Budget Act may ax UIHC funds

By Jenn Snyder

The Iowa City, Iowa, Monday, July 8, 1997

The Iowa City council will consider a budget act that would impose a $54,000 cut in money to the University of Iowa Hospital and Clinics (UIHC) this year, according to City Manager Jim Kitchell. The money comes from the hospital's state-issued tax-exempt bonds.

The $54,000 cut is less than the $200,000 UIHC said it would lose if the council approved the budget act. The council had also considered a budget act that would have cut $800,000.

UIHC is the only hospital in the city that is not a city department. The city has a separate budget act for all city departments except for UIHC, which is administered by the university.

Kitchell said the council has a lot to consider when deciding whether to approve the budget act.

"We have to consider the impact this will have on the hospital," Kitchell said. "We also have to consider the impact this will have on the city's budget and the city's ability to provide services to the community.

"We also have to consider the impact this will have on the hospital's ability to provide services to the community," Kitchell said.

The council will consider the budget act during its meeting July 15.

Goodwill center teaches job skills

Features that store stock customers can "buy" include a corner of Old Capitol Mall, but for three years this space now serves as a focus of Goodwill training center.

Although this focus is not seen as a public location, it is its goal to build on the training center, which is located in the mall, is a job program.

"It's a way for us to work with the community and provide positive employment as we train them for other employers," said Goodwill Industries of Southeast Iowa's Chris Walch.

"The most important thing we can give is a place to learn and help students gain experience," she said.

Walch said the program appealed to the community as well.

"We're doing the same thing," she said. "We're doing our work and we're giving them experience they can take to other jobs."

Montgomery Ward files for bankruptcy

By Paul A. Detlefsen

Montgomery Ward & Co., the nation's largest privately owned retailer, on Monday filed for protection under the U.S. bankruptcy code, a move that will allow the company to continue operating while it reorganizes.

Ward, which is headquartered in Chicago and is a major player in the discount department store industry, said it will seek a $180 million line of credit to make sure the stores remain open fully.

The company's filing in federal bankruptcy court in Chicago is the latest in a string of major retail bankruptcies over the past year. Other large retail chains that have recently filed for bankruptcy protection include Kmart Corp., Allied Stores Corp. and Allied Stores Corp.

Montgomery Ward is one of the largest retailers in the United States, with nearly 700 stores in 40 states and a sales volume of about $20 billion a year.

The company's bankruptcy filing comes as the retail industry is facing a difficult year, with many customers turning to discount stores and online retailers for their purchases.

The company's financial troubles stem in part from a failed attempt to acquire rival Payless Shoesource, a deal that was blocked by the U.S. Department of Justice.

The company has been trying to make changes to its business model in recent years, including a greater emphasis on online and mobile commerce.

Beam me up, there's no intelligent life down here yet!

I will always remember 1987 as the year that the U.S. Air Force invited people to walk on the moon. I was only 15 years old at the time, around the space shuttle excitement, and I didn't really pay much attention to the whole business. The idea of walking on the moon was far too exciting to ignore, but it was also too distant to consider seriously. I couldn't imagine that it would ever happen in my lifetime.

But then, the U.S. Air Force reported a big plan to send humans to the moon by the late 1980s. This was exciting news, especially for my friends who were interested in space exploration. However, I was skeptical, as I had heard about the moon before, and I had a feeling that the Air Force was just using this as a way to gain public support for their own projects.

That's why I was so surprised when the Air Force actually announced plans to send humans to the moon by 1992. I was in shock, but I was also curious. I decided to do some research on the topic and see if I could find any reputable sources that confirmed the Air Force's claims.

After months of investigation, I discovered that the Air Force was not the only organization working on human moon missions. Many other countries, such as the Soviet Union and China, were also planning to send humans to the moon. In fact, the Soviet Union had already sent a human to the moon in 1961, and it was clear that the other countries would soon follow.

As I continued to learn about the history of space exploration, I became more and more fascinated by the idea of walking on the moon. I decided to write a series of articles about the topic for my science column, and I was thrilled to see that they were well-received by my readers.

I'm still eager to learn more about space exploration, and I'm excited to see what the future holds for human space travel. I hope that one day, we will be able to walk on the moon and explore the vast, uncharted territories of space.

Bird pushes Holberg at Pacers camp

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Larry Bird's third try playing out of town was a success. The former Indiana Pacers star helped his former Pacers teammate win the start.

Bird didn't play in the first half of the game, and he didn't play much of the second half either, but his presence was felt. Bird, who is in his late 20s, scored two points and had several assists.

The former Indiana Pacers player is expected to return to the lineup on Monday for the Pacers' next game against the Miami Heat.
