Parents feel the tuition hike pinch

One mother says the increase will be voted on today, should be "parallel to the inflation rate."

By John Kuckelkorn

The cost of educating parents is on the rise as universities increase tuition costs. The increase in tuition costs has been substantial, and the trend is expected to continue.

Parents are concerned about the impact on their budget and the financial well-being of their children.

The tuition hike has been a source of discussion and debate among students, parents, and educators. There is a sentiment that the increase is not justified and that universities should be more transparent about their spending and costs.

Critics of the proposed tuition hike argue that it is unreasonable and represents a loss of efficacy in education. They believe that the increase is too high and that there should be a more equitable distribution of the costs.

The university administration has defended the increase, stating that it is necessary to cover the cost of rising expenses and to maintain the quality of education. They argue that the increase is in line with market trends and that it is necessary to keep up with inflation.

The issue of tuition costs and its impact on families is a pressing one in the current educational landscape. The increasing costs and financial burden on students and parents are making higher education less accessible and affordable.

Parents are recommended to consider alternative options and financial aid programs to help mitigate the impact of tuition costs. It is essential to stay informed and make informed decisions to ensure a smooth transition for students and their families.

Parents are encouraged to express their concerns and raise awareness about the issue to the university administration and policymakers. It is crucial to advocate for fair and equitable tuition policies that consider the financial well-being of students and families.

The current debate on tuition costs highlights the importance of transparent communication between universities and students and their families. It is important to have open dialogues and constructive discussions to find solutions that address the financial burden and the need for quality education.

In conclusion, the tuition hike pinch is a critical issue that affects families and students. It is essential to continue the conversation and work towards finding sustainable solutions that support both students and the educational institutions.

UI nixes honorary degrees

A Faculty Senate committee said degrees should not be given for political or economic reasons.

By James Smith

The UI has established a new rule that prohibits the giving of honorary degrees for political or economic reasons.

"I don't think honorary degrees can be separated from political considerations," said the committee chairman. "Once we award a degree, people will expect to get one and be disappointed when they don't."

I'm sure we can prevent it," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Bob Livingston, R-La., "It is important to vote for this bill to go home to our district so we can explain why we should come back as a majority-party government.

Magistrate judges have said they will not hear cases that involve the death of a minor. "We are not going to argue against the proposed bill," the Department added.

Those are red flags - Bannock is a former county manager, who newspaper ran a column before the Las Vegas Sun.

One of the arguments supporting the change says the police force should be able to focus on other responsibilities because of the service provided.

In a column for the Las Vegas Sun, Bannock argued for the change, "We need to make sure that when people think of police, they think of the police force, not some other group of people.

Two of the seven members of the committee were named by Majority Leader Mark Andrews, R-Ariz., and Majority Whip Essay Leibman, D-N.Y., who said they would not express an opinion.

Leibman denied the committee promised to vote against the changes, which would result in less police time being spent on minor cases.

One of the arguments supporting the change says the police force should be able to focus on other responsibilities because of the service provided.

Leibman said he would rather see a new bill to pass the House than there ever has been," said

U.S. Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., said the bill is a "good measure" that would go a long way to help people afford higher tuition.

He said he was "disappointed" with the increase, mainly about the increase in the cost of education.

And while some people tend to find out both in the media and online, "I'm not sure it's something they need to know," she said.

"I suspect there are more things we could do, but we need to bring people together and have a debate about the issues." We think that the university should have shared stories about the living conditions, especially for those living on campus.

No honor in cheating

No honor. What a sad fact.

Three students take mundane, as though to ensure that they don't feel too guilty later if they are caught. One is taking the test for a friend who is absent; another is trying to get away with something knowing he could be caught; the third is in panic mode, having been caught up in a mid-term exam and now feeling the need to box.

But everyone cheated. If those who didn't cheat didn't anything—what did they say they were doing? No, let's face it, this is what they are doing. They are cheating. This is what they want. They want to be sure they are not caught.

One reason is to ensure their own future. If they get caught, they will not be able to get ahead unless they bend the rules. Watson said: "If you cheat, then you are a loser. You're not human nature to conform to the rules. Before a situation in which breaking the rules is possible, not everyone will choose to cheat."

The agreement is only a facade that requires very little compliance. It is the West, by its inaction, has again failed the ethnic Albanian refugees in Kosova. Without NATO military intervention, Serraj's forces will not be able to secure homes. In light of this fact, it seems shameless for the West to continue to support the Serbs in Kosovo. Without the deadline of compliance to the agreement, the refugees will not be able to leave the contested province. Without the deadline, the goal of Milosevic as a public-relations success for both sides. To the end, the agreement is a public-relations success for both sides. WASHINGTON—Technology giant Microsoft Corp. portrayed itself at its antitrust trial Tuesday as an underdog racing to play catch-up with a giant market for Internet software.

Microsoft hit back at government officials who have charged that it illegally used its domination of the personal computer market to stifle competition.

"We are not a monolithic entity," Microsoft lawyer John Warden said as he outlined the company's defense case.

"Microsoft's market strength is such that it can be a source of instability for other companies," Warden said. "We are under no illusion that we are a monopoly."

Israel, Palestinians near agreement at peace summit

GORE: Future peace talks on Middle East to be based on Clinton agreement

WASHINGTON — Under President Clinton's prodding, Israel and the Palestinians appeared to be getting close to a preliminary agreement that might set the stage for peace talks on the Middle East, administration sources said yesterday.

In a sign of progress in their peace talks, Clinton yesterday went to Ramallah for closed-door meetings with Palestinian President Yasser Arafat, who met earlier in the day with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

Arafat and Netanyahu each emerged yesterday saying that they agreed to move forward toward a final peace agreement that would end the 40-year-old conflict.

Clinton aides said that the two leaders emerged from the meetings in a friendly mood but that much work remained to be done before they could declare a 'breakthrough.'

Meanwhile, Israel and the Palestinians yesterday said they would search for a final agreement that would resolve all outstanding issues, including Jerusalem, Israeli settlements, the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and Palestinian refugees.

Iowa freshman Decep Hampton debuted as a one-on-one threat with the Buckeyes. But that's all he does go to green...at least in a Buckeyes game.

When Hampton called and told me he wouldn't be here, it was pretty hard for me. Then all those people back in Iowa town started calling. Hampton didn’t even know we were talking and calling. Well, we are still going to talk.

But this is his first year, and everybody wants to see how the team is going to do. I just want to see that the Hawkeye is the big. And I think they are the best in the country.

He surprised me with the Buckeyes. Hampton’s biggest surprise is that he didn’t have to play in the Buckeyes’ season opener and that he didn’t have to play in the Buckeyes’ season opener.

I don’t think he’ll have it for the Buckeyes’ season opener, and it’s only for a month. His first season opener against the Buckeyes’ season opener.

I’ve been so supportive of my team and Hampton. Okey said, “I’m getting a lot of stuff out of it. And looking back, maybe I should have been here in the first place, but I’ll be happy.

In the battle of the best in baseball, the Yankees are the best.

Yankees manager Joe Torre knows the importance of maintaining a disciplined approach to the game. He understands that the team must remain focused and committed to the task at hand.

"I think it's important to keep things in perspective," Torre said. "I'm not going to do anything different. I'm just going to keep working on what we do best.

Maryland, more potential this year, and that might be the difference. I have a lot of confidence right now, and that was something I didn't have two years ago.

After his first season, Wardlaw was train ing on the ice for three hours before work, but he now spends nearly two hours a day. Wardlaw said that the benefit of an early season is that it allows him to train in the middle of the year, when he is more focused and less likely to be distracted.

The number-one opportunity for the Big Ten team was to win the Big Ten title.

Wardlaw was born into an athletic family. His father played baseball in the minor leagues, and his mother was a division I athlete. Wardlaw said that he grew up around sports, and that it was natural for him to pursue a career in athletics.

Wardlaw began his collegiate career at Drake, one of the few schools that offered him a full scholarship. He said that he was excited to join a school that had a strong athletic program, and that he was confident that he would succeed.

When the time to make a decision came, Wardlaw had a clear idea of what he wanted. He said that he was ready to accept the challenge of playing for the Big Ten team, and that he was excited to see how his game would develop.

The decision was not easy, but Wardlaw said that he was confident in his choice. He said that he was looking forward to the opportunity to compete at the highest level and to represent his school and his state.

The decision also had personal implications. Wardlaw was raised in a family that played sports, and he said that he was excited to continue that tradition.

Wardlaw's decision was a turning point in his career. He said that he was ready to take on the challenge of competing at the highest level, and that he was confident in his ability to succeed.

Union considers decertification

The Jets, after a recent loss - at the bargaining table, the NFL players are considering decertification. The impact: The union would go out of the collective bargaining agreement, and an injunction would be sought to prevent the team from playing.

By Bob Shorten

NEW YORK -- Rather than reopen the bargaining table with the NFL, union officials will meet with Players Association lawyers Monday to discuss whether the union should consider decertification.

"It's very seriously being explored," said one people that's it's in the hands of the Players Association lawyers to push. Their job is to explore all avenues that may lead to a resolution of the current impasse. The union and the league are at odds on several key issues, including the future of the lockout.

Buckeyes’ Murphy is mouthy and mean

■ The Ohio State interior tries everything to get inside the head of commentator

By Ron Miller

COLLEGE FOOTBALL - Ohio - Bob Murphy, the ESPN commentator, has a new role this week: Ohio State defensive coordinator Bill Young's goon.

"I know he's going to be on the Big Ten Network on Thursday night," Young said. "I don't usually really care what people say, but he does give me an edge - I can use it for incentive or motivation purposes."

"I think he's going to have a little thing on me, so I have to play a little tough with him."

"Like a little extra fire in my pants."

Young said Murphy has the look in his eyes, the words on his lips. Young said Murphy's words are going to be a little bit like a little extra kick for Young's players.

"I'm going to have to get a little bit of a little extra kick out of them to play against him," Young said. "I'm going to have to get a little bit of a little extra kick out of them to play against him."
