Supreme Court lets prop 209 stand

Affirmative action foes win Supreme Court victory on California proposition

By Richard Carell

Washington Post

The Supreme Court Monday let stand California's groundbreaking Proposition 209, banning state universities, California State University campuses and state schools from using race or gender to give preferential treatment to any individual or group on the basis of race or sex.

The decision on the nation's most controversial and divisive issue is sure to spark a storm of protest and debate. The outcome Tuesday of the California referendum on the initiative will then set the stage for this fall's pivotal Senate elections and the president's bid for re-election in 1998.

Lawyers, scholars, journalists and politicians breathed a sigh of relief Monday and braced for what is likely to be a long political and legal battle.

"It's a very bold decision by the Supreme Court and a clear statement that the nation is ready to move forward on this issue," said attorney George Bishara, who argued the California case before the Supreme Court.

The court's 5-4 decision said Proposition 209 didn't violate the U.S. Constitution and is consistent with Supreme Court rulings striking down federal laws that promoted preferential treatment for minority groups.

"The Court has held that a law that does not specify who shall be favored over others on the basis of race, color, sex, national origin or religion is constitutional," Chief Justice William Rehnquist wrote in his opinion for the majority.

In his dissent, Justice Antonin Scalia said the court's decision was the "final nail in the coffin of the entire principle of affirmative action as a solution to the problem of racial discrimination.

"The Constitution's colorblind principle "shall have full force and effect," the majority opinion reads.

Senators Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and Republican Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas introduced the resolution sponsoring the amendment to the Constitution. Feinstein said the amendment was needed because the Supreme Court "continuously erodes affirmative action by striking down initiatives that try to address the legacy of our nation's history of discrimination.

"We believe that the Constitution is the people's charter, not the Supreme Court's law book," said Feinstein. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., introduced a similar resolution in the Senate.

The amendment, if adopted by three-fourths of both the House of Representatives and Senate and ratified by three-fourths of the states, would ban preferential treatment based on race, sex or national origin in all programs, policies, and laws receiving federal funds.

The amendment authors said the amendment would give Congress and the states the responsibility for addressing discrimination.

"We live in a country where the majority is sovereign and the Supreme Court is not, " Feinstein said.

The authors also contended that the high court has "invalidated more programs and policies based on race and gender than it has upheld.

"We are responding to 11 years of Supreme Court decisions that have invalidated race and gender preferences," Feinstein said.

"We want the American people to have a direct voice in deciding whether race and gender are to be used in the distribution of public and private benefits", said Feinstein.

"We are asking the people of this country to say clearly that discrimination does not exist in our land, yet if it does, it can happen in the courts, " she said. "We are asking the American people to say clearly that the Supreme Court is not the responsible authority for deciding what is or isn't discrimination."

The four dissenting justices, in an opinion authored by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, said the court's decision "has no constitutional basis and ... further erodes the principles of the nation's bedrock Commitment to equal treatment and equal opportunity.

"Today's decision may be well intentioned, but it is badly mistaken, " O'Connor wrote.

Dole said the amendment "will ensure that the courts will not continue to re-write the Constitution and that the people will once again have the right to decide who will run this country."

Feinstein said the amendment "will provide the states with the flexibility to ensure the full realization of the civil rights we have achieved and to carry the lessons of those rights into the future."

"Our parents and grandparents were the first to insist, " she said, "equal does not mean equal."

"Today is a day for hope and hard work, " she said. "We will continue to work to ensure that all Americans have equal opportunity."

The court struck down a federal affirmative action plan to increase the number of black attorneys by 20 percent over five years at the University of California at Berkeley.

"We are confident that the constitutional standard of one person, one vote will prevail in the end, " Dole said.

"Until that day, we have to keep working to make sure that equal rights are accorded to all Americans, " he said.

"Our goal is to pass on to future generations the freedoms that we enjoy, " he said.

"We believe that the American people and their elected representatives, not the Supreme Court, should decide on affirmative action, " he said.

Feinstein said the court's decision "will reverse the Supreme Court's years of reversal."

"These decisions will be overruled by the people of this country, " she said.

"Today the American people are being denied an equal voice in these decisions, " she said.

"We are saying here today that we are committed to the people of this country, not the courts, " she said.

"The people of this land are the final arbiters of our laws, " she said.

"We believe that the people of this land should have the final word, " she said.

"We are determined to protect the people's charter, the Constitution, " she said.

"The Supreme Court's decision today may not be the final word, " she said.

"We are determined to see that this does not happen, " she said.

"We will continue to do everything necessary to ensure equal protection for Negroes under the law, " she said.

"We are determined to work to ensure that the Constitution is applied as written, " she said.

Terri Lynn Keesee, on trial for the 1994 murder of a 13-year-old in Oklahoma City, is one of about 90 witnesses who will have to face the death penalty if the jury convicts her of first-degree murder.

She is one of 16 people on trial for first-degree murder on the same day, all accused of killing their children. The trial is expected to last about three weeks.

The charges include child abuse and murder, and the defendants are all accused of killing their children. The trial is being held in Manhattan, Kansas, and is expected to last about three weeks.

Is there a 12-step program for bank cards?

Byron R. Brown

A friend and I were talking about the financial pressures we have dealt with and found 100 percent of the transactions that we use to chase the American Dream were for the wrong reasons. As you can imagine, this is a common scenario.

Many young people like me have images of how to spend our money and we know that they are not going to make it. We are not living in a society where people have been taught to live on a dime.

Many of us work and save our money without much discipline. We are still living on the assumption that we can spend our money on anything we want and still save money for the future.

Instead of living up to the journey that we set out for and trying to save our money, we are always living a lifestyle of debt.

We need to find a way to save our money and not spend it on things that we don’t need.

Keeping affirmative action alive

On Apr. 6, the University Board of Regents ratified a plan that included the requirements for affirmative action.

The plan that was submitted to the Board of Regents was approved by a vote of 6-3 in favor of affirmative action. The plan will be implemented in the fall of 2010.

The plan for affirmative action is to continue to exist.

Even with Goodwin’s belief that this will be good for the entire city, one must be wary of being deceived.

The market will still require control and continuous fluctuation.

Defend Iowa

Iowa is in quite a state. Joe Miller is the leader of the Iowa Department of Natural Resources and in the past two years, has been the head of the Iowa Lottery.

This is the school that he leads and the Iowa Lottery is the only state lottery in the country where the lottery is a private company.

They operate the lottery and in the past two years, have increased their lottery sales by 10 percent.

Now, Miller is leading the Iowa Lottery and it will be interesting to see if Iowa Lottery sales continue to increase.

If this is the case, it means that the lottery is being run by a private company and not the state of Iowa.

Maurer fair on economics

As a member in our community, I have some concerns about the proposed expansion of the University of Iowa’s economy and especially, the University of Iowa’s economic impact on the economy of the state.

The University of Iowa is a major economic development force in the state of Iowa and it is expected that the University of Iowa’s economic impact on the state will continue to increase.

The University of Iowa’s economic impact on the state is expected to increase by 10 percent in the next year.

Thank you for asking about the strangest reason you’ve ever had for dropping a class.

It was a strange reason and I can’t say that I have ever had a class that I dropped for a strange reason.

Sometimes, the reasons are quite valid and sometimes, they are not.

Until they do that, please drive safely, and enjoy a safe journey.

Defending Kramer's right to criticize

Matt Snyder

Kramer is not your usual candidate

One day in the fall of 1997, a stilted, uncrisscross politician was on the campaign trail. He was a first-time politician, with no experience. But he had a message: vaccines are good for your health.

But then the people of Iowa got a surprise: they didn't like what they were hearing. They wanted someone new, someone who could bring about change.

They elected a Democrat who, in his first term, worked hard to bring about change. He signed the National Childhood Vaccine Act of 1988 into law. It was a big victory for the people of Iowa.

UNITED NATIONS - Wanting to wrest concessions from the United Nations, Saddam Hussein announced Monday that Iraq would accept a resolution allowing outside inspectors into the country to check for weapons of mass destruction. But his words, coming just a week after the United Nations authorized a possible military attack, did little to soothe the tempers of those who would like to saw him off.

Richard R. Berman, the head of the United Nations' weapons verification team, said Saddam's statement seemed to amount to little more than an overture, and he called on member nations of the Security Council to keep pushing for the resolution to be adopted.

"A real breakthrough will not be made until we hear from Baghdad that it is in fact willing to accept the resolution, and we do not see any indication that that will happen," Berman said.

Iraqi officials and Saddam Hussein himself repeatedly have said that U.S. leaders may not be acting in Iraq's best interests.

Saddam's announcement follows a wave of U.N. diplomacy over the past several weeks, including visits to Baghdad by U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and British Prime Minister Tony Blair. It also came three days after Berman visited Baghdad to talk with Iraqi officials about a compromise resolution that would have allowed inspections to continue in Iraq.

The talks were halted when Iraq refused to accept a section of the resolution that would have allowed inspectors to work unfettered.

Iraqi officials have insisted they will agree to inspections only if they could be carried out under international law and with the consent of the Iraqis. They have threatened to block any resolution that would allow the United States and other U.N. member states to adopt the inspections as a means of ousting Hussein.

Some experts say the compromise resolution would have been a good first step toward a larger agreement.

"I think it's a little bit of a disappointment" that talks were not continued, said Albert H. Miller, a University of Arizona law professor and expert on international law.

"There's a chance this thing will get away from the United Nations and the U.S. and the other Security Council members will just go their own separate ways and do whatever they want."

Iraq'stexctica

Saddam Hussein said Monday that his country is willing to send inspectors into Iraq to check on the nation's weapons programs, a marked change from the aggressive stance he has taken in recent weeks.

But the announcement appeared to be a calculated one, and it was unclear how seriously the United Nations would take it.

"I can announce that Iraq is not a military threat anymore," Saddam told reporters during a televised appearance. "Iraq is not a military threat anymore."

The United States and its allies have long suspected Iraq of possessing weapons of mass destruction, but have been unable to prove the charges.

Saddam Hussein made the announcement Monday in a televised address, saying he had received a message from the United Nations that served as a "green light" for his government to accept inspections.

"We have received a positive response," Saddam said, "and we are now going to act on that."

Clintons

By Scott Adams, Daily Iowan

In the end, it's just another day at the office. The President and the First Lady are standing behind their desks, signing the bills and making the decisions.

But today, it's not just another day at the office. Today, it's a day of celebration.

The Clintons are celebrating their tenth anniversary, and they're doing it in style. The President and the First Lady are attending a fancy dinner at the White House, and they're dressed to the nines.

The President is wearing a suit and tie, and the First Lady is wearing a beautiful dress. They're so happy and in love, and they're sharing those feelings with the world.

It's a beautiful day, and the Clintons are enjoying every minute of it. They're having fun, and they're making the most of their special day.

As they sign the bills and make the decisions, the Clintons are also celebrating their love for each other. They're the perfect couple, and they're sure to make many more years of happy memories together.
