Strip-show aftermath - indecency v. freedom

One UI official says administrators may not have stopped the Union show even if they had known about it.

By Erin Crawford
The Daily Iowan

Even though a Jan. 30 strip show in the Union has many UI officials surprised, one administrator says they may not have stopped the show even if they had known about it in advance. The event, called "Ladies' Nite: African-American All-Male Revue Dance Show," featured five male exotic dancers from Chicago. The dancers performed strip, lap and table dances for an audience of several hundred women in the Union

Main Lounge. During the event, several dancers exposed themselves in front of the crowd, observers said. "I don't think we would have (stopped the show)," said Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations. "If it's illegal or if it violates policy, we can stop it. We rely on the assurances of those who arrange it to make sure the entertainment doesn't cross the line." On Sunday, a report was made to UI officials, who then began investigating. The Black Entrepreneurial Association, a recognized UI student group, sponsored the show as a benefit for a calendar to be published by the group. Show organizer Derick Mitchell refused to comment. "We'll be gathering facts from as many people as we can. It will probably be a couple of weeks (before any action is taken)," said Union Director David Grady about the investigation being conducted by UI Student Services. But as the inquiry continues, administrators are trying to decide when regulating such performances stifles expression.

"It's a freedom-of-expression issue," Rhodes said. "This is a university, so we don't want to get into censorship. On the other hand, certain behavior is inappropriate. We need to find out where the line is." Investigators are trying to determine the context of the strippers' full-frontal flashing to see whether UI policy has been violated. If a violation occurred, the organizers would be held responsible and handled through the UI disciplinary system. The Black Entrepreneurial Association reserved the Main Lounge through a process that any UI organization can utilize. Rhodes said she wasn't aware of any events that have been denied Union space in the past. Both Hancher Auditorium and the UI Theatres have hosted productions in recent years that featured nude performers. If nudity is to be in a production, a disclaimer is included in the show's publicity, and audience members are informed ahead of time, said representatives of the two venues. Neither stage has had problems with

'Real world' looms closer for seniors

The spring semester can be frustrating for many seniors looking for a job.

By Jerry Abejo
The Daily Iowan

Come May, thousands of UI seniors will be throwing their caps in the air at graduation. But until then, the jubilation of graduating can be tempered by the prospect of entering the "real world." For most students, that means finding a "real job." In this period of economic prosperity, UI senior Melissa Kudlac said what scares her the most about job hunting is there are too many options. "Offers are pulling me all over the place," Kudlac said. "But what if I choose the wrong thing? There are way too many what ifs." Kudlac took advantage of the wealthy job market and has a job lined up in Seattle as head artistic director for an Internet company. However, at this point, most seniors haven't found jobs and, for some, the process seems nerve-wracking. "Graduating seniors are facing a major life change, moving from school to work," said Sam Cochran, assistant director of the University Counseling Service. "Any major life transition and life change can activate anxiety for someone." Graduating seniors should determine exactly what they're looking for and then begin their job search. They need to think about such things as what they want to do with their degree and where they want to work, said

Clinton attorney apologizes to Monica

No bombshells occurred in Lewinsky's deposition with the House prosecutor, sources say.

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In their first face-to-face meeting, White House lawyers offered Monica Lewinsky an apology Monday "on behalf of the president" for the difficulties the impeachment investigation has caused her. They turned down the chance to ask any questions during sworn testimony forced by House prosecutors. The deposition of the former White House intern took place behind closed doors in the Mayflower Hotel's presidential suite, but was videotaped for senators weighing the impeachment charges. Rep. Ed Bryant, R-Tenn., spent about four hours posing questions on behalf of the House prosecution team that fought to persuade the Senate to summon Lewinsky. Her testimony closely tracked her earlier account to a federal grand jury, according to sources familiar with the testimony who spoke on condition of anonymity. The sources were not associated with the House prosecution team and worked outside the White House. Lewinsky's lawyers declined comment.

By not questioning Lewinsky, the Clinton lawyers passed up an opportunity to challenge her statements. One source said Lewinsky reaffirmed that:

- When she asked Clinton what to do about subpoenaed gifts from him on Dec. 28, 1997, his response was something like "let me think about it."
- White House lawyers had argued to the Senate that on other occasions, Lewinsky said Clinton had no reaction.
- In a middle-of-the-night conversation on Dec. 17, 1997, Clinton told her she was on the witness list in Paula Jones' sexual harassment lawsuit, suggested she could file an affidavit and mentioned their previously arranged cover stories to explain why she was coming to see the president. Lewinsky filed a false affidavit denying an affair.
- Bryant would not discuss the substance of the questioning, which lasted far less than the eight hours set aside by the Senate, but he said he "felt it was a productive session."
- On several occasions, Lewinsky asked Bryant to be more specific in his questions, several sources said. Six senators, three Republicans and three Democrats, sat in on the session, with two at a time acting as referees.
- The videotape will be made available to the rest of the Senate beginning at 7 a.m. CST today.

Candidate Bradley arrives in Iowa City today

Democratic presidential hopeful Bill Bradley will campaign in Iowa City today.

By John G. Russell
The Daily Iowan

With the Iowa caucuses just one year away, presidential candidate Bill Bradley will be in Iowa City today campaigning for the 2000 Democratic presidential nomination. "The Iowa caucuses are critical to every presidential aspirant," said Eric Hauser, Bradley's press secretary. "And it's a state that he feels connected to, being born just down the river in Crystal City, Mo." Bradley's visit here is the fourth stop on a four-day swing that includes Cedar Rapids, Dubuque, Tipton and Des Moines. He visited Iowa last October to support Gov. Tom Vilsack's campaign. Palestinian negotiator to speak on peace in Mideast Hanan Ashrawi, one of the leading Palestinian voices in the Middle East peace process, will visit the UI tonight.

By Quinn O'Keefe
The Daily Iowan

Although the situation in the Middle East remains delicate, one top Palestinian negotiator is nevertheless making a stop at the UI. Hanan Ashrawi, a former Palestinian minister of higher education and an ex-PLO spokesperson, will present a lecture titled "The Middle East Peace Process" in the Union Main Lounge tonight at 7:30. Ashrawi is the first lecturer to come to the UI this academic year who is currently involved in the Middle East peace process. "She has a very interesting position, which will be beneficial for students because she is Palestinian, and the Palestinian view is not necessarily as well-known as the Israeli," said Ben Wilson, vice chairman of the UI Lecture Committee. Ashrawi was appointed in 1991 by then-PLO leader Yasser Arafat as a negotiator in the peace process. She was the first woman ever to be appointed to such a position. However, she is not the first person from her family; her father, Daoud Mikhail, was one of the founding members of the PLO. "Dr. Ashrawi is certainly the most prominent Palestinian spokesperson, after Yasser Arafat himself," said UI law Professor Adrien Wing, who aided in creating the Palestinian Constitution. "We are privileged that such an internationally renowned figure would make time to come to Iowa during this delicate time in the Middle East." UI senior Melissa Mitchell had a

The blue moon hangs in the sky behind the Oakland Bay Bridge in San Francisco Sunday. The term "blue moon" refers to the occasional occurrence of two full moons in the same month, which usually happens roughly once every 33 months. The last full moon was Jan. 2. March will also have a blue moon.

RANDOM JOKES

• A man awoke one morning to find a puddle of water in the middle of his king-size water bed. In order to fix the puncture, he rolled the heavy mattress outdoors and filled it with more water so he could locate the leak more easily. The enormous bag of water was impossible to control and began rolling down the hilly terrain. He tried to hold it back, but it headed downhill and landed in a clump of bushes which poked it full of holes.

Disgusted, he threw out the water bed frame and moved a standard bed into his room. The next morning, he woke to find a puddle of water in the middle of the new bed. The upstairs bathroom had a leaky drain.

• A little boy was taken to the dentist. It was discovered that he had a cavity that would have to be filled. "Now, young man," asked the dentist, "what kind of filling would you like for that tooth?" "Chocolate, please," replied the youngster.

Hamilton happy with termination

NEW YORK (AP) — Success for actors is nice, but it comes with a heavy cost, says Linda Hamilton.

"Never create a legend, my dear, because either you have to live up to it or you have to live it down," Hamilton tells the Feb. 6 edition of TV Guide.

Of the recent breakup of her marriage to "Titanic" director James Cameron, Hamilton said, "There's no contact between us at all, and I'm extremely well and happy with my life. I am not destroyed."

Depp lashes out at photographers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Paris Barclay says his goal is to succeed as a television show creator. Not a gay show creator or black show creator — just a powerful creator.

Barclay, who won an Emmy last year for directing ABC's "NYPD Blue," is one of only a handful of black television directors. And he's gay, making him even more of an anomaly.

"There are no black people who are in a position to really run a show of influence in the country," said Barclay, in Sunday's Los Angeles Times. "OK, maybe Oprah Winfrey."
He says being open about his sexuality has ultimately been a good decision. "I realized I empowered people to make it an issue by not being open about it," Barclay says. Now, he says, he tries to encourage actors and behind-the-scenes people "to be open about it and not be so cagey."

Depp lashes out at photographers

The Sun tabloid reported that Depp "flipped out" when photographers tried to take his picture.

UI receives grants to research blindness

Researchers in the UI department of ophthalmology and visual sciences have received two grants from Research to Prevent Blindness, the world's leading voluntary organization supporting eye research.

Thomas A. Weingeist, M.D., Ph.D., professor and head of ophthalmology and visual sciences, said the department was awarded an unrestricted grant of $100,000 to support research into the causes, treatment and prevention of blinding diseases. In addition, an RPB Senior Scientific Investigator Award of $60,000 has been granted to Robert Folberg, M.D., UI professor of ophthalmology and visual sciences and pathology.

This is the second time that Folberg has received a prestigious RPB investigator award. The grant will be used to support the study of the microcirculation of melanoma inside the eye.

Weingeist said the department greatly appreciates the two awards as well as past support provided by RPB. To date, the organization has awarded grants totaling more than $1.5 million to the department.

Leasing lunacy begins anew

■ As students begin to sign fall leases, those who have yet to find homes are using alternative methods in their search.

By Erika Slife
The Daily Iowan

Some Iowa City apartment residents may have to schedule office hours because of all the random would-be renters who come knocking at their door.

It's leasing season again in Iowa City, and many would-be tenants are resorting to unconventional methods of claiming apartments by asking current residents if they are re-signing their leases.

"We have had four requests," said UI senior Kelly Donahue, who will be moving after this year. "Some group of girls called one day two or three times."

Donahue, who lives in Blackhawk Apartments, 319 E. Court St., said her neighbors have also been having problems.

Though future tenants can avoid potentially long lines and crowds during leasing through this method, property-management agencies say they do not encourage it.

"We don't give out apartment numbers of tenants not re-signing," said Kacee Morrison, an employee of Lincoln Real Estate, 1218 Highland Court. "We prefer for them to go through us, but we can't control what they do."

Some tenants in choice locations said they find the random apartment-seekers somewhat annoying but don't overly mind the questions. "We have had at least three or four groups a day," said UI junior Dan Khwaja, who lives at the Main Street Apartments, 325 E. College St. "But it's not a problem or anything."

Another target has been Gateway South Apartments, 201 E. Burlington St., owned by Associated University Realty, 414 E. Market St., where UI junior Matthew Wellendorf currently lives. He said most visitors just want to look around.

"We prefer for them to go through us, but we can't control what they do."
— Kacee Morrison,
an employee of Lincoln Real Estate

"The people say AUR sends them over," he said. "(AUR) has model apartments to show people, but we didn't sign up for it."

Though Wellendorf and his roommates aren't planning on leaving, visitors request to get their apartment anyway, UI junior and roommate Erin Eller added.

Keystone Property Management Co., 533 Southgate Ave., does not recommend random apartment-searching to its would-be renters.

"We do leasing on a first-come, first-serve basis," said Hillary Bock, a Keystone employee. "(Current tenants) don't have any control who gets their apartment."

Many of the property-management agencies have already started signing leases; since then, UI junior Mike Malloy, a Main Street Apartments resident, said he has not seen as many inquiries as before.

"It's slowed down since leasing," he said. "But it still happens at least once a day."

AIDS software reaches Nintendo kids

■ A software package designed by a UI researcher will be featured on PBS's "NOVA" tonight.

By Mike Standaert
The Daily Iowan

What happens when you combine video games with AIDS education?

UI researcher Jose Assouline thinks he has the answer. The neuro-virologist and professor of pharmacology has developed a three-dimensional computer software package that will make education and prevention of AIDS accessible to a younger audience.

"What we need to do — instead of giving (young people) a pamphlet, we give them a CD and say 'Go play with the virus.' That way they can see how it works and learn about preventative measures at the same time," Assouline said.

Assouline's research, which was developed with the help of the UI Image Analysis Center, will be featured on PBS's television show "NOVA" today at 7 p.m.

"Text-based, 2-D format is becoming outdated," Assouline said. "Using this software strategy, we can make this education and prevention information available to a wider audience."

"These are people who have grown up with Nintendo in their hands. They are very visually oriented and comfortable using computers."

The program uses interactive models to teach students — from junior high through medical school — about the AIDS virus. Various aspects of the disease, such as ways of contracting it, progression into and out of the cell and the treatment options available are elaborated on with the software.

"We are able to communicate this complex research in a simple language so that even kids can be able to use it," Assouline said.

"The idea is to use this information to educate people who are at risk. It seems as if the demographics of those at risk have changed over the last few years, and the younger generation seems to be more at risk now."

Second-year medical student Carver Nebbe, who is taking a pharmacology final Friday, agreed that this technology could be applied as a teaching tool.

"We have a lot of lecture time devoted to AIDS and HIV," he said. "I could see this being used as a good teaching tool. We've used similar software for anatomy and embryology, so I suppose it would be good."

Assouline has been in the field of AIDS research for 17 years, the last six of which were spent, in part, developing this technology. He said the program will help him with his research on viruses that attack the central nervous system, especially those that attack the brain cells. The software developed out of his need to use graphics in his own complex research.

For area woman, Dwight's jaunt was a $10,000 run

■ Tim Dwight's Super Bowl TD and speed dialing helped her hit the jackpot in a local radio station contest.

By Steven Cook
The Daily Iowan

Joni Oltmanns was in her Cedar Rapids office Monday afternoon, listening to the radio, as she does most days, when a co-worker started yelling "They're doing it! They're doing it! Dial! Dial!"

Oltmanns dialed. She was the 25th caller to the radio station 100.7, the Fox, and became $10,000 richer for her efforts. The station gave away the money to commemorate Iowa City native and Hawkeye football alumnus Tim Dwight's 94-yard kickoff return for a touchdown during the Super Bowl Sunday.

"Oh, my God, I said all day I would win this. Oh, my God," Oltmanns said on the air after being notified by Fox DJ Greg Runyon that she had won. "It feels like I'm going to have a heart attack."

Oltmanns, 31, of Anamosa, Iowa won at approximately 2:45 p.m. Contest organizers had kept the time of the contest secret, saying only it would happen sometime Monday.

Her husband, Scott, was on his way home listening to the radio, Oltmanns said. He had to call her to make sure it was really true.

"He said he heard my voice and almost wrecked the car," she said.

Roughly an hour after she won, Oltmanns said she was still trying to calm down. Her feelings of having a heart attack had since waned.

"I feel like I'm going to pass out; I hope I can drive home," she said. "I'll probably be on the phone all night. I don't think anyone will believe me."

The Oltmanns have recently bought a house in Anamosa, approximately 25 miles east of Cedar Rapids, so the family will probably use the money for home improvements, she said. They have two daughters, Kelsey, 5, and Karli, 2. Oltmanns said she also might take her co-workers out to dinner.

She has been a lifelong Hawkeye fan and a Tim Dwight fan.

"I grew up a Hawkeye; my dad's a big Hawkeye fan," Oltmanns said. "How can you not be a Tim Dwight fan?"

She said she hopes to get the chance to meet the Super Bowl star now that she's won the contest.

Phones at 100.7, the Fox, were ringing off the hook Monday, with people wanting information on the contest, said Runyon, who is also the program director for the station. This was the first time it has given away so much money in one lump sum, he said.

"We love Tim Dwight; he's a local hero. We have a local guy getting to the Super Bowl, let alone having a chance of scoring, it seemed like the perfect way to celebrate that great success," Runyon said.

"If Tim Dwight makes it back to the Super Bowl next year, you can count on us to do it again."

STATE BRIEFS

Lawmakers introduce gay rights measure

DES MOINES (AP) — A group of 10 Democratic lawmakers introduced a measure Monday aimed at giving homosexuals protection from discrimination under the state's civil rights laws.

The measure would add "sexual orientation" to the listing of characteristics for which discrimination is prohibited. The list currently includes race, sex, creed, color, national origin, religion and disability.

The effort to include gay rights under civil rights protection isn't new. Similar measures have been rejected in the Legislature both when Democrats were in control and when Republicans took charge.

Its future this year is questionable as well. It has not been listed on the agendas of any Republican legislative leader, and the GOP is in firm control of both chambers of the Legislature.

Republicans run the House 54-46 and have a 30-20 margin in the Senate. Despite that, backers said it was worth the effort to push the measure, though they were not optimistic.

"Whenever you bring up the idea of equal protection for people with different sexual orientation, the homophobes come out and that tends to turn people against it right away without giving it a fair chance," said Rep. Don Shoultz, D-Waterloo, one of the sponsors of the measure, which was introduced in the House Monday.

Legislature plans Y2K bug meeting

DES MOINES (AP) — The Legislature will meet later this month to hear updates on efforts to prevent computer glitches feared at the end of the year, Republican leaders said Monday.

The House and Senate will gather as a committee on the whole on Feb. 17 for the update, which will include not only steps state government has taken, but local governments and businesses as well.

"We've been working on it as a state since 1996," said Rep. Libby Jacobs, R-West Des Moines, one of the heads of the Legislative Oversight Committee.

The potential glitch, widely known as the "Y2K bug," comes because of computer chips which are programmed to recognize only the last two numbers of the year. There are worries of widespread computer failures at the end of 1999, and the state has moved aggressively to deal with the issue.

Lawmakers have set aside $20 million to fix the problem, and Jacobs said another $2.3 million may be needed.

"We feel good about the progress we have made as a state," she said.

Sen. Steve King, R-Kiron, who also heads the Oversight Committee, said the joint meeting is needed so all lawmakers are brought up to speed on what's being done to head off the potential problem.

Clinton unveils goodies in budget

■ The president's $1.77 trillion budget faces a tough fight with Republican members of Congress.

By Calvin Woodward
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton wants to come to the aid of stay-at-home parents with a bouncy little tax credit in baby's first year. When the kid goes off to class — perhaps in a trailer at one of the nation's many crowded schools — the budget awaits with money for more buildings.

For the child slipping into adulthood, Clinton aims to raise a federal grant for low-income undergraduates by $125, ensure that everyone can find something called a One-Stop Career Center and polish up last year's big effort to make college available to all.

On it goes, for the poor, the middle class, the middle-aged and the old.

For the not-quite elderly, there's a plan to let them buy Medicare coverage when they are younger than today's minimum age of 65. For the chronically ill, there's a $1,000 tax credit to help with the often enormous costs of tending one's health. Living in a nursing home? Clinton would toughen their inspection.

Smokers would help pay for it all. After seeing prices rise 30 percent recently because of a settlement between the tobacco industry and states, smokers face 55 cents a pack more in taxes if Clinton gets his way.

The president's budget reflects flush times and an impulse to do something for someone at almost every stage of life. It's an impulse more easily committed to paper than written into law — Republicans have their own ideas, which concentrate on tax cuts. And the president has seen many of his past proposals fail on Capitol Hill.

Specifically, Republicans want to take some of the projected budget surplus and cut everyone's income taxes by up to 10 percent.

Despite the goodies, Clinton's spending plan reflects a reluctance to go all out now that the nation is reversing decades of deficits. In this year before an election year, massive cash-in-your-pocket proposals are missing.

Louisiana tries to leapfrog Iowa caucuses again

■ Though the Southern state is proposing an earlier selection than Iowa's, Iowans aren't worried.

By John G. Russell
The Daily Iowan

The Louisiana Republican Party's decision to leapfrog its caucuses in front of Iowa's won't affect Iowa's status as the country's first presidential test, Iowa GOP officials say.

"Moving up the party caucus date doesn't increase its significance," said Dee Stewart, executive director of the Iowa GOP. "Our caucus is the first true test for a candidate's organizational strength and message."

The Iowa caucuses are the first indicator of each party's support for presidential candidates. Both the Republicans and Democrats conduct meetings to select candidates' delegates in each precinct; the candidate with the most delegates wins.

Stewart questioned the legality of Louisiana's move, citing a Republican National Committee regulation enacted at the 1996 GOP convention that threatens to unseat the delegates of any state that holds its nomination process before Feb. 7, 2000.

Currently, the Iowa caucuses are scheduled for that date; any attempt by Louisiana to jump ahead would violate the GOP regulation. Louisiana GOP officials have not set an exact date.

The Louisiana Republican State Central Committee voted, 125-32, on Jan. 30 to authorize a special 15-member committee to iron out costs and determine how many polling places would be needed.

This is the second time Louisiana has attempted to leapfrog the Iowa caucuses. In 1996, the Louisiana caucuses were held before Iowa's but failed to attract much candidate attention or voter turnout. Only 20,000 Louisianans voted in 1996.

According to UI political science Professor Peveril Squire, it will be hard for Louisiana to make the necessary changes to become the first presidential measuring stick.

"Because candidates haven't been there in the past, it's hard to get attention," he said. "Unless there's a lot of media and candidate attention, it's not likely to matter."

This candidate attention will be hard to come by because many of the prospective candidates for 2000 have already set up offices in Iowa and are accustomed to the state's being the first contest.

Former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander has a campaign office in Des Moines. His campaign manager, David Kotchel, said he sees no reason to recognize the Louisiana caucuses, noting that the 1996 Louisiana event drew fewer voters than the 1996 Iowa straw poll.

"Iowa has a strong tradition, and Gov. Alexander is committed to winning here," he said. "Louisiana is not a legitimate contender, because it has very few participants."

However, if Louisiana were able to draw a significant number of candidates, Squire said, it could have a significant effect on the 2000 race because Louisiana is traditionally a more conservative state than Iowa.

"It will shake things up and give candidates on the conservative side a better chance than in Iowa," he said.

Waits down, service up at Student Health

■ Medical care for UI students has improved after a semester-long streamlining process.

By Rebecca Anderson
The Daily Iowan

The flu season has set in, and students wishing to see a doctor have been discovering that it is easier than before to access the UI Student Health Service.

"Every day, there have been appointments available with doctors," said Larry Afifi, a nurse manager. "Things are better than they were last semester."

Since last semester, Student Health has added another appointment secretary and a triage nurse. These additions have eased most of the problems that were encountered during the first few months of operating on an appointment-only basis, Afifi said.

"We have been watching this situation very carefully," she said. "We have not had a backlog of calls (for appointments)."

UISG members have been meeting with Student Health officials to find ways in which the service could be improved for students who already have tight schedules, said Brian White, UISG president.

"I've been in before and after the changes," he said. "I think it's a lot better and more conducive to students' schedules."

Those who need urgent care are seen by the triage nurse, who assesses their condition and determines whether to schedule an emergency appointment that day.

There is a slight possibility of delay if the nurse needs to fit several patients in for appointments. But this does not happen often enough to warrant concern, Afifi said.

Student Health's efforts have paid off for students who have had to visit the clinic, UI senior Tracy Olson said.

"It was a lot easier to get in than it was last semester," he said.

Compared with waiting two days for an appointment and 45 minutes to see a doctor, Olson said, he was in and out of the clinic in 20 minutes last week.

"I just didn't go to Student Health last semester, when I really should have," he said.

Student Health also offers a nurse line, on which students can call and speak directly with a nurse to assess their medical needs. If the nurse feels their condition is urgent, she will schedule an appointment with the triage nurse.

Have your Coke and read it too

Diet Coke teams up with publishers for a book/beverage combo.

By Hillel Italle
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In an era of mega-bookstores and mega-marketing, when many complain the written word is being peddled like a soft drink, the Coca-Cola Company and several publishers have decided to do just that.

Starting today, purchasers of 12- and 24-packs of Diet Coke and caffeine-free Diet Coke will find colorful booklets enclosed, affixed like a straw on a juice box. Each will contain excerpts from a new work by a popular writer, among them Elmore Leonard, Barbara Taylor Bradford and Lisa Scottoline.

With 40-45 million such packages planned, that means an enormous potential readership.

"I think it's terrific. It's a very creative idea," said Scottoline, author of "Mistaken Identity" and other legal thrillers. "I love being in grocery stores. I want to be in gas stations. My goal as an author is to be read."

"I think all of us around New York City publishing brightened up when we heard about this," said Cathy Hemming, executive vice president and publisher of HarperCollins. "It's unusual to have the opportunity to reach that many consumers."

Diet Coke drinkers also will have the chance to submit 500-word essays, fact or fiction, on "Living Life to the Fullest." The contest, which ends March 12, offers an all-expense paid trip for two to New York City, "the chance to live the life of a best-selling author."

The visit will include a tour of HarperCollins and meetings with professional editors to discuss the winner's writing. The winning story, along with those of the 24 finalists, will be packaged as a virtual book on the Diet Coke Web site.

"The beverage industry is a very crowded field and every year the big beverage companies plan a vast array of promotions," said John Sicher, editor and publisher of the trade publication Beverage Digest. "Any promotion that stands out and draws attention to the brand by definition is successful."

Todd Putman, a Coca-Cola executive, said research indicates that Diet Coke drinkers may be better-educated and more affluent than other soft-drink consumers. They also tended to read more books.

"Across the board, our consumers said they liked empowerment stories, underdog stories. They also were looking for thrilling stories and mysteries," said Putman, managing director for carbonated soft drinks.

From Walt Whitman endorsing his own brand of cigars to John Irving contributing an original story for an Absolut vodka promotion, the writing world has a long history with the world of advertisement. A major reason newspapers started book review sections, at the turn of the century, was to create space for publishing ads.

But the Diet Coke campaign is an especially blunt presentation of the printed word as commerce. And not all publishing houses think that's a good idea.

"We tend to be a bit traditional," said Laurie Brown, vice president of marketing for Farrar, Straus & Giroux, whose writers include National Book Award winners Alice McDermott and Edward Ball. "It will always depend on the book and the author, but generally the house thinks of itself in a slightly different way and probably wouldn't participate."

None of the writers involved with the Diet Coke campaign are being paid — although Bradford said she will do some promotion. And, unlike Irving, none have tailored their work for the product.

Philip Levine, a Pulitzer Prize-winning poet, likens the Diet Coke booklets to the poems that appear on subway trains in New York City: Not the most dignified way to get your work read, but better than not being read at all.

"I don't think I'd have any objections to having my work used by Diet Coke," Levine mused. "But I would also expect some remuneration. They must make hundreds of millions of dollars, and I make a pittance. They're using it to promote their rotten drink, so maybe I can get some subsistence from them to promote my rotten career."

'Full Monty' to free speech

Who says there's no reason to hang out in the Union? Just last Saturday, hundreds of women spectators flocked to the Main Lounge to see five male exotic dancers prove that this was definitely not the case.

The dancers hung out, all right. All the way out. The African-American All-Male Revue Dance Show held on Jan. 30 displayed the goods at "Ladies' Nite," an event intended to help raise money for a calendar featuring 14 local African-American men. So where's the beef?

News of the show has drawn negative reactions from UI officials. The DI confirmed that Hancher Auditorium and the UI Theatres have both hosted performances in the past in which nudity was involved. But according to Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations, events such as those are performances wherein "the work as a whole is being evaluated" and "nudity is not the focus of the event."

Steve Parrott, associate director of University Relations, said the strip show's frontal nudity may have been in conflict with UI policy, depending on the context of the event. And Rhodes said that, while the strip show is an issue of freedom of expression, it is not comparable with Hancher performances that involve nudity.

"Certain behavior is inappropriate," Rhodes said. "We need to find out where the line is." Yes, do tell. Certain behavior, the line, UI policy ... they've all evaded explicit definition thus far. For such an established institution, UI policy is sure a tricky little fellow to pin down in this case.

If UI officials decide that "policy" deems this event inappropriate, then they, too, must show us their stuff. Gosh darn it, it's got to be around here somewhere.

The question that will subsequently be raised in the investigation into the UI's version of "The Full Monty" will ask: If UI officials could go back and prevent the show from taking place, would they? Could they? Will they if it happens again in the future? The issue can be stripped down to the bare essentials: freedom of speech and the First Amendment.

If the First Amendment means anything, it means that even controversial speech is protected. If the principle of free speech were to be demonstrated anywhere, it would be at a university, where students are educated to be free thinkers.

If freedom of speech were to be demonstrated at any university, it would be at the UI, where the arts, literature and the law have a long and respected tradition.

This much is clear: If only the UI's policies were that clear.

Dwight does all right

Tim Dwight is the man. His performance in Sunday's Super Bowl was electrifying. It made an otherwise ordinary game, in which the Denver Broncos beat the Atlanta Falcons, 34-19, seem extraordinary.

And we're not saying this because Dwight's a local boy who made good, either. Seeing Dwight take a fourth-quarter kickoff return for a touchdown was wonderful. It was just like those fall afternoons not so long ago when Dwight would send Kinnick Stadium into a frenzy with his football exploits.

A former All-American at Iowa and standout at Iowa City City High School, Dwight took the ball at the six yard-line and, running behind a wedge of much larger players, found a seam to exploit, broke a tackle at the 40 yard-line and just out ran the defenders. As he made his way toward the endzone and with defenders out of breath or out of sight, Dwight turned around and started running backwards.

It was as if Dwight were taking in the show, admiring his accomplishment, instead of showing off.

The touchdown run was no fluke. Dwight had a great all-around game, averaging 42 yards in his five kickoff returns and even lining up as quarterback and receiver.

What once was a secret only Iowans knew is now public knowledge for all: Dwight is a great football player — at any level. Some wondered whether Dwight, who is 5-foot-8 and 185 pounds, was big enough to play in the National Football League. But his play all season long for Atlanta — and especially at the Super Bowl — should erase those doubts.

Dwight has said his dream job would be running kickoff returns in the NFL for a few hundred thousand a year.

Not only has Dwight's dream come true, but he got to live out every football player's dream of competing in the Super Bowl.

Dwight should be proud of his performance and accomplishments. We are.

Hypocritical support of Clinton

TODAY, the feminist movement is on its deathbed.

The movement is suffering from its long-standing bout with hypocrisy. Classic symptoms of false virtue and disingenuous principles continue to excrete from the movement and, thus, the prognosis for a recovery seems dim.

The symptoms of hypocrisy first manifested around seven years ago, when feminists decided to forgo their ideology and campaign for the adulterous William Jefferson Clinton to elected as president. From that watershed moment, the feminist movement has shamelessly subordinated women's rights to a leftist political agenda that has effectively aborted the political viability of the movement forevermore.

One need look no further than the issue of sexual harassment to see how far the illness of hypocrisy has spread within the feminist movement. In 1991, feminists stormed onto the scene to help Americans sort through the Anita Hill spectacle during Clarence Thomas' Supreme Court nomination. Here, feminists told the American people, "Sexual harassment isn't about sex, it's about power." After Thomas' confirmation, feminists blasted the senators who voted for Thomas by saying, "They just don't get it."

However, eight years later, in the throes of the Clinton impeachment, it is the feminist movement itself that does not get it.

President Clinton used his position of power to entice a subordinate to perform oral sex on him. That act, as defined by feminists in 1991, is sexual harassment. That type of degradation of women is the very thing the feminist movement is supposed to combat, but feminists continue to back Clinton's presidency. Why? The answer is that hypocrisy has left the feminist movement weak and misguided.

Evidence of the malaise is illuminated by the feminists' reactions toward Paula Jones and her sexual-harassment suit that was filed against Clinton. Here, the feminists were given a proverbial split in the road. If they supported Jones, they could proclaim outrage against the president's pattern of conduct toward women and start to fight off their hypocrisy. To ignore Jones' claims, however, would confirm that feminists were indeed exuding symptoms of false virtue and disingenuous principles. The feminists chose to turn their backs on Jones, and, as a result, the movement suffered yet another setback in its battle with hypocrisy.

However, few of us knew how far hypocrisy had set back the feminist movement until the feminists seemed content to remain on the same sideline as Larry Flynt. Flynt, the notorious owner of Hustler magazine and advocate of pornography, is universally recognized by feminists to be the full embodiment of the word misogyny.

LANCE HAMBY

Nonetheless, feminists have offered nary a discouraging word against Clinton for his reported dependence on Flynt to disparage and demean the Republican Party. Here, the overwhelming power of hypocrisy is realized when even Flynt, who is viewed as a woman hater by feminists, is now an acceptable ally of the movement.

The above actions are evidence that hypocrisy has blinded the feminist movement. The root of this illness can be traced to the movement's obsession with its own "anti" agenda towards: Christians, heterosexuals, conservatives, marriage and the family. That "anti" agenda has led the movement astray and allowed its focus to be dominated by a radical ideology and not an ideology that focuses on values for women.

Thus, feminists now fail to see their own hypocrisy when they demand that all women be given the freedom of choice and yet demean those women who use that choice to advocate against the practice of abortion.

The symptoms of false virtue and disingenuous principles currently emanate from all parts of the feminist movement. Last rites have been called for, and the wake is being orchestrated, because the impending sound of the movement's death knell is not too far off in the distance.

The Energizer Bunny of inquisitors, Starr won't quit

AND meanwhile, the Impeachment Forever circus grinds on and on and on (motto: slower than the drip-drip-drip of Chinese water torture; more exciting than feeding pigeons in the park).

The conservatives have been showing their traditional white-male agility by talking out of both sides of their mouths while heartily munching on their feet; the Democrats have mostly been standing around, saying, Where's the beef?

It's a good question. Mostly, what we've been served up so far has been soybean gruel. Not to denigrate soybeans, of course — 99.99 percent of the world's supply of soybeans are grown right here in Iowa, which goes a long way in explaining why Iowa is such an exciting, with-it kind of place.

The soybean-gruel factor is probably the reason the American people keep lining up behind the president by about a two-thirds majority. It's not that Americans necessarily need Chateaubriand, you understand; but the right wing can't even come up with Salisbury steak. (And, as somebody who grew up on Salisbury steak, all I can say is, Thank god for small favors.)

The right wing keeps slogging on, of course. (Mantra: We're going to get him. We're going to get him. We're going to get him.) It kind of reminds you of Pete Seeger's famous anti-Vietnam War song: "Waist deep in the Big Muddy, and the damn fool says to push on. Push on."

The conservatives could take a lesson from Vietnam, actually — not that they ever have before. In Vietnam, you may remember, the United States, contrary to all the available evidence, kept insisting it was winning and throwing more and more troops into the fray. It was a shining example of Yankee ingenuity and American know-how and technical superiority.

When America finally got out in the mid-'70s — after the loss of 50,000 American lives and hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese lives, after dropping more tonnage of bombs on Vietnam than it had during World War II on Germany and Japan, after spending who knows how many billions of dollars — Vietnam was pretty much in the same position it would've been in the mid-'50s had the United States not stuck its snout into the area in the first place. Yankee ingenuity, indeed.

This is pretty much the position in which the right wing finds itself. After Ken Starr spent $45 million and four years in order to come up with Monica and the blue dress, the Senate is about exactly where everyone said it would be a year ago: not enough votes to convict. Basically, all we've learned is that TV can be sensationalistic and stultifyingly dull at the same time — a message we could learn from any made-for-TV movie.

And at this point, a made-for-TV movie would be preferable. ("Bobbie Jean Chase": the saga of a woman who slept with her daughter-in-law, killed her husband, ate his liver and framed her son for the crime, then repented and, disguised as a man, became a Franciscan monk in the Gobi desert who, after accidentally sparking a forest fire, had her liver pecked out by enraged sparrows. Based on a true story.)

Now comes Starr, again. You thought we were finally done with Starr, didn't you? Hah-hah-hah, as they say in the independent counsel's office. Being that Impeachment Forever seems to be heading down the toilet, Starr apparently wants to indict Bill, according to the New York Times.

Well, bully for him. I'd hate to see Starr with any idle time on his hands — he might decide to start investigating you. Or me.

And then there's Larry Klayman, a conservative lawyer from Judicial Watch who seemingly believes in the black-helicopter theory of the cosmos. Klayman says that Linda Tripp says (am I going too fast for you?) that, one day, she found a list of all the people in the Clinton administration who had died laid on her desk. Conspiracy, of course. Juicy stuff, this. It hints at the Clinton plot to destroy life as we know it, which has been a staple of right wing thought (if that's not an oxymoron) since about the Stone Age — which is where a lot of conservatives seem to be living, anymore.

The Clinton conspiracy theory goes back to the deaths of Vince Foster and Ron Brown and what they would have revealed about Whitewater and Clinton's doughnut-perversions, had they not been silenced first. But why stop there, I wonder.

It's quite obvious that Bill was behind the death of Princess Di, for reasons as yet unknown to us. He had those U.N. black helicopters chase her Mercedes into the Paris tunnel.

And Sonny Bono's death — he was about to blow the whistle on Bill and "I Got You, Babe," but Bill got him with the Lone Tree theory. Of course, we all know what really happened. For one thing, Lone Tree is in Iowa, not Colorado.

There's so much more, of course. The mysterious disappearance of Jimmy Hoffa — Bill Clinton. John Wayne Gacy — agents of Clinton implanted electrodes behind his eyes and made him do it. El Niño — Bill Clinton's fingerprints are all over that, even though fingerprints don't take so well in sea water. Stay tuned. There's more of this nefarious conspiracy to be revealed. It'll be coming soon to a CNN near you. Or the TV Movie of the Week.

Advice to the 'joblorn': Maximize your strengths

GRADS

• Diversify your job search
Seniors should search for job opportunities using a variety of strategies, Hurst said. She suggested looking at on-campus interviews, Internet job listings and classified ads.

Seniors also make the common mistake of setting their sights on a particular company and ignoring other available opportunities. They should be open-minded about their opportunities, according to Rebecca Anthony, director of the UI Educational Placement Office.

"Students who set their sights on one employer and fail to get the job can set their job search three or four months behind other students," she said.

• Market your strengths
In developing résumés and conducting interviews, some students hold the bragging side of them in check and hide qualities that could attract employers.

"Sometimes graduating students are too modest when talking about their skills and accomplishments," Anthony said. "Seniors are not quite sure how to blow their own horn."

• Develop a network of contacts Opportunities can arise through personal contacts, even if they are not in a professional field. Hurst said simple acquaintances such as a senior's barber or friends can trigger a effective job network.

"Students should just be telling everyone they need a job," Hurst said. "Networks are all-inclusive. A lot of people are active in the community and can provide good contacts as well."

• Assemble an organized, quality portfolio
Anthony stressed the need to be organized. Seniors need to present an air of professionalism when dealing with potential employers.

"It's very competitive out there," Anthony said. "A lot of employers expect people to know how to get jobs."

Employers are especially looking for technology and communication skills, honesty, flexibility and a sense of humor, Hurst said.

Though the job market is still strong, she said signs show its growth is tapering off. Last spring, the number of campus recruiters increased 25 percent, whereas this spring the number remained the same.

But what if, after all this, things turn out for the worst. As far as Kudlac is concerned, if she doesn't find a job she wouldn't be too upset.

"Hey, I'm 24. I'm very young," Kudlac said. "If this doesn't work out, I'm not an old maid. It's not like I have no time to do what I want to do."

East," she said.

In 1996, Ashrawi reached her highest position in Palestinian government when she became the minister of education in the Palestinian National Authority cabinet, a position she resigned from in 1998 because of the authority's alleged corruption.

Ashrawi, who has appeared on such programs as ABC's "Nightline" and CNN's "Larry King Live," has been able to present herself well to the Western world because she was educated in the United States.

One of the things that makes her so effective as a negotiator is her fluency in English, said UI student Salam Abu-Sharar, a native Palestinian.

"We Palestinians look on her with great respect, because she was the first Palestinian figure that brought Palestinian issues to the media's attention — especially to Americans. She can get her point clearly across in English, something most Palestinian figures have not yet been able to do," he said.

Ashrawi is a woman and a Christian in a Muslim world in which men usually hold power.

"There are quite definitely Palestinians who do not think she, as a female Christian, should be playing such a role," Wing said. "Unfortunately, women are very rare in foreign policy in any country."

However, Abu-Sharar says that it is better that she is a woman because it brings more attention to her and her cause.

"It shows that we have unity among us. Her being a woman and a Christian shows that every section of Palestine opposes the oppression Israel imposes on us," he said.

Bradley, who has written several books about his basketball career, plans to visit with Tom Davis and the UI men's basketball team at 1:20 p.m. today.

At 2 p.m., he is scheduled to participate in a "Fireside Chat on Human Rights and Issues of Diversity" with a group of UI students. Hauser said Bradley hopes to get some good feedback about the issue.

"We put people in a room and have them open up on racial diversity," Hauser said. "It will be a discussion that doesn't feel arranged or stiff."

The visit wraps up with a fundraising reception at the home of Charles Saltzman, UI professor of orthopaedic surgery, and Ingrid Nygaard, a UI professor of obstetrics and gynecology.

"We just contacted his campaign when we found out he was running and said if he came through town, we would be interested in hosting an event," Saltzman said.

Saltzman and Nygaard invited about 100 registered Democrats and friends who they thought would be interested in meeting Bradley. But Saltzman said he hasn't made a decision on who he will support in 2000.

"Most politically savvy people would tell you (Bradley) doesn't have a chance because Al Gore is so entrenched, but they are both very smart men who I am interested in," he said.

indecent or censorship in the recent past.

"The key for me is if the artists are good and I believe in their integrity," said Hancher Director Wallace Chappell. "You wouldn't call what was done in the Union, art. The performers might, but I wouldn't."

Rhodes felt that the Union show was "not really comparable with an event at Hancher."

The event has also raised issues for some campus groups. "I have a certain level of concern about using anyone's body in a trivializing or demeaning way, male or female," said Linda Kroon, the administrative coordinator for the Women's Resource and Action Center.

Not everyone agrees that shows on campus property should keep their zippers up. As UI graduate

Ford explosion kills one

Several are injured in an explosion and fire in the power station at Ford's largest plant.

By Jim Suhr
Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. — An explosion and fire Monday at a power station for a huge Ford Motor Co. plant killed one worker and injured 13 others. Crews battled the blaze for hours.

Three workers were unaccounted for, the company said.

"It's awful," Chairman William Clay Ford Jr. said. "Everyone who works at Ford is an extended member of the family. This is the worst day of my life."

Fire broke out at approximately 1 p.m. in the coal-fired plant at Ford's huge River Rouge Complex.

The plant produces electricity for the entire complex. It generates enough power to serve a city the size of Boston, Ford spokesman Michael Vaughn said.

Hours after the fire began, thick smoke and flames were still visible from the building.

Oakwood Hospital treated 11 patients from the fire and transferred 10 others elsewhere because of the severity of their burns, said Dr. Gary Christopher, director of emergency services at Oakwood.

A Ford Motor Co. employee, who did not identify himself, stands by his car, which had its rear window blown out at the company's River Rouge plant in Dearborn, Mich., Monday.

Of those treated at Oakwood, six to eight had severe burns over 60 percent to 80 percent of their bodies. "Several of these gentlemen were thrown by the blast and suffered various head injuries," Christopher said.

Garden City Hospital received one patient, public relations director Terry Carroll said. University of Michigan Hospital spokeswoman Carol Craig said the facility was expecting five patients, some from Oakwood, for its burn unit.

The cause of the fire is under investigation. A spokeswoman for Michigan Consolidated Gas Co. said gas was shut off at the complex, a standard procedure, and there was no evidence the explosion was gas-related.

The Michigan Department of Consumer and Industry Services also sent two inspectors to the site, spokeswoman Maura Campbell said.

Yeltsin, mostly ignored, turns 68

The Russian, recovering from an ulcer, celebrates with his family and the few allies he has left.

By Anna Dolgov
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin celebrated his 68th birthday at a secluded government sanitarium Monday, visited by just a few dignitaries, largely ignored by the opposition, ordinary Russians and the press.

The ailing president's wife, Naina, said she was planning to cook Yeltsin's favorite treats — cabbage pie and walnut cakes — for his birthday. But because of Yeltsin's stomach ulcer, they would likely be eaten by other members of the family, Naina said, according to the ITAR-Tass news agency.

At the Barvikha sanitarium, Yeltsin was visited by the head of the Russian Orthodox Church, Patriarch Alexy II, Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov and presidential Chief of Staff Nikolai Bordyuzha.

Television footage showed Yeltsin, clad in a gray pullover, smiling but moving slowly as he kissed longtime ally Alexy II and joined his guests in a toast with what appeared to be champagne.

Yeltsin has been abandoned by many other of his former allies, who have recently started calling for his resignation, saying his frequent illnesses have eroded his ability to govern.

One such former ally, Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov, said he sent birthday greetings to the president "as a matter of business and personal ethics," the Interfax news agency reported.

Yeltsin gave himself a birthday present of sorts, by checking out over the weekend from a government hospital in which he had been treated for the ulcer and moving into the sanitarium.

"But from others, Boris Nikolayevich won't hear that many sincere greetings," the daily Moskovsky Komsomolets remarked.

"Most of Yeltsin's allies who just recently were crowding around his throne have fled to other ships. And most ordinary citizens have by now completely forgotten when they had said anything good about the head of state."

Yeltsin has been a part-time president for months because of a string of illnesses that have included respiratory infections, pneumonia and prolonged heart trouble. Primakov has been mostly responsible for the government's day-to-day affairs, including the debate over Russia's struggling economy.

With public appearances and trips abroad now rare, Yeltsin mostly limits himself to formal statements on protecting Russia's constitutional freedoms.

But the president can still make waves when he thinks his wide-ranging powers are threatened — and Yeltsin's Communist opponents are still bitterly aware of his influence.

They continued impeachment hearings against him Monday, but the parliamentary impeachment panel failed to decide whether it could prosecute the president on charges of committing genocide against the Russian people.

NATION & WORLD BRIEFS

AT&T to offer phone, TV, Internet services

NEW YORK (AP) — AT&T Corp. joined with Time Warner Inc. Monday in its drive to use cable TV wires to provide one-stop shopping for television, telephone and Internet service.

The two companies announced a deal to offer local and long-distance telephone service, cable TV and high-speed Internet access over Time Warner's cable systems in 33 states.

Combined with earlier moves — notably AT&T's purchase of cable TV company Tele-Communications Inc. — the deal will allow AT&T to offer these services to 40 percent of U.S. households, or 35 million homes, within five years, the companies said.

It also marks another big step by AT&T back into the business of local phone service, which it left after being broken up by the government in 1984. AT&T and Time Warner will form a joint venture, which will begin offering the new service in one or two cities by the end of 1999. It will begin broader commercial operations next year.

Mexico police recover stolen paintings

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Police recovered 12 paintings Monday by Rufino Tamayo, one of the Mexico's foremost painters, which had been stolen from an exhibition last week.

The paintings — valued at $2.5 million — were inside black plastic bags when police found them during a raid at a Mexico City apartment complex, said Mauricio Tornero, chief of the city's judicial police.

Tornero said the suspects fled and there were no arrests in the raid in the northwest Azcapotzalco neighborhood. The paintings were recovered undamaged and in their original frames, Tornero said, and their authenticity was confirmed by a curator from the Lopez Quiroga gallery, where the robbery took place on Jan. 28.

Police had been given sketches of the four suspects and said they were believed to be part of a gang that specializes in stealing jewelry and works of art in the city's upscale neighborhoods of Polanco and Lomas de Chapultepec. "Their capers are very quick and very smooth," Tornero said. "They chose the 12 most valuable pieces in the exhibition."

The paintings, on loan from private art collectors in the United States, Europe and Mexico, were part of a 43-canvas show the gallery organized to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Tamayo's birth.

Crucial week may make or break season

The Facts: The Iowa men's basketball team will travel to Purdue on Thursday and hosts Michigan State on Saturday.

The Impact: The games offer Iowa a chance to get back in the Big Ten race, or fall completely out of it.

By James Kramer
The Daily Iowan

It wasn't long ago that the Iowa men's basketball team was the talk of the Big Ten Conference.

Then Ohio State raised some eyebrows. After that, Wisconsin took its turn in the spotlight. Now, after a big win over Purdue, Northwestern is commanding some attention.

The conference has been wild and completely unpredictable this season. But in the next week or so, things should start becoming clearer.

The Hawkeyes (15-4, 6-3 Big Ten) are preparing for what is possibly their most important week of the season. They travel to Purdue for a Thursday night contest, and Saturday they host Michigan State at 1:35 p.m.

Michigan State leads the Big Ten with a 7-1 record, followed by Wisconsin at 7-2. Iowa is tied with Ohio State for third place.

"It's a tough week coming up," Iowa coach Tom Davis said. "But it's the same old story."

Possibly, but if this isn't a do-or-die two-game stretch, it's awfully close.

"The way this league is going right now, I wouldn't say (we have to win these two)," Iowa guard Kent McCausland said. "But it's gonna be rough if we don't."

Michigan State and Wisconsin both play a pair of road games this week. The Spartans travel to Penn State and Iowa City, and the Badgers go to Indiana and Illinois.

Ohio State plays its lone game this week at Purdue. The Hawkeyes will face the same problem as the West Lafayette, Ind. Iowa had lost four straight at Purdue prior to a 59-56 victory on its last visit.

Davis is blessed with experienced players that have made life on the road much more manageable.

"The more experience you have, the better shot you have," Davis said. "You're not intimidated. With a lot of new guys, you get disrupted by everything."

Iowa has five seniors, four juniors and a sophomore, Dean Oliver, who has become one of the Big Ten's best point guards. Those veterans have helped the Hawkeyes notch road wins at Kansas, Ohio State and Michigan.

Davis noted that his team was forced to practice at an "intramural facility" in Ann Arbor the night before defeating HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim couldn't stop smiling. Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun couldn't hide his disappointment.

The 16th-ranked Orangemen ended top-ranked Connecticut's run at a perfect regular season with a 59-42 victory over the Huskies, who were without two injured starters and then came up with their worst offensive performance in 27 years.

The Huskies, who were without leading scorer Richard Hamilton and leading rebounder Jake Voskuhl, were the last unbeaten Division I team. They saw their 16-game Big East winning streak end, as well as their 31-game home winning streak.

"Obviously I feel bad for Richard and Jake, two very good kids and two very good players," Boeheim said. "But we just needed to get a win."

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS SEASON PREVIEW

Fighters to the finish

Despite having three key veterans on the injured list, a slow start to the season and a tough schedule ahead, the Iowa women's gymnastics team's confidence is not diminishing as it fights to finish in the upper division of the Big Ten.

By Greg Wallace
The Daily Iowan

When forecasting the Iowa women's gymnastics team's fortunes for the 1999 season, remember one thing — what you see now might not be what you'll see later.

So far this season, Iowa has struggled to a 3-6 record, but that is no indication of what this team could accomplish.

The team has struggled with injuries thus far. In fact, no one would blame the team if it wondered who's going to go down next. The list of limping Hawkeyes is staggering.

Last year's Big Ten Freshman of the Year, Giselle Boniforti, is out for a few weeks with a knee injury.

Last year's team MVP, Angie Hungerford, tore her Achilles tendon, and is likely done for the year.

Michelle Sayre, quite possibly the team's best vaulter, is battling a back problem.

But Iowa refuses to go down without a fight.

Someone different has stepped up every night. The list starts, but certainly doesn't end, with junior Julie Matolo. Matolo saw only limited action last year, but she has become a top all-around performer for the team, winning the all-around competition Saturday night at home.

"Julie's looking the best she's looked in her college career," coach Diane DeMarco said. "She's brought herself to a level where all her events are equally good."

Another junior, Courtney Burke, has also been outstanding. She holds the team high on the uneven bars, and set a personal best on the balance beam Saturday night with a 9.725. She agrees that the season hasn't been easy so far, but the team has dealt with it well.

"There's not just one leader on this team," Burke said. "Everyone gives something different to the team

Another Hawkeye who has come to the gym ready to contribute is Corynne Cooper. She leads the team in vaulting, with a current high of 9.7. If she continues to improve every meet, it's possible the team could have two straight conference freshmen of the year.

The athletes' attitudes are nothing but positive — they're not focusing on what they can't control, but on what they can.

"This team is a bunch of fighters," Matolo said. "We had a lot of things happen in the preseason, but we've

SUPER BOWL XXXIII

Lovefest held in Denver

Broncos fans gathered to welcome home their team and plead for quarterback John Elway to play one more season.

DENVER — Thousands of fans, some with their faces and heads painted blue and orange, some holding infants swaddled in mini-John Elway uniforms, gathered under cloudy skies Monday to celebrate the Broncos' second straight Super Bowl victory and plead with Elway to play one more season.

"He will come back because he wants to be the only quarterback to three-peat," said Cindy Unrein Chengery, a season ticket holder like her parents before her.

But, hugging a reporter, she added, "It's not just Elway anymore. We have a whole team now ... Terrell Davis, Bill Romanowski, Rod Smith..."

"You can't call them the donkeys anymore," said Fran Cronin, a Denver native who has been a fan all her life and watched the Broncos lose four Super Bowls.

Many of Elway's teammates had said they expect him to retire, but that was before Sunday night's 34-19 victory over the Atlanta Falcons. Elway was named the game's MVP.

Speaking to the crowd at a downtown rally that followed a victory parade, Elway gave the fans a spark of hope that he could be back for more, but no guarantee.

"That three-peat does sound interesting," Elway said after doing a little dance to a Billy Idol song when he was introduced. "But we'll talk about that, but right now we're going to enjoy this win we had last night."

Even coach Mike Shanahan, who usually avoids putting any public

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Should Iowa's Sam Okey be playing more minutes?

YES

Give more minutes to Sam? It's Okey with me. In the four games Okey has seen action this season, he's averaged 6.0 points in only 14.5 minutes per game.

Double his minutes, and you'll probably at least double his points.

The thing you have to like about No. 5 is that he doesn't fit really fit the mold of former Iowa post players.

Think back to some of the players Iowa has had in its frontcourt. The two I readily think of are Les Jepsen and Brad Lohaus, players that certainly weren't your most chiseled specimens.

Sure, there was Russ Millard, but he's not Sam Okey.

Okey can manhandle people. Look what he did against his former team, the Wisconsin Badgers. He muscled his way to the rim and scored on a thunderous left-handed dunk.

Iowa is a team comprised of role players. Kent McCausland can shoot from the outside, Joey Range can get to the basket and Jason Bauer does everything but score. Okey can do everything.

Where will the extra minutes come from? Just scale back the rest of the team's minutes evenly, and you'll have the recipe for success.

It's not often that a former Big Ten Freshman of the Year lands right in your lap. Use him or lose him.

— Roger Kuznia

NO

Some say Sam Okey is the best player on Iowa's team. But the question I ask is this: Is that the 1997 Okey or the 1999 Okey?

I think it's the 97 model — and that doesn't help the Hawkeyes. After spending an entire year away from competitive hoops, Okey is still rusty.

He's only averaging six points and two rebounds per game. He's getting 15 minutes per contest, which is comparable to Jess Settles, J.R. Koch and Guy Rucker — all of whom have better stats than Okey.

I really don't think giving Okey more time would fit in with the team's chemistry. People don't come here to play 35-40 minutes a game; the only Hawkeye averaging 25-plus mpg is Dean Oliver. The team is the deepest in the conference — and the current mix has played far beyond expectations.

If Okey needs more minutes, who do you take them away from? Everyone is playing well. It only would serve to disrupt the chemistry. That's this star-less team's best asset.

Now, I'm not saying Okey should be buried deep on the bench. It's possible that he could get more minutes in the Big Ten or NCAA Tournaments, when some players' legs may not be as fresh as his.

Right now, though, the Hawkeyes are flying high. If the soup tastes good, why mess with the ingredients? The time just isn't right. Keep everything the same — for now.

Robinson's charges may be dropped

Eugene Robinson may have the opportunity to go through a diversion program to get charges of solicitation dropped.

By John Pacenti
Associated Press

MIAMI — Atlanta Falcons safety Eugene Robinson, arrested for soliciting an undercover police officer for sex the night before the Super Bowl, could have charges dropped through a diversion program.

"We will proceed against him like almost all people in his situation who get arrested for solicitation," Don Ungurait, a spokesman for the State Attorney's office in Miami-Dade County, said Monday.

"If there are no priors, it is certainly in the realm of probability that he will get an opportunity to go to a diversion program. ... If he was offered that type of program and he completed it, then the charges would be dropped against him."

Robinson, 35, got nabbed with about 25 others in a police sting targeting solicitation on Biscayne Boulevard, a major street in Miami frequented by prostitutes. He was driving alone in a rented car when he allegedly offered an undercover officer $40 for oral sex.

"I really believe and strongly believe I will be found innocent in this deal," Robinson said after the Falcons' 34-19 loss to the Robinson will probably be arraigned within the next 30 days. If he is not offered pre-trial intervention, the player could face a maximum penalty of about 60 days if convicted, Ungurait said.

The arrest occurred about 12 hours after a Christian athletes group selected him the winner of an award for high moral character. His wife and children were in Miami at a nearby hotel for the Super Bowl.

the Wolverines. Iowa defeated Michigan, 81-68, last Saturday.

"We had a productive practice, and we were ready to play," the Iowa coach said.

Iowa also should benefit from relatively fresh legs down the stretch, since Davis uses 12 players in his rotation. McCausland is well rested after battling foul trouble against Michigan, and center Guy Rucker did not play after missing several practices due to a family member's death.

Rucker is expected to see action Thursday. The fact that Iowa played perhaps its best game of the season against Michigan is not a reason to draw conclusions about Rucker, Davis said.

"You take whatever you can get," Davis said. "We'll need every player." Then, of course, there is Sam Okey, who seems to be embracing life as a role player. That may change eventually, but for now, he's just one of five frontcourt players Davis uses equally.

Davis said he is concerned about getting Okey enough minutes to impress professional scouts. After becoming eligible on Jan. 21, Okey had just 11 regular season games to show what he could do.

Okey's shelf life is now down to seven games, plus any postseason games Iowa plays. "The good news is that NBA teams are so aggressive and tuned in to what's going on," Davis said. DI co-sports editor James Kramer can be reached at jkramer@blue.weeg.uiowa.edu done a good job of sticking together and supporting each other." Boniforti agrees.

"We're all really unified right now," she said. "We've had a really good attitude, considering everything."

"Even though the team has had a slow start, fans shouldn't lose hope on the team's chances for postseason action. The team was an alternate for NCAA regional action last year, and a national realignment has given Iowa cause for optimism.

The team has been shifted from the Central Region to the newly created Region Two, which is slightly less powerful.

The Central Region featured national powers Alabama, LSU and Michigan — all of which were ranked in the preseason top five. Region Two has powerful No. 3 Utah, but the balance of power is tilted more evenly in Iowa's favor.

It's conceivable that the team could qualify for NCAA regional action for the first time since 1992, if it gets its injury problems resolved. Meanwhile, Iowa is also looking to improve on its fifth-place finish at last year's Big Ten meet.

"Our goal is to finish in the top four of the Big Ten," Hungerford said.

Matolo has more of a day-by-day outlook.

"If we keep improving with every meet, we have a good chance of moving up in the Big Ten," Matolo said.

And in the end, that's all the team can do. The Hawkeyes have to keep the faith, wait for everyone to come back, hope everyone steps up and pray that it all fits together by March. The Big Ten Championships are scheduled for March 27 at East Lansing, Mich.

"We're doing really well, and we have a lot that we can add to the lineup," Burke said. "I think we can surpass our expectations."

pressure on his quarterback, urged Elway to stay, saying "One more time for Elway," and starting a crowd chant of "One More Year, One More Year!"

Elway would say nothing more about his plans.

"I just want to say that after 14 years I thought it could get better, 15 it was great, and after 16 to win two in a row, it's been unbelievable," he said. "And we all up here owe you a bunch because without you it's not all possible. So we up here thank you."

"We thought last year was great, this year was even better," the quarterback said. "As I said two weeks ago, I love you."

The Broncos initially said they wanted only a rally because they were needed to go to Honolulu for the Pro Bowl by Tuesday.

"But fans and Mayor Wellington Webb convinced the team to change its position, saying the Broncos should show some gratitude to the city that voted last November to give them a new stadium.

The Broncos traveled down Broadway on fire trucks and in buses, starting in the downtown area and continuing about a mile to Civic Center Park for the rally. Police and a spokesman for the mayor estimated the crowd size at 375,000.

Many of them were small children, some doing their best imitation of running back Davis, whose jersey they wore, as they zigged and zagged to get away from their parents.

So many thousands of people crowded into the 16th Street Mall that shuttle buses had to stop running. The city took on an almost medieval air with hawkers selling every kind of Broncos paraphernalia, and others offering to paint fans' faces blue and orange for $3.

Many in the crowd sat for several hours or more — with a strong north wind dropping the wind chill into the 20s — to hear their heroes.

"I just wanted to say that this year I think is a little bit more special than last year," Davis told the crowd. "I think the road to getting back here was a little tougher. But my teammates and I we got together ... and we got another one baby, thanks a lot."

Fans began gathering at Civic Center before the sun rose. Laurie Franti, who moved to Denver from Buffalo, was sporting a No. 84 Broncos jersey in honor of her favorite player, Shannon Sharpe.

"I like him because of his mouth," she said. "He can talk his way down the field."

Franti's son, Jake, a fifth grader, skipped school to attend the rally. He was hoping to catch a glimpse of his favorite player, Ed McCaffrey.

Dymple Palmer had painted the Broncos mascot, Thunder, on her fingernails. "I didn't believe we would win two in a row," she said. "Now we're true believers."

Many in crowd wore Styrofoam horse heads modeled after Thunder that were going for $40. In a playoff game, tight end Sharpe rushed over and nuzzled the horse after scoring a touchdown.

The parade route was much shorter than last year, when 650,000 people turned out to celebrate the end of Denver's 37 years in football's wilderness. That rally was held several days after the Super Bowl on a sunny day when temperatures hit 60.

The team had gone to the Super Bowl four times, losing by large margins in all of them, and after its first victory drew nearly twice as many to its parade as had gathered to see Pope John Paul II celebrate mass in 1993.

Some fans, their hearts broken so often, took to calling them the "Donkeys." Some media representatives referred to them as "Elway and the 10 dwarfs."

Elway was the quarterback in the last three losses. Last year, he became the oldest quarterback to win a Super Bowl, in a 31-24 victory over Green Bay, at age 37, in his 15th season.

Bennett: Badgers good economics students

■ After last week's home victory against Minnesota, Wisconsin moved up to No. 11 in the AP poll.

By Jennifer Batog
Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. — Coach Dick Bennett has a new explanation for the success of his Wisconsin team this season. Call it the economics of basketball.

The 11th-ranked Badgers have developed into a team that takes few bad shots, misses few free throws and gives up few easy baskets. In other words, says Bennett, it's a team that plays economically.

"You do smart things, sound things on a consistent basis, and I've watched them emerge in that way," Bennett said Monday at his weekly news conference.

Another big boost has been the strength of the bench, Bennett said.

That "may be the single most important reason that we have done well," Bennett said. Instead of having to play tired starters, Bennett can turn to qualified reserves.

The Badgers can "put in fresh, good players, fresh good experienced players. I think that has made a tremendous difference," Bennett said.

The Badgers advanced a spot in The Associated Press' college poll after defeating Minnesota, 61-50, last week.

Wisconsin (19-3 overall, 7-2 Big Ten) is off to its best overall start since 1941, when the team won 20 games and a national title.

The Badgers head into Wednesday's game against 21st-ranked Indiana at Bloomington riding a seven-game conference winning streak, their longest such streak since 1941.

A win at Assembly Hall would not only give the Badgers a 20-3 record, the team's first in 58 years, but also would break a 19-game losing streak at Indiana.

Wisconsin hasn't won at Indiana since 1977. The Badgers haven't played the Hoosiers since Jan. 25, 1998, when Indiana won, 69-59, at the Kohl Center.

On eve of IOC drug summit, controversy abounds

■ Officials disagree on the structure of a proposed international drug agency.

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — The IOC, scrambling to keep its drug summit from being overshadowed by the Olympic corruption scandals, ran into disputes Monday over key issues in the anti-doping fight.

On the eve of what was billed as a watershed meeting in the war against performance-enhancing drugs, there were signs that the International Olympic Committee was in for a contentious meeting.

Differences emerged over the structure of a proposed international drug agency, the definition of doping and the severity of sanctions.

The IOC executive board, meanwhile, met under tight secrecy to discuss the twin crises of corruption and drugs. Reporters were kept away from IOC headquarters during the meeting, an unusual measure.

In action directly linked to the bribery scandal, the board started the IOC's first ethics commission and code of conduct.

Director general Francois Carrard said the ethics panel would police "the general conduct of IOC members and their business practices."

He said the five-member panel would include three officials from outside the International Olympic Committee. He said they would be "very serious independent personalities" from different parts of the world.

At the conference hall across town where the doping summit starts today, a major dispute was brewing over the proposed agency for coordinating the worldwide drug fight.

The creation of an Olympic Movement Anti-Doping Agency is a centerpiece of the 2½-day conference. Among other things, the agency would be responsible for instituting random, out-of-competition drug tests.

But Olympic officials were divided over whether the agency should be run by IOC leaders or have a more independent status.

IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch said Sunday he would oversee the agency as president or chairman. And he proposed that the IOC medical commission chairman, Prince Alexandre de Merode, should run the agency on a day-to-day basis.

De Merode, a Belgian, has led the IOC medical commission since its inception 30 years ago. Critics contend he has been ineffective in combating doping, which has escalated at an alarming rate in recent years.

There were calls for the drug agency to be fully independent. Critics claim the body would lack credibility if it's run by the IOC, which is reeling from the worst corruption crisis in its 105-year history.

Nicklaus focuses on recovery

■ The legendary golfer, winner of a record 18 major tournaments, has set a goal of dancing at his son's wedding.

By Alexis Chiu
Associated Press

BOSTON — Jack Nicklaus has set his priorities in his recovery from hip replacement surgery: The Masters is out, the U.S. Open is a maybe, but his son's wedding is a must.

"My wife told me the one thing I'm going to do is dance at my son's wedding," he said as he checked out of New England Baptist Hospital on crutches Monday. "Other than that, I'm going to do nothing for six weeks."

The 59-year-old golf great's youngest son, Michael, is getting married on Feb. 20.

Nicklaus will be on crutches for six weeks, and doctors want him to get plenty of rest before beginning rehabilitation.

"Postoperative recovery to date has been right on track," said Dr. Benjamin Bierbaum, who operated on Nicklaus last Wednesday.

Nicklaus will miss the Masters in April for the first time in 40 years and possibly the U.S. Open in June. However, he should be able to play competitively again.

"I don't have any illusions, at the age of 59 or 60, of coming back and competing with the Tiger Woodses and David Duvals," Nicklaus said.

Nicklaus, winner of a record 18 majors, had a degenerative left hip for years. He tried to avoid a hip replacement with a rigorous exercise routine, but finally yielded when the hip began to affect his quality of life, as well as his game.

Bierbaum, head of orthopedic surgery at the hospital, said Nicklaus will be on crutches so the bone and soft tissue can heal. After that, he will go through a rehabilitation program that could take at least six more weeks.

For now, Nicklaus is just plain tired.

"It wears me out to shower and shave," he said.

Nicklaus agreed to receive a ceramic hip as part of a study directed by Bierbaum. Ceramic is smoother than materials typically used in hip implants and is believed to last longer.

Despite the hip problems, Nicklaus became the oldest player to finish in the top 10 in the Masters last April when he thrilled the Augusta gallery yet again with a final-round 68 to tie for sixth. But he was hobbling so badly in the summer that he pulled out of the British Open, ending his streak of 146 consecutive majors.
