Jet collision over India kills 351

Krishnan Guruswamy
Associated Press

CHARKHI DADRI, India — A Saudi jumbo jet climbing from New Delhi's airport collided with a landing Kazak plane Tuesday, creating twin fireballs that turned the sky red as dawn and scattered the bodies of up to 351 people over farmland below.

If the death toll is confirmed, the crash would be the third-deadliest in aviation history.

Wreckage dropping from the sky gouged big craters and left body parts, baggage and clothes strewn across six miles of wheat and mustard fields near the town of Charkhi Dadri, about 60 miles west of New Delhi. The first people to arrive at the scene said the dusk air was filled with the unbearable stench of burning flesh.

"I saw 60 or 70 bodies, but only about 15 were identifiable," said Manjit Singh, a 19-year-old college student who sped to the site on his motorcycle after seeing the collision from his home. The faces of the rest of the victims were horribly disfigured and charred, he said.

Rescue vehicles tried to navigate the area's poor roads, arriving at the crash site after the first curious villagers. Within a few hours, thousands of people gathered in the dark and solemnly watched the search.

"We have collected 200 bodies so far from all over the field," said Mohammed Akhil, the police officer in charge of the operations.

The Saudi Arabian Airlines jet with 312 passengers and crew members had been in the air for only seven minutes when it collided with a Kazakstan Airlines Ilyushin-76 cargo plane, which was on a landing approach, aviation officials said.

Seventeen foreigners were on board the Saudi Arabia-bound jet-

FOREIGN RELATIONS

Official: U.S. troops headed for Zaire

George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military will take part in an international effort to assist the swarms of refugees in Eastern Zaire, but the precise nature of the American role is still undecided, an administration official said Tuesday.

The official, who asked not to be identified, raised the possibility that ground troops would be sent, but said an announcement probably is a few days off.

A 40-member U.S. military team will be flown to Central Africa from Italy today to assess the humanitarian situation, the Pentagon announced. Also, a team from the U.S. Agency for International Development was attempting to cross into Zaire from Rwanda on Tuesday.

Officially, the State Department stopped short of saying a decision had been made to send U.S. troops. Instead, spokesperson Glyn Davies reiterated the U.S. position that there is an emerging international consensus that humanitarian intervention is necessary and a security component will be required because of the fighting.

The administration has been hesitant to become involved because of the extraordinary complexity of the crisis. In addition to the concern over the fate of the more than 1 million refugees, mostly Rwandan Hutus, there are political and military issues that must be taken into account.

High-level meetings have been held here almost daily to determine an appropriate U.S. response.

The administration has been extremely cautious about humanitarian interventions in Africa ever since 18 Americans soldiers were killed in a fire fight in Somalia three years ago.

U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said in Rome that

LEGAL ACTION

Shaw family turns to federal investigators

Mike Waller
The Daily Iowan

The family of Eric Shaw has turned to federal investigators in another attempt to charge the officers involved with the killing of their son on Aug. 30.

John McLario, a Wisconsin attorney representing the Shaw family, said he has contacted U.S. Attorney Don Nickerson about the possibility of another investigation, which could lead to federal charges.

"We're asking (Nickerson) to investigate the case and look into possible criminal charges," he said. "The final decision will be his."

McLario said Nickerson has agreed to look into the case and has assigned a staff attorney to gather information. If the staff attorney comes back with sufficient information, Nickerson may conduct another investigation into the case using Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation (DCI) reports and interrogations of the officers involved.

McLario said he is unsure how long it will take for Nickerson to gather sufficient information to make a decision about an investigation or possible charges, but hopes it happens as soon as possible.

Eric Shaw was shot by Iowa City Police Department officer Jeffrey Gillaspie while talking on the phone in Iowa Vending, 1132 S. Gilbert St., a business owned by his father.

The DCI conducted an extensive review of the incident and Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White concluded no criminal charges should be filed against the officers involved on Oct. 3.

ICPD Lt. Ron Fort and Dan Sellers conducted an internal review to decide if the officers involved followed procedure and came to the conclusion that Gillaspie should not return to the force. Gillaspie resigned on Oct. 1.

The Shaws expressed concern and outrage after White announced his decision, claiming White was biased in favor of the ICPD because of his close day-to-day ties with the department.

McLario said the family believes both Gillaspie and ICPD detective Troy Kelsay are to blame in the incident.

"As I recall, Kelsay was more or less the supervising officer on the scene," McLario said. "Kelsay gave the nod to Gillaspie to enter the building and Gillaspie accepted that nod."

Kelsay was in plain clothes, providing extra patrol when he came across an open door at Iowa Vending.

Kelsay called for backup and flagged down Gillaspie and Officer Darren Zacharias, who was in training under Gillaspie. After investigating the scene, Gillaspie and Kelsay walked up to the door. Gillaspie opened the door and flinched, firing the fatal shot into Shaw's chest.

McLario said the Shaw family is trying to find justice after the loss of their son by seeking federal charges.

"I think the parents feel, regardless of what happens, that everything that can be done needs to be done, whether or not it's effective or will accomplish anything," McLario said. "The family is still feeling grief and pain over the loss of Eric."

The family has also filed a $3.6 million wrongful death claim against the City of Iowa City. Iowa City City Attorney Linda Wito said the city would like to settle out of court as quickly as possible. McLario said the Shaw family prefers to settle out of court as well.

"Of course we'd like to settle out of court," McLario said. "But if we can't, it's a fair assumption that the family might follow up in court."

McLario said the meetings with the city to discuss possible settlements have been cordial, although an agreement has not been made.

Nickerson was unavailable for comment.

Students struggle to control spending

Eric Neubauer
The Daily Iowan

Through part-time jobs, parents, financial aid or a combination of all three, UI students are trying to spend their money wisely.

Students said they find budgeting to be as much of a discipline as going to class.

"In college, a lot of people learn to be financially responsible," UI Junior Brian Forrest said. "By the time they graduate, they usually are."

Forrest said he works three part-time jobs to cover expenses like rent and food, but most of that money comes from the work he did over summer break. His parents pay for his tuition, and he does not receive financial aid.

"At the beginning of the year I set a budget for myself. I check it every month to make sure I'm not overspending," he said. "If I do overspend, then I cut it out of my entertainment or food budget."

Not all UI students are as strict in their spending strategies, said Cathy Wilcox, associate director of the UI Office of Student Financial Aid.

Wilcox said many students do not realize the money they receive at the beginning of the semester must last the entire term.

"Kids will dip into (their financial-aid checks) and think that it will be OK," she said. "And then two months later, they're in trouble. Kids are trying to figure out how they are going to pay December's rent."

UI Teaching Assistant Ned Bertz said he doesn't have a problem anticipating his expenses.

"I've been in college for seven years, so I know what bills to expect," Bertz said.

He said he receives no aid from his parents, and pays for his tuition with loans and his paychecks. Bertz said he spends $20 a week on food and can afford to make a few long-distance phone calls per month.

"I can pretty much afford everything because of loans, but I hardly live extravagantly," Bertz said. "I feel like I'm living a seven- or eight-year experiment of how cheaply I can eat and live. I can't remember the last time I bought clothes."

UI sophomore Becky Wolf said she does not receive financial aid, but her parents help with the bills and tuition.

"My parents pay for everything," Wolf said. "They give me money when I go home and when bills come they will transfer money into my checking account."

Charges of gang activity at club denied

Jennifer Cassell
The Daily Iowan

Rumors of gang activity at the BASSment have some Iowa City parents concerned, but the business' owners and the police department deny the accusations.

The three owners of the BASSment, 13 S. Linn St., said their establishment, an alcohol-free dance club, has been accused of being a gang-recruitment area by police and elected officials, but officials deny the allegations.

Iowa City Rep. Mary Mascher, who is also a teacher at Hoover Elementary School, 2200 E. Court St., said parents and teachers told her police officials mentioned possible gang activity and/or drug dealing in the club at a parent meeting held at City High School, 1900 Morningside Drive.

However, Iowa City Police

Department Sgt. Vicki Lalla said the ICPD never mentioned the BASSment in connection with gang activity.

Edward Mead, co-owner of the BASSment, said people are making accusations against the club because the owners are African-American males from the inner city and because the club plays hip-hop music.

"(The accusations) just come along with this being a black-owned club," Mead said. "But the BASSment is the only place kids can come and get an outlet (away) from gang activity."

Mead said students who visit the club have told him their parents don't want them to come because of

Bruce Springsteen's first kiss inspires song

HOWELL TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — "Maria Espinosa, where are you tonight?"

That's what Bruce Springsteen called out as he sang about his first kiss during a recent benefit concert in Freehold, his hometown.

The 15-year-old he kissed more than 30 years ago is now Maria Espinosa Ayala, a 48-year-old mother and grandmother.

Springsteen

"I can't believe he remembers my name," she told the Asbury Park Press.

Espinosa Ayala said she never told anyone about her secret smooch.

"My parents were so strict. I wasn't allowed to have a boyfriend so I couldn't let anyone know what happened," she said.

When Springsteen became famous, she didn't think anyone would believe her.

Her memories of the tender moment at a dance in downtown Freehold, N.J., are hazy.

"It must have lasted about a minute," she said. "It was good. I dreamed about it afterward."

L.A. prosecutor strains daughter's search for fame

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The daughter of a Los Angeles prosecutor defended her singing contract at Death Row Records, saying it was talent, not her father's pull, that landed her the deal.

Gina Longo, 18, said she is unfairly being linked to a controversy between Death Row owner Marion "Suge" Knight and her father, Deputy District Attorney Lawrence Longo, who handled an assault case involving Knight.

"I'm no Milli Vanilli," said Longo, referring to the pop duo that lost a Grammy Award after it was discovered they lip-synched their 1990 debut album. "This was no sweetheart deal."

Knight remains in jail pending a hearing on possible probation violations. Her father was pulled from the case.

Longo, the first white performer at the rap label, signed the multialbum deal in January when her father was supervising Knight's probation. She has yet to release an album or perform in concert.

Profits from HBO commercials fund chimpanzee research

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — Jane Goodall was initially "horrified" at the idea of using her beloved chimpanzees in HBO commercials.

Now she hopes the commercials will help the species.

"I realized this would be a way to make a statement and that this is how animal advertising should go in the future," the primate researcher said in a speech Monday at Colorado State University. "It's working to everyone's good."

The commercials show the chimpanzees watching televised movies and repeating well-known lines from some of them.

Money raised through HBO is providing a year's worth of funding for chimpanzee research and sanctuary work at the Jane Goodall Institute, based in Ridgefield, Conn.

Ohio digs out of early snowfall

M.R. Kropko
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Is it ever going to end was what people who had barely finished raking the autumn leaves wanted to know Tuesday as they shoveled their way out of one of the city's biggest November snowfalls on record.

"When I was shoveling last night, it was up to my knees," grumbled Judy Toth of suburban Munson Township, which had 4 feet of snow by Tuesday afternoon. "And we got at least another foot and a half overnight."

Light snow was still scattering over northeastern Ohio and wasn't expected to taper off until today.

The onslaught began Saturday on the downwind sides of all of the Great Lakes, with the heaviest accumulations along the shore of Lake Erie in Ohio.

Totals by Tuesday afternoon ranged from about a foot in Cleveland's western suburbs to the 4 feet in Munson Township, about 20 miles to the east.

The official total so far this month at the city's Hopkins International Airport — in the less snowy western suburbs — was only

"It's fun, but it's cold, too."

10-year-old Marlaina Clifton

19.1 inches, but even that made this the third snowiest November on record. The snowiest November was in 1950, when 22.3 inches of snow was recorded.

Don Mitchell said he and his wife Dottie had shoveled the driveway of their Lyndhurst home eight times since Saturday, trying hard not to strain themselves.

They were back at it, all bundled up, on Tuesday. "I let my wife shovel off what's on top, and I work on the ice stuff underneath," Mitchell said. "I have a snow blower, but the snow is so heavy it just clogs it up."

Kristin Whiting said she and her husband had been talking just last week about how they would handle this winter's snow at their new home in Cleveland Heights.

"Now here it is," Whiting said while buying one of the last remaining snowblowers at a nearby hardware store. Most schools were closed for a second day, letting 10-year-old Marlaina Clifton play with her sled on Cain Park hill in Cleveland Heights.

"It's fun, but it's cold, too," she said with a rosy-cheeked grin.

Some businesses and county offices also were closed. More than 20,000 homes were still without electricity, down from 180,000 on Sunday.

Ten traffic deaths were blamed on the snow and ice: eight in Wisconsin and one each in Ohio and Michigan.

Air traffic was slowly resuming at Hopkins, which shut down Monday night after a second airliner in two days slid off a runway. Nobody was injured in either slide.

Among those stranded at the airport were 12 members of the National Theatre of the Deaf, a performing group for deaf audiences. They were trying to get from Denver to Chester, Conn., when their plane was grounded Monday night, said performer Brian Jennings, 33.

"We've been on the road for six weeks," he said. "We were really looking forward to sleeping in our own beds last night."

SECRET CRUSH

Former 'Jenny Jones Show' guest convicted of 2nd-degree murder

Greta Guest
Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — A onetime "Jenny Jones Show" guest was convicted Tuesday of a lesser charge of second-degree murder for fatally shooting a gay admirer who revealed his crush during a taping of the TV talk show.

Jurors opted against the more serious charge of first-degree murder against Jonathan Schmitz, which would have carried an automatic life sentence. Second-degree murder carries a sentence of up to life in prison. Sentencing was set for Dec. 4.

An Oakland County Circuit jury of seven men and five women deliberated all day Friday and about two and a half hours Tuesday before reaching its decision.

Schmitz, 26, was charged with fatally shooting Scott Amedure three days after the two were taped for a "Jenny Jones Show" segment on same-sex crushes in March 1995.

His lawyers said the show misled him to believe he was going to meet the woman of his dreams, and said he was publicly ambushed and humiliated when his secret admirer turned out to be Amedure.

"It's OK," Schmitz said to his mother in the gallery as he was being led from court after the verdict was announced. Connie Schmitz appeared upset and near tears.

"I think (jurors) knew it couldn't be first degree because of his capacity being so obviously diminished," defense attorney James Burdick told WDIV television after the verdict. But Burdick said he would appeal the second-degree murder conviction.

The case focused attention on "ambush" television and titillating daytime talk shows.

But Prosecutor Roman Kalytiak said in closing arguments the defense was trying to blame everyone but Schmitz.

"This isn't the Jenny Jones case," Kalytiak said. "Somehow, Scott Amedure got lost in the shuffle of this particular case."

Prosecutors contended that Schmitz planned and carried out the slaying Amedure, 32, of Orion Township on March 9, 1995, three days after the never-aired show was taped.

Defense attorneys never denied Schmitz shot Amedure. But they contended he had been misled by producers before appearing on the show. They said the humiliation of learning his secret admirer was a man, coupled with his history of depression and other problems, left him mentally incapable of forming the intent to commit first-degree murder.

Schmitz's parents testified that their son behaved oddly as early as 3 years old, when he would bang his head against the wall in anger. They said by the time he was 16, he was battling weeks-long periods of depression.

The month-long trial also included testimony from show host Jenny Jones, show producers, psychologists and a friend who introduced Amedure and Schmitz.

Producers denied misleading Schmitz. Jones testified that she knows very little about how her show operates and does her host duties by following scripts she usually receives the night before a taping.

The crushes segment never aired, but was played in court during the trial.

UI students majoring in communication studies may have to stand in long lines during pre-registration, but at least they assured a spot in popular classes.

Pre-registration for major communication studies, which begins 19., has been so successful the UI administration is engaging other departments to similar policies.

Ann Rhodes, vice president of University Relations, said pre-registration system should be implemented in other majors. "This pre-registration system is something we should look at other high-demand departments," she said.

Two years ago, the competition between majors and nonmajors for classes within the UI Department of Communication Studies prompted the department to implement pre-registration. Majors were mailed "coupons" that entitled them to pre-register for two communication studies classes per semester.

"I think there is an emphasis on the importance of communication skills in the present day, and people want to improve themselves with them," Steve Duck, chairperson of the Department of Communication Studies, said. "Also, communications courses have a central role in the liberal arts tradition (because) we have many classes."

There are 606 communication studies majors who make up about 4 percent of all liberal arts students at the UI.

It is the fourth most declared major at the UI, topped by psychology, engineering and education.

UI sells patents to Netherlands company

Mike Waller
The Daily Iowan

The UI and the Iowa Biotechnology Corporation sold patent rights for DNA and RNA purification detergents to a company in the Netherlands Friday.

UI Professor of Internal Medicine Donald Macfarlane said the UI retains a "free lease" on the technology platform that was transferred to QIAGEN N.V., a company in the Netherlands.

He said the transaction was made chiefly because the company can do a better job of selling and using the technology commercially.

Bruce Wheaton, executive director of the UI Research Foundation, said the arrangement will allow the technology created and developed at the UI to be available for worldwide use.

"We are proud that this technology will be transferred to a firm with the market strength of QIAGEN," Wheaton said. "Our goal is to maximize the availability of technology developed at the UI. QIAGEN's distinctive research capacity and its standing in the marketplace make it an ideal partner to push the cationic detergent technology to its full potential."

Wheaton said the sale was unusual because the UI's research was tied in to another company before the sale.

"UI research had shared research technology with a local company (Iowa Biotechnology Corporation)," he said. "They own some (of the patents) and we own some."

Wheaton said when the Iowa Biotechnology Corporation sold their patent and license rights to QIAGEN N.V., the UI followed suit. Financial terms were not disclosed.

"It's like A plus B equals C," he said. "The whole ball of wax was transferred to QIAGEN."

He said the UI makes several dozen patent agreements with companies every year, and the UI will continue to research the area of RNA and DNA preservation.

Macfarlane, a key inventor of the technology platform that was sold, has accepted a position on QIAGEN N.V.'s board of scientific consultants.

"I will stay at the UI," he said. "It's a normal consulting position with their company to advise them when they have questions. Lots of professors hold similar positions."

He said the UI turned over license rights for patents, the assignment of Macfarlane's personal patent and future patents that are currently pending.

"This transaction brings an extremely strong technology portfolio and a whole new platform to QIAGEN," Dr. Metin Colpan, C.E.O. of QIAGEN N.V., said. "We are extremely excited about the strategic advantage this technology creates for QIAGEN's product line for nucleic acid purification in clinical diagnostic settings."

QIAGEN N.V.'s projects are sold in more than 30 countries around the world to academic research markets and also to the leading pharmaceutical and biotechnology

RNA/DNA purification

QIAGEN N.V. purchased patent rights to DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) and RNA (ribonucleic acid) purification technology developed at the UI.

A look at the technology:

- The technology platform that was transferred involves the use of cationic detergents that can be used to stabilize and purify RNA and DNA.
- RNA is highly unstable, and the detergents allow researchers to stabilize the acid's many forms in order to study it and separate its components.
- RNA and DNA purification is a crucial procedure in molecular biology research.

- The research relies on having intact RNA, which degrades rapidly. The cationic detergents weaken the binding agents, which protects, purifies and stabilizes the acid. The cationic detergent technology is ideal for a clinical environment because it is non-hazardous.

'Coupons' ease registration process

Will Valet

UI students majoring in communication studies may have to stand in long lines during preregistration, but at least they're assured a spot in popular classes.

Preregistration for majors in the UI Department of Communication Studies, which begins Nov. 19, has been so successful that the UI administration is encouraging other departments to begin similar policies.

Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations, said the preregistration system should be implemented in other majors.

"This preregistration system is something we should look at in other high-demand departments," she said.

Two years ago, the competition between majors and nonmajors for classes within the UI Department of Communication Studies prompted the department to implement preregistration. Majors were mailed "coupons" that entitled them to preregister for two communication studies classes per semester.

"We had a lot of students who were concerned that they weren't getting the upper-level classes they needed to graduate. We designed the coupon program to help majors get those courses."

Carol Schrage, communication studies administrative assistant

Communication studies majors require 30 hours of course credit to graduate. Carol Schrage, communication studies administrative assistant, said past students had trouble making the requirement in four years.

"We had a lot of students who were concerned that they weren't getting the upper-level classes they needed to graduate," she said. "We designed the coupon program to help majors get those courses."

Juliet Kaufmann, director of the UI Undergraduate Academic Advising Center, said many UI departments have different student preregistration methods, depending on each department's needs.

However, communication studies is the only department with a coupon system.

"Departments develop a preregistration system when they want to preserve seats for majors or make sure the students have met the prerequisites for a class," Kaufmann said. "A lot of them use special permission codes, which have existed at the UI for a long time."

Schrage said the coupon program has been successful, although there have been student complaints over waits in line to turn coupons in.

Kim Keller, UI junior and communication studies major, said she plans on leaving work three hours early to get a good position in line.

"Last year I got the classes I wanted, but it took three hours to go through the line," Keller said.

"I had someone save a spot in line for me so I could go to class and turn in a paper."

Another paper in the past has been "coupon-swapping," where students give their coupons to other students. Schrage said coupons have been color-coded to prevent this.

Rita Belda, UI junior and communication studies major, said the coupon system is successful because it is a source of comfort for registering students.

"Even if you don't get the classes you want, you at least know when you register that you have two classes on your schedule," Belda said.

Production studies courses such as Film Production, Television Production and Radio Production are not included in the coupon program. Students are put on wait lists and do not find out if they may enter the class until the first day of class.

Schrage said this is because production courses have a different entrance criteria than other communication courses.

"When we look at which students get into those classes, we look at the number of semester hours they've taken and their grades in prerequisite courses," Schrage said.

William Thoma, UI junior and communication studies major, said the competition to get into production classes can help prepare students for what they will face after graduation.

"With Film Production, it's always a competitive situation," Thoma said. "I don't like the competition, but I appreciate the fact that it prepares you for the real world. But sometimes it creates more stress than anyone needs."

Forum to address disabled facilities at UI

Brendan Brown
The Daily Iowan

As part of a continuing effort to improve facilities and services for students with disabilities, the UI will hold a forum tonight.

The annual forum marks the sixth anniversary of the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

"The ADA was designed to improve access and opportunities for people with disabilities in all aspects of society," said Susan Mask, assistant to the president and director of the UI Office of Affirmative Action.

She said the annual forums are held to provide the community with an opportunity to share their thoughts on the UI's progress.

"We started the open forums five years ago because we decided individuals with disabilities needed a voice to talk directly with the administrators who apply the ADA," Mask said. "It's created a good dialogue that ensures we respond to the letter and the spirit of the act."

Carol Gruber, co-chairperson of the Council on Disability Awareness, said the UI has succeeded in creating lines of communication between students with disabilities and administrators.

UI graduate student Kerry Norrgard-Gerhard, who is legally blind, said although some significant physical improvements have been made — such as the installation of wheelchair ramps and the modification of elevators — the process is far from complete. She said centralizing the UI's efforts would assist in providing services.

"I find it problematic that there is no central place to find out how to accommodate people with disabilities and no central funding to pay for any accommodations," Norrgard-Gerhard said. "I'm meeting with the Interfraternity Council on how to be more inviting to disabled students, but there's nowhere really to direct these organizations."

Gruber said encouraging understanding can help improve relations. In an attempt to better illustrate situations faced by some disabled students, the Council on Disability Awareness organized UI President Mary Sue Coleman's wheelchair tour of the campus last week.

Gruber said Coleman's acceptance of the offer is indicative of her willingness to improve services for students with disabilities.

The meeting, which will be held from 4-6 p.m. in the Lucas Dodge Room of the Union, is co-sponsored by the Office of Affirmative Action and the Council on Disability Awareness.

It's about time to cut classes

I was standing in City News, flipping through Batman comic books, when I was struck by a revelation, a vision, a prophecy — not to mention a strong desire for a Pop Tart.

So, about five minutes and two Pop Tarts later, I sorted out my divinely inspired thought. See, this university has a problem. It's a very simple problem, but it goes to the root of UI policy. This problem is so deeply embedded in university culture and management that it permeates every level of our education.

It's not much of a stretch to say the UI is a massive, sprawling bureaucracy. The levels of offices and departments, levels and sublevels, management and faculty are staggering to comprehend. Anyone who has ever tried to change a class knows this.

Maybe we are a little too big for our britches, but that isn't my point here. The reason for relating the immensity of this university to you is simply to demonstrate something.

See, the new Schedule of Classes has just arrived, and there are an enormous amount of classes in there. This is a good thing, right? Sure, on the superficial level. It gives UI recruiters a hook to grab prospective students with. But look a little deeper. What do you see?

Overlap. Tons and tons of overlap.

The Journalism department has a class called "Social and Scientific Foundations of Communications." Much of the same material is covered by one of a number of classes in the communications studies department. This is all fine, since many journalism students will never set foot in the communication studies building (and vice versa).

But what is more sinister is the overlap even within departments. I've taken a number of film classes, and I would bet half of the material covered in one has been covered already in a number of the other classes.

This could be expected, I suppose, since these classes do not have a specific path to follow. Some students might take one and never take any of the others.

Still, I have seen the trend even in classes where I was required to take certain prerequisites. I took my foreign language requirements here, and each semester I had a different instructor. Either the teachers were afraid to leave some students behind or they were simply required to make sure all the students were at the same level. But any way you slice it, we spent half the semester playing catch-up. And that's wasted time.

Sure, spending less time learning new information made my life easier, but in the end, am I here to have it easy or am I here to learn? After all, students at other colleges where they have this sort of fat cut out are going to have a head start on UI students.

"So, Mr. Smarty-Pants," you say, "what can be done about this?" Well, the problem as I see it is lack of communication. Not just inside a department but also between them. If one class is redundant, combine them or eliminate one. The UI needs stronger prerequisite requirements, and they need to make certain the teachers in one class are talking with the teachers of the ones that come before it.

This won't be easy, especially at this university, where you need a form signed in triplicate just to get a doughnut. And there is also so much competition between departments for funding and attention.

They argue that this gives the student body better departments, since each one must compete for its meal ticket. But does anyone seriously believe that? What really happens is students get the shaft when these departments focus entirely on visible things that will get them attention or research funding. The minor things — like actually educating the students — end up getting neglected.

The UI needs to alter its focus and its funding. Not an easy task, but a necessary one. The end result will be the UI being able to cut a lot of the "fat." It will save money, time and a lot of pulled hair. And, perhaps most importantly, students will get better educations.

It is easy to forget the fact that this university was built by its students, and I think it's time the UI started reflecting that.

Stop whining and do something

A man on the bus said, "I'm proud to be a cynic." He shouldn't be. Cynicism and pessimism are at the heart of most of today's problems. A balanced budget is impossible. All politicians are crooks. There is nothing we can do about starving children in Central Africa. The ozone will disappear, and we will all be burned to a crisp.

Complaining seems to have become the national sport.

Those "other people" are always causing the troubles. One person can't save the world.

UI freshman Elaina Livings disagreed. She said, "Pessimists are lazy. They aren't looking for ways to help. One person can make a difference." Livings, a spokesperson for the Student Hunger Drive, helped raise more than 200,000 pounds of canned foods for needy recipients through the Riverbend Foodbank in the Quad Cities.

To act is to renew hope and to overcome the plague of negativity. People doing things to embrace what is good about society and to change what is not can alleviate the symptoms of cynicism and pessimism. They can lead the way to an attitude revolution.

To act is to renew hope and to overcome the plague of negativity. People doing things to embrace what is good about society and to change what is not can alleviate the symptoms of cynicism and pessimism. They can lead the way to an attitude revolution.

David Deppner, a prosperous poultry farmer from Ohio, is another good example. Deppner grew tired of chickens and joined the Peace Corps. He learned about the Ipil-Ipil Tree, which rejuvenates damaged land, grows quickly and is easy to care for. Instead of complaining about the breakdown of the environment, he started planting trees. Deppner created "Trees for the Future" in 1989 and has since helped to plant more than 40 million trees in 89 countries.

Deppner and Livings affirm the importance of hope and exemplify the significance of action. Both took a crucial step toward saving the world.

Maybe one person can't directly affect the entire planet, but each of us can improve our own little worlds in our own little way.

The neat thing about action is it tends to have a ripple effect. Deppner planted a few trees in a few fields in a few places. When others saw the success and impact of his trees, they planted their own or gave him money to plant more. Deppner started a cycle of growth around the world, and it all started with just one tree.

You don't have to create international organizations or coordinate hundreds of students to save your world. Sometimes the littlest steps make the biggest differences. By feeding the needy, reading to children, listening to a friend who needs to "vent" or just smiling to those you pass on the street, you can add a little light to your corner of the world. With action, hope and some faith, we can change the dark world of pessimism to a brighter world of optimism.

Athletes gambling? You're kidding?!

The NCAA puts numerous restrictions on football players and other student athletes, on everything from what they can eat to how much they should weigh.

The NCAA also has restrictions on gambling by student athletes. They prohibit any wagering on athletic events by student athletes.

But like it or not, gambling is as much a part of football as jock straps.

These players see gambling all around them. There are billboards advertising riverboat casinos, $20 million lottery jackpots that suggest gambling is OK and the sports section in the newspaper tells them which teams are favored to win that week.

There is contradiction in a society that says gambling is OK, unless you are an athlete.

This issue of athletes gambling erupted with the suspension of 13 Boston College players who were suspended for betting on college and professional games last week. Northwestern University also was plagued by a gambling scandal in 1994, the year before their Cinderella season and trip to the Rose

Like it or not, gambling is as much a part of football as jock straps.

Bowl. The second-leading rusher in the school's history, Dennis Lundy, admitted to gambling on sporting events.

Let's face it: Boston College and Northwestern aren't the only colleges where athletes gamble. Henry Lesieur, an Illinois State University criminal justice professor who studies gambling, responded to the Boston College scandal by saying, "There goes another one."

Realistically, gambling on sporting events by athletes happens on campuses all over the country. In an HBO documentary, students laughed when they were asked if student athletes gambled. The students who were asked found it funny that someone would even need to ask that question.

Many fraternities have college and football pools. Residence-hall floors have pool sheets floating through the hallways. So, it shouldn't be such a shock to people that athletes would be gambling.

They are only human, and they would know more about the sports being bet on than the average Joe.

Two of the suspended Boston College athletes placed bets against their own team.

Players throwing games in order to win bets should be punished and suspended for betting on their own team. The case at Boston College showed a lack of pride and respect for their team by the two players.

But no one should be surprised that they do it. Gambling and betting on college and professional sports has become a billion-dollar industry in the United States. The Council on Compulsive Gambling of New Jersey estimates Americans wage more than $80 billion every year on sports gambling. On many college campuses the amounts of bets placed can range anywhere from $25 to $1,000.

With gambling as such a big part of sports and society today, it shouldn't come as such a huge shock to the NCAA or anyone else that athletes are a part of it.

Looking towards the millennium presidency

After a relatively boring conclusion to a dull presidential campaign, politics are going to get interesting again. President Clinton will deservedly get his tail dragged through the mud, and we will finally see how crooked he really is, and how many scandals were merely a smokescreen.

Many Democrats will cringe throughout this process, but they should take heart. The Republicans have far more serious problems that will be impossible to solve amicably.

The highest drama will be the coming struggle to pick a nominee for president in the year 2000. Akin to hanging Christmas wreaths in January, many contenders in both parties are laying the groundwork already. Steve Forbes and Pat Buchanan have already talked about another run.

While the Democrats will have a fairly typical squabble over the nomination, with Vice President Al Gore most likely to carry it, the Republicans will be embroiled deeply in a divisive uncivil war. The rumblings have been ongoing, and show no sign of abating as the millennium approaches.

Come back, if you will, to this year's primary elections, where the fault lines were most visible. Look at the two contenders, other than Bob Dole, who won state primaries: Forbes and Buchanan.

Forbes represented the left wing of the Republican Party. He supported the interests of Wall Street and was liberal on most social issues.

On the right was Buchanan, who opposed Forbes point for point. He railed against abortion and Wall Street. He went after gays and "rich country club Republicans."

The two sides agreed on absolutely nothing. Who then, is a conservative? How can Forbes and Buchanan both call themselves conservative, when they don't agree on anything? Their working definition of a conservative seems to be, simply, "Not a Democrat." It goes quite a long way to show there is no conservative majority in the United States.

The Democratic Party has more in common with each wing of the Republican Party than the two of them have in common with each other. The Democrats agree with Forbes on social issues and agree with Buchanan on most, but not all, of his economic issues.

This is a more serious problem for the Republicans than many of them are willing to admit openly. The Democrats form a sort of "center" between the two factions.

But this year Dole had to represent the center, and he obviously couldn't do it as a Democrat; so he sided with Forbes on economics and with Buchanan on social issues. On the surface this may seem reasonable, but at a deeper level, it is quite a problem.

For those who backed Forbes, Clinton is a good alternative on social policy. Those who backed Buchanan could side with Clinton and the labor unions. For those on both the left and the right of the Republican Party, Clinton represented their interests 50 percent of the time and Dole represented their interests 50 percent of the time. Political analysts never seemed to have caught on to this, but it's no big wonder why Dole had such a hard time energizing his base.

How many people, after all, support Wall Street and oppose abortion at the same time? Quite few. The differences in the Democratic Party, for the most part, are merely differing degrees of the same overarching philosophy. The Republican Party contains two utterly contradictory philosophies that are becoming increasingly harder to tape together.

The Republicans have another problem. A good presidential contender in 2000 will have to appeal to the broad center and those voters who register as independents. Such a candidate is the least likely to survive the nomination process with the growing influence of the religious right.

Again, hearken back to this year's primary. When Dole considered choosing a pro-choice candidate for vice president such as Christite Whitman or Colin Powell, religious right organizations threatened to bolt the GOP and form a third party. Without the support of the right, the Republicans would be lost in the political wilderness.

The Republicans still control Congress, and they may continue to hold on to it for several elections. But political scientist Theodore J. Lowi calls the current Republican hegemony, "the brilliant burnout before the end of an era." Michael Lind, a former conservative, wrote the effects of the current Republican coalition will continue to be felt, but the party is like "fragments of a comet that continue in their destructive course even after the comet has disintegrated."

They have set their own trap, and it will soon snap shut. By comparison, President Clinton's problems seem like an afternoon nap.

UI must get past Nov

To the Editor:
People must stop dwelling on what happened on Nov. 1 (in response to Lea Haravon's column, "UI must not forget Nov. 1"). Sure, what happened should not be forgotten, but people forget what kind of society we live in. We live in a society in which certain individuals with good intentions use the media or other resources to intensify feelings such as the Gang Lu shootings.

But in their attempt to elevate awareness about the shootings, what they are doing is creating bitter hostility and active hatred toward Gang Lu represented: a Chinese student. I've heard bits of conversation connecting the shootings and the fact that Lu was Chinese. If that's creating animosity, I don't know what is.

I agree with Haravon on certain ideas such as gun control, violence and rape.

What I don't agree with is making an anniversary out of this tragic incident.

It's not for the media or individuals to risk making the victim's spouses children relive the shock and horror that day! Let them dictate how they want it done.

Educate the students and the public on the issues Haravon has stated are going on there, but don't put one day of tragedy ahead of other tragedies that go unnoticed in the area, unless you plan on having an anniversary all the other tragedies.

The UI must forget Nov. 1, but not sway away from educating the students on related topics from the Nov. 1 incident and others.

Conservatism keeps America in its place

To the Editor:
I would have to concur with David Hoggberg's assessment that we are in a conservative mode of thinking with regards to the economy (DI, Nov. 8 "America is still a place for conservatives"). The American public is so conservative because this means less tax. This also means a reduction of governmental controls on the market.

Viewpoints

Even in the shadow of rape, life is not to be feared

I grew up in Gainesville, Fla., the college town that became notorious in the early '90s when it was beset by a serial killer who raped, murdered and posthumously mutilated five women students and killed one male bystander. That same year a carpet cleaner, after cleaning a student's carpet, raped and murdered a student and stabbed her roommate nearly to death. Then, for several months, a rapist of the door-to-door variety visited women at home at around 3 a.m. and raped them while they slept.

When I was in college, reports of women raped at fraternity parties were routine. Women in residence halls were particular-really think women were raped in Iowa City because they did not know rape existed?

GUEST OPINION
Susan Gildersleeve

My town responded similarly to the problem. Just as in Iowa City, the university posted "walk with a friend" signs and held cautionary lectures in residence halls. Women were chastened for going outside their houses, and if we survived rapes in our houses, we were scolded for not having sufficiently "rape-proofed" our houses.

The warnings did not, at first, seem unwarranted: It is reasonable to expect people who take risks to also take precau-behave like free people must be either crazy or unimpaired.

No other group of potential victims of violence is lectured this way. Only women are told to adhere to a de facto curfew to avoid illegal assault. When minorities are lynched or singled out for violence, we do not tell them to stay off of the streets. We do not see cautionary letters to newspaper editors telling minority students to hide in their rooms because Nazi skinheads want to kill them. If minority students fear violence, we do not call the fear "heightened awareness."

Certainly, university officials don't encourage minority students to be afraid. We are wary of infringing on the civil rights of minority students. They have the right to walk on campus unmolested. They should not live in fear. Women, though, will be afraid if they know what's good for them.

For a while, I observed the curfew. It made my life a misery. It meant that when I couldn't get a bodyguard, I had to stay home. I missed night classes, couldn't go to the library at night, couldn't take jobs with night hours. Bars, parties and movies at night were often off-limits. During my most diligent observance of the curfew, I couldn't sleep in a house by myself.

It began to affect my behavior during the day. I heard that rapists avoid women who look self-confident. But I was also warned that rapists are enraged by women who look "cocky." I worried about how to always attending the juice 'n' cookies, how-not-to-get-raped-to-death lectures at the residence halls.

The curfew was ruining me. I wasn't a free person. I remembered I was supposed to have been guaranteed the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The curfew took away those rights from me. So, I began to disobey it. In order to live, I have had to make a choice the cautionary lecturing majority might consider strange. I have decided I prefer life to safety.

It is not, as many people seem to think, that I and women like me are ignorant of the existence of rape. Not true. In fact, I come from Gainesville, the rape capital of the world, a place where phrases like "wooded area" and "retention pond" are macabre jokes (they are newspaper clichés for places where women are raped and where women's corpses tend to turn up). I know the only thing protecting me from rape and murder is coincidence. If I set off walking toward home at night, I have no trust that I will live to get there, or that I will survive the night even if I do make it home.

And I think most women seen walking after dark are like me. I believe most of us know we are never safe. Each woman's life is a deadly interview, but some of us have turned our backs on the interviewer. Living in fear beats living in a cage.

I, myself, was molested on a street in my neighborhood in the middle of the day, and men broke into my house three times, twice while I was at home.

I feel like a veteran in an ongoing war, and reading some of the reactions to rapes in Iowa City is like listening to people who have never been to the front. I can imagine what rape victims feel when they read warnings from people who boggle at the sight of women outside at night. Will this kind of cautioning prevent rape? Do we tions. People who bungee jump should make sure their bungee cords are fastened at both ends. People who scuba dive should check that their tanks have air in them.

Those well-meaning posters say women should carry protective gear, walk with bodyguards and bar their windows. A woman is raped because she has failed to protect herself, like a joy-riding kid who loses control of his three-wheeler and splits open his helmetless head on a tree.

The flaw no one seems to see in this line of logic is scuba diving is a risky activity for any person, but sleeping in one's own bed is only risky for females. Why are we so comfortable with the idea that a woman outside an underground bunker is a daredevil? The cautionary lecturers say that when women do what we must to live on the Earth (sleep, walk around), we take unnecessary risks. They say women who

Letters to the Editor

Ul must get past Nov. 1

To the Editor:

People must stop dwelling on what happened on Nov. 1 (in response to Lea Haravon's column, "Ul must not forget Nov. 1"). Sure, what happened should not be forgotten, but people forget what kind of society we live in. We live in a society in which certain individuals with good intentions use the media or other resources to intensify feelings such as the Gang Lu shootings.

But in their attempt to elevate an awareness about the shootings, what they are doing is creating bitter hostility and active hatred toward what Gang Lu represented: a Chinese student. I've heard bits of conversations connecting the shootings and the fact that Lu was Chinese. If that's not creating animosity, I don't know what is.

I agree with Haravon on certain ideas such as gun control, violence and rape.

What I don't agree with is making an anniversary out of this tragic incident.

It's not for the media or individuals to risk making the victim's spouses and children relive the shock and horror of that day! Let them dictate how they want it done.

Educate the students and the public on the issues Haravon has stated and go from there, but don't put one day of tragedy ahead of other tragedies that go unnoticed in the area, unless you plan on having an anniversary for all the other tragedies.

The Ul must forget Nov. 1, but not sway away from educating the students on related topics from the Nov. 1 incident and others.

Conservatism keeps America in its place

To the Editor:

I would have to concur with David Hogberg's assessment that we are in a conservative mode of thinking with regards to the economy (DI, Nov. 8, "America is still a place for conservatives"). The American public is so conservative because this means less taxes. This also means a reduction of governmental controls on the market.

What does this really mean? It allows for corporations to profit more without searching for loopholes to do so. And it frees up more of the public's money to be used to buy more from the market. In theory, the added profits corporations make is reinvested back into the economy and expansion occurs.

But this has not and will not be the case. The added profits and reduced controls will only be incentives for the corporations to expand overseas in search of cheaper labor and less environmental controls and even more profit. With lowered taxes on this profit, the American public will see less and less benefits put into public goods like roads and national parks—government programs that are already feeling the pressure of conservative ideals.

Why should the rich be forced to give up more of their profits? Because they could not make them without the rest of us buying and producing their products for prices and wages that attempt to maximize profit. In other words, we could be paid more, or the products could be priced less, but that would reduce profit, the upper class' profit.

Conservatism does what its name implies, it conserves that status quo, it keeps the rich, rich and the poor, poor. The conservative, material American dream. It's the search for this dream that creates the rich's reality.

Kauffman gets the facts wrong

To the Editor:

Occasionally, the DI publishes a letter that manages to get just about everything wrong; a Nov. 8 letter by Kenneth Kauffman criticizing Michael Totten's Oct. 30 column on creationism is of this ilk.

Evolution is "NOT widely recognized as a fact," Kauffman claims, because "a theory is not a fact." This is confused. Facts are what is the case, whether known by anyone or not. It's a fact that the solar system contains at least nine planets, and it was a fact long before anyone knew it or cared. It may be a fact that it contains 10 planets. A theory may state what is true, whether anyone knows it to be or not;

if so, it gets the facts right. (Of course, a theory isn't itself a fact; it's a linguistic item.) I suppose Kauffman means to speak of known facts.

Why couldn't a theory come to be known to be true, unless we just stipulate that it should then no longer be called a theory?

"Nothing in science is ever proven beyond a doubt," says Kauffman. Indeed. As every philosopher knows, you can't prove beyond a doubt that you have a body or that the world wasn't created five seconds ago. If Kauffman doesn't mean to be raising that kind of skepticism, then it escapes me why a theory couldn't be confirmed beyond a reasonable doubt. As far as I know, no sane informed person doubts that evolution occurred—even many creationists admit it; they just disagree about how it occurred.

"Third, evolution is not reality." What does this mean? Taking a wild stab at it, I would guess that Kauffman means either the theory of evolution is false (Really? How does he know?), or else it's not known to be true. He had an opportunity to tell us what he meant. But he passed it up.

And finally, Kauffman informs us that we ought to be aware of the distinction between science and religion; specifically, that "Science can only deal with the natural world"—hence, not with the supernatural. That God has any dealings with the natural world, is demonstrably false. A germane example is kindly provided by the Rev. Marvin Feigenspan whom you quote elsewhere in the same issue as declaring that "(man) did not come out of the mud." (In fact, clay plays a crucial role in one of the more promising theories about the origin of life.) Feigenspan's religious views are, by his own admission, incompatible with the neo-Darwinian theory of evolution.

Hence, whatever evidence there is for the truth of that theory bears negatively upon Feigenspan's theology. Ergo, empirical science is relevant to religious questions. Of course, one could insulate religion from all empirical investigation by postulating a God who has no interaction with the world whatever. But I doubt such a theology recommends itself to most theists.

I.C. may soon have indoor ice rink

Renee Bovy
The Daily Iowan

Instead of tripping over patches of cracked, melted ice while wrapped in scarves and bulky jackets, Iowa City residents may glide on a smooth surface in an Olympic-size indoor rink next year.

The Old Capitol Skater's Alliance (OCSA), a non-profit organization that has been planning a rink for youth and adult hockey, figure-skating, public skating and learn-to-skate programs, may finally see its dream materialize.

"Our whole idea is to build something functional," OCSA member Jerry Moon said. "Not a barn, not a castle, but something the community can afford. The skating rink will provide a great recreational and social outlet for people in the wintertime. It will give people a place to get some exercise when it is too cold to be outside."

OCSA was formed in 1994 to begin organizing the construction of an indoor ice-skating rink in the Iowa City area. Moon said preliminary plans for the facility include seating for 600, concessions areas, meeting rooms and a pro shop. The ice would be able to be taken out of the facility in the summer, providing space for conventions, car and roller skating.

OCSA has recently hired Mark Davy and Associates, an experienced fund-raising consultant for indoor ice rinks, to research the financial possibilities of a fund-raising campaign. Moon said the fund-raising study will take between eight and 10 weeks.

"We are hoping to know by the end of this calendar year if we will be able to move on to Phase II of this project, or if we will be folding up. I predict we will be moving ahead," Moon said.

OCSA member Keith Molof said the non-profit organization hopes the fund-raising campaign will generate $2.5 million for the rink from local businesses and the general public.

"Our whole idea is to build something functional. Not a barn, not a castle, but something the community can afford. The skating rink will provide a great recreational and social outlet for people in the wintertime. It will give people a place to get some exercise when it is too cold to be outside."

OCSA member Jerry Moon

the mercy of the weather," Moon said. "If all the potential users come to the indoor rink, all the time is already booked."

Ray Beemer, associate director of the UI Division of Recreational Service, said an indoor facility is needed in Iowa City and would be highly used. Beemer said the UI hockey team, the Ice Hawks, currently must travel to Dubuque or Waterloo to practice.

"The Ice Hawks always have to travel and never have any home games," Beemer said. "That can be tough on a team."

Molof said he has seen interest in an indoor facility from many UI students who have facilities in their hometowns, and would like the opportunity to skate in Iowa City.

Moon said OCSA has not chosen a site yet for the rink, but it is looking into possible sites near the Iowa City Municipal Airport or North Liberty. Moon said OCSA is no longer negotiating with the future Coralville mall as a potential site.

"We had been negotiating with the mall, but those negotiations have stopped because of financial and philosophical differences," Moon said.

Man arrested for intending to deliver 31 grams of crack cocaine

Johnson County sheriff's deputies arrested Eddie Lee Jones, 25, early Tuesday morning on Interstate 80 for possession with intent to deliver 31 grams of crack cocaine.

Deputies were investigating reports of an erratic driver and arrested Jones, of Kansas City, Kan.

While conducting the investigation, deputies recovered the cocaine and an Intrated 9 mm (Tec-9) semi-automatic pistol.

Turner was charged with possession of a schedule II controlled substance with intent to deliver, operating while intoxicated and carrying a concealed weapon.

Turner is in custody on a $21,500 bond following his initial appearance in Johnson County courts Tuesday.

The investigation was assisted by the Coralville and Iowa City police departments and the Johnson County Area Narcotics Task Force.

Branstad puts 'total' tax cuts on hold

DES MOINES — Gov. Terry Branstad, busily scaling back expectations, said Tuesday a comprehensive tax-cut package probably is not possible during the next legislative session.

"I don't think we ought to look at it as a one-year deal," Branstad said. Branstad said he will ask for a relatively modest package of tax cuts for the next session, with more sweeping changes put off for a year.

"I'm not sure we can do the total, comprehensive measure this year," Branstad said at his weekly news conference.

Branstad said he will ask legislators to cut the inheritance tax and make more property tax reductions during the 1997 session. "The comprehensive reform and simplification ... may take longer," he said.

The governor's comments came a week after an election in which tax cutting was the central and defining issue, with tax-reduction proposals coming from both Republicans and Democrats.

While Branstad has pushed tax reduction as an issue in past sessions of the Legislature, he was restrained Tuesday in offering a glimpse of what he will ask legislators to approve.

A special task force named by Branstad is reviewing the state's tax structure, and the governor said he will wait for that group to report before seeking big changes.

There are a couple of forces driving Branstad's go-slow approach to cutting taxes. He has made it clear he wants to head off a bidding war where lawmakers seek to outdo each other with tax-cut plans that could drive the state's budget back into the red.

"We never thought there would be another generation of thalidomides," said Canadian researcher Warren, his voice choked with emotion, who was born with no legs and malformed legs.

Oval Office exit interviews begin for several Cabinet members

Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As the White House buzzed with the comings and goings of top aides, a parade of departing Cabinet secretaries trooped to the Oval Office Tuesday for exit interviews with President Clinton.

All across Washington, lawmakers, lobbyists, journalists and bureaucrats asked the same questions: Who's in? Who's out?

The hottest speculation focused on former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, who two senior White House officials called a leading candidate to replace Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

They cautioned, however, that Clinton had not signaled his support for any one prospect. Indeed, the president had not yet ordered the final background review accorded most front-runners, aides said.

Other candidates include: U.N. Ambassador Madeleine Albright; National Security Adviser Anthony Lake; Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.; and Richard Holbrooke, who helped negotiate the Bosnia settlement. At least one top candidate has not been made public, aides said.

Retired Army Gen. Colin Powell, widely speculated as a candidate for secretary of defense or state, had not been approached by the White House — and probably won't be, aides said Tuesday. He is viewed as a potential challenger to Vice President Al Gore in 2000, and Gore plays a key role in the selection process.

Clinton hoped to announce a replacement for Christopher before leaving on an overseas trip Friday.

The secretary of state's job is just one piece in a giant transition puzzle Clinton is putting together. At least half his Cabinet is departing and much of the White House staff is in flux.

Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary, Transportation Secretary Federico Pena and Labor Secretary Robert Reich had scheduled separate late-afternoon meetings with Clinton. The sessions were exit interviews, 15 minutes to say goodbye; a last-minute plea would fall on deaf ears, aides said.

Pena decided last week to leave the Cabinet, though Chief of Staff

Leon Panetta said he asked him to stay. Reich is leaving to spend more time with his family in Boston. O'Leary, under fire for excessive travel expenses, said last week she was departing before she could be fired.

Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros is said by the White House to be on his way out, but has not submitted his resignation. He is expected to meet with Clinton this week to hear from the president himself.

Attorney General Janet Reno was not expected to meet with Clinton before Thanksgiving. Aides took that as another sign that her job was secure for now, despite reservations expressed anonymously by some about her performance.

Seven members of Clinton's 14-member Cabinet were said to be leaving. Education Secretary Richard Riley is a possible eighth, but has not made his intentions known.

Erskine Bowles, the incoming chief of staff, was quietly putting together his new team — starting with the two deputy chiefs of staff.

Harold Ickes, a longtime Clinton friend who ran the re-election campaign from the White House, lost his job in a power struggle with Bowles.

In a belated attempt to salvage his old friend's hurt feelings, Clinton offered Ickes almost any job of his choice.

But the New York lawyer told associates he doesn't have the stomach for a confirmation battle as the Labor or Interior nominee. He had given some thought to running the National Park Service, but a bill signed by Clinton on Tuesday requires Senate confirmation for the post.

As he decides his next move, Ickes will head Clinton's inaugural committee, along with Democratic fund-raiser Terry McAuliffe and Ann Jordan, wife of Washington lobbyist Vernon Jordan, aides said.

The leading candidate to replace Ickes was John Podesta, a former White House aide and troubleshooter who now teaches at Georgetown University.

Former White House aide Billy Webster was another candidate. Aides said Evelyn Lieberman likely will remain the No. 2 deputy.

Thalidomide may be used to fight diseases

Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thalidomide, which became the world's most infamous drug after causing thousands of horrific birth defects more than 30 years ago, may soon be sold in the United States — perhaps as early as next year.

While the drug shows promise in fighting some AIDS-related disorders, leprosy and other devastating diseases, the Food and Drug Administration already is taking steps to protect women who could bear children with no limbs or tiny flipper-like arms and legs after taking just one pill in early pregnancy.

"We never thought there would be another generation of thalidomides," said Canadian Randy Warren, his voice choked with emotion, who was born with no hips and malformed legs.

Thalidomide, once sold in 48 countries as a sleeping pill and morning sickness cure, was banned worldwide in 1962 after some 12,000 babies were born with missing or malformed limbs, serious facial deformities and defective organs.

It was never sold in the United States because FDA scientist Frances Kelsey uncovered signs of toxicity that its manufacturer had denied. Some Americans, however, got it overseas or in research trials.

But last week, Kelsey, now in her 80s and still at the FDA, heard doctors explain thalidomide's unique ability to inhibit a substance that can spur immune-related diseases like lupus, leprosy and certain AIDS ailments.

Thalidomide also stops blood vessel growth — one reason for the birth defects — making it a possible future treatment for cancer and the incurable macular degeneration that blinds the elderly.

On Monday, Celgene Corp. of Warren, N.J., announced it will seek FDA approval by January to sell thalidomide to heal the most painful symptom, inflamed lesions, of the 200 people diagnosed with leprosy here each year.

Early next year, competitor Andrulis Inc. of Beltsville, Md., will seek approval for thalidomide to treat the excruciating mouth, throat and rectal ulcers that afflict AIDS patients. Then, Celgene also will seek permission to sell thalidomide to the 150,000 AIDS patients suffering from wasting, or severe weight loss.

The FDA is expected to decide those requests next year.

"Thalidomide has the capacity to cure, as well as to damage," said

FDA Deputy Commissioner Mary Pendegast, who last week was told by the agency's scientific advisers to consider mandating two forms of contraception, among other measures, for women prescribed thalidomide.

That already is required in many of the dozens of thalidomide clinical trials now under way.

"If thalidomide is allowed on the market, there will be failures" in pregnancy prevention, birth defects expert J. David Erickson of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention warned the FDA meeting. His dire prediction: Wide thalidomide use could expose as many as 500 pregnancies a year.

Still, AIDS patients are clamoring for thalidomide. Take the AIDS-related ulcers, so painful that some patients starve rather than swallow over the raw tissue. Studies indicate thalidomide healed the sores in just 10 days, said James Learned of the PWA Health Group in New York, which last year provided thalidomide underground until the FDA allowed more patients to use it in research programs.

Harnessing a thalidomide danger — inhibiting blood vessel formation — might even help treat brain tumors and macular degeneration that are fed by new blood vessels.

SEX SCANDAL

Army charges Mo. base with misconduct

Karen Testa
Associated Press

FORT LEONARD WOOD, Mo. — In the second Army sex scandal in less than a week, three instructors at one of the nation's biggest basic-training posts faced charges Tuesday of sexual misconduct with young women recruits.

The charges were announced five days after a sex scandal broke at the military's Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland.

The three soldiers at Fort Leonard Wood face charges ranging from consensual intercourse to indecent assault, or touching. Army regulations ban sexual relationships between commanders and subordinates. The recruits were 21 years old on average and were undergoing basic training.

The Army did not say when the charges were filed. One court-martial was to begin Tuesday; the others will be conducted within the month, it said.

A Pentagon spokesperson said there was no connection between the Fort Leonard Wood and Aberdeen cases. The Fort Leonard Wood cases came to light before the Army set up a hot line for reports of sexual misconduct, said Lt. Col. William Harkey.

The Army did not identify the Missouri soldiers except to say all are non-commissioned officers and one or two are drill sergeants. Other allegations of misconduct at Fort Leonard Wood were also under investigation.

At the Army Ordnance Center at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, the Army last week charged four drill instructors and a captain with raping, sexually harassing or otherwise having improper relationships with at least a dozen young women recruits in their first weeks of training at Aberdeen.

The men were suspended along with 15 other instructors.

The Army said trainees at Fort Leonard Wood are told their first day on the base how to report harassment or uncomfortable situations involving other soldiers.

On Tuesday, the Army allowed reporters to speak with a group of Fort Leonard Wood trainees who have been in the military for about six weeks. None of the women said they felt sexual pressure or harassment.

"My drill sergeants are very, very helpful to us," said Pvt. Sheila Stanton, 20, of Frostproof, Fla. "They train us hard, they treat us as equals to the males. They've never done anything to make us feel uncomfortable."

Pvt. Eric Beckham said the accusations had tarnished others.

"Our drill sergeant has a black mark on him because of what some people did or they did not do," said Beckham, 21, of Abilene, Texas. "It's not right."

About 25,000 soldiers pass through the Missouri base each year, making it the second-largest of four posts where the Army conducts its basic training. Only Fort Jackson, S.C., is larger.

The post's main mission has been to train officers, non-commissioned officers and enlisted soldiers in engineering skills. The Army is adding a military police school and a chemical warfare training school, which will add 5,500 people to the base by 1999.

Women make up 25-30 percent of each class of trainees.

When the Aberdeen scandal broke last week, the Army asked that anyone who had been a victim of sexual misconduct call a special toll-free number at the base near Baltimore. More than 2,000 calls had poured in by Monday afternoon.

Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the Army had to assume such improper conduct was taking place elsewhere.

NRA seeks U.N. accreditation

Charles Hanley Associated Press

NEW YORK — The National Rifle Association, on guard against global gun control, is going global itself.

The potent Washington lobby is trying to win a seat this week as an accredited advocacy group at the United Nations, where it will campaign against a possible U.N. push for tighter regulation of the firearms trade worldwide.

The U.S. gun owners' organization was alarmed when the General Assembly last December ordered a U.N. study to investigate ways "to prevent and reduce the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons."

The study group, the U.N. Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, began its work in June.

"We had members concerned about what was going on at the United Nations," said the NRA's chief Washington lobbyist, Tanya Metaksa.

The association applied for status as a non-governmental organization participating in U.N. activities and obtained preliminary approval from a committee of U.N.-affiliated NGOs. Final approval must come from the U.N. Economic and Social Council at its meeting later this week.

Such status would allow NRA representatives access to U.N. headquarters and give them the right to submit papers and otherwise lobby participants at U.N. meetings.

What direction the U.N. inquiry eventually may take remains unclear. The General Assembly might simply adopt a non-binding resolution urging governments to better control the domestic and international trade in small arms. Or it could promote a treaty on arms smuggling that would require signatory nations to better regulate the market.

The panel, comprising representatives of 16 nations, including the United States, will submit its report in mid-1997. Any recommendations would be submitted to the 1997-98 assembly session.

Since the late 1980s, the Colombian government has sought U.N. action on arms trafficking. The Colombians feel besieged by a flood of assault rifles and handguns smuggled in from the United States, usually by Colombian drug traffickers.

In a March report to Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, Colombia plainly blamed the relatively freewheeling U.S. gun market.

Nations that produce and allow the sale of light weapons —

Colombia doesn't — must "face up to their responsibilities in this area and ... commit their governments to a policy of strict regulation of the sale, possession, bearing, import and export of such weapons," it said.

The Colombian crusade got a boost last year when Japan, where the criminal underworld also is armed with smuggled U.S. weapons, introduced the resolution establishing the experts' panel and pledged to support it financially.

The NRA countered with a letter campaign, urging members to write to the Japanese diplomatic mission to denounce the U.N. initiative. The Japanese reported receiving some 20,000 postcards, a panel member said.

With NGO status, the NRA would not be guaranteed a hearing before the panel, whose periodic meetings thus far have involved only invited NGOs and academics.

Colombia's representative in the study group criticized the U.S. gun lobby's U.N. activism.

Metaksa would not speculate on how U.N. actions might harm NRA members' interests, saying simply, "We're a group interested in issues before the United Nations, specifically regulations regarding civilian ownership of firearms."

Pentagon plans to double funds for research of Gulf War illness

John Diamond Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Acknowledging it has not done enough. The Pentagon said Tuesday it would double the money it is spending to find whether U.S. troops were exposed to chemical agents in the Persian Gulf War.

Deputy Defense Secretary John White, the Pentagon's No. 2 official, told reporters the Pentagon is pumping $27 million into further medical research and an intensified investigation of events during and after the Gulf War. White also named a senior civilian Navy official, Bernard Rostker, to a new position on Gulf War illness issues.

The announcement came a day before the Presidential Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses, a panel that has been sharply critical of the Pentagon, was to hold a day-long hearing on the issue.

"I wanted to make sure that we had sufficient resources available," White said. "We've determined that we did not, and we substantially increased those resources."

The decision came after Rostker and other senior defense officials told White in recent weeks the job of sorting out what happened in the Gulf relating to chemical weapons was far larger than previously believed.

"This is a big, complicated issue.

We're looking at an operation that took hundreds of thousands of people. There are literally millions of pages of documents. It is operationally complicated," White said.

The additional $27 million includes $5 million for further research into the possible effects of low-level exposure to chemical weapons, $10 million for research into chemical hazards and $12 million on general research into chemical weapons-related aspects of the Gulf War.

Rostker, who is giving up his post as assistant secretary of the Navy, said the Pentagon will be hiring private contractors who have worked with the military to investigate Gulf War operations. The team under his command will grow from a dozen people to 110 over the next month.

The team will be investigating not only the March 1991 destruction of an Iraqi weapons storage bunker at Kamisiyah but what White called "dozens" of other incidents, including several in which the chemical weapon detectors carried by U.S. or allied soldiers activated.

"We were concerned that, with the high emphasis on Kamisiyah, that we were not giving attention to other possible instances and, most importantly, that we were not involving the veterans in the process," Rostker said.

Pentagon officials stuck by their assertions to date: that there is no evidence that Iraq used chemical weapons on U.S. troops; that no Gulf War veterans have been found with symptoms traceable to chemical weapons; and that no American died as a result of chemical weapons exposure.

MICHIGAN STUDY

Thrill of deer hunting bad for the heart

Daniel Haney Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Spotting a deer during hunting season is a thrill — maybe even a dangerous one.

A study of middle-age male hunters tramping through the woods found the heart races wildly at the sight of a big buck. In fact, the excitement may be more than some folks can stand.

During a typical deer season in Michigan, about a dozen hunters die of heart attacks. So researchers from William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, Mich., rigged 25 hunters with portable heart monitors to see what happens.

"Just seeing a deer, not even taking a shot, the heart rate shoots up," said Susan Haapaniemi, an exercise physiologist who coordinated the study.

Some men's heart rates would almost double when seeing a deer, even if they were standing completely still. One man's heart soared from 78 to 168 beats per minute when he caught a glimpse of a 10-point buck. No one in the study actually dropped dead in the woods.

"Just seeing a deer, not even taking a shot, the heart rate shoots up."

Susan Haapaniemi, exercise physiologist who coordinated the study

Studies have shown sudden strenuous exercise — a little more than what it takes to climb stairs — can be enough to trigger a heart attack in people with underlying heart disease.

"Deer hunting falls into that category," Haapaniemi said. "We have shown that hunting is an extremely strenuous activity and might be dangerous for some people."

The researchers put the men on treadmills to find their maximum heart rates. It turned out that in the woods, their hearts often beat this fast, especially when walking, shooting at a deer or dragging out a carcass.

When questioned afterward, though, many of the men had no idea their hearts were racing.

The idea that hunting makes the heart beat fast was hardly a surprise Tuesday among hunters attending an American Heart Association conference, where Haapaniemi presented her findings.

"It makes sense," said Stephen Boppert, a hunter and student at Harvard Medical School. "There is incredible anticipation and anxiety while hunting."

Dr. Gerd Meyer of Kiel, Germany, said in his experience, dragging dead animals out of the woods is the hardest part.

"You almost pass out," he said. "It's unbelievably strenuous."

Haapaniemi has these recommendations for hunters:

- Get on an exercise program to build up endurance before hunting season.
- See a doctor to check for heart disease, especially if you smoke, have high blood pressure, elevated cholesterol or other risk factors.
- Take frequent breaks, especially if winded.
- Don't drag out a deer if you have heart disease. Get help instead.

Recent Calif. rape sparks bad memories

Dee-Ann Durbin Associated Press

PETALUMA, Calif. — Every Veterans Day, the people of Petaluma crowd the town for an afternoon parade, cheering wildly as Navy veterans in Hawaiian shirts and legions of Little Leaguers march down Petaluma Boulevard.

This year, as usual, the baton-twirlers were never quite synchronized the Cub Scouts were running wild.

Still, there was an added sense of urgency to Monday's annual display of town unity, which drew one of the largest crowds ever.

That's because Petaluma, the hometown of Polly Klaas, was badly shaken Nov. 1 when a 12-year-old girl was raped by a stranger who broke into her home. Three years earlier, Polly was kidnapped from her home during a slumber party and murdered by an ex-convict now on death row. Polly was also 12.

Hours after the rape, the young victim identified the suspect, Larry Wayne Cole, in a police photo lineup. The 55-year-old man, a convicted rapist, burglar and kidnapper, was said to know one of the victim's neighbors.

Police faxed photos of Cole to more than a dozen states, but he was eventually found just one county away — face down, dead, in a ditch. The coroner's office said he may have died of a pre-existing medical condition.

6.4 quake rocks Peru, at least 15 dead

Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — A powerful earthquake rocked southern Peru Tuesday, killing 15 people, injuring as many as 700 and causing many buildings to crumble, civil defense officials said.

Forty to 60 miners were trapped in an isolated gold mine in the Andes Mountains 480 miles southeast of Lima, according to army Gen. Ronald Rueda Benavides.

Due to the remoteness of the area and downed telephone lines, there were no details on the condition of the miners. A military patrol was trying to reach the mine by foot, Rueda said.

The magnitude-6.4 quake, which struck at noon, caused the most damage in the tourist city of Nazca, where four people were killed and 380 injured, civil defense spokeswoman Lena Montes said.

The Peruvian Geophysical Institute said the quake was centered in the Pacific Ocean about 83 miles west of Nazca, which is 235 miles southeast of Lima.

In two Nazca neighborhoods, half of the homes were damaged, officials said.

"It is incredible the need that exists in Nazca now," said Anna Cogorno, a resident of the town of 25,000.

There was no report of damage to the famous Nazca Lines, the huge pre-Columbian etchings on a desert plain that draw tourists and scholars from around the world.

The quake lasted about a minute and was felt in Lima — where high-tension cables fell across a busy avenue — and as far away as Tacna, 600 miles southeast of the capital.

The BASSment does not serve alcohol and serves a predominantly high-school age audience until 11 p.m. Eighteen-and-older clientele can stay in the bar until 4 a.m.

Kelsay said although there hasn't been an official ICPD investigation, he has visited the BASSment as part of his police beat. He said he has talked with both the occupants and the employees and has never had any problems with the management.

Singling out the BASSment is unfair, Kelsay said, because any area with a high concentration of teens has the potential to be a gang-recruitment ground.

"(The owners) are trying to run a legitimate business and turn a profit," he said.

Iowa City resident Nicole Butler said she has been going to the BASSment during both lunch and nighttime hours since it opened on Aug. 25. Butler said she heard the accusations against the club and called them unfounded.

"I think it's unfair that this establishment isn't treated with the same respect as the other establishments here in Iowa City, such as the white-owned bars," she said.

Mead said the rumors of gang activity have not hurt business. The owners said their establishment has "an open-door policy," and is open to parents or law enforcement officials to come to any of their events to see what the club is about.

"They haven't taken away from what we've done. Our numbers have grown," Mead said. "We took the negative publicity and turned it into something positive."

Butler said the BASSment has done many good things for the community, such as a "Get Out the Vote" for the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender community. She is disappointed accusations are being made against the establishment, she said.

"(The BASSment) is a good place to come and party," she said. "I don't see how anyone could come up with the idea that it's a gang-recruitment place."

Local district administrator TV.S.L. Prasad said workers were trying to extricate bodies from the plane.

The American pilot of a C-141 Air Force transport plane who was bringing in supplies for the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi witnessed the crash's fiery aftermath from 20,000 feet.

"We noticed out of our right-hand (side of the plane) a large cloud lit up with an orange glow, from within the clouds," the 30-year-old captain told reporters in a conference call from the Indian capital.

"The glow intensity of the cloud became dimmer and the two fireballs descended and became fireballs on the ground," said the pilot, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The total number of passengers and crew members was reported by the local news agency, which quoted civil aviation authorities, and was confirmed for the AP by an airport police official.

The U.S. Embassy could not confirm that two Americans were on board; the British Foreign office said one of its citizens was believed killed.

Nine Nepalese, three Pakistanis, a Bangladeshi and a Saudi were also on the Saudi plane, which had taken off from New Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport.

The Indian government announced a judicial inquiry into the cause of the accident.

The weather in New Delhi was normal for this time of year. The skies were clear, albeit polluted. Smoke from fireworks set off in recent days to celebrate the Hindu holiday of Diwali had thickened the haze.

At about 6:40 p.m. local time, as the sun was setting, the Saudi plane was cleared to climb to 14,000 feet, while the Kazak aircraft was authorized to descend to 15,000 feet, said H.S. Khola, the director general of civil aviation. Suddenly, he said at a new conference, "the radar blip of both aircraft was lost."

Tuesday's crash appears to be the third-deadliest air accident ever.

In 1977, two Boeing 747s operated by Pan American and KLM collided at the airport on Tenerife in Spain's Canary Islands, killing 582 people. In 1985, a Japan Air Lines Boeing 747 crashed into a mountain on a domestic flight, killing 520.

Until Tuesday's crash, the third-deadliest crash was a 1974 accident outside Paris involving a Turkish DC-10 that killed 346 people.

Jackson calls for Texaco boycott

Jim Fitzgerald

Associated Press

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Rev. Jesse Jackson called Tuesday for an immediate national boycott against Texaco to pressure the corporation into settling a race-discrimination lawsuit filed by black employees.

Jackson also said picketing would begin Saturday at Texaco sites unless the $520 million lawsuit was settled by then. Texaco executives are accused of using racial slurs against blacks in a secretly recorded 1994 conversation about destroying evidence in the case.

"I hope that when you leave here today, you will drive past Texaco and get gas someplace else," Jackson said. "Drive past the Star."

Texaco Chairperson Peter Bijur had lunch earlier Tuesday with Jackson and other black leaders at the company's headquarters. He said the meeting was "a significant help to Texaco" but denounced the boycott as divisive.

"Boycotts, in my view, cause economic disruption," Bijur said, adding it was unlikely the law-

"I hope that when you leave here today, you will drive past Texaco and get gas someplace else. Drive past the Star."

Rev. Jesse Jackson, on the race-discrimination lawsuit filed against Texaco suit would be settled before Saturday, although it was "very high" on his agenda.

The controversy already has had an effect on Texaco's stock, which fell $1.87 1/2 Tuesday to close at $95.37 1/2 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The lawsuit, on behalf of 1,400 minority workers, claims in part that a former treasurer, Robert Ulrich, described blacks as "niggers" while denigrating minority festivals including Hanukkah and Kwanzaa.

Investigators hired by the company to enhance the tape concluded that Ulrich was bemoaning "poor St. Nicholas" and not saying "expletive niggers," but his comments were still unacceptable, Bijur said.

Bijur met earlier Tuesday in Baltimore with Kweisi Mfume, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Mfume denounced the "racist and anti-Semitic tone" of the comments on the recording but did not call for a boycott.

Texaco has agreed to report back in 30 days on steps taken to improve its racial climate, Mfume said. But Jackson defended his plan and urged investors to sell their shares in Texaco.

"There is a culture here that must be challenged, a culture that must be changed," Jackson said. He said the "upper echelons of Texaco are virtually all white and male."

Jackson said any boycott would continue until the company "comes up with a plan to break the cycle" of racism and sexism.

Daniel Berger, an attorney for the plaintiffs, said he was "obviously very grateful for any help" from the boycott. He confirmed settlement talks were continuing.

Blue Jays' Hentgen edges Pettitte for AL Cy Young

NEW YORK (AP) — Pat Hentgen of the Toronto Blue Jays became the first player from a Canadian team to win the Cy Young Award, edging Andy Pettitte of the New York Yankees on Tuesday.

In matching the second-closest vote in the history of the American League Cy Young, Hentgen, 20-10 with a 3.22 ERA, received 16 first-place votes, nine seconds and three thirds of 110 points.

"I feel honored that my name is next to that award forever," Hentgen said. "To be honest, I definitely prepared myself to come second. I was a little shocked. I think I'm overwhelmed right now."

Pettitte, 21-8 with a 3.87 ERA, had been considered the favorite. He drew 11 firsts, 16 seconds and one third for 104 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

"When the season ended and I was talking to my wife, I told Pat deserved it," Pettitte said. "He was totally dominating. I didn't go out and dominate games. Of course, I didn't get complete games with the set-up we had."

Yankees set-up man Mariano Rivera earned the other first-place vote and finished third with 18 points.

San Francisco mayor calls Grbac "embarrassment to humankind"

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Mayor Willie Brown on Tuesday criticized Elvis Grbac's costly turnovers against the Dallas Cowboys and called the 49ers starting quarterback an "embarrassment to humankind."

He also said Grbac would never play in a new city-built stadium.

Brown, speaking by telephone from Paris, stunned several San Francisco-area reporters with his response to a joking question about whether the French would help invest in a new 49ers stadium.

"Well, I'm trying to get the French to invest in a new stadium," the mayor answered. "The guy Grbac is an embarrassment to humankind."

A San Francisco Examiner reporter then said, "That's a little harsh isn't it?"

Brown responded: "After the interception and that bonehead intellectual breakdown in the game against Dallas, and we lost 20-17, he can't play in any stadium that I'm gonna assist to be built."

Grbac said he wasn't prepared to play because he and his wife have been worried about the condition of their 9-month-old son, Jack. The boy, who suffers from spina bifida, recently underwent surgery to alleviate pressure on his spinal column and help him develop properly.

Fry responds to Driscoll's comments

Wayne Drehs
The Daily Iowan

Iowa head football coach Hayden Fry said Tuesday that he does not hold any grudges against senior quarterback Ryan Driscoll after the senior refused Fry's request to enter Iowa's 40-13 loss against Northwestern Saturday with 7:25 left in the fourth quarter and the outcome well-decided.

"That's a decision he's privileged to make and he made it," Fry said. "I certainly don't hold that against him. I think he'd be better off though with not announcing it publicly for his own sake because he'll have to live with that the rest of his life."

Driscoll told Fry and the media that he wasn't a "mop-up guy." It was the first time in Fry's 35 years of head coaching that a player had refused to enter the game for Fry.

"He's a winner and if he wasn't hurt or disappointed it wouldn't be natural," Fry said. "When the other guy (Driscoll) gets the attention in practice and works as hard, it's normal that if he is not No. 1 after putting in all that time that he is not happy about it."

"I wouldn't want him as our quarterback if he wasn't disappointed or hurt. All of your competitors and winners have to have that attitude."

Fry and his coaching staff have taken heat recently from both fans and the media regarding the play of Sherman and the success of the passing game.

Iowa has been ranked last in the Big Ten in passing offense for most of the season, but moved up to No. 8 after Saturday. The idea of switching signal callers is one that Fry not once has considered.

"As a football coach, my job is to win as many games as possible," Fry said. "Obviously, if I thought Driscoll was better, or coach Patterson thought he was better than Sherman, he would be playing, he'd be our No. 1 quarterback. That's obvious."

One reason Fry hasn't switched quarterbacks is out of fear of ruining the confidence of Sherman, a player who is expected to lead the team next year.

"If you pull your first team quarterback you better have a good reason because you've killed his spirit and the members of the teams spirit," Fry said.

Gooden talks hoops

Every Wednesday a Daily Iowan reporter sits down with a sports figure for a Q&A session. This week Wayne Drehs spoke with Iowa women's basketball player Tiffany Gooden.

DI: Why do you think women's basketball doesn't get the fans and publicity that the men's game does?

TG: I don't think some people can appreciate the women's game. They think if you can't dunk or something that you can't play. But what they don't realize is there are other aspects of our game that the men's game doesn't have.

Q & A

I'm hoping this will all change. After the US Dream Team won the gold medal, and now they are going to have the women's professional leagues, it really exposes the women's game.

DI: Now that they have the professional league is that something that you are looking to pursue after college?

TG: I think that really opens the future for us. It is a possibility and I know I won't close any doors that are open to me after graduation. I am definitely interested in playing and seeing that we have so much talent on our team, it is a possibility that we can have a lot of players on our team play professionally. It definitely adds motivation.

DI: You have suffered numerous nagging injuries while at Iowa. What is the status of your health now?

TG: Prior to pre-season practice, I was the healthiest I had been in over three years. But I sprained my MCL (medial-collateral ligament) in practice. I don't know what my status is for Friday's game. But I'm getting better and hopefully I'll be ready for the (pre-season NIT) tournament.

DI: How do injuries affect you mentally?

TG: They really take their toll on you. It makes you stronger because it is always easier to be positive, but every time I rehab and get back to 100 percent, I sustain another injury. It's really important to stay focused and not get frustrated. You can't let it defeat you. You really need to work that much harder.

DI: Now that you've had a chance to reflect on it, how did the loss to Vanderbilt in the Sweet Sixteen last year change the team?

TG: It definitely made us hungrier. We had a successful season and we appreciate recovering from our struggle the previous year and winning the Big Ten, and beating all the teams that beat us that year in "the big paycheck." But we were so close to the Final Four, it was a bittersweet season. I remember after losing the feeling of knowing that we could play with the teams that were in the Final Four. We are working hard now though so we won't have to watch the Final Four this year.

DI: So what then, are your

GIVES BACK TO KIDS

Iowa's Settles one of a kind

Every college basketball team needs a player like Iowa's Jess Settles.

It doesn't matter if he fails to capture Big Ten player of the year honors or doesn't become an All-American.

James Kramer

Settles is a great basketball player, but what he should be respected for most is who he is off the court. His treatment of fellow human beings goes far beyond the golden rule. He deserves every accolade coming to him in this area.

Never was Settles' kindness more apparent than after the Black and Gold Blowout. Hawkeye players were required to sign autographs on the concourse at Carver-Hawkeye Arena for 15 minutes after the game. Long after his teammates had gone to the locker room after the quarter-hour session, Settles stayed until every child had his beloved signature.

"When I was a kid, that's all I wanted, I wanted the players' autographs," Settles said. "Half these kids don't even follow the game that much, they just follow you individually."

Settles doesn't view his saint-like gestures as going above and beyond what is expected of him. For the Hawkeye senior, it's just part of his job.

"It's something you have to do," he said. "You've been granted four years of the spotlight, and you have to take advantage and give back."

Settles was the first to admit he struggled during the Blowout. The pre-season Big Ten player of the year made just six of his 18 shots

TWO-TIME ALL-AMERICAN WRESTLER

McGinness to red-shirt season

James Kramer
The Daily Iowan

Two-time all-American wrestler Jeff McGinness will sit out this season as a red-shirt. Iowa coach Dan Gable said on Tuesday.

McGinness, an NCAA champion at 126 pounds as a sophomore, had initially planned to wrestle Mark Ironside this weekend to decide who would be the team's 134-pounder. Ironside, a junior, will now face freshman Bill Kucinski in this weekend's wrestle-offs.

"It's something I've been thinking about for about a month," Gable said. "I kind of ran it past (McGinness) a month ago, but he really hadn't made up his mind until (Monday) night."

Part of McGinness' decision to redshirt deals with the team's long-term plans. The team's 150-pounder, Lincoln McIlravy, will graduate after this season, allowing other wrestlers to move up. Keeping McGinness, a senior, for next year will ensure that another experienced wrestler will be some-

Hawks host Adelaide in exhibition opener

Chris Snider
The Daily Iowan

The No. 23 Iowa basketball team kicks off the pre-season portion of its 1996-97 season tonight with an exhibition game against the Adelaide 36ers of Adelaide, Australia.

Tipoff is scheduled for 7:07 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Tickets remain on sale for the game.

The 36ers are fresh off a 91-97 double-overtime loss to Michigan. Iowa will be playing its first game since Saturday's Black and Gold Blowout.

Iowa is also expected to sign three high school players today, including Ricky Davis of Davenport and Dean Oliver of Mason City, both of whom verbally committed to Iowa two years ago.

The third player is Leon Jones of Battle Creek, Mich. Iowa still has one scholarship open this season after the departure of Jeff Walker, although Iowa coach Tom Davis does not anticipate giving that out until next year.

"As far as the fourth scholarship, right now, I don't anticipate that we will use that this fall," Davis said. "We're kind of watching the development of our current players and seeing what our additional needs are."

EFFECTIVE AT END OF SEASON

Minnesota's Wacker resigns in midst of another losing year

Chuck Blount
The Daily Iowan

In the wake of last Saturday's 45-28 loss to Wisconsin, assuring Minnesota of their sixth consecutive losing season, Minnesota head coach Jim Wacker announced his resignation Tuesday effective at the end of the season.

Last season, when Wacker signed a two-year contract extension, it came with a stipulation that he would resign his coaching post if Minnesota failed to tally a winning season this year. Minnesota started the year off a perfect 3-0, but have sputtered since entering the Big Ten season, going 0-6.

In the Gophers last four conference contests, they have been outscored by a combined score of 161-47.

Ironically, Wacker was behind the administration on their decision of implementing the "must win" ultimatum put in place at the beginning of the year, stressing that they gave him more than enough time to establish Minnesota football.

"In five years with this team I had my chance to turn this program around and I didn't get it done," Wacker said. "The administration here has been nothing but supportive of me and I failed to produce. Five years is more than enough time to turn a school into a winner."

Iowa head coach Hayden Fry, who will be Wacker's final coaching opponent while at Minnesota, said that Wacker went out like a champion.

"He's a great guy, very likeable," Fry said. "I thought Jim Wacker on his press conference this morning did as class a job as I've ever seen. Whether what all he said was true or not, I don't know."

With two games remaining, Wacker is 15-38 since taking over in 1992. He will take a 13-game Big Ten losing streak into Saturday's game against Illinois, whom he fired Lou Tepper on Monday.

Like Fry, Illinois head coach Lou Tepper had nothing but good things to say about Wacker. Tepper's words, however, packed an added message to the Minnesota administration as well.

"With all due respect to the University of Minnesota, you're crazy if you think you can find a guy who can represent you better and coach you better than Jim Wacker," Tepper said. "I always kidded with Jim telling him that if we combined his offense with our defense we could field produce a national championship."

Athletic director Mark Dienhart said the university did everything it could to keep Jim Wacker on the sidelines. However, in big time college football revenue can only be achieved with success.

day's game against Illinois, whom he fired Lou Tepper on Monday.

Like Fry, Illinois head coach Lou Tepper had nothing but good things to say about Wacker. Tepper's words, however, packed an added message to the Minnesota administration as well.

"With all due respect to the University of Minnesota, you're crazy if you think you can find a guy who can represent you better and coach you better than Jim Wacker," Tepper said. "I always kidded with Jim telling him that if we combined his offense with our defense we could field produce a national championship."

Athletic director Mark Dienhart said the university did everything it could to keep Jim Wacker on the sidelines. However, in big time college football revenue can only be achieved with success.

"If winning and losing was all that this was about, you could have made a case each of the last two years that it should have been the end of the Jim Wacker era," Dienhart said.

"It was not, and we did everything to maintain the Wacker era because of the values of this man and because of what he had accomplished in the classroom and elsewhere."

"What I can say, without hesitation, is that I gave this university and my players everything I had. But I guess sometimes your best isn't good enough."

Jim Wacker, Minnesota head football coach reflecting on his years with the Golden Gophers prior to his resignation.

Dienhart also noted that the search for a successor will begin immediately.

The resignation of Wacker adds him to the list as the fourth coach in the Big Ten who will not be back next season. Indiana fired Bill Mallory, and Purdue coach Jim Colletto announced his resignation a few weeks ago. Tepper was fired Monday.

"What I can say, without hesitation, is that I gave this university and my players everything I had," Wacker said. "But I guess sometimes your best isn't good enough."

NBA ROUNDUP

Iverson scorches Knicks in 76er upset

Associated Press

Philadelphia forward Jerry Stackhouse tries to get a shot off over New York forward Larry Johnson in New York Tuesday.

Associated Press
NEW YORK — Allen Iverson scored 35 points, caused both opposing point guards to foul out and iced the game for the foul line Tuesday night to lead Philadelphia to a 101-97 victory over New York.

Iverson, the No. 1 overall pick in last June's draft, scored 15 points in the third quarter and 10 in the fourth, his final seven coming from the foul line. Iverson was 10-for-19 from the field and 10-for-17 from the line as he bettered his previous career-high by three points.

Iverson made five 3-pointers and had seven rebounds, six assists and two steals. He repeatedly drew contact from New York's slower point guards. Charlie Ward committed six fouls in 29 minutes and backup Scott Brooks fouled out in 15 minutes.

Jerry Stackhouse added 28 points, five assists and four rebounds for the Sixers, who had lost eight of their previous nine games against New York.

Larry Johnson scored 28 points and Patrick Ewing had 26 points and 15 rebounds for the Knicks.

Pistons 92, Bulls 79
LANDOVER, Md. — Detroit limited Washington to 30 points in the decisive first half and got 24 points from Grant Hill.

Terry Mills scored 19 points for the Pistons, who improved to 5-1 overall and 3-0 on the road. Detroit lost its first six road games last season and went until Dec. 19 before winning a third time on the road.

The Bulls shot 26 percent in the first half (12-of-46) and committed eight turnovers.

Chris Webber finished with 19 points and Juwan Howard 15 for the Bulls, who have lost three straight.

Heat 105, Hornets 97
MIAMI — Tim Hardaway scored 22 points and handed out 12 assists as Miami extended its best start ever to 5-1.

Dan Majerle scored 20 points for the Heat, while Sasha Danilovic added 17. Former Heat guard Glen Rice led the Hornets with 26 points.

Charlotte center Vlade Divac had 22 points and 13 rebounds and held former Hornets center Alonzo Mourning to 14 points, 10 below his season average.

Hawks 87, Cavaliers 83
ATLANTA — Mookie Blaylock scored a career-high 39 points, including the game-winner with 4.9 seconds remaining for Atlanta.

Blaylock set a career high for field goals with a 15-of-26 performance, including six 3-pointers.

Blaylock hit a long jumper with 24 seconds remaining to give the Hawks an 83-80 lead. Bobby Phills tied it with a 3-pointer with 12 seconds to go, then Blaylock sank a running jumper from 15 feet to win it for the Hawks.

Blaylock had eight rebounds, eight assists and two steals as he made up for the loss of Steve Smith, the Hawks' leading scorer who is expected to miss several games with a severely sprained right ankle.

Timberwolves 100, Trail Blazers 97
MINNEAPOLIS — Terry Porter scored 13 of his season-high 18 points in the third quarter as Minnesota built a 13-point lead and hung on to beat Portland at home for the first time ever.

The Wolves, 0-14 in Minnesota against the Blazers before this season, also got 26 points from Tom Gugliotta and a season-high 20 from Kevin Garnett as they snapped a 15-game losing streak overall against Portland.

Portland guard Isiah Rider, traded from Minnesota last offseason, led the Blazers with 22 points in his return to Target Center. He was booted virtually every time he touched the ball.

Rasheed Wallace and Kenny Anderson each had 15 points for the Blazers.

Lakers 126, Rockets 115, 2 OT
HOUSTON — Nick Van Exel hit consecutive 3-pointers in the second overtime and Shaquille O'Neal had 34 points before fouling out as Los Angeles handed the Rockets their first loss of the season.

Cedric Ceballos started the second overtime with a basket and then Van Exel hit his 3-pointers with 4:09 and 2:04 to play for an 8-0 run that gave the Lakers a 121-113 lead.

The Lakers led 88-77 with 8:19 left in regulation but the Rockets pulled even with 5.7 seconds to play when Charles Barkley, who played the entire game, hit a 3-pointer for a 100-100 tie.

Bucks 99, Suns 89, OT
MILWAUKEE — Vin Baker had five of his season-high 32 points in overtime as Milwaukee kept Phoenix winless.

Glenn Robinson, who had 20 points, scored from the top of the key and rookie Ray Allen hit a 3-pointer as the Bucks took a 91-86 lead in the first minute of overtime.

Michael Finley made a three-point play to pull the Suns within 91-89, but Baker scored on an off-balance shot. Robinson gave the Bucks a 95-89 lead with a 12-foot turnaround with a minute left. Baker hit a 3-pointer and Allen, who had 23 points, added a free throw.

Mavericks 103, Pacers 82
DALLAS — Derek Harper had 17 points and Jim Jackson added 16 as Dallas presented new coach Jim Clemons with his first home victory.

Chris Gatling scored 15 points, George McClellan added 14 and Jamal Mashburn contributed 10 to help the Mavericks stop a four-game losing streak with their first 100-point game of the season.

Reggie Miller led the Pacers with 19 points but was ejected with 9:08 left in the third quarter after collecting his second technical foul. At that point the Pacers trailed 69-44.

Jalen Rose added 12 points for the Pacers, who had their lowest point total of the season in losing for the fourth time in five games.

Winter flicks offer drama, romance

Nathan S. Groepper
The Daily Iowan

As we edge closer to the Academy Awards ceremony, Hollywood rolls out one insightful, issue-driven film after another. Still, with millions of box-office dollars on the line during the popular holiday season, this winter's line-up offers plenty of relief from all that strenuous shopping.

"The Crucible"
With the lukewarm critical receptions of "Sleepers" and "Michael Collins," all eyes are focused on the silver-screen adaptation of Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" as the premier Oscar contender. Director Nicholas Hytner ("The Madness of King George") features Winona Ryder ("How to Make an American Quilt") and Daniel Day-Lewis ("In the Name of the Father") and a screenplay from Miller himself to assure him a spot in this year's Academy Awards. But will the typically chest-thumping, conservative Academy votes be swayed by a film that focuses on 17th-century witchcraft and sexuality? (Scheduled to open Nov. 27)

"Daylight"
After the financial success of '50s-inspired disaster epic "Independence Day," the newest trend in action films is to pit an ensemble cast against the forces of nature. Sylvester Stallone ("Judge Dredd") and director Rob Cohen ("Dragonheart") take a stab at box-office glory with this tale of a former emergency medical service chief who attempts to save a group of commuters trapped in a Hudson River tunnel. (Scheduled to open Dec. 6)

"Evita"
The hype surrounding this film — starring Madonna as a charismatic and singing Eva Peron — is so immense that there are advertisements in the New York Times to purchase advance tickets for the movie's release that is still more than a month away. After years of negotiations, the world-renowned opera from Tim Rice and Andrew Martin Short and Lisa Marie star in Tim Burton's "Mars Attacks!," a highly anticipated holiday release.

Lloyd Webber is sure to captivate audiences with its ambitious soundtrack (also featuring a vocals from Antonio Banderas) and radiantly filmed previews. (Scheduled to open Dec. 25)

"Ghosts of Mississippi"
The latest from director Rob Reiner ("The American President") follows the 1963 assassination of civil rights activist Medgar Evers. Thirty years later, the convicted killer James Woods is retried by a crusading district attorney (Alec Baldwin). Filming on the actual locations of the historic events, Reiner may finally have the seriously toned film necessary to capture his first Academy Award. (Scheduled to open Dec. 20)

"In Love and War"
Set in a World War I hospital, Chris O'Donnell and Sandra Bullock star in the story that became the basis for Ernest Hemingway's classic, "A Farewell to Arms." However, this weepy film romance was taken in part from nurse Agnes von Kurowsky's nurse-heralded diaries. (Scheduled to open Dec. 18)

"Jerry Maguire"
In a blatant attempt to improve the violent image of the NFL, Tom Cruise stars as a sports agent who suddenly becomes a do-gooder. Director Cameron Crow ("Singles") is sure to promise plenty of romance for Cruise, with a single mom (Renee Zellweger) and uplifting moments with his football-player client (Cuba Gooding, Jr.). (Scheduled to open Dec. 13)

"Mars Attacks!"
Inspired by the deliciously sinister '50s Topps bubble-gum cards, director Tim Burton ("Ed Wood") pays satirical homage to cheesy science-fiction films. Aided by eye-popping special effects, a $70 million budget and an all-star cast (including Jack Nicholson, Glenn Close, Pierce Brosnan, Sarah Jessica Parker, Michael J. Fox and Tom Jones), Burton's hilarious and macabre vision is this season's most-anticipated potential blockbuster. (Schedule to open Dec. 13)

"The People vs. Larry Flynt"
The season's most controversial film stars Woody Harrelson ("Natural Born Killers") as the philanthropist who founded the infamous smut magazine Hustler. While the inflammatory content may stir political debate, Courtney Love's performance as an HIV-infected drug abuser is already prompting unfounded Oscar talk. (Scheduled to open Dec. 27)

"The Portrait of a Lady"
Just when you thought Hollywood's use of long-dead authors had run its course, along comes director Jane Campion's ("The Piano") adaptation of the Henry James classic. Nicole Kidman ("To Die For") plays a hard-edged woman who shuns marriage, only to wed to an evil gold digger (John Malkovich). (Scheduled to open Dec. 25)

"The Preacher's Wife"
In the remake of the 1947 film, Denzel Washington ("Courage Under Fire") stars as an angel who returns to Earth to help a minister (Courtney B. Vance) and his wife (Whitney Houston). With a Houston/Babyface soundtrack, the box-office returns are bound to be heavenly. (Scheduled to open Dec. 20)

HBO kicks off 5th season of 'Larry Sanders Show'

Jennifer Bowles
Associated Press
LOS ANGELES — Can you imagine David Duchovny, that brooding heartthrob from "The X-Files," in love with the offbeat, paranoid talk show host Larry Sanders?

Say it isn't so! But that's the hilarious premise of the fifth season premiere episode of HBO's "The Larry Sanders Show," starring Garry Shandling, which will air at 8 p.m. tonight. "He plays basketball with me when he's here instead of Vancouver (filming "The X-Files")," Shandling said. "One day on the basketball court he said, 'Wouldn't it be funny if Larry thought David Duchovny had a crush on him?'"

"The next thing I knew, I had stolen the ball from him and scored two points. So then I said, 'That's a good idea,' so we did it. He's so funny in that, isn't he?" Shandling asks during a recent telephone conversation.

Yes, he is, and so is Shandling — star, creator, writer and executive producer of the critically acclaimed show, which focuses on the life of a fictitious late-night talk show host and the behind-the-scenes madness of creating such a show.

It figures that Shandling would do a show like this — he has the perfect background as a stand-up comic and frequent "Tonight Show" guest host during the early to mid-1980s.

"It was purely to do something that creatively was stimulating, in terms of creating something that would allow me as an actor to grow and become more reality-based," he said.

"Since I knew this world, I thought this might be a good arena to write about. It was either that or the pet shop business, which is what my mother does," he adds with his typical deadpan delivery.

Now, four years later, Shandling admits the pressure to come up with ideas for the show is getting more and more difficult. "It is so hard to come up with new things on the show, and I hope that was one that works," he said of the premiere. "It's like a relationship where you get to know the person and you're with them every day and you have to figure out how to make it fresh. And so I've been in therapy for the show for the last six months."

One way he deals with the problem is by focusing on timely issues. Ellen DeGeneres, who's rumored to come out as a lesbian on her series "Ellen" this season, is an upcoming guest on the show.

"It's a very funny show in which Larry tries to get her to come on the talk show and talk about all the controversy on the show and there's a very interesting twist that happens," he said.

Being contemporary, though, also has landed him in a tight squeeze. A scene this coming season dealing with Tupac Shakur had to be scrapped and replaced after the rapper was fatally shot in Las Vegas. And a reference to Morey Amsterdam had to be reshot after the comedian died recently.

"Unfortunately, that happens because the show is topical," Shandling said. "We went in yesterday and reshot and changed Morey Amsterdam to Steven Spielberg."

Aside from DeGeneres, upcoming guests on the show this season include Sally Field, Tim Conway, Sting and Warren Littlefield, just to name a few.

Back only for a few episodes is Janeane Garofalo, who plays the talent booker. The actress is branching off to the big screen after the success of her film "The Truth About Cats & Dogs."

"Her character threatens to quit the show because she's been offered a job producing 'The Mommies' and then she stays on for one more episode," Shandling said. "Hopefully, she'll come back when she has time."

Time is something Shandling said he has little of, since much of his is spent writing for the show.

"That's the biggest problem in my life is that, not unlike many people who work on a television series, it becomes your life," he said. "I have very few free hours and I try to spend those hours resting and recuperating."

Mum's the word on Prince's child

CHANHASSEN, Minn. (AP) — The star formerly known as Prince is happy to talk about one new creation: his upcoming three-CD set, Emanicipation.

The other is off limits. The 38-year-old star wouldn't even confirm whether his baby has been born.

"Whenever we give birth to our children, the world won't know anything," he said. "They won't know their names, sex, anything."

"Our child has to make those decisions. What if it doesn't want to be a public person? That's just straight respect; it's their experience."

Prince and his wife, Mayte, were expecting their first child this month.

Reports circulating in the European press and in the National Enquirer said his child was born prematurely last month with a deformity.

People's list of hottest celebrities full of 'Friends'

NEW YORK (AP) — Good-bye, old friends — David Caruso, Arsenio Hall, Mike Myers, Axl Rose. Hello, new "Friends" — Jennifer Aniston, Lisa Kudrow, Matt LeBlanc, Matthew Perry and David Schwimmer.

People magazine's annual list of the 400 hottest celebrities is out, and the "Friends" stars were big winners. The five other cast members join Courtney Cox, a holdover from 1995.

Ah, but the losers. Caruso, who swapped "NYPD Blue" for obscurity, is off the list. Ditto on ex-talk show host Hall, ex-"Saturday Night Live" star Myers and once-hip Guns N' Roses frontman Axl Rose.

Goodbye also to singers Jackson Browne and David Byrne, funnyman Chevy Chase, former CBS anchorwoman Connie Chung, rapper Hammer and "The Bridges of Madison County" author Robert James Waller.

High above the streets of Iowa City, graffiti artists have become canvases for graffiti. "tags," which usually consist of initials or names.

Graffiti in drafting

Laura Heinauer
The Daily Iowan

Across brick walls, broken windows and stolen cars, invisible hands have scrawled illegal graffiti work throughout downtown Iowa City.

Graffiti is no longer such innocent scribbles as "Tom lo" or "Jane," either. The black and spray paint conveys messages of racism, profanity and gang violence. There has been a significant increase in graffiti in Iowa City.

Number of cancer deaths drops

Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For the first time in at least 60 years, deaths from cancer are dropping steadily — a five-year trend that has experts to shed their usual caution and declare true progress in war on cancer.

"One of the most intractable causes of the 20th century is now declining," said Brad Rodu, who uncovered the trend with University of Alabama, Birmingham, colleague Dr. Philip Cole.

The government validated Alabama's findings Wednesday saying overall cancer mortality dropped 3 percent between 1990 and 1995. That's not a big decline but it was the first sustained decline since national record-keeping began in the 1930s — and possibly the first since 1900.

It was fueled by declines in fatal lung cancer that doctors have long awaited for decades. "This looks like a turning point in the 25-year war on cancer."
