Regents approve eye care center

The Board of Regents approved a one-of-a-kind health center along with two UI degree programs at their Tuesday meeting in Ames.

By Jenn Snyder

AMES — The UI will soon be home to a unique eye care center — the only one of its kind in the United States.

The University of Iowa Board of Regents approved the establishment of the Center for the Study of Macular Degeneration at the UI College of Medicine, Tuesday at their meeting in Ames.

The purpose of the new center is to form a macular degeneration clinic, said UI Ophthalmologist Richard Nelson, head of the UI Department of Ophthalmology.

"Our goal is for a person who has macular degeneration to come in one time, he said, "and we'll take care of the problem on our end, and they won't have to go back to the ophthalmologist."

Muscular degeneration is the most common cause of legal blindness in the United States, affecting about 10 percent of people over the age of 65. More than one million individuals have been diagnosed with the disease, which results in a complete loss of vision in one eye.

"It's a serious problem in the state, as well as nationally," he said. "I'm not aware of any other center of this type in the United States.

The center, which will be housed in the UI College of Medicine's new building on the UI campus, will be able to offer an array of ophthalmologists, physicians, geneticists, molecular biologists and nurses, among others.

All will work in the treatment of macular degeneration, whether through laser surgery, rehabilitation, research, or fundraising and development of new treatments.

"We plan to attract research funding from private foundations. The center will be financially supported by grants and private donations, Nelson said. "The center is finding that the strength of support is equal to our ability to find funding and support for the center."

"Nelson said a large part of the funding for the new center will be provided by the Coray Trust, a Iowa-based fund at the University of Utah.

"We're very excited about the center's growth, Nelson said. "We've got strong support from our eye care community and the UI college of Medicine, and this is a very exciting development."

Help on way for Kinnick fans

The University of Iowa today learned that the Rutland Press, after a艰苦な努力, has halted work on its plans to publish a new edition of Gulliver's Travels. The publisher of the novel, which was first published in 1726, has decided to discontinue production after facing financial difficulties.

"We've been working on this project for several years," said publisher John Smith. "But the cost of production has soared, and we simply can't afford to continue.

The decision was not an easy one for us, but we have to focus on our other titles as well. We hope that future editions of Gulliver's Travels will be published soon.

In the meantime, we encourage readers to purchase a copy from their local bookstore or online retailer. The novel remains a classic and continues to inspire readers around the world."

David Hogberg

Successor to the "Kinnick"

"I've been on the way for Kinnick fans for a long time," said Hogberg. "But I'm especially excited about the upcoming edition of Gulliver's Travels. It's a classic that has stood the test of time, and I believe it will be a great addition to any reader's collection.

The novel's themes of exploration and discovery are timeless, and I think readers will enjoy seeing them through the eyes of Lemuel Gulliver."

Hogberg added that the publisher is also working on other classic titles, including "Pride and Prejudice" and "To Kill a Mockingbird." He encouraged readers to check out their website for more information.

Prevention or intervention: Our hypocritical stand on crime

There was an interesting criminal statistics report released last week, which has sparked a heated debate across the country. It appears that the rate of violent crime is on the rise once again, and many are calling for stricter laws and harsher punishments.

On one hand, the report shows that certain neighborhoods have experienced a decrease in violent crime. This is a positive development, and it's clear that community policing and other strategies can make a difference.

However, on the other hand, the same report also highlights the systemic issues that contribute to crime. It points to the lack of access to education, healthcare, and opportunity as factors that drive individuals to engage in criminal behavior.

Unfortunately, many policymakers and the media have been silent on these systemic issues, and instead have focused solely on the individual failings of offenders.

We need a more comprehensive approach that addresses the root causes of crime and provides meaningful solutions. This includes investing in education and healthcare, ensuring economic opportunities, and addressing the legacies of systemic racism.

In the meantime, we must remain vigilant and work towards a society where everyone has the opportunity to thrive and succeed.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

"Of course, Americans have this talent for getting things exactly backwards, which is why athletes and movie stars are paid in dollars and educators in cents."

Beau Elliott

"...and the real cost of education is enormous. We need to address this issue head-on and work towards a system that truly values and supports our educators."

WASHINGTON — Despite rapid success in the early 1990s, every state decided to apply for federal money to promote abstinence — and only abstinence — to teen-agers.

Warning and Controversial origins: Today, no one knows how much money, or if they didn't want to understand the scientific literature on pregnancy prevention programs that include abstinence-only education.

The debate over whether to promote the law’s least controversial approach.

In fact, many states plan to ignore parts of the law they might not like, instead planning to offer a broader array of programs, according to interviews with officials in at least 10 states, including New York, Indiana, Kansas and Alabama.

One state, for example, is planning to teach that sex can be enjoyable, but only if it is within a marriage.

From Maine to California, it’s a crime.

States apply turn down federal money, and instead plan to spend at least $500 million over five years on abstinence programs. But the law’s vague definition of birth control is at least $35 million.

“Any state now can decide to use whatever means are available to them,” said a legal aid lawyer who wished to remain anonymous.

“Promoting the law’s most controversial approach was a crime.

“Right now, it’s a Crime’: “There’s no way anyone can summarize the law accurately,” the lawyer said.

“Many states have said 75 million to 85 million over five years,” the lawyer said. “Either they’re going to spend it or not.”

“The law is a crime.”

“Every state decided to apply for the money, saying they didn’t want to understand the scientific literature on pregnancy prevention programs that include abstinence-only education.”

They held out their hands to receive the federal money, saying they didn’t want to understand the scientific literature on pregnancy prevention programs that include abstinence-only education.

Many states are struggling to comply with the law, which makes it a crime to promote non-abstinence practices.

“Laws are being passed to make it a crime to promote non-abstinence practices,” the lawyer said.

“It becomes a political issue around the country, when they’re not in favor of non-abstinence education,” the lawyer said.

“Laws are being passed to make it a crime to promote non-abstinence practices,” the lawyer said.

“If we can only have one choice, we would have to be in favor of non-abstinence education,” the lawyer said.

In the opener of a doubleheader, Maddux looked like the best pitcher in the NFL for the Tennessee Oilers, hitting 130 mph in his four-inning stint Wednesday night in Nashville. He was the National Football League's pitcher of the week for the second straight season.

Maddux, who started making his retirement plans several years ago, said he was tired of the "media hype" of the NFL and he was looking forward to spending more time with his family.

Maddux also said he was looking forward to spending more time with his children, who will be 15 and 12 when he retires.

Maddux has had a successful career in the NFL, leading the Oilers to a Super Bowl appearance and a Super Bowl victory in the 1990 season.

Maddux is expected to be named the Oilers' new general manager, and he will continue to work with the team in various capacities.

Maddux's retirement announcement comes after he won the Super Bowl MVP award for the second consecutive year.

Maddux's career has been marked by his consistency and his ability to perform under pressure.

Maddux has a 207-148 record with a 3.07 earned run average in 12 seasons.
