Senate Republicans retreat on gun control

President Clinton and other Democrats promise they will make gun control an issue in the 2000 elections.

By David Espo
 Associated Press
 WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans retreated under pressure Thursday on the politically volatile issue of gun control, calling for fresh restrictions on sales at gun shows fewer than 24 hours after rejecting them. Democrats swiftly denounced the offer, saying it contained numerous loopholes that would leave guns too readily accessible to criminals and others who shouldn't possess them. "It's the most 'Swiss-cheese' bill I've ever seen," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. Still, the development underscored the change in the gun-control debate in the wake of last month's shootings at Columbine high school, in Littleton, Colo. And gun-control advocates claimed one long-sought victory during the day, when Senate agreed to prohibit the importation of high-capacity ammunition clips that were omitted from a 1994 assault weapons ban. An effort to kill the measure was rejected, 59-39, with almost all votes in opposition cast by Republicans. "The NRA said no, and it passed anyway," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif. The Senate also agreed to a proposal by Sen. John Ashcroft, R-Mo., to ban juvenile possession of semi-automatic weapons and high-capacity ammunition clips. That vote was 96-2. The maneuvering came as some Republicans expressed concern about the outcome of a series of votes Wednesday relating to so-called private sales at gun shows. "There was a realization that there was a loophole that had to be closed," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz. For his part, President Clinton charged that a "a narrow majority of the Senate (had) voted to preserve the dangerous gun show loophole" less than a month after the shooting spree at Columbine High School.

Those votes established a voluntary system of background checks for so-called private sales at gun shows, rather than the mandatory checks required of licensed dealers. Under the revised GOP proposal, Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, said all sales at gun shows would be subjected to the instant background checks. Craig, a member of the National Rifle Association board of directors, said the organization had "grudgingly" agreed to the changes. Craig described the changes as a "clarification" and an attempt to build on "the accomplishments we had made" Wednesday. Some Democrats offered a different description. "He got caught weakening the gun laws. A lot of people here got sucked in and got upset," said Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., referring to Republican senators. Republicans including Sen. Gordon Smith of Oregon and McCain — a contender for the GOP presidential nomination — said they had been unhappy with the outcome of Wednesday's votes, even though they had supported Craig's position at the time. McCain, in particular, underscored the shifting political dynamic on gun control following last month's fatal shootings at Columbine High School in Colorado.

Chicken soup for the soul on speaker's menu

This year's liberal arts commencement speaker says people should follow their hearts, not their heads.

 Homecoming Queen Tanna Frederick will put her performing-arts abilities to the test Saturday as the commencement speaker for the 1999 liberal arts graduating class. The 21-year old Mason City native is preparing for a life in the theater. The theater and political science major will move to Los Angeles — rather than attending law school — in the fall. "It was a hard decision, but I decided to follow my heart and not my head," she said. Frederick said her speech will have advice for students to take with them after they graduate. "I was looking for a non-traditional speech that would really hit home," she said. "I chose one about growing up, kind of a 'chicken soup for the soul' speech." Peter Hubbard, the head of the selection committee, said her speech will relate to everyone in the audience. "The breadth of her speech will not only interest graduating stu-

Yeltsin impeachment looms over Russia

The Russian president is accused of, among other things, causing mass deaths and destroying the Soviet Union.

By Mitchell Landsberg
 Associated Press
 MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin faced accusations Thursday of carrying out policies that claimed the lives of millions of Russians as lawmakers opened impeachment hearings that could test the strength of Russia's fragile democracy. In an atmosphere of anger and foreboding, the lower house of Parliament, the State Duma, accused Yeltsin of destroying the Soviet Union, selling out Russia to the West, starting war in the breakaway province of Chechnya, illegally dissolving Parliament in 1993 and waging genocide against the Russian nation with policies that wrecked the economy. Yeltsin himself "didn't kill anybody, of course," said Vadim Filimonov, the Communist head of the impeachment commission. "But he gave orders to kill people." The hearings began one day after Yeltsin propelled the country into political turmoil by firing popular Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov and his Cabinet. The shake-up, the third in little more than a year, gave added impetus to the hearings, which

 Not many UI students would willingly spend their summer vacations breaking up fights and dodging chairs. As a summer intern for "The Jerry Springer Show," that may become a part of UI senior Rob Smart's daily routine. On May 18, Smart will begin a two-month, unpaid internship for what he calls "the best show on television." In addition to gaining valuable professional experience, he said, working for the infamous talk show host will be a dream come true. "I've been a fan for a long time," he said. "Jerry Springer always delivers." While Smart, a film and television major, said he does not know what his specific duties will include, he does not expect to discover that the show's antics are staged. "I've heard that they get the guests riled up before the show, but Iowa may be landlocked, but some UI students don't let that prevent them from slipping on diving gear and exploring the depths — going anywhere from the Field House pool to the Florida coast. Hundreds of miles from any ocean, the UI boasts an active SCUBA Club. Forty members, approximately 15 of whom are continuously active, dive twice a month in the Field House pool and take an average of three trips to other diving locations per year. UI senior Conrad Sandahl, the 1999-00 director of the SCUBA Club, decided to start it three years ago.

"I love scuba diving, and when I came to the UI, there was no scuba club," said Sandahl, who plans to be a certified diving instructor in the future. "I wanted to be around people who dove." Most members have earned their Open Water Diving certificates, and others have also gained their Advanced Open Water certification. A student cannot be certified through the club, but the directors will put people in touch with certification classes, Sandahl said. Over Spring Break, 12 members of the club piled into a van affectionately nicknamed "Gorvin" and drove to West Palm Beach, Fla., to gain more diving experience. The group went diving during the day and at night with Coral Island Charters and spent time exploring

Faculty show gains in teaching

An increasing number of tenured and senior faculty members are teaching undergraduate students at the UI, according to the annual Faculty Activity Report prepared for the Iowa state Board of Regents.
 The report shows that the percentage of undergraduate courses taught by tenured and tenure-track faculty in 1997-98 was 56.8 percent, up from 56.3 percent the previous academic year.
 The percentage of senior faculty teaching undergraduate students rose to 86.3 percent in 1997-98, up from 85 percent in 1996-97.
 "We are pleased to see these gains, because increasing the percentage of tenured and senior faculty who teach undergraduate courses is an important component of our goal of comprehensive strength in undergraduate education," said Provost Jon Whitmore.
 By the year 2000-01, the UI hopes to have 60 percent of its undergraduate courses taught by tenured and tenure-track faculty. Likewise, it hopes to increase the percentage of senior faculty teaching undergraduate courses to 87.5 percent.
 "It's worth noting that during the 1997-98 academic year, our College of Liberal Arts offered its first slate of first-year seminars," Whitmore added. "These are courses on a variety of interdisciplinary topics that match 15 to 20 students with a senior faculty member."

Monkey business makes vas deferens

At the L.A. Zoo, the chimps keep getting pregnant, even though the males have had vasectomies.

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — There's some real monkey business going on at the Los Angeles Zoo.

The chimpanzees keep getting pregnant, even though all the males thought capable of breeding have had vasectomies.

No one is quite sure why it is happening, but it's created the kind of excitement zoos just for.

"The zoo has never had this much publicity about anything," zookeeper Vicki Bingaman said.

In the past three months, two chimps have given birth, and a third is pregnant. DNA tests to determine the father — or fathers — cannot be done for months, until the babies are old enough to be separated from their mothers.

The real mystery is this: Three of the four adult males had vasectomies in 1996. And Toto, who is 45, has never shown sexual interest in anyone but himself. As for 2-year-old Ripley and 4-year-old Glenn, they were considered too young to breed.

Nick U/Associated Press

Yoshi carries her offspring Toshi at the Los Angeles Zoo Wednesday. The male chimpanzee was born on Jan. 31 and is the result of one of several recent mystery pregnancies that have puzzled zoo officials.

Bingaman thinks the vasectomies may have failed; vasectomies are known to have a 1 percent failure rate in humans.

"Chimps are very resilient. It wouldn't surprise me if they found some way around" their vasectomies, Bingaman said.

Charles Sedgwick, the zoo's director of animal health sciences, thinks she's wrong.

"Vasectomies in chimps are the same as vasectomies in people, except that chimps are much more prodigiously endowed," Sedgwick said. In both humans and chimps, the tubes that carry semen are severed, and "there's not much chance that they would spontaneously reattach."

Sedgwick thinks Toto or perhaps the youngsters are the fathers. He said there have been rare cases of young chimps impregnating females. The chimps at the Los Angeles

First, zookeepers distributed birth control pills. But the females passed them around. Babies ate them. So did males. Then Bingaman tried contraceptive implants.

The eyes have it at new ATMs

A Texas bank offers the nation's first iris-recognition cash machine.

By Terri Langford
Associated Press

HOUSTON — If you can't tell identical twins Michael and Richard Swartz apart, do what Bank United of Texas does — look them in the eye.

On Thursday, the bank became the first in the United States to offer iris-recognition technology at automated teller machines, providing the Swartzes and other customers a cardless, password-free way to get their money out of an ATM.

"It knows you just by looking at you," said Ron Koben, a Bank

United executive vice president. The concept works because the intricate pattern of each person's iris is more distinctive than even a fingerprint.

Here's how it works: A customer has a close-up photo of his eye taken at the bank, and the picture is stored in a computer. When the customer goes up to the ATM to take out money, he or she presses a button to start an eye scan. The ATM then matches the picture of the iris with the one stored in the bank's database to confirm the customer's identity.

To demonstrate, Richard Swartz, a 25-year-old Rice University graduate student, had his iris photographed by a bank employee. Minutes later, Swartz was able to withdraw $40 from his account without inserting a card or punching in a secret code.

Then, Swartz's brother, Michael, walked up to the machine. But because his iris didn't match that of his brother, the ATM refused access.

Iris identification is already used at 11 banks outside the United States and may eventually be extended to many other kinds of financial transactions.

Bank United hopes to have more eye-scanning ATMs up and running within the next year. Several other banks in the United States are expected to unveil iris-identification teller machines later this year.

"It has a very high cool factor," Koben said. "We think of it as James Bond meets stocks and bonds."

STATE BRIEFS

Authorities make an arrest in 18-year-old slaying

TIPTON, Iowa (AP) — Eighteen years after the body of a teen-age girl was found by a railroad crew in a roadside park in eastern Iowa, her head bashed in with a hammer or crowbar, police have made an arrest.

Dean Ray Tumey, 53, was arrested Wednesday in Knoxville and charged with first-degree murder in the slaying of Sandra Jo Pittman of Davenport, said Cedar County Sheriff Keith Whitlatch.

Pittman was last seen at a Catholic Worker house in Davenport on Sept. 16, 1980. The following day, Chicago & North Western railroad workers found her body in a roadside park on U.S. Highway 30 a mile west of Clarence.

Investigators first sought Tumey for questioning a week after Pittman's body was found but declined at the time to say he was a suspect.

Pittman's mother, Eleanor Strong of Montpelier, said she never met Tumey and does not know if her daughter knew him.

Fire damages Fort Dodge church

FORT DODGE, Iowa (AP) — A fire and possible explosion damaged a church near the city's downtown historic district early Thursday.

"There was a lot of heat and fire in the first floor and down in the basement. The doors were blown off," Fort Dodge Fire Chief Jerry Eslick said.

The fire at St. Paul's Lutheran Church broke out about 5 a.m. No one was hurt, but some neighbors were evacuated because firefighters feared the steeple may collapse.

Elderly victims try to cope in aftermath of tornadoes

Many have been forced to start over at a time of life when they may be least prepared to do so.

By Rachel Zoll
Associated Press

MOORE, Okla. — Kathryn Ceyler, a widow in her 70s, hid in a closet when twisters shattered the home where she had lived for 29 years.

Unhurt but shaken, she wanted no part of the crisis centers and food kitchens that sprang up around the destruction.

"I'm an independent woman," she said. A week later, however, she walked into the First Baptist Church in Moore for a hot meal and some groceries.

"I've never asked for any help in my life," she said, then admitted she needed some.

Ceyler is among the many elderly victims of last week's tornadoes who have been forced to start over at a time of life when they may be least prepared to do so.

While many can draw on past experience overcoming hardships, others in fragile health or on fixed incomes will struggle to recover from their losses, Red Cross clinical psychologist Joyce Libethe said Thursday.

"If you're 70 or 80 years old you think, 'How can I rebuild at this age?'" said Libethe, who has been counseling Oklahoma tornado survivors.

With support networks weakened as friends and relatives die and children move away, senior citizens often have only strangers to turn to, she said.

"Maybe they've gone 70 years taking care of themselves and now have to go out and ask for help, and that's not easy for them," Libethe said.

tion can be overwhelming for anyone, but even more so for some elderly, she said.

"You see a lot of withdrawal,"

Libethe said. "You might find people thinking, 'I've lived a long life, now this has happened. Do I have the energy to cope?'"

No. 2 airline hit with antitrust suit

■ The Justice Department charges that American Airlines tried to monopolize air traffic at its hub airport.

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department Thursday charged that American Airlines, the nation's second-largest carrier, cut fares and added flights temporarily to drive low-cost competitors out of its giant hub airport near Dallas-Fort Worth.

The department's antitrust chief, Assistant Attorney General Joel I. Klein, said his staff is investigating whether other airlines engaged in the same tactics at other hub airports around the nation.

In a civil lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Wichita, Kan., the government accused American of monopolizing and attempting to monopolize passenger service to and from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the nation's third largest airport.

"It is the public who loses out when major airlines succeed in driving low-cost competitors out," Attorney General Janet Reno told a news conference. "Consumers shouldn't have to pay sky-high prices because one airline drives out low-cost competitors."

American was charged with repeatedly trying to drive small, startup airlines out of the Dallas-Fort Worth airport by saturating their routes with additional flights and cutting fares. After the competitors withdrew or drastically reduced their service, American re-established high fares and reduced its service, the government alleged.

Reno said American increased its prices between Dallas-Fort Worth and Wichita by 50 percent after it forced Vanguard Airlines, a lower-cost competitor, out of that route.

Klein said, "American adopted a predatory responsive policy ... American knew this strategy would be costly and pursued it only in order to drive out the new carriers so it could return to its monopoly pricing."

American replied in a statement, "We believe these allegations of 'predatory practices' are unwarranted and go against the very essence of free-market competition."

Klein said American's tactics were successfully employed against three new entrants into the Dallas-Fort Worth market: Vanguard, Sun Jet and Western Pacific. "The effect on the traveling public was devastating" in terms of higher prices and fewer flights, Klein said.

"The traveling public ends up paying much more to fly much less," Klein said, alleging that American deliberately endured short-term losses in order to drive out competition. The lawsuit quoted American's former chairman, Robert L. Crandall, as saying, "If you are not going to get them out, then no point to diminish profit."

Claritin maker not allergic to its patent

■ Schering-Plough has hired top lobbyists in the fight to extend its patent.

By Jonathan D. Salant
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Fighting to protect its $1.9 billion market from generic drug makers, the manufacturer of the allergy drug Claritin has assembled an all-star lobbying team of former federal officials to press for legislation that could extend a patent set to expire next year.

The lineup includes former Federal Aviation Administrator Linda Daschle, former Democratic Sen. Dennis DeConcini, former Republican Rep. Vin Weber, former White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker and former Watergate prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste.

Pharmaceutical giant Schering-Plough also has gotten some unsolicited help from former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, who wrote a letter to the lawmakers who are leading the charge for legislation that could allow the patent to be extended.

While not a front-page issue to Americans, the Claritin patent has huge financial stakes for companies. And where's there's money, there's lobbying.

"When you hear that a company is spending a huge amount of money and hiring the best and most-expensive lobbyists in town, they're out to make a lot of money," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., an opponent of extending the patent.

On the other side, the generic drug makers are waging a lobbying battle of their own, eager to break into new, lucrative markets. They spent more than a half-million dollars lobbying in 1998.

When Schering-Plough's patent expires, generic drug makers will be able to sell their own versions of the popular anti-allergy drug.

While not all the big names have formally registered as lobbyists, they've all been making pitches on Capitol Hill in support of legislation that would allow the patents for seven drugs, including Claritin, to be extended.

The company and its supporters are using a basic argument of fairness.

"Corporations that have invested billions of dollars in research and development deserve to have fair patent protection as a way to address medical challenges," Koop said in his letter.

An aide to former President Bush's outspoken surgeon general said Koop acted on his own and is not being paid by the drug company.

Schering-Plough has made similar attempts in the past to extend the patent, set to expire in August 2000. Last October, lawmakers tried unsuccessfully to attach the provision to the giant session-ending spending bill.

At the time, Schering-Plough already had big-name lobbyists working for it, such as DeConcini and Peter Knight, who was campaign manager for President Clinton.

Why not?

Some of the biggest breakthroughs in medicine have begun with these two little words.

Leonard Hlas of Belle Plaine, for example, would have spent month after month in University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, hooked up to a large mechanical heart pump.

But doctors and nurses here thought, "Why not try a new and better technology?" So, Leonard became the first patient in Iowa to use a portable, battery-operated pump. That meant he could go home and be with his family while waiting for his heart transplant.

At University of Iowa College of Medicine and throughout University of Iowa Health Care, asking "Why not?" is leading to a better understanding of how certain gene defects cause cystic fibrosis, muscular dystrophy and breast cancer. It means developing new cardiovascular disease imaging technologies and countless other advances.

After all, when you have the latest research, most advanced technology, genuine caring and great medical expertise, why not use them to change medicine and change lives for the better every day?

Leonard Hlas of Belle Plaine was the first person in Iowa to receive a portable, battery-operated heart pump. This new technology not only kept him alive, but gave him a better quality of life while waiting for his heart transplant.

Leigh Renee.
Congratulations! It's been one heck of a fast and rewarding ride! Like a roller coaster at times, the highs produced great memories and the low produced useful experiences. Occasionally it seemed to last forever and now it's completed. We'll remember the tears and the laughs and the Hawk (caw, caw!) We're very proud of you and wish you the best. Remember, we love you and will continue to support and encourage you as we have during these past four years.

Kosovars land in U.S. with next to nothing

■ One Kosovar woman had so little time when the Serbs came that she forgot to bring her false teeth.

By Eun-Kyung Kim
Associated Press

MANASSAS, Va. — On a sweltering spring day, Fatime Sylejmani wraps her frail, 61-year-old frame in a turtleneck and buttoned sweater, with wool tights beneath her ankle-length skirt.

"This is all I have. It's all I could take with me," she says, pulling at her sleeve.

Sylejmani has said little since she left Macedonia and landed in the United States less than a week ago. She roams the three-bedroom house she shares with seven other refugee relatives and recalls what she left behind at her home in Pristina in the Serbian province of Kosovo. Her house, her jewels, her photographs.

"Her teeth!" exclaims her brother-in-law, Ali Shala. The household explodes in laughter, a rare comic moment for a family forced to start over in a new country, all the while hoping to return to their old one.

"I forgot the teeth," Sylejmani says. "My head was not thinking. I had no time to grab them."

Serbian police didn't give her the chance, explains her 15-year-old niece, Shpresa Shala.

The girl, now her family's interpreter and link to understanding their new world, is undaunted by the new home and responsibilities. She is simply grateful to have her family. When Serbian soldiers forced their way into the home of an aunt she was visiting, Shpresa never thought she'd see her parents again.

"They come into our house, and they said, 'What are you waiting for?' We didn't know what to say. We were just eating breakfast," she says, shaping her hands into rifles before continuing. "They said, 'Go out, go out! Leave the house! If you don't leave, we will kill you!'"

Cherie Blair, center, the wife of British Prime Minister Tony Blair and Hillary Rodham Clinton are introduced to the young Kosovar refugee Veneta Robaj, 6 months, by her mother Dijana Robaj Thursday. The Robaj family were based in a Macedonian refugee camp before flying to Britain under the auspices of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

The girl joined columns of Kosovars walking toward the Pristina train station, where she headed by rail toward the Macedonian border. Once across, Shala was finally reunited with her parents in the town of Blace.

The family was stuck there for three days. They fought other refugees for bread and milk containers thrown to them by aid agencies.

Eventually, buses took the group to an area where they met an Albanian family and, Shala says, "For one month, they did everything to us, everything good."

Serbs 'stage' troop withdrawal, allies say

■ Western reporters trucked in from Belgrade see 120 Serb troops leave Kosovo.

By Candice Hughes
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Smiling and waving to the cameras, approximately 120 Yugoslav troops left Kosovo in a convoy of buses and trucks Thursday in what Western authorities said was an insignificant move and possibly a sham.

The soldiers broke into grins for foreign reporters, who were driven to Merdare on the main road to Nis, a military stronghold in southern Serbia. The pullout was evidently a public bid to counter widespread disbelief of a Yugoslav withdrawal order Sunday.

"It's the easiest thing in the world to put a few tanks on the border, invite a TV crew and say, 'Look I'm withdrawing' — and as soon as the TV crew goes back to Belgrade, the tanks just go back over the border," NATO spokesman Jamie Shea said in Brussels, Belgium.

Yugoslavia, meanwhile, said more than 1,200 people have been killed and 5,000 hurt by NATO air strikes over the past seven weeks, the U.N.'s top human rights official reported after being snubbed by Yugoslav leader Slobodan Milosevic.

There was no way to independently verify the numbers, though Yugoslav Foreign Minister Zivadin Jovanovic told the United Nations on April 24 that about 1,000 people had been killed and thousands hurt by NATO air strikes.

Mary Robinson, the U.N. high commissioner for Human Rights, said Jovanovic reported the new toll during a meeting in Belgrade but that Milosevic refused to see her.

As foreign reporters watched the military convoy leave Kosovo, a Serb army officer there blamed continual NATO bombing for the "slow pace" of withdrawals since Yugoslavia announced a partial pullout.

U.S. loses Chinese respect in aftermath of embassy bombing

■ For many Chinese, the bombing — and the attacks on Serbia in general — marks America's fall from grace.

By John Leicester
Associated Press

BEIJING — In 1989, Chinese students enamored of democracy erected a Statue of Liberty look-alike in protests on Tiananmen Square. This week, as they laid siege to the U.S. Embassy, they screamed "Down with the Yankees!"

For many Chinese, respect for America evaporated with the NATO bombing of China's embassy in Yugoslavia. To the disenchanted, the attack left the feeling that American talk of human rights and liberty for all is empty rhetoric.

"Through American films, we used to think of America as a just place," said one protester, an employee at an American-run Internet firm who gave his surname, Sun. "Now, we are full of doubts."

Protesters burned the American flag, yelled profanities against President Clinton, rained rocks on U.S. Embassy buildings, and burned a U.S. consul's home in southwest China. Like the students who protested on Tiananmen Square, they marched in ranks proudly waving their school flags, wore headbands scrawled with slogans, and were cheered on by bystanders.

In 1989, the student protests were aimed at the government. By contrast, during the four days of protests that erupted on May 8, protesters marched with government support.

Yan Xuetong, a scholar of international relations, said many Chinese believe the air campaign in Yugoslavia has exposed American double-standards: The United States is attacking Yugoslavia with missiles while seeking to prevent missile proliferation and promoting human rights while causing civilian casualties.

Israeli election looks very American

■ U.S. strategists are shaping the way candidates campaign in Israel.

By Dafna Linzer
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — James Carville is exhausted but optimistic.

His candidate, Ehud Barak, is ahead by 10 points and looks like a winner. Five months ago, the U.S. campaign strategist couldn't find anyone who thought the sincere, but uncharismatic Labor Party leader had a chance to defeat Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

Kicking his feet up onto a coffee table and leaning back in a lounge chair, the Louisiana native who helped get President Clinton elected smiles with satisfaction at the suggestion that American campaign techniques — simple slogans, endless repetition, up-to-the-minute polling of voter whims — travel well.

As Israel's '99 campaign heads into its final weekend before the May 17 vote, American money and methods are reshaping Israeli politics.

Even Natan Sharansky, a former Soviet dissident who heads a Russian immigrants party, has an American pollster.

Netanyahu, whose reputation as a media king has been shaken in this contest, also has an American adviser — strategist Arthur Finkelstein, who has helped Republican politicians get elected.

During Netanyahu's 1996 campaign, Finkelstein peppered campaign ads with shocking images of terror attacks and painted Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat as the main beneficiary of the peace process in order to portray Netanyahu as tougher than Labor on security.

That assault crippled the opposition.

Three years later, Labor went American, hiring Carville, Washington pollster Stanley Greenberg and media specialist Robert Shrum.

AMERICA'S MEDICAL SCHOOLS AND TEACHING HOSPITALS SALUTE THE NATION'S NEW DOCTORS

WE'RE TEACHING NEW DOCTORS IN NEW WAYS.

BUT ONE LESSON NEVER CHANGES:

THE VALUE OF CARING.

Doctors graduating from America's medical schools this month will begin their careers with the latest scientific knowledge and one idea that's as old as the medical profession itself. Caring.

That means taking the time to listen to patients — about their hopes, their fears, their families and their lives. And answering their questions clearly and compassionately. In other words, treating them as patients and caring for them as people.

Why is all this so important? Because, as always, the science of medicine works best when practiced with the art of caring.

The course of true filmdom never did run smooth

■ The release of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" will test moviegoers' love of Shakespeare.

By Michael Fleeman
 Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Ever since "Shakespeare in Love" dominated the Oscars, they've been saying the Bard is hotter than ever in Hollywood. But now comes a big test — the wide release of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The movie opens today with big stars, aggressive advertising and promotional ties with cosmetics and spaghetti sauce.

Alas, poor Yorick; it also opens just days before the May 19 release of the latest "Star Wars" installment.

"It's a risk," said Lindsay Law, president of Fox Searchlight Pictures, which is releasing the Shakespeare movie on 1,000 screens — 150 more than the company's biggest success to date, "The Full Monty."

"If no one shows up, I'm in trouble," he said. Despite the successes of "Shakespeare in Love," a fictionalized account of the Bard's life, filming one of his plays largely as written is far from a sure bet for a studio.

The Kenneth Branagh-directed "Much Ado About Nothing" in 1993 and "Hamlet" starring Mel Gibson in 1990 barely made $20 million each.

The "Midsummer" budget was $14 million, a bargain considering the cast includes Michelle Pfeiffer, Kevin Kline, Rupert Everett and Calista Flockhart. All worked cheaply for a chance to do Shakespeare.

In addition to the cast, "Midsummer" may be helped by the seven Oscars "Shakespeare in Love" won.

The movie went on to gross more than $94 million in North America.

"Shakespeare in Love" served as an introduction to the power of his prose and poetry — and may have helped adjust the ear to the high language that so often throws off modern movie-goers.

"Shakespeare is no longer some onerous name at the top of a curriculum that kids look at and say, 'I've got to read this?'" Kline said. "He's now this attractive young English guy who falls madly in love with Gwyneth Paltrow."

"Midsummer" the play is already seen as one of the most understandable of Shakespeare's works, and "Midsummer" the movie sticks closely to the text, though it takes some liberties, shifting the setting from the forests of Greece to Tuscany and moving the time period up to the turn of the century.

Another change is to Kline's character, Nick Bottom, the hammy actor who is transformed into a donkey. Though usually played for comic relief, Bottom's role is strengthened in the movie to make him the emotional center of the production.

Getting Flockhart for her first big movie role since hitting TV stardom as Ally McBeal was one of the many casting coups for director, writer and co-producer Michael Hoffman, though he acknowledged that in Flockhart's case it was just luck. She had not reached her white-hot success when hired to play the lovelorn Helena.

The relatively low budget means that Searchlight doesn't need "Shakespeare in Love" numbers to break even.

'Star Wars' is just a children's film (and 'Moby Dick' is merely a fish story)

■ The creator of the legacy realizes the critics will be harsh and the fans will be loyal.

By Beth J. Harpaz
 Associated Press

NEW YORK — He describes himself as an independent filmmaker from San Francisco simply out to make a movie for kids.

And Cecil B. DeMille made a little Bible story.

The man is George Lucas and his movie "Star Wars: Episode I — The Phantom Menace," which opens on May 19, already has fans camping out in anticipation.

"We tried very hard to not let the film be over-hyped," Lucas insisted at a New York press conference on May 9. "It kind of got out of control and got over-hyped anyway. There's not much you can do about that."

Lucas said a backlash by the critics is inevitable. On May 9, New York Daily News reviewer Jack Mathews gave the film a lukewarm 2 1/2 stars.

"Most of the 'Star Wars' movies have gotten mostly bad reviews," Lucas said. "They've mostly been trashed one way or another, especially by the major media. I certainly expect not to do well critically; I never have. You sort of accept this. When you get a situation like this where you have so much high expectations, you can't possibly live up to that."

Asked if the movie was more oriented to children than the first three, Lucas said, "I don't think it's any more kid-friendly than the other films. This is a Saturday afternoon serial for children. People forget what the movies actually are."

Lucas deflected criticism that he has tried to control every aspect of the film, from distribution to production to the size of the theaters where it is shown.

"Everybody says I control everything. All I do is make the movie. I have an organization that oversees everything else," he said.

But he acknowledged that he insisted on certain standards from theaters, such as limiting the pre-film commercials and keeping the movie in a large room.

"I want to see that the audience has a good time and that the film is shown the way it should be shown," he said.

The original "Star Wars" broke existing box-office records and won seven Academy Awards, but Lucas tried to paint himself as a Hollywood outsider completely dependent on merchandising spin-offs to pay for his films.

"I'm an independent filmmaker from San Francisco, and I have had to make sure that I have exploited anything I possibly can," he said when asked about the avalanche of toys, books and video games inspired by "The Phantom Menace."

"This is not a contest ... It's a movie. I made it because I enjoy making movies. I really don't have any interest in being No. 1," he said.

His producer, Rick McCallum, said the movie cost $115 million to make, $5 million less than it was budgeted for.

Lucas confirmed he would be directing the next two installments, Episodes II and III. But, he said, there would not be any more "Star Wars" movies after that.

A Look Back At Spring '99

A final column about Finals Week

SURPRISE! It's Friday. The semester, as we know it, is over! Well, for most of us, it is. Gosh, for some of us, it's been over for some time now.

I've been out of here since Wednesday. Think of this as sort of a message from the Other Side. The Other Side being the Land of No Classes, the Happy Fjord of Summer — call it what you will.

But I do realize that there are some students who aren't as fortunate to be able to merrily jaunt out of town at the beginning of finals week. Me? Oh, I was done, um ... let's see, finished on (cough, cough) Monday. Yeah, yeah, I know. I suck, and other colorful expletives. Well, sorry.

But through luck and outrageous good fortune, I seem to usually have a short finals week, to the general consternation of my roommate. I suppose it's sort of disheartening when my biggest concern is how to successfully pack up my car without committing some sort of moving violation. ("Why, no, officer, I can see perfectly through that bookcase, really!")

Meanwhile, she's trying to cram her mind with terms and calculations. But I am always really quiet about my imminent departure, and I would never rub it in. Naturally, I don't see how singing the "Happy Happy Joy Joy" song and skipping across the room, tossing my textbooks around with carefree abandon actually constitute rubbing it in.

However, I give total credit and empathy to those folks who, due to, I suppose, some hideous acts committed in a previous life, have a final at the worst time in the world — 7 p.m. Friday. How cruel. Having a final at this time should be illegal. Everyone you know, save the other poor wretches in your class, is done.

Many of them have been done for several days, and you're getting tired of being pelted with books as they dance around. A big group of your friends probably went out last night with a "Dude, c'mon, it's only the biggest final of your college career, you can sleep it off all day tomorrow!" But no, you've resigned yourself to study, and study you shall. Ugh. Good luck.

And truthfully, I received absolutely no sympathy whatsoever this semester in regards to my finals week. I know, big shock. Due to my chosen majors (we'll just call them "The Major that Doesn't Quickly Lend Itself to Employment" and "The Major that Will Teach You to Say, with Conviction, 'Of course this is off the record'"), I didn't have a whole lot of written tests. But, and let me emphasize this point with great sincerity: Papers and projects are work, too. Really.

No, don't look at me with quantum mechanics calculations and lines upon lines of code floating across your field of vision. I'm serious. Everyone's stuff is hard in its own way. And while you may never intend to take a course on the "Canterbury Tales" taught in Middle English, I will never even entertain notions of taking Chem 4:13, 14, or 26. Ever. So, let the Liberal Arts/Literature folks meet with the Science and Number Oriented People at a happy meeting ground of general frustration and stress.

So, instead of being faced with written essays and multiple-guess tests (Q: "How do you correctly pronounce 'Neanderthal?' — 100 points), I had three projects, a portfolio and a presentation looming over my head for the last two weeks of the semester. And, being the exemplary scholar that I am (stop that laughing), I got right on these things the second that they were assigned. I did not — would not — even dream of leaving things to the last minute. Heh heh. Sheesh.

My finals studies basically consisted of trying to force myself to stop procrastinating. That most of my time was spent in my room within close proximity to my desk and computer was dangerous. Suddenly, stuff on my walls became fascinating. Trying to win computer Solitaire, at least once, became a quest equal to that of the Holy Grail. I took to staring at my calendar, writing in things that were so simplistic, I could only be doing it to waste time. "Monday, May 3. Go to classes. Pay attention. Wednesday, May 5. Chance of rain. Take umbrella." I was really reaching here.

But, it's over. And if it's not over for you, I'll lead you through a deep breath tomorrow. For now, just comfort yourself with the thought of me, at home, possibly not even awake yet, maybe going to raid the fridge, which, being that it is at home, is always full. Tee hee! I'm sorry — would that be considered rubbing it in? In any case, good summers, Godspeed and take care.

Newsmaker of the year

Bob Bowlsby, director of the men's Athletics Department, deserves the honor of newsmaker of the 1998-99 school year. Two UI coaching legends left this year, and Bowlsby oversaw the controversial searches for their replacements and took a lot of heat in the process. Without him, The Daily Iowan would not have had much to write about this past year. Thanks.

'Tis the season to give unsolicited advice to graduates

THIS final weekend of the spring semester is, of course, marked by graduation. That means three days of people who've forgotten what it means to be a new graduate advising you on what you should do, now that you are one (a new graduate, that is).

I know whereof I speak (I know, that's unusual for me, but let it pass just this once!), because I have given charges to graduating classes myself. The format is standard: You tell students how lucky they are to have spent their parents' or their own money for five or six years, and then you wish them well. Ideally, you take at least an hour to do this. Any less than that and the parents and relatives in the audience will feel cheated.

But of course, it's not just the person giving the charge to the graduates who gets to offer advice to graduating students this weekend. It's everyone (especially relatives — they invariably know it all!).

And because such traditions are very important, and because I'm well into a cup of coffee, you am I to pass up the opportunity to offer you advice?

The primary message is, of course, "Get a haircut and get a real job." But, because these are also song lyrics, I clearly need to go further and get a bit more specific. How about, for starters, "Don't even think about moving back in with your parents." They've been free of you for several years now, and it's simply not fair to inflict yourself upon them again. Don't do it.

Apart from anything else, they've probably gotten a lot more relaxed around the house since you've been gone. This means things such as leaving bathroom doors open and wandering around the house only marginally clad. I know dorm life is eclectic, but really!

You're probably focusing on career plans and the like, and this is good. Keep on focusing, but remember one thing as you plan your life for the next 50 years: It has often been said that if you really want to amuse God, tell Her your plans!

And be aware, there is something invidious about career-planning. You can end up spending your whole life trying to get somewhere else, instead of enjoying where you are. Now pay attention here, because even if this is "old fart" stuff, it's good stuff, too.

There is nothing wrong (necessarily) with wanting to be rich, famous or even just successful. But such aims can become overriding concerns for some folk. Unless you win the lottery, you are unlikely to achieve fortune or fame overnight. The time you spend single-mindedly pursuing these goals could also be spent on other, less heralded but perhaps more worthwhile and certainly more rewarding activities, such as enjoying friends and family, or other such old-fashioned things.

The important thing here is that, according to the adage, nobody ever says when they die, "I wish I'd spent more time at work."

Work pays the bills (or some of them, at any rate) and may, if you're lucky, be enjoyable and personally rewarding (I count myself among the lucky). But don't let it become your sole focus in life.

If you didn't take advantage of your undergraduate status to travel abroad (and shame on you if you didn't — there are lots of opportunities) then the first year after graduation is the best time to do this, for two reasons.

First, you won't have maxed out your credit cards yet, and second, it's much easier to travel without the encumbrance of the dogs, cats, iguanas, spouses, and above all children that you will acquire as the years go by. Do it now, while you can!

WILFRID NIXON

Above all, you should try to generate and maintain a sense of urgency about life. Don't let it just flow by you. Take each day and do your best to live it fully. Some days will of course be more challenging in this regard than others, and it can be particularly tough to pull off while standing at a copy machine, for example. However, I shall now divulge the secret to achieving this strong sense of urgency.

It's very simple really, and it's surprising that it takes years of study to figure it out, but put plainly, the answer (in addition to 42, which is today's obscure reference) is coffee. Preferably strong, and definitely hot and in the morning, but above all, coffee. Drink lots, and a life of success will be yours.

Good luck, and good lattes!

UI student slogs off to shock TV

"I don't think the stories are false," he said. "People really are that stupid."

Whatever his responsibilities may be, Smart said the experience on a nationally recognized show will help him after graduation, when he hopes to pursue a career in either television or film production.

"I'd like to work for the WWF," he said. "I could be a manager and lead people down to the ring and throw stuff in, or I could help with the story lines."

Smart received the internship after submitting a cover letter and résumé emphasizing his work in television production classes.

Like Springer, Smart is a native of Cincinnati, where the talk show host once served as mayor and from where "The Jerry Springer Show" initially aired. The two met for the first time when Springer was speaking at an event at Smart's high school, where Springer's daughter was also a student.

"He's a smart guy," Smart said. "He's really down to earth."

Smart said his summer plans have drawn mixed reactions from others.

"When I tell people where I'm going to work this summer, people either cheer or cringe and try to be polite," he said.

UI senior Nicole Palomado said that although she doesn't share her friend's enthusiasm for the show, her viewing would increase if there were a chance Smart could get some air time.

"I'd like to see a show about interns with Rob on it," she said. "That would be my favorite episode."

dents, but parents, faculty and everybody attending," he said. "It's more touching, and it will affect different people differently."

The selection process for the commencement speaker included an application, a summary of activities on campus and a synopsis of a speech, Hubbard said.

"I think I made Peter Hubbard go deaf when I found out, I was screaming so loud," Frederick said. "I was pretty ecstatic."

Frederick said she chose to try out for the commencement speaker because she has been involved in numerous extracurricular activities.

"I've tried to be involved as much as possible," she said.

Out of her many memories at the UI, Frederick said, she will never forget one snowy night in particular.

"When I lived in Slater three years ago, my roommate, Karen, and I stole lunch trays from the lunchroom and went sledding on the law hill," she said. "We had one too many peppermint schnapps and cocoa that night."

The liberal arts commencement is scheduled to be held in Carver-Hawkeye Arena Saturday at 9:30 a.m. Graduates should arrive by 8:45 a.m.; seating is on a first-come, first-serve basis.

shipwrecks and observing the wildlife of coral reefs.

"It is relaxing and amazing — you can't really describe it to other people," said UI sophomore Claire Thomas. "When you are down in the middle of the ocean looking at wildlife, it makes all of your problems seem trivial."

Two club members, UI sophomores Jon Reberry and Scott Fiddelke, have used their recently acquired diving skills to land internships for the summer in Florida with Coral Island Charters.

"We will be getting communication credits, because we are going to do some underwater filming," Fiddelke said.

The SCUBA Club is advised by Phil Gibson, a UI biology research assistant and a certified scuba-diving instructor. Gibson has 10 years of professional teaching experience in California and Florida and more than 3,000 dives under his belt.

Gibson also furnishes some of the diving equipment the club uses, although most of the members own some of their own gear. For a student just getting started, basic equipment such as fins, a mask and a snorkel will cost about $200, Gibson said.

Despite the cost, UI freshman Lori Russell said that being in the SCUBA Club has been a great opportunity for her.

"It is a good bonding experience, and there is a really diverse group of us," she said. "I really look forward to scuba diving every other week."

The SCUBA Club is in the process of planning trips for next year. Two possible destinations include Bonne Terra Mines, Mo., and Devil's Lake, Wis. The club is also looking into making scuba gear available for night games at the Field House next fall. For more information, contact the club's Web site at www.uiowa.edu/~scuba.

Cartoonist Saul Steinberg dead at 84

NEW YORK (AP) — Satirical cartoonist Saul Steinberg, who created hundreds of drawings for The New Yorker, including the famous image of what the world looks like to the ego-centric Manhattanite, has died at 84.

Steinberg, who died Wednesday, turned out angular and often brooding art that was sometimes compared to that of Pablo Picasso and Joan Miro.

His drawings were full of thin, sharp lines and populated with cats, dogs and crocodiles — his symbols for primitive political society.

"Saul Steinberg was our Picasso, our great original," said New Yorker editor David Remnick. "We'll miss his eye, his line, his language, his wit and his friendship."

Steinberg drew 85 covers and 642 other drawings for the magazine over 50 years.

Among his most famous cartoons was "View of the World from 9th Avenue," which appeared on the magazine's March 29, 1976, cover. The drawing is a bird's-eye view of the world looking west from Manhattan, with the detailed streets of New York fading into ill-defined clumps for the world beyond.

Researchers: Stem cells can convert

WASHINGTON — Special bone-marrow cells have been shown to convert into basic liver tissue, raising the possibility of one day using a patient's own marrow to repair failing livers, researchers say.

In laboratory rat studies at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center, researchers found in bone marrow a master — or stem — cell that under special conditions will convert itself into functioning liver-tissue cells.

Bryon Petersen, lead author of the study, which will be published today in Science, said the work is the first step toward learning how to rescue failing livers using the body's own stem cells.

Petersen said that in new experiments he already has shown that injecting the special marrow cells into rats causes the animals to form new liver tissue.

Although the work only has been demonstrated in laboratory animals, Petersen said, other studies strongly suggest humans also have bone-marrow cells that will convert into liver cells.

"What we have learned from the rat, we should be able to extrapolate to the humans," said Petersen.

Parliament moves to impeach Yeltsin

had been scheduled previously.

It seems less than likely that the upper house of Parliament would vote to remove Yeltsin from office, in what would be Russia's first presidential impeachment. Yeltsin's ouster would also require two-thirds majorities of the supreme and constitutional courts — which is considered unlikely.

And the whole matter could be moot if Yeltsin dissolves Parliament and calls for new elections, as many observers think he will do.

With 443 deputies in the Communist-dominated Duma, it will require 300 to impeach Yeltsin. So far, at least 125 have indicated that they oppose impeachment, suggesting that the vote could be close.

Among those opposing impeachment and urging Yeltsin to dissolve Parliament was flamboyant nationalist leader Vladimir Zhirinovskiy. There were reports Thursday that Zhirinovskiy was being considered for a top Kremlin post.

HAWKEYE SOFTBALL

Streaking Iowa hopes to make Big Ten noise

The fifth-seeded Hawkeyes will begin play today at the Big Ten Tournament in Ann Arbor.

By Tony Wirt
The Daily Iowan

Luckily for the Iowa Hawkeyes, the Big Ten Softball Tournament expanded to five teams this year.

After a dreadful month of April, Iowa had to fight to gain a spot in this weekend's postseason dance. The fifth-seeded Hawkeyes will take on fourth-seeded Michigan State at 10 a.m. today. The winner will advance into a double-elimination tournament with Michigan, Penn State and Minnesota.

While the Hawkeyes just made the tournament, Iowa is currently seen as one of the better teams in the Big Ten. This was evident when they took two games of a three-game set against the Spartans last weekend.

"We're playing really well right now," coach Gayle Blevins said. "We've learned how to play hard from the start, something we weren't doing before. In the last two or three weeks, we've really picked up our game."

Blevins isn't alone in her assessment. Her players can feel the difference between how they are playing now and how things were going in April.

"We're on an upswing right now," third baseman Liz Dennis said. "We're playing well and our spirit is way up. It's a good feeling going into Big Tens."

"We're playing much better now, and we're having more fun," left fielder Amber Morrow said. "Considering the roller coaster ride we've had,

The family of former Hawkeye Merton Hanks has stayed positive while battling their 5-year-old daughter's autism

By Wayne Drehs

When 5-year-old Milan Hanks stood in front of her preschool class last week and read passages from her favorite story book, shared stories of her beloved family, and showed pictures of her celebrity father, it would have seemed to any outsider like a typical afternoon of show-n-tell.

But it wasn't. For Milan and her parents, former Iowa athletes Merton and Marva Hanks (formerly Marva Fuller), the presentation was heroic. It was the ultimate peak in what has been a volatile roller coaster ride since 1996, when Milan was diagnosed with the life-long neurological disease autism.

"For her to stand and do that in front of a classroom was just a phenomenal moment in our lives," Marva said. "The language was minimal - five word sentences at the most, but compared to when we got the diagnosis and there weren't even two-word sentences, it was just monumental."

Once thought to be quite rare, the disease is now the third most common developmental disability behind mental retardation and cerebral palsy, affecting one in every 500 children born.

Many celebrities, including NFL players Hanks, Dan Marino, and Doug Flutie, actors Anthony Edwards, Dustin Hoffman, and Tommy Davidson, and actress Rene Russo, have learned that money and fame can't insulate one from the realities of autism.

They've turned to CAN (Cure Autism Now), a Los Angeles-based national, foundation to use their names and notoriety in helping their own children, while promoting awareness and raising funds across the country.

"That's the insidious thing about autism. You don't know what it is and what to do until it's almost too late," said Elizabeth Emken, head of fundraising for CAN in the Bay Area, and mother of 6-year-old Alex, who is autistic. "We lost two years trying to get his diagnosis. That's what's really hard for me. I don't want another parent to feel that."

The neurological disease robs children of their communication skills, cognition and social development, slowing any ability a healthy child would have to relate to the world around them.

Cases sometimes include muteness, along with violent and self-injuries behavior, but Milan's is not nearly that severe. Her problems center around communicating, sitting still, and making eye contact.

In recent months, though, she's made enough strides to lead everyone to believe she could very well be self-sufficient someday. Doctors and autism experts are currently putting her through a series of tests to determine if she will be one of the slim 4-percent that defeat the disease.

"She's hardly completely cured, but she's made great strides," Merton said. "I think you can chalk that up to the Lord really blessing her and hard work. She's really worked hard at this."

As has the entire Hanks family: Merton, Marva, and 6-year-old Maya. They share in everyone of Milan's triumphs, and drown in each of her tragedies. Each one of them plays a special role in her therapy, motivating, encouraging, and supporting her.

A complete cure would be the ultimate victory for the Hanks family. That says a lot, considering the Super Bowl-winning success Merton has achieved on since leaving Iowa City as a 5th-round draft choice of the 49ers in 1991.

"When you first hear something like this, you don't know," Marva said. "You think, 'Why me, Why me? Why an athlete? Were supposed to have such great genes. This just doesn't make any sense.'"

"Then you just want your child to be normal, whatever normal is."

Recker to make final decision today

Indiana basketball transfer Luke Recker will announce today if he is headed to Iowa or one of three other schools.

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Luke Recker, who left Indiana unhappy with his development, said he will announce Friday where he will transfer after visiting with five schools over the last month.

The Hoosiers' leading scorer last season has visited Arizona, Florida, Iowa and North Carolina since abruptly leaving Indiana last month in search of a system that will better prepare him for the NBA.

Recker met with Notre Dame coach Matt Doherty on Thursday for an unofficial recruiting visit, according to a report in the South Bend Tribune confirmed by a school source. But the degree of Recker's interest in the school was not known.

Recker

Recker had told The Indianapolis Star for a story published Thursday that the only schools he was considering were Arizona, Florida, Iowa and North Carolina.

"No one else will be able to get involved at this time," Recker told The Star. "It's going to be between those four. Other schools expressed interest, but I've decided that my future will best be served at one of the four schools I've visited."

But in a news release announcing the Friday news conference at his alma mater, DeKalb High School, Recker included Notre Dame among the schools he's visited.

The 6-6 small forward, who averaged 16.2 points and 4.0 rebounds a game last season, said he wants to be a shooting guard in looking for a school that will better prepare him to play in the NBA.

Wherever he goes, Recker will have to sit out next season to meet NCAA transfer requirements, leaving him two years of eligibility remaining.

Speculation has been intense that Recker would choose Iowa because it's close to his father, who lives near Iowa City. It also would allow his mother, who lives in Indiana, to see him play on a regular basis.

"Luke said when he was here that he wants to have his parents see him play," said recruiting analyst Van Coleman, associate publisher of the Iowa-based Future Stars. "Notre Dame and Iowa both offer that; Arizona and Florida do not."

Everything new to Iowa at NAAs

Iowa will compete in its first-ever NCAA Championships this weekend in South Bend, Ind.

By Lisa Colonna
The Daily Iowan

Saturday, the Iowa women's tennis team will leave its mark in the UI record books.

The No. 39 Hawkeyes will compete against No. 19 Florida State in Iowa's first-ever NCAA tournament appearance. The match will take place at 1 p.m. in South Bend, Ind.

"(The Seminoles) beat Tulane, 5-4, which was our only common opponent," coach Paul Wardlaw said. "We also beat Tulane, 5-4. It should be a real tight match. They are a young team and the NAAs are new for their team also. It will come down to who can handle the pressure."

"But we are not concerned with Florida State. We are concerned with playing well."

Iowa finished the season 16-8 and

HAWKEYE MEN'S GOLF

Laid-back approach key at Big Tens

By Eric Petersen
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's golf team hasn't exactly had the type of spring season it envisioned when it began play back in March.

Coach Terry Anderson's team was coming off a promising fall season and was hoping to see it continue.

That hasn't happened.

The Hawkeyes have struggled this spring, their best finish coming at last week's Wolverine Invitational. Iowa finished tied for eighth out of 18 teams.

Anderson is hoping his team's improvement in Ann Arbor will serve as a springboard for this weekend's Big Ten Championships, which will be held at the University of Minnesota.

"We are coming off a halfway decent tournament last week," Anderson said. "We've got a lot of guys that have had a taste of success and that can do well if they get hot. This course is very susceptible to low scores."

"We're going to put our minds to it for three days and kick back and have a good weekend."

The tournament starts today with competitors playing 36 holes. Eighteen more will be played Saturday and a final 18 Sunday. The preliminary forecast calls for rain all three days.

Iowa's lineup includes freshman Ian Brendel, junior Adam Turner, senior Chris Englund and sophomore Jason Wombacher and Matt Stutzman.

The Hawkeyes placed 10th at last year's Championships. Wombacher was Iowa's top finisher, ending in a tie for 23rd. This year's favorites include seventh-ranked Minnesota and 13th-ranked Northwestern.

The Championships mark Englund's final collegiate tournament.

The Findlay, Ohio, native has had a disappointing end to his Hawkeye career, playing his best tournament of the spring last weekend: Englund shot a 222, good for a share of 27th place.

"I feel good about that," Anderson said of Englund's performance at Michigan. "He's hung in there and hopefully the same thing will happen this week."

Englund is averaging 79 strokes in his 18 rounds this spring.

"I've struggled all spring," Englund said. "I finally played well last week. I'm looking for a pretty good tournament, but I'm not getting my hopes up."

Iowa won its only conference title in 1992, and has finished no better than sixth during Anderson's tenure as head coach.

The Hawkeyes finished seventh at the 1995 tournament. That year, the team qualified for the NCAA Championships for the first time in 35 years.

Nevertheless, the team members are convinced they can shake up the 11-team field, which includes the nation's top player, Northwestern's Luke Donald.

"I think we can do all right," Wombacher said. "We're all playing pretty well right now. If we get hot, we can finish pretty high and surprise some people."

appearance in the NCAA's.

"They have a lot of foreign players on their team who like to play a lot," junior Shera Wiegler said. "They are a good, solid team. They will be tough."

The winner of the Iowa/Florida State match will compete against the winner of the Notre Dame/Illinois-Chicago match Sunday at 10 a.m.

Sunday's match will determine which team advances to the Sweet Sixteen, which will be held in Gainesville, Fla.

"We do not want to settle for just making the tournament," Wiegler said. "It is a huge accomplishment, but we want to advance. If we play well, the results will follow."

Even if the Hawkeyes do not advance as a team, the doubles team of Big Ten Freshman of the Year Toni Niekova and Wiegler will compete in the NCAA Doubles Championships, which are also held in Gainesville.

"We want to go as far as we can in the tournament," Wiegler said of the doubles competition. "If we win the first two rounds, we will be named All-Americans. Then we can take it from there."

we've come a long way. Everyone has improved a lot, and there is a lot more confidence."

The spark for the team may have been the return of senior Tammy Utley from a knee injury she suffered earlier this season at Ohio State. Utley leads the team in batting (.358), home runs (5) and slugging percentage (.528) despite missing 22 games.

"It feels great to be back," Utley said. "I haven't had any problems yet. All I wanted this season was the chance to come back and play." The Hawkeyes may need more than Utley's big bat to entertain thoughts of a Big Ten title, though. Once again, the Michigan Wolverines are the clear-cut favorite to win the tournament.

Behind coach Carol Hutchins' Wolverines, the Minnesota Golden Gophers have a big-hitting heart of the order and the Penn State Nittany Lions swept the Hawkeyes earlier this year.

"All the teams are tough, and they are all different," Blevis said. "We're going to play a good team every time out, so you have to get ready for the game you're playing now. You can't rest on what you've done."

'We don't give much thought to the other part'

HANKS

As a baby, Milan seemed normal, a little quiet and to herself, but nothing problematic. As she got older, though, she got progressively frustrated when she would want something and could not communicate that to her parents.

Marva said she could tell when Milan was struggling to talk or gesture to her; all that came out was a scream. The hollering and temper-tantrums drove her and Merton absolutely crazy.

Then when Milan was 18 months old, Marva noticed some strange playing tendencies in her daughter. One day, while Milan was in the backyard with 22-month-old Antonette Goss, daughter of Merton's former 49ers teammate Antonio Goss, something was clearly wrong.

"There was a variance in their language - Milan had very little or none, and Antonette had so much," Marva said. "That's where I knew - or at least had some sort of an idea - that something was wrong."

Autism was one of the first things that came to Marva's mind, because she had worked with severely autistic children during one of her summers at Iowa, and recognized many of the symptoms. Though she suggested such a prognosis to numerous doctors, none of them believed it was accurate.

"They just wanted to reassure me and pat me on the back that no, no, that wasn't it," Marva said. "I don't blame them that they wanted to do what was best for me."

Though skeptical, Marva and Merton listened and let another year go by without taking any action. But when Milan turned three and there was still little improvement, Marva again took Milan to the doctor, this time at UC-San Francisco.

There, doctors confirmed Marva's worst nightmare - her daughter had autism. She still refers to the day she got the phone call as "rock bottom."

It came two days before Merton had to leave for training camp, while the couple was driving across the San Francisco Bay Bridge on a sunny summer day. Though Merton and Marva sort of expected such news, it was still sent a shock through them.

"I was crying, trying to externalize and talk about everything, but he wasn't saying a word," Marva said. "He was just silent. He went off to camp to deal with it. I had no time to have a pity party. I had to help my child."

The battle

From that point on, it's been an all-out battle to try and help Milan function as normally as possible.

With Marva's background with the disease and added research she has done, the Hankses have tried just about every form of therapy, then finally imploring a "team concept" to her treatment. The team is led by Marva's cousin, Jackie

Associated Press

49ers safety Merton Hanks returns a fumble against the Washington Redskins last season.

Childress, who lives with the Hankses and shadows Milan to school. It also includes behavioral and occupational therapists, tutors, and teachers.

However, the heavily religious Hankses see prayer as the strongest method of any.

"Everybody knows that's the way we run our household and that the first dynamic in her life is always going to be prayer," Marva said. "That's what I attribute a lot of her success to."

Milan's treatment with the team includes a lot of hands-on, one-on-one, in-the-face coaching on lessons like how to talk properly and how to behave in public. The Hankses believe in putting Milan in these situations and then encouraging her to mimic their behavior, as well as that of her older sister Maya.

Maya's role has been critical. Like many siblings, Milan idolizes her older sister and copies her behavior in every way imaginable. Thus, Marva and Merton have helped Maya build a sense of pride to work with her sister in such a capacity.

"She has been an excellent teacher, probably the primary source of teaching for Milan," Marva said. "They are pretty much like twins if people didn't know any better."

"We just had to not put so much pressure on her so that she could be a kid and a sister, too. We've honed in on that."

Scholastically, Milan will enter a normal kindergarten this fall, with Childress accompanying her. There, the Hankses are hoping Milan will be able to continue to learn about being a kid, as well as pay attention to lessons.

"It's been ... interesting," Merton said. "It's just like any other father wanting what's best for their kids. We try to put her in the types of situations where she is going to be most successful."

"Once we put the tapes together chronologically and you can see what she has done over time, it's like, 'Man, she's really accomplished a lot,'" Marva said. "You don't see all that when you are in the battle."

Celebrity status

The Hankses are lucky in that they have had the financial resources and celebrity status to help them combat the disease full bore. The title Merton Hanks carries enough weight in the medically-rich Bay Area that it has helped the Hankses find the most prominent people in the profession to deal with Milan's case.

But the Hankses aren't just exploiting their status as celebrities. They are using it to their advantage as well. While in the past, autistic children were often ignored, humiliated, and institutionalized, the Hankses are treating Milan the complete opposite.

They've gone public with the story of their daughter, and thus have greatly helped the goals of CAN.

"Their support has just been tremendous," Emken said. "They are always really open to talk and have been really great in sharing their story to help others."

Already, the Hankses have helped organize a charity basketball game between the 49ers and the Oakland Raiders, and a dinner in ritzy Hillsborough, Calif., which turned out to be the second-largest fundraiser in CAN's three-year history.

Russo, Edwards, and football players Jerry Rice, Deion Sanders, Junior Bryant, and Randall Cunningham were on hand to help raise awareness about the disease.

"A lot of our friends have really been great in coming out to help us as far as fundraisers and that type of support," Merton said. "Basically, we've had a real tight-knit group of friends that have

Wolves' offense a no-show

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The crowd was tardy for the early tipoff at the Target Center and the Minnesota Timberwolves' offense was absent the whole night.

The San Antonio Spurs held the Wolves to 28 first-half points on their way to an 85-71 rout Thursday night that gave them a 2-1 lead in the best-of-5 series.

It was the second-worst offensive performance in NBA playoff history, behind only Portland's 24-point half against Utah on May 5, 1996.

And it marked the Timberwolves' lowest point production ever in a playoff game, set just Tuesday night in their 80-71 upset at San Antonio that had them dreaming of actually being able to fulfill Kevin Garnett's "shock the world" promise.

Every Johnson continued to take advantage of double-teams on the big men by scoring 24 points, 15 above his average. And David Robinson, held to six shots and 11 points Tuesday night, had 17 points and 18 rebounds. Tim Duncan added 15 points, seven rebounds and seven assists.

As the crowd trickled in for the 6 p.m. CDT game, Wolves coach Flip Saunders shrugged. "What you want is the crowd at a fever pitch at the end of a game. That's when it counts," he said.

But the Spurs kept the usually raucous crowd quiet by closing the first half on a 25-8 run for a 44-28 halftime lead. They led by as many as 23 in the second half.

Maybe it was fatigue. Terrell Brandon logged a bone-rattling 47 minutes and Kevin Garnett worked 46 Tuesday night as the Wolves used a seven-man rotation.

Ann Heisenfeld/Associated Press

76ers 97, Magic 85

PHILADELPHIA — Allen Iverson was still standing for this one. With NBA playoff records for steals and perhaps showboating, there was no way the Orlando Magic could miss him.

Iverson had 33 points and 10 steals as Philadelphia beat Orlando 97-85 Thursday night in the 76ers' first home playoff game in eight years.

The 76ers more than matched the Magic's physical play, thoroughly out-muscling and demoralizing them to take a 2-1 lead in the best-of-5 series.

After the Sixers promised to respond to hard hits on Iverson in Game 2, 7-foot-1 Matt Geiger did so right away. He actually had to wrestle the ball away from Daly during an early skirmish in front of the Magic bench.

Gene Sarazen, one of only four men to win all four of golf's major professional championships, died today in Naples, Fla., at age 97.

Sarazen died at Naples Community Hospital shortly after 9 a.m. from complications of pneumonia, said his lawyer, John Cardillo. Sarazen had been hospitalized for several days.

Since 1981, a highlight of the Masters has been Sarazen, Byron Nelson and Sam Snead hitting the ceremonial "first ball" to start the tournament before retiring to the clubhouse. Sarazen remained part of that special moment through this year's Masters. "The game has lost one of its great heroes," said PGA Tour commissioner Timothy Finchem. "Gene Sarazen dedicated his life to golf and became one of the game's legendary figures."

Arnold Palmer said Sarazen's drive at the Masters this year showed "he could still hit the ball."

"Gene set some standards for the game of golf — with the sand wedge, for instance," Palmer said. "It probably should have been called the Sarazen wedge."

Sarazen was just another promising young golfer when he won the 1922 U.S. Open at the age of 20, shooting a final-round 68 to defeat Bobby Jones and Walter Hagen.

Three-peat may not happen for Red Wings

DETROIT (AP) — The Colorado Avalanche continued to make themselves at home on the road and, suddenly, Detroit's shot at a three-peat appears in some danger.

Colorado got another strong game from goaltender Patrick Roy and Adam Deadmarsh scored twice as the Avs defeated the Red Wings 6-2 Thursday night to even their second-round series at two games each.

Roy, who made 44 saves in the third game, turned away 27 shots in Game 4 of the best-of-7 Western Conference series.

Meanwhile, Detroit goaltender Bill Ranford failed to make it through the second period or the second straight game.

Peter Forsberg had a goal and two assists. Chris Drury, Milan Hejduk and Valeri Kamensky also scored for Colorado.

Vyacheslav Kozlov scored twice for the Red Wings.

Ranford, starting his fourth straight game in place of the injured Chris Osgood, who is out with a sprained right knee, let three of the first 14 shots he faced get past him. He was replaced by Norm Maracle at 14:04 of the second with Detroit trailing 3-0.

In a 5-3 loss in Game 3, Ranford let five of the first 23 shots get past him and he was lifted 5:05 into the second period.

The Red Wings, trying to win their third consecutive Stanley Cup championship, had won 11 straight playoff games — including the last five last year — and were up 2-0 on Colorado before returning home.

Maple Leafs 3, Penguins 2

PITTSBURGH — Sergei Berezin stuffed a rebound into an open net at 2:18 of overtime, giving Toronto a victory over Pittsburgh.

The victory tied the series, with each team winning once at home and once on the road.

The Penguins, in position to put a 3-1 stranglehold on the Eastern Conference semifinal series, couldn't hold a 1-0 lead and then lost because of a defensive error after tying the game on Brad Werenka's third-period goal.

Game 5 is Saturday night in Toronto, where two of the final three games will be played if the series goes seven games.

Berezin nearly won it earlier in the overtime when his shot struck the goalpost, then got the game-winner a few seconds later. Defenseman Bobby Dollas failed to tie up Berezin in the corner, allowing him to skate in unimpeded and push the rebound of Garry Valk's shot into an open net abandoned when Tom Barrasso came out to play Valk's shot.

The Leafs outshot the Penguins 30-14, but most of Curtis Joseph's saves were big ones as Pittsburgh took a 1-0 lead in the first and dominated the first 15 minutes of the second period.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Blue Jays humble Royals in 8-2 victory

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — One day after playing nearly perfect baseball, reality and the Toronto Blue Jays came crashing down on the young Kansas City Royals.

The Blue Jays scored six runs — five of them unearned — in a ragged second inning — and waltzed away with an 8-2 victory Thursday, providing what Royals manager Tony Muser called a valuable lesson.

"It is a tremendous learning experience for young people who had a great night and maybe came to the ballpark a little too excited and took things for granted," Muser said. "You can't take anything for granted."

Carlos Delgado had two of his four hits and three of his two RBIs in the decisive second inning while the Royals misplayed at least three balls.

The night before, in a 7-1 victory, the Royals turned in about 10 sparkling defensive plays in a performance which general manager Herk Robinson said almost brought tears to his eyes.

"They played so good last night, it caught up to them that inning," said Toronto manager Jim Fregosi.

Delgado, who wound up 4-for-5, added a run-scoring single in the ninth.

Pat Hentgen, 0-5 in his previous seven starts against the Royals, took a two-hitter into the seventh after retiring 14 in a row. But he needed relief help from Dan Plesac, who came in with the bases loaded and one out to retire Carlos Beltran on strikes and Joe Randa on a short fly.

"Obviously, it's huge when the offense does that for you," Hentgen said of the six-run second. "It lets you be more aggressive. You know one pitch can't beat you."

In 6 1-3 innings, Hentgen (3-1) gave up six hits and two strikeouts, with two walks and four strikeouts.

Jose Rosado (2-2), fourth in the AL with a 1.93 ERA, was charged with seven runs in six innings, but only two were earned. He gave up nine hits, struck out two and walked three.

Angels 2, Yankees 0

NEW YORK — Even a team meeting couldn't snap the New York Yankees out of their recent slump.

Omar Olivares allowed five hits in 6 2-3 innings and Mo Vaughn hit a solo homer as the Anaheim Angels capped their first three-game sweep at Yankee Stadium in 15 years with a 2-0 victory Thursday night.

The Yankees, who hadn't been shut out twice at home in a season since 1997, were blanked in consecutive home games for the first time since 1991 and in back-to-back games overall for the first time since 1996.

After Chuck Finley and Troy Percival combined on a 1-0 shutout of the Yankees on Wednesday night, the players called an impromptu team meeting. Interim manager Don Zimmer broke up that meeting and called one of his own before Thursday's game to address the team's mental approach.

Keeping the legal drinking age at 21 saves lives and prevents injuries

Since the 1970s, at least 40 studies have examined the effects of either increasing or decreasing the minimum legal drinking age. Here are the findings:

- When the drinking age is lowered, injury and deaths increase.
- When the drinking age is raised, death and injury rates decline.
- A legal drinking age of 21 saves well over 1000 lives each year.
- Opponents of a higher legal drinking age argue that because many minors still manage to purchase alcohol, raising the legal drinking age doesn't work. The evidence shows however, that although many youth consume alcohol, they drink less and experience fewer alcohol-related injuries.
- When the drinking age is 21, minors drink less overall and continue that pattern through their early twenties.

(Toomey, Traci L. et al. The Minimum Legal Drinking Age: History, Effectiveness and Ongoing Debate. Alcohol Health & Research World, Vol. 20, No. 4, 1996)

Which probably explains why so many people support it

- Nearly 60 percent of University of Iowa students said they support a "crackdown on underage drinking." Among non-drinkers, more than 90 percent of the UI respondents agreed with that statement. Nearly 80 percent of UI non-bingers agreed. Even 52 percent of the occasional bingers on the UI campus agreed with the need to crackdown on underage drinkers. (Harvard School of Public Health survey, 1997)
- 78 percent of Iowa City and Coralville residents said they favored cracking down on underage drinking even if it hurts business in bars and stores that sell alcohol. (Iowa Social Science Institute survey, April 1998)
- An overwhelming majority of Americans view underage drinking as a significant problem and support measures to reduce it. 84 percent oppose lowering the legal drinking age from 21 to 19. 83 percent support laws that penalize adults who supply alcohol to minors. 82 percent believe bars and stores are lax in selling to teens. (Youth Access to Alcohol Study, Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, 1998)

Join the crowd.
Tell your police and city council that you support enforcement of the minimum legal drinking age

Indians owner looking for a buyer

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians, one of baseball's most successful franchises in the last five years, are for sale.

Inc., to identify potential buyers for the franchise, owner Richard Jacobs said today.

Any deal would have to be approved by big league club owners. Jacobs, team chairman, president, CEO and controlling stockholder for more than 12 years, said the board of directors had agreed it might be an appropriate time to consider a sale.

MEN'S TRACK AND FIELD

Iowa's select head to Tucson

By Matt Bowen
The Daily Iowan

Before the Big Ten Championships, the Iowa men's track and field squad will send a select few athletes to Tucson, Ariz., for one final meet.

"We are trying to find a specific type of meet for specific type of guys," coach Larry Wiczorek said.

Iowa will send its 4x400-meter relay squad of Tim Dodge, Tim Dwight, Tony Branch and Bashir Yamini, along with the 4x100-meter team of Kurt Felix, Branch, Dodge and Yamini, with Dwight pushing for a spot also. Thrower Jeremy Allen will make the trip to warmer territory as well.

The 4x400-relay team is looking to move up the charts in the provisional rankings of the NCAA's, and will have good competition to push them. Colorado's 4x400-meter team has run a 3:06.11 to the Hawkeyes' 3:06.18.

"We want to see if they (Iowa) can run a little faster and move up," Wiczorek said. "We want to get a half a second faster."

Jeremy Allen has not yet qualified for the NCAA's and will be looking to do so this weekend, as well as warming up for the Big Ten meet.

"He needs a meet to catch up, after coming off spring football," Wiczorek said.

Yamini, who was an All-American last year, is in the same boat as Allen. He has yet to qualify for the NCAA's.

Yamini, who has already won four long jump titles in his career, is still nursing a sore ankle, which only bothers him while jumping. Wiczorek plans to hold him out another week, until the Big Ten's, which would set the stage for a do or die for Yamini.

"We are going to rest him," Wiczorek said. "He wants to win the title at the Big Ten meet."

A jump of 26 feet, 3 inches automatically qualifies an athlete for the NCAA's, while a jump of 25'1 will provisionally qualify.

"If he would jump a 25'6 next week, it would get him in," Wiczorek said.

The Big Ten meet is in West Lafayette, Ind., May 21-23.

Rowing

This week: The Iowa women's rowing team travels to Oakridge, Tenn. for the Central Sprints regatta.

Meet Notes: The rowing team is coming off a strong performance at the Midwest Rowing Championships two weeks ago and cracked the top 20 coaches poll for the first time this season...Iowa is ranked 19th in the country...Last weekend, the Hawkeyes placed three boats in the finals of the Midwest Rowing Championships. The Varsity 8+ finished second in their heat with a time of 6:22.22 before finishing fourth overall in the final with a time of 6:33.38.

Coach's Quote: "Practices have been going extremely well and I believe the girls will be up to the challenge of such a big race," Kowal said. "This is one of three big meets we have this season and so I expect we will perform well."

Next week: Iowa is off next week before heading to the NCAA Championships on May 28-30.

-Robert Yarborough

Women's track & field

Up next: The Iowa women's track and field team travels to West Lafayette, Indiana, for the Big Ten Outdoor Track and Field Championships May 21-23.

Meet notes: The Hawkeyes are coming off a so-so performance at last weekend's Iowa Hawkeye Classic, with junior Lakeya Boatright setting a season-best time in the 100-meter dash. Boatright finished in 12.17 seconds, just edging teammate senior Paula Ruen, and later won the 200 dash. ...

The Hawkeyes are trying to improve on a ninth-place finish at last year's Big Ten Outdoor Championships. This season they have broken two school records and finished second at two different outdoor meets. Junior Colleen Prendergast set a school record in the 100 hurdles and provincially qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships, as did senior hammer thrower Kerri Blackstone, who set the other Iowa mark.

Player's comments: "We're peaking at the right time," sophomore Gina Shannon said. "Everyone's healthy, and everybody's in the best shape of the season right now, so I think we'll do well."

Struggling Hawkeyes to end season in Evanston

By Roger Kuznia
The Daily Iowan

In some respects for the Iowa baseball team, it might be glad the season is coming to a close.

At the beginning of the season, the team had high expectations of making the Big Ten Tournament for the first time in eight years. After beating national powerhouse Miami, the Hawkeyes looked to have all the confidence and talent to do that.

But this season has been a year of hard knocks, as Iowa has lost 19 of 24 conference games. And no matter how good the Hawkeyes played, it seemed like they could never etch a victory in the win column.

"It's been real frustrating at times," Iowa left fielder Terry Ramsey said. "Sometimes, you just didn't want to be there. But you just have to dig real deep and find what you've got inside and give 100 percent everytime you take the field. That's all you can control."

Iowa (21-31, 5-19 Big Ten) has four more games to finish the season strong, as they play the Northwestern Wildcats (21-28, 7-17 Big Ten). Today's game begins at 1 p.m. in Evanston. A doubleheader is scheduled for Saturday at 2 p.m. The teams will finish Sunday with a single game again at 1 p.m.

"We're going to play for some pride this weekend and finish on a good note," Ramsey said. "They beat us four times last year, so we're going to try to return the favor."

The Wildcats were 6-6 midway through the Big Ten season, but have won only one game in their last 12 tries. Six of those Wildcat losses during this stretch were decided by one run.

One of Northwestern's best hitters is catcher Joe Hietpas, who is batting .356 with 10 home runs and 42 RBIs. He is second on the team in batting average, but is tops in the other two categories. Three of his home runs came against Minnesota last weekend.

The Wildcats have one of the best closers in the Big Ten in Ryan Bos. He has saved eight games, good enough for second in the Big Ten. With finals out of the way, Ramsey said he's hoping for a slew of wins.

"We're going to be out there for three days with nothing but baseball on our minds," Ramsey said. "We should play pretty good."
