Doctors: AIDS gets more attention

Two medical ethicists say there needs to be more attention to low-income patients with HIV-related disabilities.

The Daily Iowan

A U.S. government report says the government needs to pay more attention to low-income patients with AIDS-related disabilities.

The report, released May 15, 1990, by the National Institutes of Health, said there is a need for more research on the treatment of AIDS-related disabilities.

"I think we, as a society, need to think about how we spend health care dollars," said Dr. David Casarett, one of the article's authors and fellow researcher at the UI Department of Internal Medicine.

"The problem is not that we're not treating AIDS-related disabilities correctly, but that we're not treating them at all," Casarett said.

Casarett and Dr. John Lantos, also at the University of Chicago, said they are not aware of any article in the medical literature that deals with the issue.

"We need to develop ways of taking the advantages and interest in AIDS treatment and distribute them to other areas," Casarett said.

"The AIDS issue has essentially one support group: the public in general and gay rights activists while other diseases affect similar segments of the population. Because of this, "Casarett said.

"I think AIDS sort of drags the chimes of a wide variety of political and social issues. It's being brought up far, far more often than many other issues are".

The way we treat AIDS is becoming more and more different from the way we treat other problems," Casarett said. "We provide programs and services for people with AIDS when we don't necessarily provide the services for other people,

Dr. Bruce Brown, UI associate professor of radiology, said there are several reasons for why AIDS treatment may receive more funding than other illnesses.

"The AIDS issue has a much broader concern and a much broader cause," Conner said. "But new medications come out and multiply much more exponentially than the AIDS issue.

"Because of AIDS' activities, Congress has been more interested than it ever has before in things that are not AIDS related because of the economic impact," Conner said.

In the article to initiate dialogue about the issues, Casarett and Lantos said they support the idea of a special committee.

"We're going to try to make a special committee," Casarett said.

"We need to do things like that in order to give low-income patients some hope," Casarett said.

"We also have to think about how we think about it," Casarett said.

"It's not like we're not thinking about it. It's just that the AIDS issue is getting more attention than the other issues," Conner said.

"We're thinking about it more and more often than other issues get a lot of attention," Conner said.

"We're not thinking about it in the same way we're thinking about it," Conner said.

Teen birth rates are down

In Iowa, teen births are down by more than nine percent.

By Laura Medlar

By Laura Medlar

WASHINGTON — Adolescent teen-agers, which have been the lowest rate ever recorded, the government said Thursday.

Teen birth rates are down by more than nine percent, statistics indicate.

"The decrease indicates that society is taking steps to reduce teen birth rates," said Laura Medlar, the secretary of the National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy.

"The rate for girls ages 15 to 19, down 11.9 percent from 1995, was about seven births for every 1,000 girls of that age. The rate for African-American girls was 27.5 per 1,000 in 1995, and 21 percent in 1996, according to the study released Thursday by the National Center for Health Statistics.

"Teen births tend to reduce more rapidly than births to older women, said Medlar. Albanian students, who had also recently returned to their classrooms, were to gradually return to the university, despite an earlier agreement allowing their return after nearly ten years.

In 1995, the latest year available for non-Latina whites, 3.9 percent of teen births were to African-American women aged 15 to 19, down 20.2 percent from 1994. In 1996, the rate for African-American teens dropped for the first time since 1995, the latest year available for African-American women aged 15 to 19, down 11.9 percent from 1995.

Despite the decreases, teen birth rates among both minority groups remain more than double that of 1991. In 1995, the latest year available for African-American women aged 15 to 19, the rate for boys dropped four percent from 1994 to 19 percent in 1995.

"The decrease indicates that society is taking steps to reduce teen birth rates," said Medlar. Albanian students, who had also recently returned to their classrooms, were to gradually return to the university, despite an earlier agreement allowing their return after nearly ten years.

The teacher had just walked into the room when she heard a noise. It wasn't a typical classroom noise; she could hear the sound of a desk being slammed shut. The teacher quickly scanned the room, trying to find the source of the disturbance. She saw one student, John, standing at the back of the room, his face flushed and his hands clenched into fists. John was known for his outbursts, and the teacher knew that she needed to intervene.

"What's wrong, John?" she asked, trying to keep her voice calm.

John didn't answer right away. He took a deep breath and then finally spoke, his voice barely above a whisper. "I...I...I just need to get out of here."

The teacher could see the tears forming in John's eyes. She had seen this reaction before, and she knew she needed to act quickly.

"Let's take a walk," she said, offering her hand to John. "We can talk about this outside."

John took her hand, and the two of them left the room. The teacher walked John to the school's courtyard, away from the distractions of the classroom. They sat on a bench, and John began to talk.

"I just can't take this anymore," he said, his voice breaking. "I've been feeling like this for months now."

The teacher listened, offering words of comfort and encouragement. She knew that John was struggling with his emotions, and she was determined to help him.

"It's okay to feel this way, John," she said, placing her hand on his shoulder. "But we need to find a way to deal with it, together."

John nodded, his eyes meeting hers. He knew that he couldn't do it alone.

The teacher and John continued their walk, talking and sharing stories. They found that they had more in common than they thought.

"You know," John said, "I've been thinking about quitting school."

The teacher was taken aback. "Quitting? Are you sure?"

John nodded, his face still in his hands. "I don't want to be here anymore. I don't want to be a burden."

The teacher knew that she couldn't let John make this decision. She had to find a way to help him feel better.

"We're going to find a way to make this work," she said firmly. "We'll figure out a way to make sure you're not a burden."

John looked up at her, his eyes shining with hope. "Thanks, Mrs. Lee," he said, his voice quavering. "I think I can do this."

The teacher knew that she had made the right decision. She had helped John find a way to cope with his emotions and to continue his education. It wasn't an easy task, but it was worth it.

"I'm glad you decided to talk to me," she said, giving John a hug goodbye. "I'm proud of you."

John smiled, his tears drying up. "Thank you," he said, turning to walk away.

The teacher stood watching him, feeling a sense of satisfaction. She knew that she had made a difference in John's life. She was proud of her students, and she knew that she would continue to do her best to help them all.

Senate ratifies NATO expansion

The U.S. Senate ratified NATO expansion Wednesday, adding Poland, Hungary, and the Czech Republic to NATO, despite opposition from Republicans and some Democrats.

The Senate voted 95-2 to approve adding Poland, Hungary, and the Czech Republic to the nearly half-century-old North Atlantic Treaty Organization and to leave the door open for other Eastern European and former Soviet bloc nations to join.

The strong bipartisan vote was crucial for a policy priority for President Clinton, who has made NATO expansion a top priority of his second term.

To advance it, Clinton said Wednesday he would issue an executive order formalizing a three-year moratorium before any new members can be added. At least 30 nations have expressed interest in joining NATO, some of which have already been invited to join.

The final tally was 95 votes more than the two-thirds majority needed to remove some of the worst obstacles to NATO expansion.

The move would go to the House or require the president's signature.

Clinton signed the executive order Wednesday after a round of meetings with European allies and Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien, R.N.S.

The first step toward expansion was the end of a Cold War that began in 1949, the year the Moscow Treaty ended NATO's original purpose: to ensure the independence of any of its member nations that are attacked.

But for Clinton, the end of the Cold War also brings the world closer to realizing the end of the Cold War.

Just two days after the shootings, Clinton made calls Thursday to a handful of senators still viewing NATO expansion as "a threatening" relationship with Russia.

"We'll be fighting a historical battle," he declared.

"This is the first time in history that we've ever done this," Clinton said.

"I'm really excited about it."

But opponents cited potential hurdles and said any enlargement would further isolate Russia and would lead to dangerous and unwanted military entanglements, perhaps with nuclear implications.

The Senate vote was a "crucial foreign policy victory for Clinton.

The vote also was a sign that the balance of power in the Senate has shifted more in Clinton's favor in 1996 than it ever had since he took office.

"It's a win for the president," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said.

"It's a win for the Senate."

Hawkeye Open on tap for Iowa men

The men’s track team will compete in its own Hawkeye Open Saturday in Coralville.

By Kathy Scholl

Half of the Iowa men’s track and field team will have the opportunity to take part in an invitational meet Saturday at the Hawkeye Open. The other half will have the opportunity to perform in Iowa City’s own Open meet on Saturday.

"We’re doing it in the past with some men’s events in the previous year as well as the weather and the track," said Terry Rozell, assistant coach for birdies. "It’s just a way that we can get our best scores together at this point."

There are latst of opportunities for birdies. "It’s not gonna be too bad of a weather tomorrow," Grant said. "It’s going to be a good day to race, but now that we have Yamini and Branch will compete this weekend, we have an opportunity to showcase the team against some respectable teams that you would have to put our very best foot forward, too."

Characters drive 'He Got Game'

As I sat in class, I thought about the recent film 'He Got Game'. The central story, which is about the characters, is more a testament to the young actor than to the older one. Jake Shuttlesworth's reunion when Jesus comes home from prison is more about the relationship with his father. The film is about high school basketball, but the story is about the boy's desire to reunite with his long-lost father and the struggle to stay on the court.

The agreement came after a tumultuous week for the show: "The other managers didn't feel much like playing with you because you were cable, so I didn't feel much like playing with you."

In the midst of tremendous grainy film lighting, the show was canned because she's a lesbian. DeGeneres: "This is more about the relationship."

The film does get back on track, but it's a stretch at best. Jake is not a perfect saint. He is not exempt from the consequences of his actions. The final scene, when Jesus looks at his father and says "I'm sorry", is a moment of redemption.

Of course it's been much easier said than done. The film ends on a note of hope, but it's a note that leaves the audience wondering if the characters will ever be able to move on from their pasts and start anew.

In conclusion, 'He Got Game' is a film that explores the themes of redemption, family, and the power of forgiveness. It's a film that will make you think and feel. It's a film that will make you want to see more.
