UI pitches new rec facility

Regents approved three new academic programs Wednesday and a proposal for a new athletic facility is on the agenda today.

By Jenn Snyder
The Daily Iowan

Athletic officials say the UI needs the Iowa state Board of Regents to okay a proposal today for a new $25 million athletic facility.

The facility's plans include indoor and outdoor tennis courts, a new swimming facility with the possibility of an indoor/outdoor recreational pool and soccer fields.

Robert Bowsby, Director of UI Athletics, said the if the regents pass the request to proceed with planning, the UI will be able to retain a consultant who will develop more concrete plans for the facility.

UI Director of Recreational Services Harry Ostrander said one of the main focuses of the new facility is to relieve the stress on the current pool caused by too many student groups vying for only a small amount of available time in the pool.

“It's much more than a sort of shrine to athletics. It's a win-win situation.”

Steve Houghton

“Right now, we're only available to the public for about four hours a day,” Ostrander said. “With a new facility, we could offer recreational swimming virtually all day.”

Ostrander said the pool gets requests for time from student groups such as the kayaking, SCUBA, and synchronized swimming clubs, as well as greek houses and residence halls. He said the pool isn't conducive to recreational swimming, because it's too deep at its shallowest point.

“The pool was built in the late 1920s, and it's outdated and unsuitable for intercollegiate athletics,” Bowsby said.

UI men's tennis coach Steve Houghton said the proposed facility is not just good for UI athletics, but for the UI community as a whole.

“It's much more than a sort of shrine to athletics,” Houghton said. “It's a win-win situation.”

The current outdoor tennis facility, Klotz courts, is falling into disrepair, Bowsby said. Ostrander said the indoor tennis courts in the rec building

New women's league takes flight

By Lisa M. Collins
Associated Press

NEW YORK — They're strong, fast, sweaty and yes, some of them can dunk. These are the women of the WNBA, the new pro basketball league that promises an aggressive, finesse-filled game much better than anyone expects.

The league enters a crowded sports market where male athletes rule and another new women's basketball venture, the American Basketball League, is fighting for fans.

So, while the WNBA claims “We got next!” how long can it hold the court?

“We have no idea what to expect this first year,” says Olympic gold medalist Rebecca Lobo, a 6-4 center/forward with the New York Liberty. “But the reason we joined this league is because we believe we're part of something that's going to get much better.”

“We're laying a foundation and we expect to be celebrating our 50th anniversary just like the NBA did this year.”

Of course, that's also the hope of the NBA, which owns and operates the league. To try to make that happen, the WNBA's big brother has organized marketing, corporate sponsorship and national TV coverage that is unprecedented for a new league and all carefully planned to raise awareness of women's basketball.

With sponsors like GM and Nike and three nationally televised games a week — starting with the first game June 21 — the eight-team WNBA is off to a flying start.

“This is a historic moment. The start of the WNBA marks a new era in the evolution of women's sports and professional sports in this country,” WNBA president Val Ackerman said. “Our interests are very much long term. We recognize that it is going to take time to develop a stable fan base and we're focusing on the future of the league. We believe that you cannot underestimate the importance of prime-time TV coverage. The exposure will set us apart.”

Although it is too early to tell if the WNBA and ABL can make it, interest is exceptionally high.

DNA links alleged rapist to Iowa City

A suspect in a string of campus rapes has been linked through DNA evidence to a Sept. 6 Iowa City assault.

By Steven Cook
The Daily Iowan

DNA samples link a comedian charged in an Omaha, Neb., assault with assaults in both Davenport and Iowa City, Omaha police officials said Wednesday.

Vinson Champ, 35, was ordered Tuesday to stand trial in district court for a sexual assault that occurred March 5 in Omaha.

Michael Hoch, a detective with the Omaha police department's sexual assault unit, testified during Champ's preliminary hearing the DNA samples from all three cities matched samples taken from Champ.

Hoch said the three cases in Omaha, Davenport and the Sept. 6 Iowa City assault, were similar, and he said Champ could be placed in the general area of all three incidents.

Sgt. Vicki Lalla, in charge of the case for the Iowa City Police Department (ICPD), said the Iowa City case is still open and under investigation. She declined further comment.

Drugs boost UI crime rates

UI crime statistics are up, but officials say the community is still safe.

By Kevin Ho
The Daily Iowan

UI Public Safety statistics show an increase in campus alcohol and drug violations, but it's still safe to walk the streets, officials say.

In 1995 the UI had 147 campus arrests for liquor-law violations, up from 116 arrests in 1994. Drug-related arrests at the UI also went up totaling 37 for 1995, up from 12 in 1994.

The figures were published recently in The Chronicle of Higher Education, as part of the federal Student Right to Know and Campus Security Act of 1990.

UI religion professor Jay Holstein has two children at the UI. His daughter is a UI graduate student, and his son is a UI junior. Holstein said he attributes a lot of campus crime to alcohol, and offered solutions to lower crime rates on campus.

“The first thing I'd like to see is university security carrying weapons. They'd get more respect and it makes sense,” he said. “The second thing is really controlling alcohol within the university institution itself. And the other thing is the dorms should offer self-defense classes.”

Although the number of assaults went down last year from 1994, the need for emergency blue phones around campus is indicative of an unsafe environment for his children to study, Holstein said. He said self-defense classes would be beneficial to students in dangerous situations. He said his own children are both black

CITY COUNCIL SAYS ...

Keep the beer down

A new city ordinance will prohibit new downtown bars from serving alcohol on upper floors without serving food as well.

By Jenn Snyder
The Daily Iowan

Future downtown bars may encourage patrons on upper floors to eat a meal with their beer to comply with a city law passed Wednesday.

Members of the Iowa City City Council unanimously passed an ordinance that will limit alcohol consumption, service and storage to the ground floor of all new restaurants and bars unless food is also served. Existing establishments will not be affected.

The Councilor said the measure is for safety's sake, but some business owners said the restriction could discourage new establishments from choosing a downtown location.

“Anything that limits the number of bars in downtown Iowa City I'm in favor of, and I think most bar owners will agree,” said Victoria Gilpin, member of the Downtown Association and owner of Preferred Stock.

The new ordinance clarifies language in the city code preventing alcohol from being served unless food is being served on the same floor. Mayor Naomi Novick said the new ordinance is just a clarification of the city code already in place.

Most existing bars were built before the restrictions were set in about 1980. A new bi-level branch of the Sports Column is being constructed in Coralville, about 100 yards from having to comply with the new code.

Randy Larson, owner of The Airliner, said he saw the ordinance as a restriction on the use of property in the downtown area, despite the council's intentions of a safety measure. He said a limitation on the number of bars downtown could be good or bad, depending on what the right mixture of businesses is.

Larson said the high rent on the ground floor of downtown locations

UIHC allowed to keep patient information under wraps

The Iowa Supreme Court ruled that the UI Hospitals and Clinics can keep secret its data on patients who get infections at the hospital.

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics can keep secret the data it gathers on infections that patients get while staying at the facility, the Iowa

Supreme Court said Wednesday. The court said the state's open records laws don't apply to those hospital records, even though the summaries being sought "do not relate to the condition, diagnosis, care, or treatment of a patient, former patient or outpatient."

Hospital officials noted that state law allows them to keep private the records relating to patients, and there's a long list of areas where lawmakers have carved out exceptions to open records provisions.

"There is nothing (in the law) to indicate the Legislature clearly intended as a policy matter to require disclosure of the summaries in question," the court said. "To the contrary, requiring disclosure would frustrate the very purpose for collecting (the) information: to reduce morbidity or mortality."

The high court said that data about infections patients contract while staying in the hospital is sensitive and is voluntarily reported by physicians and hospital staffers.

Allowing for disclosure — even in summary form — "would have a chilling effect on voluntary reporting by physicians and hospital staff of such infections," the court said. The case began when Karen Burton, a retired computer consultant, was contemplating a surgical procedure and wanted statistical summaries of University Hospitals data on infections.

Burton said she wanted the information to assess the risk of being infected by a bacteria or virus during her hospital stay. She decided to postpone surgery on her ear after the hospital refused the request she initially made in June 1994 for data on hospital-acquired or hospital-caused infection rates.

She won a 1996 decision in Johnson County District Court granting her access to the hospital's summaries.

University Hospitals appealed that decision.

The Supreme Court on Wednesday compared the records to peer review records, where medical professionals assess each other. Those are kept confidential to encourage those professionals to frankly assess each other without worries of public disclosure.

While the high court conceded that lawmakers have carved out a blanket policy of openness for government records, it said other laws have created specific exemptions. The blanket policy "does not trump or supersede" the exemptions, the court said.

Murder and riots will not end VEISHEA

A marred reputation shouldn't mean the end of the celebration, an advisory council tells the president.

By Will Valet
The Daily Iowan

Iowa State University's VEISHEA celebration has been given a thumbs-up by the VEISHEA Advisory Council.

It's now up to ISU President Martin Jischke to give VEISHEA 1998 the go-ahead—possibly as a "dry" celebration.

According to a report submitted by the Advisory Council for Jischke's consideration, the Council recommended that the VEISHEA celebration, intended to be a showcase of ISU for potential students and parents, be continued next year with greater precautions concerning crowd control and alcohol consumption.

UI senior Carrie Herr, who attended ISU in 1994 and attended VEISHEA that year said limiting alcohol will only make the situation worse.

"When people try to make an event alcohol-free, the students are like, 'What, you don't think we can handle it?'" she said. "They'll bring the alcohol in anyway. Either that or attendance will go down."

The Council, which reviews VEISHEA annually at its close, was instructed by Jischke to accelerate this year's review of the celebration as a result of the murder of Harold "Uri" Sellers outside the Adelante fraternity during the VEISHEA celebration on April 20.

Dan Robinson, ISU interim vice-president for student affairs and head of the Advisory Council, said the Council was adamant on keeping the festival going.

"It's the largest student-run celebration in the country, not just a big drinking party," he said. "It's been going on for 75 years, and we want to keep it running successfully."

The report made a distinction between "VEISHEA" — ISU-sponsored events that are already alcohol-free — and the unofficial "VEISHEA weekend," or the student-held parties that develop every year. The report stated that the alcohol-control problem emanated from the latter.

Robinson said the recommendation of an alcohol-free VEISHEA in 1998, one recommendation listed in the Council's report, is a possibility he would support.

"I feel I could support (a non-alcoholic VEISHEA) without many reservations," he said. "It's not a formal part of the celebration."

The report also said that of the approximately 500 people arrested during the 1997 VEISHEA, the majority were not ISU students or Ames residents. Robinson said Jischke is looking at ways to regulate non-ISU students during the celebration.

Jim Robinson, sergeant for the Ames Police Department, said law enforcement is at a maximum during VEISHEA weekend, and he isn't sure what more can be done in terms of added security.

"In the past, we've utilized our entire force, as well as the ISU Department of Public Safety and the Highway Patrol," he said. "We already have all the available manpower at work. The alcohol issue is the type of problem that has occurred in the past even with our full force at work."

Steve Sullivan, VEISHEA advisor, said the Council felt the positives of the celebration outweighed the negatives.

"This celebration draws tens of thousands of people to the university, and it's a one-of-a-kind event," he said. "It would be impossible to start something this big and completely student-run today."

Sullivan said the major advantages of keeping the celebration is for the students who help organize it.

The trial of Fort Dodge residents Luke Joseph Abrams and Michael Ron Runyan, accused of killing Sellers at VEISHEA, is set for July 15.

other. They teamed to win the gold medal in Atlanta last summer. "Right now, you probably know me, you know Rebecca, you know Sheryl (Swoopes)," Leslie said, "but I think when this summer ends, you'll know more than just three players in the WNBA." Toler is counting on the recognition she enjoyed at Long Beach State as the Big West Conference player of the year in 1989. After graduation, with no professional leagues for women in the United States, Toler headed overseas. For eight seasons, she saw the world while playing for teams in Italy, Greece and Israel. "In Europe, my name is still really, really big," said Toler, a 5-foot-8 guard who remains under contract to her Israeli team.

The Sparks roster includes five players from overseas teams, former collegians Tamecka Dixon and Jamila Wideman, ex-Olympian Leslie and two foreigners. Their ages range from 20 to 31. "They're all so excited about this," Sparks coach Linda Sharp said. "I've had them tell me they'd play for nothing. They just want to be a part of this."

The usual fears about the launch of a new sports league don't seem to bother the Sparks. Several players say they feel the WNBA is on solid footing because it's being supported by the NBA, a 50-year-old league with plenty of financial muscle. "I always felt like if it was going to work out, it would only work if the NBA backed it," Leslie said.

teammate Leslie in the league's first game, in Los Angeles. The Liberty-Sparks matchup will be televised nationally on NBC.

Lobo, 23, is still somewhat of a rookie compared with other WNBA players. Nonetheless, fans clamor for her autograph everywhere she goes.

"Right now I don't feel pressure, I'm excited," Lobo said. "It was the same way with the Olympic team.... There have always been tremendous talented women, and now people will have their eyes opened to them."

Leslie, a 6-foot-5 center, signed with a modeling agency after leading the Olympic team with a 19.5 scoring average.

She first grabbed headlines in 1990 by scoring 101 first-half points for Morningside (Calif.) High School and undoubtedly would have broken the national high school scoring record of 105 points if the opposing coach hadn't pulled his team off the court. (Cheryl Miller, coach of the Mercury, holds the record.)

"When I was younger, players that were older would say, 'Oh, don't worry about it, by the time you get older, there will be a professional league,'" said Leslie, an All-American and national player of the year at Southern Cal.

"I came out of college and there wasn't one. I went overseas and played in Italy and went through the same struggles that you had. But I thank God that I'm only 24. And I'm still in my prime, able to improve."
