Action pending in Union strip-show fallout

■ A male dance revue at the Union violated policy, some UI officials say.

By Erin Crawford
 The Daily Iowan

Administrators now agree that the Jan. 30 strip show in the Union violated UI policy, but a student organizer says his group should not be penalized for its "honest mistakes."
 Disciplinary action is still pending against the Black Entrepreneurial Association, a recognized UI student group, for several UI policy violations, said Phillip Jones, vice president for Student Services and dean of students, in a statement released on Feb. 12.
 A two-week investigation revealed violations in the content and finances by performers in and the sponsors of "Ladies' Nite: African-American All-Male Revue Dance Show," Jones said.

 Graduate student Derick Mitchell, a member of the entrepreneurial group and an organizer of the event, said his group's mistakes do not warrant sanctions from the UI.
 "As a new organization, there are certain things we didn't know... Nothing was done intentionally," he said.
 One of the show's activities may have violated UI policy V-35.2, which in part prohibits using UI facilities for selling commercial products or services. One of the violations stemmed from the organizers allowing the performers to accept tips, Jones said.

"The performers were engaged in unauthorized commercial profit-making activities, i.e., performers soliciting tips, selling photos/posters," he said. "The sponsoring organization did not and probably could not adequately control the activities of the performers."
 Another mistake made was a "mix-up" about money-collection at the door to the event, Mitchell said.
 Staffers from the Union Box Office must collect money for student events there, according to UI policy. On the night of the strip-show, some audience members came after the money collectors had already left and paid group members instead, Mitchell said.

 He added that the money was later put in the account with the other funds that were collected.
 Recognized student groups, such as Mitchell's, are informed about UI policy, said Union Director David Grady.
 "Principal representatives of student groups should be aware of (financial regulations) and report them back to their groups," he said.
 Mitchell said he had read most of the booklet he received but that misunderstandings happen.
 "You don't understand everything," Mitchell said. "Especially if things don't go the way you planned."

Blame cannot be placed entirely on the entrepreneurial group's shoulders, said Ann Rhodes, vice president for University Relations. The UI needs to work harder to inform groups about the rules, she said.
 "As an administration, we operate from the presumption that everyone knows the rules, so we usually find things out after the fact," Rhodes said.
 The UI couldn't have known about the tipping violations, Jones said, despite a sentence on the poster that read: "Ladies, bring your dollar bills!"
 "You may infer some other activity (from that statement)," Jones said.

Wounds linger after trial

■ The pain isn't over yet for many caught in the Clinton-Lewinsky web.

By Terence Hunt
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It's not really over. Not for Hillary and Chelsea. Not for many others, either. There is a legacy of pain, anger, humiliation and embarrassment that endures from the yearlong scandal that grew out of President Clinton's affair with Monica Lewinsky.

Hillary Rodham Clinton and her daughter were devastated by the president's betrayal, left with sleepless nights and private agony, friends say. They try not to show their heartache publicly, but others, such as former Sen. Dale Bumpers, describe a relationship that has been "about as decimated as a family can get."
 For staff and friends, there are huge legal bills to pay. Damaged reputations to be repaired. Shattered trusts and confidences to be soothed.
 Some of the president's top aides were furious that he lied to them, then expected them to defend his deception. Some considered quitting but stayed, mostly out of fidelity to the president's agenda. Or loyalty to the first lady.

Though the Senate's vote for acquittal officially put an end to President Clinton's impeachment trial on Feb. 12, some local residents wonder if something so prolonged can end so quickly.
 "If you watched the news shows over the weekend, you'll know it's not over yet," said UI political science Professor Arthur Miller.

UISG campaigns open

■ Serving the needs of students comes first, all six presidential hopefuls say.

By Rebecca Anderson
 The Daily Iowan

Today is the first day of campaigning for students who wish to be next year's UISG president, and one candidate is already calling himself a front-runner.
 George Hild, a UI sophomore, said that, after running for president last year, he feels reasonably sure his second campaign will result in a victory.
 "I have strong confidence I can run a good campaign and do well in office," Hild said.
 While the six candidates have different issues they want to address, all agree the No. 1 responsibility of the office is serving the needs of students. The issues will be debated throughout the next two weeks, leading up to the vote on March 1 and 2.

A list of the candidates follows:

George Hild/Shanna Wycoff
 Platform issues:
 • tuition and the right to know what's going on
 • parking
 • addition of a break for fall semester
 • recycling on campus

Students have the right to know about the actions of their chosen leaders and plans to spread awareness on such issues as tuition, parking and recycling, Hild said. In the past, UISG has often kept the door closed to students, he said.
 "Every student should know where the UISG office is," he said. "People do not realize the power the UISG has."
 During last semester's tuition debate, Hild said, UISG did not do enough to represent the students.
 "The UISG dropped the ball when it should have been involved," he said.

Anthony LaForge/Shawn Cassells
 Platform issues:
 • increasing communication on campus
 • creating a group to attend Iowa

Meet the candidates, Page 4A

state Board of Regents meetings
 • mandating that all professors create Web pages
 • increase allocation of monies for student groups

Communication leads the 15 issues UI junior Anthony LaForge wants to address. Getting students to attend meetings of UISG and the regents increases communication between students and the administration, he said.

After attending several UISG meetings this year, he noticed a lack of appreciation for student input.
 "No one has an incentive to go," LaForge said. "They don't feel they can truly effect any change."

In regard to tuition increases, sending students to the regents is the best way to combat this year's rise, he said.
 "If you can hit a nerve, (students) will go out there and vote because it's personal to them," LaForge said.

Matt McDermott/Monisha Shah
 Platform issues:
 • keep ISIS open to dropping and adding classes two weeks into the semester
 • improve academic advisers' training
 • extend hours of Iowa City Downtown Shuttle

UI junior Matt McDermott wants to make the UISG accessible to students.
 "Every administration has dealt with the problem of people not knowing about the UISG," he said.
 McDermott said he can ensure representation on issues such as review days and parking. As for tuition, he plans to encourage student representation at regents' meetings during voting.
 "You can't allow the regents to use students' money and not hear their voices at all," he said.

McDermott and his running mate have experience with UISG and hope this motivates students to vote for them, he said.

2 new bars raise questions and hopes for downtown revival

■ While some wonder whether downtown needs two more bars, others are thrilled to have new, locally owned establishments.

By Crissy McMartin
 The Daily Iowan

Though the debut of two businesses has raised concerns about having an overabundance of bars downtown, some say the openings could not have come at a better time.
 Quinton's Bar & Grill, 215 E. Washington St., opened its doors on Feb. 8, the first business to arrive following a string of downtown closings.

Rush Hour, 13 S. Linn St., is scheduled to open early this week.

Iowa City City Councilor Dee Norton said that, although he is happy to see new business downtown, he is disappointed that the vacancies left by recent departures are being filled with drinking establishments.
 "We don't want Iowa City to become just a bar town," he said. "Though we wish these businesses well, we would like to see specialty shops filling the empty spaces."

However, a downtown merchant said the new businesses will be an asset to the area.

 "I'm always thrilled to see new, locally owned businesses come to the downtown," said Beth Gauger, co-owner of Fun Zone, 105 S. Dubuque St. "When you've got something new and it brings people in, everyone benefits."

City Councilor Dean Thornberry agreed that any new businesses are a move in the right direction.
 "I don't really care what type of businesses go in, just as long as they go in," he said.

However, an excess of bars can only lead to an increase in student drinking, said Peter Nathan, a UI psychology professor.
 "The best business to have in Iowa City right now is a bar, and that is unfortunate," he said.
 Owners of both new establishments said the recent flight of businesses from downtown didn't affect their

Police charge Lucas ex-teacher

■ The wife of a school volunteer was charged with child endangerment on Feb. 12.

By Zack Kucharski
The Daily Iowan

A former Lucas Elementary teacher who allegedly allowed her husband, a school volunteer, to take photographs of students was charged with child endangerment by Iowa City police on Feb. 12.

Even though she knew of inappropriate photos he had taken of students in the past, Shirley A. Thomson, 62, wife of Roland Thomson, "allowed and encouraged" the presence of her husband at the school and his photographing of children in her class, court documents said.

Court documents said Shirley Thomson "expressed knowledge of and understanding of the nature of her husband's previous photographs."

Roland Thomson was charged with three counts of wanton neglect of a minor in 1985. He was convicted on one count and received a one-year suspended sentence.

Shirley Thomson made her initial appearance in Johnson County Court without an attorney on Feb. 12; she declined to comment on the case.

The Iowa City Education Association will not support Shirley Thomson, said Dale Hibbs, president of the local teachers union. She retired from Lucas Elementary last year.

Hibbs said Shirley Thomson called him in January and asked if the teachers union would support her. However, Hibbs said, she never formalized a request for support.

Shirley Thomson is also one of the defendants named in two civil lawsuits filed in Johnson County Court last week on behalf of three families whose children were photographed. The suits allege that she did nothing to stop her husband's taking of photographs despite knowledge of his past.

"(Shirley Thomson) expressed knowledge of and understanding of the nature of her husband's previous photographs."

Lucas Elementary Principal Brian Lehmann is another defendant in the civil suits. Lehmann was charged with child endangerment on Feb. 8 in connection with his alleged knowledge of Roland Thomson's past.

As a result of a closed-session Iowa City School Board meeting last week, Lehmann will keep his job, and no further investigation into his case will be made by local school officials unless he is convicted of the charges.

Court documents allege that Lehmann "failed to take action" against Roland Thomson after police warned Lehmann that Thomson could pose a threat to the safety of school children.

Roland Thomson will appear in federal court in Cedar Rapids Friday if he is indicted by a grand jury on federal charges of possession of child pornography.

Court grants Bambi another stay

■ A federal judge grants a temporary restraining order, once again halting Iowa City's deer kill.

By Steven Cook
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City will help the U.S. Department of Agriculture in "any way it can" to prevent a federal judge from granting an injunction against the city's planned deer kill, said Dennis Mitchell, an assistant city attorney, on Monday.

U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler on Feb. 12 granted a request from animal-rights groups for a temporary restraining order against the planned shooting of local deer by the USDA.

A hearing on a longer-lasting injunction is expected by March 4, the day the temporary restraining order expires.

Mitchell said he will decide this week whether to file an amicus curiae brief in support of the USDA, which would allow the city to give its opinion to the court while remaining unnamed in the suit.

"We still hope the USDA succeeds and is able to continue the shooting," Mitchell said, adding that, if the court gives the USDA the go-ahead before a state-imposed March 20 deadline, the city will resume the deer kill.

"Whether it's one week or three weeks, we'll do what we can," he said.

Mitchell said he hopes the higher level of proof needed for an injunction will allow the USDA to prevail.

Four animal-rights groups, including the UI Animal Rights Coalition and the California-based Animal Protection Institute, along with several individuals filed the suit against the USDA two weeks ago. They assert that the USDA didn't follow its own policies and didn't allow enough time to comment on its environmental assessment, a document required before the USDA can conduct a deer kill. Dena Jones, program director for the Animal Protection Institute, said she was pleased with the decision, adding that she expects to get the injunction with "this strong of a case."

"It confirms, preliminarily, what we've been saying all along — that they haven't followed the rules," she said of the restraining order.

Jones said she hopes that, because of the temporary restraining order, Iowa City does not resort to hiring private contractors for the deer kill. Mitchell said that, at this stage, it is "unlikely" that would happen.

Health fair to spotlight awareness, understanding

■ The fair, organized by the health-sciences network, seeks to increase knowledge about various UI medical programs.

By Leah Reinstein
The Daily Iowan

In an effort to both create awareness and broaden knowledge of the health-science programs offered at the UI, the Health Sciences Ambassador Network will be holding its annual Health Sciences Fair in the South Room of the Union today from 4-6 p.m.

"It is expected that, one day, prospective doctors and nurses will have to work together; they should then know something about what the other does," said Kathleen Buckwalter, network adviser. "The health network" attempts to broaden understanding."

The objectives of the network

"Although I knew I wanted to go to medical school at the UI, I had no idea as to the different programs offered or what the academic standards were."

—Marty Bohnenkamp, a network member include serving as a liaison between health-science students and the UI administration, acting as a link for the different health-science students, and promoting active participation by health-science students in community events.

The fair is one of many community social events promoted by the network each year; it has proved to be very popular, said Marty Bohnenkamp, a network member.

"It is a chance for the health sciences to present programs to the community and to high school students," he said. "Kids have an opportunity to see what is offered before attending the UI."

The fair will provide each health-science department with its own table on which it can display information about admission standards, contact names, explanations of required courses and possible careers.

"Although I knew I wanted to go to medical school at the UI, I had no idea as to the different programs offered or what the academic standards were," Bohnenkamp said. "It's good to talk to students who have gone through the admissions process and find out what makes a good candidate."

This year's fair will also feature some departments outside of the health sciences, including representatives from Opportunity at Iowa, Women in Science and Engineering and the UI Admissions Office.

"The fair would be good for students to get other people's point of view," said fourth-year medical student Dean Yar-Tigrani. "I have heard some people say that, if they had to do it over again, they're not sure if they would."

The health network is organized as a unified public-relations group representing students in the Colleges of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing and Pharmacy to promote careers in the health sciences, provide goodwill to the community, and represent a unified voice for all health-science programs.

The fair is open to the public; admission is free.

Afghanistan bleeds on

Ten years after driving out the Soviet army, there is no peace in sight for the beleaguered Moslim state.

By Kathy Gannon Associated Press

PAT KO SHANA, Afghanistan — For Haji Ratmat Gul, talk of the Soviet withdrawal from his homeland a decade ago resurrects memories of a war so painfully fresh it could have been yesterday.

Fifty Soviet soldiers roared into his village in trucks and armored personnel carriers, churning up the dusty track that snakes through Pat Ko Shana, a village 35 miles from the capital, Kabul.

Seventy boys, some as young as 8, fled to an underground canal because they feared they would be conscripted and sent to fight U.S.-supported Islamic insurgents. But their hiding place was soon discovered.

Gul remembers watching with horror from a nearby second-story window as the soldiers fed something into the canal through a pipe, then fired a submachine gun into the canal. The earth trembled, and flames shot 30 feet into the air with a terrible roar. The boys were dead. That was 1982 — seven years

Because of the strength of the people of Afghanistan, the Soviets had to withdraw.

— Abdul Sattar Pakties, a foreign ministry representative of the Taliban before the last Red Army troops left Afghanistan on Feb. 15, 1989, fleeing fierce resistance and a war that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev called a "bleeding wound."

Many Afghans believe it was their defeat of the Soviet army that pushed the Soviet Union toward its downfall. Within 10 months of the withdrawal, the Berlin Wall came crashing down, Soviet satellite states started breaking away, and the Soviet Union began to unravel.

"Because of the strength of the people of Afghanistan, the Soviets had to withdraw. It is because of the Afghans and their humiliating defeat of the Soviet Union that gave others, such as Poland, the strength to fight for their freedom," said Abdul Sattar Pakties, a foreign ministry representative of the Taliban, the religious army that now rules 90 percent of Afghanistan.

But the fighting hasn't stopped for Afghans. Ten years later, many question the results of their bloody struggle against the Soviets and grumble over their choice of leaders today. There are the no-nonsense Taliban fighters, who espouse a severe brand of Islam that has made women prisoners in their own country, locked inside their homes, forbidden from working and going to school. Music is illegal, murderers are executed in public, and thieves have their limbs amputated.

Then there is the opposition, a collection of often-feuding Islamic militias holed up in northern Afghanistan. The strongest faction is led by Burhanuddin Rabbani, who was driven from a nominal presidency when Taliban forces captured Kabul in 1996.

It was while Rabbani was president that the Islamic militias that had forced the Soviets to get out turned their guns on each other in a bitter struggle for power. The fighting around Kabul destroyed 70 percent of the city, killed 50,000 people, mostly civilians, and maimed thousands.

Iraq says it has ability to attack U.S., British bases abroad

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The Iraqi government said Sunday it could attack American and British bases in the Persian Gulf that are used to launch air strikes against Iraq.

"We, by help from God and support from the sons of our glorious Arab nation, including true and sincere nationals ... in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, have the ability to attack the soldiers and means of aggression from whatever region," Iraqi television said, quoting a statement from President Saddam Hussein and senior leaders.

The statement came amid a simmering war of nerves with the United States and Britain over "no-fly" zones imposed in northern and southern Iraq. Iraq does not recognize the zones and has vowed to fire at any plane that violates its airspace.

The zones were set up by the United States, Britain and France after the 1991 Persian Gulf War to prevent the Iraqi air force from attacking rebels in the north and south.

The United States has accused Iraq of more than 90 violations of the no-fly zones since mid-December. It said U.S. and British forces have retaliated by attacking more than 40 Iraqi targets.

Allies give Serbs, Albanians one more week to agree

PARIS (AP) — Despite a conclusion that "nothing has really been solved," the United States and five other nations gave rival Serbs and ethnic Albanians another week to consider their plan for ending yearlong conflict in Kosovo.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, intervening directly, brought the two sides together Sunday, face-to-face, for the first time. She reported afterward that the Albanians, at least, thought the plan that would give them self-rule but not independence was a "fair deal."

But the Serbs resisted the prospect of a NATO peacekeeping force deployed in the Serbian province in the event of a settlement, and Albright said even the Albanians had not promised to sign the deal by the deadline of Saturday at noon.

Hundreds of flights still canceled as airline tries to get healthy

DALLAS (AP) — Hundreds of American Airlines pilots called in to say they were fit for work Sunday, one day after the union was threatened with millions of dollars in fines over a massive sickout at the nation's second-largest airline.

Still, it wasn't enough to prevent 550 flights from being canceled.

"We're just glad they are coming back and we hope by the end of the week to be in business as usual here," American spokeswoman Sonja Whitemon said.

She said the airline could be 100 percent operational by Tuesday. The pilots were accused of calling in sick to protest salaries being paid to pilots at Reno Air, an airline that American recently bought.

U.S. District Judge Joe Kendall ordered the job action to cease on Feb. 10, and on Feb. 13 accused union officials of not doing enough to encourage pilots to return to work.

I was just glad when I hit the ground that I didn't fall." Northwestern head coach Don Perrelli looked at the box score after the game and couldn't believe Herrig missed 10 shots. "We did a good job on her for about seven minutes," Perrelli said. "It wasn't that she was making layup shots. She was hitting them from all around. "I won't say she single-handedly beat us, but she certainly came close to doing that." Herrig scored practically at will in the first half, connecting on nine of her 13 shots. She also made both of her free-throw attempts. But what really made the difference for the Hawkeyes was their defense. Iowa held Northwestern to a season-low 20 first-half points on 27-percent shooting. "The first half was really good, but the second half left a lot to be desired," Lee said. Perrelli said he was upset with the amount of contact the officials allowed. He was whistled for a technical foul in the first half
