UI to ask for public health master's

The new program is likely to double the faculty in the Department of Preventive Medicine, its professor says.

By Fritz Peterson

Students interested in earning a master's degree in public health with an emphasis on health promotion in urban areas may soon be able to stay in the state.

The University of Iowa plans to establish an Institute of Urban Health.

The institute would be composed of about 60 to 70 people in the departments of preventive medicine, environmental health and urban studies.

Unlike the UI, the institute would be self-supporting and not dependent on state funds for its operation.

"There's tremendous demand for the type of program that we're building here," said University President C. Donald McFarlane, who plans to establish the institute in the spring.

In the interim, the University of Minnesota and the University of Illinois at Chicago offer urban health programs.

"We want to be able to train our professionals to meet the needs of our city," McFarlane said.

Dr. Robert Kalb, dean of the College of Medicine, will make the operation of the institute to the community next week.

The program will also be used to support a special program in the Department of Preventive Medicine.

Said McFarlane: "We need an institute to train people who can take care of the needs in our community."

The canine conundrum

DON'T think I'm not aware of how many thunder and melodrama columns have been devoted to the subject of dogs and their behavior. How many times have we heard stories about dogs and their attacks on people, particularly children? How many times have we seen articles about the dangers of keeping dogs, particularly large ones, in the home? How many times have we heard about the potential for dogs to become dangerous to their owners or others around them? Yet, despite all this, we continue to read about dogs and their behavior.

Consider this: how many times have you heard about the dangers of keeping dogs, particularly large ones, in the home? How many times have you heard about the potential for dogs to become dangerous to their owners or others around them? Yet, despite all this, we continue to read about dogs and their behavior. How many times have we heard stories about dogs and their attacks on people, particularly children? How many times have we seen articles about the dangers of keeping dogs, particularly large ones, in the home? And how many times have we heard about the potential for dogs to become dangerous to their owners or others around them?

The fact is, young people are going to drink. It doesn't matter what you think, whether you believe they are addicted or not. They will drink. They will drink in order to feel good, to blot out the pain of their lives, to escape the realities of the world. They will drink because it is the only way they know how to cope.

The proposed party ordinance has noble intentions. It aims to deter those under 21 from attending parties where alcohol is present. And while it is true that the ordinance will decrease the number of underage drinkers, it will not stop the problem. It will not stop the problem because it is not addressing the root cause.

France defeats Brazil to win its first World Cup

By Barry Wilner

SAINTE DINDE, France (AP) - France proved that it was their turn and passion to seize their opportunity. In a typically French way, France's No. 1 seed hit two-run home run right at the top of the second inning, its first hit of the World Cup, giving France a 1-0 lead.
