V-Day arrives for Iowa City council election

City Council will be revamped today after the election of four councilors.

By Corrie Dosh
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City residents will choose four city councilors today in the general election — a culmination of a month of campaigning by the eight candidates after a disappointing turnout in the primary election on Oct. 5.

Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett said he expects voter turnout to be average in today's election. There were 2,116 early votes cast this year, compared with 1,653 early votes in the last City Council election, in 1997.

"The numbers look comparable with the last city election," Slockett said. In the 1997 election, 9,200 people voted (approximately 26 percent).

Slockett said the more typical numbers are a relief after the record-low turnout in the primary election. One of the reasons turnout may be better today is that all residents can vote in the district races, he said.

In a primary election, district candidates are only voted on by the residents in their precincts, but in a general election, residents select candidates for all the available seats.

"I think that increases the level of interest," Slockett said. "Voters are more aware of candidates and the issues."

Even with more people coming out to vote today, Slockett said, he doesn't expect students to show up in great numbers.

"Students have, unfortunately, never participated in any kind of significant numbers for a local election," he said. "I would certainly be pleasantly surprised if they did. We all should share the goal of active citizenship and participation in democracy."

UI senior Melanie Clark said she hasn't followed the City Council races closely enough to vote.

"I'm not going to vote because I'm not really that informed about them, and it wouldn't be right," she said.

Clark said she was registered to vote in Iowa City at one time but has since switched back to her hometown of Waterloo.

"I gave that up until I can get into a more stable environment," she said.

UI junior Ben Sparrow said he has

Law school gets leeway with military

A change in legislation lets U.S. law schools have more freedom when dealing with recruiters.

By Michael Chapman
The Daily Iowan

Changes to the Solomon Amendment will give the UI College of Law more freedom in its decisions on how to work with military recruiters.

Under legislation President Clinton signed on Oct. 25, law schools are no longer required to have military recruiters on their campuses in order to prevent the loss of federal funds, said a recent article in the Chronicle of Higher Education.

The legislation is an addition to the Solomon Amendment, a federal law that required military recruiters to be allowed in all law schools. Those schools refusing would have lost substantial amounts of money in programs such as work studies and grants.

UI President Mary Sue Coleman said the changes to the amendment won't have much effect on the UI campus due to the history of the relationship between military recruiters and the law school.

"I think the law school has always taken the stance that military recruiters can recruit on campus and in the law school and still respect the wishes of the law school and faculty," she said. "I haven't spoken with the law faculty since the most recent ruling, so I can't speak for law faculty, but we've been able to work it out in the past."

Before the Solomon Amendment took effect, the law school worked

I think it can be an invasion of your time. You're here to learn, not to be recruited or patronized.

— Justin Fox, UI law student with the military in recruitment, said N. William Hines, dean of the law school.

"Prior to the Solomon Amendment, we had a long-standing working accommodation with the various military services," he said. "They would meet law students over in the ROTC center instead of the law building."

But when Congress approved the amendment in 1997, the law school was forced to let recruiters into the building.

"We took a look at it and saw that we were going to lose a lot of financial aid for other students if we didn't comply with the Solomon Amendment, so we made the decision to let them in," Hines said.

Members of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Union say having a military presence on campus is an intrusion on their rights because the military is blatant about its policy against homosexuals.

"I don't think that the military has a right to do that," said Cathy Berry, a UI senior and an executive board member of the union. "It's totally

Love, sex & the telltale heart

Marriage rates in the United States have plummeted to a 40-year low, and divorce rates are rising, according to recent studies. Experts say that college students are more cynical than ever about their chances of finding marital bliss.

In today's issue, The Daily Iowan takes an in-depth look at the issues surrounding sex, love and marriage on the UI campus.

By Avian Carrasquillo
The Daily Iowan

When UI senior Lisa Payne's parents divorced while she was in high school, her views on marriage changed dramatically.

"I didn't let their divorce bother me, but it has definitely changed the way I see a marriage," she said. "I would not make the same mistakes they made by not compromising and going to counseling."

Couples living together before marriage and higher divorce rates are more common now than in the past. Payne said her parents' decision affected her in that she plans not to marry as early as her parents did.

"I want to wait until I'm older and more established in a career," she said.

Failed marriages seem to be on the rise, Payne said, estimating that about one-third of her friends' parents are divorced.

According to a 1999 study by the National Marriage Project at Rutgers University, there has been a dramatic decline in marriage, and it is more difficult for couples to achieve long-term marital bliss. The study reported that nearly 50 percent of marriages in the United States are projected to end in divorce or permanent separation.

UI students' views are a little more optimistic: A recent survey of 254 students conducted by The Daily Iowan shows that only 13.5 percent said they expected to be married more than once.

Robin Simon, a UI assistant professor of sociology, said the divorce rate has increased over the second part of the 20th century.

"I think that the trend in marriage is people marry and have enormous expectations for emotional need, and when those needs aren't met, the marriage fails," Simon said.

UI sophomore Jaclyn Adler and UI junior Bernie Isacovici, who have been dating for two and a half years, said that though the subject of marriage has yet to come up between them, they are satisfied with their present situation.

"I haven't thought too much about the topic of marriage, but I

5th sex assault reported on campus

On Oct. 28, an anonymous report of sexual abuse at Burge Residence Hall was reported.

By Gil Levy
The Daily Iowan

An anonymous report of sexual abuse was made to the UI Department of Public Safety on Oct. 28, bringing the total of such reports to five since the beginning of the semester — almost half of the 11 that were reported during the last school year.

The assault was reported shortly after 8 a.m. at Burge Residence Hall. Public Safety received few details, and there will not be an investigation, said Public Safety Capt. Duane Papke.

"It was not a third-party report," he said. "The survivor does not want anything done."

A sexual assault is often reported by a concerned third party, when the victim will not come forward but a concerned person wants the incident to be known, Papke said.

UI freshman and Burge resident Jennifer Laico said she would like to say she'd report a sexual assault, but it would depend on the situation because the subject is so delicate.

"It's really hard to come forward," she said. "They have to heal in their own way, in their own time. They shouldn't

Searchers find wreckage of jet crash

Authorities rule out finding any survivors in the crash of the EgyptAir jetliner.

NEWPORT, R.I. — Coast Guard crews searching for clues in the crash of EgyptAir Flight 990 found the first large piece of wreckage Monday and detected a signal believed to be from one of the plane's "black boxes."

Approximately 80 grieving relatives arrived in Rhode Island as the Pentagon revealed that 30 Egyptian military officers were on board. Among the officers was at least one brigadier general, according to administration officials speaking on the condition of anonymity.

Because terrorism has not been ruled out, the FBI said it is sending bomb experts and other investigators to Newport. But authorities stressed there was no evidence of foul play.

"Nothing has been ruled in; nothing has been ruled out," President Clinton said in Oslo, Norway, where he was attending Middle East peace talks.

Paycheck glitches continue

■ Students say problems encountered Monday include wrong deductions and underpayment.

By Ryan Foley
The Daily Iowan

Despite the UI's efforts to eliminate the glitches in the payroll system that have affected hundreds of students this fall, several people reported problems after picking up their November paychecks Monday. Jennifer Sherer, the vice president of COGS, the graduate student union, said she spoke with approximately 30 students who encountered mistakes with their November paychecks.

Problems included wrong insurance and other deductions and underpayment in general — some of the same errors that occurred in the past two months.

Some students who hadn't had problems ran into some Monday, Sherer said. Others' past problems were compounded when the UI incorrectly fixed them, she said.

UI graduate student Mike Innis said his paycheck deducted insurance for four months when it was supposed to do so for three months. Also, he said, his union dues were not deducted even though they were deducted correctly in October.

"I'm frustrated at the program and not the people who work there," he said. "I realize it's not their fault."

The UI has blamed the problems on the switch to a new payroll software system for the first time in 30 years and to the relocation of the Payroll Office.

Sherer said COGS, which held a rally on Oct. 29 to address the paycheck problems, will again demand a solution.

"The question we're ready to raise now is, 'What is going to happen with the software?'" she said. "Someone needs to step forward and say why he or she chose this software system, why the implementation has been mishandled and what they're going to do about it."

Bob Foldesi, the director of UI human resources, said he has not received any complaints of people with paycheck mistakes Monday.

"We're working every day to make sure they get paid properly," he said. "It's hard to make such a big change (in software) overnight. The system has actually done remarkably well."

"I think this month, people will see a drastic improvement."

COGS e-mailed most of its members Monday to find out the number of people who were affected by paycheck problems.

But Sherer said COGS is having trouble reaching all its members by e-mail because the UI has not been able to provide the union with updated contact information due to the changed software. The UI is under contract to do so, she said.

COGS continues to try to help people on an individual basis to get their correct payments, Sherer said.

"We're helping people to get help," she said. "But the campus-wide problem is not taken care of."

Bradley girds for uphill battle

■ The Democratic presidential candidate says he's running against Al Gore's entrenched power.

By Steve Schmadeke
The Daily Iowan

DES MOINES — Democratic presidential candidate Bill Bradley acknowledged that it was an uphill battle in getting his supporters out to Iowa's Jan. 24, 2000, caucuses.

"I'm reaching out to labor and working families in order to counter his (Vice President Al Gore's) institutional support," Bradley said, "I'm running against entrenched power."

The remarks came Monday during a press conference in Des Moines for college newspaper reporters.

While recent Iowa polls show Bradley and Gore in a dead heat, Gore has received endorsements from national Democratic Party leaders, the politically influential AFL-CIO and Christie Vilsack, who is married to Gov. Tom Vilsack.

"All I have are the people and the programs to make this country right," Bradley said, comparing himself with Gore, who, he said, has President Clinton campaigning for him and arrives at campaign stops in Air Force Two.

A strong showing at the caucuses is "extremely important," said Arthur Miller, a UI political science professor. If Bradley does not live up to expectations, his campaign will lose momentum, and he will not appear able to win, Miller said.

Gore is ahead of the game, he said. "Basically, what's been done in Iowa is that Gore has won the loyalty of unions and traditional party activists," Miller said. "What Bradley needs to do is build a grassroots effort."

Yet Bradley, who is painting himself as an underdog, is taking a stance normally used by the front-runner when it comes to negative campaigning.

Bradley said he would save his "strength, outrage and ingenuity" for devising solutions for the nation's problems instead of responding in kind to Gore's attacks.

"I'm disappointed that the vice president has seen fit to attack," he said. However, he hinted that he may not remain above the fray forever. "If attacked enough, you have to respond."

Bradley said the press conference was a way of reaching out to college students, and he used the forum to speak on issues facing young adults.

He laid out his plans for education, which, like those of his opponent, puts an emphasis on early child education. Both Bradley and Gore also have proposed programs that would give graduating teachers money to teach in specific areas. Bradley also talked about making college loans easier to pay off so students are not "inundated with debt."

Bradley's Iowa campaign spokeswoman, Maureen Monahan, said the press conference was not intended as an easy sell for the candidate's agenda.

"We wanted them (college reporters) to have the opportunity to ask their questions," she said. "It wasn't to play up a message."

Coleman covers e-mail, payroll

■ The UI president also talks about the Save UI Web site and graduating in four years.

By Katie Bernard
The Daily Iowan

In her monthly interview with The Daily Iowan, UI President Mary Sue Coleman said she would like to implement a new UI mass e-mail policy that gives students the right to determine whether they receive specific mailings.

Coleman also spoke about the importance of reporting sexual assaults immediately and keeping UI Public Safety officers unarmed.

DI: What do you envision the new mass e-mail policy to be?

Coleman: I would like to see some kind of policy that will balance the fact that we are a public institution with people's right to turn it off if they don't want to see it. So, I would imagine that we will craft a policy that will create a way for people to say "No, I don't want to receive it." It gets a little difficult because there are some circumstances where we want to give information to students that would be helpful and make sure that they would get it, so we may be able to have particular areas able to be filtered.

DI: What actions do you think the UI needs to take to remedy the problems graduate students have experienced because of payroll problems?

Coleman: We're very concerned when people don't get paid and trying to correct that as quickly as possible. There are a variety of reasons for problems ... Regardless of what the problems are, we need to work as quickly as possible to remedy it because people need to get paid.

DI: At a recent faculty meeting the Save IWP Web page was asked to be removed. Do you foresee the same type of reaction to the new Save UI Web page?

Coleman: I haven't seen that page, and I think what I would encourage in any university community is that differences of opinion are fine, but I think anonymous Web sites don't help the discussion.

DI: Support for arming Public Safety officers at other universities has been increasing. Most recently, student government officials at the University of Northern Iowa have been in favor of arming officers. Do you feel that because UI is one of the largest universities without guns in the nation, that you would support arming officers?

Coleman: I don't. I have enormous respect for our Public Safety officers because they are skilled in understanding what the campus is like. Whenever there is a circumstance in which they need to call on the city police, we have a good relationship between the police and Public Safety. I think this has worked for us extremely well, so I'm not in favor of arming Public Safety officers.

DI: What steps would you suggest for students or university faculty who wish to improve the four-year graduation rate?

Coleman: Students have misconceptions about what I think about four-year graduation. I believe that if a student wants to graduate in four years, there should be no barriers in doing that. There are a lot of reasons why students don't graduate in four years — internships, study abroad — and I don't have any problem with that. I want faculty members and advisers to be helpful in allowing this to happen. At some point, when we get to the six-year graduation rate, it seems to me, the ultimate goal is to graduate.

DI: Are you looking forward to the Backstreet Boys being in town?

Coleman: I know they are very popular because I've heard a lot of excitement for them being here. It's a concert where a lot of people from campus will be there. Bringing a big-time group is a positive thing — it will be energizing for the campus."

A RAVE REVIEW for Lar Lubovitch's "Meadow"

MONDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1999

The New York Times

DANCE REVIEW
Rediscovering The Passion And Power Of the Duet

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

If there is anything like a slow whirlpool, its essence is captured in the quality with which Lar Lubovitch spins out "Meadow," the poetic, dreamlike work he has choreographed for American Ballet Theatre.

Set to a strange but effective mix of music by Schubert, Busoni and two contemporary composers, Gavin Bryars and John DeBrihn, "Meadow" more than fits the Friday night as a major premiere for the company.

Mr. Lubovitch's theater by his full-evening "Othello," is his best in pure-dance works with a strong regional, underground, "Meadow" is in this regard the central duet. "Meadow" is danced outstandingly by Ms. Roberts and Ms. Brown, may eventually have the same wide resonance as one of the best-known all-male duets in the world, the centerpiece of "Coberto 622," the Lubovitch work to Mozart that drew a shouting ovation at Carnegie Hall a decade ago.

"Meadow" is quieter in its metaphor, using a night sky to evoke love and loss. The springboard is a Schubert choral work, "Die Nacht," heard on tape but introduced and overlaid with live orchestral strings. This music, heard during the opening group section, is called "Pentimento" by Mr. DeBrihn, who wrote the "Meadow" as he did it, for Mr. Lubovitch.

For all the lyrical wavelike patterns in the opening and closing group passages, it is easy to understand the impact of the duet and the thunderclap applause that followed. Here is something new in the use of light between two bodies and in sharply contrasting the duet of tenderness and understated passion.

Mr. Bryars, the experimental composer of choice for many choreographers at the moment, has the right dream texture for the duet in his "Incipit: Vita Nova" (heard on tape). Everything is danced behind a screen, which contributes to the hazy aura.

The use of a lullaby turned into elegy is a brilliant dramatic stroke, and one wonders if the final image onstage is needed. Ms. Brown is lifted on her back by Mr. Roberts, her bent legs outlined as in an earlier passage. But this time she ascends to the heavens as pink petals rain down.

As show business it works. But more important is Mr. Lubovitch's inventiveness in the duet. One of those rare modern dancers to have been a professional ballet dancer, he has the harness of a ballerina for more than two minutes. Mr. Lubovitch moves easily between the ballet idiom and his own modern-dance vocabulary. This lexicon is rooted in the ballet, but derived from DeBrihn and Humphrey's teachings, but above all he is a master of partnering, once unexplored in modern dance, as the "New Star" duet shows so impressively.

"Night," the first section, introduces five couples in Ann Houliward's flesh-colored tops and turquoise skirts or loose pants. The chorus is heard through Mr. Brown's insistent buzz as individual dancers revolve or twist in ballet's fourth position (a Lubovitch signature).

If not stirring, this passage suggests the night sky against which Mr. Roberts and Ms. Brown are first seen alone. He holds her up in the babylike pose of the end of a ballet. But as they flow into sculptural embraces there are surprises. She cartwheels on his thigh, and there are numerous curves and twists as the dancers stretch away from each other. She is like clay molded in his hands. The overriding image is of static tension, with no contradiction. That is why the duet is so unusual.

"Song," the third and final section, is less so, but the counterpoint in the group patterns is polished, full of changes in direction. Ms. Brown and Mr. Roberts enter with more sweep and are encircled until Ms. Brown files up smoothly into her dubious transfiguration.

Bush slightly injured in mishap

■ The front-running Republican suffers minor injuries when a truck-trailer overturns.

By Michael Holmes
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Gov. George W. Bush, the front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination, sustained minor injuries to his right leg and hip Monday when he dived to avoid a truck trailer that overturned near his jogging path.

Bush was treated at the scene and later traveled to New Hampshire for a scheduled campaign swing, said Linda Edwards, Bush's press secretary.

Bush said he felt fine. "If I needed to, I could go out and run three miles," he said after arriving at the Berlin Airport in Milan, N.H.

Staff Sgt. Roscoe Hughey, a 39-year-old Texas Department of Public Safety agent who was accompanying Bush on a bicycle, received bruises to his left side, DPS spokeswoman Tela Mange said. He was treated at the Brackenridge Hospital emergency room and released approximately four hours later, said hospital spokeswoman Stephanie Elsea.

Bush was running on the hike-and-bike trail around Town Lake in downtown Austin when the accident occurred about 12:06 p.m., according to Edwards and the Austin Police Department.

A truck pulling a dumpster-like trailer was traveling on the street that parallels the jogging trail when the trailer overturned. Debris — including chunks of concrete and wood — were dumped across the jogging path.

"I was at the end of a three-mile run when I heard the noise, looked back, saw it start to tip, and my instincts were to dive," Bush said by telephone from New Hampshire.

He said he scraped his right leg and hip when he dived behind a bridge support but that he was not struck by debris from the truck.

"I've got a significant strawberry," Bush said.

He said he was pleased to learn that Hughey was not seriously injured.

"I'm very lucky and so is the DPS agent. I was very concerned about him," Bush said.

A witness, Ernest Bedford, 50, a pipeline inspector for the city who was working nearby, said he didn't hear any brakes squeal, just "a big, loud bang."

Bedford said he saw Bush in the clear but "the other guy was reaching his hand up out of the debris."

Bush used Hughey's cellular telephone to call DPS officials at the Governor's Mansion, and they called 911, Edwards said. "The governor stayed with Roscoe until he was in the ambulance," she said.

Hughey is a member of Bush's security detail.

Campaign spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said there was no reason to suspect that the driver intended to hit the governor.

"We're not clear what made it lose control, but the truck was out of control," Edwards said.

Austin police spokesman Kevin Buchman said the accident remained under investigation and that no charges had been filed as of Monday evening.

Refugees blocked at Chechen border

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Thousands of frightened refugees who have waited as long as a week to flee Chechnya were blocked at a key border point Monday as Russian artillery blasted a town a few miles away.

An estimated 200,000 people have fled Chechnya since Russia began air strikes on Sept. 5. Russia said its aim was to wipe out Islamic militants who twice this summer invaded Dagestan, the republic to the east. The militants also are blamed for deadly apartment explosions in Russia in September. Russia, which closed all its borders with Chechnya last week, reopened crossing points Monday on the border with Dagestan and Stavropol. Russia did not open vital crossing points into Ingushetia, though, and did not explain the reason.

"We are ready to let the refugees pass, but it is necessary to keep order," Col. Arkady Krinsky said.

Official calls attack on Serb leader 'terrorism'

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — The commander of the NATO-led peacekeeping force in Kosovo called an attack on a Serb leader "terrorism," and pledged Monday to crack down on increasing violence directed at the dwindling Serb population.

Gen. Klaus Reinhardt made his comments after Momcilo Trajkovic said he was shot in the thigh in his apartment Sunday night. NATO said two Kosovar men were being sought in connection with the attack.

Reinhardt said Monday "the criminal attack against a very respected politician like Trajkovic is unacceptable."

"This is terrorism," the German general said.

In an article titled "Students hope for real payday" (DI Nov. 1), UI graduate student Jen Tiernan should have been identified as a journalism graduate student. Tiernan said she does not have outstanding bills but is worried that the UI Hospitals and Clinics could send her a bill for services that are supposed to be covered under her insurance because no insurance deductions have been made from her paychecks.

SEX, LOVE & MARRIAGE

Looking better every beer

■ A DI survey finds that 47 percent of UI students have had one-night stands.

By Ryan Foley
The Daily Iowan

UI freshman Kristi Harshbarger says she saw an all-too-familiar scene last weekend while at a downtown bar.

"I saw two drunk people who had just met making out and all over each other," she said. "It was gross."

Some students believe that alcohol and the bar scene create a great potential for sexual activity for UI students.

"With all the binge drinking ... it's no surprise that alcohol consumption is related to having sex with strangers," said UI graduate student Kevin Belasco. "People do not make guarded efforts to prevent that from happening."

In a DI survey of 254 UI students, 57 percent said they have had sex with people whom they did not love and 47 percent have had one-night stands. The survey also found that 89 percent didn't think having sex before marriage is wrong.

Campus minister Jason Chen said the survey's results indicate the "new way" students view sex.

Chen, a minister since 1967, said the community is not as close as it was in the past. This evokes a desire for sex, he said, because people think it will bring a couple closer, which does not always happen.

"The media play an important role in creating this idea," he said. "You can't even watch television without seeing sex."

Many UI students and community members said they were not alarmed by the number of one-night stands by UI students.

Two factors primarily contribute to having such encounters, said UI freshman Sarah Dowsett.

"It's a combination of the alcohol and how they're dressed," she said. "Some women wear skimpy clothing to attract guys. Some guys might interpret that as 'Yeah, I want to have a one-night stand.'"

Some take precautions so that they as well as their friends are not taken advantage of after getting drunk.

"I make sure my friends don't go home with someone else, even if they are drunk and really want to go home with someone," said UI senior Ileana Buciu, noting the possibilities of being raped or catching STDs.

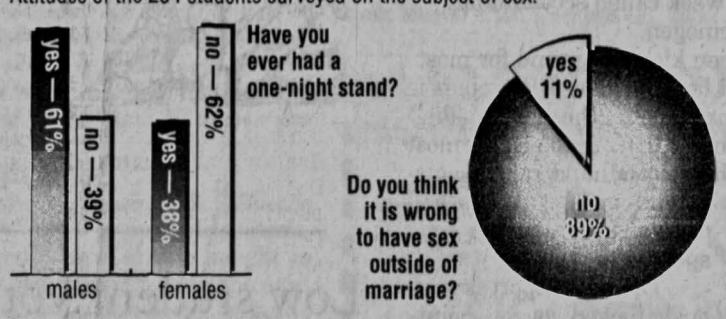

However, some students think their friends do not need protection in such situations.

"They're grownups," UI sophomore Jerry Krueger said. "If my buddy is really drunk and has his beer glasses on, maybe I'll stop him because I'd expect him to do the same thing for me."

Curt Dettman, a manager at the Fieldhouse Restaurant & Bar, 111 E. College St., said the age of college students rather than alcohol is to blame for casual sex.

Sexual feelings

"Alcohol might have something to do with it, but until a study says that, I'm going to blame it on the age group," he said. "They're going to have sex regardless."

Dettman said his bar tries to stop people from being taken advantage of by making sure the "visibly drunk" are sent home with their friends.

Cindy Cary, an advanced registered nurse practitioner at the Emma Goldman Clinic for Women, 227 N. Dubuque St., said that because most people are educated about sexually transmitted diseases, they are smart enough to use protection.

"People's sexual attitudes in the past were controlled by fear," she said. "Now, for the most part, people are informed of the dangers and want to take care of their bodies."

Cary said alcohol has a major effect on people's choices regarding sex, adding that she is not surprised at the survey's number of one-night stands at the UI.

Waiting for marriage to come out of the closet

■ Iowa City is one of 43 U.S. cities allowing same-sex partners to "register" their relationships.

By Leah Reinstein
The Daily Iowan

A survey of 254 UI students by The Daily Iowan found that 30 women expect to be married more than once, but Kelly Holstine and Nuria Sheehan expect to be together forever.

Holstine met UI junior Sheehan in July; Holstine proposed last week. The couple are planning their wedding for sometime next year.

But one problem looms large: Holstine and Sheehan are both women, and no state in the United States will permit a legal, same-sex marriage.

The issue of homosexual wedlock continues to raise a furor in the United States. Holstine said marriage should not be defined as a union only between a man and a woman.

"People feel a need to label what we are," she said. "Our relationship is not that different from any other committed relationship. Marriage is a union of two people, and we have a right to call it the same thing."

Strides toward legislation supporting gay rights have led some cities to recognize domestic partnerships, an official status that creates a way for institutions to voluntarily adopt benefit or recognition systems, according to an American Civil Liberties Union Web site.

Iowa City is one of 43 cities in the United States that allows the registration of domestic partnerships.

"Saying that we are married is a lot easier than saying we are domestically partnered," Holstine said. "If I were in the hospital, Nuria could come visit me ... there are a lot of stupid little rules."

Some opposition to same-sex marriages comes from the Catholic Church and conservative Christian sects.

"The Roman Catholic Church does not permit a marriage ceremony of a gay couple," said Father Ed Fitzpatrick, director of the Newman Catholic Student Center. "Part of marriage means the possibility of procreation."

Holstine and Sheehan are not alone in their pursuit of state and religious affirmation of their commitment. Jack Pepple, co-chairman of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Union, and his partner have been together for two years and got engaged last summer. Pepple said there is no doubt in their minds whether they love each other.

"We both agreed there was this incredible harmony between us," he said. "That is unusual whether you are in a heterosexual or homosexual relationship. It's hard to meet someone you can really fall in love with."

Pepple said the dearth of gay bars in the Iowa City area makes it difficult for homosexuals to meet. He said many gay men

Domestic partners

The American Civil Liberties Union defines domestic partners as two adults who have chosen to share one another's lives in an intimate and committed relationship of mutual caring.

Requirements:

1. The couple must live together.
2. They must be jointly responsible for each other's living expenses.
3. Neither may be married or a member of another domestic partnership.
4. The couple may not be related.
5. The couple must be over the age of 18.
6. Both members of the couple must sign a Declaration of Domestic Partnership and have it signed by the City Clerk.

meet on the Internet, which builds up expectations that can lead to disappointment.

"We've been shown through the media how heterosexual couples meet and date, but we don't see a lot about how homosexuals meet," he said. "There is a question about whether we should do the same thing. You can't tell whether someone is straight or gay by looking at him, and there is still a lot of homophobia."

Pepple's partner is a member of the Congregational Church of Christ, 30 N. Clinton St.; the couple is considering holding a ceremony there. Bruce Fischer, a pastor at the church, has never performed a gay wedding ceremony but is not opposed to doing so.

"I believe that your sexual orientation is a given and not something you choose," he said. "A moral relationship is a committed relationship."

UI freshman Hamed Isaza agreed that homosexual couples should be allowed to have a church wedding.

"You can't pick whom you fall in love with," he said. "If you love someone, why shouldn't you marry them?"

Holstine and Sheehan said Iowa City is a fairly liberal town but that there are still a lot of residents who are uncomfortable when the couple expresses affection in public.

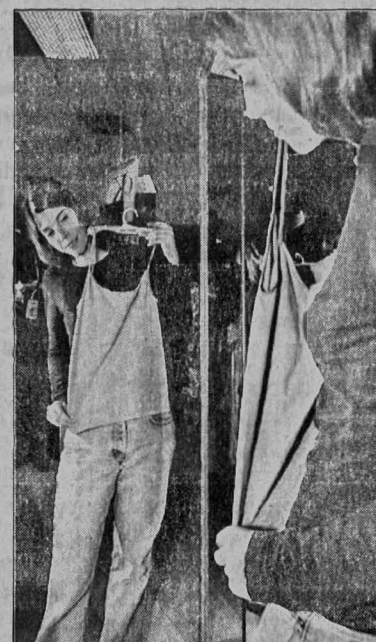

"We don't feel safe at night or on weekends," Holstine said. "There are a lot of drunk frat boys who feel a need to shout out what we are. But if you act comfortable, then other people will, too."

Sari Cowger, a UI junior and a member of Campus Crusade for Christ, said she does not approve of homosexuality because her views comply with the Bible's sayings.

"I wouldn't agree with gay marriages because homosexuality is the same as any other sin - it is a disobedience to God," she said. "God loves people, and he loves homosexuals. God loves the sinner, but not the sin."

"Don't get married unless you know for sure that you're with the person you want to marry; just give it time," Isacovici said.

For some couples, cohabitation is a good way to find out if they could make a marriage successful. In the DI survey, 81 percent of students said they would live with a partner before marriage.

"If we ever wound up married to each other, I don't think we'd ever get divorced," Adler said. "I would seek out marriage counseling or other ways to make the marriage work."

David Rosenthal, an associate professor of family medicine and director of counseling and health promotion who has counseled couples and families for 20 years, said people are waiting longer in life to get married.

"There wasn't as big of a demand for a college education (in the past), so people were through with their education at about 18 and ready to start a family and career," he said.

Now people tend to wait until they are finished with college and have started a career before they get married, Rosenthal said.

"Another factor to look at is that people are living longer and, as a result, can put off marriage longer," he said.

UI junior Michelle Kaiser said she is not rushing into a relationship at this point in her life, though many of her peers seemingly believe that a relationship is a necessity.

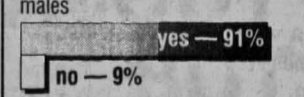

"I think that a lot of college-aged people think they have to be in a relationship," she said. "Most people tend to believe that they're going to get married, and coming to college, I think that's where many people think they're going to find their mate."

be forced."

Sexual abuse on the UI campus may have occurred in previous years with much the same frequency as this year's but could have gone unreported, Papke said. Though the number of assaults is alarming, there is no further information about the Burge incident, he said.

"If we feel there is any situation where the university community needs to be better apprised, we'd certainly get the information out," Papke said.

When Public Safety determines that warnings should be put out, other UI departments are notified, said Ann Rhodes, the vice president for university relations.

"Generally, I know about it, and we make announcements when we know enough," she said. "In situations where there is any risk to students, we notify people."

Margaret Van Oel, the director of UI resident services, was not aware of the Burge incident.

"Generally we try to get the information out to students," she said. "This sort of thing happens all the time."

Law enforcement and UI officials need to exercise caution when sexual assaults are reported so that people are not falsely accused, Van Oel said.

"There has to be some basis for truth before fliers are put out," she said. "You don't have to know all the information, but you have to protect everybody."

Sexual-assault warnings will be issued in the next few days, but officials are trying to get more information, Rhodes said.

Even though officials say any report is an improvement, Danielle Sorci, a UI freshman and Burge resident, believes the best protection is to know all the facts.

"I think if they're going to report, they should tell the whole story," she said.

The Rape Victim Advocacy Program receives more reports of sexual abuse than do the police because women feel they can get more help there, said Samantha Karrel, the director of crisis services at the advocacy program.

"Rape can only stop when we stop rapists," she said. "People may feel safer with more locks and better lighting, but women are typically raped by someone they know. Trust is a weapon."

"Some people are naive," said UI freshman and Burge resident Christine Holland. "People don't think about it."

When sexual assaults are reported to Public Safety and it is asked not to investigate, the officers make sure the victim is safe and receives help.

"Our only hope is that the survivor is OK," Papke said. "We want them to start to get their lives back in order. They had everything taken away, but it wasn't their fault or choice. It's a healing process that's never easy."

The advocacy program offers women a place to learn about safety options, Karrel said.

If women are victims of sexual abuse, the program can provide medical and legal support and advocacy, she said.

The program's crisis line is 335-6000; counselors can be reached 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The eternal Halloween bash, full of smoke and mirrors

Halloween, you might have noticed, has come and gone, which means that, as of today, there are only 60 days left until the millennium doesn't arrive, a nonoccurrence being awaited with much bating of breath and eager planning of parties.

Halloween is the traditional holiday on which hundreds of sensible people — or at least people who delude themselves into thinking there is such an animal as sensible — don multifarious costumes and traipse about the town, partying until they drop. Or get popped for "keeping a disorderly house." In other words, pretty much like a normal weekend around this burg.

It's always amused me, that "keeping a disorderly house" thing. Only in Iowa City would the police force double as the housekeeping patrol, going around making sure you've vacuumed, swept, washed the dishes, and folded all your clothes. Well, you've got to have standards, I suppose; otherwise, you're just another Coralville, and you have to construct a megamall to prove that you have some culture, if not architectural taste.

Halloween is also the traditional signal that we're about to have another election, though, given the way life generally works out, usually the election has us.

This year is no different, at least in that there is another election today. Four seats on the City Council are up for grabs; two incumbents (Dean Thornberry and Dee Vanderhoef) who are generally considered to be conservative are running, as are six hopefuls, four of whom (Steve Kanner, Ross Wilburn, Charlie Major and Irvin Pfab) are generally considered to be more or less progressive. It's an interesting race — if you like the way things have been going in town, which is more or less pro-business and somewhat conservative, then you'd vote for the incumbents. If you think that perhaps Iowa City's motto maybe shouldn't be "A parking ramp for every man, woman and child," then you might want to see what the progressives could do.

And if you're like most 20-somethings, you won't bother to vote at all. Things will go on pretty much as they have been — meaning without your opinion getting added to the mix — and you'll spend the rest of your college career wondering why the police in this town seem to spend so much time targeting college students downtown in the search for alcohol-related offenses.

This should be an interesting council. In addition to voting on whether Iowa City should become one big parking ramp with a downtown attached, more or less like an afterthought, there are other things in the mix. For instance, the council might wind up considering an ordinance banning smoking in restaurants, much like the one Coralville has. (Why do you suppose it is that the powers-that-be in Iowa City, in order to make the town better, always seem to be emulating Coralville?)

The smoking ban, it should be noted, has not been proposed; but a fair number of people are organizing around the issue and it is being discussed, so you shouldn't be surprised if some sort of ban does come up in the future.

It's an interesting animal, this smoking-ban thing. The main reason people keep coming up with these sorts of proposals is the old second-hand-smoke bogey man — one health-care worker in a meeting last week called secondhand smoke a class-A carcinogen.

This notion has been kicking around for most of this decade, based largely on an EPA report in the early '90s. Because most of the news media have been so lax in investigating the issue, most Americans believe that secondhand smoke causes cancer. As far as the truth goes, it's about as close as Dan Quayle's spelling of "potatoe."

The EPA report is seriously flawed, as was pointed out by the Congressional Research Service. In scientific studies, one posits a hypothesis, collects the data, analyzes the data, and then reaches a conclusion. Not in the EPA report on secondhand smoke, however. First, the agency wrote its conclusion. Then it collected data, threw away or disregarded all the data that didn't fit with its previously reached conclusion, cooked what data it had left in order to fit the straitjacket of the findings it wanted to present, and then — voila — "showed" that secondhand smoke was a carcinogen. That's not science; it's alchemy.

The case against the secondhand-smoke agitators doesn't end with the EPA report. In 1998, the World Health Organization, in the largest study ever done on secondhand smoke, concluded that there is no correlation between secondhand smoke and cancer. None. Zip.

Not that you could ever get anti-smoking fanatics to admit that science is not on their side. No, they rail on, good Puritans that they are, determined to save us from ourselves, even if — or maybe, especially if — we don't particularly need saving.

It's kind of scary in a way. Halloween just never seems to end, does it?

Have a good election.

Low student voting produces horrible snowball effect

Based on the sad numbers of this year's City Council primary election, the likelihood of a high turnout at the voting booths today is grim.

One of the biggest obstacles for many people will be a simple lack of knowledge. It is difficult to justify voting when one doesn't really have an idea of what the candidates stand for or how they will act on important issues. It is even more difficult, however, to justify the pervasive lack of knowledge that permeates a good portion of Iowa City's citizenry: the UI student population.

From where does this void stem? There are two probable sources for this lack of knowledge among UI students: an attitude of apathy concerning the direction of city politics and an estrangement from community leadership.

Many students plan on staying in town for, at most, five years. They feel no responsibility for the city's direction and/or feel they receive no benefit from the paths the city takes. These feelings are the child of faulty logic. The City Council makes a plethora of decisions that have both short-term and long-term consequences. Issues such as the reconfiguration of downtown parking, the expansion of a busy street next to a park or the increasing of police patrols downtown are often conceived, debated, and dealt with within the span of a few years. Current students feel the impact of these issues; future students at the UI will also feel the impact. Thus, it is, in a sense, our duty to make sure the council listens to the voices of the UI student population, for ourselves and for those who will take our place. A second reason for lack of knowledge on the part of UI students is a sense of estrangement from community leaders. It seems councilors are more in tune with business interests than with those of people renting apartments and houses year after year. Much of the North Side infrastructure (where many students rent) borders on disrepair. The lack of rent control allow the few major rental agencies to charge tenants exorbitant fees just to have roofs over their heads. The unvoiced sentiment is, "City leaders aren't doing anything for us."

In this case, however, the logic is incomplete. How can issues important to the student population become the important issues of the council when students express no political voice? How can the council act in the best interest of 20,000 relatively similar citizens when its members are not chosen by the votes of those 20,000 citizens?

Because UI students are apathetic about city politics and feel estranged from city leaders, a minimal amount of effort is put forth in processing the little information a city election offers. And because only a few do put forth enough effort to form an opinion, the potential political muscle of the UI student population is wiped out. But if students take the initiative, learn the small amount required to form an opinion, and cast their votes, their potential political muscle will become a reality. And they may be surprised to see just how much power that muscle yields.

The good ones are already taken, and the rest like country or law

With some regret I note my arrival at that awkward and lonely age when all my old college pals are already married but not yet divorced, so they don't have much time for breeze shooting, let alone those zany, all-night Tupperware parties in which we erst indulged.

I always wondered about their motivations for taking the drastic step of marriage. Time was, your parents took care of the scouting and negotiations, and you agreed to spend your life with a stranger, applying the same optimism regarding your compatibility as you need to check your baggage through O'Hare. After all, there's always the random chance that the airport to which your stuff gets misrouted will be the same as your destination. In the 12th century, the church came out in favor of mutual consent of the bride and groom, but it still took me 10 years and a cousin's pregnancy to get Grandma to stop showing me pictures of nice girls I should meet. People used to marry for money more often, too, which at least guaranteed a measure of satisfaction in one area for each partner. Maybe money can't buy me love, but The Donald doesn't look like he's suffering too badly, either.

Nowadays, however, it's almost always about romance, a concept invented in the 1920s as a marketing ploy to sell Rudy Valentino flicks. Since then, it has only led to universal disappointment among women, as the supply of real princes dried up, and among men because all the women who looked like Grace Kelly married the few princes who were left.

Yet the idea persists, and a surprising number of couples actually believe they were meant for each other, as perhaps they were. What they fail to understand is that "meant for each other" and $2.25 gets you a latte at the coffee cart. Gerard Depardieu was born to play Cyrano, yet his performance still bit the big bougainvillea. Heck, disco and leisure suits were made for each other, but you don't see people with a shred of good taste clamoring for their return. If even half the matches I've seen really were written in the stars, then the stars could use some serious spell-checking.

But hope springs infernal, and I must acknowledge a few good reasons for taking the risk. For one thing, you get more presents than at a bar mitzvah, and you don't even have to learn Hebrew. I find the most attractive aspect of marriage is that it would mean at least one person in the world could not be compelled to testify against me.

So like most singles, I keep an eye open. Fortunately, the university is one of the best places to hook up with a potential mate, but the very target richness of the environment leads to a disgustingly high frequency of mixed marriages. I have seen otherwise decent, respectable engineering majors and pre-meds dating people as far below themselves as sociology majors. All you people in the social "sciences" beware. Someday the romance will fade, and you will start to hear those quotation marks whenever your partner mentions your field. Besides, how will you bring up the children?

Thank goodness for the rest of us that law students mostly date among themselves. The cynical nature of their profession usually prevents lawyers from ever achieving true happiness. I actually dated a law student for a while, and I can only suppose that the precipitous decline in her mood, obvious over even those few weeks, must have been due to the oppressive prospect of having to decide between her $80,000 starting salary offers.

Thank goodness as well for the wisdom that comes with age, freeing us from unrealistic expectations as our contemporaries pair up and it looks less and less likely that a gourmet chef Olympic athlete brain surgeon model who owns 20 percent of Microsoft will pick us out of the crowd at an Iowa City bus stop. Still, it is hard to abandon all of one's preferences, and while I might consider dating a Republican, I would have to draw the line at getting mixed up with a Clint Black fan. The no-cat allergy rule is of course totally non-negotiable.

I wonder if Grandma still has those pictures.

Two decades of love in film: 1980

A little bit of unabashed entertainment makes sex media's bag

In today's hot, vital media, sex isn't everything. It's the only thing.

By Jim Mack and Akwi Nji
The Daily Iowan

Warning: XXX SEX XXX Get your hot, erotic sex right here! Master Media has got it all. From sex music to show-it-all movies to tell-all magazines — oh, and some love and marriage, too.

Sex, love, marriage. Three words that used to go hand-in-hand can now be interpreted almost independently. The media play a substantial role as a public influence concerning these topics, but how much of an influence and which of the three is promoted more are the questions.

Sex is arguably the biggest celebrity in media today, leaving love and marriage with very little room on stage. This wasn't always the case, in terms of mainstream media, but as of late, everything has been put out in the open. And if there's one strategy that is guaranteed, it's "sex sells."

FILM & TELEVISION

Judging from the amount of sexual content on television and in the movies, sex seems to be what people want to see.

"There's a lot of sex on TV because people enjoy it," UI junior Jason Wright said. "It's entertainment."

Ten years ago, such subject matter was taboo on the mainstream wave. But with present society, and its accepting, "surf's up" attitude toward sex, more and more, love and marriage are not required for a sexual relationship.

"It's becoming more acceptable through the media to have sexual relationships without being in love or without being married," said UI sophomore Megan Wilson.

The media might not only suggest this idea, they also promote it.

"I think the media promote the fact that sex is sort of getting separated from love," said UI junior Aaron Stangel.

Media stand to benefit financially by attaching themselves to sex-related endorsements. People might even be more apt to go see a movie if sexual content were advertised in it.

"With Titanic, I remember some people saying that it was a dumb movie, but then they hear that Kate Winslet is topless for three seconds, and they're like, 'OK, I'll go check it out,'" Wright said.

Sex on TV and in the movies is so common that many people don't even flinch, no matter how graphic or explicit the content is.

"TV and movies are becoming more explicit — just look at Eyes Wide Shut. I read a Playboy article that said, 'Finally a porn has made it to the big screen!'" said UI freshman Kyle Hulsebus.

This overexposure might very well have led to the desensitization of society.

"When Basic Instinct came out, it was a big deal because of that Sharon Stone scene, but now that you look back on that, it doesn't seem like a big deal," said UI sophomore Maya Ormsby.

Visual media outlets tend to depict themselves as educators in terms of sex by displaying various relationships that focus on sex. But some disagree about the educational value.

"I think it's good that it (TV) is an educator, but I don't think it's necessarily teaching the right material," said UI senior Josh Rideout.

The content of many TV programs presents the audience with an alternative view of sex in relation to love and marriage that differs from what some might have grown up with.

"TV shows suggest that sex is a lot easier," said UI senior Cory Johnson. "Love is really hard because you have to work at it, and marriage is even harder."

TV today is not afraid to show marriage in a non-permanent light.

"Divorce is a lot more accepted now, and I think the media could have influenced that, just because it's so popular and shown so much," said UI sophomore Laura Snyder.

With marriages being short-lived in our society, the singles lifestyle is heavily promoted over TV waves, and it's difficult to tell if that's a good thing.

"I personally see marriage decreasing a little bit just from the way things are presented, such as the lifestyles that are seen in the media by single people and how anyone who gets married seems like it ends up in divorce," Stangel said.

On the other hand, the singles shows could be instilling a new idea of independence or promoting a certain self-confidence in living alone.

"I don't think they're teaching you to be afraid of marriage, I think they're teaching you to not be afraid of being single," said UI sophomore Amy Ecklund.

MAGAZINES

Another immense public influence is found with popular literature. Magazines have always sought to inform, but in recent years, the most information you're going to get is what goes on under the covers. The emphasis in magazines such as Maxim and Cosmopolitan lose sight of the emotional realm of love and dive head-first into physical love.

"Two hundred-fifty new positions to try out, and it's all on the cover, always in bold print," said UI sophomore Danielle Christopher. "But that's what attracts you to buy it."

Love and marriage are absent in the popular magazines mainly because a lot of people don't seem to be interested in reading about such not-so-exciting topics. They are looking for advice and information — mostly sexual advice and information.

"Society puts a lot of pressure on looks and sexual performance. People read the magazines to find out how to feel more secure," UI freshman William Feehan said. "Maxim is really popular. It's a good magazine because it talks about what people want to know but are sometimes afraid to ask or are embarrassed about."

"This is another medium that puts everything on the table. Sex and love have always been topics related to music. Marriage is often left out, and even love is often stomped on, especially on the dance floor.

"Dance music allows people to let themselves go with the music, feel the vibes, feel the beat and maybe put them into a closeness with their sexuality," said UI junior Jim Peterson. "That allows them to get on a dance floor and get closer to another person."

Not only has the beat become more sexually stimulating, the lyrics have become more raw as well.

"Sex in music is more pronounced now. When jazz began, a lot of it had sexual innuendoes, and it wasn't as explicit," Wilson said. "Music is more overtly sexual now than it was in the past."

With sex replacing just about everything and the idea of social independence rising, young people especially just don't want to hear about topics such as marriage.

"The audience that popular music is going after is more of an audience that is not very interested in hearing about marriage because they're in their teens and 20s," Stangel said.

As much as the media may be looked down upon for their controversial role in society, some of their results may be positive.

"We see a lot more stuff nowadays than we would have when our parents were young. Girls having abortions, people having kids unwed," said UI junior Brent Hendricks. "Now that it's out in the open and getting accepted, maybe it's a little better than when everyone used to hide everything."

No matter what is implied in the media, marriage is something that isn't going to just disappear overnight. The attitudes of the youth often mature and change despite all the outside influences.

"I feel like I know a lot of people who eventually want to settle down and get married. So I don't think that it's ruining society," Wilson said. "I just think that it's allowing more options for people."

When it comes down to it, it's all about entertainment and what's going to sell it. The media are a force that could leave in their wake lasting effects that may be beneficial or not.

"The media have become more crude, more realistic," Christopher said. "I think it does affect people, but I don't think that it affects us enough that our generation is doomed forever."

Cyclone devastates Indian coastline

Thousands are feared to be dead, and millions have been left homeless.

By Neelesh Misra
Associated Press

BALESHWAR, India — Bodies hung from trees and floated through flooded villages Monday after one of the most powerful cyclones ever to strike India devastated its northeastern coast. Military helicopters finally arrived with some aid, but thousands were feared dead, and millions were still left hungry and homeless.

"This is the worst flooding in 100 years. I would say it is the worst in India's history," said Asim Kumar Vaishnav, chief administrator of Baleshwar, the state capital.

After three days without food, shelter or clean drinking water, shell-shocked villagers in the flooded eastern state of Orissa looked up to the sky to see helicopters dropping packets of protein-rich food. With roads into the area flooded, the food could arrive no other way.

Military boats also appeared in the Bay of Bengal to evacuate those marooned on housetops and hill-tops. Other naval and coast guard vessels searched Monday through the still-rough seas for at least 20 missing fishing trawlers carrying an estimated 200 men.

Many of the survivors were so desperate that food riots erupted in Bhubaneswar, which had no power, drinking water or fresh food, the Press Trust of India news agency reported. Residents stopped vehicles carrying emergency relief and looted them, it said.

"There is a complete breakdown of law and order. Police are inadequate," said Defense Minister George Fernandes, who visited some of the affected areas.

With heavy rains abating, officials started to count the dead and search for the missing from the

Doomed plane co-pilot swapped shifts

Grieving relatives in Egypt prepare for trips to the U.S. to identify victims' bodies.

By Donna Abu-Nasr
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — EgyptAir co-pilot Adel Anwar was eager to return home to prepare for his wedding Friday, so he swapped shifts and took a colleague's place in the cockpit of Flight 990.

On Sunday, the day of the ill-fated flight, his fiancée quit work at a travel agency, planning to become a homemaker. She'd been packing bags, decorating the apartment, and getting ready for their honeymoon.

"He traveled a lot. It was just another regular flight," said Anwar's brother, Tarek, tears quietly streaming down his face. "Or so we thought."

Adel Anwar was one of 217 people aboard the EgyptAir Boeing 767-300ER that crashed Sunday nearly an hour after taking off from New York's Kennedy International Airport. Nobody is believed to have survived.

Tarek Anwar was among grieving relatives, looking haggard after a sleepless night, who showed up at the airport's EgyptAir sales office Monday to inquire about tickets and visas for a flight to New York to identify the bodies.

As they waited for information, some relatives gazed vacantly at their feet, others puffed nervously on cigarettes. A few broke into wrenching sobs.

"My father. My father," one man wailed. Then he raised two hands in supplication: "Please Allah, grant me one wish. Bring back my father safely to us."

Some relatives who did not have passports were issued the documents the same day. The U.S. Embassy scrapped normal procedures to speed up the issuing of visas, and spokesman Dave Ballard said the embassy received hundreds of calls on a special information line it set up.

In Egypt, a prayer for the missing is to be held in mosques across the country Friday, the Muslim Sabbath, Religious Endowments Minister Mahmoud Hamdi Zaqouq told the Middle East News Agency.

At the airport, some relatives shared memories of their loved ones.

Hamdi Hanafi pulled out a pink ID card showing a picture of his daughter, Wala, who was returning home on Flight 990 from a two-month vacation with her aunt in California. It was her first trip abroad.

"Her aunt wanted to show her the United States," Hanafi said, tears glistening in his eyes as he gazed at the picture of the 22-year-old woman with shoulder-length dark hair.

"She was having such fun there that she delayed her return by three days," he added.

NATION BRIEF

Clinton eyes Mideast accord

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Entering a fateful year in Middle East peace-making, President Clinton offered strong encouragement Monday and perhaps even Camp David-style negotiations to help Israel and the Palestinians resolve "the really hard part" of their decades-old conflict.

"I wouldn't rule out anything," said Clinton, eager to crown his presidency with a historic peace agreement. "There is nothing I would not do if I thought it would genuinely help to build a lasting peace in the Middle East."

The president met separately with Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat on the eve of a three-way meeting among them.

Afterward, Arafat and Barak met one-on-one to prepare for the talks with Clinton. Prompted by photographers, they shook hands. They were described as focused on how to get down to business to meet tough negotiating deadlines.

A Palestinian official, briefing reporters on the condition of anonymity, said the atmosphere was positive and warm in the 90-minute meeting. The substance of remaining disagreements was not discussed, the official said, because both sides knew that would cause problems at too early a stage. One disagreement did occur, as Arafat wanted to bring in key aides, but Barak held to his public desire for one-on-one talks with the Palestinian leader.

The leaders gathered in this northern European country of glaciers and fjords to pay tribute to the late Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who was assassinated four years ago by an Israeli opponent of the peace process. At a memorial dinner, Rabin's widow, Leah Rabin, challenged Barak and Arafat to "find the right formula to finish what my husband started and had to pay the highest price for — his life."

"It is now up to you," she said emotionally. "Is it too much to ask for?"

against freedom."

In 1997, students held rallies and posted fliers to protest the recruiters' presence, Hines said.

Since then, students have been more quiet in protesting against military recruiters.

"The attitude in recent years is to focus effort on getting the law changed, not to blame the people on campus," Hines said. "It's kind of pointless to be insulting or rude to guests of the university."

UI law student Justin Fox does not approve of the military presence on campus.

"I think it can be an invasion of your time," he said. "You're here to learn, not to be recruited or patronized."

Transportation Safety Board, cautioned that the investigation — already involving more than 500 people — could be long. And he said the hunt for the black boxes — the flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder — would be difficult.

"Remember that we are dealing with water 250 feet deep, and recovering and locating small objects such as recorders is a daunting effort," he said at search headquarters in Newport.

The Cairo-bound Boeing 767 was carrying 217 people when it plunged into the Atlantic from 33,000 feet early Sunday, a half-hour after leaving New York's Kennedy Airport. The plane went down without a distress call or any other indication of trouble from the pilots.

The Egyptian military officers were mostly pilots who had been training in the United States, the Pentagon said. The passengers also included 106 Americans — 54 people bound for a two-week trip to Egypt and the Nile.

The first group of victims' relatives arrived from New York Monday afternoon by chartered plane at T.F. Green Airport in Warwick, where they were greeted on the tarmac by an Egyptian priest. They were taken to a hotel and offered counseling from the Red Cross and other organizations.

George Arian, a friend of one of the victims and owner of an Arabic newspaper in Jersey City, N.J., was on the flight to Rhode Island and said some passengers panicked briefly as the plane began flying over water soon after takeoff.

"It was a shock. Some people were crying hard," Arian said. "Every lady or every man was thinking of his loved one."

The debris collected so far — some of it by student sailors from the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy — includes shoes, purses and tripod bears.

GREEN BAY, Wis. — During his seven years in Green Bay, Mike Holmgren helped make Brett Favre a superstar. In Holmgren's first trip back, his Seattle defense made Favre look less than ordinary.

Led by Cortez Kennedy and Shawn Springs, Holmgren's Seahawks forced seven turnovers, six by Favre, as they beat the Packers 27-7 Monday night.

Jon Kitna chipped in with touchdown passes to Derrick Mayes and Shawn Dawkins, Ricky Watters ran for 125 yards in 30 carries, and Springs returned a blocked punt 61 yards for a touchdown.

Green Bay, which lost for only the second time in 35 games at Lambeau Field, also contributed to its own demise with 10 penalties for 103 yards. That included two personal fouls on one play against offensive tackle Earl Dotson, who was so frustrated trying to block Kennedy that he got thrown out of the game for shoving him twice.

But the defense did the real work for Seattle (5-2), which has won five of its last six and moved into a tie with Kansas City for the lead in the AFC West.

In addition to his return of a kick blocked by Lamar King, Springs intercepted two passes, the first in his own end zone the play after teammate Charlie Rogers had fumbled a punt on his own 20 just five minutes into the game.

WALTER PAYTON • 1954 - 1999
NFL great Walter Payton dead at 45

Walter Payton died after suffering from a rare liver disease for the past nine months.

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Aggressive and relentless on the field, playful and selfless off it, Walter Payton was, simply, "Sweetness."

Payton, the NFL's greatest rusher, died Monday of bile duct cancer that was discovered earlier this year during his treatment for a rare liver disease. He was 45.

"He was the best football player I've ever seen. And probably one of the best people I've ever met," said Mike Ditka, who coached Payton for six years and one Super Bowl championship for the Chicago Bears.

Payton rushed for 16,726 yards in his 13-year career, one of sport's most awesome records. And Barry Sanders ensured it would be one of the most enduring, retiring in July despite being just 1,458 yards shy of breaking the mark.

"I want to set the record so high that the next person who tries for it, it's going to bust his heart," Payton once said.

Payton disclosed in February that he was suffering from primary sclerosing cholangitis and needed a liver transplant.

His physician, Dr. Greg Gores of the Mayo Clinic, said Payton was subsequently diagnosed with cancer of the bile duct, a vessel that carries digestive fluids from the liver to the small intestine.

"The malignancy was very advanced and progressed very rapidly," Gores said at a news conference. Because the cancer had spread so rapidly outside his liver, a transplant "was no longer tenable," the doctor said.

Gores declined to say when the cancer was diagnosed.

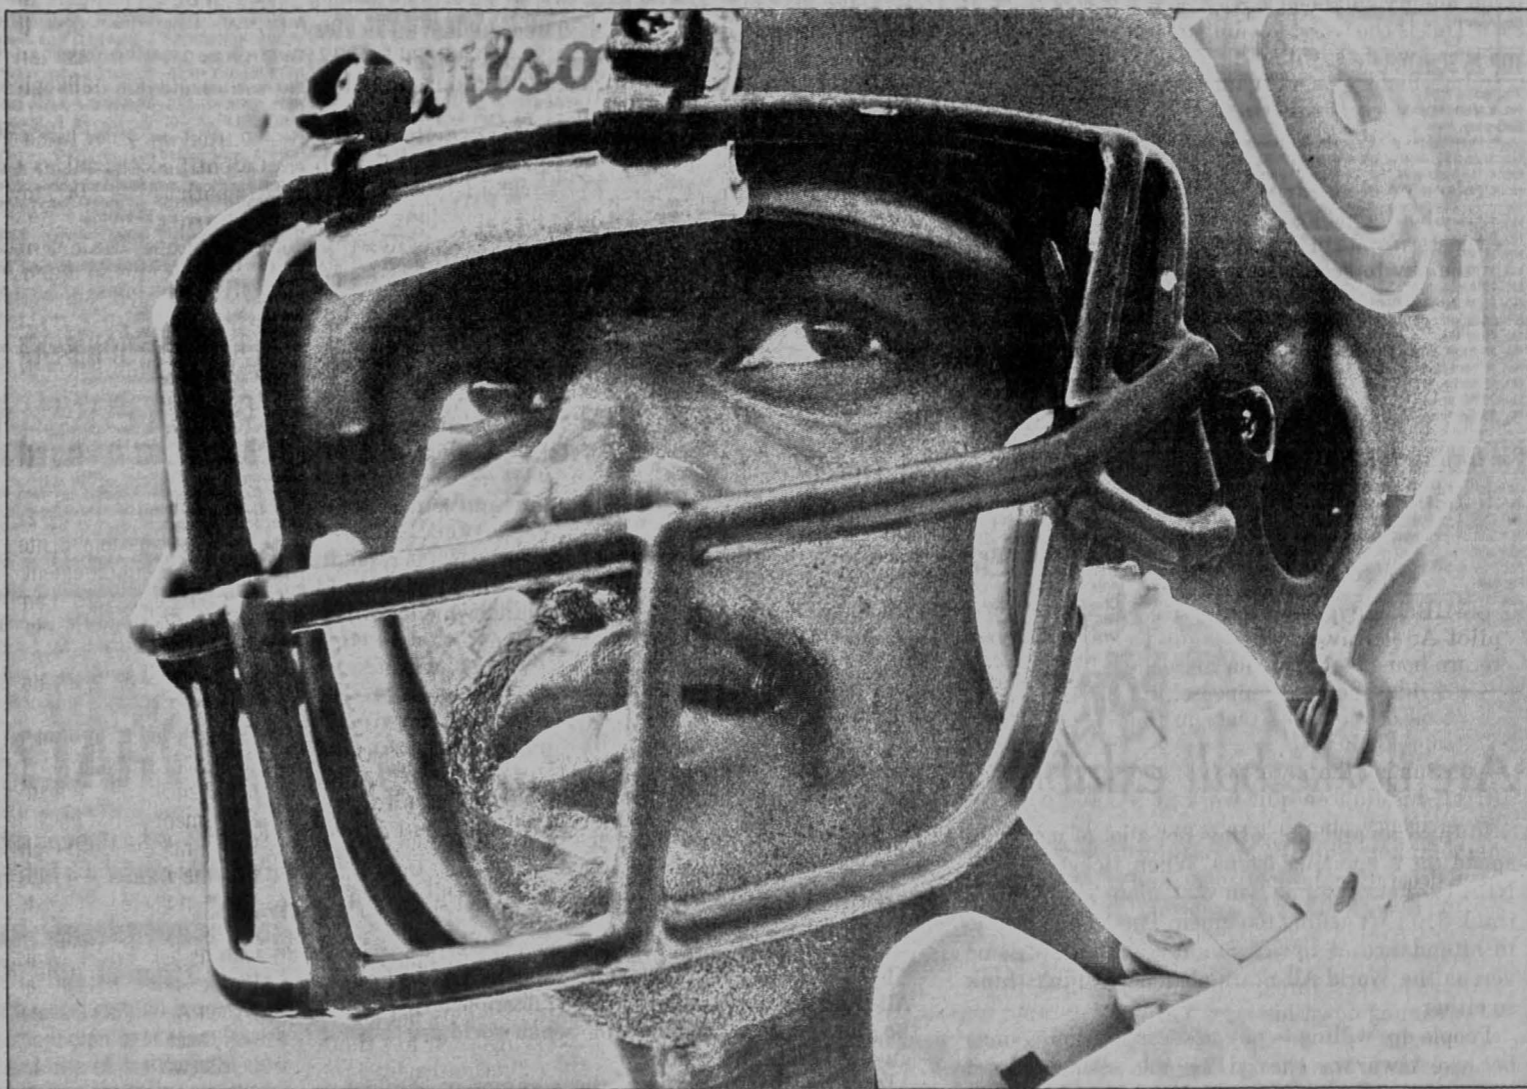

"Walter was the kind of individual who refused to think, 'Why me, why now?' He just continued to look forward," said Mike Singletary, his teammate from 1981-87 and a close friend.

Even in his final days, Singletary said Payton never talked about dying.

"He had dealt with that, but he didn't want to talk about that," he said.

Payton was widely celebrated in Chicago, the city's highest-profile athlete in the years after Cubs' Hall of Famer Ernie Banks retired and before Bulls' superstar Michael Jordan emerged.

"Walter was a Chicago icon long before I arrived there," Jordan said in a statement. "He was a great man

Payton, the Chicago Bears running back who became the NFL's all-time leading rusher and led the team to its only Super Bowl victory, died Monday, Nov. 1, 1999. He was 45. He had suffered from a rare liver disease and had been waiting for a transplant.

Payton remembered for his dignity

Walter Payton won respect for carrying the football. But he was admired even more for the way he lived his life off the field.

"It's sad to me because he had a lot greater impact on me than I had on him," said a red-eyed Mike Ditka, Payton's coach with the Chicago Bears. "He was the best football player I've ever seen. And probably one of the best people I've ever met."

"The memories I have of Walter are good," added Ditka, now coach of the New Orleans Saints. "I don't have any bad ones."

Payton died Monday of bile duct cancer that was discovered during the course of his treatment this year for primary sclerosing cholangitis, a rare liver disease.

"He meant so much to the city of Chicago," said former teammate Jim Harbaugh. "'Sweetness.' There may not have been a better nickname for a player. Not only on the field, but his personality was that way. Chicago loved him.

Coaches' wives learn to cope with rewards, loneliness

There may not be a lot of time to have family dinners, but Tonya Alford and Linda Parker agree they would not trade anyone for the situations they are in.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

Tonya Alford knew what she was getting into when she married her childhood sweetheart from New Castle, Ind., in the summer of 1987. Steve Alford was bound for an NBA career with the Dallas Mavericks after a stellar college career.

She also knew when Steve had sunk his last jump shot in his playing days, basketball would continue to be a part of their lives.

"It was hard for me after he stopped playing because I had always seen him play," Tonya Alford said. "Steve had always talked of coaching, though. And I love what he does."

Love plays an important part in the life of coaching families. The hours are strange, the travel extensive, the pressures enormous, and the moving inevitable. Linda Parker, wife of Iowa football defensive coordinator Norm Parker, was able to adjust to the lifestyle. After two decades of marriage, the Parker family has the routine down. From 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. Parker works with players, reviews films, and does the other duties of a major college coach. When the season is over, he must travel to meet with recruits and their families to sell them on the Iowa program. There is little time for dinner, let alone many other things couples normally enjoy doing.

While Norm Parker believes his wife may enjoy her time without him around, Linda Parker said there is a great deal of loneliness without her husband by her side.

"The hardest part are the social things you have to do by yourself," she said. "People don't understand."

While things may be tough for coaches' spouses, children of coaches are also affected.

The Alford family has three children, all under the age of 8. While they may miss their father at times, they enjoy the perks of having a basketball coach in their family. The Alford's oldest son, Kory, once attended 75-straight games while Alford coached at Div. III Manchester College. The entire Alford family regularly visits Carver-Hawkeye Arena for practices and play time.

"The kids have grown up with it," said Tonya Alford. "The kids love what their dad does, and so do I."

Children have played an important part in the life of the Parkers as well. One of the Parkers' five children, Jeff, was born with Down

POINTCOUNTERPOINT

Are basketball exhibition games worth your $10?

In this day and age, $10 is not a lot of money to spend on a sporting event. When tickets for an NBA exhibition game can cost more than $60, I think $10 isn't asking too much. The 13,500 people in attendance at Iowa's Sunday exhibition game versus the World All-Stars obviously didn't think so either.

People are willing to pay to see exhibition games because they are excited for the season to get underway. Also, they know that most likely "the good guys" are going to pull out a victory. No one wants to pay to see their team lose and exhibition games are almost a sure thing for victory, as Sunday's 101-59 win showed.

Since these games often end in a blow-out, fans have the opportunity to see all of team's players participate and see some of the players' individual personalities that may be hidden in a more serious game atmosphere.

Also, since these games are often the first time the team is able to play against actual competition other than themselves, it allows the fans to observe what the rest of the year might have in store and how the team is able to execute its offense and defense and substitute players.

Not only is $10 a reasonable amount of money to spend for all this entertainment and more, but where else can you watch a guy named Flavor Mack hit a half-court buzzer beater?

—Lisa Colonna

While it is no question these exhibition games provide invaluable game experience for a young basketball team, most of the time it is not worth shelling out $10 to go and see live.

Take Sunday's game for instance. Iowa decimated an unathletic, disorganized World All-Star team 101-59. The only question left about the game at its conclusion was "what world are these guys all-stars in?"

Iowa has lost just one of these games in the last five years and usually the game is over in the first 15 minutes. Sure, fans get their first look at the Iowa team, but it is not a good indicator of how the season is going to pan out.

After Iowa gets up on one of these teams, (who look like they just met each other in the locker room before the game) the game usually turns into a sloppy, turnover-fest that is a cross between a Prime Time League game and a controlled scrimmage.

If there is one good reason to buy a ticket, it is because most of these games give a percentage of the ticket sales to charity. One worthy charity the athletic department might consider giving money to next year is the uniform fund of the opposing team.

The World All-Stars unformed symbolized the game — second rate. Their gaudy uniforms resembled the old t-Shirts the YMCA doles out to seven-year-olds in the recreational league.

The attendance for the game was listed at 13,500 but Carver-Hawkeye Arena was empty enough to hear the players talk on the floor. Some fans have already figured these exhibitions out.

Steer roper dies after horse falls on him
OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Three-time National Finals Steer Roping finalist Colby Goodwin died of massive head injuries a day after his horse tripped on his rope and fell on him during the national competition. His family was in the arena.
"Everything was working out so good in our life," Amy Goodwin, who had given birth 10 days earlier to the couple's son, Gunner, said Sunday. "We were getting ready to build a barn at our new place. And we were going to fence in a backyard where Gunner could play. I can't imagine doing this without him." Goodwin, 32, of Lovington, N.M., died Sunday, said Nita West, a Mercy Health Center spokeswoman.
Goodwin was injured Saturday night during the ninth of the 10 rounds at the steer roping event at the Lazy E Arena in Guthrie. He had roped his steer, but his horse's front foot got over the rope and when Goodwin turned left, the 1,250-pound horse rolled on top of him.
Six umps sue dissidents for defamation
NEW YORK — On the eve of a meeting organized by umpires trying to get rid of Richie Phillips, six umps loyal to the union leader filed a defamation suit against their colleagues trying to set up a new union.
The six umps and Pilot Air Freight Corp., a company controlled by the union head, accused the dissidents of falsely accusing Pilot of paying umpires to support Phillips, according to a suit filed Monday in the Pennsylvania Court of Common Pleas outside Philadelphia.

Indians pick Manuel as team's new manager

CLEVELAND — As a hitting instructor, Charlie Manuel helped the Cleveland Indians score more runs than any other team in the last half-century. Now the club wants him to be the manager who brings Cleveland its first World Series title since 1948.
The Indians hired Manuel as manager on Monday, ending a search that took general manager John Hart outside the Cleveland organization but wound up back at the Indians' dugout.
Manuel has never managed in the major leagues but is a player favorite in Cleveland and has worked for the last six years as the Indians hitting instructor.
Henninger wins again in Mississippi
MADISON, Miss. — Brian Henninger, playing at the site of his only previous PGA Tour victory, withstood two early bogeys Monday and overtook Chris DiMarco to win the rain-delayed Southern Farm Bureau Classic.
Henninger began the day tied with DiMarco for the lead and won by three strokes. He closed with a 3-under-par 69 for a total of 14-under 202.
He dropped two shots in the first four holes. But he didn't have another bogey after that and took the lead for good in the 54-hole event with birdies at Nos. 13 and 14. DiMarco shot a 72 for a 205 total.
Red Sox decline option on pitcher Rapp
BOSTON — The Boston Red Sox on Monday declined to exercise a $3 million option on pitcher Pat Rapp, deciding instead to pay him $250,000 to buy out his contract.
"We may be interested" in him at a lower price, Red Sox spokesman Kevin Shea said. "But the option wasn't attractive to us in light of the emergence of some of our young pitchers and our overall pitching depth."

Stewart bids adieu

2,000 friends in Springfield, Mo., say goodbye to Payne Stewart.

By Doug Jo Associated
SPRINGFIELD golfing world already said goodbye to Payne Stewart, the golfing great, on Monday, friends and family members gathered in Springfield, Mo., for a final goodbye to Payne Stewart. The 34-year-old golfer died of a heart attack in a hotel room in Memphis, Tenn., after a long battle with cancer. His death shocked the golfing world and the nation. Stewart was a three-time major winner and a member of the elite club of 48 who have won all four major championships. He was known for his powerful swing and his ability to perform under pressure. His passing leaves a void in the golfing world that is difficult to fill.

Spurs' agenda is very clear: new arena and another title

■ The NBA season will get underway tonight with 13 games and plenty of players to watch.

By Hal Bock
Associated Press

First, the city votes. Then, the team plays. That's tonight's agenda for the defending champion San Antonio Spurs, who open at home against the Philadelphia 76ers in one of 13 games that mark the start of the NBA season.

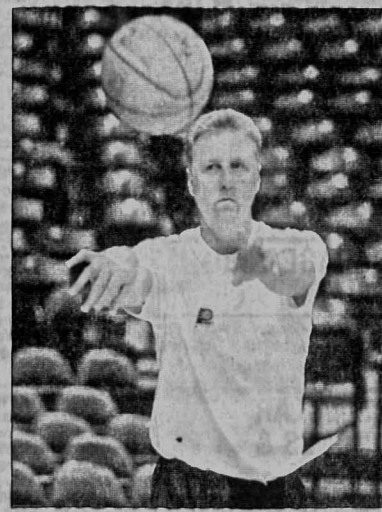

By the time they tip off, the Spurs may know the fate of a referendum to fund a new $175 million arena. The outcome of the vote could determine whether the team remains in San Antonio.

The Spurs enter the season with Tim Duncan and David Robinson in place and Sean Elliott sidelined after a kidney transplant. The Spurs plugged in some new parts — Terry Porter, Chuckie Brown, Samaki Walker and Felton Spencer.

San Antonio opens against a 76ers team led by scoring champion Allen Iverson. Philadelphia added Billy Owens and Stanley Roberts in the offseason.

Tonight's other openers have Atlanta at Washington; Detroit at Miami; Orlando at Charlotte; Cleveland at New York; Indiana at New Jersey; Boston at Toronto; Milwaukee at Houston; Golden State at Dallas; Phoenix at Denver; the Los Angeles Lakers at Utah; Seattle at the Los Angeles Clippers; and Portland at Vancouver.

In the West, Phil Jackson returned from a one-year coaching sabbatical to take over the Los Angeles Lakers. He brought with him his triangle offense and imported one of his old pals from the Chicago days.

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — Anne O'Neil, a 5-foot-11 senior at Cedar Rapids Kennedy and one of the nation's most highly regarded college prospects, announced Monday she would sign with the Illini. Her other finalists had been Iowa State, Purdue, Duke and Stanford. "It just felt right," O'Neil said. "It felt right for the team and the chemistry of the team, the school overall — it was just a great atmosphere." O'Neil made the announcement at the Kennedy gym with coach Dennis Roloff sitting next to her. The 300 to 400 students who had gathered to watch gave

Stewart's hometown bids a final farewell

■ 2,000 friends gathered in Springfield, Mo., to say goodbye to Payne Stewart.

By Doug Johnson
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — The golfing world already had said goodbye to Payne Stewart. On Monday, friends and family bid farewell to the neighborhood playmate, fishing buddy and family man.

Nearly 2,000 friends and family members attended a two-hour memorial service at the Second Baptist Church in Springfield, the town where the golfing great was born and went to school.

His boyhood friends shared stories that made the larger-than-life figure seem no different from the men and women who were telling them.

"Payne, being the youngest, was always the last to be picked for games (in the neighborhood)," said friend Larry Edgar. "He was always underfoot, and we called him 'Payne in the neck.'"

Stewart, who had gained a reputation in the golfing world for being somewhat of a prankster, was even worse as a child, his friends said. John Heitz remembered the time Stewart lured him down the street, chasing a woman's purse connected to a fishing line.

"He always had us laughing," he said.

Stewart was among six people killed Oct. 25 when his plane crashed in South Dakota.

Stewart's mother still lives in Springfield, where the city's public golf courses were closed for the day in his memory.

The pulpit at Second Baptist was surrounded with pictures of Stewart as a young man. His niece, Amy Thomas, played a cello solo, and Springfield policeman Gary Collins sang during the service. Gov. Mel Carnahan and several state politicians also attended.

The Rev. Billy Wear, who conducted the service, described Stewart as an "ambassador" of authenticity, not only in his attire, but in his whole tell-it-like-it-is attitude.

"Payne Stewart marched into life and seized the day," Wear said. "And he did part of that seizing in pink knickers decked out in pink socks. We all celebrated that about him."

Some of the eight speakers Monday remembered Stewart as a "wonderful family man," who was equally as kind to the local kids as he was to his own children, said MaryAnn H'Doubler. Others recalled fishing stories or canoe trips through the backwoods of the Ozarks.

Stewart's brother-in-law, Jim Thomas, said Payne had a magnetic personality that people couldn't resist.

"He was like the Pied Piper, people would just follow him around anywhere," he said. "Everyone was his biggest fan."

despite being just 1,458 yards shy of breaking Payton's mark.

"I feel empty. There's no other way to describe it," said Dallas' Emmitt Smith, the active rushing leader. "This is a great loss. Walter Payton was an inspiration to me by the way he carried himself on the field and off the field."

Payton, who was selected to nine Pro Bowls and inducted into Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1993, was remembered as one of the best football players in NFL history.

"All of us in the NFL family are saddened by the loss of Walter Payton," said NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue. "He was without a doubt one of the greatest players in the history of the sport."

"Walter exemplified class, and all of us in sports should honor him by striving to perpetuate his standard of excellence. Walter was an inspiration in everything he did. The tremendous grace and dignity he displayed in his final months reminded us again why 'Sweetness' was the perfect nickname for Walter Payton."

Payton's impact was found well beyond football and in the city where he played.

"Walter was a Chicago icon long before I arrived there," said Michael Jordan. "He was a great man off the field, and his on the field accomplishments speak for themselves."

Mike Singletary, his teammate from 1981-87, visited with Payton before his death.

"This weekend, having the opportunity to spend as much time with him as I could, reading scriptures with him and praying for him — with him," Singletary said. "Outside of anything else I've seen, the greatest run, the greatest moves — what I experienced this weekend was by far the best of Walter Payton I've ever seen."

"As a person, he was a bright spot for any darkness that appeared," Singletary said.

President Clinton said Payton faced his illness "with the same grit and determination that he showed every week on the football field."

"In the long highlight reel of this life cut short, Walter Payton will always be a man in motion: breaking tackles, breaking records, clearing every obstacle in his path," Clinton said.

Former Pittsburgh Steelers running back Franco Harris said Payton "was the greatest."

off the field, and his on-the-field accomplishments speak for themselves. I spent a lot of time with Walter, and I truly feel that we have lost a great man."

A two-time Little All-American, Payton finished fourth in voting for the Heisman Trophy in 1974 and was picked fourth overall by the Bears in the 1975 NFL draft. He rushed for 679 yards and seven touchdowns in his rookie season and the next year had the first of what would be 10 1,000-yard seasons, rushing for 1,390 yards and 13 touchdowns.

Payton drew immediate comparisons to Gale Sayers, the Bears Hall of Famer who retired in 1971. But Payton steadfastly rejected the comparison, saying "I'm no Gale Sayers."

In 1977, just his third year in the NFL, Payton won the first of two MVP awards with the most productive season of his career. He rushed for 1,852 yards and 14 touchdowns, both career highs. His 5.5 yards per carry also was the best of his career.

Against Minnesota, he ran for 275 yards, an NFL single-game record that still stands. And in 1984, he broke Jim Brown's long-standing rushing record of 12,312 yards.

After carrying mediocre Chicago teams for most of his career, Payton saw the Bears finally make it to the Super Bowl in 1985. Payton rushed for 1,551 yards and nine touchdowns as the Bears went 15-1 in the regular season, and also caught 49 passes for 483 yards receiving and two TDs.

Chicago beat New England 46-10 in the Super Bowl, but Payton didn't score in the game.

Payton was widely admired by his teammates as much for his humor and kindness off the field as for his athletic skills.

"It was his duty to bring humor and light in any situation," Singletary said. "The Bears had had some tough years, and Walter was always the guy who, no matter how tough it was, would always make you feel great about playing the game and playing for the Bears."

When he disclosed his liver disease at an emotional news conference in February, the Hall of Famer looked gaunt and frail, a shadow of the man who gained more yards than any running back in the history of the NFL.

"Am I scared? Hell yeah, I'm scared. Wouldn't you be scared?" he asked. "But it's not in my hands anymore. It's in God's hands."

Payton made few public appearances after that and his son, Jarrett, who plays for the University of Miami, was called home Wednesday night.

"From the day in February when my dad told the world of his liver disease, the outpouring of love, support and prayers from around the world astounded even him," Jarrett Payton said, holding back tears as he read a statement at the Bears' headquarters in Lake Forest, Ill.

Syndrome. Norm and Linda Parker both agree that Jeff has helped to make their marriage stronger when times were bad.

"Jeff is so much a part of the program," Linda Parker said. "Changing jobs is probably harder on him than on either one of us."

Changing schools is probably the biggest test of a coaching marriage. While the UI has become accustomed to having had coaches such as Hayden Fry and Tom Davis, who spent great lengths of time here, most coaches move as frequently as drifters.

"It's always tough to say goodbye, but you have lots of company," said Tanya Alford, referring to the many transplanted fans who follow her husband's career.

The Alford family has become experts on the art of moving. Since Steve Alford left for the NBA in 1987, the couple has moved every four years. In recent moves, Tanya Alford has had an unusual person to turn to for support.

"How many people can say they have their mother-in-law to rely on?" she joked. Steve's father, Sam, has been an assistant coach alongside his son since 1996. He and his wife, Sharon, have been alongside Steve and Tanya ever since.

The Parker family has rented its fair share of Ryder trucks as well. Since entering the college coaching ranks in 1968, Parker has coached at eight schools.

While surviving a marriage in this decade has been a task for many families, the understanding and strength of coaching families has kept them together.

"You just can't take the time to worry about the mundane things," Linda Parker said.

Twirl of something old, something new

Lar Lubovitch's Meadow, in a performance by the American Ballet Theatre, is coming to Hancher.

By Akwi Nji
The Daily Iowan

After several years, Lar Lubovitch has come back to Iowa City with a new mix. The world-renowned choreographer's new work, Meadow, to be performed by the American Ballet Theatre in Hancher Auditorium tonight and Wednesday night, features a fresh blend of traditional and classical music with a dash of contemporary works.

Publicity Photo

The American Ballet Theatre will perform works by Robert Joffrey, Lar Lubovitch and Twyla Tharp.

"Some choreographers are better than others at listening and working to music, and Lubovitch is exceptionally fine at that," said Wallace Chappell, the director of Hancher. "He's combined classical composers with contemporary ones to give a variety of musical sounds."

The performance, which opened in New York on Oct. 22, combines work by contemporary composers Gavin Bryars and William Brohn with classical music by Franz Schubert and Ferruccio Busoni.

Lubovitch

Lubovitch began as a student in 1960 at the UI studying visual arts and painting. "After taking a couple of dance courses, the dance department told him he needed to go to school in New York," said Judith Hurtig, associate marketing director of Hancher. "So he left Iowa and went to New York to learn dance."

Along with choreographing for Broadway shows and several ballet companies across the nation, Lubovitch choreographed ice dancing.

"Ice skaters at the top level are very beautiful to watch," Chappell said. "There's an extension of movement there that I would think any choreographer would be interested in."
Meadow, commissioned by Hancher, will be Lubovitch's first work with the American Ballet Theatre since the production of Othello in 1997.

Lubovitch's repertoire is a reflection of the theater's identity, setting it apart from ballet companies across the nation.

"ABT does a full range of performances," Hurtig said. "It does big story ballets with plots, but it also has the skill to do performances that are very formal and abstract. A lot of ballet companies don't have that diversity." Lubovitch's piece will share the stage with the American Ballet Theatre's performance of Twyla Tharp's Push Comes to Shove and Robert Joffrey's Pas des Deesses.

"Twyla's style is very quirky, witty and contemporary," Chappell said. "She's done great work with traditional ballet companies and modern companies, which shows that she can go back and forth between the two basic styles with ease."

Chappell also said each choreographer has a unique style. "I think the one that will have the most traditional feel will be the Joffrey piece because it's really a homage to three famous dancers," he said.

King of Horror returns to his craft

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Horror author Stephen King says he's thankful to be alive after being hit by a van last June, but it has been a struggle to return to his craft of writing.

"After the accident, I was totally incapable of writing," King says in an interview with NBC's Katie Couric, which aired Monday.

"At first it was as if I'd never done this in my life," he said. "It was like starting over again from square one."

King, 52, of Bangor, Maine, has had multiple surgeries and faces a long rehabilitation. He was hit by the van while walking along a country road.

The interview, conducted in early October, suggests King has had much more difficulty writing than was previously revealed. In late July, he said he had begun writing an hour-and-a-half a day.

His latest book, Hearts in Atlantis, which was just released, was written before the accident and already is a bestseller.

Bocelli receives mixed reviews

DETROIT (AP) — Hoping to find crossover success in live opera, blind Italian tenor Andrea Bocelli earned mixed reviews for his performance as the romantic lead in Massenet's Werther at the Detroit Opera House.

After initially voicing doubts about Bocelli's capacity to maintain his sound and amplitude, Opera Magazine's Michael H. Margolin said Bocelli's Oct. 29 performance improved as it went along.

"This is the first time for him working on a stage like this," Margolin said. "I think the man should be given a medal of bravery for just doing it." Astride a white horse, Bocelli made his North American opera debut opposite mezzo-soprano Denyce Graves.

Bocelli has sold millions of pop and classical records worldwide and was nominated for a Grammy in January. He also has performed for President Clinton and Pope John Paul II.

The last time Bocelli took on a full-length role, he starred as Rodolfo in Giacomo Puccini's La Boheme in a production on the Italian island of Sardinia.

Blinded by a soccer injury at age 12, Bocelli has said that if opera proved a comfortable fit, he would consider giving up his pop career.

A Honolulu Xerox copier repairman is arrested after shooting seven co-workers

BY Bruce D. Associated

HONOLULU — In a burst of workplace violence, a copier repairman shot seven co-workers in a Tuesday morning shooting in Honolulu.

The gunman surrendered after a two-hour standoff. It was the worst shooting in Hawaii's history.

Police believe Byram was a former copier repairman who had worked at the site for seven co-workers in the area.
