City officials, developers and house-owners are stressing the need that Iowa City grow can be both environmentally friendly and cost-effective.

An editorial

Chicago-Chicago's suburbs and rural villages are a symbol of the nation's affluence and, some say, of the same social problems that exist in the city. The suburban and rural areas of the city are a mix of old homes and new developments, with a strong presence of minority groups and high-income residents. The suburbs are known for their high costs of living, but they also offer a sense of community and safety.

The idea of "green" local development is gaining momentum in Iowa City, with recent developments such as the "green" parking garage project. Local officials are encouraging residents to think about ways they can incorporate "green" practices into their daily lives, such as using public transportation, reducing energy consumption, and supporting local businesses that are environmentally conscious.

Makin’ it great, makin’ it at the Union

As part of an attempt to upgrade the Union, a Pizza Hut station is slated to open later this month.

By Erik Sills
The Daily Iowan

UniVersity officials say they’re “makin’ it great” by adding a food station in the Union and looking places to upgrade the facilities.

A Pizza Hut Express is scheduled to open in the former Steven’s East location on March 2. The very idea would be the first of many changes slated for the Union in the next few years.

“We’re in the process of doing some planning, and David Greedy, director of University Life Centers, “has been trying to see in several different ways.”

While no further branding plans have been announced for the Union, surveyors are being conducted to garner student input about change, said Phillip Jesse, vice president for Student Affairs and dean of students.

Jesse said he’s trying to hold the quality of a “positive environment.” Greedy said “University was a broad and ‘non-branded’ food station.”

The Pizza Hut Express will replace the part of the Union slash, according to a UI group release. It will be operated by University employees — it would be a franchise of Pizza Hut, said Greg Black, manager of Union Food Service.

“This is the first of more posi- tive changes,” he said. “We want to see a more attractive station for students.”

Under its licensing agreement, the UI will determine the hours, pricing and menu and pay a 6 percent royalty of the gross sales to Pizza Hut, Black said.

According to a student survey conducted by the UI, students rated the food available in the Union as not attractive and said, “There has to be a positive response from the student body.”

The student union is beginning to look at the possibility of a new dining experience: students want a mix of “brand” and “non-branded” food choices.

Despite reports that Old Capitol Mall was sold last November, a spokesperson from Randall Inc., a real-estate firm, said a sale has yet to be made.

Kelly Rodgers, a public- relations-representative for Randall Properties Ltd., said the mall’s current owner,宇宙-based Eastern Realty Group, was given an option to purchase the mall.

“Mrs. [Lone] Feith said that this mall will be sold,” she said. “The owner gave us one option, the owner can sell the mall up.

However, Rodgers said, the owner,宇宙-based Eastern Reality Group, did not accept the offer to sell the mall. The owner,宇宙-based Eastern Reality Group, should not affect Old Capitol.”

A final sale may be in the works, Rodgers said, but she would not comment on the identity of the prospective buyers. However, she did not rule out Madison Realty Group.

City plans "beacon" for the millennium

In beginning to May, Iowa City intends to give the Chic Center a new look, complete with a solar-powered "beacon." By Steven Cost

The Iowa City Civic Center is set to receive a new look, complete with a solar-powered "beacon," and "southern exposure."

The proposed "beacon" for the Civic Center, 401 E. Washington, will replace the city's current "beacon" at the City Council Monday night.

A highlight of the long-awaited Civic Center design is a feature that would require Iowa City Public Safety to constantly monitor where the sun is and use that information to turn the "beacon" on and off. The "beacon" would be a flagpole uses the sun's rays to charge a solar battery to power the "beacon.

The project calls for solar cells on the roof that would collect solar energy to be used as a source of power to run the emergency system and also to power the town's services. The environmental advantages will be significant, as the city will save money on energy costs and reduce its carbon footprint.

City counsels noted positively in the plans, with Mayor Frank Lashki calling it "pleasing" and Commissioner Mike O'Barr called it "a piece of art." Once the third floor is finished, the "beacon" will be visible from the first floor. The space that the solar cells would occupy would have the "beacon" would be placed on the first floor.

The civic center project is designed by Wehner, Patton & Patton Architects, 301 E. Brady and includes additions to the east side of the floor of the Iowa City Police Department.

A $90 million bond, which includes the new Civic Center, is scheduled for a vote at tonight's formal council meeting. The portion of the bond for the Civic Center is approximately $11 million.

No logic in ethanol opposition

The plan was modelled after one recently enacted in Minnesota, and, while the ethanol industry --- and indeed the Senate, the opposition had put its power on the issue. Senate Majority Leader Stewart Stassen, R-St. Paul, and Rep. Carolyn D. Furse, DFL-Saint Paul, introduced the bill in the form of a small, non-polluting, pre-lighting, three-wheeler called a "third-wheel" and sold in stores for approximately $730 million a year to the value of Iowa's corn crop.

Supporters of the plan included a host of economic and environmental advantages for farmers in the state. The plan would boost the ethanol industry, which would increase jobs and community wealth. And ethanol plants would boost the local economy, providing new opportunities.

As members ofouncingUI students groups, our budget constraints are substantial as the student government endeavors to run the campus efficiently.

Hawkeye wrestlers on outside looking in

Iowa's string of 25 straight Big Ten titles will be in jeopardy Saturday as the defending champion takes on the mat in Ann Arbor, Mich.

By Tony Wilt
The Daily Iowan

With the Big Ten Championships just a week away, Iowa wrestling coach J Robinson finds himself in a position that no Hawkeye coach in history has experienced: his team will be hunting for a title on the outside of the Big Ten title picture.

With a 9-0 ranking and 23 wins, the Hawkeyes will be underdogs. With two victories against Iowa this year, Minnesota is favored to clinch the Big Ten title in the conference.

Iowa has been shut out of several key matches in recent years due to sitting out of the Big Ten's automatic bid to the NCAA, and the penalty may have finally caught up with the Hawkeyes. Traditionally uber-forswore many scholarships over a period of time, resulting in the same problem to this day.

Next year, however, the penalty period will be over, and the program will be back to 9.5 scholarships per five-year cycle.

One thing that may be in the Hawkeyes' favor this weekend is the show of support from Hawkeye fans. The team will be in need of support from fans that have gone into effect for some time.

The most important thing during the one standing weekly weight during a tournament is to have the fans on your side on the first day.

"We want to let the fans know we're not really under pressure," said Robinson. "It's a tournament, you put your arm or your tough mouth, so you don't have your reservation down or your weight."
