KLA to retain weapons

Further evidence surfaces of Kosovar rebels taking revenge on Serbs.

By Donna Bryson
Associated Press

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Only a day after pledging to warehouse their weapons and end their fight, a top Kosovo Liberation Army leader said Tuesday the rebels never agreed to give up their guns and still hope to form an army.

There also was evidence that the rebels — or their supporters — were continuing to take revenge on Serb civilians. Serb houses burned in the western city of Pec, and a Serb power company worker was shot in the capital. British troops reportedly had to defuse a land mine in the heart of Pristina.

The violence followed the first deaths in Kosovo's peace force. Two soldiers from the British contingent were killed Monday when unexploded

Killing fields of Kosovo haunt peacekeepers

Mass graves in the Yugoslav province seem to be everywhere, investigators are finding.

By Ellen Knickmeyer
Associated Press

IZBICA, Yugoslavia — Turn down the wrong road in Kosovo looking for a mass grave of 35 Kosovars, and the men there say, no, that's the next village — but we'll show where we buried seven of our fathers and uncles together.

Ask someone for directions to a field holding the corpses of 142 people who were executed, and he says, after that, if you want, I'll show you a grave holding six members of a single family.

Mass graves are everywhere in Kosovo; more than outsiders can track down in their first days back in the province; enough to keep war crimes prosecutors busy for years, if they choose.

Apparently fearing such prosecution, Serb soldiers, paramilitary, police and civilians cremated many of their Kosovar victims or returned to exhume corpses for burning or reburial in single graves, survivors say.

But while the 2½-month war was time enough for killing untold thousands, it wasn't enough time for cleaning up afterward. The signs of slaughter abound:

Buchanan leads crusade into town

The Republican candidate is expected in Iowa City today, to dine at the Hamburg Inn.

By George Hild
The Daily Iowan

Republican candidate Pat Buchanan is expected to arrive in Iowa City today at 1 p.m., as he continues his campaign for president.

Buchanan is scheduled to visit the Hamburg Inn, where he will dine before speaking with members of the press. He plans to sit at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Table, which was named in honor of the former president, who dined at the restaurant in 1992.

Buchanan has had some reliable support here in Iowa, but much of it is disappearing, said Tim Hagle, UI associate professor of political science.

"At this point, his old supporters are looking elsewhere," he said. "People are beginning to think that his time has passed."

The candidate harbors certain views that political experts say are unpopular with moderate voters. "He appeals to the far right, the Christian Coalition voters who tend to be passionate about single issues,"

He is forcing other candidates to listen to the issues that he thinks are important.

said Ken Berthiaume, a UI political science teaching assistant.

Despite declining voter approval, Buchanan continues to make sure his political agenda remains an issue in his party.

"Pat is trying to make a point," Hagle said. "He is forcing other candidates to listen to the issues that he thinks are important."

However, after eight years of a Democrat in the White House, Republican voters might be looking for other, more viable candidates, he said.

"Candidates like Pat, who are far to the political right, will not be as popular now as they have been in the past," he said.

But Hagle also warns against counting the candidate out.

"The last time Pat was here, he had a pretty good presence and actually did quite well in both Iowa and New Hampshire," he said.

UI senior Megan Bygness was blunt in her assessment of Buchanan's chances.

"Originally, I would have said that Hulk Hogan had the least chance of winning the nomination, but then I remembered that Buchanan was running," she said.

Board seeks input in superintendent search

Though the semi-finalists' names will remain confidential, the public will be encouraged to submit questions.

By Gil Levy
The Daily Iowan

Trying to encourage community involvement in the search for and the interviewing of the new superintendent was the focus of a Iowa City School Board meeting Tuesday night.

The names of the semi-finalists will be kept confidential; those of the finalists will be announced to the public on July 12. Beginning today, the board will encourage the public to submit questions for potential candidates. These questions and candidate responses will be made public.

But board member Linda Levey said she, along with member Alan Leff, is not convinced that the printed responses will be useful.

"I want something spontaneous,"

The board is very interested in involving the public as much as possible in this process.

— Susan Mims,
School Board president

she said. "The public has to trust us at some point — they elected us."

Leff agreed in the importance of face-to-face responses from the candidates.

"There is great deal to be said about interpersonal human chemistry — spontaneous responses that no one else can see," he said.

Board member Matt Goodlaxson said it was important for the board to show it was making an effort to at least let the community know what type of candidates it was looking at.

"We could get a 'slick Willie' who sounds good on paper but hasn't backed it up with actions in her or his district," he said. "That's our job: to determine the truth."

Parent Carol Green, of Iowa City, said she did not think the published information would be of much value to the public. But at least the board was making an effort, she said.

Public involvement is key in the process, said board President Susan Mims, even though the final choice rests with the board.

"The board is very interested in involving the public as much as possible in this process," she said.

The board agreed on Leff's suggestion to add three members-at-large

Sen. Harkin pushes for anti-child labor resolution

The senator offers a pact which supports efforts to end child labor in the world.

By Glen Leyden
The Daily Iowan

Calling for an end to the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, presented a resolution to the Senate Monday urging President Clinton to ratify the International Labor Organization Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

The convention calls for actions to end such child-labor abuses as slavery, forced prostitution and other harmful circumstances.

Supporters of the labor convention hope Harkin's new resolution "I be an another step in a worldwide effort to end child labor."

Christopher Moody, a Harkin spokesman, called the convention one of the broadest of its type in history.

"Never before have so many countries agreed to make such a substantial step forward towards protecting the world's child laborers," he said.

Dorothy Paul, executive director of the United Nations Association USA for Iowa, said she has been following the fight to end unsafe child labor for years.

"A resolution like this will increase public awareness and public criticism of those nations that don't follow the agreement," she said. "We all have economic clout and don't have to buy products that are made by children."

But some people are unsure of the effectiveness of Harkin's resolution in halting child-labor practices.

Peverill Squire, a UI political science professor, described the resolution as a Sense of Senate, officially putting the resolution on record in the Senate. But the resolution is only a statement, not a law, he said.

"It shows the U.S. stance on child labor and will get people thinking for a while but has little ability to do anything to stop it," Squire said.

The resolution lacks the ability to punish countries that fail to follow the International Labor Organization's requests.

"Punishments such as trade sanctions could make a difference, but such legislation would make some people unhappy," Squire said.

The senator has sponsored bills in the past to fight unsafe child labor; his office describes Harkin's Child Labor Deterrence law, introduced in 1993, as the most comprehensive legislative initiative in the United States to end child labor. And his provision in last year's Treasury Postal Appropriations Bill prevents products made with forced or indentured child labor from being imported into the United States.

The International Labor Organization estimates that, worldwide, 250 million children are "economically active." The organization hopes to eliminate working environments that are harmful to the children's well-being.

Iglesias' daughter hospitalized

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — The 28-year-old daughter of singer Julio Iglesias was hospitalized after being thrown from a car when it collided with another vehicle.

Iglesias

Police said Isabel "Chabelli" Iglesias was in serious condition at the University of California, Los Angeles, Medical Center. But a publicist for the singer said she was "in excellent condition" with fractures and bruises.

Hospital officials did not clarify her status late Monday. A call to a hospital spokeswoman was not returned, and an operator said no patient named Iglesias was listed there.

A police statement said Isabel Iglesias was injured Sunday, when a car driven by her friend, James Miller, collided with another vehicle on a city street about noon. Both were ejected from the car, the statement said.

Miller underwent surgery and was in serious condition, while the other driver was uninjured, police said.

The singer's publicist said Julio Iglesias flew to Los Angeles from Miami after the accident to be with his daughter.

LONDON (AP) — Mick Jagger and Jerry Hall, whose pending divorce could prove ugly, kissed Monday night after a celebrity-studded movie premiere.

Arriving separately at a party after the showing of Rogue Trader, Hall gave Jagger a kiss on the cheek and the couple exchanged a few words while smiling.

They separated earlier this year, after newspapers reported claims by Brazilian model Luciana Gimenez Morad that she was carrying Jagger's child. Jagger maintains he and Hall were never legally married.

The movie tells the story of jailed financial trader Nick Leeson, whose dealings brought down the oldest bank in Britain.

Senior Center lives it up with learning

Life doesn't slow down for a minute for the patrons of 28 S. Linn St.

By Erin Gansen
The Daily Iowan

Age is only a number to the people of the Iowa City Johnson County Senior Center. Just trying to tell them old age means frailty and senility — if you can catch them for a free moment, that is.

The Senior Center, 28 S. Linn St., is an activity site for people ages 55 and up and is funded in part by Iowa City and Johnson County.

It is not a rest home, said Susan Rogusky, volunteer specialist at the center.

From literature to billiards, golf lessons to lapidary (cutting and polishing gems) and more, the center provides seniors with an opportunity to extend the learning process far into their golden years.

"The interests of seniors are no different from anybody else," said Julie Seal, program specialist at the center. "The community needs to understand that this is an extremely vital building. People who are active need to check this place out."

The center focuses on a vision for the future that honors the past, she said.

"The new generation of seniors is vastly different from previous generations," Seal said. "Instead of sitting at home, many retirees now do what they didn't have time for when they were working."

The center has three full-time staff members. Its capacity to provide activities and social events is made possible in large part by the approximately 800 volunteers who participated during the 1999 fiscal year, Rogusky said.

Bob Bothell, a 94-year-old volunteer, has been active at the center since 1989; he handles the updating and adding of new members to the 2,500 currently in the database. He said he also participates in the amateur radio club.

Remaining active is an important part of aging well, Rogusky said.

Ray Heffner, a retired UI English professor, has taught classes ranging from Shakespeare to Elizabethan poetry at the center for four years.

"Having students my own age is terrific," he said. "They are not afraid to talk about their own experiences or challenge me. We are there because we enjoy the material."

While spending a month in the hospital last year, recovering from a fire, it was thoughts of the center that helped him, Heffner said.

"I was thinking, 'Could I get back? Could I resume teaching?'" he said. "My students are wonderful people, and the staff here is terrific."

The center also houses the New Horizons Band, a nationwide opportunity for seniors to participate in a music group, without regard to their levels of experience.

The Iowa City division was among the first four bands to be established, Rogusky said. Nearly 100 units now exist across the country.

The band's next performance will be held at the Inaugural All-Iowa New Horizons Band Extravaganza in Blackhawk Park on the Pedestrian Mall, Saturday from 6-9 p.m. The event is free to the public.

Iowa legislators try to protect first-in-nation caucuses

Recent attempts at one-upmanship by various states is prompting Iowa legislators to uphold a 1983 law.

By George Hill
The Daily Iowan

Since 1983, state law has required that the Iowa caucuses take place at least eight days before any other state's presidential primary or caucus. And recent incidents of front-loading — in which state political parties vie for the earliest political contest — have prompted state legislators to try to implement the Iowa law.

In 1996, Louisiana held its GOP primary a week before the Iowa caucuses but suffered low voter turnout. Louisiana Republicans voted earlier this month to again leapfrog Iowa.

South Carolina Republicans and Democrats moved their primary up to Feb. 19, 2000, and that led New Hampshire to move its primary to Feb. 8, two weeks earlier than its original schedule. These recent changes leave Iowa without a scheduled date for its caucuses.

However, Iowa legislators are doing everything they can to keep the state first, said Donn Stanley, press agent for Iowa Secretary of State Chet Culver.

"We have recently formed the First in the Nation Caucus Commission that advises candidates and the national parties that Iowa law mandates that our political caucus is first."

Although front-loading happens to a small degree in each election cycle, Stanley said, it has never been as competitive as it is now.

"This is the first time there has been this much jockeying for position," he said.

Cary Covington, a UI associate professor of political science, said he understands the desire to be first.

"States get more attention, both politically, socially and economically," he said. "It also serves as a big ego boost for the state."

Although front-loading is popular with the states, it does not interest the national parties, said UI junior Chris Logli, president of Students for Bill Bradley.

"The parties have an interest in maintaining stability and logic in the process," he said. "They want a system that will help their candidates, not confuse or rush them."

Front-loading also makes the campaigns more difficult for the candidates by giving them less time to prepare between contests, Logli said.

"It makes it difficult for some of the lesser-known and less-funded candidates to perform well," he said. "They can't recover the financial resources or build the support in the short amount of time."

Covington predicts front-loading will begin to diminish.

"The national parties will have to grant approval of the state's decisions, and that could be difficult to receive," he said.

The First in the Nation Caucus Commission is expected to announce whether Iowa's caucus will remain first early next week, Stanley said.

CITY BRIEF

Construction to close part of Gilbert Street

The west southbound lane of traffic on Gilbert Street between Iowa Avenue and Washington Street will be closed beginning today because of construction work in the area.

The project, which is scheduled to be completed by June 29, is a collaboration between MidAmerican Energy Co. and Wolf Construction Inc. to build underground utility conduits.

The conduits — plastic devices that help to keep electric, cable and phone lines in working order — will replace the overhead lines that are currently located on the block.

Kim Johnson, an Iowa City project coordinator, said the relocation of the lines would serve to facilitate the building of a new parking structure on Iowa Avenue between Gilbert and Linn streets. Plans for building the parking ramp have not yet been finalized, she said; however, the city will be taking bids for the project Thursday.

"It's going quite well," said Dick Bock, a customer technician for MidAmerican in Iowa City. Bock said the project will create three manholes that will allow the company to continue work once the actual street construction is done.

He estimated that the work will take another month to complete. The manholes will allow the technicians to pull the cables into the conduits as the overhead lines are removed so that service will not be disrupted in the area, Bock said.

Awareness of amendments urged

■ Ignorance about two state constitutional amendments may result in low voter turnout, forum participants say.

By Kelly Wilson
The Daily Iowan

The small number of people who attended an educational forum Tuesday on two proposed state constitutional amendments voiced concerns about low voter turnout at the special election set for June 29.

Some of the 13 people at the hour-long forum, held at Old Brick, 26 E. Market St., said that because some Iowans are not fully aware of the issues surrounding the amendments, they may not feel comfortable casting their votes.

"This election has been a very low-profile thing," said Mark Smelley, an Iowa City resident.

"These are complex amendments, and people need to know more about them before they can make a decision," he said.

The first amendment would limit state spending to 99 percent of state revenue; the second would require a 60 percent majority before income or sales taxes could be raised.

State Rep. Chuck Larson, R-Cedar Rapids, was joined by Cloyd Robinson, vice president of Iowans for Tax Relief, in speaking in favor of the amendments. The amendments could help accomplish necessary policies for Iowa, Larson said.

"We have a wonderful opportunity to set the stage so that Iowa never goes into debt again," he said.

This would be done because a "rainy day" fund would be established with the remaining 1 percent of state revenue, he said.

However, Iowa State Education Association lobbyist Brad Hudson told the forum that he does not think the amendments will work.

"In the '80s, during the farm crisis, a rainy-day fund would have run out in two years," he said. "If we get into hard times again, we will have only two options — either to raise property taxes or to cut services."

Larson defended the second amendment, saying that 13 other states had successfully adopted a similar one. The benefits can be seen in those states' lower taxes and faster economic growth, he said.

However, Hudson said, Iowa is very different from the other states, which include Mississippi and South Dakota. He also said the amendment is dangerous to property taxes because they would be the only remaining taxes that require a simple majority.

Another heated issue that surfaced during the forum concerned the changing the form of the state Constitution.

"Our government is pretty good in Iowa," said State Rep. Dick Myers, D-Iowa City. "We need to make it work without amending our Constitution."

Stress-care program gets new director

■ "I want to be able to offer all my services to people who are scared," Larry Barsh says.

By Melissa Renaud
The Daily Iowan

Larry Barsh, the developer of the Attitudinal Imaging Process, which focuses on deep relaxation and visualization techniques for reducing and managing stress, was named the stress-management instructor of the CHAMPS program at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Through music, exercise, change of diet, self-hypnosis and other techniques, Barsh said, he is determined to help patients learn to control their states of mind.

"Everyone needs to see themselves as persons of potential, even if they are faced with a challenge," he said. "I like to begin all my programs with reducing stress. I want to be able to offer all my services to people who are scared. To put things into perspective is a big hurdle."

CHAMPS — UIHC's Cardiovascular Health, Assessment, Management and Prevention Services — helps patients to effectively manage and reduce stress.

While the program is designed specifically for cardiovascular patients, the services are available for all patients, employees and members of the community.

"Many people join the prevention program when they are seeking to lose weight, control their blood pressure, or monitor their cholesterol level," said Patty Lounsbury, program director of CHAMPS.

Shirley Carter, a community member and a former patient, is grateful for the program. "It has motivated me to work at home and to get stronger," she said. "Without it, I wouldn't be anywhere."

"We offer consultation with all the experts who work here," Lounsbury said. "Our health-care provider's expertise is at a higher level than most health club instructors."

Before practicing in Iowa City for two years, Barsh had a private practice in Tucson, Ariz., and served as a counselor at the Arizona Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.

Loss of 2006 Winter Olympic games stuns Switzerland

■ There is much looking into the mirror in the Alpine nation, as the Swiss conclude they're unloved.

By Claire Nullis
Associated Press

GENEVA — In a national bout of soul-searching following the unexpected loss of the 2006 Winter Olympics, Switzerland has concluded that it is isolated and unloved as never before.

The weekend decision by the International Olympic Committee to award the 2006 Games to the Italian city of Turin rather than Swiss front-runner Sion has unleashed anger and accusations of dirty tricks in the scandal-ridden International Olympic Committee.

But it is also seen as a political rebuke for the Swiss, whose international reputation has been tarnished by allegations of wartime collusion with the Nazis. There is a growing realization that the small Alpine nation — which champions its neutrality and is a member of neither the United Nations nor European Union — must change its ways.

"I never even dreamed that we had such a bad reputation," Sports Minister Adolf Ogi told Le Temps newspaper in an interview published Tuesday. "We have a strong economic presence worldwide, but politically we are alone."

"I heard delegates say they wanted the Swiss to lose. People don't like Switzerland."

The issue of neutral Switzerland's World War II role and its treatment of Holocaust victims' assets has led to frayed relations with the United States and other countries. Jewish groups have accused it of profiting from the Holocaust by retaining the assets of Jews slain by the Nazis, acting as Adolf Hitler's banker and trafficking in gold stolen by the Nazis.

Last August, after much foot-dragging, Switzerland's two biggest banks agreed to pay $1.25 billion in an out-of-court settlement of Holocaust survivors' claims for wartime losses.

Still, Ogi, like most other commentators, said the overwhelming 53-36 Olympic vote in favor of Turin was principally a backlash against Swiss IOC member Marc Hodler. It was Hodler who blew the whistle on wrong-doing by Salt Lake City and forced the Swiss-headquartered Olympic movement into an anti-corruption drive which forced out nine members and cost the rest their privileges.

Beyond that, a shaken Ogi conceded that Switzerland's image problem stemmed from "our attitude." Numerous IOC members and other Olympic officials have said the loss was as much because the Swiss were perceived as arrogant and overconfident.

"We claim to be the best. We play at being school masters and teaching others lessons. We overestimate ourselves," said Ogi, who is also Swiss vice president.

Supreme Court limits disabilities act

■ The court rules that the ADA does not protect people whose conditions, such as poor eyesight, can be corrected.

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Tuesday limited the reach of a federal ban on discrimination against the disabled, ruling the law generally does not protect people with poor eyesight or other conditions that can be corrected.

Protections of the Americans with Disabilities Act usually are restricted to people whose conditions are not readily corrected with medication or devices such as eyeglasses, the justices said in three rulings.

Even before Tuesday's decisions, employers had won the vast majority of lawsuits resolved in court under the ADA, a 1990 law best known for requiring handicap-access ramps in public buildings.

In a separate ruling that also centered on the ADA law, the high court held, 6-3, that states may have to place people with mental disabilities in homelike settings if they can fare just as well there as in state hospitals. In the narrow, middle-of-the-road ruling, the court in a Georgia case said the ADA law requires such community placement of the mentally disabled whenever appropriate.

"We confront the question whether the proscription of discrimination may require placement of persons with mental disabilities in community settings, rather than in institutions," Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote for the court. "The answer, we hold, is a qualified yes."

In an unrelated case, the court, on a 7-2 vote, made it slightly easier for victims of on-the-job discrimination to force their employers to pay extra monetary damages as punishment.

The rulings limiting application of ADA's protections bar lawsuits by two nearsighted pilots, a truck driver almost blind in one eye and a mechanic with high blood pressure who were either fired or denied employment.

"We hold that determination of whether an individual is disabled should be made with reference to measures that mitigate the individual's impairment, including, in this instance, eyeglasses and contact lenses," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote in the case of the two nearsighted pilots.

The court also ruled that the two women, as well as the mechanic with high blood pressure, were not entitled to coverage under a provision of the law protecting people who are "regarded as" having a disability.

The court ruled 7-2 in those two cases, while the justices ruled unanimously against the truck driver who is almost blind in one eye.

A disability-rights group called the three decisions a "profound setback." The Center for an Accessible Society said the court's interpretation of the law "erroneously turns the act into a benefits law under which only a select group of Americans can qualify."

The ADA prohibits employers from discriminating against a "qualified individual with a disability" because of that disability.

A qualified person is defined as one who can perform a job when given reasonable accommodation, and a disability is a condition that substantially limits a major life activity. The ADA also protects people who are "regarded as" having a disability.

Minorities, drug users less likely to get AIDS cocktails

■ "There is a great divide in HIV care between the haves and the have-nots," the lead author of a new study says.

By Laura Meckler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Revolutionary AIDS drugs that have prolonged life for thousands of people are less likely to reach an entire class of victims — those who contracted the virus through drug use — the first national study of AIDS treatment found.

Blacks, Latinos, people with Medicaid and those without health insurance were all less likely to get the new drugs and other important health care, particularly in early 1996, when the study began.

Two years later, the gap had narrowed for some groups — notably Latinos and blacks. But it persisted for many others, including women, who are most likely to get HIV through sex with a drug user and were also less likely to be in treatment.

"It's very clear there is a great divide in HIV care between the haves and the have-nots," said Dr. Martin F. Shapiro of the University of California, Los Angeles, lead author of the study, which is to be published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Disparities in access to health care exist throughout the health system, not just in AIDS treatment. But unlike other diseases, most people with the AIDS virus can trace their infection to one of two sources: homosexual men or intravenous drug users.

Part of the explanation is simple economics. People infected through intravenous drug use, or sex with a drug user, generally have less money, less education and more problems — all of which keep them from getting effective care. Someone who can't pay the rent or buy groceries, or someone who is addicted to drugs, may find getting medical care a low priority.

"That tends to be much more of a down-and-out population in every way," said Dr. Alvin F. Poussaint, who studies racial disparities in health at the Harvard Medical School.

At the same time, the gay community has mobilized around the disease, educating its members about treatment options and the importance of getting care.

But, while the AIDS epidemic hit homosexual men first, blacks are the fastest growing group of victims and now account for nearly half of all new infections, making the disparities in care even more alarming to public health officials.

There are many AIDS clinics in the gay community but few that are targeted to drug users, said Peter Lurie of Public Citizen's Health Research Group.

The new research comes from the HIV Cost and Utilization Study, the first national data on care for people with HIV and AIDS. Researchers identified approximately 231,400 American adults with HIV who were receiving at least some medical care outside the military or prison; the study included all states except Alaska and Hawaii.

NATO troops continue to find mass graves

ATROCITIES

• A Kosovo Liberation Army guerrilla with a bandana tied over his nose pulls on a rope snaking from the ground, lifting out the head of one of 10 people buried there. The cord that strangled the victims is still around the neck.

• Outside Djakovica, an Italian soldier points his foot at a human ribcage in a gravel pit that villagers say holds the bodies of 86 people massacred in the southwestern city. "A boy," the soldier guesses.

• A woman's skull rests among the charred bones of 26 people who were shot and then had their house burned around them in the village of Cara Luka, 22 miles southwest of the capital, Pristina. Hair intact, head tilted back, her mouth is wide open. "As if she's still screaming," people studying the scene tell each other.

In some cases, as at Cara Luka, residents are waiting for investigators from the international war-crimes tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands, to come before they properly bury the dead. FBI investigators are to aid U.N. war-crimes prosecutors in examining the sites, NATO says.

At least one investigator with the war-crimes tribunal is touring mass graves by helicopter, flying into one site for a quick initial survey and pictures, then flying on to the next one.

On the ground, villagers are scrupulous in telling the stories of the massacres, even — or especially — if traces of the killing are few. They tally the dead, providing estimates on the number of bodies buried hastily under the mounds of earth.

"The world will know about these," said Sadik Xhemajli, a KLA officer in the village of Izibica near the northwest city of Mitrovica.

Xhemajli has painstakingly written, and laboriously reads, an account of Serb killings of 142 people at his village from March 28 to May 10.

The dead include 119 people executed at once, and an 88-year-old woman and a mentally ill, paralyzed man shot because they were unable to walk to the Serb-guarded convoy that was to deport them to Albania, the ledger says.

In all, seven of the victims were women. Two were children. Ninety-eight were men older than 50, up to the age of 102, Xhemajli recites.

Spy cameras flying overhead caught the sight, and the Pentagon cited it June 9 as a sign of ongoing Serb atrocities in Kosovo.

Serbs took away the bodies "just to lose the evidence," Xhemajli said. "To escape The Hague." Xhemajli, at a village a long, bumpy ride down a mud road, somehow has gotten word to authorities of the killings. He awaits The Hague.

for the interviewing of the semi-finalists, though, again, the final decision will be left solely to the board.

The board also agreed that in addition to its interview, the candidates will be interviewed by two other groups consisting of eight members each; they will include parents, students, teachers and senior citizens.

The board also gave its consent to a number of items, including the Cooperative Student Teaching Agreement with the UI.

The agreement not only encourages a cooperation between the UI and local schools in placing student teachers but also in generating high-quality teachers in local schools.

ed NATO ordnance they were trying to destroy accidentally blew up. Two villagers helping the peacekeepers also were killed, and a third was hurt.

Rrustem Mustafa, a KLA commander known for his hard-line views, said an agreement in which the rebels pledged to turn in their weapons, disband, and put away their uniforms doesn't mean the end of the insurgents or their struggle for an independent Kosovo.

"The agreement does not demand that we give up our arms," Mustafa, known as "Commander Remi," told the rebels' Kosovo Press news service. "The arms will be gathered at certain places, and the KLA will take care of them while NATO has a right to observe them."

Mustafa appears to be technically correct on the issue of arms — at least for the time being. The agreement reached Monday between NATO and the KLA calls for the rebels and peacekeepers to have joint control over the weapons storehouses for 90 days, after which the insurgent army is to disband as a military force.

Meanwhile, in a camp of muddy tents within sight of Kosovo, President Clinton Tuesday listened to refugee accusations of Serb torture and massacres of Kosovars. "There's some bitterness," Clinton said, even as he called on all sides to respect human rights.

After visiting with refugees longing to go back to Kosovo, Clinton acknowledged concerns that some might seek revenge against remaining Serbs.

But he told reporters, "So far, so good. We thought there would be some problems, and I thought they would be worse."

This settlement, near the capital city of Skopje, sits on a vast farm plain surrounded by wooded mountains, eight or nine miles from Kosovo. To the refugees, the nearby hills and distant snow-capped peaks point to home.

Many thousands of restless refugees have rushed back to Kosovo in cars and taxis against the advice of relief workers. The president urged the 10,000 refugees still here to stay until land mines are removed from the paths at home.

"You have suffered enough," he said.

Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton and their daughter, Chelsea, came on the final day of a week-long visit to Europe. Children and their parents rushed from drab tents where they've spent anxious weeks to kiss and hug the president. Crowds chanted, "Cleen-ton, Cleen-ton" and "U-S-A."

Talking with reporters, Clinton was uncertain about whether the expelled Kosovars and their former Serb neighbors could get along again in Kosovo. "I just don't know," Clinton said. He said the diversity of NATO peacekeeping troops would be helpful.

"There's the power of their example," Clinton said, adding that bitterness wouldn't be a problem if both sides felt secure.

year State Department spending bill, now goes to the House, in which similar legislation in the past became snarled in an unrelated dispute over abortion.

The United States has warned the United States that it will lose its General Assembly voting rights if at least $250 million of the back dues isn't paid by December. The United States has been late on its payments for the past 13 years.

By U.N. calculations, that leaves the United States $1.69 billion in arrears, nearly 60 percent of the total debt owed to the 185-nation organization. U.N. officials have complained that makes it hard for the United Nations to pay its own bills.

The United States disputes some of the arrears but concedes owing at least $1 billion.

The demands for a reduction in the U.S. share for the United Nations were the result of a compromise between Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Senate leaders.

Albright agreed to support the proposed cut in the U.S. share, and, in exchange, Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Jesse Helms, R-N.C., agreed to back away from more ambitious demands for changes at the United Nations.

Sen. Rod Grams, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on international operations, Monday called the United Nations "a bloated bureaucracy" and said that, without housekeeping reforms, "the U.N. will collapse under its own weight."

The compromise bill would allow payments of $819 million in U.S. debts to the United Nations over three years and forgive $107 million that the United Nations owes the United States, for a total of $926 million.

The bill also calls for spending $3 billion over the next five years to beef up security at U.S. embassies around the world — the same amount requested by the administration in the aftermath of last year's attacks on U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania.

Veteran diplomat Richard Holbrooke, President Clinton's nominee to be U.N. ambassador, has voiced support for the lower U.S. share of the U.N. budget.

Helms' committee was holding a hearing with Holbrooke Tuesday dealing with the U.N. payments issue. His long-delayed nomination is expected to be approved by the full Senate within a few weeks, both Republican and Democratic leaders predicted.

The loss of a vote in the General Assembly would be an embarrassment, but it would not affect Washington's veto power in the Security Council, the most powerful decision-making body at the United Nations.

You don't have to be Einstein to study the brain

It was a theory that seemed sound back in one's playground days, before science teachers could get a hold of children and explain to them the complexities of the human mind.

If somebody appeared especially intelligent, why then, he or she must just have a big brain — perhaps larger than most. It was simple — just as a person with larger muscles can lift heavier objects, an individual with a large brain can figure out things that most others can't, such as how to open an aspirin bottle with one of those child safety caps. Right?

Quite recently, scientists confirmed what any 10-year-old child could have guessed — that the brain of Albert Einstein, a fairly bright man, was in fact physically different from a typical brain. The section that researchers think controls mathematical reasoning was found to be about 15 percent larger than normal, enabling Einstein to figure out equations that would resemble ancient hieroglyphics to the rest of us. Furthermore, a deep groove that most people have in their brains was virtually non-existent in Einstein's, leading the experts to assume that this allowed "different and better" thinking.

Ah, of course. You see, we love to fit things into tidy little capsules, phrases and infographics, and a group of scientists up in Canada finally gave society a concise explanation for Einstein's intelligence: He had a big brain.

This is what Americans have waited nearly a half century for, and it is a theory that could have been deduced by some a half century before that. Around the turn of the century, a popular scientific field called phrenology was causing a stir. This was essentially the study of skull and brain size in relation to intelligence. Kind of medieval, to be sure, but scientific study was still emerging from its dark ages at the time.

Most sinister was that these studies were taken quite seriously as a means to justify racism. Groups of white Anglo-Saxon researchers concluded, surprisingly, that white Anglo-Saxons were at the top of the heap in terms of intelligence. A hierarchy was then established that placed other ethnic groups in descending order, with Native Americans and Africans toward the bottom of the barrel. Though we now know that people of all races can be both smart and stupid, this scientific myth was perpetuated widely up through Einstein's salad days and the Nazi era in Germany, where Hitler used these reports as the scientific basis for his "final solution."

After decades of dramatic scientific advances, however, this outmoded theory has reasserted itself through the study of Einstein's brain. While researchers have been quick to note that brain anatomy does not necessarily determine intelligence, their findings do raise some intriguing ideas.

If parts of Einstein's brain were what made him different, what of the many other individuals who have gained notoriety through mental quirks? The brains of Hitler and Napoleon, if they were to be examined, would probably show that the lobe governing one's desire to conquer Europe was significantly larger than average. And if, on a later date, the brains of both Bill Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton were studied, there could be some telling results.

In Hillary, we can be sure, the area controlling one's affinity for the state of New York is at least 22 percent greater than normal. In her husband, the region that regulates one's disposition toward interns would be above average as well. In individuals such as Howard Stern and Rush Limbaugh, the area of the brain that controls good taste and rational thought would be almost imperceptible.

Thus it stands that if scientists were to take their study of Einstein's brain further, they might find abnormalities in some other famous brains. They could probably spend years trying to make sense out of mine. However, they probably should not turn experiments such as these into publicity stunts, lest some people get carried away with the results and resort to 19th century attitudes toward the human brain.

The truth remains, until further notice, that brain activity and development is determined more by environment and education than by physical size or other visible characteristics. Recent findings in regard to Einstein's brain, attractive as they may be, do not reflect too strongly against this theory.

I certainly hope they do not, at least — I don't want any third-graders knowing more about brain science than myself.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Remember importance of libraries and counselors

I remember how much I benefited as a youth from having a librarian and counselor at my school. The idea that Iowa's children could miss out on such opportunities because a bureaucratic error left these positions out of the state code is a tragedy.

Because they are no longer required, many districts are not filling library and counselor positions. Other districts are reducing their hours or increasing the number of schools certified professionals must cover to the point that they are spread thin. All public schools receive state funding, and certain basic personnel requirements are necessary to ensure that taxpayer money is providing an educational experience that meets high standards.

Some administrators object to the library and counselor requirements because there is a shortage of these professionals. Media and counseling programs are rigorous. These fields refuse to water down their course loads to meet demand as some certifications have. Should the library and counseling fields be penalized for keeping their bars high?

The very nature of education requires that decisions be based on scientific research. An extensive study of factors affecting academic achievement found the most important factor was the number of at-risk students — precisely the young people who most benefit from counselling services. The second most important factor, because it has an impact on every curricular area, was quality of the media center.

We need strict standards in these areas. So far, education supporters have been unable to muster enough votes in the Legislature to correct the bill drafting error that left libraries and counselors out of the code. But practically none of the parents and students in this state are aware of what has happened. So far, legislators have heard from only a few special-interest groups on this issue.

Parents want the best for their kids, and kids today are savvy about what they need to succeed in the future — they have to be. Few parents or students have not been touched at some point in their lives by the right book or a piece of timely advice from a trained counselor. When past mistakes are corrected, education in Iowa will turn around and we'll head back to the top.

Constitutional amendments are not what Iowa needs

Once again, it is time to "Just say no!" Two proposed constitutional amendments are now before the registered voters of Iowa (from now until June 29). I say to anyone who cares — vote no, twice please!

The first proposal presents language that argues for state spending limits. As a normative principal, many people think any plan to limit government spending is good. But even if the amendment were to pass, the language alone could not stop deficit spending. Unlike the way you or I might budget our finances, the state Legislature must agree to spending targets and limits at least one year in advance.

And unlike our income streams, state revenues do not come in nice and tidy bundles at regular intervals. Hence, state officials must decide how much to spend with certainty, yet guess about future income. So a constitutional amendment that demands the state may spend no more than 99 percent of yearly revenue is problematic. Such a proposal either: 1) asks the impossible; 2) creates a stupid system of budgeting; or 3) asks state officials to "cook the books."

On one level, demanding that state officials define spending limits based on unknown, future revenues is outlandish. How can it be done? Typically, government appropriations are identical from one year to the next. But the same is not true for revenue streams. What will happen to future revenue projections when Iowa's export market collapses, or agricultural production lags? Was the latter not the case in the 1980s, when family farms throughout the state, and the nation, went into bankruptcy?

Some people argue that the state Legislature could offset economic downturns by creating formulaic appropriations. But such a system would demand that all and any contingencies be foreseen. How much money did the state allot for drug rehab for methamphetamine in the early 1990s, when its use was largely unknown? How much money did the state appropriate for children whose parents are in jail for drug crime? If state programs are tied to specific percentages of state revenue, what do we do when unforeseen needs arise?

Furthermore, if people are really worried about controlling state spending, I challenge them to read the current budget reports. Legislative committees and state financial officers can construct outlays, debts or "off-budget" accounts in such a way as to define revenue and spending limits to meet the amendment constraints regardless of the "true" figures.

But strictly speaking, there is no reason to think such an amendment would be enforceable. What would be the penalty for the Legislature's appropriating and the governor's approving a bill that ultimately allowed more than 99 percent of the state's revenue to be spent? Would some court take the excess out of the salaries of state employees? Would the government just close down near the end of a fiscal year?

John Calvin Jones

A long time ago I learned, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it."

This amendment will not bring a leash to heal a state government gone wild. Over the past years, the economy has been healthy, and the state legislators so prudent (or stingy) as to create a $900 million budget surplus! Instead the amendment, if enforceable, ties the hands of elected state leaders who might find the need to pass emergency spending bills, be it for flood victims, post-tornado infrastructure improvements or farmers wiped out by a new bacteria.

Just a quick comment about the other amendment — to require 60 percent of the Legislature agree to any tax increase. I say, "more of the same." Simply put, it is unnecessary. State taxes as a component of the general budgeting process are always contentious. Most voters do not like taxes being raised regardless of their proposed use.

Hence, every legislator who agrees to such a tax is at risk of offending the voters. At the same time, for those of us who like stuff like roads, the UI, hospitals and state police — with fancy computer systems that can access your life history — taxes actually provide society some benefit (so-called non-market goods). I say let the voters decide. The 60 percent amendment only creates a hurdle in the process of election and delegation.

Unlike the equal-status amendment that passed last November, questions of state budget and tax policy were central issues to those who drafted the state constitution. The main reason that the state's founders did not write in these presently proposed amendments is because they are BAD IDEAS. When external factors devastate or bolster the state's economy, the state's coffers shrink or grow. These amendments will not change that reality, and they will not help Iowa's future either.

■ A software tycoon pays $156,500 for the Salinger letters and wants to return them to the author.

By Beth Gardiner
Associated Press

Associated Press

A collection of 14 letters, from J.D. Salinger to Joyce Maynard, is seen in this undated photo from Sotheby's auction house in New York.

NEW YORK — Fourteen letters written by the famously reclusive J.D. Salinger to a young woman with whom he had a May-December romance were sold at auction Tuesday; they may be returned to the author.

A California software company founder paid $156,500 for the letters to Joyce Maynard, who was vilified when she announced plans to sell the letters.

Excerpts of the letters appeared in her 1998 book, At Home in the World, which details her romance with Salinger when she was 18 and he was 53.

"I share the widely expressed opinion that the work should be bought by someone sympathetic to Mr. Salinger's desire for privacy," said Peter Norton, a philanthropist and the retired head of the company that makes the Norton Utilities software.

"I plan to return the letters to Mr. Salinger or do whatever else Mr. Salinger lets me know he wants done with them," Norton, who lives in Santa Monica, Calif., said in a statement.

Columnist Maureen Dowd called Maynard a "leech." The National Review said she was an "opportunistic one-time nymphet."

Salinger was silent. Now 80, he lives in Cornish, N.H., and still shuns publicity. He has not published in 34 years.

Maynard, a divorced mother of three, has said supporting her children is more important to her than protecting Salinger's privacy. The letters had been expected to fetch between $60,000 and $80,000.

She said she hopes to use auction proceeds to pay her children's college tuition.

"My decision to sell these letters is not some kind of act of retribution against Salinger," Maynard said. "It's a decision grounded in practical realities... It's a financial decision."

Sotheby's manuscript expert, Marsha Malinowski, said the letters were of scholarly importance.

"They contain an enormous amount of information about why he writes the way he does, why he decided to have a more private life as a writer," she said.

Salinger and Maynard began corresponding in 1972, when he wrote her to praise a story she wrote for the New York Times Magazine called "An 18-Year-Old Looks Back on Life."

'Randy' doll lights mom's fire

■ Oh, behave! A swinging Austin Powers doll sets off a tempest in an Atlanta suburb.

By E.N. Smith
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Move over Dr. Evil, British superspy Austin Powers has a real-life nemesis — a suburban Atlanta mom out to stop toy makers from selling a doll that asks: "Do I make you horny, baby? Do I?"

The underwear-clad dolls with gorilla-like chest hair repeat lines from the Mike Myers comedy Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me. The "horny" quote particularly peeved Tamatha Brannon of East Point, a suburb of Atlanta.

"I can't believe this toy is approved for ages 10 and up. It's perverted," she said Tuesday.

Brannon grew upset when her 11-year-old son picked a doll up in a Toys R Us last week and pestered her about what "horny" meant. The doll doesn't speak unless you take it out of the package, but the quotation is written on the box.

McFarlane Toys, which manufactures the doll, said the adult version of the doll is only available at record stores and novelty shops that cater to an older audience and should never have been sent to Toys R Us.

The company also makes a fully clothed Powers doll with "softer" quotes from the film, which is rated PG-13, said President and CEO Todd McFarlane.

"Given that we ship millions of toys all over the world, it's certainly possible one case ended up to the left or to the right of where it should have been," McFarlane said from his Tempe, Ariz., office.

Officials at Toys R Us headquarters in Paramus, N.J., were also surprised to hear that the adult version ended up on its shelves.

"We bought the version that does not say those things," said Rebecca Caruso, a company spokeswoman. Toys R Us stores throughout the nation were asked Tuesday to pull any of the "horny" dolls from the shelves.

Caruso said only the Atlanta store had the shirtless doll, while most others had McFarlane's "softer" version.

But that version isn't exactly child-friendly. Among its expressions: "Would you fancy a shag?" Shag is modern British slang for Shakespeare's two-backed beast.

Sloppy play raises doubts about Spurs

By Chris Sheridan
 Associated Press

NEW YORK — The old San Antonio Spurs were said to be softer than an overripe banana on a bed of Charmin. The new Spurs are supposed to be different.

Game 4 will tell. A little adversity and a smidgen of self-doubt were the factors San Antonio had to contend with Tuesday following its loss to the New York Knicks in Game 3 of the NBA Finals.

The Spurs still lead the series 2-1, with Game 4 on Wednesday night.

"We want to instill as much doubt as we can," New York's Kurt Thomas said. "When you talk about demeanor, you can tell when a person is upset about something or down on themselves. But they looked the same as they did in Game 1. They kept fighting until the last second."

What Thomas didn't see was the anger in coach Gregg Popovich's eyes as he yelled at his team during a first-quarter timeout Monday night.

"All of a sudden we're playing the exact opposite from what we talked about for a week!" he screamed.

The Spurs trailed almost the entire game, tying it only once, and played their sloppiest ball in a long time. It was the first loss for San Antonio since May 11.

The Knicks, who have been thriving on adversity throughout the season, will now try to send the Spurs to their first two-game losing streak since the end of February.

Hawkeye teams anxiously await their new home

After years of planning, the Iowa Hawkeye tennis and swimming teams will get a new facility as early as 2002.

By Todd Hefferman
 The Daily Iowan

2002 can't get here fast enough for the Iowa Hawkeye swimming, tennis and track squads. That's the earliest that the new Hawkeye Tennis and Aquatics Facility could open, and take the pressure off of several aging havens of Iowa athletics that are eager for repair.

Since they don't have the revenue power of such engines as men's basketball or football, it has been a slow process renovating the aging Recreation Building, Klotz Tennis Courts, and Fieldhouse pool.

Each facility has their own unique set of problems. The Recreation Building has the most glaring problem—a double polyurethane surface that is deteriorating and potentially dangerous for participants.

"It's not great for track, and it's not great for tennis," men's track coach

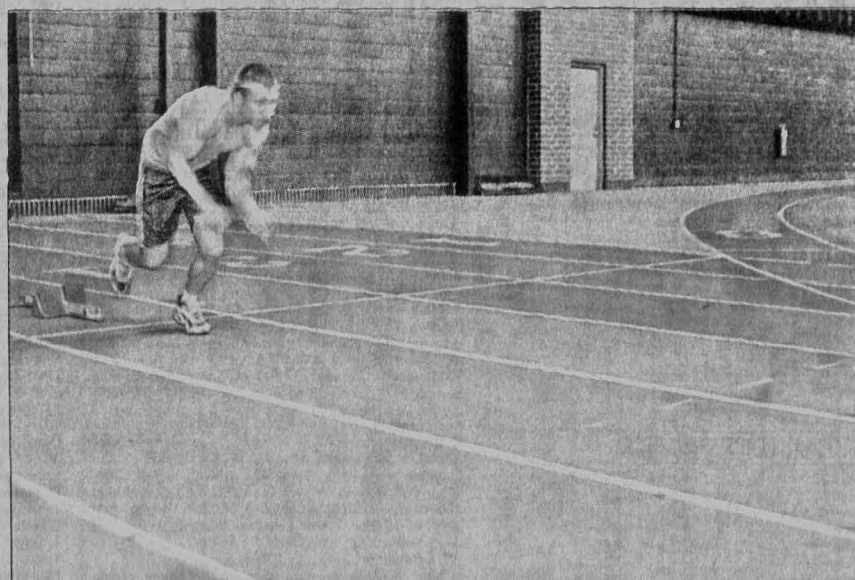

Larry Wiczorek said. "The surface is hard, and it can contribute to injuries. Once we get a new surface, and tennis moves out, it'll be a nice facility."

Klotz Tennis Courts, located behind Kinnick Stadium, experiences cracks every year, and usually needs to be resurfaced every two years.

The Fieldhouse pool, originally opened in 1927, is in need of structural repairs to the pool and the general area.

Plans for the Rec Building include putting a surface that is more conductive to track in after the tennis center opens and making it exclusively an indoor track facility.

The new tennis center will feature eight indoor tennis courts, and 12 outdoor courts, of which at least six will be lit. What will happen to the six indoor courts on the infield of the Rec. Building is still in question. The

One and done

16-year old Jelena Dokic pulled off one of the biggest upsets in recent history when she sent No. 1 seeded Martina Hingis packing.

By Steven Wine
 Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — This time there were no tears for Martina Hingis, who simply walked off the court dazed in defeat.

In one of the greatest upsets in Wimbledon's 113-year history, Hingis lost 6-2, 6-0 today in the opening round to Jelena Dokic, a 16-year-old qualifier ranked 129th.

The world's top-ranked woman was playing her first singles match since her emotional collapse at the French Open final. But there was no repeat of her petulant display that drew boos in Paris.

Instead, Hingis left the court with a vacant, stoic expression. At a news conference she even managed to smile while discussing the loss.

"It happens to everybody sometimes," she said. "I'm not that disappointed."

Nonetheless, the result was a stunner, even though Dokic was the top-ranked junior last year before turning professional. She has been touted as a potential star, and her mixture of baseline power and drop shots overwhelmed Hingis.

Boris Becker nearly made a hasty exit, too. The three-time Wimbledon champion overcame three match points in the fourth set to beat wild-card Miles Maclagan 5-7, 6-7 (7-9), 6-4, 7-5, 6-2 in four hours.

Becker announced his retirement two years ago from Grand Slam competition but decided to make one more try at the All England Club.

"Today was as close as it could get, but there's a reason I've won so many matches here," Becker said. "My opponent played incredible, but not good enough."

Andre Agassi had a much easier time, sweeping Andrei Pavel 6-1, 6-2, 6-3. Agassi hopes to become the first man since 1980 to win the French Open and Wimbledon in the same year.

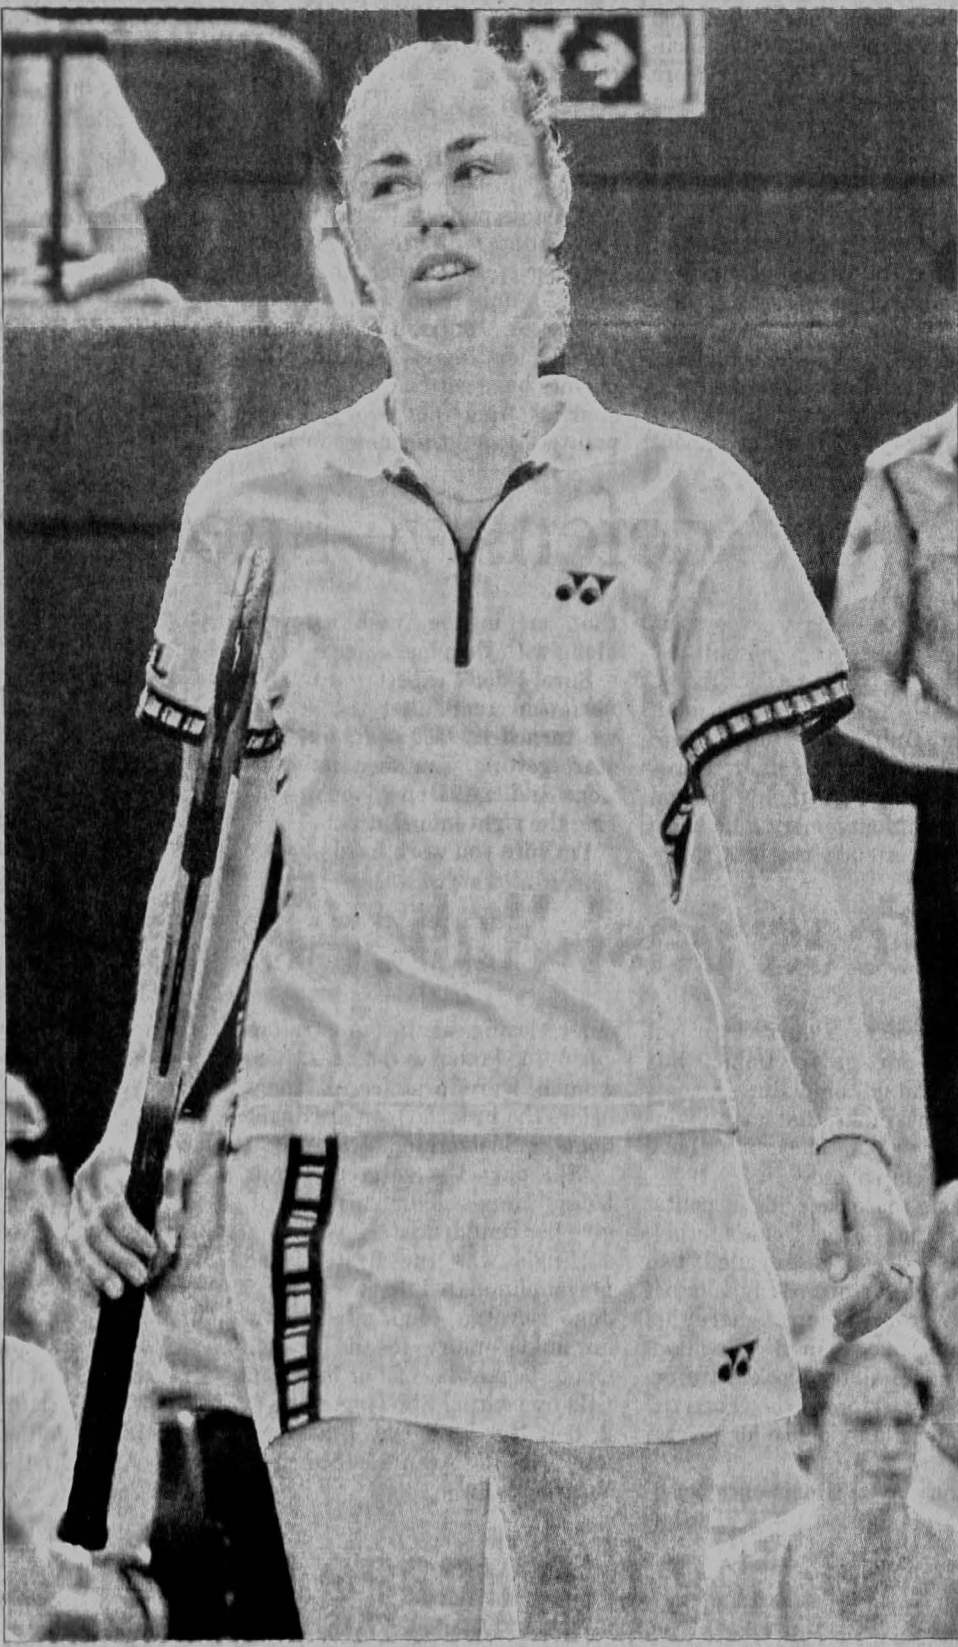

Dokic (pronounced DAH-kick), a Yugoslav-born Australian, had to win three qualifying matches just to make the tournament. She swept the final 11 games and completed her victory in 54 minutes, showing no sign of nervousness.

"It's surprising," Dokic said. "You'd expect me to be, but I wasn't. There's no pressure to win. I've been playing well, and I just went for it."

This was only the third time the top-seeded woman was eliminated in her opening match at Wimbledon — the others were Margaret Smith in 1962 and Steffi Graf in 1994.

It was also the third time during the Open era that a top-seeded woman has lost an opening match of a Grand Slam event.

There was one more first — Hingis played a major match without her mother there. The experiment didn't work.

RIGHT: Dokic raises her arms as she defeats Hingis 6-2, 6-0.

"This tournament we decided to have a little distance," said the 18-year-old Swiss. "I was probably too nervous, not much believing what I could do. I wanted to do it; it didn't work out this time."

Hingis tried to call her mother after the match but couldn't get through on a cell phone.

Her mother, Melanie Molitor, doubles as coach. Hingis said they're still close and she's not looking for another coach, but she will take four or five weeks off.

When asked if she wants time to reflect on her life, Hingis smiled.

Criticizing the Critics

To the Publishers of Lindy's and Athlon's Big Ten Preview Magazines,

Good morning fellow journalists. I'm just curious, where do you come up with your information?

I'm sure you have all the stats and facts on each of the eleven Big Ten universities and their football programs from total yards to what each team eats the night before the game, but that doesn't really amount to much when a new season begins.

Now, don't get angry with me, because, like you, I'm just a critic.

You probably think you know everything and anything about Big Ten football, just as I think I know everything and anything about, let's say, NBA basketball.

You will be quick to tell me how Ohio State and Penn State are the best teams in the land because their rosters are loaded with All-American talent, just as I will tell you how Tim Duncan is the best player in the NBA and how Danny Schayes is the worst, but do either I or you really know that?

Most likely, I would have to say, no.

We, the critics, write a lot of hearsay. Ohio State and Penn State are always picked to win the Big Ten every year because that's what everyone says. Where was Wisconsin picked last year? Not at the top, I can tell you that.

Why is Tim Duncan any better than Allen Iverson? Is it because some guy who has had to much to drink down at the Sports Column says so, or is it because Bill Walton kisses his ass, or maybe because someone like me, who hasn't played in a competitive basketball game since high school, says so?

Of course, there has to be a reason for all of this hostility towards your magazines. Well, it isn't hard to figure out.

My teammates and I were picked to finish tenth out of eleven teams in this upcoming season.

Tenth — that is a little hard to swallow.

Are you sure you didn't make a mistake when you were surfing the Internet sites and chat lines to dig up all the dirt on us? Let me tell you, those are real good sources if you want to find out about nothing that new building out on the corner of Melrose Avenue and Mormon Trek Boulevard will also house an Iowa Athletics Hall of Fame, an auditorium, a Hawk Shop, and an Olympic-sized pool for the men's and women's swimming teams.

The rubber-type surface that lines the track and tennis courts originally made the Rec Building one of the most prestigious indoor attractions around, but over time it has been passed by with the other Big Ten schools opening new facilities.

"It's functional for tennis, but from a recruit's view, it's inferior," men's tennis coach Steve Houghton said. "Most Big Ten teams have their own tennis facilities, with better lighting, more stands. At the time it opened it was the second-best indoor facility — now it's kind of the other end of the spectrum."

Director of Rec. Services Harry Ostrander said that athletics are scheduled to break ground as early as this year for the new building, but that it may take more than two years to complete.

"(The athletics department) is more concerned about Klotz, but they're also very concerned about the Rec Building," Ostrander said. "We've really outlived the life of those tennis courts, but they've done quite well. We're considering replacing the surface before the tennis center opens, but it would be very pricey, possibly near $1 million."

Under the current schedule at the Rec Building, Hawkeye track and tennis players share practice time, often with the track team running sprints around the track as the tennis team works out on the center courts. After several years of sharing the building, the players have gotten fairly used to sharing time, but were disappointed that the new facility couldn't arise before they graduated.

"Sometimes you're playing and they shoot off the starter's pistol, so it gets kind of annoying sometimes, but you get used to it after awhile," junior tennis player Megan Kearney said. "Our balls go out there onto the track all the time while they're running, so it's got to be a hazard for them, too."

"I was hoping that it would be done, but as long as it's started it'll be good for Iowa," Kearney said.

is either relevant or true. In Lindy's magazine you criticized our defensive line, saying they were inexperienced and were learning a whole new system.

First off, learning a new system happens in spring football, so throw that one out the window. Second, we have senior Ed Saidat, ("Dude Bub" or "Dude Love" around campus), senior Corey Brown, junior Anthony Herron and Jerry Montgomery, who has a year's experience. So, let's throw that one in the trash as well, along with your magazine. Sure, I don't expect you to give us much credit after the season we turned in last year, but just start getting your own information. And make sure you're getting the right information. I'm sure you work hard at your job, just as we work hard as a football team. I understand what the media and sports critics are all about, but that doesn't mean I have to agree with you and your assessments. Good day. Sincerely, Matt Bowen

"It's been a great life so far. I really like it," she said, before adding, "A break would really suit me right now." Hingis looked rattled at times but avoided a repeat of the French Open final against Steffi Graf. In that match she walked to the other side of the court to question calls, served underhand near the finish, drew jeers from the crowd and sobbed afterward on her mother's shoulder.

Wimbledon's Court 1 crowd seemed partial to Dokic, but Hingis had no complaint. "I didn't make that many winners," she said. "They didn't have much to clap about." Among those cheering — politely this time — was Dokic's father, Damir, who was expelled two weeks ago for disorderly conduct from a tournament where his daughter played in Birmingham, England. He later blocked traffic, threw himself on the hood of a car and was held by police for several hours. Dokic played Hingis once previously, losing at the Australian Open in January, 6-1, 6-2. The women were practice partners before the French Open at Hingis' home in Switzerland. "She played some great tennis today," Hingis said. "This win will give her confidence." Hingis was the first seeded player eliminated this week. No. 5 Jana Novotna, coming back from an ankle injury in the French Open, began defense of her 1998 title by beating Shi-Ting Wang 6-2, 6-1. No. 3 Lindsay Davenport and No. 7 Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario also won.

In a match that took two days to complete, Jennifer Capriati edged Anke Huber 5-7, 6-3, 9-7. The match was suspended Monday at 5-5 in the third set because of darkness. In men's play, third-seeded Yevgeny Kafelnikov beat Magnus Larsson 6-7 (4-7), 7-5, 7-6 (8-6), 4-6, 7-5 in a match suspended Monday at 5-5 in the final set. 1996 champion Richard Krajicek, seeded fifth, hit 20 aces and swept Christian Ruud 6-2, 6-3, 6-1. Second-seeded Patrick Rafter beat Cristiano Caratti 6-3, 6-2, 6-2.

the series moves on, the next test for the Spurs will be how they react to a diminished comfort zone and the possibility of a tied series. The last time the Spurs were in a similar situation, they went to Minnesota for Game 3 of the first round and beat the Timberwolves by 14 points to take a 2-1 lead in that series. The first round, however, is not as pressure-packed as the finals. In the past five years, the pressure of playing for a championship turned Nick Anderson into a quivering mess at the foul line, made Shandon Anderson turn a game-changing dunk into a blown reverse layup and made Karl Malone miss two game-clinching free throws in Chicago.

"They've been tested, they've been through adversity, and their guys are going to fight just like we fight," New York's Charlie Ward said. "Pressure can be a factor if you are mentally weak, but I don't think those guys are." Latrell Sprewell saw a lot of San Antonio when he was in the Western Conference playing for Golden State. The conventional wisdom then on how to rattle the Spurs was simple: Bang them around, get into their heads and they'd crumble. The wore the label of "soft" for several seasons. "I didn't think it fit. I thought it was an unfair label. It was just that way because they hadn't won," Sprewell said. "Now that they're having success and winning, it's changed their mentality." But that mentality showed signs of stress in Game 3 Monday night as the Spurs lost their cool early, regained their composure midway, but didn't show a killer instinct when they needed it most. Tim Duncan suddenly lost his touch in the fourth quarter. Sean Elliott needed to be checked for a pulse. Mario Elie and Jaren Jackson were helpless when they tried to shut down Allan Houston. No one could hit a jumper. "We came out expecting people to give us something because we were the big bad Spurs. And we're not good when we're that way," Avery Johnson said. "You stay around San Antonio too much and read the papers and believe everything that's being said. But this is no sweep. We're in a dogfight." San Antonio also committed 20 turnovers and failed to outre-bound the Knicks for the third straight game. Still, it was only one game and one loss. "I don't think it's a new series at all, to be honest with you," David Robinson said. "We expected them to fight back. If you go through a series thinking you're going to sweep everybody, you're fools. And we didn't think that." "Obviously it was a great opportunity for us to get a hold of the series and kind of get a break," Robinson said. "But we didn't do it." Said Elliott: "They went out and they wanted it more." Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy said he would stick with Marcus Camby as his starting center in Game 4. He also said it was uncertain whether Chris Childs will be able to play with a sprained knee.

Belle's 3-run shot lifts Orioles past Red Sox

BALTIMORE (AP) — Albert Belle hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning Tuesday night to give the resurgent Baltimore Orioles their 11th win in 12 games, 5-3 over the Boston Red Sox.

The Orioles trailed 3-1 before rallying against three Boston pitchers in a four-run eighth. Three straight singles, two against Mark Guthrie (0-1) loaded the bases for B.J. Surhoff, who hit a sacrifice fly. Belle then hit his 14th homer off Jason Wasdin.

Surhoff went 0-for-3, ending his career-high hitting streak at 21 games.

Arthur Rhodes (3-2) got two outs and Mike Timlin worked the ninth for his ninth save as the Orioles moved within five games of .500 (32-37) for the first time since April 17.

Troy O'Leary and Jason Varitek homered and Lou Merloni had three hits for the Red Sox, whose three-game winning streak ended.

Yankees 7, Devil Rays 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Bernie Williams went 4-for-5 Tuesday night to back Orlando Hernandez, who threw the first complete game of the season for the New York Yankees, a three-hitter, in a 7-0 victory over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Williams, primarily a clean-up hitter this season, continued to flourish in the No. 2 spot in the batting order with two doubles, two singles and an RBI.

Shane Spencer hit a solo homer off Alan Newman and four others — Derek Jeter, Paul O'Neill, Tino Martinez and Jorge Posada — also drove in runs for the Yankees, who are 12-1 against Tampa Bay over the last two seasons.

Blue Jays 4, Indians 3

TORONTO — Shawn Green hit a two-run homer and Kelvin Escobar allowed two runs in seven innings as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Indians 4-3 Tuesday night, just the third loss for Cleveland in 13 games.

Tony Fernandez went 0-for-2 with two walks for the Blue Jays, dropping his major league-leading average at .411. Fernandez's 11-game hitting streak was stopped by Dwight Gooden (2-3) and two relievers.

Brewers 5, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Scott Karl allowed one run in eight innings and Mark Loretta had four hits and three RBIs as the Milwaukee Brewers won their fourth straight, 5-1 over the San Francisco Giants on Tuesday.

James A. Finley/Associated Press

St. Louis' Shawn Dunston is safe at home as Houston catcher Tony Eusebio attempts to get control of the ball during the fourth inning of their game at Busch Stadium in St. Louis Tuesday.

Karl (6-6), who had lost his previous five decisions, allowed eight hits. Karl worked out of a jam in the eighth after walking the first two batters. He retired Jeff Kent on a soft liner to second, Charlie Hayes on a foul pop and Stan Javier on a grounder to shortstop.

Phillies 3, Pirates 2
PHILADELPHIA — Rookie Randy Wolf won his third straight start and Marlon Anderson hit a go-ahead, two-run double to lead the Philadelphia Phillies over the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 Tuesday night.

Wolf, who has won all three of his starts since he was brought up from the minors June 9, allowed two runs and four hits in seven innings, striking out eight and walking three. He became the first Philadelphia pitcher to start his career 3-0 since Pat Combs in 1989.

Expos 2, Braves 1
ATLANTA — Greg Maddux pitched well but was hurt by his defense, and the Montreal Expos beat the Atlanta Braves 2-1 Tuesday night to stop a five-game losing streak.

Maddux (6-5) allowed eight hits in seven innings, and one of the two runs off him was unearned. He has a 2.80 ERA in his last six starts, lowering his season ERA to 4.18.

White Sox 6, Twins 1

CHICAGO — Jim Parque allowed six hits in eight scoreless innings and Frank Thomas homered to lead the Chicago White Sox over the Minnesota Twins 6-1 Tuesday night.

Paul Konerko hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning as the White Sox stopped a three-game losing streak.

Royals 4, Tigers 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jeremy Giambi had three RBIs, including a tiebreaking single in the eighth inning as the Kansas City Royals beat the Detroit Tigers 4-2 Tuesday night and stopped a three-game losing streak.

Jose Rosado (5-6) allowed eight hits in eight innings for the Royals, who won for just the second time since May 23 without scoring at least 10 runs. In his last three games, Rosado has allowed just five earned runs in 23 innings, dropping his ERA to 2.60.

Mets 8, Marlins 2

NEW YORK — Mike Piazza tied the Mets' hitting streak record on his final swing and Rey Ordonez kept up his All-Star campaign with three RBIs.

Piazza, hitless in his first three at-bats, sent a 2-2 pitch from Vic Darensbourg over the left-field bullpen to extend his hitting streak to 24 games. He tied Hubie Brooks' team record set in 1984.

Athletics 5, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON, Texas — Miguel Tejada's two-run triple keyed a three-run ninth inning as the Oakland Athletics rallied against John Wetteland for a 5-3 victory over the Texas Rangers on Tuesday night.

Wetteland (1-2) had his third blown save in 26 opportunities for the Rangers, who have lost four straight.

Cubs 13, Rockies 12

DENVER — Henry Rodriguez hit a three-run homer and drove in the go-ahead run with a single in the eighth, helping the Chicago Cubs rally from an eight-run deficit for a wild, 13-12 victory over Colorado on Tuesday night.

The Cubs hit five homers, including an NL-leading 24th by Sammy Sosa, and the Rockies had four, topped by a third-deck shot by Larry Walker.

Cut by two teams, Nomo thriving with Brewers

Nomo may not throw as hard as he used to, but he is far from washed up.

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The New York Mets gave up on him during spring training. The Chicago Cubs felt he no longer had major league ability. The Milwaukee Brewers took a gamble on Hideo Nomo, and ended up with a staff ace.

Eight weeks after being released by his second team in as many months, Nomo has added zip to his pitches and still is tying hitters in knots with the split-finger fastball that made him the NL's top rookie in 1995 for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

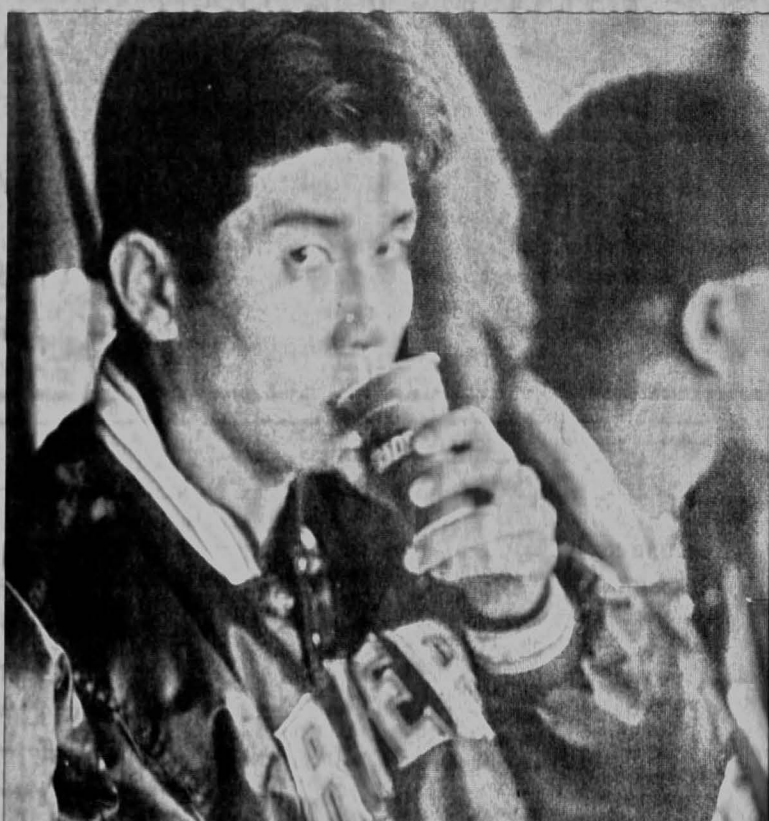

"We just figured, 'Let's take a shot, we have nothing to lose.' After the first time he threw, we knew the guy knew how to pitch," Brewers pitching coach Bill Campbell said. "He's been a pleasant surprise. He's very smart. We haven't seen him get beat yet by a big hitter."

Nomo improved to 5-1 by pitching seven strong innings Monday night in an 8-1 win over the San Francisco Giants. Nomo allowed one run on five hits in seven innings, striking out eight.

"Is he back? Oh, yeah, he's back. Every game he's pitched for us has been a good game," Milwaukee manager Phil Garner said. "The guy's amazing. He does something different that impresses you every time out. This time, I thought he had his best fastball of the year."

Nomo no longer throws at 95-96 mph, as he did during his rookie season. But his split-finger fastball remains tough, and the Brewers have him throwing a few more curves. His unusual delivery, in which he twists his body so that his back faces the plate midway during his windup, continues to confuse hitters.

"He hides the ball real good when he goes back and he still throws 90-91," Giants outfielder Armando Rios said. "And when you start thinking about the fastball, he's got the split-finger. It's a guessing game. You can't find your rhythm against him."

After five seasons as a star in his native Japan, Nomo became an instant celebrity with the Dodgers and had a no-hitter during his 3 1/2 seasons in Los Angeles. He was traded to the Mets in June 1998, but was waived by New York this spring.

Nomo signed a minor league deal with the Cubs and pitched in three Triple-A games, but was cut when he refused to stay in the minors for two more starts.

"We looked at the quality of his pitches and command," Cubs general manager Ed Lynch said after watching Nomo's third Triple-A start. "We just didn't see the command or stuff that we felt was good enough to get major league hitters out."

Nomo had a workout with the Cleveland Indians, then signed a $250,000, one-year deal with the Brewers. He made one Double-A start, then joined Milwaukee and was the winner in his debut, a 3-2 win at San Francisco.

Nomo has regained some of his velocity since then, and was clocked at 92-93 mph on Monday. "He's thrown well ever since we've seen him, though he was a little rusty in the beginning," Brewers catcher Dave Nilsson said. "Since we've had him, he's been dominating."

Nomo always has been at his best against the Giants, and especially in San Francisco. Many of his career highlights have come in San Francisco, where he is 5-0 with a 1.12 ERA. Overall, he is 7-2 against the Giants with a 1.84 ERA.

Even Nomo can't explain his success in San Francisco.

"I feel no different pitching here than anywhere else I'm assigned to, but I broke into the major leagues at this park and those memories will stay with me," he said.

Nomo made his major league debut in San Francisco in May 1995, pitching five scoreless innings for the Dodgers, and pitched a one-hit shutout — taking a perfect game into the eighth inning — later that season at Candlestick Park.

Nomo threw a three-hitter last August for the Mets in San Francisco, and allowed one earned run in 6 1-3 innings in getting the win in his debut for Milwaukee last month against the Giants.

Hawkeye recruits ranked No. 1

Iowa's wrestling recruits were selected as the best class in the nation by InterMat.

Rankings were based on the team's ability to sign wrestlers that meet its needs, the number of impact wrestlers, and overall quality and quantity of the class.

This year's Hawkeye recruiting class is led by Jody Strittmatter, a two-time NCAA Division II Champion and first-team academic all-American from Ebensburg, PA.

Over the past two years, Strittmatter went 43-1, leading the Mountain Cats to the NCAA Division II team title.

He was named outstanding wrestler at the tournament.

Strittmatter is expected to contend for Iowa's 125-pound slot.

The freshman class includes Luke Eustice (125), a three-time state champion from Blue Earth, MN, and twin brothers Randy and Ryan Fulsaa of Decorah IA.

Randy is a two-time state champion who competed at 189 pounds last season.

Ryan was last year's state champion in the heavyweight class.

Rounding out the class are Cliff Moore (125), a three-time champion from Dubuque and Tyler Nixt, a 171-pound state champion from Greene, IA.

The Hawkeyes' new recruiting class will help try to continue the string of five straight NCAA Championships.

Iowa edged Minnesota to take the team title last year.

Twin Towers, meet the Twin Terrors

■ Latrell Sprewell and Allan Houston are New York's answer to San Antonio's Twin Towers.

By Hal Bock
Associated Press

NEW YORK — If San Antonio has Twin Towers in David Robinson and Tim Duncan, then New York has Twin Terrors in Latrell Sprewell and Allan Houston.

"Me and Allan can pressure defenses," Sprewell said.

That they do. Houston (34) and Sprewell (24) combined for 58 points in the Knicks' 89-81 Game 2 victory that left New York trailing the best-of-7 series 2-1. They are the only Knicks averaging in double figures in the series, Houston at 24 points a game and Sprewell at 23.

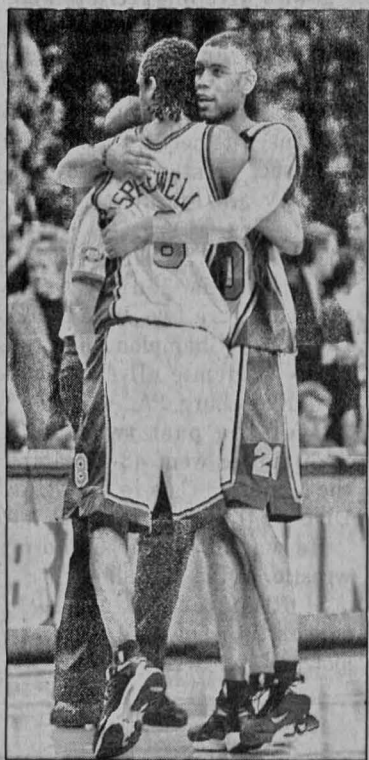

At the heart of their success has been getting the ball in the right place at the right time. Houston was able to do that repeatedly in Game 2, nailing midrange jump shots to keep the Knicks in charge.

"The 15-to-20 footer has always been my strength," he said. "Shooting off the dribble, it's kind of paying off. The way the game is played now, that shot can be very effective. The great scorers, Walt Frazier, Earl Monroe, Oscar Robertson lived off that midrange shot. It's something I can be successful with."

Sprewell, on the other hand, darts and drives to the basket, and is more effective in the open court transition game.

Together, they pose problems for defenses, especially on those occasions when Sprewell plays point guard alongside Houston in the backcourt.

"If we go big in the backcourt,

Ron Frehm/Associated Press
New York's Allan Houston and Latrell Sprewell embrace during the fourth quarter of Game 3 of the NBA Finals Monday.

we can force them to double," Sprewell said.

As effective as Sprewell's open court game has been, the Knicks' success more and more often revolves around Houston, especially with leading scorer Patrick Ewing sidelined because of a torn Achilles' tendon. Since Ewing went out after the second game of the Eastern Conference finals, Houston has become New York's No. 1 scoring option.

"He's got a good feel for the game in the sense of assessing spatial relationship with the defender," Spurs coach Gregg Popovich said.

Robinson put Houston's success in less mathematical terms.

"He seems very relaxed out there, just having fun," he said. "He was making tough shots and looked like he felt good. When a guy gets in that place, it's very dangerous."

Houston hopes so. "I just want to be consistent," he said. "I don't want to score 30 points one night and 10 the next."

Consistency has sometimes been missing from Sprewell's game. Scoreless in the third quarter of Game 3, he had 10 points in the fourth. After hitting 10 straight free throws in Game 2, he missed four of five attempts during one key stretch in Game 3.

Still, both players were key elements of the victory.

Coach Jeff Van Gundy sees an approach in Houston that was not there in his first two seasons in New York.

"His hunger is different now," Van Gundy said. "He was content before to score his 20 points. Now, he has a continuing hunger to score."

Houston confirmed his coach's assessment.

"I think he's right," he said. "Look at the great scorers. They're not happy with 20. If they have a great start, they want to keep it going."

"Early on, I was a little unselfish. I found there was a way to do both. It hasn't happened overnight."

Houston said his evolution was natural. He was signed to a $54 million free agent contract as a scorer and now he scores.

"That's our job, to put the ball in the basket," he said.

Then he thought about the name of his position — shooting guard.

"The first part of the position is 'shooting,'" he said. "That's what we do best."

Top of lineup key for Cleveland

■ The first three hitters provide the spark for Cleveland's potent offense.

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

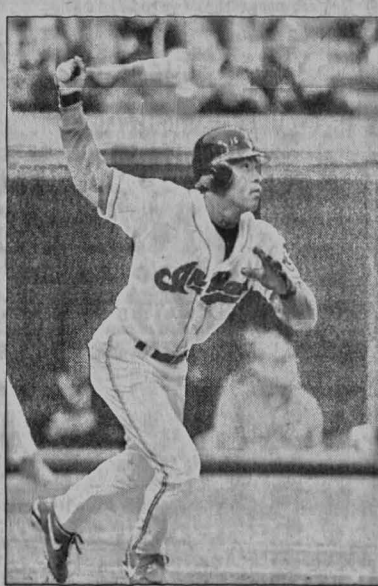

CLEVELAND — The top of the lineup typically sets the table for the power hitters anyway it can. The Indians' 1-2-3 punch of Kenny Lofton, Omar Vizquel and Roberto Alomar is a little different.

Oh, they set the table. They also clear it and don't mind breaking a few glasses and dishes in the process.

If there's a bottom line as to why the Indians are averaging nearly seven runs a game this season and leading the majors in wins and virtually every offensive category, it's the top of their order. Lofton, Vizquel and Alomar have become three of the most terrifying words known to AL pitchers. They can run. They can score. They steal bases, drive in runs and drive opposing managers crazy.

"Not only are they experienced, they're aggressive," Seattle left-hander Jamie Moyer said before facing the Indians on Monday. "They can beat you with their legs, they can beat you with their short ball and they can beat you long. They're very, very tough."

All three are batting well over

Mark Duncan/Associated Press
Cleveland batter Roberto Alomar raps a solo home run off Oakland pitcher Gil Hefner June 16.

.300 and rank in the AL's top 10 in average, on-base percentage and stolen bases. In fact, the Indians are the only team in the majors with three players with more than 16 steals, and guess who they are?

Additionally, Lofton and Alomar rank 1-2 in the league in runs and both are in the top five in walks.

It's no wonder Indians cleanup hitter Manny Ramirez is leading the majors with 79 RBIs.

When Cleveland signed Alomar

as a free agent last November, manager Mike Hargrove finally had the second baseman he always wanted and perhaps the best No. 2 hitter in baseball.

Hargrove, though, had other designs for Alomar and decided to use him in the No. 3 slot, with Lofton leading off and Vizquel batting second.

"I just pulled a rabbit out of the hat," Hargrove said of a decision that's been nothing short of magical.

"To me, your third hitter should be your best average hitter, a guy who uses the bat well and puts the ball in play, and Robbie fits there," Hargrove said. "Robbie is a run producer, obviously, but he serves more as a transition from setting the table to the power guys. Every night, there's a very good chance one of our top three will be on base for Ramirez, (Jim) Thome or (David) Justice."

The Indians, who have scored in double digits 14 times this season, are on pace to break the 1931 New York Yankees' record for runs in a season.

Hargrove didn't have any particular numbers in mind when he decided on the Lofton-Vizquel-Alomar attack, but he also didn't expect it to add up to these early results, either.

"I never try to anticipate those kinds of numbers so I won't be disappointed," he said. "I did imagine us hitting on all cylinders, and that's what has happened."

An hour after Salzmann announced his decision, Knight, his wife, one of her sisters and a state police sergeant who investigated the case spoke to the media at Assembly Hall. All of them backed Knight, but the strongest criticism was directed not at Foster but at Salzmann and the media.

Knight called the prosecutor's office a "Mickey Mouse operation." He said Salzmann had all the information he needed within three days of the incident and had prolonged the matter to keep himself in the media spotlight.

Prosecutor feels heat from Knight case

INDIANAPOLIS — Carl Salzmann was in a no-win position.

In all his years of putting bad guys behind bars, the Monroe County prosecutor never felt as much pressure as he did in the nine days it took to resolve the recent Bob Knight battery case.

A quick decision not to file charges would have brought claims of a whitewash. Charging the Indiana University basketball coach, on the other hand, could have stirred an even bigger backlash.

So Salzmann, cautious by nature, decided to wait. Even then, after he assembled all the facts, talked to witnesses and agreed that, yes, Knight had been provoked into a confrontation with another man outside an Ellettsville restaurant, he was blasted for taking so long.

A week later, he's back to his normal routine, still amazed by the storm of controversy.

"We have an occasional murder trial, we have rape trials, all kinds of things from speeding tickets all the way up to capital cases. Some have garnered some statewide or national attention, but I've never seen the media glare like I did on this situation," Salzmann said in a telephone interview from his Bloomington office on Tuesday.

"The pressure was to 'Hurry up ... Let us have the decision ... Why can't we have it by the 6 o'clock news?'"

The media frenzy began as soon as word got out that Chris Foster, a Bloomington guitarist, had asked the prosecutor to bring charges against the Hall of Fame coach.

Foster claimed he was at a nearby table at the restaurant on June 7 and had overheard Knight make a racist remark during a dinner conversation with his wife and her two sisters. He said when he confronted Knight as they were leaving, Knight grabbed him by the throat, leaving large red marks on his neck.

Karen Knight and her sisters, however, supported her husband's story, that he had made no racial slurs and that Foster had harassed

Coach agrees to plea bargain

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)— Ohio State assistant football coach Mike Jacobs pleaded guilty Tuesday to a charge of disorderly conduct to resolve accusations that he struck his ex-wife during a fight.

Judge Steven Hayes of Franklin County Municipal Court placed Jacobs on probation for 18 months.

He also ordered Jacobs to spend 30 days in jail, but 28 days were suspended. Jacobs had been given credit for spending two days in jail after the charges were filed Jan. 16.

As a condition of his probation, he must receive domestic violence counseling.

U.S. Open ratings jump for Stewart's victory

NEW YORK — Payne Stewart's dramatic victory and a host of big names in contention helped boost U.S. Open television ratings.

NBC's final-round coverage Sunday posted a 6.8 national rating and a 19 share, a 13 percent increase from 1998.

With Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson and David Duval in the hunt entering the final day, NBC tied the rating for the 1997 finale as the highest final round since the network reacquired the event in 1995.

NBC also fared well for the third round on Saturday, getting a 4.8 and a 15 share and easily beating the Women's World Cup on ABC and Fox's baseball game of the week.

The World Cup match between the United States and Denmark had a 2.2 overnight rating and a 6 share, while Fox posted a 2.8 overnight mark.

NBC's two-day average for the Open finished at 5.8/17, the second highest in 12 years and 7 percent higher than last year.

Robbins donates Bull Durham uniform

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Tim Robbins, who played a rookie pitcher with a wicked fastball in the movie "Bull Durham," has donated the uniform he wore in the film to the baseball Hall of Fame.

The uniform from the 1988 movie many consider a classic baseball film was donated by Robbins on a recent visit with his son, Miles, the museum announced Monday.

The movie, about a minor league team, also starred Kevin Costner. Robbins played rookie pitcher Ebby Calvin "Nuke" LaLoosh, whose wild talents were tamed by a veteran catcher, played by Costner, and by team confidant and Nuke's girlfriend, played by Susan Sarandon.

"I felt that donating my 'Bull Durham' uniform to the museum would allow visitors to have a firsthand remembrance of that great baseball movie," Robbins said.

ISU player admits to sex with 15-year-old

AMES, Iowa — Court records show an Iowa State basketball player has admitted having sex with a 15-year-old runaway girl, and Ames police said they are investigating Travis Spivey because that girl and another runaway said he raped them.

The girls said the incident happened June 12.

Iowa law prohibits sexual contact between a 15-year-old and anyone five years or more older. Spivey is 21. No charges have been filed against him.

Iowa State athletic spokesman Tom Kroeschell said the school had just found out about the investigation and is looking into it.
