Bush paints GOP as growing conservatives

The presidential candidate accessed the Republican leader of focusing on economics.

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Speaking very few into an inaccessible Congress, George W. Bush said Tuesday after Republicans are too often "me, too" on issues and too often "no" on fundamentals. "Too often, my party has endorsed the government with a debt for the government," he said. The 1996 record-breaking election of celebrating the 1996 presidential income tax cuts, was a problem in keeping liberal leaders satisfied. Unleashing his second education initiative, Bush focused on the fundamentals of the education and teaching quality, a system in need of improvements and so many others outside the GOP base. It is a need for a conservative think tank, Bush said.

On the social issues, the party's record on abortion rights and the federal budget has been criticized by Bush and others in the party. The Bush administration has been criticized by the Democratic Party for its handling of key issues such as crime and education.

The issue of low voter turnout Tuesday in the state's primary elections has been a concern for both parties. The state's Democratic Party has been criticized for its inability to turn out the vote in previous elections. The Republican Party has also been criticized for its inability to turn out the vote in previous elections.

Drug tests not likely here, educators say

The court-upheld drug testing of teachers in New Mexico would not be possible, the law dean says.

By Chien Wang

Random drug testing of high school teachers in Kansas City, Tex., has caused little reaction so far at high school administrations that have adopted the new policies. But the decision, which could set a nationwide precedent, is under attack by teachers, who have become a requirement in the legal case. The teachers have hired attorneys to represent them in the case, and they have appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, which heard the case in September 1999, sorting out the legal battle in an effort to "keep the drugs out of children's lives."

"It's impossible to see that this could happen to teachers," said William Rhem, dean of the law school at the University of Texas. "The court's decision is a total and complete victory for the teachers, and it is going to have a major impact on the public schools." The court said that the teachers had a "reasonable suspicion" that a teacher might be under the influence of drugs, and that the policy was not a "naked governmental intrusion." The court also said that the policy was not a "cruel or unusual punishment," and that the policy was not a "violation of the Constitution." The court also said that the policy was not a "violation of the statute," and that the policy was not a "violation of the Constitution." English-only draws local ridicule

Johnston County might not make English its official language.

By Ryan Foley

The Daily Iowan

Although 12 Iowa counties have made English their official language in recent years, the Johnston County Board of Supervisors and English-only legislation is not in the county's future.

Louisa Story, who represents Johnston County in the state legislature, said Louisa documents in several languages, avoiding having to publish government grams in the schools, Story said.

"It was a lot less than at South County," he said. "Johnston County is probably the most diverse in Iowa. With more diversity, more groups become politically active."

A situation could arise in the future when its Board of Supervisors must still provide services in Spanish but not be measured, he said.

"For example, it (the Board of Supervisors) could say, 'Now it may have. It seems English-only legislation doesn't work out because we want to respect the language and culture and diversity of the people who live here,'" he said.

"It would seem English-only legislation is motivated not by wanting to respect the language and culture but by wanting to prevent diversity of language from being taught in the schools," he said.

"It's not that English-speaking people are not interested in being respectful of the culture of those who are not English-speaking," he said. "It would seem English-only legislation is motivated not by wanting to respect the language and culture but by wanting to prevent diversity of language from being taught in the schools.""
The $115 billion takeover, the largest in history, has the FCC wondering about competition.

By Beverly Howell

NEW YORK — MCI WorldCom and Sprint Corp. said Monday that the companies will call off their plans to merge after talks broke down.

The companies said Monday that they will "begin the process of determining the best course for each company going forward." It was not clear whether the talks could be revived.

The companies had been working on a merger that would have created the world's third-largest telecommunications company.

"At this time, we need to go our separate ways," Sprint chairman and chief executive officer Craig McCaw said in a statement.

McCaw said that the two companies "will bear a heavy burden to show how we can continue to compete on our own." He added that the companies "will see the need to focus on our own operations until we can better understand the competitive landscape and our opportunities in the world of telecommunications and our relationships need to be repositioned so that new types of competition can be developed.

The companies said that they will continue to pursue their only requirements "at this time, to understand the competitive landscape and our opportunities in the world of telecommunications and our relationships need to be repositioned so that new types of competition can be developed."

The wreck of two railway trains lies across the tracks following a crash near Paddington Station in West London Tuesday.

Safety devices were not fully operative as the trains traveled from Wales to Paddington at speeds of up to 104 mph.

A team of police and rail workers swarmed around the overturned, mangled rail cars for hours, locating and freeing victims until daylight today.

The immediate cause of the accident was the driver's hatred to be done in a park and went through two under warning lights and a red signal. Hal no runaway and a controlling factor was that two automatic brake systems had failed.

Hollywood disaster flies attack good taste with hurricane force

If there has been any speculation over what Hollywood movie will take home the Oscar for best film of 1999, it can end now. A clear-cut front runner has finally emerged; even its brief previews have a nation anxiously awaiting its imminent release.

I saw the commercial for this film a few days ago, and after only a half minute of highlights, I can already tell that this film is destined for immortality. The plot, from what I have gathered, details the story of a man whose death causes his close relationship with his children, the two daughters, to begin to unravel. It makes one wonder why they all should be torn apart. In any case, a trend has emerged that shows how little love and understanding there is among family members in our society. People are too busy fighting for their own survival and not realizing that they have a responsibility to help each other.

Natural disasters and potentially evil corporations have exaggerated many filmmakers’ minds over the past few years. It makes one wonder where it will all end. Perhaps it was with The Bird and the Caged. Or maybe Disaster! The creatively titled disaster film, full of plots and characters, was one of the most entertaining films of the year. In any case, a trend has emerged that shows how little love and understanding there is among family members in our society. People are too busy fighting for their own survival and not realizing that they have a responsibility to help each other.

On the other hand, the whole disaster film genre, should we thank Providence for saving us? How many movies these days graphically depict such a day-to-day threat to humanity as hurricanes, tornadoes, droughts, earthquakes, floods, volcanoes? Few. So indeed, several films of this genre were fine; in fact, people were frustrated these pressing concerns.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I, C. residents should appreciate Pet Mail change

I am writing this letter to express my appreciation and support of the recent Pet Mail change. For the past several years, it has been a source of frustration and inconvenience for me to receive my mail in the middle of the night. This change has not only improved my daily routine but has also helped me maintain a more organized schedule.

On-line booksellers sell students short

I am writing in regards to the Pet Mail change. In the past, booksellers would send out packages to my door, but now they are charging a fee for delivery. This is not only unfair, but it is also inconvenient for me. I have been a loyal customer of this company for many years, and I am disappointed with their new policy.

I have been a long-time friend of the Pet Mail service, and I believe that it is important for us to support our local businesses. With this change, I feel that I am being forced to choose between my convenience and my financial stability.

Get ready for summer warning-room, rain-catching, police-pursuing action on a thunderstorm ride through an unseasonal monsoon. What will happen when the tower comes down? Will our hero save the day? And will the girl fall in love with the hero? The answer is yes, yes, and yes. This is a movie that will keep you on the edge of your seat. Don’t miss out on this thrilling ride.

Low turnout plaguing primaries

Precedent officials aren't quite sure why voter turnout was as low as it was in the Tuesday primary amid the intense focus on the state's crucial role. "We always have a lower voter turnout," said Representative Rogers, as president official at the DMU. The extraordinary lack of interest led some officials to think that lack of public interest, "None of the candidates seemed to have any ideas about how to fire up the crowd," Rogers said.

Large crowds were turned into a sea of Goo Goo fans for the concert. "We've done this and now we can make money," said the lead singer. "But there have been so much of our interest," he added. "We've been working on this album for a long time now." The Goo Goo fans were seen dancing and singing along to the music at least at the shows to see the first show of the concert. The Internet was down in one of the concerts and the Goo Goo fans were upset. "We're just glad that we could have a concert with the band," said one fan. "I think this is the best way to express our appreciation for their music," he added.

COSG files complaint on payroll problems

The UI has used a masterclass program in some payroll checks for the past 30 years. The decision to switch to the Paycheck Plus program last semester was made because of anticipated $10 million savings, said Joseph Jatuk, the manager of university payroll. Paycheck Plus is a new payroll system that costs $5 million to implement, and has a matter of speeding $100 million in sales, on an average, every year. Jatuk said.

"But Paycheck Plus has not been the cause of the problems," said Richard Pardue, assistant vice president of the Daily Iowa. "The problems are really not much different from any other year," he said. "It's the result of new people we have at the beginning of every year."

The UI has known this for a long time. What is going to happen to those who are living paycheck-to-paycheck?" -- Johnson Herman, COSG president

No. 2 Nittany Lions worry Hawkeyes in Kinnick

By Mike Keily

During a rout in Philadelphia, Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz vowed to be a Nittany Lion mentor like any high school football player.

He was even going to try to walk on to Joe Paterno’s squad after his senior year in high school. However, the Nike-sponsored shoes in Valley, his high school tallied him late into his recruitment and playing linebacker them. Former Dallas Cowboy standout TONY DORSETT was the prize recruit of the program.

Ferentz said he is not concerned with watching scores in the program.

"We've been critical of them because I think our players feel we haven't had a good season. We've had some guys left to play and I just want to give them any help of those."

In order to play competitive in the game against the Nittany Lions, Iowa will have to win major scores on the program.

Williams leads Yankees

By Rachel Blum

NEW YORK — As a result of his baseball skills, his enthusiasm and knowledge of the game, people have begun to call him a leader during his brief time with the New York Yankees. Though Lynch only played in 12 games during this season, he has already begun to step up to the plate and show his leadership abilities.

Lynch had been a favorite among the fans throughout his career, and his decision to join the Yankees was met with great excitement. He was described as being a natural leader, always taking charge and motivating his teammates.

As Lynch continues to play a bigger role in the team, he is expected to continue to lead by example and help bring the Yankees closer to their goal of winning the World Series.
