NEWS BRIEF

League of Women Voters rally may have violated law

Election laws may have been inadvertently violated when a program, sponsored by the Johnson County League of Women Voters, featured City Council candidates near a polling site Tuesday night in the Johnson County Administration Building.

The news program allowed all six Iowa City City Council candidates a final chance to speak before the polls closed.

State of Iowa election laws prohibit this type of program within 300 feet of a polling place, said Tom Slockett, the Johnson County Auditor. Slockett said neither he or his office didn't consider the implications that the event would violate election laws, but added his office will take responsibility.

However, the incident most likely did not affect the outcome of the election and any attempt to contest it would be invalid, Slockett said.

The program which was taped between 7-8 p.m. occurred at voting precinct 10. One hundred fifty six total voters cast ballots there Tuesday and 70 of those voters came between 3-8 p.m.

Champion ousts Baker

By John Russell
The Daily Iowan

In a close race, Connie Champion defeated incumbent Larry Baker.

They both wanted to expand the public library, finish downtown revitalization, welcome the new Coralville mall and have tighter relations with the UI.

At times their platforms were hard to distinguish, but Tuesday night voters chose Connie Champion over incumbent Larry Baker to represent District B on the Iowa City City Council.

The final vote totals for the District B election were 4,643 votes for Champion and 3,729 for Baker.

From her victory celebration held at her home, Champion said her experience and link to the community were what the voters were looking for.

"I think I won because of my nine years on the school board and that people knew who I was," she said. "It's not that Larry did a bad job. It's that people want a consensus made."

Baker said he was proud of the campaign he ran but added he was just not the candidate the people wanted.

"I said from the beginning that I was going to rely on my record on the council and my performance in the forums," he said. "I just think the voters wanted a change. They went with her, and she'll do a great job."

Although the two candidates were regarded as politically similar, there was one major difference in their messages — the way to improve the council.

Throughout the race, Champion campaigned for putting new members on the council to better represent the concerns of Iowa City residents; Baker defended his voting record, saying he was against his opponent's "throw the bums out strategy."

"I think a lot of people know about the energy she puts into government from the school board," said John Gross, Champion's campaign treasurer. "They like her style, her thoughtfulness and her ability to make decisions. She wants to take a vote, make decisions and move on."

Baker agreed with Gross' sentiments.

"People were upset with the council in general, and my seat was vulnerable," he said. "Connie was well-known as a community leader and that she

Counterfeit bills found in Iowa City

Iowa City businesses are on the lookout for counterfeit $100 bills that have been used around town.

By Erin Jordan
The Daily Iowan

Sixteen counterfeit $100 bills have been found circulating around Iowa City businesses, and more may exist.

First National Bank, 204 E. Washington St., discovered the problem after businesses reported receiving counterfeit bills from customers. Tellers at the bank also noticed fraudulent bills when they were checking deposits, said Mike Myer, head of the bank's security.

"They're pretty good-looking bills," Myer said. "The paper is slightly different, because nobody can get the exact paper except the (U.S.) Mint."

Most of the bills have surfaced in downtown Iowa City and Sycamore Mall.

First National Bank has called customers to warn them of the counterfeit money, and the Iowa City Police Department has also notified businesses, Myer said.

The counterfeit money is the old-style $100 bill used before 1996 — the year the U.S. Federal Reserve redesigned the bills giving them more security features.

Bank officials said the security threat to the left of Franklin's portrait on the counterfeit bills is of poor quality, is difficult to read and has the appearance of the thread being stuck on the bill rather than woven inside. Also, the portraits on the bills are not crisp and clear.

By studying the alphabetical progression of the serial numbers, Myer said, the numbers of the counterfeit bills will appear with the first letter H, J, K, L, or M.

Some of the bills were also found at Sycamore Mall. Lindsey Miletech, an employee at Maurices, said she accepted two from a customer two weeks ago.

Miletech said she took the money from a man who bought a leather coat when she was alone in the store, too busy helping customers to notice any

Vote delays First Ave. extension

More than 4,900 opponents of the First Avenue extension turned out at the polls Tuesday voting 'yes' to delay construction on the project.

By Laura Heinauer
The Daily Iowan

Concerned environmentalists took to the polls Tuesday and voted "yes" on a referendum to delay the First Avenue extension until 2001.

With 26 percent of registered voters casting a ballot in the election, 56 percent, or 4,977 people, voted "yes" on the citizen initiative, which read: "Shall the following public measure be adopted: Summary: Public measure to delay the First Avenue Extension. Vote Yes to delay. Vote no to no delay."

UI graduate student Bennett Brown said the city will save $770,000 now that the extension has been put off.

"I'm obviously very happy that the voters saved the taxpayers' money on a road that wasn't needed and wasn't wanted," he said.

Passing the referendum served as a victory for more than 3,000 petitioners who signed their names in late August to put a stop to the extension. Iowa City councilors were forced to leave the decision up to Iowa City voters in Tuesday's election.

Opponents of the extension said it would disrupt the tranquility if a road was built near Hickory Hill Park. They also cited a lack of public input in the decision to go ahead with construction.

"I think they expressed themselves very well; I don't think a referendum is the best way to conduct business, but it got our attention," Councilor Dee Norton said. "This will give us two years to take a good, hard look."

An action passed by the council in March called for an extension of First Avenue north past Hickory Hill Park then west to connect to Highway 1 via an east-west arterial. This proposal differs from past proposals that would begin far-East Side development with an extension of Scott Boulevard and expand later to First Avenue.

Councilor Karen Kubby said she was happy the council now has two years to talk about the development of the Northeast Side of Iowa City, but she noticed a discrepancy in Tuesday's results.

"It's baffling to me that voters voted yes to the referendum, but then voted for two candidates that were in favor of the road," Kubby said.

In Tuesday's general election, at-large candidates Mike O'Donnell and incumbent Ernie Lehman were elected to the council. In the District B election, Connie Champion defeated incumbent Larry Baker with 55 percent of the votes.

Although almost 5,000 Iowa City residents voted yes on the referendum, the council has the opportunity to veto the vote in two years.

In the meantime, supporters of the referendum will work to find alternatives to the extension.

Brown said he wanted the council to look into extending Scott Boulevard as a means of providing a north-south arterial for the East Side.

"We'd like the city to call for a task force that could reach the consensus

Of course, all these do-gooders had come up with some kind of Mickey Mouse rule to try and stop (the extension).

Bruce Glasgow, a local developer who owns land near the extension

I'm obviously very happy that the voters saved the taxpayers' money on a road that wasn't needed and wasn't wanted.

Clinton warns Iraq

Clinton warns Saddam not to make a 'big mistake' by shooting at U.S. planes.

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton warned Saddam Hussein on Tuesday it would be "a big mistake" to try to shoot down American U-2 spy planes flying over Iraq.

Seeking a peaceful resolution, the United Nations announced it was postponing the surveillance flights this week while U.N. mediators in Iraq try to persuade Saddam to cooperate with international weapons inspectors. The U-2 flights are to resume next week.

The White House said it was unconcerned by the delay. "The U-2 flights will continue and will continue at a time determined by the U.N.," presidential spokesperson Mike McCurry said. "The world community will have the information it needs. We are entirely comfortable the information we need will be accessible."

That would be a big mistake.

bled to end the crisis through diplomacy. But the administration made clear that it was not backing down.

Defense Secretary William Cohen warned of "serious consequences" if any U.S. planes are attacked. Clinton expressed determination to prevent Iraq from acquiring weapons of mass destruction.

In Iraq, Saddam's lieutenants turned back U.N. weapons inspectors for a second day. Iraq has threatened to expel seven Americans from the inspection team, claiming they are spies.

McCurry, asked about Saddam's intentions, mocked the Iraqi leader.

I.C. man treats kids with smokes, not candy

An Iowa City man was charged for offering children tobacco as a Halloween treat.

By Steven Cook
The Daily Iowan

Claiming "it would be a good lesson," an Iowa City resident was charged with a simple misdemeanor on Halloween after he allegedly gave kids their choice of a treat.

The choice was between candy or cigarettes.

David Putnam, 33, 1027 Sheridan Ave., was charged with providing tobacco to persons under the legal age after a concerned parent alerted police using his cellular phone, Iowa City police Lt. Ron Fort said.

"From what we saw, he put a bowl down and the kids made the choice of what they wanted," Fort said.

During questioning by police, Putnam allegedly said he was giving the tobacco out because he thought the cigarettes would teach the kids a lesson about smoking.

Deborah Benewich, who lives on Summit Street near Putnam, said her son came home from trick-or-treating and told her about the cigarettes. She said she didn't buy into the story Putnam told the police.

"I don't believe he was trying to teach someone a lesson," she said. "I think it's terrible. I'm glad that someone turned him in."

Benewich said her son chose candy over a cigarette.

There was no way of knowing how many cigarettes were given out, Fort said. But officers retrieved five to six from kids in the area.

Putnam allegedly got agitated when the parents confronted him about the tobacco, Fort said.

"When they talked to him about the cigarettes, he allegedly threw a pineapple at them," he said.

The parents alerted police after they spoke with Putnam; they waited at the house until police arrived. Mark Kluber, another parent who lives near Putnam, called Putnam's alleged actions wrong, but he said he didn't see anything unusual Friday night while he was out trick-or-treating with his child. Fort said the department didn't hear of any other occurrences during the night, and he hadn't heard of other occurrences similar to this one in the past.

"I don't remember anything quite like it," he said.

The penalty for providing tobacco to persons underage can be up to a $100 fine or 30 days in jail. Kluber said he didn't think the punishment was too low.

Putnam is scheduled to appear in Johnson County magistrate court Nov. 13 at 8 a.m.

Howard Stern is not a doctor

NEW YORK (AP) — Howard Stern's penchant for playing doctor could get him in trouble for practicing medicine without a license.

Joseph DuPont, a businessman from Gillette, N.J., filed a complaint with the state after the shock jock examined three women for breast cancer in the studio while on the air Oct. 15.

"Mr. Stern physically manipulated the women's breasts and gave his opinion as to whether there were any suspicious lumps to be concerned with," DuPont wrote. Stern told the women they were fine but cautioned them to get a second opinion, DuPont said Tuesday.

Calls to Stern's office were not immediately returned.

The state education department's Office of Professional Discipline will determine in the next few days whether to investigate, said spokesperson Alan Ray.

"If a member of the public complains, we always look to see if there's anything to it," Ray said. "There's no formal investigation at this point."

There might be happy trails ahead for Roy Rogers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Load your six-shooters. Circle the wagons. Art Emr is on the warpath, trying to persuade the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to give Roy Rogers and wife Dale Evans honorary Oscars.

For two years, Emr has rallied other Rogers diehards, using country music radio stations, television and the Internet. Hundreds have responded by signing a petition.

But none of the 6,000 Academy members have stepped forward with nominations for the couple and their work in Westerns.

Emr, a film producer, fears time is running out. Evans, 85, and Rogers, who turns 86 on Wednesday, have been ill.

"We should say 'Thank you' before we say 'Happy trails' to Roy and Dale," Emr said Monday. "Wouldn't it be nice to say thanks for the values they brought forth before we say goodbye?"

The Academy's board of directors meets in January to consider honorary awards.

"We'll probably have 40 names proposed at the January meeting," said Academy executive director Bruce Davis. "There are more distinguished names than we would have time to deal with on any given show. There are a lot of sponsors who will be disappointed."

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Prince Charles played the drums as girls danced during a visit Tuesday to a high-crime township.

The prince's three-nation African tour is his first official trip since the Aug. 31 death of Princess Diana.

At Nyanga township's police station, Charles spoke to members of a community policing project paid for in part by Britain.

He also opened a new area of the police trauma unit where rape and child abuse victims can receive counseling.

The prince's 13-year-old son, Prince Harry, went home on Monday after a safari, a concert and a visit to a Zulu village.

Day in the Life Movie Projectionist

Pete Thompson/The Daily Iowan

Lars Bakken, movie projectionist at the Campus Theatres in the Old Capital Mall, looks over one of the huge reels of film before "I Know What You Did Last Summer" begins Monday afternoon.

The man behind the scenes

With one thread of the film, Lars Bakken can make or break a movie-going experience.

By Greg Kirschling
The Daily Iowan

Move upstairs, beyond a door marked "Employees Only." That's where all the magic happens," jokes Lars Bakken, movie projectionist, or "door," at the Campus Theatres in the Old Capital Mall.

"This is my domain, I guess," says Bakken as he climbs the stairs to the thin room the theater's three unsightly 35 mm projectors call home. As the Monday 4 p.m. start time approaches for "Shall We Dance?" and "I Know What You Did Last Summer," Bakken must spring to work, however briefly.

"I have to say frankly this is the easiest job I've had in my life," says Bakken, a pony-tailed UI graduate and former film production student with one pierced eyebrow. "It's good if you like to read."

But before Bakken can retreat to his William Gibson cyberpunk novel, he has to flick a few small switches on each projector, kicking the machines to work. Then he goes downstairs and makes sure the theater temperature is just right and the movie is in focus.

Sometimes he has to bust a few kids trying to sneak into R-rated movies. Before he turns off the lights, invariably he must watch the same pre-movie Coca-Cola commercial, the one where TV star George Wendt says, "Hey, wouldn't it be great if the movies were more like football?"

"The only problem with this job is that when there's really annoying ads like this one, I have to watch them six times a day," Bakken says. "I just try to zone it out."

Earlier, a weird cracking sound

"I'm really disgusted with the state of Hollywood right now. They're putting out sequels and the same tried-and-true formulas. They're not willing to break new ground."

Lars Bakken
movie projectionist

starting coming out of the speakers on one of the theaters. The theater sounded like "someone playing an old Atari 2600 game," Bakken says, so now it's running on an emergency sound system. It only required flipping a switch or two, yet for Bakken ... "It was quite exciting, the most exciting thing I've done all day," he says, half-seriously.

Up in the projection booth, amid the boxes, filing cabinets and empty Gummi Savers display cases, all three movies are rolling now. The spool of 35 mm film for each movie rests on flatbeds, gray rounded circles that look like trays for a super-super-jumbo pizza.

The strip rolls off the revolving beds upward onto a series of rollers, traveling midair to reach the massive projector, which spits the strip of film down past the lens through another series of rollers.

It looks cumbersome, and it is. String the film in the wrong way, and the image will project backwards, with no sound. The fragile film will break in two if the film is laced through the rollers incorrectly. If something does go wrong during the show, sensors on the projector alert the employees downstairs, and Bakken will run up to fix it.

Training during this summer had its headaches. The first time he set up a movie by himself, he reeled it in wrong, but his supervisor didn't catch it before the film ran. The projector ended up scratching the entire "Face/Off" film print — for good.

"I came in the next day, and there were two lines running down the screen in two spots during the entire film," Bakken says. "People would come out and say, 'Is there any way to fix that?' No."

On busy nights, Bakken will help other employees with their duties, especially since he usually has two-hour windows in which he doesn't do much. As each movie nears its end, he turns up the lights, opens doors and cleans up people's garbage.

However, Bakken rarely, if ever, watches the films he projects through his little window up in the booth. As a "film purist," if he's going to watch a film, he's going to watch it whole. Luckily, he always works the Friday afternoon shift, so he's required to screen the new movies for scratches.

Working between 35 and 40 hours week, Bakken doesn't hold another job, but he is hoping for work with a production company in Davenport. This isn't a full-time career plan, he insists, but the perks — free movies — are nice.

All theater employees are entitled to a pass that gets them and one other person into movies anywhere in Iowa City. He figures he saves $30 or $40 a month on movies, so he can see "all that crap that I wouldn't spend money on otherwise."

He definitely advises against watching "Batman and Robin," the "worst movie in the last 10 years."

"I'm really disgusted with the state of Hollywood right now. They're putting out sequels and the same tried-and-true formulas. They're not willing to break new ground."

Spoken like a man who's seen a lot of movies.

Surviving Nov. 1

■ Six years later, the wife of a victim of the Gang Lu shootings is working to prevent future tragedies.

By John Russell
The Daily Iowan

When Jane Nicholson's husband, Dwight, was shot to death by UI graduate student Gang Lu on Nov. 1, 1991, her life was thrown into seemingly unending grief.

But by conquering her pain, she is now trying to prevent this sort of suffering from affecting anyone else. Nicholson is getting out an anti-handgun message through articles and speeches around the country; she is also currently working on a book of survivor stories.

"By going to national meetings, I've met survivors like myself, as well as people who are survivors of the gunshot," she said. "Their stories are just very poignant, and they come from every sort of community."

Last year she spoke at several national gun-control conferences and was featured by CBS News for her work. But through it all, the grief remains, she said.

"It's hard," she said. "I want to get the message out, but then I do these appearances, and it's so hard to do."

"I think that those of us who have lost someone definitely want to grant a kind of symbolic immortality to the ones we've lost, but that's not what we're about as survivor activists."

Six years ago, Lu shot and killed UI physics professors Christoph Goertz and Robert Alan Smith; T. Anne Cleary, associate vice president of academic affairs; UI student Linhua Shan; and Dwight Nicholson, chair of the UI Department of Physics and Astronomy. Nicholson, Goertz, Shan and Smith were killed in Room 208 of Van Allen Hall; Cleary was shot in Room 111 of Jessup Hall.

Only one person survived the shootings — Miya Rodolfo-Sioson, a student who worked in Cleary's office. After killing the five individuals, Lu turned the gun on himself.

By working with Iowans for Prevention of Gun Violence (IPGV), Nicholson educates people about guns and the risks they pose to society.

IPGV was first established by the families of the four victims of the incident immediately after the shootings and was originally called the November First Coalition. It wasn't until 1995 that Nicholson joined the cause.

But before she became an active member of the IPGV, Nicholson said she was confronted by the powerful reality of her husband's death, and that took time.

Kelly Etzel/The Daily Iowan

Jane Nicholson works on a speech for her group Iowans for the Prevention of Gun Violence. She has been active in the group since 1996. Her husband, Dwight, was killed in the university shooting in 1991.

"By choosing my own path of grieving and healing, I reached a kind of emotional resiliency so I could do this work," she said. "I purposely waited until I felt resilient enough, and that turned out to be almost five years."

Nicholson said she believes gun violence is based in the home and not in crime. This belief is based in the statistic that more than half of gun deaths are accidents and suicides.

"We tend to think of either predators or criminals, and actually more of gun injuries and deaths occur in arguments between people, just explosive situations," she said. "So we're not talking about just criminals, we're also talking about accidental shootings and suicides."

This is the idea Nicholson says is behind the gun-violence problem.

"We've become a fear-driven society, and there is the belief that guns make us safe," she said. "I really think we need to look at guns as the problem, not mistrusting every other person."

Hancher wins award

■ A forum concerning the UI's compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act featured fewer complaints and more dialogue Tuesday.

By Jutta Schausten
The Daily Iowan

Hancher Auditorium was commended Tuesday by the Council on Disability Awareness for providing special accommodations for handicapped patrons.

At an annual forum held in the Lucas-Dodge Room of the Union, key administrators for issues related to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) presented Hancher the award for its compliance with ADA guidelines to make buildings more handicap-accessible.

Carol Gruber, co-chairperson of the Council on Disability Awareness, said it was the first time the prize has been awarded.

"Since 1989, we've discussed how to encourage groups and faculty and staff to provide facilities that are welcoming to people with disabilities," she said. "Hancher has gone beyond the call of duty and made not only physical but structural changes."

Hancher was awarded the prize for providing special accommodations in the form of interpreters, large print programs and comfortable seating.

The award was presented to six Hancher employees, including Chuck Swanson, associate director of Hancher, and Leslie Ireland-Anstedt, assistant box office manager.

Ireland-Anstedt said every change a business makes to become more accessible is a change for the better.

"Every accommodation is one more welcoming avenue for people with disabilities," she said.

After the award presentation, 70 people in the audience listened to annual reports about facilities-accessibility at the UI, computers and telecommunications, parking and transportation and accommodation for faculty and staff.

The presentation was accompanied by another premiere: For the first time, the UI used remote real-time captioning to display the text of a speech, allowing hearing-impaired people to follow the forum.

Although the captioning occasionally failed and interpreter Carole Collier had to step in, key administrators said they were content with this year's forum.

Susan Mask, UI-ADA coordinator, said it turned out to be more than the mere "complaint forum" it has been in past years. The positive tone of the forum may be attributed to the UI's progress in responding to ADA requirements, she said.

"We had more dialogue and conversation this year," Mask said.

Only six people commented on the presentation and addressed issues such as inappropriate snow removal on campus, evaluation for learning disabilities and accessibility to academic advising.

Gruber said there had been more individual complaints in the past.

"Now we achieved the point to discuss more issue-related areas than single problems," she said.

Lawyers protest au pair murder verdict

Lawyers fight the second-degree murder verdict against English au pair as millions watch.

By Richard Lorant
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — With protesters outside the courthouse holding up signs such as "IQ Tests for Jurors," Louise Woodward's lawyers asked a judge Tuesday to throw out or reduce the English au pair's murder conviction in the death of an 8-month-old baby.

Millions watched on television — among them, Woodward from her prison cell — as the defense focused on getting the verdict down to manslaughter, an option her lawyers rejected just before the case went to the jury.

Defense attorney Harvey Silverglate said the all-or-nothing decision to limit the jury to first- and second-degree murder now "can be seen as a mistake."

But prosecutors said Woodward and her lawyers were just shopping around for a better deal and should not be allowed a reduced charge unless she admits what she did.

"The defense theory, if it worked, would have been brilliant. It did not work," said prosecutor Martha Coakley. "You cannot come back in and say, 'The devil made me do it.'"

A jury found Woodward, 19,

The defense theory, if it worked, would have been brilliant. It did not work. You cannot come back in and say, 'The devil made me do it.'

prosecutor Martha Coakley.

guilty of second-degree murder Oct. 30, determining she fatally shook and slammed Matthew Eappen on Feb. 4, the day she called 911 to say the child was having trouble breathing. He died five days later. Woodward, a round-faced young woman from the English village of Elton, denied hurting the boy.

Now at the center of the case, which has grown from the subject of local fascination to an international cause celebre, is Superior Court Judge Hiller B. Zobel, who said he could rule as early as today, possibly issuing his decision on the Internet through media and legal Web sites.

The judge can declare Woodward innocent, overturn the verdict and order a new trial, reduce the conviction or uphold the verdict.

Second-degree murder, defined as intentionally killing a person with malice, carries a mandatory sentence of life in prison with the possibility of parole after 15 years.

Manslaughter, defined as causing a death by a reckless action that showed disregard for human life, is punishable by up to 20 years, but there is no minimum sentence; Woodward could be released from prison immediately.

Defense attorney Barry Scheck, gesturing forcefully with the same aggressive style he brought to the O.J. Simpson case, told the judge the case hinged on complicated scientific evidence — a hint at an article Zobel once wrote in which he said jurors often are asked to consider matters too complex for them.

Scheck complained that the prosecution had not disclosed one set of autopsy photographs of the boy's skull until the end of the trial. He said the photographs showed healing of his skull fracture, indicating the injury occurred before Feb. 4.

But the judge interrupted him, saying it was the defense's decision about what points to make or not to make.

"I'm getting weary of your telling me how much this would have made a difference when you didn't put it in," Zobel said. "It's inappropriate that you should now say, 'Well, we decided not to put it in, but if we had put it in, this is what we would have done.'"

Coakley scoffed at the suggestion the photograph would have changed the verdict, saying X-rays entered into evidence were far more convincing than any photograph. The state "didn't claim that Martians killed this baby. It was clear what the evidence was," Coakley said.

Zobel also bristled when Scheck brought up the fact that Woodward passed a lie detector test. Such evidence is inadmissible in Massachusetts.

"Let's just get it straight so we don't get it confused," the judge said angrily. "The polygraph in the state of Massachusetts is something considerably less certain than a litmus paper."

Woodward's defense is being paid for by EF Au Pair, the Cambridge agency that arranged for her to come to the United States. Legal experts said the verdict, if allowed to stand, leaves the agency especially vulnerable to lawsuits by the baby's parents, Deborah and Sunil Eappen.

Another member of the Simpson defense team, Alan Dershowitz, helped Scheck prepare for Tuesday's hearing.

About 50 protesters, held at bay by police barricades, gathered outside the court, most of them on behalf of Woodward. They carried signs that read "Free Louise" and "Where is Justice?" Inside, supporters of Woodward wore yellow ribbons, while friends of the Eappens wore lapel pins of a caterpillar, Matthew's favorite toy.

Woodward's parents and Deborah Eappen sat at opposite ends of the front row in the courtroom. Matthew's father was not in court.

Coakley suggested that the judge not try to become "the 13th juror." As he left the lectern for the last time, Scheck said to the judge, "I'll leave it to your conscience."

Local students learn about Israeli culture

Fifteen Israeli exchange students are touring the I.C. area this week, learning about Iowa and teaching others about their homeland.

By Jeff Clayton
The Daily Iowan

When his school takes a field trip, Israeli student Uri Wollner and his classmates are always accompanied by a soldier with a gun.

"You can't imagine someone (in America) doing that," Wollner said. "Terrorism and safety concerns in Israel are not as great as Americans perceive, Wollner, 16, said.

"Israel is very safe," Wollner said. "Terrorist attacks and bombings do not happen all the time. It's not like one doesn't go out of the house."

Wollner is one of 15 Israeli exchange students visiting Iowa City from Ramat Gan, a suburb of Tel Aviv. Besides learning about Iowa culture, the Israeli students have lectured Iowa City high school students about life in their homeland.

The program, sponsored by the America-Israel Friendship League, will take these students to Denver and New York City following stops in Washington, D.C. and Iowa City.

At workshops for the UT's International Cultural Diversity Day Tuesday in the Union, they discussed misconceptions about Israel and disappointment over the establishment of lasting peace with Israeli neighbors.

Wollner's classmates Netta Lustig, 16, and Noa Pereg, 16, said the threat of terrorism makes Israeli youth stronger and more mature than others their age.

"The reality (in Israel) is a lot different," Lustig said. "We are challenged to be stronger."

Most Israelis personally know people killed in terrorist attacks or in the line of combat, they said. Although adversely affected by terrorism, they refuse to let it control their lives.

"By changing our lives, we'd just give terrorists what they want," Lustig said.

However, the 1995 assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and recent terrorist attacks have decreased the chances of peace with Arab neighbors, the students said.

There is constant concern about Israel's future, Wollner said.

"In Israel, in one split second it could be gone," he said. "You're always looking forward to peace."

However, the students said they are hopeful their generation will help to create a lasting peace.

"We're not prejudiced toward Arabs," Pereg said about her generation. "We can live with them now."

Some aspects of life in Israel aren't that different from the United States. They listen to music and hang out with friends just like teenagers here, Lustig said.

"Some think we ride camels to school and milk cows for milk," Wollner said.

Most high school students in Iowa City know very little about Israel, they said. In one class, only one student knew where Israel was located, Wollner said.

"Politics in Israel are very big," he said. "You live it, you breathe it."

Like most Israelis, Wollner will serve in the military following graduation. Service for men is three years, while women serve for 20 months, he said.

Despite being compulsory, most Israelis view service as an obligation and an honor, he said.

"(The army) protected me for 18 years of my childhood," Wollner said. "Now I have to serve my country."

Lustig and Pereg said military service is a duty and is not forced.

"I am excited," Pereg said. "It's a new experience. I get to live without my mother and father."

Although they said their trip to America has been fascinating, their home will always be in Israel.

"You can leave Israel for a few years, but you always go back," Pereg said.

Local man charged with prostitution

An Iowa City businessman was charged with two counts of prostitution Tuesday after allegedly soliciting sex from two women.

David C. Wooldrik, 47, of 929 Fairway Lane, was charged by the Iowa City Police Department after the two women told police that he allegedly offered to pay them for sex.

One of the women alleged after repeated attempts to obtain a loan from Wooldrik, who owns an Iowa City collection agency, he told her he would make payments against her debt in exchange for sex.

The woman taped the conversation with Wooldrik; he then allegedly admitted making the offers, Johnson County court documents said.

"First, he didn't want to give her the loan," Iowa City police Sgt. Jim Steffen said. "Then he made a proposition of her to engage in sex with him."

After the first woman came forward to police, the second woman came forward while the investigation was underway, Steffen said.

Prostitution arrests are rare in Iowa City, Steffen said. He couldn't remember the last time someone had been charged with the crime, but said it had been more than a year.

Wooldrik was released on his own recognizance and was unavailable for comment Tuesday. His preliminary hearing has been set for Nov. 20 at 2 p.m.

The charge of prostitution is an aggravated misdemeanor, which carries maximum penalties of two years in jail and a $5,000 fine.

■ Republican Whitman wins in New Jersey.

By Walter R. Mears
Associated Press

Republican Gov. Christie Whitman narrowly survived a Democratic challenge to win a second term in New Jersey Tuesday, while GOP candidates rolled to off-year election runaways for governor of Virginia, mayor of New York City and a seat in Congress.

Whitman made it with a 47 percent to 46 percent count over upstart Democrat Jim McGreevey early Wednesday — a margin of less than 20,000 votes out of 2.3 million cast.

Jim Gilmore was elected governor of Virginia, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani won a second term in New York, and Vito Fossella became the congressman from Staten Island.

While the close count in New Jersey mixed the GOP message, the Republican Party chairman said the elections of 1997 had built "great momentum" for 1998.

Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad, chairman of the GOP governors, said Whitman had suffered over the abortion issue. She had vetoed a ban on late-term abortions, stirring conservative wrath.

Gingrich said it wasn't just that, but lack of a clear message. "The campaign was in a muddle," said the speaker, who in 1996 had suggested Whitman belonged on the short list of vice presidential prospects.

Gov. Howard Dean of Vermont, chairman of the Democratic governors, said running close, let alone defeating, a front-rank Republican was a boost for the next elections.

Republicans swept the other top prizes.

In Virginia, Gilmore, who resigned as attorney general to run for governor, trounced Democratic Lt. Gov. Don Beyer on the strength of a tax cut pledge even Democrats deemed a masterful campaign stroke — repeal of an unpopular levy on automobiles, which had come due for payment just a month before election day.

With the vote count nearing completion, it was Gilmore 56 percent, Beyer 42.

"A terrific victory," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"It means taxes continue to be an important issue," said Branstad.

Gilmore's overwhelming victory propelled the Republican ticket to the election of a GOP lieutenant governor, John Hager, and thus to control of the evenly divided state Senate, where he will cast the tie-breaking vote.

"This race in Virginia will be a model for other races next year," said Jim Nicholson, the Republican national chairman. He said people are fed up with taxes, and when Republican campaign on the issue, they get enormous results.

It worked for Whitman the first time she ran, four years ago, promising a 30 percent cut in the New Jersey income tax, and delivering as governor.

She reminded voters of that as she campaigned for a second term, but they had other concerns. "We knew that it was going to be tough, and it is," Nicholson said.

Panel critical of nominee

■ Clinton nominee to civil rights post runs into trouble in the Senate.

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's nomination of Bill Lann Lee as the nation's top civil rights officer appeared to be in serious trouble Tuesday after a key Senate Republican criticized the Los Angeles lawyer's views on affirmative action.

Several Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee said they also opposed Lee, casting further doubt over whether the panel will approve the nomination this week and forward it to the full Senate for confirmation.

The White House said it had no plans to withdraw the nomination. Officials arranged a strategy meeting with civil rights groups and accused the Senate of playing political games with Clinton's appointments.

Judiciary Committee Chairperson Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, told the Senate that Lee's devotion to "preserving constitutionally suspect race-conscious policies that ultimately sort and divide citizens by race" made him an unacceptable choice for the post.

Hatch, along with other Republicans and conservatives, wants to end affirmative action and opposed the administration's position in a case challenging California's Proposition 209, which recently was upheld by a federal appeals court. The Supreme Court declined Monday to hear further appeals in the case.

The Utah Republican also is the sponsor of similar anti-affirmative action legislation that would apply to the federal government.

Lee, the Los Angeles-based counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund since 1988, supported the administration's arguments against Proposition 209 and disagreed with the Supreme Court ruling several years ago in a much-watched affirmative action case.

Hatch said Lee's answers to questions from the committee suggested that his "understanding of the nation's civil rights laws is sufficiently cramped and distorted to compel my opposition."

"The assistant attorney general must be America's civil rights law enforcer, not the civil rights ombudsman for the political left," he said.

Clinton said he was disappointed in Hatch because "everybody who knows Bill Lann Lee knows he is superbly qualified." He added that the White House would begin to lobby senators for their support.

"How could anybody in good conscience vote against him if they believe our civil rights laws ought to be enforced?" he said. "That is the question we will be pressing to every senator without regard to party."

Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said that Hatch did a "real disservice to Mr. Lee" but that it didn't necessarily kill the nomination.

"There are times when other issues have been proclaimed dead and we've been able to revive them, and I'm hopeful we can do that with the Lee nomination," Daschle told reporters.

Clinton has had previous problems with Congress over his choices for this particular Justice Department post. He was forced to withdraw Lani Guinier, his first choice, in 1993 when faced with a GOP filibuster in what then was a Democratic-controlled Congress. Republicans opposed her views on affirmative action and derided her as a "quota queen."

Survivor testimony looks bad for Nichols

■ In the second day of Nichols' trial, a bombing survivor calmly describes being buried in rubble.

By Steven K. Paulson
Associated Press

DENVER — One minute, Richard Williams was in his first-floor office in the Oklahoma City federal building. The next thing he recalls is waking up under a pile of rubble after a bomb wrecked the building.

"I could visualize my left arm out to my side," Williams, manager of the building, testified Tuesday during Terry Nichols' trial. "At that point, I could not feel anything ... I recognized the pink shirt that I had on that morning with my watch."

Williams said he was pulled to safety by a police officer. "I don't know how he got me out from under where I was buried," he said.

In a voice lacking much emotion, Williams described the wounds he suffered in the April 19, 1995, bombing: 150 stitches from shrapnel wounds, a crushed hand, broken cheek bone and head wounds.

At one point, Williams began describing screams he heard, but U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch cut him off, sustaining a defense objection.

"I think we're going on beyond what is relevant," Matsch said.

Susan Hunt, Housing and Urban Development manager, then testified about 35 employees of her agency who died in the bombing.

As she named each individual and used charts to show desks, jurors craned their necks to see photos of the workers who died. Nichols, in a white shirt, blue blazer and khaki pants, appeared agitated and whispered emphatically to his attorney.

At times during the morning testimony, though, some of the jurors appeared bored. One elderly man sat with his eyes closed, his head on his left hand. A woman juror fiddled with her fingernails.

Opening statements and the prosecution's first four witnesses on Monday provided a glimpse of what's to come in a trial likely to last the rest of the year.

Prosecutors acknowledged Nichols wasn't in Oklahoma City the day the bomb ripped apart the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building but said he planned it that way and was just as guilty as convicted bomber Timothy McVeigh.

The defense unveiled one of its key arguments — the bombing was planned by McVeigh along with unnamed co-conspirators and Nichols was simply sucked into his former Army buddy's anti-government fervor.

"Terry Nichols was building a life, not a bomb," said his lead attorney, Michael Tigar. "Terry Nichols is presumed innocent."

"Nichols wasn't there," Tigar declared. He was at home in Herington, Kan., with his pregnant wife when the bomb went off, killing 168 people in the nation's deadliest domestic bombing.

Nichols, 42, could be sentenced to die if convicted of murder, conspiracy and weapons-related counts. McVeigh was convicted of identical charges in June and given the death penalty.

With Nichols' mother, Joyce Nichols Wilt, watching from the front row, the government opened its case by replaying some evidence from McVeigh's trial. The most dramatic was a tape of the blast's deafening boom, followed by shouts and sounds of a building falling.

Recorded during a water board meeting across the street, the tape also was played early in McVeigh's trial. Nichols' jurors didn't react, but bombing survivors and victims' relatives in the courtroom wept. One covered her ears.

Instead of having survivors describe the horror of the bombing — as prosecutors did to open McVeigh's trial — lead prosecutor Larry Mackey concentrated on trying to link Nichols to the blast, no matter where he was at the time.

John Hurley, a security guard at the Regency Towers apartments in Oklahoma City, identified videotapes from building security cameras that purportedly captured Nichols' truck passing out front three days before the explosion.

Prosecutors contend Nichols was there to help McVeigh stash his getaway car, a 1977 Mercury Marquis. Tigar said there was nothing sinister about it: Nichols was in town to pick up McVeigh, whose car had broken down.

Another witness, Regency Tower maintenance man Richard Nichols, testified as prosecutors clicked frame by frame through another tape, recorded the morning of the blast. The tape shows a Ryder truck moving toward the Murrah building, one-and-a-half blocks away, five minutes before the explosion.

Lights, camera, liftoff: Mir on silver screen

■ Casting couch may be in Mir's future as Russian film director Yuri Kara proposes sending cameras to join the cosmonauts.

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The year is 1999 and it's a sad day for Russia's space program. The Russians are turning out the lights on their beloved Mir space station and bringing home the last cosmonaut.

But wait. There's one last snag. A renegade cosmonaut insists on remaining aboard, declaring he will orbit the earth for the rest of his days. Ground controllers order him home, then plead and beg, but can't persuade the maverick spaceman to abandon ship.

The last-ditch plan: Send up a woman to lure him back.

As if there hasn't been enough high drama on the Mir in recent months, Russian film director Yuri Kara is pushing to make a movie — with real actors aboard the space ship — before the Mir is discarded in about two years.

"In the next century, directors will shoot films on the moon and maybe even on Mars," Kara said in an interview with the Associated Press. "Someone has to be the first to film in space. Why not me?"

Even more remarkable, the cash-strapped Russian Space Agency supports the proposal, believing it will bring an infusion of funding and good publicity.

"It will certainly attract people's attention," said Sergei Gorbunov, spokesperson for the Russian Space Agency.

Space officials have yet to give the final go-ahead, but the idea is getting serious consideration, Gorbunov said. The director's biggest obstacle probably will be getting financing for the project.

"You don't have to go to space to film a space flight. You can do it using computer simulation or aboard a plane," Gorbunov said. "But if Kara wants to make it in space and he's got the money, well, it's his choice."

Once super-secretive, the Russian Space Agency is now willing to consider almost any offer for the right price. Russians may still be grappling with free-market fundamentals here on Earth, but space officials have proved to be innovative cosmic capitalists.

The Americans are paying $472 million over five years to rent space on the Mir. The Japanese paid millions to send up a journalist. Several Russian cosmonauts already have in-space acting experience, appearing from the Mir in commercials for Pepsi, Omega watches and Israeli milk.

The movie project, aptly titled "Space Flight Has a Price," will require at least $20 million to send two actors to the Mir, and millions more to finish. A financier has yet to step forward.

"I hope I will find someone a little bit crazy who will see this as a one-of-a-kind opportunity," said Kara, a director of several popular films.

He would love to land a Hollywood superstar and make the film in English to improve prospects for international distribution.

At the Venice Film Festival in August, he offered the female lead to British actress Emma Thompson, who declined. Also on his wish list is Tom Hanks, with his proven appeal as an astronaut in "Apollo 13," and John Travolta, a licensed pilot who has expressed interest in space travel.

To date, the only actor to sign on is Vladimir Steklov.

topped 47-year-old, is the only Russian actor to pass the medical tests conducted by Russian space officials.

If Steklov heads skyward with an actress, they would travel in a Soyuz capsule that only has room for three people — and one would have to be a real-life cosmonaut.

Kara would have to direct his space epic from Mission Control while watching a giant television screen that sends back pictures from the Mir. Cosmonauts on the Mir would serve as cameramen; filming would take about two weeks.

The movie is based on the novel "Cassandra's Brand," by Soviet writer Chingiz Aitmatov, a citizen of the ex-Soviet republic of Kyrgyzstan.

The science-fiction thriller features a rebel cosmonaut who wants to stay in space and become the first "space monk." Eventually, the Russian and American governments agree they must bring the cosmonaut down, inspiring the plan to send up a love interest.

"Of course, the script has a happy ending," Kara said with an enigmatic smile.

specify the price, saying that was part of the agreement.

He praised Moldovan officials for their "visionary effort" and noted that the country would be aided with excess U.S. military supplies and items for humanitarian-assistance programs.

He also lauded Congress for assisting the effort, which is sponsored under a program begun by Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., and former Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., which is geared towards helping reduce the threat from the Warsaw Pact's nuclear arsenal.

This change in smoking habits, he said, now is thought to be responsible for the rapid rise in adenocarcinoma, a lung cancer that occurs in the small air sacs and tubes deep in the lung.

In the study, researchers analyzed the types of lung cancer reported in the Connecticut Tumor Registry from 1959 through 1991. During that period, the deaths from adenocarcinoma in Connecticut increased from 0.9 to 15.2 cases per 100,000 person-years for women and from 2.4 to 23.2 cases per 100,000 person-years for men. A person-year represents one year of life for one person.

Monday as Assistant U.S. Attorney David Kelly summed up three months of what he described as "indisputable scientific evidence" against them.

Ismoil's defense lawyer, Louis Aidala, took his turn Tuesday morning, arguing that prosecutors stretched the truth to blame his client.

"Ismoil's no mental giant," Aidala said, explaining that his client was tricked into unwittingly helping others carry out the bombing by loading boxes that he thought contained cleaning supplies into a van.

Prosecutors contend Yousef and Ismoil drove a bomb-laden van into the trade center's underground garage, intending to topple the twin 110-story towers, kill tens of thousands of people and shock the United States into curbing aid to Israel.

The towers remained standing in the Feb. 26, 1993, attack, but six people were killed, more than 1,000 were injured and the complex sustained more than $500 million in damage.

Yousef, an electrical engineer of uncertain nationality, is accused of organizing a group of accomplices and building the bomb. He was arrested in Pakistan; Ismoil was arrested in Jordan in 1995.

Both men are charged with conspiracy and face life in prison if convicted. Four men have already been convicted of the same charge, with each sentenced to 240 years in prison. Another suspect fled the country.

Court revamps price-fixing law

■ Supreme Court allows an exception, breaking a 29-year-old ruling.

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, making the first-ever exception to the notion that all price-fixing is illegal, said Tuesday that wholesalers don't always break the law by limiting what retailers charge consumers.

The unanimous antitrust ruling could be a boon for consumers — potentially resulting in lower prices for products ranging from cars to gasoline to groceries.

But 33 states and coalitions of retailers had urged the court to rule the other way, contending that granting wholesalers such freedom might actually hurt consumers.

The decision was a victory for State Oil Co., still locked in a legal fight with Barkat Khan, who operates a State Oil service station in DuPage County, Ill.

A contract between State Oil and Khan bars him from pricing gasoline, sold under the name Union 76, at more than a suggested retail price that changes from time to time.

State Oil sells the gasoline to Khan at 3.25 cents a gallon under the suggested retail price; the contract requires him to rebate all profits he makes from raising that price without State Oil's permission.

Khan sued, contending the arrangement amounted to illegal price-fixing — a violation of a key federal antitrust law, the Sherman Act.

A federal appeals court kept Khan's case alive by relying on a 1968 Supreme Court decision that said all such price-fixing is illegal automatically.

But Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote Tuesday that the court now is abandoning that 29-year-old ruling and wants judges to decide the legality of such arrangements on a case-by-case basis.

"Vertical maximum price-fixing, like the majority of commercial arrangements subject to antitrust laws, should be evaluated under the rule of reason," O'Connor said. In other words, some could be found to be legal.

Under antitrust law, wholesaler-to-retailer relationships are said to be vertical, while relationships between competing wholesalers or competing retailers are horizontal.

Here's how a typical "vertical maximum price-fixing" arrangement might work:

General Motors, intent on selling as many of a new model car as possible, imposes a maximum price dealers around the country can charge. In one region, owning the new car becomes a fad and dealers there could charge considerably more for it; but GM's contract with the dealers, if deemed legal, would block any markup.

The same rule of law would apply if Kellogg Co. imposed a maximum price a grocery chain could charge for Corn Flakes, complicating the chain's desire to ensure that its brand name cereal always is less expensive. If Kellogg's demand were ruled illegal, the grocery chain could make its brand more marketable simply by raising Corn Flakes prices beyond what Kellogg wanted.

In the Illinois case, State Oil's appeal was supported in friend-of-the-court briefs filed by automakers, beer distributors, newspaper publishers and the National Association of Manufacturers.

Newspaper publishers, for example, said they could suffer losses in circulation, and eventually in advertising, if their distributors charge excessive retail prices. It should not be illegal for them to impose maximum prices, they said.

washington U.S. obtains a nuclear-capable MIG aircraft from Moldova

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States bought 21 advanced MIG-29 warplanes — some of which are capable of carrying nuclear weapons — from the former Soviet republic of Moldova to keep them out of Iran's military arsenal, Defense Secretary William Cohen disclosed Tuesday.

Cohen said the Iranians had inquired about purchasing the aircraft from Moldova, a former member of the Soviet Union nestled between the Ukraine and Romania. Since the evaporation of the Soviet Union, many cash-strapped former members of the Warsaw Pact have been offering their weaponry for sale.

Cohen said Iran, among other nations, was interested in the aircraft.

The planes were taken apart and flown by huge C-17 transports to the Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Ohio over the past several weeks, the secretary said.

He said the cost of the purchase was "quite reasonable," but he declined to

Low-tar, filter cigarettes are linked to a type of lung cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Filter-tipped cigarettes with milder tobacco actually have increased the incidence of one type of lung cancer because smokers have to inhale more deeply to get a jolt of nicotine, a study suggests.

The use of filtered, low-tar cigarettes closely parallels the increase of a type of cancer that occurs deep in the lung, said Dr. Clark W. Heath Jr. of the American Cancer Society.

Unfiltered cigarettes produce harsher smoke and larger particles. These have been linked to cancers which are usually found in the lining of the upper pulmonary system, said Heath, the lead author of a study to be published today in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Iraq halts order

■ Iraq postpones expulsions of American inspectors, while the U.N. suspends U-2 flights.

By Waiel Faleh
Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Iraq agreed Tuesday to postpone the expulsion of American weapons inspectors until after U.N. envoys finish their mission, in an apparent bid by Baghdad to take its case to end sanctions directly to the Security Council.

After an appeal by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, Iraqi officials said they'd wait until after the envoys' report to the Security Council, in order to create a "positive environment" for today's mission.

To give envoys a chance to persuade Iraq to cooperate with weapons inspectors, the United Nations announced Tuesday it has decided to postpone U-2 surveillance flights. U.N. officials said from New York.

The flights, scheduled for today through Friday, were intended to help determine whether Iraq is hiding nuclear or chemical weapons.

Iraq earlier had warned that the flights risked triggering Iraqi anti-aircraft batteries, reportedly on alert in case of an American attack.

That brought a sharp response Tuesday from President Clinton, who warned that Saddam would be making "a big mistake" if his troops fired on the spy planes.

Clinton did not specify what the United States would do in the event of an Iraq assault, but the government already has said it would not rule out a military response to Iraq's decision to bar American inspectors.

Iraq had vowed to expel seven American inspectors working with the United Nations by today.

It was far from certain if the postponement of the expulsion order, announced both in Iraq and at the United Nations, would solve anything. Iraq already has rejected the envoys' message: Rescind the expulsion order against the Americans and cooperate fully with the U.N. inspectors.

But by waiting to carry through on the expulsions, Iraq appeared to be trying to get the council to address President Saddam Hussein's agenda: a deadline from the United Nations for lifting the punishing sanctions imposed on Iraq for its 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Annan said Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz would come to New York to argue his government's case.

The Security Council has said it will not lift the sanctions — which include an embargo on Iraq's important oil exports — until arms inspectors certify that Iraq has eliminated its weapons of mass destruction.

The crisis arose last week when Iraq announced that Americans will be barred from U.N. inspection teams on grounds they are spying and working to maintain the crippling sanctions.

Iraq continued that policy Tuesday, blocking for the second straight day U.N. inspectors trying to check weapons sites inside the country. Authorities reiterated they would not grant access to teams that included Americans.

Annan sought to end the caustic rhetoric that has characterized the dispute.

"Threats and counterthreats are not conducive to these kinds of negotiations," he told reporters. "So I appeal to everyone to restrain themselves and give the process a chance."

The three U.N. envoys are due in Baghdad today. They're expected to remain for two days before returning to brief the Security Council Nov. 10.

Iraq decided last Tuesday to keep cooperating with United Nations Security Council's Special Commission (UNSCOM) but not with its American inspectors.

gathered for a soccer game at Al-Shaab Stadium that was preceded by a rally with chants of "Down with America."

Iraq's turning back of the U.N. weapons inspectors Tuesday was a repeat of Monday's action, when a missile team with at least one American was denied entry to a site.

"Today we went with our inspection teams to separate sites," said Maj. Gen. Nils Carlstrom, the Swedish head of the U.N. monitoring office in Baghdad. "All three teams were told they can continue their inspections, but without Americans."

He said the team leaders canceled the inspections and returned to headquarters.

The inspectors are part of the U.N. Special Commission, which is responsible for monitoring the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

Iraq claims it has destroyed its weapons and dismantled the programs to build them, but U.N. inspectors repeatedly have said that Iraq is withholding key information.

Also Tuesday, a high ranking U.S. State Department official, Martin Indyk, continued his tour of Gulf states seeking support for a firm U.S. stand on the dispute.

"The united will of the Security Council is that Saddam should understand that he has no alternative but to comply," Indyk said during a stop in the Qatar capital, Doha. He later traveled to Kuwait.

Saddam, in remarks published Monday, called for "a dialogue" that would lead to the Security Council setting a date for lifting the sanctions.

On Tuesday, the speaker of the Iraqi parliament, Sadoun Hamadi, called for international support for Iraq's stance, saying that the U.N. inspection panel "has been transformed into a political tool for the United States' schemes to prolong the blockade."

Panel to ban Web tax

■ Moratorium on local Internet taxes passes Senate committee.

By Scott Sonner

WASHINGTON — Despite objections from state and local governments, a Senate panel endorsed a bill Tuesday that would ban local taxes aimed at the Internet and online computer services and transactions.

The bill, opposed by many states and cities currently taxing Internet services, cleared the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee on a 14-5 vote.

"The Internet will be the business infrastructure of the 21st century," said Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., the bill's chief sponsor.

"To subject it to as many as 30,000 taxing jurisdictions applying different rules of taxation would be a mistake," he said.

The bill would declare a five-year moratorium on any state or local taxes specifically directed at Internet use or electronic commerce.

The Clinton administration opposes federal taxation of the Internet, where business dealings could rise to as much as $150 billion in the next few years by some estimates.

Connecticut, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Texas, Ohio and Wisconsin are among states taxing some Internet services, according to a New York State Tax Department study released earlier this year.

Leaders of the National Governor's Association and National League of Cities have been among the loudest critics of the moratorium.

Ohio Gov. George Voinovich, chairperson of the NGA, said a few large corporations would benefit from the legislation at the expense of Main Street businesses, especially in rural areas.

"The small corner hardware or clothing stores in towns across America will not be able to compete with businesses selling tax-free goods on the Internet," he said.

Wyden said local governments still would be allowed to collect taxes from companies doing business on the Internet as long as the taxes are applied in a "technologically neutral way."

The bill won't get to the Senate floor before Congress adjourns later this month, but Wyden expressed optimism that it will pass next year. A similar measure has been introduced in the House.

Typhoon creates havoc in Vietnam

■ Tropical storm leaves at least 120 dead and thousands more missing.

By Ian Stewart

SONG DOC, Vietnam — Mounds of splintered timber and twisted sheets of steel were all that remained of the coastal town of Song Doc on Tuesday, a day after Typhoon Linda cut a vicious swath through southern Vietnam.

While only 120 people have been confirmed dead, as many as 1,000 people were aboard 1,300 fishing boats that sank in the intense rain and winds; they were presumed dead.

Rescue workers said that another 1,000-plus people were still unaccounted for, and some may have survived the devastating typhoon.

Linda, the worst typhoon to hit southern Vietnam this century, laid waste to Song Doc and other communities throughout Ca Mau and Kien Giang provinces with winds gusting to more than 80 mph.

In Ca Mau, 225 miles south of Ho Chi Minh City, damage totaled at least $85 million — about a third of the province's annual gross domestic product. About 117,000 homes were either damaged or destroyed. "When the storm hit, it made the strangest sound," said Than Huu Khang, 34, a fisherman. "It was like a howling animal."

Rain still fell on him as he sat on his bed in a now-roofless thatch hut.

"You can see the damage for yourself," said Ca Mau's vice governor, Le Kong Nghiep. He called for both domestic and international disaster aid.

Along National Highway No. 1, which ends in Ca Mau town, trees were toppled and houses flattened. Corrugated sheet metal roofing was strewn across the road, and one sheet dangled from telephone lines.

Some residents whose homes were partially damaged laid palm leaves on their dwellings as makeshift roofs. Those whose homes were destroyed just sifted through the debris looking for belongings.

In Kien Giang province, damage was estimated at $60 million. In the town of Bac Lieu, 11,000 homes were destroyed. Most were flimsy and were no match for the powerful winds.

Officials said most schools in the region were either damaged or destroyed, as were many medical clinics.

The dozens of fishing villages that dot Ca Mau's coastline were unprepared for the storm, which made rescue and recovery efforts difficult. Some were buried by floodwaters while their power lines were cut, local authorities said.

It was the first time since 1922 that Ca Mau had been hit by a major storm, said Vo Thien Hoang, acting director of the Flood and Storm Control Department.

Linda also hit four provinces in southern Thailand on Monday, killing three people. Thailand's Interior Ministry said 13 people were injured and more than 30 fishing vessels capsized.

More than 100 houses were damaged in Prachuab Khirikhan province, they said. Damage to agricultural areas was also reported and in some towns electricity was cut off. There were no reports of flooding.

American oil company Unocal said Tuesday it would begin returning its workers to offshore rigs. The company had evacuated more than 700 people from its offshore facilities, which were undamaged.

The typhoon passed into Burma and was heading into the Bay of Bengal Tuesday.

City Council Elections

ELECTION RESULTS

LEHMAN, O'DONNELL WIN AT-LARGE SEATS

Derek Maurer consoles a campaign supporter after his defeat in the IC city council elections held Tuesday night. Maurer finished third with 40% of the vote.

After city council elections Tuesday, Mike O'Donnell and Ernie Lehman took at-large seats on the Iowa City City Council.

After a close race, Connie Champion defeated incumbent Larry Baker.

By Christina McNamara and Jutta Schausten
The Daily Iowan

As predicted by last month's primary election, incumbent Ernie Lehman and Mike O'Donnell were elected to at-large seats on the Iowa City City Council.

Lehman received 55 percent of the votes, and O'Donnell received 43 percent, beating Derek Maurer by a mere 3-percent margin. The other candidate, Ross Wilburn, received 38 percent of the votes.

Lehman said he was very pleased when he first saw the final results. Although he had hoped for this outcome, he said he felt extremely nervous in the last minutes before it was announced.

"I had a few anxious moments," he confessed.

Lehman remembered his first term and said that it might take awhile for the new councilors to get used to the council routine.

"I hope the City Council will take one step at a time," he said. "I think then we will have a good council."

Lehman commended his opponents as being "very respectful."

"I could not have had a better campaign with better people running against me," he said.

While Lehman celebrated his victory at the home of his campaign manager, newcomer O'Donnell gathered with his supporters at Fitzpatrick's Brewing Co.

O'Donnell attributed his victory to the hard work of his campaign.

"We had the best committee. I ran because I'm very confident that we can represent Iowa City. We are very anxious to get to work," he said.

O'Donnell is looking forward to working with a council that is more time-efficient.

"This council is going to work together, respect each other, and I think that the days of five-hour-long meetings are gone," he said.

In deciding his first course of action, O'Donnell wants to look at what the present members have on their agenda and examine the First Avenue extension, which was delayed until after 2001.

"I intend to be very attentive to the citizens of Iowa City," he said.

Defeated candidates Wilburn and Maurer both expressed their disappointment in losing the election. "We have a very unsympathetic council ahead of us," Maurer said. "The council is very strongly dominated by conservative business owners. I think we'll all be watching the depth of their commitment to public input."

Maurer said if he could start over, he would begin campaigning earlier and work harder to meet more people.

Despite his loss, Wilburn said he had a good time running for elections and will remain involved with the city government.

"I was really happy with my committee," he said, "It was a good campaign."

Wilburn said he hopes the new councilors will do a good job. "I wish the winners good luck," he said.

City Council Results

Ernest Lehman and Mike O'Donnell took the two at-large seats on the Iowa City Council with 55% and 43% of the vote respectively. The total voter turnout was 9,189 out of 35,782 registered voters.

DES MOINES — Preston Daniels, a two-term councilman, was elected the first black mayor of Iowa's largest city Tuesday, beating a former cable television executive who set a record for campaign spending.

With all precincts reporting, Daniels had 20,595 votes, or 54 percent, and Jim Cownie had 17,332 votes, or 46 percent.

"I don't think race ever became a factor in it," Daniels said. "It really was never brought out or played up. We were just two candidates who had different philosophies."

Cownie had been well-financed in his bid, raising nearly $230,000 and setting a record for the non-partisan mayor's race. Daniels' campaign raised about $42,000.

"I never tried to let that be a factor in the things that I was doing," Daniels said. "That was an element that was outside of my control. That's what he had to work with, we knew what we had to work with and we built our game plan around that."

Daniels beat Cownie by nearly 18 percentage points in last month's primary to narrow the field from three candidates to two.

"I called Preston and told him I would be happy to work with him. I promised all through the campaign that if I was successful I would do what I can to make our city better and I intend to," Cownie said.

Daniels succeeds former Gov. Robert Ray, who stepped in as interim mayor in May after Arthur Davis announced he was resigning in March because he has colon cancer. Davis' term was to have run through 1999. Daniels will complete that term.

would help the council be more efficient.

Another issue at the forefront of the District B race was the amount of money the candidates raised. Champion solicited $10,000 for her campaign compared with Baker's $500.

"I know he didn't spend much, but he probably spent a lot when he was a challenger," Champion said. "As it turns out, I might not have needed that much money."

Both candidates said they are excited about their futures.

Baker said his defeat may be a blessing in disguise.

"My second book will be finished a lot quicker, and I'll have a lot more time for my family," he said.

Champion said she was excited about working together with the entire council to improve Iowa City.

"There's not anything one person can do on the council," she said. "You have to work together, and I think this council will work well together."

of the entire community on how northeast Iowa City could be developed and so these decisions won't be made by developers alone," Brown said.

Local developer Bruce Glasgow said the petitioners' plan to extend Scott Boulevard as an alternate route for the East Side would never happen. The delay, he said, was just another step back on a plan that has been on hold for more than 20 years.

"I've only owned this land for 20-some years; I guess I can wait two more," Glasgow said. "Of course, all these do-gooders had come up with some kind of Mickey Mouse rule to try and stop (the extension)."

Senate promotes fast-track bill

Clinton's trade bill clears Senate obstacle and now awaits clearance from the House.

By David Espo

"An America-last strategy is unacceptable. If we fail to lead on trade, our influence will suffer in other areas."

President Bill Clinton

WASHINGTON — In the first skirmish of a trade-bill war, legislation to bolster President Clinton's negotiating authority advanced in the Senate on Tuesday. Meanwhile, Speaker Newt Gingrich labored alongside the administration to build a majority in the House.

The Senate vote was 69-31, nine more than the 60 needed, to curtail delaying tactics led by Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., and came as presidential aides flooded the Capitol to lobby for so-called fast-track legislation.

The bill would permit the president to present trade agreements to Congress for simple yes-or-no votes and deny lawmakers the chance to amend them — a process known as "fast track." Clinton and previous presidents have enjoyed such authority, but it has lapsed. The president wants the authority to negotiate new agreements with nations in South America and the Pacific region.

Clinton hailed the test vote in the Senate as a step toward passage of legislation that would "expand American exports, create American jobs, and strengthen American leadership in the world."

"An America-last strategy is unacceptable," the president said. "If we fail to lead on trade, our influence will suffer in other areas."

In rebuttal, Dorgan promised to ensure that there was a "full debate" over trade policy before the final roll is called.

"I am interested to hear how they credibly argue this trade policy is working," he said of supporters of the legislation. "Record trade deficits for four years, and they say it's good for the country. Not where I come from."

Most Republicans and some Democrats favor the legislation, but organized labor, environmental groups and many Democratic lawmakers — particularly in the House — oppose it. Many critics complain the legislation will lead to the loss of American jobs to countries where pay is low, working conditions are poor and environmental protection is lax.

Democratic Leader Dick Gephardt is leading the opposition in the House, and officials said it was possible that he and others would propose an alternative measure designed to underscore a commitment to free trade, but with safeguards for the environment and labor.

House Democratic Whip David Bonior of Michigan, also an opponent, told reporters at least 80 percent of the party's rank and file — roughly 160 votes — were against the White House-backed bill. He said only 20 to 30 favor it, far below the 70 votes that Gingrich says he'll need from the Democrats to ensure passage.

In addition to his public comments, Clinton worked privately during the day to build support for an expected vote on Friday in the House. He invited members of the Texas congressional delegation to the White House as part of a personal lobbying effort, and administration officials prepared an announcement for today on a package of aid for workers harmed by trade agreements or changes in technology.

In a striking example of cooperation between the White House and the GOP leadership, Gingrich gave Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky and Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman the use of his private office just off the House floor. There, the two members of Clinton's Cabinet met with a stream of lawmakers as they tried to build support for the legislation.

Gingrich also met with wavering Republicans during the day and faxed appeals to GOP governors in Iowa, Texas, Tennessee, Virginia and Wisconsin, asking them to lobby lawmakers from their states.

He indicated that the fate of the measure might depend on Clinton's willingness to compromise on a variety of issues pending at the end of the congressional session. His ability to secure Republican votes, Gingrich said at one point, might depend on "the president's decision" on resolving a disagreement over Clinton's desire to test 4th and 8th graders nationwide on their reading and math skills.

Putting on pounds poses cancer risk

Weight gain has been linked to increased chances of breast cancer.

By Brenda C. Coleman
Associated Press

CHICAGO — A study of more than 95,000 nurses provides what may be the strongest evidence yet that women who put on a lot of weight during adulthood raise their risk of breast cancer substantially.

Researchers said the reason is that body fat increases the amount of estrogen in the bloodstream, and estrogen is thought to promote breast tumors.

The study was reported in Wednesday's issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Women who were not taking estrogen after menopause increased their risk of breast cancer with every pound they gained after age 18. Among these women, those who put on at least 45 pounds were twice as likely to develop spreading breast cancer as women whose weight changed less than five pounds.

Previous studies have linked adult weight gain to breast cancer. But these were much smaller studies that looked back at participants' health habits instead of following the women over several years.

Also, the previous studies did not explore the separate contributions of weight gain and the use of estrogen, which has been linked to breast cancer, both in the new study and in some other research.

"After menopause, blood estrogen is derived largely from body fat, so the estrogen level is increased with obesity and weight gain," said the lead author of the new study, Dr. Zhiping Huang of the Harvard School of Public Health. "So you expect that obesity and weight gain increase postmenopausal breast cancer."

The study tracked 95,256 nurses, ages 30 to 55, for 16 years ending in 1992. During that period, 2,517 cases of spreading breast cancer were found, 1,000 in premenopausal women and 1,517 in postmenopausal women.

Overall, 33 percent of the postmenopausal cancer resulted from weight gain, estrogen use or interaction of the two, Huang said. Weight gain alone probably accounted for 16 percent, and estrogen use alone for 5 percent, she said.

The 33 percent estimate "is both sobering and encouraging: sobering because this is a large percentage and encouraging because both of these exposures are modifiable in many women," two experts, Jennifer L. Kelsey of Stanford University School of Medicine and Dr. John Baron of Dartmouth Medical School, said in an accompanying editorial.

Huang said the findings do not mean that women should forgo estrogen, which other studies indicate can have other important benefits, such as reducing the risk of heart disease, broken bones and colon cancer.

"They should consult their physicians and consider their overall risk profile," Huang said.

Counterfeit/Beware of bad bills

difference in the bills. The next day, the store manager notified her that the bills were counterfeit. The Secret Service also contacted her for a description of the man, she said.

"We always get $100 bills, occasionally once a day or every two days at the very least," she said. "It's not unusual, especially around Christmas."

Employees at businesses in downtown Iowa City, including Active Endeavors, Bo-James and the Holiday Inn, said they haven't seen any counterfeit bills.

Many Iowa City business owners and employees say they are somewhat prepared to spot counterfeits if they are used.

Deciphering the difference between counterfeit and real bills is briefly mentioned in the Airliner employee manual, said Randy Larson, owner of the Airliner.

"We ask them to compare bills to what they are used to seeing," he said.

Airliner employees are told to "look closely" at $100 bills, Larson said, adding that managers would be more likely to catch phony money.

Iraq/Clinton warns against Iraqi action

"It's just literally impossible to imagine what goes into such a convoluted and tortured mind," he said.

The president won congressional backing for his Iraq policy during a meeting with bipartisan leaders of Congress.

"All of us believe that Saddam Hussein is wrong, he should allow the American inspectors in, and we will support the president in taking action to assure that Saddam Hussein keeps his word," Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchinson, R-Texas, said as she left the White House.

Clinton urged Saddam to comply with U.N. resolutions and allow weapons inspections to proceed unhindered. "If he has nothing to hide, if he's not trying to develop weapons of mass destruction, then he shouldn't care whether Americans or anyone else are on the inspection team."

"This may be just another dodge," the president said of Saddam's threats.

Asked how the United States would respond if Iraq targets American-piloted U-2 flights, Clinton replied: "That would be a big mistake."

Clinton, talking with reporters in the Rose Garden, said the U-2 flights are carried out under the authority of the United Nations for a U.N. mission. "We will continue to consult with our allies on that."

"But let me say again," Clinton added, "the world has an interest, stated in the United Nations Security resolution, in preventing Iraq from developing weapons of mass destruction. That's what this is all about. There is an inspection regime which has clearly been approved by the United Nations. And Saddam Hussein must restore respect and opportunity for that inspection regime. That's all this is about. And we have to be very firm about it."

Urging a peaceful solution, Clinton said, "I believe at this moment we should do everything we can to resolve this diplomatically, and we should reserve judgment. This ought to be resolved diplomatically."

At the Pentagon, Cohen had said the U-2 flights will continue this week. The sorties are intended to determine whether Iraq is hiding nuclear or chemical weapons. Late in the day, the United Nations — which authorizes the flights — announced the delay until next week.

"Should there be any effort to attack that aircraft or put that mission in any danger, we would view it ... as a very grave matter with serious consequences," Cohen said. He spoke at a photo opportunity with Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai.

Cohen declined to discuss the exact timing of the flight or whether U.S. fighter planes would be dispatched as a protective escort.

"We believe the flight should go forward, it should proceed safely to carry out its mission of inspection, and we expect the Iraqis to observe that," Cohen told reporters.

Action to evade U.N. inspections only serves to feed suspicions that Saddam is hiding something, the secretary said.

Cohen would not speculate on whether the U.S. military would respond automatically should Iraq even train its radar on the spy plane.

Asked about Saddam's repeated testing of the United States, Cohen smiled and said, "Hope on the part of Saddam Hussein springs eternal that he will divide the United Nations on this issue."

Phillies' Rolen is NL Rookie of the Year
 NEW YORK (AP) — Scott Rolen was named National League Rookie of the Year on Tuesday.

On Sept. 7, 1996, the Chicago pitcher Rolen's right forearm with a pitch in the inning of the Cubs' game against the Philadelphia Phillies.

Rolen, 22, was named the NL Rookie of the Year after leading the league in batting average (.333), hits (159), doubles (35), home runs (12) and RBIs (92).

"I think I exceeded anything I could have dreamed," he said. "I hope I haven't reached the peak now. I hope there's something more to come in baseball and in life."

Philadelphia's 22-year-old third baseman won the award after leading the league in batting average (.333), hits (159), doubles (35), home runs (12) and RBIs (92).

NFL

Broken bone sidelines Grbac
 KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Quarterback Elvis Grbac, who rejuvenated Kansas City's offense last season, will be out at least a month with a broken collarbone.

Grbac was slammed to the ground during a Monday night game of the Chiefs' 17-10 victory over Pittsburgh.

After lying motionless for several minutes, he arose and walked into the tunnel in pain, and the Chiefs confirmed Tuesday he had a broken left clavicle.

He'll be replaced this week at Jackson by Rich Gannon, a 10-year veteran. But Schottenheimer refused to speculate beyond that.

"I think it's best we look at it in terms of indefinite," Schottenheimer said. "It's not going to be a long-term injury. It's going to be a body that heals at a different rate and speed. I'm interested in sitting here and speculating on how long he's going to be out."

Dr. Lewis Rosenblatt of Kansas City is expected to provide details of the injury he says will sideline Grbac for at least a month and a half.

IOWA FOOTBALL

Thein earns Big Ten weekly honor
 IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — The best Iowa football player in the Big Ten Conference.

Thein was named the league's offensive player of the week after scoring three touchdowns in Iowa's 35-17 victory over Purdue. Thein from Iowa City rushed 11 times for 54 yards and caught three passes for 23 yards and two scores.

Orchestra to lay it all on the 'tafel'

Hancher Auditorium will play host to the Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra, a group that performs music composed for Baroque-era banquets.

By Ben Schnoor
The Daily Iowan

When the Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra performs in Hancher Auditorium tonight, audience members may feel transported to a time when royalty, feasts and classical music were all the rage.

The literal translation of Tafelmusik is "table music," reflecting that much of the music the orchestra performs was composed for banquets.

"There's a musical connection to the name," Tafelmusik managing director Ottie Lockey said. "I'd like to think of it as coming from a time when nobility sat around with wonderful food and drink, and across the room there were musicians who would play... It was music for the court. The music played a much bigger role than classical music plays for us today... The name hearkens back to that period of time."

The Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra, Canada's leading period-instrument ensemble, is scheduled to perform tonight at 8 at Hancher Auditorium. The group, under the artistic direction of Jeanne Lamon, is scheduled to perform a "world premiere" by J.S. Bach — a new transcription of Bach's Concerto in D Minor, BWV 1063, for three violins. The concert is part of the Cambridge Place Apartments Concert Series.

The new three-violin arrangement of the Bach concerto was transcribed by Tafelmusik from the original, which featured three harpsichords. This is not entirely unusual, since several of Bach's harpsichord concertos exist in earlier violin versions. It is generally assumed that some of his other harpsichord concertos may also have origins in violin versions that have been lost. As a result, some performers and musicologists have attempted to "reconstruct" the lost "originals."

"Actually, Bach himself reconstructed his own pieces," Lockey said. "At that time it was done more-or-less commonly. It was a new way to interpret the work."

The reinterpretation process had never been attempted with the BWV 1063 concerto, until Tafelmusik took it on for violins.

"This particular transcription is quite unique — it is brand new," Lockey said. "The spirit of the piece will be there, the melodies and harmonies, but what you get with this reinterpretation is a different tim-

Tafelmusik Facts
The Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra was founded in 1979 and has achieved international stature through numerous tours and the release of nearly 50 recordings.

The group uses period instruments — instruments from the 17th century or replicas built to the dimensions of the historical instruments.

In honor of the group's name, the concert at Hancher will feature a table-decorating competition in the lobby, with the audience voting for its favorite table. The winning table-top designer will receive two tickets to an upcoming Hancher event.

According to Lockey, reconstructing the Bach piece is an example of how the group strives to bring back the genuine feeling of 17th century classical music.

"What's particularly impressive about Tafelmusik is the way they bring the music to life," Lockey said. "They use instruments from the period of Handel and Bach and try to replicate the freshness of the moment."

Tickets to Tafelmusik are $32, $29.50 and $27, and are available through the Hancher Box Office. UI students and senior citizens qualify for a 20 percent discount, and Zone 3 tickets are available to UI students for $10. Tickets for audience members 17 and younger are half-price.

Exposure" was based on his idea, his lawyer said.

With interest, writer Sandy Veith will receive nearly $10 million from MCA Inc. and Universal Studios Inc. in a judgment upheld Friday by the 2nd District Court of Appeal, attorney Glen Kulik said.

"It's very difficult to go up against a powerhouse like MCA and Universal. It's a rare day to see it to the end," Kulik said Monday.

The studio would not comment on litigation, a Universal spokesperson said.

Veith initially won the case in 1994 and it has been on appeal since. Kulik said he expects the studio will appeal to the state Supreme Court.

Court upholds 'Northern Exposure' verdict

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An appeals court has upheld a $7.3 million award to a writer who claims the TV series "Northern

Department of Justice Investigating Shaw
DES MOINES (AP) — The federal civil rights investigating of an Iowa City artist is expected to conclude Wednesday.
The Department of Justice, F.B.I. investigation of the death of Eric Shaw, said a spokesperson for the U.S. Attorney said.
"Obviously he was depressed that the violation that's been Overbaugh said.
Federal officials are trying to determine whether police used excessive force.
Shaw, 31, was shot and killed Aug. 30, 1996 by former lover Jeffrey Gillaspie as Shaw the phone in his Iowa City home was investigating an open case when he shot Shaw once in the head.
Last month a Johnson County judge decided not to indict Gillaspie.
In October 1996, Gillaspie Patrick White said the shooting was self-defense but said no criminal charges were brought against the officer.
In January, the Shaw's death claim against the city was dropped.
The federal investigation several outcomes, Overbaugh said.
If officials decide there is no federal prosecution, there will be investigation before the federal grand jury.
Justice department officials ask for more information to decide, or the case could be dropped, Overbaugh said.
