"I was really surprised," Johnson said. "I guess it's kind of ironic that two days after the fine went up I got picked up."

Tuesday, July 1, a new law passed by the Iowa Legislature went into effect that increased the penalty for possession of alcohol under the legal age from $25 to $100. The law also increased the penalty to $1500 for bartenders who provide alcohol to minors, which is a hefty increase local bar managers say. Randy Lee, manager of the Sports Column, said his bar is well aware of the new fines, and in the wake of two week-the enforcement of drinking laws.

"The law's going to require us to become more sensitive to the situation," Lee said. "It's virtually impossible to completely stop minors from get-ting alcohol; that's why every bar in town gets citations.'

This weekend, 15 minors were charged at five downtown bars with possession of alcohol. UI sophomore Justin Fautsch, who was arrested at the Union Bar July 5, said even though downtown Iowa City appears to be the place to get caught, he's not going to avoid any downtown bars.

"There's always people downtown who will buy you drinks," Fautsch said.

"Even though the police are selective about where they go, I'm 20 years old, and 21 is only a year away — I think I can handle drinking downtown."

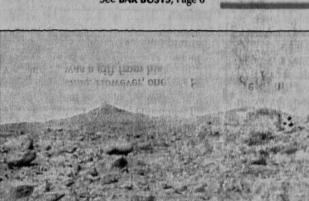

Fautsch said he makes more than the average college student with his construction job, but he still feels the pinch of a fine more than $100.

"I don't think the cops understand that $120 can keep you eating for two weeks," Fautsch said.

Johnson said it was the threat of a second offense that's going to keep her away from the bars. On the second and third offenses, the fine is $219.50 with court costs, plus license suspension up to one year.

Huge crowd brings Jazz Fest success

A turnout of 40,000 surprises Jazz Festival organizers' expectations.

The crowd of more than 40,000 jazzlovers who descended on the Pedestrian Mall last weekend will help boost the future of the Jazz Fest, organizers say. The Seventh annual Amana Iowa City Jazz Festival, which took place Thursday and Friday, drew a crowd that "overwhelmed" festival organizers, said organizer Lori Riley.

Based on the success, the Fest will be able to bring in and attract bigger bands because the performers like Iowa City, which makes other acts want to visit, Riley said. Planning for

A lack of space on the UI campus doesn't equal a lack of love for plants and flowers.

UI students don't need a green thumb to have a green apartment. Low maintenance plants can spruce up a residence hall and provide some fun on the way.

Bryan Taylor, UI senior and Earl May employee, said he wasn't too fond of plants before working at the store, but has since amassed quite a collection of flora in his apartment.

"Plants provide a nice atmosphere," Taylor said. He said he has several hanging and floor plants including Philodendrons, Sansveierian, Aloe Vera and Silver Helping Taylor grow his plants are

Taylor, an anthropology major, said he has taken several classes on gar-

He said he has obtained most of his plants through various classes. After growing them in class he was able to take them home. However, one, his Silver Queen, was a gift from his mom.

"Growing plants is like child rearing," Taylor said. "You start with plants, then go to dogs and cats, then kids."

Diane Heick, assistant manager of gardening store Earl May, said plants that require less light or can live with less water, are ideal for apartments or residence hall rooms.

"It's nice to have something to take care of," she said. "It's encouraging." Most students who come to Earl May go toward the smaller plants,

Service commemorates deaths of Roswell aliens

ROSWELL, N.M. (AP) - Mollie Burleson stood solemnly with hundreds of others gathered vice for five dead aliens. Then someone giggled.

"Some kooky people might be here. I don't think that's right," Burleson said Friday. "Some ittle aliens died out here, and that's not something to make fun of."

The memorial service, complete with Indian dancers and silent prayers, was the latest in a stream of activities commemorating the 50th anniversary of a purported UFO crash in this old West ranching town of 48,000. Thousands of believers have spilled into town to listen to lectures and swap abduction stories, mingling with others who have been loading up on souvenirs and looking for a good time. But the mood was somber on the sheep and cattle ranch where Burleson and others claim a spaceship and five aliens crashed on July 8, 1947, an incident they say has been covered up by the military for 50 years. About 100 members of the media shadowed 300 others at the service, which included the unveiling of a stone with an inscription that reads: "We don't know who they were, we don't know why they came, we only know they changed our view of the universe." Five Laguna Pueblo Indian dancers dressed in fur headdresses and shell-covered belts called spirits of the past to the site with a buffalo dance. Eight drummers pounded and chanted ancient TRIO Programs - initially named as such because there were just three of them - have helped more than 2 million students get to and graduate from college. The programs differ from financial aid because they help students overcome class, social, academic and cultural barriers to higher education.

VanMeter, a 36-year-old mother University of Iowa to study biology of four, dropped out of the ninth 20 years after she dropped out of grade. At the time, she had a thirdgrade. At the time, she had a thirdgrade reading level. In 1990, she earned her general equivalency diploma, or GED, and started class-

"Once you learn to help yourself, there are lots of people out there willing to help you," she said.

Through the Student Support Services offices at Scott CC, Van-Meter received academic advice, personal and career counseling and one-on-one tutoring.

She jokes that she lived in the Student Support Services offices.

"I would go to class, then come here, go to class, then come here, she said. "This was my whole support system.'

Two-thirds of the students who from families with an income of less than $24,000 and in which neither parent graduated from college.

At Scott Community College, 175 students each year are offered assistance through the Student Support Services department.

"They are truly opportunity programs. The funds are being spent on people who need it, appreciate it and do benefit from it," said department director Jerri Crabtree.

Most of the students in the program are like VanMeter - single, ow-income parents who have lots of responsibilities that can take them

Money from the same federal pool also funds Upward Bound, a program that helps high school students prepare for and get admitted to college.

Compared with others from a similar background, Upward Bound students are four times more likely to earn an undergraduate degree. Both Upward Bound and TRIO are offered at no cost to the students.

The TRIO program has a 95 percent success rate, which means the students are still in school and making progress, have graduated with an associate degree or have transferred to a university.

We truly try and reach the whole person, whatever their potential is, Crabtree said.

VanMeter graduated with an associate of arts degree last spring and an associate of science degree in the fall. She is a work-study student in the biology department and will begin commuting to the University of Iowa for classes this fall. Her goal is to do research of animals in their natural habitat.

"I will realize my dreams," Van-Meter said. "I just never thought I could actually do that and have an education backing me up."

A fatal Fourth

A weekend of fireworks during Fourth of July festivities is blamed for a plethora of injuries and three Illinois deaths.

Associated Press

The bodies of two men missing since a deadly fireworks explosion aboard an Illinois barge were found Saturday in the Mississippi River. One other man also was killed in that blast during a holiday weekend that was marred by fireworks accidents.

In Babylon, N.Y., two 21-yearold men were critically injured Saturday when a rocket they thought was a dud blew up in their faces. Raymond Irizariy and Michael Fragnola suffered thirddegree burns.

More than 50 people were injured in several other fireworks accidents across the country.

The bodies in the Mississippi, found near the barge where a fireworks show blew up Thursday at Alton, Ill., were identified as Ralph Duty, 44, and Raymound Hernandez, 24, both of Chicago.

The two fireworks display technicians apparently drowned after the explosion threw them into the water, Madison County deputy coroner Robert Lewis said.

Firefighters John Warnke (right) and Craig Becker get ready to douse a double-wide mobile home fire on Thursday, in Poulsbo, Wash.

Another technician, Rick Cisneros, 45, died on the barge.

Authorities said the explosion occurred when an 8-inch shell fired from the barge exploded just a few feet in the air, what's known as a "low blow."

The show was put on by Mad Bomber Fireworks Productions of Plymouth, Ind., which also staged a show that was interrupted by an explosion Friday at Syracuse, Ind. A 2-year-old and two adults suffered minor injuries.

Mad Bomber co-owner Mike Horvath refused to comment on the accidents Saturday.

Another "low blow" set off an explosion aboard a fireworks barge Friday at Falmouth, Mass. Ten people ran for cover, with three diving off the barge into the water, but only one person was seriously hurt.

Atlas Advanced Pyrotechnics of Jaffrey, N.H., which conducted the show, followed regulations and precautions, general manager Wayne Desrosiers said.

Gore's campaign comes to Iowa

In his visit to lowa, Vice President Al Gore said he's ready to campaign in next election's caucuses.

> By Mike Glover Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa - Vice President Al Gore boosted his own cause by a good amount with just a single day's campaigning in the state.

It was an early signal to potential rivals and yet another demonstration of the power by those who hold the White House. In short, it underscored why Gore is easily the frontrunner for the Democratic presidential nomination.

There have been some questions about Gore and the Iowa caucuses, which have not been kind in the past to vice presidents seeking to move up the ladder.

The first question many have is about Gore's commitment to fight it out in the caucuses. When he ran for president in 1988, Gore got nowhere in Iowa and pulled out to keep his powder dry for battles elsewhere.

With House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt poised to run again, some have suggested that Gore might try to find a way around the caucuses and avoid an early upset. Gephardt is virtually a favorite son in the state, and some Democratic strategists think he could beat Gore in a caucus i nave really spent a good deal of time here in the last five years," Gore said, promising much more campaign time in coming months.

His campaign trip signaled that won't be the case and he's willing to fight it out.

An earlier vice president -George Bush - was dogged with suggestions that he didn't care about the state and had little stomach for the brutal infighting that is grassroots politicking. Gore left little doubt he relishes the opportunity.

The agenda for Gore's campaign trip was telling as well. He spoke to labor leaders, environmental activists and farm groups, all key Democratic constituencies where Gephardt would have an edge on better represents core Democratic ing candidates who spend time in values. He will have a case. Many Democrats grumble privately that President Clinton's lurch to the center leaves the party standing

In showing the flag, Gore makes the case that the administration, while not perfect from an ideological purist point of view, is far better than any alternative.

"You're not going to agree 100 percent of the time with any of your friends," said Gore.

Labor leaders and other Democratic activists understand that even more pragmatic issue at anger the White House, because that's the final line of defense in rivals could hope to generate. Simthe Democratic arsenal. With Republicans controlling Congress, Democrats have to bank on the White House to fend off assaults.

When rivals come calling for the next presidential campaign, many Democratic interest groups are someone with an office at the up chit for his own candidacy. White House.

That isn't a terribly tough question to answer.

Another issue that arises when a sitting vice president runs for the top job is simple logistics. Caucus campaigning puts a premium on the personal touches, reward-living rooms chatting one on one. That isn't terribly easy to do when you travel in a motorcade with a phalanx of security dogging every step. Despite that handicap, Gore managed to move smoothly through five campaign events in a single day, putting himself in front of a good number of Democratic activists.

The swing also showed the other side of the coin that goes with being a sitting vice president, While the protocols of office can make it tough to mingle, they also argument well, and there's an mean that heavy attention is give to everything that's done.

Gore's swing generated far more Interest groups are loath to attention from the press and from party activists than any of his ply by showing up, Gore became the top story of the weekend and the top topic of conversation within party circles.

For now, that's probably enough. Gore doesn't need to spell out much of an independent agenda going to face questions about for the coming months. He can whether it's safer to alienate a show up, help candidates in the leader of a minority in Congress or next midterm election and build

State unemployment fund is up

lowa's unemployment trust fund has increased to $700 million but officials aren't planning to increase payouts or

But the surplus could evaporate quickly in a recession, warn officials of the state Department of Workforce Development.

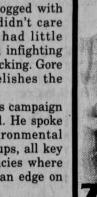

"If we go into a recession, we could be out of that money in a year or two, and that makes people concerned about increasing the benefits," said Pat Sampson, the department's legislative lobbyist.

The fund was established to pay jobless benefits to laid-off workers.

taxes they pay based on their number of workers and history of layoffs. Just more than half of Iowa employers pay no tax because they have not had layoffs recently.

For those employers who do pay, the tax bills have been going down as the surplus grows.

For unemployed workers who qualify, Iowa pays 26 weeks of unemployment compensation. An additional benefit can be paid to those laid off by plant closings. The payment amount is based on the worker's salary and number of dependents.

Gephardt is likely to come at Gore from the left, arguing that he

iven the way the universe seems to operate (if you can call this wacky excuse for a cosmos an operation), the job situation sucks swamp gas. Nobody wants to hire anything anymore but a temp worker, so like a lot of people, I've had a succession of short-lived and extraordinarily dull jobs. If you're keeping score, that would be a dead heat between short-lived and extraordinarily dull.

Data-entry jockey, sidewalk deconstructionist (I felt so much like Derrida, if Derrida couldn't speak French very well but could wield a sledgehammer), microwave popcorn technician - the career opportunities have been mind-bog-doesn't work.

Well, actually they don't say that, because for the people who keep yakking about free markets all the time, capitalism works just fine and dandy, if not peachy and keen and several other Disney-like adjectives; it's for those of us who actually do the work that capitalism doesn't work. Of course, if you the collapse of the Soviet Union, people just shrug and go on about their business, which turns out, oddly enough, to be business. Oh to be in elsewhere now that America is everywhere.

Of which the microwave-popcorn factory was a perfect example. A building the size of five or six football fields, or one American aircraft carrier, filled with dozens of three-story-tall computerized machines, all so gleaming in their very high-techness that at any given moment five or so were down because of some glitch. You know how computers can be.

One of the truly fine features of these machines was that as soon as they went down, sirens went off. Extraordinarily loud sirens, because the normal sound level was equivalent to standing on a runway while most of the world's supply of 747's took off in succession. With the sirens going, it was more or less like making microwave popcorn in the midst of the London Blitz, only without that pesky Luftwaffe.

And our uniforms. All of us popcorn techs wore long, white lab coats and white hard hats. I still haven't figured out the reason for the hard hats - I kept looking for signs that read, DANGER: POPPING CORN, but there never were any. But then, we were making popcorn but we weren't making popcorn. Somewhere in there is a lesson about Brave New Capitalism.

Of course, it's not all been deconstruction and microwave popcorn - you can't have fun all the time. At least not in America; we're all so very earnest now, and serious, and dedicated to - well, dedicated to something, and as soon as we find out what it is, we'll package it in some very clever way so that teenagers from East Berlin to North Bangkok will want to wear

We Yanks may not be the best at everything anymore, but we're pure Einsteins at getting the rest of the world to dress like the stars of our TV commercials. I'm not sure how it works, exactly, which means it's undoubtedly metaphysical in nature and therefore we can safely lame Wittgenstein — not that we know anything about Wittgenstein, but then, neither does anybody else except for a few poor souls locked away in grad school, and they go around with their minds untucked all the time. Of course, an untucked mind is probably the best way

o approach Wittgenstein, if approaching Wittgenstein is what you have in mind. Personally, I'd rather chew sandpaper or read Tennyson, if that's not being redunant. So much is these days. As the great Taoist scholar logi Berra said once or twice, it's like déjà vu all over gain. He was talking about stepping into the same river twice, but I think the sentiment (or maybe that's sediment) applies to these times. In fact, it probably could be called the Zeitgeist (literally, the guise of sight or site, pending on your point of déjà vu).

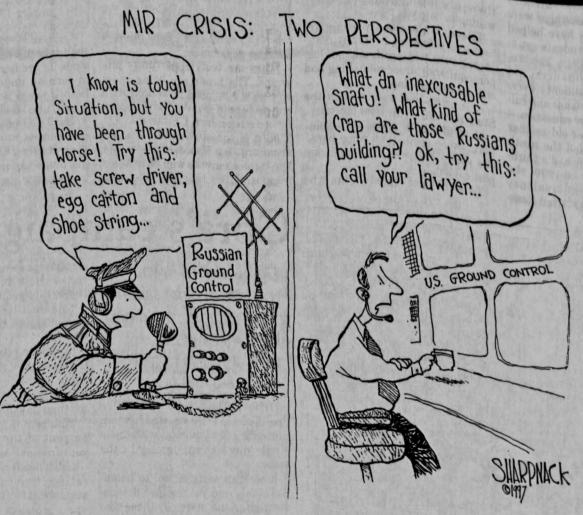

That's how things are these days. Nothing much is oing on, but everything is computerized, so the nothng much goes on very efficiently - except, of course, when the computers crash, in which case nothing much bes on. When the history of these times is written but then, it never will be, because by that time reading skills will consist entirely of pointing and clicking, and writing will consist of Gates' chain gang going.

To the Editor:

I just wanted to comment of Milton Thurmond's article on "Juneteenth" that appeared on Thursday, June 19. If he chooses not to honor the American flag, that is entirely his choice. It's part of what does make this country a place of relative freedom. However, I want to point out that he

s not alone in his history of not being treated fairly by parts of this country. As a white woman, I have not received unilateral privilege in the time period of which Thurmond speaks. As a black man, at least his right to vote has been a FEDERAL demand for 130 years, whereas women have only been allowed to vote for the last 77. Yes, I have an understanding of the Jim Crow aws, but I am just pointing out a that his complaint is not unique. He talks of how the "Star Spangled Banner" was written in 1814, when his ancestors were living in a time of slavery.

In 1814, my ancestors were not even in this country. And when they did arrive, they were not treated well, either. My Norwegian grandfather was forced to change his name from Rolf to effort to move toward equality, a strug-Ralph, because he was told Rolf was an incorrect spelling. My Polish grandmother changed her last name from Butkiewicz to Butler and entirely stopped speaking Polish in order to hide her heritage so she could get a job. My Slovak grandparents, coming to America in the late 1930's to flee Hitler, faced the discrimination directed towards Eastern Europeans at this time, labeled "Hunkies" and

"Bohunks." While I am not claiming that the disadvantages faced by my ancestors were worse than what blacks felt under the scourge of slavery (certainly it was not as difficult for my family), I am merely pointing out that more people have felt some kind of discrimination than Thurmond might realize. We might all have our reasons for not getting teary-eyed at Old Glory, but we have our choice. (Though to support many African flags might not be a better choice, since many African countries did not end slavery until the last 50 years.) A thoughtful rejection of the American flag is better than blind allegiance. America is by no means perfect. After all, we're human beings. But we are trying to make a conscious gle for which we must be ever vigilant.

Wheelroom closing unfortunate

To the Editor:

It disturbs me greatly to see one of the finer hangouts on the University of lowa campus succumb to moral imperialism. Why is the Wheelroom bar being shut down? Here is a place that one can exist free from the rat race of a typical commercial drinking establishment. When I saw the headline in the DI I thought, "Oh dear, must not be making enough money." Or,

"Shoot. Did something really terrible happen there?" But no! It was closed for the "image" of the University so they can implement some money received for alcohol awareness in good conscience. If they really want a good conscience why don't they cancel the Bud Light sponsorship of University athletics? Not that I wish for this to happen, but I do not wish to see the Wheelroom bar closed either.

The Christian Right develops a persecution complex

he Christian Right is in pain. They feel Christianity is under attack in this country and they need a constitutional amendment to stop it. So they drafted

The amendment is fine - it simply reinforces the religious freedoms guaranteed in the First Amendment. But the response in Congress is lukewarm at best. Republicans and Democrats alike are resisting it. Charles Grassley (R-Iowa) said "I don't want to mess with it. You've got to be awfully cautious when you amend the Constitution.

More importantly, the remarks made about the amendment show that the Christian Right is suffering from a persecution complex. Ralph Reed, director of the Coalition said the amendment would stop "anti-Christian bigotry" and make it so Christians "are no longer treated as second-class citizens." The Wall Street Journal chimed in and said there is "an ardent hostility toward religion in this country" and that Christians are "suspect." Newt Gingrich attacks what he sees as "the antireligious view of the left." A recent poll in U.S. News shows that over 95 percent of people in this country are religious.

those 95 percent are second-class nal thinks those 95 percent are "suspect" wherever they go and Gingrich thinks a 5 percent minority

It is unlikely that the handful of atheists are even on the left anyway. Working class folks are more likely both to vote for liberal candidates and go to church. The anti-religious crowd, if there even is such a thing, is more likely to be found in the upper-class Republican-leaning right. And since their numbers are so small anyway, the hysteria over the so-called anti-Christian bigotry can be chalked up to just one more famous conspiracy

Michael Totten

In fact, other supposedly Christian countries have a far larger number of atheists than we do. In Australia, 25 percent claim no religious affiliation whatsoever, and in northern Europe those numbers total almost half the population. If you are worried about atheists, you had better not go to Those on the religious right, however, really are minority. Polls show only 15 percent of the nation identifies with them. And it is that same 15 percent who has the persecution complex because it is they who are so often criticized. But criticizing the Christian Coalition is not at all the same a attacking Christianity. The Interfaith Alliance is an organization of liberal, moderate and conservative Christian groups that banded together specifically to oppose the Christian Coalition. A great deal of anti-religious right information comes from very good Christian in the country, liberal or not, has plenty of reasons to oppose the Coalition. Just consider what they would do if they had unchecked power. Coalition activist Gary North wants to exploit the doctrine of religious liberty to gain independence for Christian schools. Then we will get busy constructing a Bible-based social, political and religious order which finally denies the religious liberty of the enemies of God. Stephen Hotze, Coalition member and former chairman of the Houston Republican Party, said to solve our nations problems, our government must enforce biblical law. We need to get men elected who would bring about a significant constitutional crisis." Coalition President Pat Robertson has been calling for a revolution of right-wing Christians for years. He tells his flocks not to be afraid. "God is going to give us tremendous protection," he says. 'If somebody's got a machine gun pointing at you you can just walk right up to it, and it won't hurt you." The revolution will be "physically bloody," he says. "Violence is inevitable. It's going to be like Lebanon." After the revolution, Reverend Pat says "the silly so-called intellectuals of academia will first find themselves irrelevant and then expendable when the real power begins to operate.

As long as the Christian Coalition talks this way, they will continue to experience the withering controversy that fuels their persecution complex. But they should be happy. They have far more influence than they deserve. Last year, every Republican presidential candidate except one attended their "Road to Victory" conference for speeches and photo ops. The only exception was Pennsylvania Senator Arlen Specter, who is Jewish and was told Strange that a fanatical fringe group that strives toward totalitarianism has the audacity to complain about non-existent persecution. But they do-If only they would lighten up a little, they just might feel a little relief from the battering ram of criticism. Until then...

GUAMUCHILITO, Mexico - At the childhood home of Mexico's top drug lord, dirty blankets covered an open crypt Sunday. Four candles burned in the chapel, adorned with effigies of Jesus, the Virgin of Guadalupe and Jesus Malverde claimed by drug dealers as their patron saint.

Hundreds of chairs were stacked against the walls of the house, shut off from the world by a 10-foot cement fence topped with barbed wire. Five-foot wreaths of roses lined the pathway.

But there was no funeral. There was no body to bury.

After determining that the body of a 40ish man, with scars from recent plastic surgery on his face and liposuction on his stomach, "could be" that of drug lord Amado Carrillo Fuentes, Mexican authorities flew the body back to Mexico City early Sunday aboard a military cargo plane.

The federal attorney general's rillo had died early Friday morning, apparently of a heart attack, following extensive plastic surgery at a Mexico City hospital.

In Washington, U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration chief Thomas Constantine called the surgery "a desperate attempt to escape pursuing law enforcement."

the martian environment better than ever. "We have the perfect site, the perfect spacecraft, the perfect instruments and the perfect rover," said project scientist Matthew Golombek. On Sunday afternoon, hours after it rolled down a ramp from the Mars Pathfinder lander, Sojourner sat just beyond the ramp, at the end of a distinct pair of tracks in the red dust. From studying the tracks, geologists said the surface seemed like a thin dusting of flour over a harder layer. By day's end, Sojourner was expected to have completed a 90-degree counterclockwise rotation,

"The full story isn't going to emerge in a short period of time, but we really have the tools to do the job now," said University of Arizona geologist Ron Greeley. Communications with Pathfinder are not continuous because radio signals can't reach the spacecraft while it is on the opposite side of Mars from Earth. Because the martian day is slightly longer than 24 hours, communications happen roughly on a 12-hour on, 12-hour off schedule.

As the mission continues, the 12hour on period gets later and later. It now extends from early afternoon to a few hours after midnight. A week from now, mission controllers will find themselves up all night. Geologists said they couldn't have been happier with the landing site, a mostly flat plain studded with rocks and boulders, thought to have washed down from distant highlands in violent floods billions of years ago. On the horizon are hills with horizontal colored bands

Mars is thought to have had water, a vital component of life, on its surface billions of years ago. That water could have been lost to space, or it could still be on Mars today, frozen underground and in the polar caps. "Mars may even be more water-rich than Earth is. We really don't know," Golombek said.

The site is so varied, with distinctive hills and a small crater less than a mile away, that scientists have already figured out exactly where the craft is on Mars. When the Viking missions went to Mars in 1976, it took a year to figure out where one of the spacecraft landed. The position of the other was never accurately determined.

Scientists presented the first anoramic photograph of the Pathfinder site Saturday, a blackand-white 360-degree view that can be accessed through Internet sites.

Pathfinder's meteorological equipment was having some problems, but did return noontime conditions from the first two days of the mission. Temperatures hovered around zero degrees Fahrenheit, with light breezes that occasionally caused them to dip as low as 25-below.

"It's better than what people are used to in the northern United States in the fall and in the winter," said Peter Smith, a University of Arizona professor who heads the lander camera team.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agreement on a tax cut bill that includes $500 per child credit is about a week to 10 days of hard negotialions away, House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Sunday.

"I think in the end, for the first ime in 16 years, the American people will get a federal tax cut. I think that's good. I think the president's mmitted to it," Gingrich said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Moviegoers wait to purchase tickets for the science-fiction comedy "Men In Black" on Sunday at the Englert Theatre, 221 E. Washington St.

I.C., nation line up for 'MIB'

"Men In Black" packed the Englert Theatre this weekend, while breaking a national box office record.

> By Ben Schnoor The Daily Iowan

Movie theaters across the country celebrated this Fourth of July weekend in much the same way they did last year - with aliens and record-breaking profits.

"Men in Black," the science-fiction comedy starring Will Smith and Tommy Lee Jones as secret police who apprehend extraterrestrial criminals, was expected to gross $51 million by the time all weekend receipts were counted, according to industry estimates

That would top "Independence Day," the alien invaders flick which grossed $50.3 million, a record for Independence Day weekend.

"It ranks right up there as one of the biggest openings of all time, with nothing of course beating 'Lost World," Columbia distribution chief Jeff Blake told the Los Angeles Times on Friday. "If it continues to perform like this, it has a chance to be the biggest performer Columbia has ever produced. The movie's opening weekend in Iowa City was no exception to the national trend.

"It was really big," said Jason Smith, manager of Englert Theatre, 221 E. Washington St., where Susan Frye, a local resident who went to see the movie when it opened Wednesday, also said the movie compared favorably to "Independence Day."

"Men in Black' had more substance, plot and character development than 'Independence Day,' Frye said. "Independence Day' was not very memorable for me, but with 'Men in Black' I didn't feel ripped-off."

Not only did "Men in Black" score better than its alien-predecessor with audiences and at the box office, but it may continue to Sony Pictures is reportedly planning an animated cartoon version of "Men in Black" for fall.

TV patriarch Cosby faces illegitimate child

By Larry Neumeister Associated Press

NEW YORK - One of America's favorite fathers, Bill Cosby, may be the star witness against a young woman who claims she is his illegitimate daughter.

Autumn Jackson, 22, goes on trial this week on charges she demanded $40 million from him or she would go public. Jury selection begins today.

Cosby, who has been married for 33 years; has said he does not believe he is Ms. Jackson's father, though he conceded having an affair with her mother.

But prosecutors say the Cosby case is about extortion, not paternity. Cosby, who made a career out of fatherhood playing Dr. Cliff Huxtable on "The Cosby Show" and writing a book about fathering five children, is one of several witnesses prosecutors plan to call to prove that Ms. Jackson and two other defendants threatened his reputation.

The jury may never find out whether Cosby is her father. since U.S. District Judge Barbara Jones has not required Cosby to take a blood test.

Cosby also will not be forced to release his net worth. He said he keeps that private, even from his closest advisers

Ms. Jackson's lawyer, Robert Baum, said Cosby established a trust fund in 1994 to pay Ms. Jackson's mother $750 a week for

"Autumn has been raised to believe that Bill Cosby is her father," Baum said.

Ms. Jackson was simply "engaged in negotiations, not extortion," with a man she believes is her father, he said.

Prosecutors say that on Jan. 16, the same day as Cosby's 27year-old son, Ennis, was killed while changing a tire in Los Angeles, Ms. Jackson and Jose Medina sent a fax demanding money. Authorities say there is no connection to the murder.

After notifying the FBI, Cosby's lawyers proposed a fictitious settlement to give Ms. Jackson $18 million and Medina $6 million if they abandoned plans to give her story to the Globe newspaper.

The two were arrested two days later in New York City.

Ms. Jackson's boyfriend, Antonay Williams, 26, of Perry, Fla., has pleaded guilty to helping. Boris Sabas, 42, of Los Angeles, is charged with aiding extortion by driving Ms. Jackson and Medina to the airport.

If convicted, Ms. Jackson and Medina, 51, of Bethesda, Ohio, face up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine each.

Suspension could end Tyson's career

more than most observers thought by his three years in an Indiana prison.

Another layoff, Dundee said, could make him only a shell of the fighter he was when he terrorized the heavyweight division for nearly a "One year off is bad enough. Two years is worse. Three years, forget it, because Tyson is a self-destruct type of individual," he said.

Fellow trainer Emanuel Steward, who was in Holyfield's corner for one of his fights with Riddick Bowe, agreed.

"Anything over 12 months would be disastrous," Steward said. "His style of fighting is a youth style of fighting. It's not laid back like a Sugar Ray Robinson, an Ali or a Thomas Hearns. It's like Joe Frazier and those types. They usually don't fight well past the age of 27, anyway."

Steward, who was at ringside watching the fight, was one of the few to agree with Tyson's claim that a head butt from Holyfield caused him to "just snap" and lose it in the ring during the third round.

"When you get butted, you don't think about anything else," Steward said. "The pain is unbelievable. He realized his whole career was on the line and he just freaked out. He went berserk.

Tyson still has one fight left under his contract with the MGM Grand hotel, where he fought five of his six fights since being released

And he has another year on his contract with Showtime, which claimed a record 1.9 million pay-per-view buys of the fight at $49.95 each.

"It's conceivable his license will be revoked for life, so we have to reserve any comment until we know what's in store for Mike," Larkin said.

If Tyson is allowed to fight again, though, he still figures to be able to earn millions more, if only as a curiosity.

"It was totally reprehensible and inexcusable," Larkin said. "He intentionally fouled Evander Holyfield. But Andrew Golota intentionally fouled Riddick Bowe and got a rematch for an increased purse. You have to look at it in that light.'

Meantime, Tyson waits for his future to be decided. He has already said he won't contest any penalties, other than to ask he not be banned from the sport for life.

With the whole world seemingly against him, Tyson sits in his Las Vegas mansion, alone even with his friends.

"I trust me," he said. "That's all I can trust."

South Africa opens arms (and is all ears) for Holyfield

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — His right ear still bearing stitches from Mike Tyson's chomp, Evander Holyfield was greeted Sunday by a cheering and singing crowd in South Africa, where he will meet with President Nelson Mandela.

"People laugh at it," Holyfield said at an airport news conference. "Actually, I laugh at it myself. Yes, he bit my ear and it's over and people call me the 'Real Meal' now."

Holyfield, ordinarily nicknamed the "Real Deal," received a rousing welcome from several hundred people chanting "Holy, Holy." Some in the crowd sang the worker's song "Shoshaloza," an unofficial South African sports anthem.

Robbins sets record, wins LPGA Kroger Classic

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) - Kelly Robbins recorded the lowest 72-hole score in LPGA history as she won the Jamie Farr Kroger Classic by eight strokes Sunday.

Robbins had a final-round 4-under-par 67 to finish at 265, 19-under for the tournament

The previous low 72-hole LPGA scores were 268s by Nancy Lopez at the Henredon Classic in 1985 and Beth Daniel at the Oldsmobile Classic in 1994.

Both those 20-under totals came on par-72 layouts. Highland Meadows is a par-71, 6,319-yard

Woods back ahead of the pack at Western Open

Rejuvenated after taking a week off, Tiger Woods won the Western Open, putting him on pace to break the PGA earnings record.

LEMONT, Ill. - Two, two, two for Tiger Woods. Too, too, too good for rest of the field at the Western Open.

Though Woods drew gasps from the overflow crowds with some 320yard-plus drives, results, Page 9 it was the three straight birdies on par-3s Sunday that really lifted him to his fourth title of the year and sixth in 21 events since turning pro last August. After hitting a tee shot within a foot rare in the United States. The $360,000 winner's par-3s, the 165-yard 14th, Woods seemed almost embarrassed. The 21-year-old reacted to the fans' roars by smiling sheepishly and shrugging. Woods then tapped in for his third 2 to take the lead for good at 12-under.

"That was like a knife in the back when he made 2 there," said Frank Nobilo of New Zealand, who had very briefly pulled into a tie for the lead. "When he's in a position to win, he hardly ever goes backward."

Said Woods: "I may have won it at the par-3s. I played them 3-under" for the day. He played the four par-5s in 2-Woods finished with a 13-under 275, three strokes ahead of Nobilo and four better than Justin Leonard, Steve Lowery and Jeff Sluman. As he walked to the 18th green after American Pete Sampras needed just 94 minutes to win his fourth Wimbledon title in the last five years Sunday.

By Steve Wilstein Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England - History is Pete Sampras' only competitor.

Four Wimbledons. Ten Grand Slams. Virtually no one in the way of more to come. His rivals these days are all retired — Bjorn Borg, Rod Laver, Roy Emerson. Cedric Pioline, chasing aces and groping after groundstrokes, certainly could do nothing Sunday to stop Sampras as he wimbledon finals put the finishing RESULTS touch on a tournament he dominated MEN: Pete Sampras (1), like no other in his Tampa, Fla., def. Cedric

Wimbledon from all of Sampras' other major championships. It was the way he put together the whole package of his skills - the serve that was broken only twice in 118 games over two weeks, the backhand returns that dispirited Pioline and everyone else, and the speed with which Sampras raced to the net.

"I don't know what happened with the serves, to tell you the truth," Sampras said of his amazing consistency from first match to final. "They just clicked for every match I played. It was the shot that won me the tournament.

"In order to win here, you need to return, and that was also a great shot. I was hitting and passing quite well. But this is the best I think I've ever served in my career."

Sampras, getting better with age at 25, is changing one of the basic elements of tennis. He's so quick to the net with his big strides that he no longer hits approach shots, even when he's receiving. As he did so many times against Pioline, Sampras crushes returns with his backhand, gets to the net, and waits to slap away volleys - if the ball comes back.

Tyson will face boxing regulators by himself

Mike Tyson will have no one in his corner when he asks Nevada boxing regulators for another chance Wednesday.

> By Tim Dahlberg Associated Press

LAS VEGAS - It was five days before Mike Tyson's fight with Evander Holyfield, and he was in a philo sophical mood as he sat on a couch in promoter Don King's house.

alone as he tries to overcome the damage he caused by taking a chunk out of Holyfield's ear.

With King strangely silent, and Tyson's own minions told to shut up by the former heavyweight champion, he'll go it alone Wednesday when he asks Nevada boxing regulators to give him the chance to fight again. In the space of just a few days,

Tyson went from being one of the mos feared fighters to one of the most feared biters - the object of the public's ridicule and scorn. He's under psy-chiatric care, yet the two bites he took figure to mark Tyson far longer than it takes for the marks to disappear from Holyfield's ears. "Right now Mike is retreating into himself with his friends and those who support him," said Showtime executive Jay Larkin, who said he speaks with King daily. "He's consulting a well-known psychiatrist, finding out what his life is about, where he is and what he wants to do." Tyson faces a $3 million fine, not much by the standards of someone who has made $140 million since being released from prison two years ago following his conviction for raping Desiree Washington.

More importantly, he faces the possibility that he will never throw punches for pay again.

The Nevada State Athletic Commission is expected to revoke Tyson's boxing license, perhaps for at least 18 months to two years. At the age of 31, that could be fatal to Tyson's boxing

"I don't think you will see the same Tyson again," veteran trainer Angelo Dundee said. "His skills will definitely erode. They already eroded during his time in prison."
