“Can science prove the existence of God?”

A Canadian scientist and Christian Apologist says yes.

By John de Graaf

The Daily Iowan

A renowned astrophysicist says the Christian faith is not only reasonable, but he’s ready to prove it. James Chastain, a professor who has transferred from the University of Colorado at Boulder, believes that science and faith do not have to be separate disciplines. He has been teaching at the University of Iowa since 1995.

“Science and faith are connected, and science can help prove the existence of God,” Chastain said. Chastain said he is not interested in proving the existence of God. “I want to show that science can prove the existence of God,” he said. Chastain said he plans to publish a book on the subject next year.

Chastain strives to bridge the gap between science and faith. "People often think science and faith are two separate worlds, but they are actually connected. Science can help us understand the universe, while faith helps us understand the meaning of life," he said. Chastain said he plans to continue his research and publish more books on the subject in the future.

WASHINGTON — Retired Justice Harry Blackmun, the author of the abortion rights decision that legalized abortion nationwide in 1973, died Wednesday of lung cancer.

He had retired in 1994, after 36 years on the court. Blackmun, who had been diagnosed with cancer in December, was 81 at the time.

Justice Antonin Scalia, a frequent critic of Blackmun’s liberal views, said Wednesday: “I knew and liked Justice Blackmun. He was a good man and a good jurist.”

Blackmun’s career mirrored the changing times of the broader culture. His views on abortion, race relations and the death penalty reflects his changing views on the role of government and the role of the judiciary.

When he was appointed to the court in 1971 by President Richard Nixon, Blackmun was considered a staunch conservative in his early days on the court.

But by the time he retired in 1994, after 36 years on the court, Blackmun was widely respected for his integrity and his willingness to change his mind.

Acclaimed choir harmonizes to the "Mama" theme

Iowa City, Iowa

"I remember Mama," a play by Helen Keller, has become a musical for this academic year. The play is about a deaf-blind girl who learns to believe in herself and her surroundings. The main character, "Mama," teaches Helen about the world around her and helps her to understand love and acceptance.

The play is directed by Paula McIlvain, who is the director of the UI School of Music's opera program. "I was intrigued by the idea of doing a play that was not only visually inspiring but also musically challenging," McIlvain said.

The cast includes several UI students, including soprano Elise Johnson, who plays the role of "Mama." Johnson said she was initially hesitant to take on the role, but the chance to work with McIlvain and the rest of the cast convinced her to try.

"I was nervous at first," Johnson said. "But with Paula's guidance, I feel confident in my role.

The play is set in the early 20th century and features a variety of musical styles, including spirituals, folk songs, and hymns. The cast has been practicing intensively for the past few months, and the production is scheduled to open on March 12 at the Iowa Memorial Union.

"We're excited to bring this play to life," McIlvain said. "It's a wonderful opportunity to showcase the talent of our students and to engage with audiences of all ages.

The play will run from March 12 through March 14, with performances at 8 p.m. each night.

The play is set in the early 20th century and features a variety of musical styles, including spirituals, folk songs, and hymns. The cast has been practicing intensively for the past few months, and the production is scheduled to open on March 12 at the Iowa Memorial Union.

"We're excited to bring this play to life," McIlvain said. "It's a wonderful opportunity to showcase the talent of our students and to engage with audiences of all ages.

The play will run from March 12 through March 14, with performances at 8 p.m. each night.

Terror strikes quickly in early morning mist

An adventure in exotic tourism ends in a grisly massacre at the hands of Rwandan Hutu rebels.

By Brinda Mohapatra

Iowa City, Iowa – In the darkness and muck before the day's rugged climb to the peak of Bwindi National Park, tourists were anticipating a unique glimpse of the shy mountain gorillas.

As the tourists made their way to the park gate, reports of gunshots rang out from the surrounding forest. Rebels had swept out of the forest that morning, targeting tourists and local residents alike.

The tourists were shocked and scared. They had been promised a once-in-a-lifetime experience, and now their dreams were Turning to Disaster.

Tourist Guide

Devasen Mahade, a Swiss tourist, was among the first to reach the park. She had escaped with her luggage and backpack, clutching her survival kit.

"We were sleeping in the tents when we heard the first shots," said Mahade. "I immediately grabbed my knife and ran to the door."

As she ran to the open tent, she was met with a hail of bullets. Rebels were everywhere, shooting randomly and with no regard for the lives of the tourists.

"I tried to hide, but they found me," said Mahade. "One rebel shot me in the leg, and I knew I had to escape."

She managed to make her way to safety, hiding in the dense vegetation and hoping to avoid capture. She later learned that her family was among the dead.

Amande Dreyer, a French tourist, was among those who survived. She described the rebels as well-organized and ruthless.

"The rebels were everywhere," said Dreyer. "They were using any and all weapons at their disposal, including machetes and guns."

In an instant, the tranquility of the park was shattered. Rebels had arrived, and they meant business.

"It was a nightmare," said Dreyer. "We were forced to evacuate, leaving our luggage behind."

The tourists were left with only their backpacks and survival kits, stranded in the forest. Many were injured, and some had lost their loved ones.

"We had no choice but to run," said Dreyer. "We didn't know where we were going, but we knew we had to get away."

The rebels continued their reign of terror, targeting tourists and local residents alike. The park was a war zone, with rebels on every side.

"We were afraid to even look out of our tent," said Dreyer. "We had no idea what was going on around us."

The tourists were eventually rescued by the Ugandan army, but the damage had been done. The park was a shadow of its former self, with tourists no longer permitted to enter.

"We will never forget," said Dreyer. "We were lucky to survive, but many others were not."

The park was now a symbol of the horror and suffering that had befallen the region. The tourists left with only their memories and a newfound appreciation for the fragility of life.
Truth & consequences of new Clinton scandal

YOU might be forgiven for thinking that the NBC interview with Juanita Broaddrick, who alleges that President Clinton raped her in a Little Rock, Ark., hotel room in 1978, was all a bad dream. Certainly, there has been virtually no mainstream coverage of the issue.

However, the execrations of the next generation of newsmen—of whom most report every minute of the president's life, every word his staff members utter, every state dinner, every press conference, every book that the president reads, every film he watches, and every microfilm ·- -publication he reads—perhaps for the first time in their lives, have been reduced to their bare essentials. And by nothing less than the latest federal court findings.

For I am, as many other supporters of the president are, convinced that the president is not on the same level as men such as moi... the president has, at least since the last election, been reduced to a level of incompetence.

This is the context of the presidential race in which one of the tickets is steadily gaining power, itemly, Clinton.

But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

Here, the context of the presidential race is that one of the tickets is steadily gaining power, itemly, Clinton. But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

Given how strenuous and unpleasant the context of the presidential race is, this tale of the president's alleged rape of a woman in 1998 is not one that I am inclined to ignore. But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

Unfortunately, if we might be inclined to ignore this sordid tale, it is because the context of the presidential race is that one of the tickets is steadily gaining power, itemly, Clinton. But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

In 1998, the world was not united against the president. This was evident in the context of the presidential race, in which one of the tickets is steadily gaining power, itemly, Clinton. But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

The White House denies that the context of the presidential race is that one of the tickets is steadily gaining power, itemly, Clinton. But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

For this reason, I am inclined to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

But I do not like to ignore this sordid tale, I do not of obscure stuff inevitable.

Strong support, but weak foundation

OW, I'm as politically minded as the next schmo, but when student-government election time rolls around, I just can't seem to get it together. The stakes are high, but the issues seem remote, and the whole process seems to be a game to see who can spend the most money on re-election.

For me, the most interesting thing about the elections is the fact that there are so many candidates running, and that they are all so desperate to win. This is a sad commentary on the state of our democracy.

But anyway, I've been wondering about the candidates for the student government position and the president and vice president of the student government position. I mean, they had the right ideas and were elected, but they haven't done anything to improve the university or serve the students.

I think it is time for the students to get involved and start fighting for their rights. The students have the power to make a difference, and I believe that they can do so if they are willing to step up and take action.

I have been reading about the candidates, and I think that some of them have a really good chance of winning. I think that they are all wellqualified and have a lot to offer the university.

I think that the students should start to work together and start to make a difference. The students have the power to make a difference, and I believe that they can do so if they are willing to step up and take action.

The Board in Central of Delaware made the determination in a non-vote Thursday afternoon

The Iowa football team has a new head coach for the first time in 12 years, with the announcement of the new coach replacing the legendary Hayden Fry. The uncertainty of how Peltier will fare after inheriting a team that finished 1-11 last season can mean a reason for fans to think before they buy tickets this month.

"I don't think it will be a big ticket buying deal in the world — with a new coach and because they were so bad last year," UI junior Craig Mullins said.

Becoming familiar with numbers for the first time this month, Mullins is just one of the many Hawkeye fans who might be thinking twice before spending $20.50, the lowest price for a ticket.

"I don't get football season ticket tickets because of That very fact," Mullins said.

Iowa Hawkeyes seek redemption

The last time out, Wisconsin pushed Iowa around in a dominating victory.

By James Krause
The Daily Iowa

Of the night Iowa's men's basketball season has ended this season, Jan. 31, the Hawkeyes may have been the hardest out to take.

The Hawkeyes lost a home game to the Badgers, who are the most dominant team in the nation that may have been the hardest out to take.

The Hawkeyes are a team that is most dominant in the nation because they have a defense that is the best in the Big Ten.

Today, the Hawkeyes have a chance to set the record straight when they meet Wisconsin. The Hawkeyes may have been the hardest out to take.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Iowa has played one of its best basketball since the Fk it days against Michigan State. The Hawkeyes stabilized the program and have become the most consistent Big Ten team this season.

With the Hawkeyes' third-place finish in the Big Ten and the Badgers' second, the two teams have the most wins in the conference. The winner of today's game will likely stay in the third-place finish in the Big Ten standings, according to Big Ten sources.

On the one hand, it's a good time for the Hawkeyes to have a third-place finish in the Big Ten.

On the other hand, it's a bad time for the Hawkeyes to have a third-place finish in the Big Ten.

Few major changes expected from CBS

The network will shift to close contests in the last few minutes of a game by adding or increasing the time in which CBS will receive a package that will enable it to receive the action, but we want everyone to see the final Four as a studio analyst.

"STILL IN THE STUDIO, WABT. While Billy Pielary will team with Jim Nantz to work the first Final Four as a studio analyst, the Final Four will be a studio analyst."

Fans of non-Minnesota teams such as Syracuse, shown above, can purchase a DirecTV package that will enable him to see every NCAA tournament game, where doovers Worthy and Kevin Harter make their tournament debut. Worthy has done a few college games for the network and engineering over from Fox Sports for a studio analyst. He is an AIRLINER, analyst for Boston College.

"The college game is more excit- ing and has far more potential. "Worthy"

The network was wise enough not to revive the split screens that in college basketball games for the network. It makes sense but is coming off a playoff loss in the NCAA West. The move benefits those fans letting viewers stay with the last Final Four as a studio analyst. The Final Four will be a studio analyst.

Hawks just trying to avoid more injuries

The last thing the Iowa men's tennis team needs right now is more time off.

"I'm happy that we have played this weekend," Steve Buetikofer said, "and I'm happy that we have played Mike Kelley, who is still questionable. He sprained his ankle in practice this morning."

Buetikofer's injury came when he was hit by a ball that was hit by a teammate.

"Our perception right now is we're not going to play with him," Steve Houghton said. "He's out for sure. He's going to be out for sure. We're going to have to look at our lineup and adjust accordingly."

Buetikofer said he was "just trying to avoid more injuries."

A week before Iowa City's snowstorm of 1999, a snowstorm was forecasted for this weekend.

"It's not a big deal," said Resident Betsy Williams. "It's not a big deal."
