blood while doctors sew in the new pieces of artery.

The wide chest opening makes recovery slow. Patients often complain of pain even when they laugh or cough.

With the new operation, doctors make a 3-inch slice in the fold underneath the left breast. They cut between the ribs in just the right spot so they can see the surface of the heart, as well as remove the artery they need to make the grafts.

The operation is the latest example of what doctors call minimally invasive surgery.

This approach first came into widespread use in 1990 after doctors found they could take out gallbladders by operating through tiny slits in the abdomen.

Doctors are also using the new approach to replace damaged heart valves, a common operation that also typically has meant splitting open the chest.

"We were amazed to find a truly great reduction in patient pain and improvement in their mobility," said Dr. Lawrence Cohn of Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, who called the new approach "a major breakthrough."

Hartz said while the new approach has strong advocates, many surgeons have been highly skeptical. Nevertheless, at the meeting Monday, she said, "I get a glimmer that there is some guarded optimism about this in the general surgical community."

Also skeptical are cardiologists who perform angioplasty, a technique that opens up clogged heart arteries by inflating tiny balloons inside the blood vessels.

The new operation "is minimally invasive compared to other surgery, but it is maximally invasive compared to angioplasty, which just leaves a needle hole," said Dr. Paul Teirstein, a cardiologist from the Scripps Clinic in San Diego.

PEACE PROCESS

Christopher embarks on final Mideast peace trip

Barry Schweid
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — On his final Middle East trip, Secretary of State Warren Christopher is undertaking a long-shot effort to break a deadlock between Israel and Palestinians over the future of the West Bank town of Hebron.

Here mostly for a Mideast economic conference designed to promote peace through investment and development, Christopher set up a Monday midnight meeting with Yasser Arafat and a follow-up session Tuesday with Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy.

His chances of success were considered minimal. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu talked to Arafat by telephone Sunday before flying to the United States for a series of speeches, but they did not break the deadlock.

Christopher brought his senior Middle East adviser, Dennis Ross, with him and sent him in to see Arafat first. State Department spokesperson Nicholas Burns told reporters, "We are still working on it, but don't expect a breakthrough."

Christopher is resigning before the start of President Clinton's second term in January, and a search for a successor is under way.

The secretary of state gave the Middle East peace process his highest priority this year, but Israeli-Syrian talks are suspended and steering Israel and the Palestinian Authority to settle on Hebron so far has not succeeded.

The goal is to implement an Israeli-Palestinian agreement that Israeli troops would redeploy to the city but steer clear of the 94,000 Arab residents and confine themselves to protecting the 450 or so Jews who maintain a 4,000-year Jewish presence in the city where the patriarch Abraham buried his dead.

The slowdown in the peace process has caused a parallel slowdown in investments and development of the area, two administration officials said on Christopher's flight from Washington.

NEW YORK (AP) — John Smoltz ended Greg Maddux's Cy Young streak at four, easily winning the award Monday and giving the Atlanta Braves four straight winners.

"Aside from us winning the World Series, this is the greatest thing that's ever happened to me," Smoltz said.

He received 26 first-place votes and two second-place votes for 136 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. Florida's Kevin Brown was second with two firsts, 26 seconds and 88 points.

Atlanta's prized pitching staff became the first to win four consecutive Cy Young Awards and has won five of six, a streak that began with Tom Glavine's in 1991.

Midwest Sports Channel also reported Monday night that Minnesota coach Jim Wacker will announce his resignation at a team meeting today.

Athletic Director Ron Guenther praised Tepper's "class and dignity" in a news release announcing the firing.

"Unfortunately, we have not been as successful on the field as we would expect and we feel a change in leadership is necessary at this time," Guenther said in the statement.

Tepper, 51, said in the same statement he disagreed with Guenther's decision, but would stay on to coach Illinois' final 1996 games at Minnesota Saturday and against Wisconsin Nov. 23.

"I would hope that the fans will support their (players') efforts the rest of the season and during the transition to the new staff," Tepper said.

McIlravy returns for one more shot at glory

James Kramer
The Daily Iowan

If Iowa wrestler Lincoln McIlravy needs to find extra motivational tools this season, he won't have to search too hard.

But as far as the two-time NCAA champion is concerned, the things he has used to prepare himself in the past will suffice.

McIlravy won the national title in the 142-pound weight class as a true freshman, and moved up a class the following year to capture the crown at 150. In those two years, the Philip, S.D., native compiled a 49-2 record.

The first 25 matches of McIlravy's junior season went as expected — 25 victories. Then, just when it looked as if he was invincible, McIlravy was defeated by Illinois' Steve Marianetti in the championship match of the NCAA Tournament. The loss broke the Iowa wrestler's 52-match winning streak.

Last year, McIlravy used a redshirt in order to concentrate on making the U.S. Olympic team. Despite being the top seed at the Olympic Trials, McIlravy finished third and his dream of reaching the Olympics in 1996 was over.

Instead of loathing the loss, McIlravy has opted to concentrate on the positives of last year's experiences.

"I didn't achieve the goal of making the Olympic team, that was my first goal," he said. "What I did gain was a lot of experience and a lot of extra workouts."

"I got a chance to compete in Russia in January and train in Colorado Springs with the national team, so I got a lot of experience."

Athletes, more than most other people, must be able to deal with and learn from failure. But like every other Iowa wrestler, McIlravy is not satisfied with anything less than first place.

His love of Iowa wrestling was something he lost track of during his absence. But his setbacks made the Iowa senior especially anxious to get back on the mat for the Hawkeyes.

"To be honest with you, I didn't miss anything (last year) because I was too busy myself," McIlravy said. "But now I'm excited to get back."

McIlravy has been to the top. He's experienced the feelings of accomplishment that go along with it. On the other hand, he also knows the emptiness of seeing his goals go unattained.

Many athletes use these experiences to drive them to future success. While McIlravy is not entirely different, he prefers to stick with the methods that got him to the top.

"I've had a certain goal since I was five years old," he said. "My motivations have never really changed for that goal."

"I've had setbacks and boosts from time to time. If you take them right, everything can help you build to that ultimate goal."

A prototype Dan Gable pupil, McIlravy knows

After redshirting the 1995-96 season, Iowa senior Lincoln McIlravy hopes to return to the form that won him a pair of NCAA championships.

"I've had a certain goal since I was five years old. ... I've had setbacks and boosts from time to time. If you take them right, everything can help you build to that ultimate goal."

Lincoln McIlravy, Iowa senior wrestler whose only loss during his junior year came at the NCAA championships where his priorities lie. He competes for himself and his team, not to silence critics.

His resilient attitude has allowed him to zone out the naysayers who still think he must prove himself. When McIlravy says this kind of criticism doesn't bother him, you tend to believe him.

"I don't feel like I have anything to prove to them," said McIlravy, whose wife, Lisa, is expecting a baby in April. "I wrestle because I enjoy it. There's nothing better than getting your hand raised after a match."

"If people don't think I'm the best, that's fine. If they think I am the best, that's fine, too. Either way, it doesn't mean a lot to me."

Whether or not McIlravy is the nation's best, his team will undoubtedly benefit from having him back. Assistant coach Jim Zalesky said

McIlravy's presence will be crucial this year in order to help younger wrestlers.

"Guys like McIlravy ... are really good examples to look up to," Zalesky said. "We have some young guys that have to come through."

McIlravy's final season will be significant for yet another reason. It could signify the end of the Gable era. The Iowa head coach, now in his 21st year at the UI, has stated publicly he is considering the possibility of retirement after this season. McIlravy is well aware of this.

"Every time I go out on the mat, I try to go out with a bang," McIlravy said. "If this is his last year, it's going to be special for him. I'd like to be a part of that and hopefully make it fulfilling for him."

If McIlravy stays with his original goal, the season should be fulfilling for himself, too.

TIME FOR A CHANGE?

Backup Driscoll awaits chance to kickstart Iowa

Senior QB more than a 'mop-up' player

Chris Snider
The Daily Iowan

With seven minutes to go and his team trailing by 27 points Saturday, Iowa coach Hayden Fry decided it was time to give starting quarterback Matt Sherman a break.

His back-up of choice, Ryan Driscoll, had other plans. After standing on the sidelines for three hours, Driscoll turned down Fry's offer to enter the game.

"I don't consider myself a mop-up guy," the senior from Cedar Rapids said. "I wasn't ready. I was frozen. I didn't think I could help the team on an amazing comeback."

Neither could Sherman. The junior, who has started 23 straight games for the Hawkeyes, stayed in, only to see his team lose, 40-13.

Sherman finished the game with 255 yards through the air, hitting 16-of-32 passes for two touchdowns.

But a majority of those yards came after the game was out of reach and the junior quarterback had thrown two interceptions and missed a number of receivers.

"As the quarterback, you take the blame," Sherman said. "I've got big shoulders. I'm fine with that. My teammates understand that's how it is in this game.

"We just didn't get it done offensively. If you want to blame me, that's fine. I don't care. I know in my heart what I did out there and my teammates know. Those are the only people that matter."

Five minutes into the second quarter, Sherman missed a wide open Tim Dwight and a wide open Richard Willock on two consecutive plays, causing the Kinnick crowd to let him know what they felt of his performance to that point.

"Everyone booed," Sherman said. "They can do that. I don't care."

Driscoll was the Hawkeyes' starting quarterback two years ago, before a broken collarbone ended his sophomore season.

A revolving quarterback situation ensued, with Sherman emerging as the starter in the final two games of the year. Driscoll returned healthy the next year, but Sherman hasn't missed a start since.

"I'm angry, but I'm not mad at anyone in particular," Driscoll said. "I'm just mad at the situation. It's frustrating. It's been a hard two years and it's tough on a guy."

Former starter deserves a shot to show his stuff

Nine weeks into the season is no time for a quarterback controversy. Then again, maybe it's the best time.

After a heartbreaking 40-13 loss to Northwestern Saturday, the Iowa football team needs something to shake the cobwebs out and get things back on track.

No Iowa player knows more about cobwebs than Ryan Driscoll. The senior has been sitting on the sidelines for two years waiting to get a shot. Perhaps it's time to dust off (or thaw out) his arm.

Matt Sherman, who was once believed to be the next in a great line of Iowa quarterbacks, is not having the year people expected. Sherman was the top returning quarterback in the Big Ten in passing efficiency coming into this season, but has dropped considerably.

Maybe it's time to let Driscoll make his first start since suffering a broken collarbone in 1994. The worst that can happen is he'll play terrible, in which case Sherman could be put right back in.

Sherman's main problem may be simply that he's thinking too much.

In an effort to become the best quarterback he can be, Sherman has really become a student of the game, maybe too much of a student and not enough of an athlete.

At times, he's outthinking himself on the field instead of just playing the game and letting his natural ability take over. Often, he waits too long to throw the ball, almost as if he is afraid of making a mistake.

I'm not saying Sherman does not deserve to be Iowa's starting quarterback. One has to admire his attitude and his drive.

No matter what has happened this year, he has always bounced right back and done his best to lead Iowa to victory. And never once has he made excuses for his mistakes.

Maybe benching Sherman is exactly what is needed to light a fire under the junior and get him back to playing the kind of football he played in the final two games his freshman year, when he just went out and played the game.

The odds are, Sherman will bounce back and become a great quarterback next season, but he's not doing it now. Why waste Driscoll, who won't be around much longer?

Driscoll has two regular season games left in his Iowa career and nothing to lose. If Iowa coach Hayden Fry doesn't at least consider

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Moline, Ill., Nov. 22, barring any injuries in the two preseason games.

Davis said he is not counting out Guy Rucker and Greg Helmers as possible starters.

"If Rucker or Helmers can get 10 rebounds a game, then they're going to start," Davis said.

The emergence of either of those players would bump McCausland or Koch out of the starting lineup. If McCausland lost his job, Bowen would move to shooting guard, a position where he will see action this season.

Bowen scored 14 points and pulled down 11 rebounds in the Black and Gold Blowout, but his coach feels that wasn't a true indication of his abilities.

"I think he's going to play better than that," Davis said. "His shooting was off. I look for him to really emerge."

Improvements are also anticipated from McCausland and Koch.

The two sophomores combined for just 6.1 points and 3.7 rebounds per game last season and Davis worries about them making the move to starter.

"You're moving someone who's on the bench into a starting role and you're moving someone who has never played into a key bench position," Davis said.

The plan is to not rush Rucker, who is playing his first season with the Hawkeyes.

"I'm not going to rush him into that position," Davis said. "It's just better to wait and see."

Davis wants anywhere from 10 to 30 minutes a game from Rucker. He also wants key minutes from Helmers, who will back up Koch at the No. 4 position.

"Helmers has been pretty steady, doing a lot of things," Davis said.

Bauer, a 6-foot-4 sophomore guard, and Welsch, a 6-foot-6 freshman guard, will also be looked at for playing time this season. Davis described the two walk-ons as "in the hunt."

QUARTERBACKS

the top five drop-back passers in the country by The Sporting News coming out of high school, said in the past that standing on the sidelines has given him more of a coach's mentality. It has also given him a chance to critique the Iowa passing game, which has been last in the Big Ten much of this season.

"Sure, Matt didn't play great and hasn't played great the whole season, but that's not all his fault," Driscoll said. "That's many things that are happening, that aren't clicking."

"We're taking too long to get rid of things. The receivers are getting jammed here and there. It's just been screwed up."

But could Driscoll fix things?

Fry has said over and over this year that one could just about flip a coin between Sherman and Driscoll at quarterback, although Driscoll has barely played at all this season.

"I don't know what the deal is. I can't explain it," Driscoll said. "I don't know why I don't get more snaps. I wish I did, but it's (Fry's) choice."

Sherman has thrown the ball

200 times this season. Driscoll has thrown just 18 passes.

"I was a starter here and played against two Rose Bowl teams and another bowl team," Driscoll said. "I didn't embarrass myself as far as I'm concerned. (The coaches) know I can play."

Whether they will let him play after refusing to enter the game on Saturday remains to be seen.

SNIDER

letting Driscoll start this weekend against Wisconsin, then he is selling his team short.

Driscoll knows every play. Aside from starting six games three years ago, he has seen the offense in action every game since then.

He knows what's working and who's getting open.

There is obviously a problem with the Iowa passing game. Whether Sherman is to blame or not, who knows. At least by giving someone else a chance, we could find out if Sherman is the problem.

Perhaps the receivers are the problem. Perhaps the entire Iowa offensive system is to blame. Perhaps opposing defenses are the problem.

Starting Driscoll would be somewhat of a blow to Sherman's ego, but letting him take the blame for Iowa's passing woes is an even bigger one. At least by starting Driscoll, or at least playing him more, fans could judge for themselves.

My mom always told me, "You'll never know if you don't like something until you try it."

Maybe it's time for the Iowa coaching staff to try Driscoll. They just may like it.

Ground-breaking comic rereleased

Todd Panglinan
The Daily Iowan

"Batman: The Dark Knight Returns" will return — again.

The comic, which has been noted as one of the most influential adult comics ever, is scheduled to be rereleased later this month in celebration of its 10th anniversary.

Set in the future, the caped crusader is lured out of retirement when Gotham is struck by a series of crimes. Featuring an aged Batman, Superman and Green Arrow, along with a new female Robin, Frank Miller's "Batman: The Dark Knight Returns" put a new spin on conventional comic-book stories.

"It was the first comic series that was treated seriously about the outside world," Dave Haddy, an employee at Daydreams, 114 E. College St., said "It opened the floodgate for people to try new things in the medium."

After the release of "The Dark Knight" the comic industry began to experiment more with the standard superhero format — DC's release of Alan Moore's "The Watchmen" surprised fans and critics with its intricate plot and mature issues.

Along with more experimental tion, many comics became more gritty and violent. Series such as Marvel's "The Punisher" imitated the violence of Miller's Batman without duplicating his intelligence.

The commemorative book will be available in two versions. A signed, deluxe, slip-case hardcover edition of the book, featuring unpublished artwork and a new introduction to be released as well.

A brief Batman history

Since Batman's creation in the early 1930s, he has been a schizophrenic character in the public eye. He began as a grim gun-toting crime fighter, who was driven by the murder of his parents.

In the 1950s, due to public pressure — and a recent investigation and Senate hearings in which Batman and Robin were accused of being homosexual — Batman lost some of his harsh tendencies, and began exploring outer space instead of patrolling the streets.

Along with experiment with outer space, Batman began to experiment with his more lighthearted and humorous side. The popular '60s TV show made Batman into more of a joke than a crime fighter, while the '70s brought about the "Batman" Scoutish cartoon version of Batman (who sounded more like Encyclopedia Brown than Gotham's top crime fighter).

Batman's image finally solidified in the '80s with Miller's creation of "The Dark Knight Returns." In this comic, Batman was depicted as being dark, calculating and intelligent.

The release of the first Batman movie was followed by an animated TV series — "Batman: The Animated Series" — which managed to retain "The Dark Knight"'s moody tone in a cartoon format.

by

Miller, will cost around $100. The package also includes a sketch book of the characters, a script to the first issue and a collection of press clippings reviewing the original release.

A softcover edition also will be available for less than $25. Posters, T-shirts and statues are scheduled

NewsBrief

Friends defend image of Tupac at tribute

ATLANTA (AP) — The real Tupac Shakur wasn't anything like the guy who kept making headlines for getting arrested, friends said at a tribute to the slain rap star.

"When I told my mom he was coming to my reception, she joked and said something like, 'Are you going to have gun detectors?'" said Shock G of Digital Underground, one of Shakur's former groups. "And after it was over, everyone was like, 'He was such a gentleman. He was so nice.'"

The Civic Center was nearly filled Sunday night for "Keep Ya Head Up! The Celebration of Tupac Shakur," three hours of poetry reading, dance, music and speeches.

Shakur died Sept. 13 in Las Vegas, six days after he was shot while riding in a car. No arrests have been made.

Official: U.S. troop headed for Zaire

George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military will take part in an international effort to assist the swarm of refugees in Eastern Zaire, but precise nature of the American mission is still undecided, an administration official said Tuesday.

The official, who asked not to be identified, raised the possibility that ground troops would be sent but said an announcement probably is a few days off.

A 40-member U.S. military team will be flown to Central Africa from Italy today to assess the humanitarian situation, the Pentagon announced. Also, a team from the U.S. Agency for International Development was attempting to cross into Zaire from Rwanda Tuesday.

Officially, the State Department stopped short of saying a decision had been made to send U.S. troops. Instead, spokesperson Glyn Dyer reiterated the U.S. position that there is an emerging international consensus that humanitarian intervention is necessary and a security component will be required because of the fighting.

The administration has been hesitant to become involved because of the extraordinary complexity of the crisis. In addition to the concern over the fate of more than 1 million refugees, military Rwandan Hutus, there are special and military issues that must be taken into account.

High-level meetings have been held here almost daily to determine an appropriate U.S. response.

The administration has been extremely cautious about humanitarian interventions in Africa since 18 Americans soldiers were killed in a fire fight in Somalia three years ago.

Through part-time jobs, extra income, financial aid or a combination of all three, UI students are trying to spend their money wisely.

Students said they find budgeting to be as much of a discipline as going to class.

"In college, a lot of people are financially responsible," said junior Brian Forrest. "But when you graduate, they are not."

Forrest said he works two part-time jobs to cover expenses like rent and food, but most of that money comes from his parents. He did over summer break, but his parents pay for his tuition, and does not receive financial aid. "At the beginning of the year, I set a budget for myself. I check every month to make sure I'm
