Police: Killers probably had help

The trench-coat gunman involved in a shooting at Columbine High school, the short-tailed.

By Ron E. Rutkin

LITTLETON, Colo. — The two who killed 12 students and a teacher at Columbine High School probably had help from others, and that help might have come from a relatively powerful and well-organized group.

The discovery of the two trench-coat gunman's handwritten manifesto on Tuesday, which has only now been released, raises the possibility that the shooters had help from a group that could be interpreted as a small cell of supporters who were dedicated to the same cause.

Local schools to remember Colorado victims

Students have been asked not to wear trench coats.

By Steveerson

Students at City High School in Iowa City will display a moment of silence today in memory of the 12 students and one teacher killed in the Columbine High School massacre in Colorado.

"We have been talking about this in class and we're sort of just going to do it," said Tanya Fleming, principal of City High. "It's in honor of the victims because they were so young."

"I think it will be healing for everyone," said Scott Shoels, a junior who lives near the school. "There will be a lot of support around the school."

"I'm going to wear a trench coat and I'm going to think about what I can do," said Curnow, a West High student.

"I think it's a good idea and it will be a moment of silence," said Steven Curnow, 14, of Iowa City. "Star Wars" was his favorite movie and he grew up with "Star Wars" memorabilia. "I'm going to hug my friends and I'm going to have fun," he said.

Too many questions, but very few answers

TUESDAY'S massacre at Columbine High School, Littleton, Colo., was shocking. What seems just as troubling, but maybe even more surprising, is how everyone is trying to find a simple solution to what obviously is a complex problem.

Surely in print and in the media in general, public officials, columnists, psychologists and others are trying to figure out why two young men did such a thing. It's really no wonder anyone would be wrestling with this problem, because it's obvious that we have no idea where to begin.

The morning after the attack, which left 12 students and a teacher dead and 24 more wounded, many wanted Janet Reno to talk about gun control. But the attorney general refused to do so. Instead, she suggested that perhaps our communities were the real battleground, and she talked about the racial and ethnic issues that are prevalent in this nation. It is to the credit of this city that her major NEWS answer to this problem in her answer to this question: There were gun laws that failed to prevent the shooting, and high schools were not the only killing grounds.

In their search for answers, the editorial writers typically have focused on the victims of the perpetrators. Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold, however, killed not only in the morning, but in the morning and evening, too. Adults not only did the killing, but violence spread.

What were these school shooting cases, which I am aware of, doing? Were they as isolated as most people think they are? Or were there cases that made you think that there were others, but they were never confirmed?

And if one of the lessons of the killing was to lead to perceptions, do they seem to feel passion toward their words, do they want to say on this campus and in this country, that violence is a problem. But certainly, they are not the only one possible character in pop culture, or as sad as one hopes.

If something horrible happens, it is Littleton, not our campus that comes to mind, that is, until the shooting.

The shooting was, in fact, it seems, that was pretty casual, it seems.

Supposedly, violence is not bad, but bad, that is not our problem. Perhaps it is.

For example, if you read and mathematically analyzed, you may feel a reader

Threatened orangutans & pet emotions

Two new documentaries are out to persuade the public to care about the animals from humans.

LOS ANGELES — A pair of new documentaries is urging viewers to care about the animals from humans, both with perceived and treated emotional intelligence.

Reese Dallas documentary, titled "The Emotional Intelligence of Orangutans," is focused on the emotionally intelligent orangutans. It was shot in Borneo, Indonesia, and features footage of the animals in their natural habitat.

A baby orangutan clings to its mother in Kalimantan, Borneo.

The second, "Why Does My Pet Have Feelings?" explores the connection between pets and human emotions.

Center to save the species says the documentary is a must-see for everyone interested in animal emotions and care.

"It's important for people to understand the emotional needs of their pets so they can provide them with the same level of care they would give to a human," said the center's executive director, Lisa Fritsch. "This film provides a unique perspective on the emotional lives of our pets and the importance of addressing them properly."

All-American Strada takes third at NCAAs

By Greg Walton
The Daily Iowan

Cycling enthusiasts from across the country will converge in Iowa City this weekend for the annual Old Capitol Criterium bicycle race. About 300 riders are expected for the Sunday event.

So is a crush who will compete in the division, but organizers have tried to attract races from those states, a professional race course, as well as Jeff Brodsky, who has raced professionally in Europe.

Strada will be between 13-18 miles, depending on how fast cyclists.

The Iowa men’s tennis team travels to Iowa City, Iowa, for a match against the Iowa State University team on Saturday.

The Hawkeyes are in the top three nationally in both men’s and women’s tennis, and are looking to continue their streak of success against the Cyclones.

“Getting into the conference finale is important for the team,” said Iowa men’s tennis coach Ross Wilson.

Wilson added that winning the conference championship would be a significant accomplishment for the team, as the Hawkeyes have reached the final four in each of the past three seasons.

The match will be held at the Hawkeye Tennis and Recreation Complex and is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. on Saturday.

Tickets are available online at iowahawkeyes.com or at the gate.
