71 hostages are released after a four-month standoff

LIMA, Peru — In a lightning assault, Peruvian troops stormed the Japanese ambassador's mansion Tuesday and rescued 71 hostages held for four months, killing all 14 rebel captors as the unsuspecting guerrillas reportedly played soccer.

One captive, Supreme Court Justice Carlos Giusti, and two soldiers also died, President Alberto Fujimori said. Some hostages were secretly warned just before the raid, one of the freed men said.

Fujimori said 25 other captives were injured in the gunfire and explosions that rocked the compound, only two seriously — Peru's foreign minister, Francisco Tudela, and another Supreme Court justice, both suffering gunshot wounds.

"I didn't waver for a single minute in giving the order for this rescue operation," said the president, who throughout the crisis adamantly rejected the guerrillas' demand that jailed comrades be freed in exchange for the captive diplomats and businessmen.

The operation ended an international ordeal that had transfixed two nations and focused global attention on a little-known leftist rebel group, Tupac Amaru, which has waged guerrilla war here since 1984.

In Tokyo, Japan's prime minister called it a "splendid rescue," but also said it was "regrettable" that Peru had not forewarned his government of the surprise, broad-daylight attack.

Fujimori told reporters late Tuesday that intelligence information convinced him it was an ideal time to end the impasse by force.

He apparently was referring to word of the indoor soccer game. Bolivian Ambassador Jorge Gumucio, one of the freed hostages, said eight hostage-holders were playing soccer in the main hall of the diplomatic residence when the security forces struck, first setting off an explosion in a tunnel directly under the hall.

It was about 3:30 p.m. The 140-man military-police assault team poured through the compound's front gate, then blasted open the mansion's front door. Others

Stewart takes stance on CLA issues

By Penny Tapp
The Daily Iowan

Emphasizing "quality not quantity," the second dean candidate said Tuesday she is against splitting up the College of Liberal Arts.

Joan Hinde Stewart, professor and chairperson of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures at North Carolina State University, Raleigh, N.C., spoke at two public symposiums Tuesday. An audience of about 24, mostly staff and faculty members questioned her on CLA issues, although the forum was meant to discuss undergraduate and graduate student education.

Stewart said the CLA should focus on quality of education and not the number of students populating Liberal Arts classrooms. Internal and external reviews of the CLA done one year ago sparked discussion of the possibility of splitting the 42-department CLA into smaller subdivisions.

While a member of the science staff pushed Tuesday to discover whether Stewart would be open to dividing the college, Stewart stood

Violent incidents not new for VEISHEA

By Jennifer Cassell
The Daily Iowan

AMES — Ames police Sgt. Jim Robinson said VEISHEA weekend is a "Jekyll and Hyde event," that becomes dangerous when the sun sets.

"During the day, VEISHEA is a great showcase for the university," Robinson said. "But at night, alcohol is flowing very freely, and it's a whole different setting once the night approaches."

Police still are investigating the stabbing death of 19-year-old Harold "Uri" Sellers, which occurred Sunday at about 3 a.m. during the Iowa State University festival. The stabbing — which police said was intentional and directed toward the victim — is the most recent in a string of violent occurrences that have marred the VEISHEA celebration in past years.

Alcohol has not yet been determined to be a factor in the stabbing of Sellers.

Riots in 1988, 1992 and 1994 have increased safety concerns for the festivities. In an attempt to keep order during the weekend, Ames police said they spend an entire year in advance planning their enforcement. All 50 sworn Ames Police officers walk the streets at VEISHEA, as well as Department of Public Safety officers and the Iowa State Patrol.

Ames police also assist in training peer security and warn liquor vendors not to sell bottled alcohol. "It's been the missile of choice," Robinson said, referring to past VEISHEA riots in which police were pelted with beer bottles.

Police efforts were not enough to save Sellers, who — according to police — was stabbed once in the chest in the front lawn of the Adelante fraternity house, 318 Welch Ave. An hour later, he died at Mary

ISU's thoughts focus on weekend death

By Laura Heinauer

AMES — When walking to class and eating lunch Tuesday, students at Iowa State University weren't talking about the big parties they attended over VEISHEA weekend.

Although students went about their normal routines, their concerned voices and serious conversations revealed that the thoughts on some minds were centered on the stabbing of Harold "Uri" Sellers.

Police still are investigating the death of the 19-year-old Monroe, Iowa, native, which occurred Sunday at about 3 a.m. during VEISHEA. Sellers was found on the front yard of the Adelante Fraternity and later was pronounced dead at Mary Greeley Medical Center.

The ISU campus has been buzzing ever since with speculation about the future of VEISHEA, and the details of the investigation.

"You walk through the library or the cafeteria and hear people talk about it all the time," ISU junior Dan Timmons said. "There are so many different stories and rumors.

People are scared — you don't think this kind of thing will happen in a place like Ames, Iowa. It makes you open your eyes."

Daniel Faidley, an ISU senior and VEISHEA co-chairperson, went to high school at Prairie City Monroe with Sellers. Dealing with the death has been especially hard for him, he said.

"One person decided to cast a shadow on the weekend that had gone so well," Faidley said. "This was one of the most successful VEISHEAs in history until Sunday

RVAP to hold lecture on Barbie

Many say world's most famous doll sends wrong message to kids

By Kelley Chorley
The Daily Iowan

When UI junior Laura Connor played with her Barbie dolls, it was a perfect world.

Ken picked Barbie up on time, took her to a nice restaurant, brought her home, put her in bed and kissed her good night without any fighting.

"All little girls dream they're going to have a Ken, a Barbie mansion and a Barbie car," Connor said. "That's who I idolized — perfect hair, perfect legs and a Ken who would do whatever she said."

However, Barbie is not all dream houses and pink Corvettes. A volunteer from the Rape Victim Advocacy Program (RVAP) is scheduled to speak tonight about how Barbie has negatively influenced U.S. culture.

The idea that women should emulate a doll and the fact that little girls are exposed to Barbie's perfect image at a young age may have caused problems in the minds of men and women, said Nicole Cook, educational director at RVAP.

"Barbie is one product of this culture that objectifies women," Cook said. "Once a person is dehumanized, the effects of taking away their humanity makes it easier to perpetrate. Barbie is not the root of all evil, but she does send a message to boys and girls as to what a woman should look like."

Barbie has been portrayed to be the definition of normalcy, Suzi Steffen volunteer at the Women's

Floods leave 45,000 homeless

By Julia Prodis
Associated Press

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — The Red River has devoured Grand Forks, leaving four generations of Johnsons — and some 45,000 people — homeless.

"We'll be lucky to have a town to go back to," Georgia Johnson, 55, said Tuesday.

Her home and some 15 others belonging to her extended family, which has lived here since the turn of the century, are under water. Some, she fears, might be floating off their foundations.

President Clinton was in town visiting the sites and offering comfort to the disaster-stricken families.

"Every one of those little houses is another life story," Clinton said, staring down at the once-in-many-lifetimes disaster. "It's just..." He trailed off, shaking his head, at a loss for words.

With the stench of sewage hanging in the air, the president saw caramel-colored water spread as far as he could see — covering houses to the gutters, trees to the tiniest, highest limbs, bridges, businesses, cars, churches and schools. Ankle-deep in water, utility company workers waved at Marine One from the all-but-deserted town.

Johnson and her two daughters have returned to one of the only open stores in town to get clothing, dog food and soda. Then they returned to their makeshift family compound.

A borrowed house and three campers in Reynolds, a town about 15 miles north, shelters them all.

"Bill, Debbie, Gramps, Dale, Bubba, your four — that's nine, 10, 11, 12, um... 16 — plus five dogs," said Tammy Sorbo, Johnson's oldest daughter. "That's all the homeless."

The scale of the disaster is still hard for them to comprehend. This isn't just a section of town under water, a low-lying neighborhood, a few downtown businesses. This is North Dakota's third-largest city with 50,000 people — and practically all of it is under water. This is the hospital, the schools, softball diamonds, drug stores, beauty shops — most under water, a few surrounded by it.

Dust swirled in the air as trucks dumped tons and tons of dirt to build a dike in hopes of protecting the hospital.

The nose-tingling smell of raw sewage and burning embers from nine buildings destroyed by fire over the weekend greeted North Dakota Gov. Ed Schafer on a boat tour of town Tuesday.

"This is going to be obviously years and years of getting this put back together," he said.

The water courses west to the interstate, east through the smaller town of East Grand Forks, Minn., and all the way past Happy Joe's Pizza and Ice Cream to the south. Beer drinkers couldn't get the "Sandbaggers' Special 30-Pak $9.99" at Southgate Off-Sale Lounge if they wanted it. Flooded.

And those 2,000 or so residents not yet forced to abandon their homes are making due without phones and showers. The entire city water system is contaminated with backed-up sewage. Even after the water recedes and the remains of homes begin to dry out, safe drinking water will still be weeks away.

Grand Forks is not alone. The rising Red River has forced evacuations in little towns north all the way into Canada; one dike in Drayton, N.D., began cracking under the pressure Tuesday, two days before the crest was due to hit town. In Grand Forks, the river crested Tuesday at 54 feet, 26 feet above flood stage.

President Clinton toured the region by helicopter Tuesday and pledged nearly half a billion dollars to help victims "in the fight of their lives."

Not one Johnson family home escaped the raging river. "In our family, there's no one who's home," Johnson said.

But they didn't leave peacefully. Husbands, wives, cousins and in-laws spent bone-chilling days side by side desperately piling sandbags along the bulging river.

Nature finally won last week. Johnson's daughter Kim Morrison was the first to flee with her husband and two children. They lived closest to the river, in a neighborhood her husband had grown up in. They moved their furniture to the second story, but the entire house was swallowed by the river.

That was last Wednesday. By Sunday, her sister, Tammy, and her family were forced out. It was Tammy's daughter's sixth birthday. "It was a complete disaster. We got kicked out of our house, she didn't get her birthday party or birthday cake. We grabbed her presents and she opened them — unwrapped," Sorbo said.

But that's trivial compared with the suffering of others, she said. "For me, I get to the point I'm really hurting so bad. Then I look at my sister and I think, at least I've got a home on a foundation," Sorbo said.

For now, the family is safe and they're grateful for their borrowed house and campers. "But if one more dike goes," Sorbo says, "we'll lose that, too."

McVeigh trial judge designates anonymous jury

DENVER (AP) — An anonymous jury was seated in the Oklahoma City bombing trial Tuesday, with the judge using a bingo-style system of numbers to keep the identities of the panelists secret.

Lawyers used peremptory challenges to select 12 jurors and six alternates. The makeup of men and women was not immediately known.

The jury will be sworn in Thursday morning before opening statements, U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch said.

Matsch and attorneys in the case questioned 99 potential jurors over more than three weeks of jury selection.

During the final phase, potential jurors who had been identified by number were redesignated with letters and numbers such as B-6 and D-1.

"Like bingo, your honor," lead prosecutor Joseph Hartzler quipped.

By renumbering the jurors, Matsch is creating an anonymous jury because reporters and the public will not be able to link individuals with answers they gave during questioning.

Defendant Timothy McVeigh became increasingly involved in the decision-making as the session wore on. He leaned over and pointed numbers out to his attorney Stephen Jones.

Most who made the final pool from which the jury was selected were white and well-educated and have ties to the military. Many believed in God, but distrusted big government and the news media. They remembered the bombing, but few recalled details of the evidence against McVeigh.

93 killed in Algerian massacre

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Attackers used knives, hatchets and shovels on Tuesday to kill 93 villagers, including three children, in the bloodiest massacre of a five-year Muslim insurgency.

The early-morning massacre was the latest violence in a campaign of terror by Muslim insurgents in advance of June 5 parliamentary elections, in which they are banned from running.

The Interior Ministry said 47 men, 43 women and three children were killed near the town of Bougara, 12 miles south of Algiers. In addition to the 93 dead, 25 people were injured in the attack, 18 of them seriously.

Security forces said knives, hatchets and agricultural tools — shovels and hoes — were used to kill the victims. Authorities arrived during the massacre and killed some of the attackers, the ministry statement said without elaborating.

Some townspeople were mutilated by their attackers — their heads, legs or arms severed — according to hospital workers in Algiers and Blida, site of the Algiers-area army garrison. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

The June elections will be the first since the army halted January 1992 parliamentary voting to thwart a likely victory by the now-banned Islamic Salvation Front. The move triggered the insurgency and repression by security forces, which have left more than 60,000 people dead.

The Interior Ministry denounced "this blind massacre committed by criminals who want to oppose the national recovery."

Board delays Hawkeye Court decision

By Scott Lester
The Daily Iowan

Just when the fight to keep their children together was supposed to be over, Hawkeye Court parents will have to go back to the drawing board.

The Iowa City School Board surprised the parents Tuesday by delaying its decision on school boundary changes, putting the parents' desire for unification in jeopardy.

"It's over. We lost. They will divide up Hawkeye Court," said Jeff Houck, UI graduate student and Hawkeye Court parent.

The board was expected to approve scenario T Tuesday night, which would move the students of Hawkeye Court from Weber Elementary to Coralville Central, but they delayed the decision because concerns were not fully addressed.

"The more I look at it, I'm not comfortable with moving 100 students at this time. It's a less than desirable solution," said board member Susan Mims. "We need to step back and look at other options."

The board will delay the decision for one month to weigh the possibilities of building a multi-purpose room at Coralville Central to ease potential overcrowding, splitting up Hawkeye Court and rezoning.

The concerns of Coralville Central were brought up at the meeting, which made the board hold off on approval of scenario T.

"Moving 100 students limits the things we can do in a complete way, we are not really arriving at the best solution," said board member Alan Leff. "This warrants us to look at other options."

The addition of 100 students to Coralville Central would put enrollment near its capacity, according to Coralville parents that worried them about overcrowding. Also Coralville Central is currently without a multi-purpose room and this would create doubled-up gym classes and longer lunch lines.

Coralville Central parent Teri Randle-Hall said moving 100 students into the school is "ridiculous" and there are bigger issues to look at.

"There are other viable alternatives," Randle-Hall said. "The parents of Hawkeye Court have to think realistically — this is not a long term solution."

If scenario T was approved the move would not take place until the 1998-99 school year, and it was the consensus of the board that they have plenty of time to look at other options.

Moving 100 students limits the parameters the board has to work with and the board should take the time to look at other options — even splitting up Hawkeye Court, Leff said.

"There is not a problem to take more time and look at other options," Board Member Ernie Galer said. "This is not a long-term stable solution and other things need to be looked at."

Board President George Matheson said he was in favor of delaying the vote, but he doesn't want to wait to next year to reach a decision and urges the board to keep the momentum going.

Council elects to defer ordinance hearing

By Renee Bovy
The Daily Iowan

Cheers, applause and passionate pleas were heard at the Iowa City City Council public hearing Tuesday, as more than 45 Iowa City skateboarders protested a possible new city ordinance.

The ordinance would restrict non-motorized vehicles from the Central Downtown Business District, Chauncy Swan Park, the City Plaza, parking lots and ramps and certain streets and alleys. City Council decided to defer the public hearing and first consideration of the ordinance to May 6, to obtain information on options for skateboarders.

"I'm here to finally find out where I can legally skate," South East Junior High student Matt Schimidt said.

Iowa City skateboarders argued that they already are prohibited from skating in most areas in the city, and the new ordinance would further restrict where they can skate.

"We came here in full force to show you we are here to communicate," skateboarder Heath Klahs said. "We just want a place to skate to enjoy our sport."

The council is looking into the feasibility of allowing skating in the Chauncy Swan Parking Garage. Mayor Naomi Novick proposed a committee be formed of skateboarders and parking officials to discuss using the ramp as a skating area.

Klahs submitted a proposal to the council outlining how skateboarding could be done legally in the lowest level of the Chauncy Swan Parking Ramp. The proposal stated specific hours where skating could be done legally in the lower level of the ramp while the area is blockaded from incoming cars. The proposal also states skateboarders would be able to bring obstacles into the area and that they would maintain and store while not in use.

However, Klahs stressed this proposal is only one idea skateboarders will bring before the City Council, as they try to find a solution that would be viable for both skateboarders and the city.

Parking Systems Manager Bill Dollman, who will sit on the committee, said he is open to input from skateboarders on the possibility of using parking ramps for skating. He said he also will inquire into having legal council sit on the committee.

been released to the public, though only one of the suspects has been described, police said it's important to keep in mind that a person didn't commit the crime alone.

me visitors cause problems
SU officials are still unsure about the future of VEISHEA, but the root of the celebration's problems may lie with out-of-towners, not ISU students.

Most of the troublemakers at VEISHEA weekend were from out of town, according to police records. Out of 416 arrests and citations over the weekend, 278 were handed out to people not in Ames or members of the ISU community.

The out-of-towners were in Ames specifically because of VEISHEA, Robinson said.

There's a lot of talk about people who aren't students causing problems, and that's true," he said. "They are coming here for the purpose of VEISHEA."

John McCarroll, spokesperson for ISU, said despite past VEISHEA problems, this year's celebration was going considerably well — until Sunday morning.

There were upwards of a 10,000 people there and things seemed to be going well," he said. "But for this to happen, it is very frustrating and sad."

ly in the 126-day siege estimated such an assault would cost the lives of 70 percent of those in the compound.

The hostages, all male, were mostly Peruvians, but also included 24 Japanese — 12 businessmen and 12 diplomats, including Japan's ambassador, Morihisa Iki, who suffered a slight elbow injury during the rescue. There were no Americans among the hostages.

House reaches compromise in drunken driving judgments

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The House approved a compromise crackdown on drunken driving aimed at easing worries that it would crowd local jails.

Supporters said the measure approved Tuesday was still among the toughest drunken driving laws in the nation, but conceded that an earlier version would have been costly for local governments.

The Senate had approved a drunken driving measure that would have required that all convicted of the crime — including first-time offenders — to serve at least two days in jail.

But local prosecutors and sheriffs complained that measure would send thousands to county jails where there was no space to keep them.

Rep. Jeff Lamberti, R-Ankeny, said Polk County officials had warned him the measure would cost $500,000 a year in that county alone.

"They were either going to have to release other people or build more jail space," Lamberti said.

State law currently requires a two-day jail term for all who are convicted of the crime, but judges have the discretion of deferring judgments in some cases.

That's routinely done for relatively minor first-offense cases to avoid jail crowding, but the Senate-passed measure would have eliminated that option.

On a 98-1 vote, the House approved a measure that would allow the deferred judgments in a limited number of cases, giving judges that option for first offenses where motorists had a blood-alcohol level of less than .15 percent.

The level at which a driver is considered drunk in Iowa is .10 percent.

Sen. Andy McKean, R-Anamosa, chairperson of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a supporter of the tougher requirement, said he had agreed to the compromise and said it would quickly win Senate approval.

Gov. Terry Branstad has said he'll sign the measure into law.

Despite the easing of the jail requirement, the measure approved Tuesday carries very stiff penalties.

It doubles the six-year time period used in calculating repeat offenses is doubled under the measure, and everyone convicted of drunken driving would have to undergo a substance abuse evaluation.

Also under the measure, those convicted of vehicular homicide couldn't go free on bond while appealing. That's in response to an Ankeny case where a man pleaded guilty after a crash in which two young women were killed, but was freed when he posted a bond while appealing.

Those measures would be tacked on a law that's already tough. Under the state's current drunken driving law, police can lift on the spot the license of someone who fails or refuses a field sobriety test. Fines can run to $1,000 for a first offense, and repeat offenses can bring prison terms, and in some cases officials can seize the cars of repeat offenders.

with high heels, all which make her normal," Steffen said. "Barbie feeds into national norms of gender, behavior, race and sexuality."

Barbie was originally intended to reflect the momentum of the women's movement — an independent, employed, single woman, with a college degree. However, the doll's physical attributes were modeled after a pornography star, Cook said.

"Some could say this was a bit contradictory," Cook said.

The Barbie icon has had a hand in forming the way women see themselves today, Cook said, and made liposuction, tummy tucks and breast implants a way to cope with unrealistic expectations.

"Any source that sends a message as much as the media does, saying this is the way women are supposed to look, will contribute to eating disorders and low self-esteem," Cook said.

The image of Barbie causes problems for men as well, Cook said. Men think women are supposed to look like Pamela Anderson Lee or Jenny McCarthy and become disappointed or even harassed when their girlfriend doesn't fit the criteria.

"Women are seen as trophies, and where a man's girlfriend doesn't fit the mold, the man is seen as less of a man," Cook said. "Everyone loses because no one can be that trophy forever."

On the other hand, Steffen said kids are smart, and she wouldn't blame eating disorders on Barbie.

"Barbie is a powerful symbol, but I don't think kids think they have to look exactly like Barbie," Steffen said.

UI sophomore Christy Hardinger said she never wished she looked like Barbie, in fact she didn't see Barbie as reality at all.

"I looked at myself, then I looked at my friends and I knew that wasn't what was real," Hardinger said. "I never wanted my hair to be that long and I knew her waist was too small and her boobs were too big."

The lecture is scheduled to be held in the Northwestern Room of the Union from 6:30-8:30 tonight.

Kmart ends relationship with Fuzzy Zoeller

TROY, Mich. (AP) — Kmart Corp. will no longer sponsor Fuzzy Zoeller or have him promote Kmart products because of racially charged comments he made about Masters champion Tiger Woods.

The decision was made late Tuesday after reviewing Zoeller's comments, company spokeswoman Sherry Kahle said. "We have just agreed to parting of the ways," she said.

Kahle said the decision was mutual.

Zoeller issued a public apology Monday after comments he made in an interview with CNN that was released on Sunday. Zoeller said of Woods, "That little boy is driving and he's putting well. He's doing everything it takes to win. So, you know what you guys do when he's in here? You pat him on the back, say congratulations and enjoy it and tell him not to serve fried chicken next year. Got it?"

Zoeller snapped his fingers, turned to walk away, then added, "Or collect greens or whatever the hell they serve."

Kmart said in a statement Monday that the comments were inappropriate and offensive. "Regardless of the context, they are contrary to Kmart's longstanding policies that ensure our words and deeds are without bias," the statement said.

Kahle said Kmart has sponsored Zoeller for more than six years and that his contract would have expired in December 1998.

Woods will get to select the menu for the Champions Dinner next year.

Iowa-ISU match-up rained out

The Iowa softball team was forced to cancel its doubleheader against Iowa State Tuesday due to rain. The cancellation marked the third non-conference opponent deleted from the Hawkeye's schedule because of inclement weather.

No. 5 Iowa (36-5) will travel to Minnesota today for a twinbill beginning at 3 p.m. Game one will be broadcast by Midwest SportsChannel.

Hawkeyes take care of Bees, business

By Chris James
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa baseball team swatted the St. Ambrose Fighting Bees, 17-1, at Iowa Field Tuesday.

Iowa sophomore Steve Rasmussen pitched eight strong innings for the win. Rasmussen walked one and struck out eight. Freshman James Magrane worked a perfect ninth inning.

Hawkeye catcher Ryan Sienko went 2-4 with a pair of RBI and sophomore Wes Obermueller added three hits and one RBI.

Iowa has won seven of its last eight games and improved its record to 15-17 on the season. The Hawkeyes will carry that momentum into a doubleheader today against Wisconsin-Milwaukee at home starting at 1 p.m.

"We have a very talented team," Iowa coach Duane Banks said. "It was just a matter of getting the work in and having the kids play consistently. Right now we're doing that."

The Hawkeyes added some breathing room to their 1-0 lead in the third inning, picking up three runs on three hits to increase the lead to 4-0.

The Bee's nest was stirred up a bit in the top of the fourth when a throwing error by Sienko advanced a pair of St. Ambrose runners to second and third with two outs. But Rasmussen got the Bee's Andy Duyvejonck to ground out to second to end the inning.

A home run by Iowa's Eric Martinez gave the Hawkeyes a 5-1 lead in the bottom half of the inning.

Both Martinez and Jeremy Heinen went deep for the Hawkeyes. It was Martinez's eighth of the season and Heinen's fourth.

"We've been really patient and waiting for our pitches lately," Martinez said. "Earlier in the year we tried to go after certain pitches and it wasn't working, but now we're making the pitchers come to us."

Iowa's Nate Frese gave Iowa a 7-1 lead with a two-run single in the fifth. The flood gates opened up in the seventh when Iowa put nine runs on the board, giving them a 16-1 lead.

The Bee's defense committed a total of eight errors in the game.

St. Ambrose's lone run came in the fifth inning when first baseman Jason Durbin cranked a solo home run over the left field wall.

"Everybody seems to be getting into a consistent pattern which is nice," Rasmussen said. "We haven't had weather delays and it's helped everybody, especially the pitchers, get more comfortable."

Michigan ticket practices questioned

DETROIT (AP) — At least three convicted drug dealers received free tickets from coaches for University of Michigan basketball games, a newspaper reported.

University records cited by the Detroit Free Press showed the tickets were given out by coaches to what were called friends of the program.

University officials said rules for giving away tickets were being tightened.

At least three people with criminal records received tickets through their association with Robert Traylor, who just completed his sophomore season at Michigan, the newspaper said Tuesday. They included:

— Sidney Dorsey, 28, convicted twice of drug charges and facing new charges of distributing cocaine, heroin and marijuana when he got tickets while Traylor was being recruited in 1994. Dorsey received tickets to 30 games from 1995 to 1997.

— Gregory Shivers, also known as Wilfred Carter Jr., who has cocaine possession and concealed weapons convictions dating to 1985. Shivers, identified by the Free Press as a relative of Traylor's, had received tickets to 10 games as of August 1996.

— Quasand Lewis, 27, imprisoned nearly three years on a cocaine delivery charge, returned to prison on a probation violation, then released got a ticket to the Wolverines' exhibition opener in 1995. National Collegiate Athletic Association rules were not violated in any of those cases. But the Free Press said the ticket giveaways conflict with the athletic department's guidelines for conduct by players and coaches.

'Ghost-hunter' scares up RiverFest

By Joseph Leavitt
The Daily Iowan

After investigating more than 100 supernatural situations and even coming into contact with ectoplasm, "ghost-hunter" Peter Jordan is still a skeptic.

"I always look for the black crow in the one case that topples the other views and proves that indeed there are spirits dealing with us in everyday life," Jordan said.

Jordan has conducted more than 100 investigations of reported hauntings and poltergeist activity, including the case of the movie "The Amityville Horror" was based on.

A field researcher for the Psychological Research Foundation in Durham, N.C., Jordan is scheduled to lecture on the possibility of spirit existence with 500 to 800 people at 7:30 p.m. in the Union Market Lounge.

He said he takes a very clinical and conservative point of view when investigating and that he has never actually seen a ghost.

"I try to weed out those stories that are suspect," Jordan said, "set out to determine if there are other factors causing a particular disturbance."

Plasma gas and ball lightning are two culprits that Jordan believes could be what witnesses really see when they claim to see spirits.

"There could be natural phenomena that account for these sightings," Jordan said.

Jordan encountered his most interesting case in 1983. A house supposedly possessed by the deceased showed physical traits with obvious cause.

"The boy was at times emitting copious amounts of viscous ectoplasm, kind of like the stuff seen

Subleasing

The Daily Iowan

An abundance of available rental units for summer and fall has caused Bell concerned he may not find someone to lease his apartment.

"It has not been terribly easy," said Bell, an Iowa City resident. "There are a lot of new places, if people have money they go for more expensive place regardless of taste."

In the last five years the number of rental units in Iowa City has skyrocketed. There are currently 13,889 rental units in Iowa City, which is 1,266 more than five years ago. This does not include construction in Coralville.

More than 150 units are currently under construction in Iowa City and by the end of the year the number of units is expected to surge to 14,000, said Gary Klinefelter of
