7 dead in latest U.S. office slaying

A Honolulu Xerox repairman is arrested after allegedly shooting seven co-workers.

By Bryan Bondfeld

HONOLULU—In the latest outbreak of workplace violence, a Xerox copier repairman shot and killed seven co-workers in an office building Tuesday morning. Authorities say the gunman, an 18-year-old Vietnam veteran with a gun, was later shot and killed.

The shooting occurred around 9 a.m. in the Copy Center at Xerox, a major office supply store in Honolulu's Chinatown area.

According to police, the gunman walked into the store armed with a .44-caliber revolver and began shooting randomly.

Police said the gunman had been fired from his job as a Xerox repairman two weeks ago and was known to have a history of mental health problems.

Police believe the gunman, a 15-year-old boy, may have been acting under the influence of drugs.

Police said the suspect had a history of mental health problems and had been known to have a history of mental health problems.

Police are now on high alert for any potential threats.

They are urging anyone who may have information about the suspect or his activities to contact them immediately.

Determination and an aggressive marketing campaign by the University of Northern Iowa had led to the creation of a new student group called "The Other Iowa," a student organization that aimed to attract more students to the university.

"The Other Iowa" was created to counter the perception that the university was only a place for students who were not interested in traditional academic pursuits.

"The Other Iowa" was successful in its mission, and by 2000, the university had surpassed its enrollment targets for the following year.

"The Other Iowa" was praised for its innovative approach to student recruitment, and other universities began to adopt similar strategies to attract a wider range of students.

The event stresses the importance of human rights to students, teachers, and grade school students.

By Chris Rasmussen

The US International Day on rights grew more than 200 since high school and middle school students in the 2001 Miami Barrows, who had the opportunity to learn about global human rights issues.

The third annual event, sponsored by the National Education in the College of Education, included four panels who shared their experiences with human rights issues. The students were invited to respond to the papers with questions or stories.

The theme of the event was "You can change a world" by seventh-grader Carrie Dues of Tall Middle School. Carrie Rangel put a quick response from panelist Ellie Knox, a British human rights activist and advocate, to know more about the crowd and feeling further discussions.

Deans remark, and the sole discussion was what the event was about, and Panel discussion after "We’re talking about; we’re talking about the event...about events, about human rights, about awareness..." said the director of the Human Rights Theatre at the University of Minnesota.

A news presentation called the event a "day to end violence against women" and as a "day of closure for women in China, Russia, and Brazil".

The event was presented by the Center for Human Rights Education and Cultural Studies.

Gore summary misses mark
I am writing to comment on The Daily Stormer's coverage of President Al Gore's visit to the UI on Oct. 28. The story by the DP reporter, "The summary of the event described at the rally is "erroneous." I agree wholeheartedly. The fact that the Daily Stormer's coverage of President Al Gore's visit to the UI is not an accurate representation of the event and leaves the reader with a misleading impression. It is unfortunate that the Daily Stormer's coverage is so one-sided and dishonest.

Role models all around, from the athletic field to the penitentiary

The past few weeks have provided a grand display of positive role models in the world of athletics. Anybody watching baseball's World Series would have seen Darryl Strawberry, a Yankees star and past role model, prove his worth by contributing his 450-foot home run to clinch the World Series for the Yankees. And then, the multi-talented Pete Rose became a role model of another kind when the former baseball star admitted to having bet on baseball games during his playing career.

Iowa's Tiffany Lester is hoping to earn a spot on the 2004 Olympic team.

By Robert Fyfe

Freshman Lester originally hoped to be named a starter for Iowa this season. Her father was on the field.

That goal was accomplished when she scored her first touchdown in a win over Illinois.

Lester scored two goals in the Hawkeye Invitational for the second straight year, and she was named all-Tournament.

Lester is the second leading scorer for the team with a total of 27 goals, 5 assists, and a long tradition of excellence at Iowa.

The team scored 33 goals, and Lester added that there was extra motivation for the Hawkeyes to go to the next stage.

Lester was the second leading scorer for Iowa's back-to-back mediocre seasons.

Lester had no idea what my role was, said Ferentz.

The offensive line allowed just two sacks in a 38-14 win.

The team is getting better, Ferentz said, but they aren't act like Michael Jordan.

The Fighting Illini stumbled to a 30-0 start, managing only three points in the game.

Chargers suspend, fine Leaf

After yelling at Chargers personnel, Leister was suspended from the team for four games.

Leister, a former All-American from Page 1, had been suspended for four weeks without pay and fined $8,999 for what team officials described as a mustachioed, investigator who worked closely with the organization, speaking on conditions of anonymity and Leister's agent felt Leister's suspension was too severe and he could not afford to wait.

PHILADELPHIA - After starting the season 1-0, the Dominican Republican Select Team was on the verge of calling it a season. The coach, Steve Pfalier, got a bit nervous about his team's performance.

"We're not where we want to be," Pfalier said. "But we're working on it. We need to focus on defense and improve our rebounding."

The Dominican Republican Select Team will continue to practice and work on their weaknesses in order to be competitive in future games.

The Dominican Republican Select Team's star, Mart, will not play this week after being replaced by a new player. The team is currently in second place in the Decathlon Tournament.

"Mart's injury is a setback," Pfalier said. "But we have a few young players who can step up and fill in for him. We'll continue to work on our chemistry and improve as a team."

The Dominican Republican Select Team will face their next opponent in the Decathlon Tournament this weekend.
