Save the IWP, petition says

Those interested in signing a petition to save the IWP will be able to do so this weekend.

By Alexis M. Bjerman The Daily Iowan

Over the Fourth of July weekend, supporters of the International Writing Program will be able to sign a petition calling for the restoration of the program. The petition, which will be sent to Gov. Tom Vilsack by the end of next week, stresses the importance of the program to both the UI and the entire state.

Noting local support has been strong, Lemuel Torrevillas, the former A/V coordinator for the IWP and spearhead of the event, said, "This has been boiling around, but we've had no catalyst - I hope to provide that." With "as many signatures as we can get," Torrevillas said, he hopes the governor will be spurred to action.

Despite considerable publicity of the controversy around the state, Torrevillas said there has still been no comment from either the governor or the state Board of Regents.

"People seem to think this is too important, too big, and just look to each other - nobody is taking a solid step forward," he said.

By publicizing the three main requests of those associated with the now-on-hiatus program, Torrevillas and others hope to save the program.

First is a request that the direction of the program be removed from the authority of the dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

Second, petition signers will request that control of the program be placed within a special UI division "that is prepared to honor and nurture the core concept of the IWP that has made it and the UI revered around the world: a free community of writers in residence on the UI campus," the petition reads.

Summer enrollment up

■ UI summer enrollment is the highest in 11 years, a registrar's report says.

> By Erin Gansen The Daily Iowan

Despite a substantial decrease in the UI College of Education's summer enrollment, an expansion of the evening M.B.A. program has helped raise UI summer enrollment figures to the highest level in 11 years.

Enrollment is up 375 students, to a total of 11,773, according to a report released Thursday by the Office of the Registrar.

Losing enrollment were the College of Education (down 83 students) and the colleges of Law (down 28) and Liberal Arts (down 38), said Ellen Heywood, an assistant to the registrar.

UI College of Education Associate Dean Richard Shepardson explained the large drop in his department's summer enrollment as a byproduct of 1997 enrollment capping for elementary education majors.

Due to a limited amount of practicum sites for junior year students, the program was changed to a competitive enrollment system.

The lack of summer enrollment this year is because "there was a tremendous bubble last summer" as the last of the uncapped classes prepared for student teaching in the fall,

"We have to limit how many students we can place and still do a quality program," he said.

Various graduate programs had the largest increase - 205 students, Heywood said, with the Tippie program contributing 384 students to the total of 3,696 graduate summer enrollment.

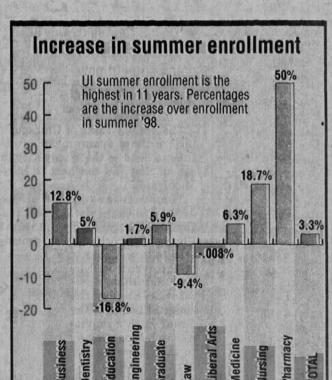

"The evening M.B.A. program aims to upgrade management and business skills from people across the state," said Colleen Downie, M.B.A. evening program director. The program has been offered in Cedar Rapids and the Quad Cities for almost 40 years, she said; the biggest growth has come from Cedar Rapids and Des Moines, which was included this year.

The summer's enrollment figures do not necessarily indicate a trend, said Leslie Sims, UI associate provost and dean of the graduate college.

"These things fluctuate semester by semester, year by year," he said. "I don't

When UI graduate student John Drake was searching for an internship to match his interest in biomechanics, he believed the open-

UI economics Professor Deirdre McCloskey will teach at the University of Illinois, Unicago, this fall, and school officials there hope to make the move permanent.

Necole Streeper twisted her yellow Hawkeye key chain as she stood for the first time in the laboratory in which she will work for the next four years.

Then she sat at the infrared thermovision system, which measures the body temperature of rats, and said, "I'm excited."

Streeper is one of 13 students in Iowa Bioscience Advantage, a new UI mentoring program for minorities that was formed to reduce the number of students dropping out of majors in biosciences.

Streeper, an incoming freshman, will study thermo-regulation with her faculty mentor, Mark Blumberg, an associate professor of psychology.

"I'm a little nervous about working in the lab," Streeper said. "He hasn't told me what we are really doing yet."

Blumberg expressed optimism about the program.

"It is hard to find students who are engaged and interested in research, so when these opportunities come along, it is good for the mentor and the student," he said. The program, which will officially begin this fall, currently offers stu-

Rockets' red glare may be illegal

■ Some fireworks are legal in Iowa, but the Iowa City fire marshal says people should use them with care.

For some UI students, the Fourth of July is a time for rest, relaxation and fireworks.

However, accidents while playing with fireworks have caused some students to spend the holiday in the hos-believes the holiday is frivolous. "America is all about the freedom to randomly blow stuff up in the name of our nation's independence," he said. Recently, the Iowa City Fire Department has taken steps to provide education and awareness of fireworks.

"More than 300 people are injured in Iowa every year, and we don't even permit the larger stuff," said Fire Marshal Roger Jensen.

Iowa law permits the buying and selling of snakes, exploding caps and sparklers, all of which are popular fireworks for the Fourth.

However, Jensen said, people should exercise caution when using them.

"Even the sparklers, which are very popular, can heat up to several hundred degrees," he said. "Just because they are legal does not mean that they are safe, by any means."

The penalties for using illegal fireworks, such as bottle rockets, Roman candles or M80s, are severe. The simple misdemeanor can result in fines of up to $250.

UI senior Ann Trotter said the potential repercussions would deter her from purchasing any fireworks this weekend.

Tasting your way through Chicago

One of the Windy City's biggest summer events is going on right now.

> By Gil Levy The Daily Iowan

The annual Taste of Chicago is upon us once again, meaning it's time to head to the Windy City to eat all that you can next to Lake Michigan.

The Taste was kicked off on June 25 in Grant Park; it will run through July 5. The annual Chicago fireworks display, considered to be a highlight of the event, will be held Saturday. Spectators can enjoy the classical music of the Grant Park Symphony Orchestra playing to the fireworks display.

Last year, UI junior Ron Dun- rants in Chicago will prepare her lay was one of the many to be drawn to Chicago for the event. He said it was his first time at the "Taste," and he enjoyed the experience despite the large crowds.

"It was incredibly packed there, but the food was great. There was a wide array of stuff to do," Dunlay said.

Tiffany Scott, a public relations officer for the Chicago Mayor's Office of Special Events, said that each year the event has an average attendance of more than 3 million people.

"I don't want to speculate on this year's attendance," Scott said. "Attendance has been pretty

And yes, there is plenty of food. More than 100 Chicago restaurants come out with a sampling of their cuisine. In addition to the booths, this year there is also a gourmet dining pavilion, in which each day a different chef from one of the finest restauor his specialty.

≥ GETAWAY

Scott also said that there is plenty of things to do at the Taste besides eating.

"There's a lot of different things for different people," Scott said. "There's different music genres that attract a lot of people to the park."

Bands play daily in the Petrillo Music Shell, also located in Grant Park. Some bands highlighting this weekend are REO Speedwagon, the Drovers and the Brian Setzer Orchestra.

Family tents will feature different kinds of entertainment for children. There is also a Cooking Corner, in which Chicago chefs will teach their trade

After you've stuffed yourself, if you have the stomach, you can take a ride on the Ferris wheel and see the event from the air.

"It's one of our most popular things," Scott said. "The Ferris wheel or the Water Flume. People like to cool off in that."

While admission to Grant Park is free, food, beverages and rides require tickets.

Food tickets, which are also good for the rides, go on sale daily

Directions to the Taste of Chicago:

Take Interstate 80 to Interstate 55. Follow the signs to Chicago and Lake Shore Drive. Grant Park is located along Lake Shore Drive, near Lake Michigan. Chicago's lakefront area is well-marked, so it should be easy to find your way to the Taste of Chicago.

at 11 a.m.; sales stop a half hour before the event closes at 9 p.m. On the final day of the Taste, everything closes an hour earlier. Tickets come in rolls of 10 and cost $6.

Virginia Brenneman, grandmother of Amanda Brenneman, 7, and Samantha Brenneman, 4, both killed, said she knew both Graham and the girls' mother, Laura Brenneman, 33, were drunk and had put the girls in danger.

"We knew all the time that this to avoid Graham's Oldsmobile would be the result," she said. "It doesn't change anything; they're both dead.

The accident occurred while Graham's 1983 Oldsmobile was traveling northbound in the southbound lane of U.S. Highway 218 south of Hills, Iowa. Tuition spat turns into school war

It started over raising tuition from 2¢ to $145; it's now a battle over Mexico's higher education.

> By Ken Guggenheim Associated Press

MEXICO CITY - What began as a dispute over tuition has turned into an angry battle for the soul of Latin America's largest university and the core of Mexican higher education. It doesn't look like it will end any time soon.

Students have shut down Mexico's National Autonomous University, occupying buildings for more than 10 weeks, even though the university has backed down on the issue that triggered the strike: an increase in the yearly tuition from a symbolic 2 cents to $145.

The issue goes beyond the tuition, strikers say. It's about whether old Mexican ideals about providing free education and academic independence can survive in an era in which the welfare state is dying, and market forces rule.

It's also about government priorities. If the country can afford a $65 billion bank bailout, why does it cut university funding?

"Education is for everyone. It's a right; it isn't a service," said Veronica Velazquez, a Latin American studies student.

For administrators, what's at stake is whether the 280,000student university can adjust to declining government subsidies, dump its image as a haven for loafing leftist pseudo-intellectuals, and produce-quality graduates that can compete with students from around the world.

The university, known by its initials as UNAM, is winning the public-relations war.

Most Mexican news media portray the strikers as obnoxious radicals clinging to Marxist ideologies and trampling on the buildings. Yet officials have been powerless to end the strike. Capitulating on the tuition increase — the university agreed to make the payment optional - wasn't enough. Students said stopping the increase was only one of their six demands. The others were to reverse reforms of recent years.

Negotiations have gone nowhere. The first face-to-face meeting was supposed to have been held Tuesday. It was canceled over a dispute about how many student delegates could attend.

It is unlikely strikers will be forcibly dislodged. That would be too reminiscent of one of the darkest moments in recent Mexican history, when soldiers fired on anti-government student protesters in 1968, killing an estimated 300.

For university officials, there seems to be little to do but beg strikers to give them back the buildings.

"I urge those who have university premises in their power to join the collective effort to build a new university that we can bequeath to future generations, not to destroy the extraordinary institution that we have," Francisco Barnes Castro, the university's president, said at an antistrike rally last week.

UNAM has roots dating back to the 16th century Spanish colony. Its modern identity was formed this century in the decades after the Mexican revo-

In keeping with the revolution's populism, it offered students an opportunity for a college education and social advancement regardless of how much money they had. It also helped Mexico build an educated middle-class, which was needed to convert the country into an industrialized nation.

The wonderful world of e-mail and its crazy fanatics

-mail has destroyed an art. It used to be that people hauled out impossibly ornate stationery and butchered all sorts of winged creatures in order to fashion writing utensils.

Hours upon hours were spent, ink pots overturned, as one tried to make sense among the madness of longhand diction. Corresponding with someone really meant something, as the mail was carted mainly by folks known as "letter carriers," and getting a letter to someone took just a tad longer than it takes to get approved for a student loan.

But now, thanks to the technological "advancements" in computers, people are able to correspond with anyone and everyone who has an "electronic address," whatever that may be. The madness of e-mail usually takes strong hold when people go to college, and everyone who wishes is given an "electronic mail account." The university officials tell you that your mail and corre-

So e-mail is a common-enough thing in college. And some students take this easy mail access to extremes. I have gathered such information after months and months of careful and thorough investigative journalism, interviewing hundreds of students and then meticulously compiling my data. None of this information, naturally, comes from any first-hand knowledge of being an e-mail

Nay, for it was only recently that I discovered that I even had an e-mail account, let alone the power to write other people! Right, ahem; anyway, it is quite obvious that e-mail has quite the death grip on much of the student population. The obsessive checking and rechecking of e-mail that I - I mean, the anonymous test group - exhibit can only be termed as ridiculous. Really people, c'mon! I just got new messages three minutes ago! How on earth could anyone write me back! Oh, my. Of course, when saying "I," I'm referring to all those anonymous hordes. Let me just check my intrepid reporter's notebook (back of Wendy's napkin) for the

Let's face it, e-mail does make things a lot easier and hassle-free. How many students would have been forced to actually get up and talk to a professor or TA instead of simply logging on and typing, "Dear so-and-so: Am feeling very ill, and therefore I will be unable to attend Anyclass 102. Would it be possible for me to pick up the tests/papers/cadaver assignment that I might have missed in this, my gravest hour?"

LEAH KIND

So many precious student-hours might have been wasted in the attempt to first, remember their prof's name, and then the department, and find them and cough violently and maybe spit up some blood. Thank God for e-mail.

Of course, e-mail does come with its downfalls. The entire concept of cute "forwards" would never have existed if email had not sauntered onto the scene. No one, even the slightly deranged, would spend their time hand copying 50 of the same messages to her or his best friends in order to get 50 cents for a starving Istanbul child. Without e-mail, you might never know why "Trick or Treating is Better than Sex (fwd)" or assorted useless facts such as "banging your head against a wall uses 150 calories an hour," or "an alligator cannot stick its tongue out." Without e-mail, you'd never get to "scroll down" and "keep on going" to see thousands of tiny dashes and lines (someone actually sat there and made that forward!) zig and zag in intricate patterns and finally "give you good luck," but only if you "made a wish!" "Did you make it?" Arghhh!!

But, as I said, I know not any of these problems, as my life is e-mail free, as anyone would tell you. All of my inside information comes from sad individuals whose life at school is apparently dominated by a machine. People go out of their way to compose e-mail and become mildly to seriously offended if others drop out of the regular correspondence. These are sad, moronic people. I sure do pity them.

Global warming is also local problem

Perhaps a winter spent in the snow, ice and bitterly cold winds of Iowa is enough to make one question the validity of global warming. In reality, however, science has proved again and again that our climate is changing. Although more carbon dioxide is produced naturally than by industry, cars and the like, our planet can no longer handle the excess emissions that humans have created since the Industrial Revolution.

The Earth's average surface temperature is on the rise; sea levels are also rising, as the heat melts glaciers. If the trends continue, vital farm land, especially in the Midwest, will be destroyed. Coastal cities, namely New York City and New Orleans, will be underwater.

In Iowa City, it is easy to take clean air for granted. It is easy to forget how many people live in cities surrounded by a haze of pollution. As other people suffer from respiratory problems because of the byproducts of industry, we benefit without much of a second thought. While global initiatives, such as the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change, may slowly improve national and global environmental policy, the first changes must be on a personal and local level.

It is easy to urge prople to use public transportation, but cities need to provide people with an convienent, efficient, effective system to use. Abusing the earth and its resources requires little effort or thought; saving it requires a conscious effort.

Change must also continue on a global level. What good is it if Americans can no longer enjoy a Big Mac in a styrofoam container, but the British can? The country that produces the most, or the least, carbon dioxide is not the issue. It makes sense that the United States would create the largest amount of carbon dioxide. Nevertheless, our size and wealth is not an excuse to support the status quo. As a nation, we need to work to undo the damage we have done and prevent further damages, just as developing nations need to work to limit their negative contribution to the environment.

We all have a vested interest in the future and need to ensure that years from now people will be able to enjoy the same quality of life that we enjoy today. It will take a concerted effort to reduce pollution. Complacency will destroy not only our planet but ometimes you read something so stunningly idiotic that it leaves you at a loss for words. With me, this is rare, but Monday it happened and I am still recovering.

Parents overlook price of graduation and prom

I happened to read an opinion piece in USA Today. I know, it was foolish, and I deserve all I get, but I was in Charlotte, N.C., attending the annual meeting of the American Society for Engineering Education. I had just heard a talk on Self-Efficacy and thought that reading a newspaper might return me to reality. Was I ever wrong!

These conferences follow a pattern. Faculty scurry to sessions, hoping to nap enough so that we'll be awake when we visit bars in the evening.

Such was the WILFRID NIXON scene as I attempted to restore my equilibrium with a cup of (expensive, tasteless, and yet typical for a convention center) coffee and a quick read. The author, Patrick Welsh, was a high school teacher in Virginia. He was lamenting that high school seniors spend so much on their prom and on "beach week," a post-graduation beach The amounts of money the students spend are indeed staggering. Prom appears to cost approximately $700 for these students. Or rather, for the males. With cunning ability, the females apparently discard their feminist ideals for such events and are happy to let the guys pick up the tab. Not to worry, however - they aren't selling themselves for sex. The girls didn't want to get their expensive dresses and hairdos messed

Partying youth are not news, and are hardly likely to shock even so naïve a person as me. Even the dollar amounts (which were the primary complaint of the author) are not that stunning to me. All parents will tell you that their teen-agers have more money than they do! But two aspects of this piece bothered me deeply.

First, the author was unwilling to even question such behavior. He said, "I hate to question the prom and beach week because so many wonderful kids I've taught have enjoyed them." There is something seriously wrong about a high school teacher who is not willing to question such egregious behavior. Would he question drug use? What about date

But the failings of the teacher and author of the piece are nothing compared with the failure of others who should be involved in this. Let me ask the question here explicitly that echoed through my mind as I read the piece: Where were the parents during all of

And this is where I grow at a loss for words, because I cannot conceive of parents who take the task of parenting even remotely seriously to knowingly allow their children to engage in such activities. What parents in their right mind would allow their (underage) children to spend a week at a beach party without supervision?

That parents, at least in Alexandria, Va., are willing to allow such behavior is evident. What puzzles me is why? Perhaps being so close to all those political shenanigans in Washington, D.C., has made their brains dribble out, but I suspect that such behavior extends far beyond the environs of D.C.

Perhaps it is a coastal thing. California parents may be even more lax in their duties, but then it would appear that Colorado parents are not so hot, either. I suspect, and this is where it gets scary, that it is a money thing. When parents get wealthy enough, they stop taking the time and expending the effort to raise their teen-age children and let them run wild. And that means the only reason such events don't happen here is because there aren't enough beaches around. It's enough to make a father turn to decaf.

every jazz fan. "I can't say (what the highlights of this year's festival) are," said Steve Grizmore, the director and cofounder of the event. "That varies from person to person, and that is the whole idea."

The festival will feature the sounds of nine performers; it will be kicked off Saturday with the music of the Bob Washut Trio at 2 p.m., an lowa-based group known for its strong improvisational skills.

The day will continue with the

Mark Turner Quartet, Sun Ra Arkestra and Jon Pizzarelli

"I personally am looking forward to the Mark Turner Quartet," Grizmore said. Turner is a tenor sax player who continues the tradition of such great artists as Charlie Parker and John Coltrane and should provide an excellent example of fine jazz for the afternoon crowd.

"If you ask my college friends, they will tell you that I was into Trane big time. Over time, though, there were other lines and styles I wanted to obtain," Turner said, describing his music.

On July 4, there will be a new array of performers, starting at noon with the sounds of the Sam Band and culminating with Liquid Soul.

In between these two diverse acts, fans will hear the work of the Max Vax Trio, Sam Newsome and Global Unity, and Lou Donaldson.

Grizmore recognized the mixing of a variety of styles and said the education a classical fan would obtain from hearing Liquid Soul would be the same as a progressive's fan appreciation of Max Vax.

For many people in Iowa City, the climatic point of the weekend will be stirred by the funk/bop/acid jazz sounds of Liquid Soul. "I can't wait for Liquid Soul; (the members) are such awesome performers, and a free show to boot, man, that is so cool," said Iowa City resident Jenny

The festival is viewed by many in the community as a great way to celebrate Independence Day. With a focus on providing high quality jazz, this year's event will include both a side stage for such local performers as Dreier Trio and Ashanti, and a youth stage featuring Jazz Combos from both West and City

The festival will also offer a free workshop/lecture, sponsored by the UI Lecture Committee, by Marshall Allan and members of Sun Ra Arkestra Saturday in the City Plaza Hotel between noon and 1:30.

A romp in the (*#+@!) South Park

By John Mullin The Daily Iowan

South Park: Bigger, Longer, and Uncut is the sort of movie that's almost review-proof. On the one hand, it would be easy to write something along the lines of, "You'll like this movie, if you like the television series 'South Park," and leave it at that. The issue, however, is a bit more complicated. There were parts of the movie that made me laugh harder than I have laughed in a long while. Then there were moments when my jaw dropped, and still more when I held my head thinking about how outrageous some of the gags were.

The film opens with the "South Park" gang heading off to see the new Terence and Philip movie, an R-rated romp through Canada featuring two guys who basically sit around cutting muffins all the time. The kids leave the theater cursing like sailors, a development which ultimately leads Kyle's mom (of "Kyle's Mom is a B!+@#" fame) to organize a protest group called Mothers Against Canada, in which Nazi-like methods are employed to rid the nation's youth of all things deemed vulgar, inappropriate or Canadian.

Some parts of the movie are likely to offend viewers. Everything is a fair target, and practically no controversial subject in America today is left unaddressed. Abortion, religion, homelessness, the handicapped and party tricks with Ping-Pong balls ... South Park is unashamed. The film is not for the sensitive.

There are more than 14 musical numbers that Parker wrote with Oscar-nominated composer Marc Shaiman. Look for Shaiman - who arranges the medleys that Billy Crystal sings when he hosts the Academy Awards - in a cameo as the pianist for Big Gay Al. The songs are in a Rogers-and-Hammerstein vein with at least one direct shot at Miss Saigon.

The Q to complement Jazz Festival

"Free," "funky" and "acidy" - the Q Bar will feature jazz this weekend.

> By Nellie Stensvaag The Daily Iowan

Three jazz bands will perform at the Q Bar this weekend as a complement to this weekend's Iowa City Jazz Festival.

"Because (the Q) is fairly close to the jazz fest, we wanted to have omething for the younger crowd to go to," said Mike Szwaya, booking agent for the Q, 211 Iowa Ave. These bands aren't playing in the jazz fest, but they're good bands." Tonight, Fat Mama will take the stage. The band hails from Boulder, Colo., and promises to put an energetic show with the sounds of newjazz fusion. Fat Mama has opened for such well-known jazz acts as Groove Collective, Ron Miles and

The Q will showcase a couple of local jazz groups Saturday night. Slingshot Booty Squad will perform first, followed by El Niño.

Caleb Coffey, the lead guitarist for El Niño, describes his band's music as funky jazz. El Niño, which has been together for roughly a year, played on a Jazz Festival side stage last summer. Coffey said he enjoys the festival and looks forward to performing.

The idea is for the Q Bar to take over from the festival by having performances tonight and Saturday running from approximately 10 p.m. until 1 a.m., Szwaya said. Both shows will be 19 or older.

Ingrid Madsen, manager of the Q, said inviting bands to perform in conjunction with the festival is something the Q has been doing for the past few years. Each year, different jazz groups are asked to play. The bar tries to include both local and national bands in the line-up, Although non-college students are welcome to attend the shows, Szwaya said that the Q is targeting a younger audience.

"This (kind of jazz) is more for the younger crowd. It's not like your typical Miles Davis. This is more free jazz - a little bit funkier, a little bit acidy."

Once again, allies find mass graves

■ As more evidence of atrocities emerges, Milosevic maneuvers to win support from key opposition group.

> By Dusan Stojanovic Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia -More evidence of mass killings emerged Thursday in Kosovo, as President Slobodan Milosevic won conditional support from a key opposition group, furthering his campaign to retain power and avoid war-crimes prosecution.

The commander of U.S. peacekeepers in Kosovo, meanwhile, warned that his soldiers face a continuing threat from Serb paramilitaries that remain in the province in violation of a peace agreement that required all Yugoslav forces be gone by now.

In southwestern Kosovo, German troops found the graves of 119 people whom villagers said were murdered by Serbs on March 25 — the day after NATO began bombing Yugoslavia. Residents said they believe more bodies remain undiscovered in the villages of Celine and Nagafc.

Milosevic and four aides have been indicted by the U.N. war crimes tribunal for atrocities committed against the Kosovar majority since February 1998. Western leaders have refused to help to rebuild Yugoslavia as long as Milosevic remains in power.

Approximately 10,000 Serbs turned out Tuesday in the central Serbian city of Cacak to demand that Milosevic resign in a protest organized by the opposition Alliance for Change. It has scheduled another anti-government rally for today in Novi Sad, Serbia's second-largest city, which suffered heavy damage from NATO bombs.

Faced with calls for his resignation and a deepening economic and social crisis, the hard-line Yugoslav president has resorted to making overtures to various political groups.

The spokesman of Milosevic's Socialist party, Ivica Dacic, called Thursday for a government reorganization to include all parties represented in Parliament except the Alliance for Change.

On Thursday, a major prodemocracy party, the Serbian Renewal Movement, indicated it would be interested in joining the government if it were broadened to include Milosevic opponents in Montenegro.

public on how Iowa can improve its recruitment and retention of workers, provide better student preparation for the work force and worker training, Pederson said.

She discussed the results of the forum Thursday.

Drake University officials told the forum that students often face hefty loans, so unpaid internships in Iowa hold no attraction compared with internships out of state.

Ann Rhodes, vice president for university relations, said although she hasn't heard of the lack of internships being a key problem in keeping students in Iowa, it could definitely be a possibility.

"I haven't heard about this, but it certainly might be accurate," she said.

Drake, a native of Corydon, Iowa, said his out-of-state internships have encouraged his decision to relocate upon graduation.

"I know I want to be closer to a larger metropolitan area — where there are more things to do, more cultural activities," he said. Recent UI graduate Stacey Smiricky, who is moving to Illinois, said that state offers more opportunities for young people.

"I wanted to get out of Iowa City," Smiricky said. "I've been here long enough.

Besides working to retain young people in Iowa, Pederson discussed other efforts taken by the Vilsack administration to keep residents here and to bring others to the state.

Some suggestions offered in the forum to increase and maintain Iowa's workforce:

· Attempt to draw the 235,000

members of the armed forces w leave each year;

· Decrease job turnovers, mo ly caused by workers jumpi increase the number of minority undergraduates who will complete majors in the biosciences, said A. Denita Gadson, the program manager.

"Any minority students who withdraw are really a tragedy and more noticeable," she said. "The primary goal is to retain students, to keep them in biosciences."

The students attend a research class in the morning and meet with their mentors in the afternoon, Gadson said.

"This program and the hospital on campus was a deciding factor from choosing Iowa over the University of Illinois," said Elizabeth Homan, a program participant.

The program is aided by Opportunity at Iowa, which identifies potential students.

The students do not get credit hours for the summer research course, but they are given a $2,500 stipend. Gadson said.

They will receive the stipend next summer when they are working in the lab, Coulter said. A laptop computer will also be lent to them for the four-year term, he said.

Students are required to have a high school GPA of 3.5 or to be in the top 30 percent of their graduating class, Gadson said.

They must have an ACT score of 25 or a SAT score of 1,110, an interest in the biosciences and be a member of a minority group, she said. The program received approximately $1 million, which included $700,000 from the National Institute of General Medicine and Science and the rest from the UI, said Peter Nathan, a professor of psychology.

By Todd Hefferman The Daily Iowan

Even without Ryan Bowen, Darryl Moore, and Rod Thompson The Fieldhouse/Gringo's found a way to win the biggest game of the young Prime Time League season last night in North Liberty.

Both The Fieldhouse/Gringo's and Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing came into Thursday's contest at 3-1. The winner would move into firstplace, and be at least a game up on the other seven teams at the midway-point of the season.

"Coach told us that this is a big game, and to come out strong, and we came out sloppy, muggy, and slow," David Willock of Imprinted said. "And it was a big game. As a competitor I'm taking it strong, because it was for first place.'

Playing with only six players, the first three and a half minutes belonged to The Fieldhouse, as they put up the first three points of the game off of Steven Harris' three-pointer.

"We thought that we were quicker than they were," Fieldhouse coach Don Nove said. "If we could get the ball to Pat (Voss) or Brad (Joens), or, really, any of those guys, they're all pretty good one-on-one, that's what we would try to

The two teams traded runs midway through the first half, and with 20 seconds to play in the first half. After Voss drove the center of the lane, he passed it to Harris who layed it in for a 56-54 halftime lead. Harris finished with 29 points, 10 rebounds, and four assists.

"We wanted that game bad," Harris said. "I caught my second wind a little after the third quarter, with about ten minutes left in the game.'

With 59.1 seconds to play, Imprinted had closed the Fieldhouse's lead to 107-104. Imprinted's Donald Stokes' potentially-tying three-pointer rimmed out, and Andrew Heslinga of The Fieldhouse grabbed the rebound and was fouled. He sank both free throws to make it 109-104, but Imprinted wasn't done yet.

After a missed three by Willock and two missed free throws from Voss on the insuing foul, Imprinted's Brian Westlake made a driving layup with 8.2 seconds to play, cutting the lead to three. After Harris was fouled on the inbounds play, he sank two free throws to put The Fieldhouse up by five, but a long three by Willock cut it to two with 1.7 seconds

They ran the floor well," Willock said of the undermanned Fieldhouse team. "When we made a shot, they were running back. They outplayed us, we need to pick up our defensive intensity.'

LANDOVER, Md. - When in doubt offensively, turn to the defend-

The United States did just that, getting second-half goals from Brandi Chastain and Joy Fawcett to edge Germany 3-2 Thursday night in their toughest game thus far in the Women's World Cup.

The Americans advanced to a Fourth of July semifinal at Stanford, Calif., against the winner of Thursday's late game between Brazil and Nigeria.

Before a festive crowd that included a late-arriving President Clinton and family, the Americans stormed back with a sensational second half and wore down the Germans. The U.S. team misfired often, but once again its precision on corner kicks paid off as the Americans loaded the penalty area and converted twice.

Chastain made up for an egregious error in the opening minutes by volleying in a corner kick to tie it in the 49th minute. Mia Hamm, who took a physical beating throughout the game, took the corner.

Fawcett, who almost never joins the attack - she had 18 goals in 140 internationals heading into the World Cup - was positioned perfectly for a side header past the outstretched arm of goalkeeper Silke Rottenberg.

From there, it was a matter of holding off the dauntless Germans, who also lacked accuracy with their shots and couldn't get the tying goal despite several opportunities. As has been their habit following all four victories thus far, the Americans took a victory lap around Jack Kent Cooke Stadium. They looked very relieved as they waved to the fans and clapped their hands. The Germans, runners-up to Norway in the 1995 tournament, also jogged around the field at the conclusion and received warm applause for their game effort.

MINOR LEAGUE BASEBALL . CLINTON LUMBER KINGS

A dying breed

■ DI sportswriter Greg Wallace went to Clinton and profiled this historic minor league club, struggling to keep its head above water.

> By Greg Wallace The Daily Iowan

CLINTON, Iowa- It's a beautiful late June evening in Clinton, 75 degrees and hazy. It's an ideal night for a ball game, and in a perfect world, Riverview Stadium would be packed to the rafters for tonight's game against Cedar Rapids and the hometown LumberKings.

Sometimes the world isn't so perfect.

Instead, 850 fans show up. Compare this with some other teams in the Midwest League who draw between seven and ten thousand fans per game, and you realize that baseball may be drawing its dying breaths in this Mississippi River town of 28,000.

"It's a tough road to hoe," LumberKings fan Gail Ryner said. Ryner has been coming to Clinton games since World War II, and previously served on the team's board of directors.

"If Clinton ever loses baseball because they can't support it, they'll never get it back, no way in the world," he said.

Over the past decade, the texture of the league has changed from one of small towns to big cities. Places like Rockford, Kenosha, Waterloo, and Springfield have been replaced with larger markets like Dayton, Lansing, Grand Rapids, and the suburbs of Chicago. There's simply no way for a place like Clinton to compete. In fact, the only reason the town still has a team is because the city owns the team and the stadium itself.

Courtesey of Clinton LumberKings

A sky view of Riverview Stadium with the Mississippi River in the background. The LumberKings are not filling their nostalgic stadium this year, but loyal fans don't want to see the team go.

If Clinton loses its franchise. and there is compelling evidence that it will in the next year or two, it will be a shame.

The stadium is a jewel. It dates back to 1937, when it was built as part of the New Deal under President Roosevelt. It has old-time charm that you can try and replicate in a new ballpark, but never duplicate. The advertisements on the outfield wall, the cramped leg space in the bleachers, the hanging grandstand, the riverboats visible past right field; all of these things make Riverview

This sort of fun is an endan-

Clinton isn't big enough to support a team. Dayton, where Rockford's team is moving next season, has 182,000 people to draw from. That's six times as large as Clinton. It's strictly working class, as factories lined the

"It sounds like we're bitter, but we're not bitter," Ryner said. "It just gets frustrating when you try to make ends meet, and just when you think you're even, you're not. It's like beating your head against the wall trying to get ahead."

For now, Ryner and his friend, Lester Humphreys, who pitched for Clinton in the 1950's, enjoy what they know is an uncertain proposition- a team to call their own. "We keep thinking it will be the

I'm not going to predict a renaissance in Clinton- having seen the ballpark and the town with my own eyes, I know that'd be foolish. But I do know that if fans want to have a baseball renaissance of their own, if you're as sick as I am of Albert Belle, and Darryl Strawberry, and $100 million contracts, take the 80-mile drive to Clinton. It's baseball at its purest, in a cozy little ballpark- the way it was supposed to be.

WIMBLEDON, England -Seven-time champion Steffi Graf neutralized the power hitting of Venus Williams to win in three sets today and reach the semifinals on another rainy day at Graf, who is two short of Martina Navratilova's record of nine singles titles, overcame Williams 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 in a compelling Centre Court duel that included four rain delays.

"Considering the number of (rain) breaks we had, it was unbelievable tennis today," Graf said.

Also advancing was Lindsay Davenport, who ousted defending champion Jana Novotna 6-3, 6-4 to qualify for the semifinals for the first time in her career.

The match, which ended at 8:10 p.m., lasted 1 hour, 52 minutes of actual playing time. But, because of the rain delays, there were 7 hours and 7 minutes between the first and last points of the match.

The match featured some sparkling rallies and spectacular shots by both players. While Williams tried to dictate the match with her big groundstrokes, Graf ran down most of the shots and hit them back just Aye aye, ma'am? Just ask Dawn the challenge of a lifetime. It's not the first time.

By Hal Bock Associated Press

Dawn Riley can handle a jib or a spinnaker, just like any other sailor. The difference, however, is this deckhand also balances her boat's books.

Riley, the first woman to head an America's Cup team in the history of that yachting competition, also works in the middle of the crew of 16 on her yacht, "America

But why is the boss in the middle of the boat instead of up front?
"Because," she said, "I don't the boat and the syndicate." Riley is an accomplished sailor, the only American to sail in two Whitbread Round-the-World races and two America's Cups. A two-time winner of the Santa Maria Cup, she's now involved in

"I was the only woman on the 1992 team," she said. "That was unique, an unbelievable experience. I was a rookie. It was my first America's Cup. Everything was new. I got to sail with the best in the world. Occasionally, there were days when I felt I didn't fit in. There was a lot of pressure."

America3 won the Cup that year and three years later, Riley was back in the boat, this time as captain of an all-women's crew in the 1995 Cup competition, won by New Zealand.

Now, Riley has a bigger stake in the challenge. Beyond her responsibilities on the crew, she's also in charge of the money side of this operation. The price tag is $20 million, a considerable sum until Riley puts the figure in relative "What do you get for $20 million in the NBA?" She said. "A couple of players? We've got a new boat, a training boat, 16 on the crew and between 22 and 30 persons on the overall sailing team."

There are three other American teams as well as challengers from Italy, Japan, Spain, France, Switzerland and Australia. They will begin elimination races in October to pick a challenger for the Cup series beginning Feb. 19. Riley wants it to be her yacht, which is on its way to Auckland, New Zealand. She will follow next

"By Oct. 18, it'll be time to put your boat where your mouth is." she said. "We have a realistic chance. We have the boat. We're confident in the design. We have plenty of time to get ready. We know our plan. Right now, we're finalizing the sailing team. We'll be in the water pretty day, off one day in 10. Its positive. The next step is . first across the finish line."

Riley sailed at Michigan State, where she was captain of the crew, a trailblazer at a time when there were very few woman skippers and none assembling America's Cup challengers.

Sometimes, in the midst of all the detail work involved in organizing this massive operation, Riley, 34, allows herself a moment to think about her own private fantasy.

"I want to be a housewife," she said. "I want to do gardening outside a house with a picket fence and a dog."

Sandusky leaving Linebacker U after three decades

STATE COLLEGE (AP) - Jerry Sandusky, who turned Penn State into "Linebacker U" in 31 seasons as defensive coordinator, said Thursday he is retiring after the 1999 season.

Sandusky has coached beside Joe Paterno through four unbeaten seasons and two national championships, and has also had nine first-team All-Americans. As one of four assistants who have been at Penn State for more than two decades, he was seen as a candidate to replace the 72-year-old Paterno one day.

"Jerry, he's a special man," said linebacker Brandon Short, a senior. "When he leaves, he'll be taking a part of Penn State with him '

Sandusky said he wants to spend more time working with The Second Mile, a charity he founded for kids.

Daly back in form at Irish Open

DUBLIN, Ireland - John Daly, rebounding from a disastrous performance at the U.S. Open, shot a 2-under 69 and trailed leader Craig Hainline by four strokes after the first round of the Irish open Thursday.

The 1995 British Open champion, who finished 23-over at the U.S. Open, played consistently over the Druids Glen course.

For Daly, who battles alcoholism and a gambling addiction, a sub-par round was a boost after "nine horrible weeks of golf" leading into the U.S. Open.

"That's one of the best rounds I've played this year and I'm looking forward to getting into contention over the weekend."

WASHINGTON - The NBA draft featured few surprises, although one moment stood out for the number of eyebrows it raised.

It came midway through the second round, when NBA vice president Rod Thorn walked to the podium and reeled off a series of names Corey Maggette, Dale Ellis, Billy Owens, Don MacLean.

Sonics had agreed to send to the Orlando Magic for Horace Grant and two future second-round

Under the NBA's new collective bargaining agreement, there is a moratorium on signings and trades until Aug. 1.

Other trades were made in principle Wednesday night, but they did not become public like the Toronto-Indiana deal.

There was a lot of talk at the draft that Minnesota and Cleveland had arranged a deal involving the sixth overall pick, Wally Szczerbiak. But Szczerbiak's agent said he had spoken to Cleveland general manager Jim Paxson and Minnesota general manager Kevin McHale, and no trade was forthcoming.

Much of the surprise from this year's draft concerned the fact that so few trades were made. Many people expected Chicago general manager Jerry Krause to make a move involving the No. 1 overall pick, but he chose to keep it and selected college player of the year Elton Brand of Duke.

"We never got to a point where we were ready to move the No. 1. It never got that serious," Bulls coach Tim Floyd said. "The more we thought about it, the more we watched film, the more we became knocked out that this could be the
