Prideful Indian, pride shows cheer of nuclear force

By Rashid Mir

NEW DELHI, India — Defying world opposition, India announced Wednesday it had exploded a nuclear device, becoming the world's newest nuclear power. The government conducted three tests in a day as India marked the 31st anniversary of its nuclear tests, on August 13, 1998, and was welcomed with audibles applause during the ceremony.

"We have just conducted a nuclear test," Prime Minister Manmohan Singh said Wednesday in New Delhi.

India's nuclear tests stunned the world. The government violated international norms and imposed a national emergency. It's a human crime, and an offense against humanity," Singh said.

India's nuclear tests were carried out in a country where violence against women is common and the same-sex marriage is illegal.

India's nuclear tests were not only a violation of international norms, but also a danger for the global community. India's nuclear tests were a violation of the non-proliferation treaty and the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

Microsoft wins case, Windows98 set for June release with browser

WASHINGTON - A federal appeals court ruled Tuesday that antitrust restrictions a judge placed on the sale of Microsoft's Windows software do not apply to the release of Windows98. The decision means that, barring further action by the federal government, the software can be sold to consumers in stores and online.

The federal government and 13 state attorneys general are investigating whether Microsoft improperly used its dominance in the market for Internet browser software to limit competition, especially with the Internet Explorer included in Windows. Microsoft has denied any wrongdoing.

The judge, Colleen Kollar-Kotelly of the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., last month ordered Microsoft to prepare a plan to address antitrust concerns. The company asked the appeals court to overturn the order, arguing that its only remaining concerns were about the impact of its planned new version of Windows, Windows98.

The appeals court agreed. "We conclude that the district court’s order bars no current or potential competitor from entering the market," Judge Alexander F. Park of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia wrote for a three-judge panel. "We further conclude that the district court’s order has the potential to eliminate competition for another current or potential competitor."

"In summary, the district court’s order bars no competitor from entering the market," Park wrote in his order.

In addition, Microsoft will be required to set up a fund to help compete with the company's new browser, Internet Explorer. The fund is to be divided among the government and the states that brought the antitrust case against Microsoft.

The lawsuit was brought by the federal government and 13 states in December 1998, charging that Microsoft used its dominance in the market for Internet browser software to limit competition, especially with the Internet Explorer included in Windows. Microsoft has denied any wrongdoing.

In a statement, Microsoft said it was pleased with the court’s decision and that it would continue to work with the government in efforts to resolve any remaining concerns.

"We believe our new browser, Internet Explorer, meets our legal obligations and provides consumers with a high-quality browser," the company said.

The court’s ruling does not affect the release of Windows98, the company’s new version of its operating system. The company said it would continue to work with the government to resolve any remaining concerns.

Israeli icon wins Eurovision pop contest

The Israeli transsexual singer Dana International arrives Tuesday to a tumultuous welcome in Jerusalem following her victory in the 1998 Eurovision song contest in Estonia.

Born as a boy named Shachar, she became a sensation in 1995 when she won a national transsexual singer's competition and was named the best new talent of the year by the Israeli press.

She was the first transsexual to compete in the Eurovision Song Contest, which was held in Estonia in May 1998.

Dana International's song, "Dance With My Father," was a hit in Israel and around the world, and she went on to become a household name in many countries.

Her victory sparked a bitter controversy in Israel, with some religious leaders and political figures expressing outrage.

However, Dana International also received widespread support, particularly from the gay community and from many Israelis who saw her as a symbol of courage and acceptance.

The Eurovision Song Contest is a popular annual television music competition that has been held since 1956, and is broadcast in many countries around the world.

Dana International's triumph was seen as a significant moment in the struggle for acceptance and rights for transgender people around the world.

Sanctions/Clinton vows penalties for India

Clinton has not said what economic or diplomatic penalties the United States would impose on India. But he has acknowledged that diplomatic isolation of India was "very likely".

Secretary Albright believes it was essential that India "right this wrong and return to its place in the comity of nations"." She said.

McCarthy said that the test had dealt Clinton's plans on China a "stinging and bitter" blow.

"Secretary Albright believes it was essential that India "right this wrong and return to its place in the comity of nations," she said.

Clinton's announcement comes just days after the Indian government announced plans to test nuclear devices. The test was expected to take place in the region of New Delhi.

The United States announced that it had withdrawn its offer to mediate the dispute between India and Pakistan over nuclear testing.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said the tests were "an act of aggression against the United States and the international community." He added that the tests were "a threat to world peace and security."
How life imitates the I. C. City Council

The fundamental premise of the Real World is: You get to own really, immediately unplaceable anything you can make a science exhibit. It is truly enthralling.

You can own, in the I. C. City Council, the objects of the real world. You can keep them, by the way, in potted plants enclosed within a cage of metal and green mesh. You can go to the council, and there you can own, keep and maintain a diet of small insects rather than human blood.

To introduce butterflies would both eliminate the butterfly problem and give local kids a chance to develop their pet collections.

Ironside displays his dominance

By James Kramer

The Daily Iowan

When Mark Ironside's name is mentioned, the first thought that comes to mind is the record-breaking senior wrestler for the Hawkeyes. The first thought of a seasoned wrestler has been in the Ironside's mind for a long time now.

"One of the best-ever Hawkeye's," the veteran may say.

Ironside displays his dominance

The latter assumption is true for one reason: he's the 1997-98 NCAA Champion in 184 lbs. Although he didn't win the first national title of his career, he has continued to dominate the weight class. In fact, he's been one of the top three wrestlers in the country for the past few seasons.

Ironside displays his dominance

The NFL is not the only place to find Ironside. The University of Iowa is also a place where he has shone. In 1997-98, Ironside won the NCAA Championship in 184 lbs. and was named the NCAA Division IIAV Resting Champ.

Ellen’s adieu

By Jerry Rather

The Daily Iowan

Tonight the TV screen that once brought us the lives of the middle-class Cleaver family—permanently leaving the audience to wonder what happens in the morning—will be emblazoned with the words "Bye." That’s right, everybody’s favorite neurotic shows its true colors as it finally signs off.

Ellen’s adieu is not a small event. It’s an event that will leave the viewers wondering what will happen in the morning.

Frasier should fill void

I have a theory on the last "Frasier" show. You know, the one where Frasier doesn’t get married. The show is going to end, and then Frasier is going to start a new show in the same slot.

But the likelihood of that happening is, quite possibly, completely nil, and doesn’t even exist. Just be glad that there’s an option to keep Frasier in the slot, and take care of any other shows that might be put in.

There has been talk of moving "Friends" to the 8 p.m. slot, which would make some sense. The show is in the slot where there’s a better chance of making a good choice, since that slot is better known by the network.

The adieu also marks the end of a era. Frasier has certainly been a part of the common story. Last week, "Prime Time Live" was the number one show, and it was estimated that it had sold over 3 million copies.

But I’m sure that some fans are hoping that the show will continue, and that the new show will be as good as the old one. I’ve never kept my fingers crossed for anything, but I’ll be happy to see what happens.

Speaking of buying tickets, some cities have organized a "ticket lottery" for the final show. This is a great way to make sure that everyone gets a chance to attend the show.

Jazz move on to conference finals

- SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - The Utah Jazz took back the Western Conference title because of some impressive defense.

The Jazz, who swept the Los Angeles Lakers in the Western Conference finals, will now face the Chicago Bulls in the NBA Finals.

"We just wanted to do whatever it took to win," said John Stockton, the team's point guard. "We're not going to let anything get in the way of our championship."
