UI considers privatizing vending

■ The university is accepting bids from companies to take over non-beverage vending.

By Nicole Schuppert
The Daily Iowan

The UI is evaluating bids from outside companies to take over operations of non-beverage vending machines in residence halls and academic buildings.

Because many of the campus vending machines are old, the UI would have to make a sizable investment in equipment to keep the machines in good condition, said Steve Parrott, interim director of university relations. That is one reason the UI is considering having a private company do the job.

"Just because bids were solicited doesn't mean that the university will 'out-source,'" Parrott said. "It may be a better deal to stick with the university people."

The machines involved in the new bids would include the 150 snack, laundry-detergent and condom machines in campus buildings, he said. Vending machines located in the UI Hospitals and Clinics, Recreational Services and the Athletics Department would not be included in the bid, he said.

"Taking bids is the first step in seeing what's the most efficient and inexpensive way for the UI to do it," Parrott said.

Some UI students said they are concerned that there will not be the same variety if a contract is given to a specific company. In February 1998, all UI "cold beverage" vending machines were contracted out to Coca-Cola. Milk and coffee products were not included in the contract.

"I like the variety of the chips," said UI freshman Stephanie Demarr. "I'm not a big Coke-drinker, so I always have to go to a store to buy a pop."

But, Parrott said, he doesn't feel that variety would be a problem.

"It may be one company supplying the stuff, but there would still be a variety of products," he said. The price of the products would be relatively the same under a contracted service, unless the new products were of higher quality, he said.

Another possible problem with privatizing the machines is the 10 UI employees now responsible for filling and servicing the vending machines, who would be placed in other campus jobs.

"No university employees will lose their jobs as a result of turning vending over to a private company, if it were to happen," Parrott said.

Jim Keese, a vending supplier in UI vending operations for the past 11 years, said to his knowledge, no university employees lost their jobs when the Coca-Cola contract took effect because the UI still had non-Coca-Cola machines to work on, and a couple of workers retired that year.

When asked about the possibility of having to switch jobs if a contract were signed, Keese said, "I might get a job I don't like as well as this one — I have no idea what new job it would be, just that it would be different."

Some UI students said they still feel it would be unfair for employees to have to change jobs.

"It wouldn't be right," Demarr said. "Even if they wouldn't lose their jobs, they would still be forced to relocate to another job."

Other UI students feel that the situation is fine the way it is and should not be changed.

"I think it's going too far for just a little bit of money," said Ryan Mikusch, a UI sophomore. "I mean, how much money do we really make off vending machines?"

FAKE IDS JUST GOT TOUGHER TO USE

Brett Roseman/

Bouncer Greg Helmers displays IDs confiscated by the Fieldhouse Restaurant & Bar. Local bar, store and restaurant owners and employees met Tuesday with state officials to learn how to spot fake IDs. "We get 10 to 15 a night on a weekend night," Helmers said.

Truth or consequences in Iowa City

■ Fake IDs seem rampant, and authorities are stepping up efforts to catch the fakes.

By Katie Bernard and Gil Levy
The Daily Iowan

UI sophomore Dalton Kidd, 20, never expected Iowa City police officers to confiscate his false ID after he was caught carrying a case of beer that had been purchased by a 21-year-old friend.

Kidd's friend had bought the beer at a convenience store and had given it to Kidd to carry.

When he walked away from the store, Kidd hesitated when he heard someone yell, "Hey, stop," from behind but kept walking when he saw two men wearing jeans.

After catching up to Kidd, the two men pulled out flashlights and identified themselves as undercover Iowa City police officers.

"They patted me down because they said I was trying to run," Kidd said, which is when they searched his wallet and found his fake ID.

But users of false identification are not the only

Anatomy of an invalid ID

Police and store, bar and restaurant employees may confiscate an Iowa ID if they believe it has been altered or does not belong to the person presenting it. Warning signs that an ID is invalid include:

- Birth-date numbers look as if they have been changed.
- Typefaces may not match or pieces of paper may have been placed over the original dates.
- Bleach may have been inserted into pinholes on the surface to white out aspects of a date.
- "Under 21 Until (specified date)" is printed in red under the photo.
- The person presenting the ID cannot answer questions regarding her or his middle name, year of high school graduation, address, zip code, etc.
- The date is expired.
- The word "duplicate" appears on the card. Someone else may have the original.
- Photo or physical description doesn't match customer's appearance.
- Lamination is peeling or there are bubbles.

Special features of Iowa licenses: "Iowa" is printed diagonally in ultraviolet-sensitive ink across the face of ID. The DOT director's signature and station number overlap the photo. The hologram of "Iowa DOT" or a hologram of the DOT logo appears horizontally across its face. The state seal or logo is shown in the data field. "State of Iowa" is microprinted for signature line and around the Iowa seal. Class, restrictions and endorsements, and magnetic stripe and bar code are on reverse of ID.

Investigators begin probe of Stewart jet crash

■ The federal safety board begins the task of trying to figure out the tragic, puzzling last flight of the Learjet carrying golfer Payne Stewart and five others.

By John MacDonald
Associated Press

MINA, S.D. — Investigators began gathering the remains of golfer Payne Stewart and five others from the area around a 10-foot-deep crater in a soggy pasture Tuesday, hoping to determine whether a sudden loss in cabin pressure doomed the victims' Learjet.

Dressed in heavy overalls against a cold wind, members of the National Transportation Safety Board spent all day at the South Dakota crash site, picking through the wreckage not only for the victims but for identifiable pieces of the shattered aircraft.

Investigators cautioned that there will be no quick explanation for why no one was conscious at the controls for four hours Monday, when the jet flew 1,400 miles across the country before running out of fuel and slamming nose-first into the ground.

Air Force never considered shooting down wayward jet, Page 5A

The plane had no flight data recorder that could yield information on the aircraft and its performance.

It had a cockpit voice recorder, but it consisted of a 30-minute loop that usually records over itself. And Stewart and the others on the plane presumably were already unconscious or dead by the last half-hour of the flight. The cockpit recorder had not been found as of Tuesday night.

Most of the plane's debris is embedded in mud and soil within a 10-foot-deep, 30-foot-wide crater, said Bob Francis, vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board.

"It looks like the aircraft was pretty much vertical when it hit the ground," he said. "The ground is soft, and it went in fairly deep. It's going to be a challenge, with the wreckage and sorting out what's there."

Investigators searched around the edge of the crater Tuesday and plan to search inside it today.

They were sending tissue samples from the victims to a medical examiner's laboratory to test for such substances as carbon monoxide.

Web site attacks Coleman, Whitmore

■ A second Web site critical of the UI administration has appeared, looking very much like the "SaveIWP" site.

By Corrie Dosh
The Daily Iowan

Another anonymous Web site criticizing the UI has sprung up, attacking recent actions of UI President Mary Sue Coleman and Provost Jon Whitmore.

The Web site, "SaveUI" (<http://saveui.webjump.com>), features articles and letters to the editor from area newspapers. The Web site is similar in style to the anonymous Web site "SaveIWP" (<http://saveiwp.webjump.com>) that attacked Coleman and faculty over the International Writing Program.

UI graduate student Jane Simonsen's opinion was featured on the Web site in a letter to the editor she wrote about Coleman's response to the recent sexual assaults on campus. The letter was originally published in the Oct. 8 Daily Iowan.

"It's a shame that campus groups' activism to raise awareness about rape has not seemed to affect the opinions of our president," Simonsen wrote in the letter.

She wasn't angry that the Web site published her letter, Simonsen said.

"It seems the purpose of the Web site is just to collect criticisms of Coleman," she said. "If there is a lot of criticism of President Coleman coming out recently, maybe that's significant; maybe she should take another look at her words and her actions."

Although Simonsen said her letter became "public domain" when she sent it in for publication, she said, "it would have been nice to be asked."

DI Publisher Bill Casey said the Web site is reprinting DI material without permission.

"They don't have any right to publish our stuff, basically," he said, adding that permission forms must be filled to obtain the right to republish articles.

"We almost always give permission," Casey said.

Chuck Wanninger, publisher of the Iowa City Press-Citizen, said the Internet is changing so rapidly it is hard to maintain publishing rights.

"That is our work, and we own that work, and someone taking it without permission certainly does concern me," he said.

The Press-Citizen usually grants requests to reprint articles, Wanninger said.

"We're usually pretty open to it but ask that people give us full credit," he said.

Dances with bongos

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Drug charges against Matthew McConaughey have been dropped, but the actor still faces a misdemeanor charge stemming from an arrest in his home.

McConaughey

McConaughey, who has starred in movies such as A Time To Kill, Contact and EdTV, was released from jail Monday afternoon on $1,000 bond.

"I don't want to rent a place there, but it was a nice stay for a night," McConaughey said.

Police say they were called to McConaughey's home early Monday after receiving a complaint of loud music and saw him through a window naked, playing the bongos, while another man danced and clapped.

Officer Michael Olson said that he entered the actor's house and smelled "a faint odor of marijuana" and found a pipe and a shallow bowl containing marijuana stems and seeds.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Anna Nicole Smith isn't taking any chances: She has filed motions in courts in California and Texas in her battle to get half of her late billionaire husband's estate.

Smith

The actress and former Playboy Playmate was 26 when she married J. Howard Marshall II. Before he died 14 months later at age 90, Smith claims, he had promised to give her half of his estate.

During a hearing in U.S. Bankruptcy Court Monday, Smith's attorney says she should have gotten at least $535 million upon his death. However, Smith alleges there was an illegal revision to his will made three weeks after their 1994 marriage, which gave control of the oilman's estate to his 60-year-old son Pierce.

NEW YORK (AP) — If you've ever wondered how you'd look wearing Marilyn Monroe's clothes, here's your chance.

Some 1,000 items belonging to the late screen star, including the dress she wore when she serenaded President Kennedy with "Happy Birthday," will be auctioned at Christie's today and Thursday.

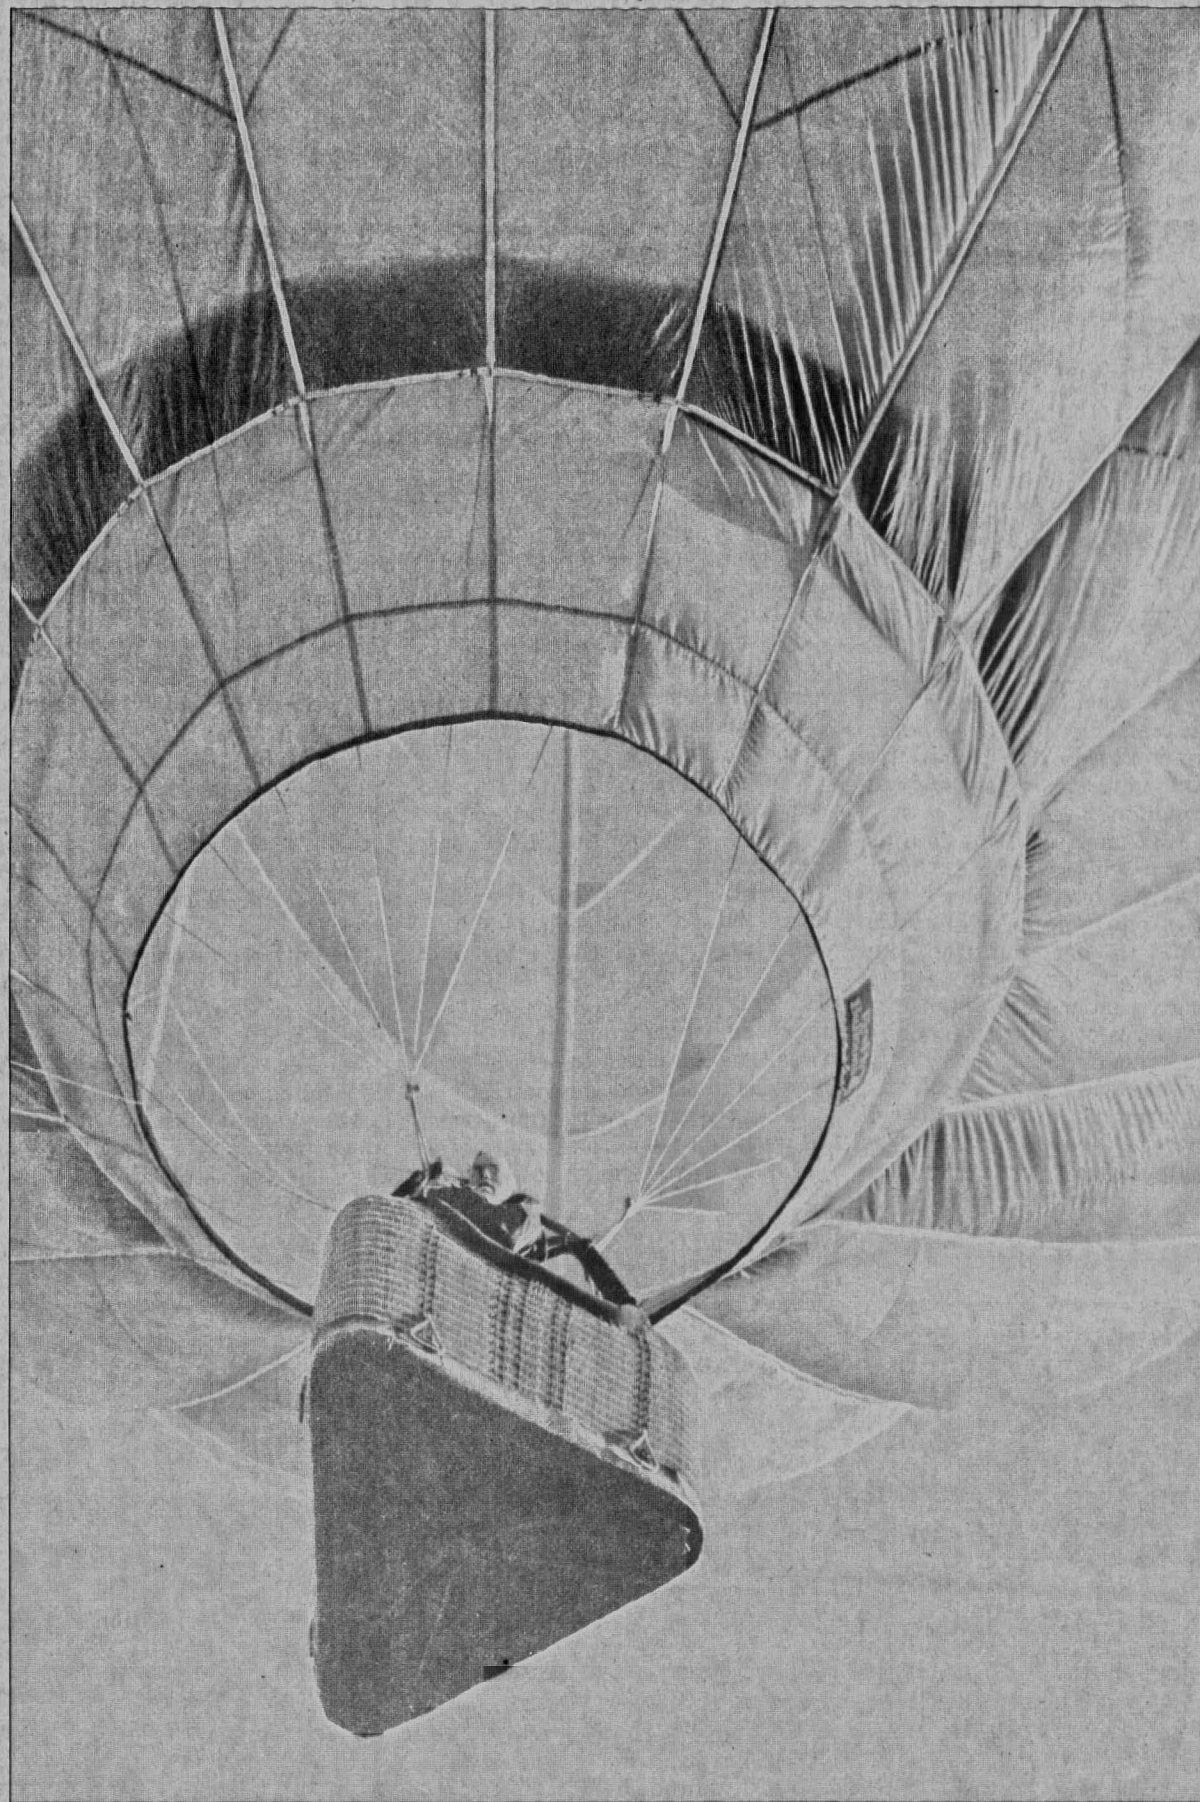

Christie's is estimating that the flesh-colored Jean Louis gown, so tight Monroe had to be sewn into it, will fetch a price in the "high six-figure" range.

Other items to be auctioned include Monroe's wedding ring from second husband Joe DiMaggio, a collection of Pucci dresses and Monroe's personal library of some 400 books.

Old Capitol Web site wins state tourism award

The UI Old Capitol Museum Web site received the 1999 Web Site Award from the Iowa Division of Tourism and the Travel Federation of Iowa at the annual tourism conference in Sioux City, Iowa.

The inaugural award, presented by Iowa Division of Tourism Administrator Nancy Landess and Travel Federation of Iowa President Tom Kuhlman, was created in recognition of the increasingly important role the Internet plays in tourism marketing. Sites were evaluated for design, ease of use, information presented and use in the organization's overall marketing campaign.

Rape clas

A state grant will allow Rape Safety to better its Rape Aggression Defense class.

By Ryan Foley
The Daily Iowan

The Rape Aggression Defense class offered by UI Department of Public Safety will receive a $10,000 grant from the Governor's Alliance on Substance Abuse later this month.

"We applied for the grant in July and heard that we got it in September," Public Safety Sgt. David Visin said. "They told us we would be getting the money any time in late October."

"Our biggest problem has been a lack of funds. We're really happy about receiving the grant."

Rape-defense classes, which have been offered by Public Safety since 1995, are meant to inform about and prepare women against sexual attacks. The class, which is free for UI students, meets once a week, four hours at a time, for three weeks.

The program will use the grant money to buy three new aggressor suits — padded suits that instructors of the class don to simulate attackers — which cost approximately $1,000 each, Visin said.

Shooting golfer's plane never an issue

■ The Pentagon says it could tell that the wandering Learjet was not headed for a populated area.

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Air Force pilots tracking the Learjet that flew uncontrolled for 1,400 miles before crashing in South Dakota Monday could tell the plane was not headed toward a heavily populated area and so did not have to consider shooting it down, Pentagon officials said.

"It never was an issue," Kenneth Bacon, spokesman for Defense Secretary William Cohen, said Monday.

Tuesday, however, Bacon said that officers on the Joint Chiefs of Staff who were monitoring the Learjet on radar screens inside the Pentagon's National Military Command Center raised the question of what might have to be done if the plane were to suddenly veer from its course. The issue may have been raised by Navy Vice Adm. Scott A. Fry, the Joint Staff director of operations.

"Admiral Fry or someone working with him said, 'You know, if this thing suddenly veers off course and heads to Chicago, we'll have some really tough decisions to make.' It was that type of thinking," Bacon said. "It was not saying, 'OK, let's get ready.' It never got to that point."

Bacon also said Tuesday that during the drama Monday, Navy Vice Adm. Herb Browne, the deputy commander in chief of the U.S. Space Command at Peterson

Air Force Base, Colo., consulted the Pentagon's written "Instructions For Destruction of Derelict Airborne Objects."

The instructions, dated July 31, 1997, make no explicit reference to shooting down manned aircraft but say that destroying other airborne objects such as unmanned balloons or "unmanned non-nuclear rockets or missiles" would require prior approval from the secretary of Defense. Bacon said the Pentagon has no written instructions for shooting down manned civilian planes.

Professional golfer Payne Stewart was among six people believed to be aboard the business jet. All were killed when the plane nosedived into a farm field in north-eastern South Dakota.

Asked whether downing the Learjet might have become an option if the plane, which was believed to be on autopilot with no radio communication, had headed toward a major city, Bacon said: "It never reached that point."

Several Air Force and Air National Guard fighter jets, plus an AWACS radar control plane, were used to help the Federal Aviation Administration track the Learjet and estimate when it would run out of fuel. They included F-15s from Tyndall Air Force Base, Fla.; F-16s from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., Tulsa, Okla., and Fargo, N.D.; and an AWACS plane on a training mission north of Chicago, Bacon said.

Two armed Air Force F-16 air defense fighters were placed on alert at Fargo just moments before the Learjet crashed, but they were never ordered to take off, Bacon said.

Faculty Senate shows strong support for IWP resolution

■ The group approves continuing the world-renowned program.

By Dana Ritzmann
The Daily Iowan

After dividing a single resolution into thirds, the UI Faculty Senate passed three resolutions concerning the International Writing Program during a special meeting Tuesday.

The senators decided to split the resolution, proposed by the Faculty Council during its meeting on Oct. 19, into three separate parts and vote on each one at a time.

"It shows the very strong support of the faculty leadership for the program to continue," said David Skorton, UI vice president for research. Skorton was appointed by UI President Mary Sue Coleman to oversee the IWP for the 1999-00 school year.

The first seven clauses pertain to the future of the program, while the final two clauses look more at the IWP's past, said Jon Carlson, the senate president and a law professor.

Paul Muhly, a senator and a mathematics professor, initiated a change in the seventh clause, ensuring that the final date for deficit accumulation was Tuesday.

"I wanted to make sure that the IWP's deficit wasn't affecting the program, and I also didn't want to give it a blank check to accumulate a deficit in the future," he said.

The Senate approved his motion, and the seventh clause reads: "...the Senate urges that the deficit of the IWP accumulated as to Oct. 26, 1999, not be allowed to endanger the future health of the program..."

"The presence of the deficit has not affected the year-to-year operation of the program," Skorton said.

None of the people who attended the meeting knew the exact numbers of the current deficit, which was approximately $106,426.87 during academic year 1998-99, Carlson said.

John Menninger, a senator and a biology professor, didn't approve of the first part of the resolution because he said he felt it deserved more discussion.

"Nobody seems to know what is going on financially with the IWP," he said. "It is a huge cash sink, and nobody discusses it."

Rowena Torrevillas, an IWP program associate, said she was pleased with the Faculty Senate's decision, although she had expected more discussion on the oversight.

"They should allow Dr. Skorton to continue the enthusiastic and careful direction that he is establishing," she said.

The resolution is only advice for the president and the provost as they decide the future of the IWP, Skorton said.

ATM fees face angry voters

■ San Francisco voters will get a crack at ATM fees; banks are then expected to go to court.

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A proposal to ban those $1 or $2 ATM surcharges goes before voters for the first time next month in San Francisco, setting the stage for a court battle.

There is little doubt the ban will pass, but it is certain to face a legal challenge from the banking industry, which contends that federally chartered banks are not subject to local and state laws. No court in the nation has ruled specifically on an ATM fee ban.

San Francisco's referendum is the latest sign of growing consumer outrage over the cash-machine fees, which are usually charged when customers withdraw money from a bank other than the one where they hold an account.

The surcharges averaged $1.20 in a 1998 study by the Federal Reserve; they have become almost universal across the country in the last three years.

In Southern California, Santa Monica city officials have already passed a ban on surcharges. It takes effect on Nov. 12. A dozen other California communities are considering bans, including Los Angeles and San Diego, said Jon Golinger of the California Public Interest Research Group, which has led the no-surcharge campaign.

Connecticut and Iowa have used existing laws to ban ATM surcharges. And last week, the Pentagon said it would consider a ban on ATM fees on U.S. military bases.

Congress has thus far rejected legislation that would eliminate surcharges nationwide.

Banks say the charges are simply the price of 24-hour convenience and help pay for their growing networks of ATMs. But opponents say the fees are unjustifiable at a time of soaring bank profits, teller layoffs and branch closings.

"Why do they have to charge? They never did it before," asked Carney Campion, a San Francisco resident who tore up his ATM card a few weeks ago in frustration.

Golinger sees the San Francisco referendum as a way to accelerate efforts to get rid of the fees elsewhere. "This is a bottom-up event," he said. "In the end, surcharges will be banned just about everywhere."

According to a 1997 government report, the surcharges aren't needed to cover the costs of ATM transactions. The report said the average ATM transaction costs banks 27 cents, while transactions with tellers cost up to $2.93 each.

Instead, the banks argue that the fees help pay to install more ATMs, which are needed as cash-machine use increases and branches close.

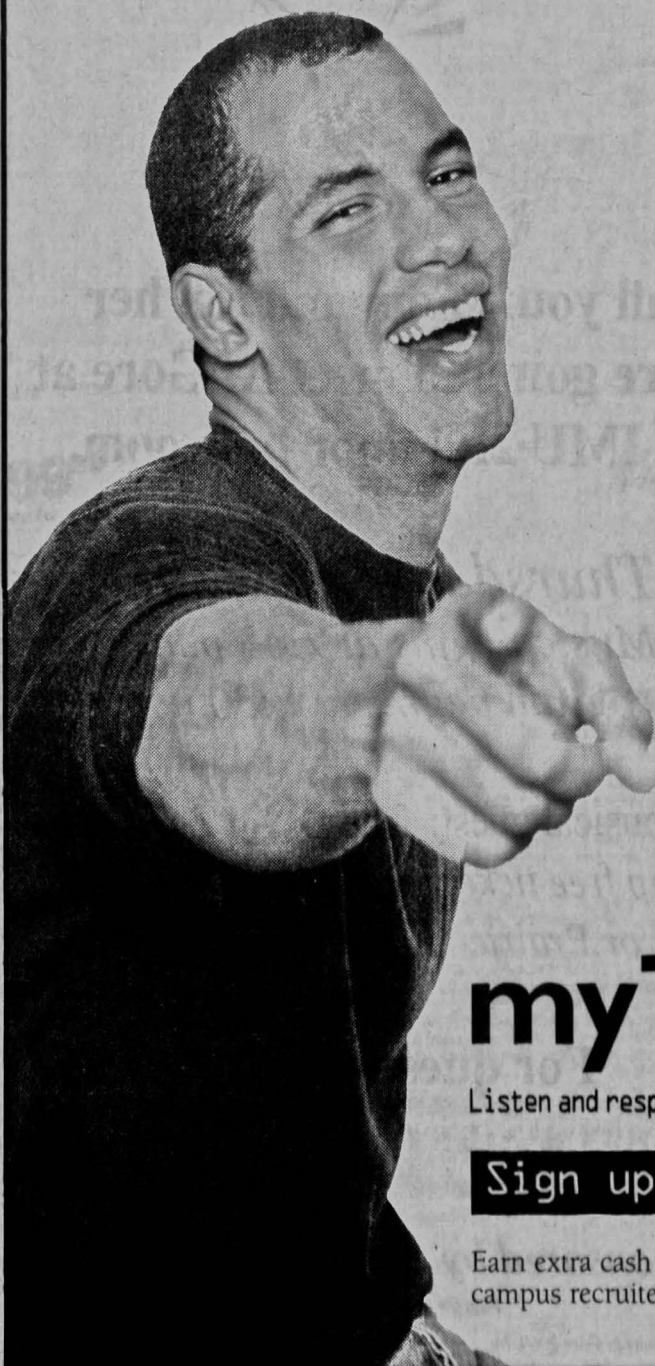

"It's a way of having non-customers share in the burden of maintaining that network," said California Bankers Association spokesman John Stafford.

The American Bankers Association warns that banning the fees would force banks to bar ATM use by non-account holders and shut down tens of thousands of the machines.

The chief legal argument against local surcharge bans is that only the federal government can regulate the ATMs of national banks, which operate 90 percent of the machines covered by San Francisco's referendum.

Russian barrages pummel Chechnya

Russian troops push closer to the Chechen capital in the current conflict's heaviest fighting.

By Ruslan Musayev
Associated Press

GROZNY, Russia — Exploding artillery shells rattled windows and spread fear in the Chechen capital Tuesday as the heaviest fighting in weeks brought Russian tanks and soldiers near the city limits.

Chechen fighters battled the Russians within two miles of Grozny's northern edge, while more fighting raged to the east of the city. There were unconfirmed reports that elite Russian reconnaissance troops had entered Grozny.

Russian jets and artillery elsewhere were bombarded at least seven towns and settlements across Chechnya Tuesday, officers on both sides said.

Up to 200 Russian tanks and self-propelled artillery pieces led the fiercest assaults in the Terek Ridge area, the strategic heights northwest of Grozny's airport, said Gen. Mumadi Saidayev, a top Chechen military official.

The Chechens claimed they had knocked out several tanks and inflicted heavy losses on a Russian column advancing from the southeast, but no independent confirmation was available.

Residents of the battered Chechen capital were gripped with fear and hopelessness ahead of the region's harsh winter season.

"Many of those who have stayed in Grozny feel doomed," said resident Asya Lalayeva, complaining that officials in both the Russian and Chechen governments "see them as raw material."

Russian officials have given mixed signals about whether they plan to storm Grozny in their campaign to wipe out Islamic militants based in Chechnya. After early successes, the Russian military now appears to be trying to occupy all of the republic and end its de facto independence.

Casualties in the latest fighting are unknown. The Russians say they have lost some 200 soldiers and killed 2,000 militants overall, while the Chechens claim to have lost far fewer fighters and killed many Russians.

Chechen officials reported that Russian troops seized the town of Sernovodsk, 27 miles west of Grozny, and that heavy fighting was continuing in Gudermes, a city 20 miles east of Grozny.

Chechen President Aslan Maskhadov told reporters that there was heavy fighting in Tolstoy-Yurt, north of Grozny but admitted that Chechen fighters could do little against the numerically superior Russians in the relatively open region.

Saidayev said his fighters wanted the Russians to enter Grozny, where Chechen guerrillas inflicted severe losses on them in street fighting during the 1994-96 Chechen war.

"But they won't do it because they know that they would be crushed," he said.

Chechen commanders said Tuesday they believe the Russians want to take Grozny's airport and set up a headquarters.

"The airport is a very convenient place to stay during the winter," said Saidayev. "Because they would feel very uncomfortable staying on the Terek Ridge for a long time."

Some Russian commanders have indicated they intend to besiege Grozny and starve the rebel government into submission.

The Chechen forces have adequate food and supplies to last at least until next year, Chechen Vice President Khamza Shidayev said. "There is no basis to scream SOS even though Chechnya is blockaded from all around," he said in an interview.

But the few civilians left in Grozny have little food. There is also no electricity or natural gas in the city, and people have to pump water from outdoor wells.

Civilian to head up Indonesian military

New President Abdurrahm Wahid consolidates power.

By Geoff Spencer
Associated Press

JAKARTA, Indonesia — In a move to sharply reduce the military's political dominance, Indonesia's new president took the radical step Tuesday of appointing a civilian to run the Defense Ministry.

President Abdurrahman Wahid, whose election by Parliament last week marked Indonesia's transition to democracy, announced a Cabinet filled with political neophytes, Islamic party politicians and fewer military officials than ever before.

Juwono Sudarsono, Indonesia's first civilian defense minister in four decades, faces the huge task of reforming a military widely accused of human-rights abuses and meddling in politics and of keeping restive parts of the country from trying to break away.

Juwono, education minister in the Cabinet of just-ousted President B.J. Habibie, once served as vice-governor of the National Defense Institute, the military's main think-tank.

"He's nonpartisan but has a good relationship with the armed forces," said analyst Salim Said. "He would not be considered a threat to the military. He would be a good bridge between the president and the military."

Juwono will take over the Defense Ministry from Gen. Wiranto, the powerful military leader who also was replaced as commander of Indonesia's armed forces. Wiranto, like many Indonesians, uses only one name.

Wiranto, who was awarded the senior post of political and security affairs minister, played a major political role in Indonesia's bumpy and sometimes bloody transition to democracy after the ouster of authoritarian President Suharto in May 1998.

Wahid said Juwono was appointed at Wiranto's suggestion. "Don't think that the military are crazy," Wahid said. "They know that the whole society is changing now. Because of this, Gen. Wiranto also knows that the military has to change its attitude toward society."

The new Cabinet includes only six active or retired generals — the fewest ever.

In an unprecedented move, Wiranto will be replaced as military chief by a navy officer, Adm. Widodo Adisutjipto, who was Wiranto's deputy. The navy is regarded as less corrupt and brutal than the army.

Indonesia's military long has served a major political role, which was trimmed back after Suharto's departure. It has 38 of the 700 seats in the People's Consultative Assembly, the country's highest legislative body, half its total from past assemblies.

Juwono raised the possibility Tuesday that those seats could be eliminated as well. He also said he was considering appointment of other civilians to top defense posts.

Wahid described his new Cabinet as a "national unity" Cabinet that would focus on pulling Indonesia out of its worst economic crisis in more than three decades.

"We have to make economic recovery our prime goal," he said in a nationally televised address. "Second is to maintain our territorial integrity."

Parrott said the UI is guaranteed $750,000 per year from the contract with Coke.

"The UI gets $350,000 up front plus a 50-50 split of the revenues," he said.

The money from the beverage contract is used for improvements of campus facilities; some of the money goes to the Staff Council.

UI Staff Council President Michael Wichman said "the council receives $50,000 per year at this point, and the money is used for programs beneficial to the staff."

The programs use money in four broad areas, Wichman said: professional development in education, outreach programs, support to family services and recognition and awards.

Parrott said the choice to use a private vending company for non-beverage machines will be a joint decision made by Douglas True, the vice president for finance, and

Changing of the guard in Dow Jones

In a sign of the shifting economy, the stock-market gauge goes high-tech.

By Bruce Meyerson
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Underscoring the decline of America's smoke-stack economy and the rise of high technology, Microsoft and Intel are being added to the Dow Jones industrial average, while Chevron, Goodyear and Union Carbide are being dropped.

In another sign of the changing of the guard on both Wall Street and Main Street, Home Depot is replacing Sears on the list.

And the telephone company SBC Communications is becoming the fourth new addition to the lineup of 30 companies.

The changes were announced Tuesday; they will take effect on Nov. 1. They are the first changes in the Dow since 1997, when the Wall Street Journal, the keeper of the Dow, switched four of the companies in the best-known gauge of the stock market.

"I'd say, 'Hooray!' It's been a long time coming," said A. Marshall Acuff Jr., equity strategist at Salomon Smith Barney. "The Dow has reflected the old economy of the last 50 or more years, and these changes today are another step in bringing the index in line with the new economy."

The Dow is computed by combining all of the stock prices and dividing by a special number set by the Journal. The divisor will be recalculated to make sure the Dow starts on Nov. 1 with the same value as it had at the close of trading Friday.

The new stocks could cause the average to rise faster than the old ones, but they will also probably mean bigger swings in the Dow, because technology stocks are more volatile than old-line industrial issues.

In another milestone, Intel and Microsoft are the first Dow stocks not listed on the New York Stock Exchange. They trade instead on the NASDAQ Stock Market, which was created in 1971 and has been battling for prestige against the 207-year old NYSE.

Intel is the world's biggest supplier of the semiconductors that serve as the brains for computers. Microsoft is the No. 1 maker of the software that runs those computers. With IBM and Hewlett-Packard already in the Dow average, the blue-chip index will have four high-tech components.

SBC — the country's biggest local phone company — is also the biggest deliverer of Internet access. Its wires reach nearly a third of the homes in the United States, and the company plans to spend $6 billion upgrading its network for high-speed Internet access.

Critics of the Dow, which was created in 1896, had argued that the average contained too few stocks that reflect the technology and information revolution that has reshaped the world economy over the past two decades.

Even so, Intel and Microsoft are not the first non-industrial companies in the industrial average — the list also includes American Express, McDonald's and Disney.

Almost immediately Tuesday, the stocks involved in the swap were affected by the news because the Dow companies are integral to various investment portfolios and market strategies. The four stocks being removed promptly declined as mutual funds, money managers and other investors began to reconfigure their holdings.

whose input helped the bill take shape, Corlette said.

Legislation is necessary to deal with the problems that teaching institutions face, said Derek Willard, UI associate vice president for research, who lobbies for the university in Washington, D.C.

"There is an unprecedented and growing financial crisis undermining the financial stability of teaching hospitals nationwide," he said.

Combined with the growth of managed care and low-cost, third-party providers, Medicare cuts are especially devastating to teaching institutions, Willard said.

Despite the loss of revenue, the UIHC is not in immediate danger, he said.

"The UIHC is not in a crisis mode," Willard said. "We are holding our own."

If no relief comes, however, the UIHC could have to restructure dramatically, he said. Other teaching hospitals in the country, such as the University of Minnesota Hospitals, have been bought by private organizations, he said.

The UIHC is facing financial problems from all fronts, said Clarkson Kelly, a member of the state of Iowa Board of Regents.

"The federal government is paying less in the form of Medicare," he said.

"We are still able to get along," he said. "But now we're in a very difficult situation. We cannot continue to provide graduate education if we do not have the funding."

The effort to provide relief to teaching hospitals has been bi-partisan, said Willard, who praised Harkin on his leadership in pressing the issue.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has also been key to getting the process moving, Willard said. Grassley, an influential member of the Finance Committee, contacted committee chairman Sen. William Roth, R-Del., about relief earlier in the year, he said.

"Our two senators have been instrumental in this process," Willard said.

True tales from the land of fake IDs

ones harmed when they are caught — alcohol vendors also suffer consequences.

In an effort to curtail the acceptance of false IDs, state officials met with local alcohol providers at the Ramada Inn, in Coralville, Tuesday.

"Look for obvious defects such as discoloration, bubbles or air beneath the lamination, larger or darker typesetting than normal, false photos and obvious errors in information or dates," said Andy Lewis, a state Department of Transportation investigator.

Several state organizations and departments sponsored the program and introduced two new technologies that would help establishments identify false IDs.

The "Identifier" and "Viage" are two types of magnetic scanners that read the magnetic strip on the back of the drivers' licenses and state IDs, then show the age of the user on its screen. The information can also be saved and stored on any PC software and printed out.

Julie Phye, the coordinator of the Stepping Up Program, said the Airliner, 22 S. Clinton St., and the Fieldhouse Restaurant & Bar, 111 E. College St., are the only bars in Iowa City using ID scanners.

"We have been using a scanner to read IDs for about six months," said Dave Moore, co-owner of the Fieldhouse. "It's been successful in catching some good fakes, but we still look at the photo to double check the person's identity."

Officers have several choices when looking for false IDs, said Iowa City police Sgt. Mike Lord.

"A lot of it is on an officer's perception of what he sees walking into an establishment," he said.

Officers will notice those who separate themselves from drinks in a bar and question them, he said. If the person is underage and acting nervous, the officer may try to find a false ID.

If officers have difficulty determining the validity of the ID, they can check the name and Social Security number over the radio, he said.

Kidd said he had used his computer-generated fake ID for approximately a year but hadn't used it recently for fear of losing it. He said most bar staff in downtown Iowa City looked at it and let him in.

"I think every student who's not 21 has a fake, we see so many," Moore said. "It's hard to spot all of them."

Fake IDs come in a number of forms, Lord said, but the most common types are computer-generated. Students will also use IDs of older siblings and friends or make them in other crude forms, such as a giant license-backgrounds against a wall.

"Most of the fake IDs we confiscate are ordered off the Internet or homemade from stolen DOT machines. We collect them nightly and turn them into the Iowa City Police Department," Moore said.

Lord agreed that there are a large number of false IDs circulating Iowa City and says more could be done to curb their use.

It is difficult for officials to hold bars accountable, said Lord, if they are making "reasonable efforts," which include stationing competent, trained staff at bar entrances.

When underage people are caught with false identification, they are fined $145 on the first offense and $200 on the second offense, combined with 30 days of driver's license suspension, Lord said.

"The person showing the ID should get charged more — it seems like a slap on the wrist," said Moore, complaining that the penalties for the deceived staff are more severe.

"We've got to take it seriously," he said. "It's our first line of defense. Our (liquor) license depends upon us following the rules."

Penalties for businesses on the first offense for accepting a false ID include a $500 fine for the employee and up to $1,500 for the owner, or a 14-day liquor license suspension. The second offense means a $1,500 fine for both parties and a 30-day suspension; the third offense results in the double fine, a 60-day suspension and possible complete revocation of the license.

Local law enforcement officers use undercover sting operations to check the compliance practices of employees, said Dawn Carlson, a representative for the Petroleum Marketers of Iowa.

"The state of Iowa may get up to $1 million to combat substance abuse," she said. "Grants will allow more and more compliance checks, and you better believe being in a college town that they'll come this way."

Beginning in January 2000, the state Legislature will make more revisions to the licenses issued in 2000, which will help owners visually identify underage patrons faster, said Lewis, the DOT investigator.

"These establishments with liquor licenses are under the pressure of a college community and vast competitors," said Jim Kuhlman, operations manager for the Iowa Department of Commerce Alcoholic Beverages Division. "It's their responsibility to practice good business and to abide by the law."

But downtown bars don't take it as seriously, said UI senior Melissa Diebold.

Diebold, 21, used a number of fake IDs before becoming 21; she was never caught by police nor had trouble getting into Iowa City bars.

"One bouncer realized it was a fake but made me get up on a stool and sing a song because he knew it was fake and didn't care," she said. "I did it; that was the sad part."

Another factor contributing to whether a person is let into a bar with a fake ID is who the person is, Diebold said.

"It may be easier for women to get in," she said. "I've seen guys get denied at the places it was easy for me to get in."

Senate may aid UIHC on Medicare cuts whose input helped the bill take shape, Corlette said.

Legislation is necessary to deal with the problems that teaching institutions face, said Derek Willard, UI associate vice president for research, who lobbies for the university in Washington, D.C.

"There is an unprecedented and growing financial crisis undermining the financial stability of teaching hospitals nationwide," he said.

Combined with the growth of managed care and low-cost, third-party providers, Medicare cuts are especially devastating to teaching institutions, Willard said.

Despite the loss of revenue, the UIHC is not in immediate danger, he said.

"The UIHC is not in a crisis mode," Willard said. "We are holding our own."

If no relief comes, however, the UIHC could have to restructure dramatically, he said. Other teaching hospitals in the country, such as the University of Minnesota Hospitals, have been bought by private organizations, he said.

The UIHC is facing financial problems from all fronts, said Clarkson Kelly, a member of the state of Iowa Board of Regents.

"The federal government is paying less in the form of Medicare," he said.

"We are still able to get along," he said. "But now we're in a very difficult situation. We cannot continue to provide graduate education if we do not have the funding."

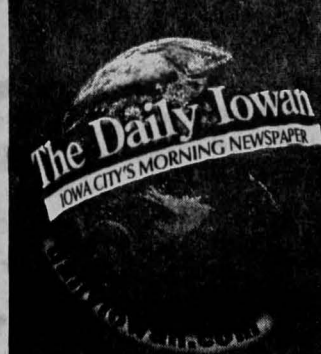

The effort to provide relief to teaching hospitals has been bi-partisan, said Willard, who praised Harkin on his leadership in pressing the issue.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has also been key to getting the process moving, Willard said. Grassley, an influential member of the Finance Committee, contacted committee chairman Sen. William Roth, R-Del., about relief earlier in the year, he said.

"Our two senators have been instrumental in this process," Willard said.

URBAN AND REGIONAL PLANNING

What Is It?

Planning is a profession for people who want to improve the quality of life in cities and regions. Planners are concerned with issues such as affordable housing shortages, groundwater contamination, state economic growth, and transportation congestion.

Graduate Program Description

The University of Iowa offers a two-year Master's degree program in Urban and Regional Planning. The program's curriculum emphasizes the development of analytic and professional skills to prepare students for a career in Planning. An undergraduate degree is required and students come from almost every major. Writing, quantitative and interpersonal skills are emphasized in the program.

- Areas of concentration include:
 - Housing & Community Development
 - Economic Development
 - Environmental Planning
 - Transportation Planning

Joint Degrees are available with Law, Hospital and Health Administration, Social Work, Preventive Medicine and Environmental Health, and Economics.

Sanctions against Iraq not having desired effect

On Aug. 6, 1990, the U.N. Security Council adopted Resolution 661, imposing economic sanctions on Iraq. It included a full trade embargo on Iraq, except for medical supplies, food and other items of human need, as determined by the U.N. sanctions committee.

The sanctions, amended several times since 1990, remain in force. The United States has maintained its own sanctions against Iraq since then.

Stories come from this country telling of the children who pass away because of the lack of required medical equipment. Residents starve on the street, and most of the inhabitants of the nation, including doctors, have been forced to take on second jobs in order to supplement their incomes.

However, these sanctions have not had any substantial effect on Iraq's leader, Saddam Hussein. He still lives comfortably and remains firmly in control, while 22 million of his citizens are tremendously affected by the sanctions every day. Reports from U.N. diplomats and officials of humanitarian organizations point out that the economic and military sanctions have left many struggling for survival. Meanwhile, Baghdad's unemployment rate is more than 50 percent.

Is the human cost of sanctions worth attempting to change the Iraqi government? This is being debated by humanitarian organizations and U.N. officials. New approaches must be brought on to lift the sanctions or at least urge the United Nations to make an effort to save what is left of the Iraqi people.

UI gets its wish, but must remain accountable

"What's done is done... We expect the UI to be held accountable."

Last spring, UI students elected Lana Zak to speak on their behalf as UI Student Government president. Never before has she echoed their sentiments so clearly.

On Oct. 21, the Board of Regents, state of Iowa, complied with UI requests for a 6.9 percent increase in tuition and fees. While the hundreds of students who voiced their anti-increase opinions on the UI Web site may feel slighted, they should feel happy. Thanks to the regents and the UI, students are now entitled to a virtual cornucopia of benefits.

Tuition increases are a proud UI tradition predictable enough to merit placement on the football schedule. Considering the lack of improvement since last year's increase, students have little reason to believe that this year will be any different.

Will the tuition increase erase the long lines for placement in communications courses? Will business students see wooden folding chairs replaced with adequate replacements? Will loan-bound students struggling to make ends meet be deluged with scholarship offers? The UI memo to the regents requesting the tuition increase promised "adequate course sections," "classroom improvements" and "increased financial aid," but students are well-advised to take this with a grain of salt.

UI administrators made comparable promises last fall, but they failed to deliver little more than a promise to try harder this time around.

In return for its 7 percent jump in revenue, the UI has effectively given up its right to stall expenditures on much-needed improvements. The 37-page memorandum requesting the increase was jam-packed with high hopes and acceptance of responsibility. Rest assured, UI, the students will be watching you.

Meanwhile, the regents merit comparable scrutiny. Shifts in attitudes since last year's vote on a 4.5 percent tuition increase provide ample cause for concern.

Last year, Regent David Fisher voted against tuition increases, saying, "It's harder for (the students) to stretch than private funding." How the same man could vote for a 7 percent increase a year later would appear to defy conventional logic.

Regent Ellengray Kennedy's ballot was equally schizophrenic. Last year, she voted for the 4.5 percent increase but said, "The timing's not quite right (for a 5.2 percent increase)." Can she honestly say that the Year of the Farm Crisis constitutes appropriate timing?

Considering the wish list of benefits on the way and a Board of Regents whose members' voting habits retain the consistency of the weekly PowerBall results, students would be wise to keep a close eye on those who have orchestrated this exercise in futility. Rest assured, they'll be back again next fall with empty pockets, upturned hands and the same snake-oil sales pitch.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thornberry's use of airport defies political stance

Repeatedly during his first term in office, Dean Thornberry has stated that he doesn't believe socialism is an appropriate model for Iowa City. How ironic, then, that he utilizes one of the most socialistic aspects of our local government — the Iowa City Municipal Airport. Funded with tax dollars and utilized overwhelmingly by those with enough money to buy and fly planes, the airport represents the worst kind of socialism — for the wealthy.

David Martin
Iowa City

Out with incumbents, in with Kanner, Major, Pfab, Wilburn

Issues in the City Council election include neighborhood preservation, large-user water rates, cemetery expansion into Hickory Hill Park, parking and transportation, affordable housing, human rights, urban sprawl, violation of a citizen mandate on the First Avenue extension, the establishment of a weak Citizens Police Review Board (and a later gutting of what little authority it had), the millions spent on downtown improvements (some of which were necessary, some of which were not), the failure to support our fine, free Public Library, the often displayed arrogance of the city manager to citizens who come before the council, the council's annual votes to increase the city manager's salary, the demeanor of some council members to other council members and, finally, the demeanor exhibited by some councilors to those who come before them in public to express themselves.

Councilors running for re-election need to be held accountable for their participation in these issues. Incumbents running for re-election have an amazing ability to make their votes of four years appear reasonable and in the interests of everyone. It is, however, impossible to satisfy the interests of everyone equally. If your interests have not been satisfactorily addressed, if you have been dismissed out of hand by the council and city manager, if you believe that monied interests have been met, but the little guy — you — has been slighted, then vote in this election.

I encourage you to vote for Steven Kanner, Charles Major, Irvin Pfab and Ross Wilburn.

Vanderhoef the best choice

I write to encourage voters to support Dee Vanderhoef for re-election to the Iowa City City Council. Vanderhoef has proven that she can work with many different groups, listen carefully to people's opinions, and then make a decision. Her decisions are based on her commitment to balance the needs of the city, the wishes of citizens and the city's financial resources. She has gained valuable experience as a representative of Iowa City on regional, state and national boards.

Frank Simon

Student apathy must give way to local political participation

It is difficult to tell whether the queasiness, the cold sweats or the fever that I have been experiencing lately are due to the onset of flu season or the abundance of Dean Thornberry election signs on local lawns.

In either case, it is clear that this year's Iowa City City Council campaigns are in full swing, and Thornberry is but one of several candidates seeking office or re-election for the next term. Two current members — Karen Kubby and Dee Norton — are relinquishing their spots, and with several vacancies to fill, the current council will be receiving a major facelift on Nov. 2.

The loss of Kubby is especially profound, meanwhile, because it threatens to create a liberal void in a council that has grown increasingly conservative over the past couple of terms. The council, with the exception of Kubby, has consistently kept commercial interests at heart while the opinions of concerned citizens have been muted.

Currently, the City Council is looking for a way to commence the extension of First Avenue through an area bordering Iowa City's only respectable park, Hickory Hill. This plan could threaten the balance of nature in the area and was overwhelmingly disapproved of when put to a public vote two years ago.

The makeup of this council came about not because of how Iowa Citizens have voted, though, but rather because of who has voted. Older residents and property owners appreciative of the council's support of industrial progress in the face of environmental decay have made their voices and votes heard the loudest over the years, while Iowa City's famed left-leaning quotient has not been able to stem the tide.

The X-factor, meanwhile, is a portion of Iowa City residents that have mainly ignored the process altogether — UI students. As a group of more than 20,000 eligible voters, we make up one of the largest voting blocs in Iowa City, a subpopulation of voters that has heretofore remained virtually untapped. It goes almost without saying that the sway of a local election can be determined by only a fraction of a voting group as large as the student population.

But what should we, as students, care about local politics if we won't be sticking around Iowa City for long, anyway? A solid argument, to be sure, but not one that is easily justified. The same, after all, could be said for any local resident who might end up moving out of town.

Do senior citizens abstain from voting because their health might fail them a couple of years down the line? Of course not. They vote in larger proportions than any other demographic group because they recognize the impact that their votes can have in both the short and long term.

Which is exactly why we should do the same. If our predecessors at the UI had hit the ballot box in 1995 and voted against such candidates as Thornberry, Lehman and Vanderhoef, perhaps the City Council might not have helped bolster the police force to a record-high 75 officers and sent them out after our publicly intoxicated souls.

Thornberry and Vanderhoef are up for re-election, and they are confident that the student population will be too busy with its binge drinking to take the time to vote against them and their misguided initiatives. There are a few candidates this year who, if elected, could prove to be beneficial for Iowa City as well as the student population.

Ross Wilburn, a social work instructor at the UI, is a solid choice in District A because of his tireless efforts to stay in touch with local issues and the help he has given younger people. This is Wilburn's third City Council run, and one should hope that it turns out to be a charm.

Irvin Pfab, who is opposing Thornberry in District C, is committed to issues that affect all Iowa City residents, not merely business and property owners. Steven Kanner and Charlie Major in the At-Large ballot are good alternatives to Vanderhoef and Tim Borchardt and can certainly heed the citizens' voices that have been ignored by a council that has been preoccupied with matters of business interest for the past four years.

It is imperative that all students who are registered to vote in Iowa City go out and do so on Nov. 2. This should not be done simply out of each's own self-interest but for the common good of the city that we live in.

Robert Kennedy once said, "The cruelties and obstacles of this swiftly changing planet will not yield to the obsolete dogmas and outworn slogans; they cannot be moved by those who cling to a present that is already dying, who prefer the illusion of security to the excitement and danger that come with even the most peaceful progress..."

Next Tuesday, UI students have an opportunity to flex their collective voting muscle and usher in candidates with effective and positive agendas — candidates who recognize that students, as well as property owners, have a strong stake in Iowa City's political scene.

Bauhaus film to be an eye-opener

The Museum of Art show hopes to increase people's understanding of and appreciation for architecture.

By T.J. Besler
The Daily Iowan

In an attempt to help people "open their eyes" to the architecture around them, the film Bauhaus: The Face of the 20th Century will be shown in the UI Museum of Art today at 12:30 p.m.

The film examines the development of Bauhaus and its key figures, including Walter Gropius, Mies van der Rohe, László Moholy-Nagy, Paul Klee, Lyonel Feininger, Wassily Kandinsky, Marcel Breuer and Josef Albers, as well as their works during the political unrest and economic chaos of Germany's Weimar Republic.

Bauhaus is an art movement that started in the city of Weimar in 1919. It has maintained a distinct idea of what architecture should be and is often described as a "school of design thought."

Emily Vermillion, curator of education for the Museum of Art, said there is more than one reason this film is being shown.

one or two films that are related to exhibitions," she said. "I also try to make sure that it is something that the audience will find interesting. This is a new film, so it hasn't been widely seen, and I thought that the audience would find it interesting."

Vermillion also said the film could help to open people's eyes to the importance of the architecture surrounding them and to learn how to appreciate it.

"I think that many times, many people take for granted all the architecture that is around us," she said.

Although Bauhaus started in the aftermath of World War I, it is still relevant to society today.

"This movement influenced many of the buildings that we see today, such as schools, libraries and many other institutional buildings," she said.

The film features numerous experts on the Bauhaus movement, architectural historians and former students from the Bauhaus.

It contains archival footage of the Bauhaus at Dessau, where the school moved in 1925 because of opposition to its ideas in Weimar from right-wing politicians. The film also looks at the architecture of Chicago, most of which is influenced by van der Rohe. Eminent American architect Philip Johnson also explains the influence of Bauhaus in his own work.

Vermillion said even if people don't feel that they know enough about the subject to truly understand or appreciate it, they shouldn't be discouraged from seeing the film.

"You don't need to know anything about architecture to see this film," she said. "It's meant to open your eyes, to make you see things and think of things in ways you might not have. At the very least, hopefully, it will help someone appreciate the environment a little more."

The showing of the 50-minute film is part of the weekly Perspectives series held every Wednesday at the museum. Admission is free.

ARTS BRIEF

All of us are primates, but there's only one Jane Goodall

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a world of tumult and fast-talkers, Jane Goodall's serenity is beguiling.

The scientist and symbol of animal protection, who considers the African forest as much a place of worship as any cathedral, knows her gentle spirit is one reason why people are drawn to her and her cause.

After viewing PBS' "Jane Goodall: Reason for Hope," it's clear that she is, among other things, a marvel of quiet determination. The hour-long program, airing at 7 p.m. today, is narrated by actor Harrison Ford.

Filmed in Tanzania, England, Paris and San Francisco, the documentary examines Goodall's childhood, her rookie years as a researcher, her emergence as the world's leading primatologist and the personal life she managed to squeeze in.

"Reason for Hope" also looks at the spiritual fulfillment Goodall finds in nature, in the Gombe Stream Reserve, which became her home nearly 40 years ago and in which she raised her own family as she observed families of chimpanzees.

Hopscoching America with the added task of promoting the PBS film and her new book of the same name, Goodall had landed on a recent day in Salina, Kan., at the Rolling Hills Refuge Wildlife Conservation Center.

How does the 65-year-old, whose ponytail and slim figure give her an air of perpetual youth, endure her vagabond life?

"I've just decided it must be because I'm doing the right thing. I feel I'm on a mission, if you like," she said.

Questions at quarterback remain

By Mike Kelly
The Daily Iowan

After having one of the best passing days in Iowa history, Scott Mullen still is not the definite starter for Iowa's game against Ohio State Saturday.

Iowa's depth chart lists "Reiners or Mullen" as the starting quarterback.

Kirk Ferentz is ambiguous when it comes to discussing his starting quarterback, and downplays the importance of who the starter is. He said the term "quarterback controversy" is a term created by the media.

Mullen

"I am not one to coddle anyone," Ferentz said of his treatment of the Hawkeyes' quarterbacks. "To me, they are just another player, albeit a more visible one. Maybe I'm just an old offensive line coach, but no one ever talks about a right guard controversy."

Ferentz said Randy Reiners will try and practice this week after a neck injury kept him out of Saturday's loss to Indiana. He said he would like to have Reiners be able to put in a full week of practice before the game against the No. 21 Buckeyes.

When asked what decision he would make if he was the coach, Mullen said it would be a tough call, even after he threw for 426 yards in place of Reiners.

"It's a tough choice for anyone to make," Mullen said. "If you look at it that way, (benching a player that threw for 426 yards), it would be tough. But Randy is a guy that has played hard all year and kept us in a lot of games."

Ferentz said he and his coaching staff have no set policy regarding players losing their jobs to injuries. He said sometimes the replacement players do a great job and displace the injured players.

Free safety Shane Hall replaced Matt Stockdale after he was injured against Nebraska and has started ever since.

"I don't have a set policy on that one," Ferentz said. "Things tend to work themselves out."

Minnesota bans men's basketball team from postseason

The Golden Gophers will not be allowed to participate in the NCAA or NIT, but can play in the Big Ten tournament.

By Gregg Aamot
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Minnesota will hold its men's basketball team out of postseason play for one year because of alleged academic cheating in the program, school president Mark Yudof said Tuesday.

The university also is placing the program on probation for an unspecified length of time, Yudof said. That will mean higher levels of reporting to the NCAA such as periodic self-studies and compliance checks, he said.

An investigation into the men's basketball program began in March after former tutor Jan Gangelhoff claimed she did more than 400 pieces of course work for at least 20 basketball players from 1993 to 1998.

The investigation has since widened to include accusations of improper payments and travel irregularities, and alleged sexual and other misconduct in the men's athletics department.

Yudof said the university and the NCAA may impose more sanctions after the final university report is completed, probably by Nov. 10. The report is expected to be made public about 10 days later.

Yudof

Yudof said he realized some current basketball team members may feel the sanctions are unfair, but said, "We must demonstrate good faith and take meaningful action to repair the damage that has been done by others."

In response to a question about the difficulty of self-imposing sanctions, Yudof called it "the right thing to do."

"The NCAA has to worry about deterrents. I have to worry about deterrents in the future."

The postseason ban includes the NCAA and NIT but not the Big Ten tournament, Yudof said.

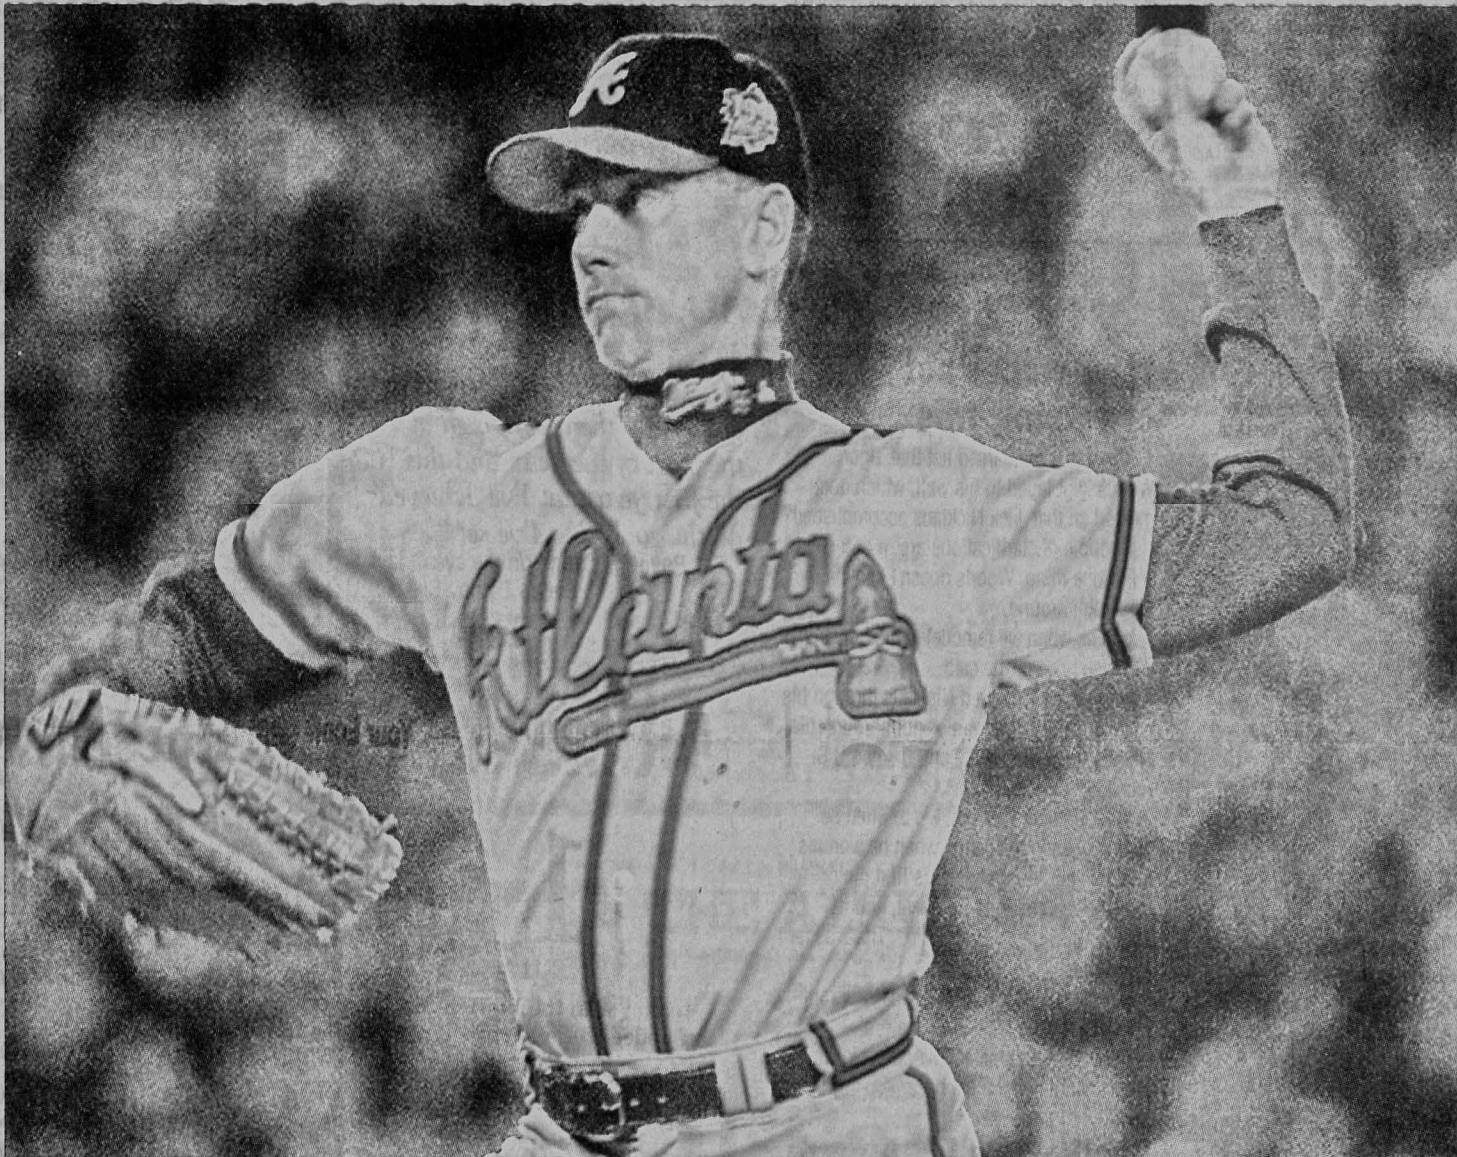

Gangelhoff, the woman who sparked the investigation, left her job at a casino in Danbury, Wis., to listen to the university's news conference on her car radio.

"I think it's just the beginning," Gangelhoff said. "President Yudof must have enough information to realize these two things (sanctions) were going to happen regardless of whether or not he has the complete report in hand."

NCAA spokeswoman Jane Jankowski said the organization

WORLD SERIES • GAME THREE • YANKEES 6, BRAVES 5

Eric Draper/Associated Press

Braves starting pitcher Tom Glavine delivers a pitch during the first inning of Game 3 of the World Series against the Yankees Tuesday in New York.

Braves find rhythm, lose it

After gaining a 5-1 lead, Atlanta fell to the Yankees and now trail the series 3-0.

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK — One to go. Chad Curtis hit his second home run leading off the 10th inning and the New York Yankees beat the Atlanta Braves 6-5 Tuesday night to move within one victory of another World Series sweep.

Just when everything seemed to be going Atlanta's way in Game 3, the Yankees still found a way to win.

Curtis homered in the fifth to begin their comeback from a 5-1 deficit, and homers by Tino Martinez and Chuck Knoblauch off Tom Glavine tied it.

Then in the 10th, Curtis sent a 1-1 pitch from Mike Remlinger far over the left-field fence for the Yankees' 11th straight World Series victory. It was the first game-ending homer in the Series since Joe Carter's Game 6 shot won it all for Toronto in 1993.

Roger Clemens, who joined the Yankees this spring in hopes of winning his first World Series ring, gets a chance to close it out in Game 4 tonight against John Smoltz.

Mariano Rivera, Mr. Automatic in October, pitched two innings for the victory. He has not allowed a run in his last 41 2-3 innings, and has a postseason streak of 24 1-3 scoreless innings.

While the Braves lost their seventh straight Series game, the Yankees moved within one victory of tying the longest winning streak ever. The record was set by their Murderers' Row teams of 1927, 1928 and 1932.

Up until the Yankees turned from singles hitters into the Bronx Bombers, the Braves were in control.

Glavine, scratched from his Game 1 start because of the flu, fortified himself with a plate of ravioli and pitched like a two-time Cy Young Award winner. And Atlanta looked every bit like the team that led the majors with 103 wins.

Players find it hard to grasp Stewart's death as real

PGA players are in Houston awaiting the start of the Tour Championship, and are struggling with the fact that Payne Stewart will not join them.

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

HOUSTON — The conditions at Champions Golf Club could not have been more glorious Tuesday. The sun was shining, only a trace of breeze. The silence was broken only by the rap of a putter on the practice green.

"A dreary day," said John Huston, summing up a somber mood as the 29 players in the Tour Championship tried to cope with the shocking death of U.S. Open champion Payne Stewart.

Flags were at half-staff. Smiles were hard to find.

Tiger Woods felt a void when he watched the developments unfold on television Monday, the Learjet with Stewart and five others aboard flying uncontrolled across the heartland, only a matter of time before it plowed into the earth.

It hit Woods even harder when he flew to Houston that night and picked up the pro-am pairing. His tee time was 9 a.m. The slot below, which once held Stewart's name, was blank.

"That was a rude awakening," Woods said. "You think that hopefully it was a bad dream, a nightmare ... but unfortunately, it came true. It's hard to believe he's not going to be here."

A memorial service for Stewart will be at 11 a.m. Friday at the First Baptist Church of Orlando (Fla.). The PGA Tour altered the schedule to give players a chance to attend.

Young likely headed for injured reserve due to latest concussion

Steve Young's agent said he and Young's doctor do not intend to let the 49ers quarterback return to the field this season.

By Dennis Georgatos
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Steve Young appears headed for the injured reserve list because of persistent post-concussion symptoms, a move that would finish his season and could signal the end of his career.

No formal decision has been made yet, but the agent for the San Francisco 49ers quarterback said Tuesday he doesn't intend to let Young play again this year and apparently the team and Young's doctors feel the same way.

"I'm determined he not risk anything more this year," Leigh Steinberg said in an interview with San Francisco's KCBS radio. "He's probably going to end up on injured reserve. This is a football injury. He was hurt on the field and that's where those players go.

"But the news is not encouraging. It's not real cheery. Obviously, to show symptoms this many weeks later is not a positive sign."

The 38-year-old Young is expected to discuss his condition and status with the team today in a meeting with the media. It's his first such meeting in two weeks since word surfaced that his primary neurologist, Dr. Gary Steinberg, who is unrelated to the agent, had made a long-term recommendation about whether Young should play again.

"I think he'll be able to clear some things up, be a little more definitive," coach Steve Mariucci said. "Is anything drastic going to happen? No."

While Dr. Steinberg's opinion hasn't been disclosed, Young has conceded the report was "discouraging" and his agent has said that the initial medical opinion has been reaffirmed in consultations with other specialists.

Young continues to speak with some of his contemporaries who were forced out of the game by repeated concussions, including Al Toon and Merrill Hoge. He's also gathering more medical advice and may see another specialist this week but Mariucci and general manager Bill Walsh have both said that they would give greatest weight to Dr. Steinberg's conclusions and they are in no hurry to see Young back on the field.

Charity event canceled, but senior event still on

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A charity golf event scheduled Tuesday was canceled in Payne Stewart's honor, but the Pacific Bell Senior Classic will go on as scheduled, a spokesman said.

"The tournament office received many calls from golf fans wondering if the event was going to proceed," Toby Zwickel said. "We're taking our direction from the Senior PGA Tour, which has determined that the competition will go on as scheduled."

The Ray Floyd Charity Challenge was called off after the Senior PGA Tour and PGA Tour canceled all events scheduled for Tuesday — a day after Stewart, the U.S. Open champion, was killed in a plane crash.

Floyd, Joe Inman, Dana Quigley and Billy Casper were scheduled to play in the five-hole charity match.

Pro-am competition will begin as scheduled this morning at the Wilshire Country Club, site of the 54-hole tournament that starts Friday. Among the 78 golfers entered are Hale Irwin, Bruce Fleisher, Allen Doyle, Gil Morgan, Larry Nelson, Lee Trevino, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Gary Player.

A memorial service in memory of Stewart will be conducted by John Huffman, presidential minister and pastor of the Andrews Presbyterian Church in Newport Beach, Calif., on the 18th green following Friday's first round.

HOUSTON — Competition in two PGA Tour events will be postponed Friday because of a memorial service for Payne Stewart, the U.S. Open champion killed Monday in a plane crash.

The Tour Championship in Houston, a $5 million event for the top 30 players on the money list, will start Thursday with 27 holes. Another 27 holes will be played on Saturday, with the an 18-hole final round on Sunday.

In the Southern Farm Bureau Classic at Madison, Miss., 18-hole rounds are scheduled Thursday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

The Tour Championship needs to end by Sunday because of travel plans. The entire field is eligible for the World Golf Championship event next week in Spain.

The tour said the Senior PGA Tour event in Los Angeles will retain its normal Friday-Sunday schedule.

Stewart's memorial service will be 11 a.m. Friday at the First Baptist Church in Orlando, Fla.

Brief services are planned at both PGA

Tour stops — at 7:45 a.m. Thursday on the No. 1 tee at Champions Golf Club in Houston, and a private service at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Jackson, Miss.

Brewers release Hideo Nomo

MILWAUKEE — Hideo Nomo, the Japanese right-hander who rejuvenated his career after signing a minor league contract with the Milwaukee Brewers, has been released, as provided under terms of the deal, general manager Dean Taylor said Tuesday.

The 31-year-old Nomo, who becomes a free agent, gave the Brewers pitching staff a welcome shot in the arm, winning six of his first seven decisions and nine of his first 11. He finished 12-8 with a 4.54 ERA in 28 starts.

The Brewers took a chance on Nomo in late April, after he was released by the Chicago Cubs. He had been waived earlier by the New York Mets.

Nomo, a former NL rookie of the year, pitched the four previous seasons with the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Mets.

Men finish fall season

■ The Iowa men's golf team finished in ninth place Tuesday.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

The UI men's golf team closed out the fall portion of its season by finishing in ninth place at Money Hill Country Club in Abita Springs, La., at the Deep South Intercollegiate on Tuesday.

Coach Terry Anderson's squad fired a final round 293, to go along with rounds on Monday of 295 and 293 for a final score of 891.

Southeastern Louisiana, which led the tournament from start to finish, defended its title by holding on to a commanding 11-stroke lead. The Lions finished with a team score of 853 by placing three golfers in the top 11, including tournament champion Jacques Chevallier, who turned in a score of 210 for the event.

Jason Wombacher, who has consistently been one of Iowa's top finishers late in the season, led the team by shooting a final day round of 72. He finished the tournament tied for 22nd place with a final score of 220. Adam Turner, who also shot a final round 72, finished tied for 27th place, one stroke behind Wombacher, with a 221. Matt Stutzman finished with a score of 74 for a total of 222. Tyler Stith and Bo Anderson rounded out the Iowa scorecard by firing rounds of 76 and 75, respectively, to finish with scores of 224 and 225.

The Hawkeyes finish the fall portion of their season with no victories to show for their efforts, but Anderson said he believes the team showed signs of improvement late in the season which he hopes will roll over into the spring.

Cyclone wrestlers excited about being No. 1

■ ISU coach Bobby Douglas said Iowa will remain NCAA favorites, but his team hopes to play the role of the spoiler.

By Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

Sanderson Heskett

AMES — Take it from Cael Sanderson and Joe Heskett. That No. 1 ranking for Iowa State's wrestling team is right on the money.

"Our team is just unbelievable when you look at the lineup," Sanderson said Tuesday at the team's media day. "It's going to be hard not to have a great season."

Sanderson is one reason all the preseason rankings have Iowa State at the top. He went 38-0 in winning the NCAA championship at 184 pounds last season and became the first freshman to be named the outstanding wrestler at the NCAA meet.

There's plenty of other talent as well.

Heskett finished third at 165 pounds as a freshman and went 38-1. Sanderson's brother, Cody, was an All-American at 133 and Zach Thompson earned All-America honors at 197. Plus, heavy-weight Trent Hynek is back after a redshirt season. He was the NCAA runner-up in 1998.

Those veterans are joined by Arizona State transfer Matt Azevedo at 125 and 141-pound Sonny Marchette, a teammate of Heskett's in high school and a national junior college champion last season.

"In my opinion, it's definitely the best team in the country," Heskett said. "All of them have already proven themselves. We just need to take it one step at a time and never get too far ahead of ourselves and stay focused. If we do that, everything should fall into place."

Heskett also noted that the Cyclones won't be satisfied just being No. 1 in the rankings.

"This team's goal is to win a national championship," he said. "So until that happens, we can be number one, we can be number 100, the fact is we want to end with ... the big ... trophy."

Coach Bobby Douglas, starting his eighth season at Iowa State, said he has figured that defending champion Iowa should rate as a slight favorite for the national title because of its experience.

But Douglas said he can find nothing bad about being ranked No. 1 going into the season.

"It may turn out to be a negative, but being ranked number one certainly hasn't hurt our program. Our guys haven't slowed down a step," he said.

"I think if you go on campus and you get in the community, you feel kind of an electricity about the program now. They're the talk of the town. Everybody's talking about the wrestling team. Everybody's talking about the match with Iowa and the potential of winning a national title."

The Iowa State-Iowa meet is Dec. 10 at Hilton Coliseum.

British back White House on drug agency

■ The quest continues to fight the use of performance-enhancing drugs.

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

LONDON — Britain will back the U.S. proposal for a drug agency that is not controlled by the International Olympic Committee.

Barry McCaffrey, head of the White House drug policy office, is touring Europe to build support for an independent international agency to lead the fight against performance-enhancing drugs.

McCaffrey opposes the IOC's plans for such an agency, contending it would lack independence and accountability. But the IOC said Tuesday it plans to set up its agency next month and have it operating by the end of the year.

In a joint statement after a two-day meeting in London with British anti-drugs coordinator Keith Hellawell, Britain endorsed McCaffrey's five principles:

— an independent and accountable anti-drug agency.

— testing on a year-round, no-notice basis.

— no statute of limitations for drug offenses.

— preservation of samples so they can be tested years later when new detection techniques are developed.

— advanced research.

McCaffrey will present his plan in Belgium today to the European Commission. On Thursday, he will meet in Portugal with drug policy officials of the 15 European Union countries.

"If we don't act, we're going to have a Swiss corporation, the International Olympic Committee, assert that they can unilaterally decide on a drug-testing agency that won't in fact be independent and probably won't achieve the results and won't have credibility with the world's athletes," he said.

McCaffrey said the agency will only be independent if it has "the ability to act without being a wholly owned subsidiary to the IOC."

He said he expects support from Britain, France, Germany, Canada and Australia at a 26-nation drug summit in Australia next month.

Players put trust in each of Iowa's three quarterbacks times against Indiana. Players and coaches alike say the influx of passing in the game was a combination of what the Indiana defense was giving them, and partly because they were losing the football game.

Ferentz said the move towards the spread offense was not something that would continue in an ideal situation.

All season, Ferentz has stressed an offensive combination of running and passing the ball. He said he felt his team was not ready to run a wide-open offense, as well.

Wide receiver Kevin Kasper said throwing the ball as much as Iowa did Sunday was a dream come true for wideouts, but games like that do not happen every week.

As for the quarterback situation, Kasper reiterated points that were made at the beginning of fall practice when the quarterback spot was up for grabs. He said all three quarterbacks were capable and brought different qualities to the table.

"They all throw the ball down field and chances are it will be a spiral," Kasper said. "It is not too hard to adjust to the changes because all we have to do is catch it."

Stewart's absense leaves void

The Tour Championship will begin with 27 holes on Thursday, have another 27 holes on Saturday and conclude Sunday with an 18-hole round.

"The tournament should go on," Woods said. "But obviously, it's not going to be an easy week. It's going to be tough."

It clearly wasn't an easy day. While the pro-am was canceled, 22 players kept their date with four amateur partners. It was a form of therapy for some, although they played with no emotion and even less focus. Stewart, his quick wit, loose swing and colorful knickers, was never far from their minds.

"I'm walking down the fairway and occasionally I get a few flashes in my head of Payne and some of the memories I have," Woods said. "Everyone is going through that. It is just a matter of dealing with it and coming to the peace and understand that he is in a better place right now."

He will be paired with David Duval, No. 2 on the money list, for the first time this year. Big deal. "I think it will be difficult to be focused on what you're doing," Duval said. "I don't know how spectacular the golf will be."

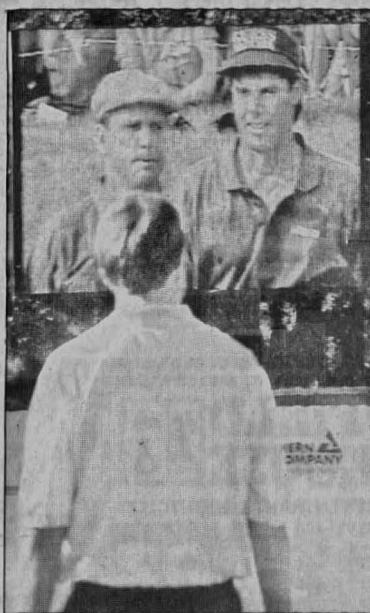

Duval was among a dozen or so players at Champions on Monday for a practice round. Mike Hicks, Stewart's caddy, was stepping off the yardage on the course when he was summoned to the phone.

"I don't think today was any easier, but yesterday was the worst part about it all," Duval said. "I think today was just trying to get a grasp of it being real."

The flags were a constant reminder how real it was. If that wasn't enough, PGA Tour officials were making black ribbons for players and caddies to wear as a tribute to Stewart.

"It's hard to think about playing a tournament," Huston said. "It doesn't seem worth it." Across the Atlantic Ocean, the American flag flew at half-staff at St. Andrews. At the European tour stop in Germany, players were in the same frame of mind — shocked by the tragedy, trying to find words to describe a competitor and friend.

Woods took questions for about 20 minutes, the toughest part of his day. "To have him gone ... it is really difficult to refer to him right now in the past tense," he said. "That's the hardest thing for me right now, when I talk about it."

would not comment specifically on the sanctions. But she said it is appropriate and common for schools to come up with their own punishments.

"Universities do frequently hand down their own penalties, and our (investigating) committee considers that and can adopt those sanctions, as well as add other penalties," she said.

Coach Clem Haskins resigned in June and accepted a $1.5 million buyout of his contract. He has said he had no knowledge of any academic cheating in the basketball program. Dan Monson of Gonzaga was hired to replace Haskins.

Asked whether anyone may lose their job because of the investigation, Yudof said maybe. "I don't want to presage what might come out in the report," he said.

One reason to come out with sanctions now was to improve team morale, Yudof said. Monson agreed.

"For the staff and our team, it's the beginning of the end," Monson said.

Monson said he would be open with prospective players about the sanctions, which he and Yudof acknowledged would hurt recruiting. However, if they end after one year, they may not have as great an impact, Monson said.

Yudof said the NCAA is supposed to have an infraction hearing next spring and could issue sanctions then or wait until the fall.
