

THE LEDGE
JUST SPEAK ENGLISH

• If you have a bunch of odds and ends and get rid of all but one of them, what do you call it?
• English muffins weren't invented in England nor French fries in France. Sweetmeats are candies while sweetbreads, which aren't sweet, are meat.

• Have you ever noticed that we talk about certain things only when they are absent?
• Have you ever seen a horseful carriage or a strapful gown? Met a sung hero or experienced required love?

• Have you ever run into someone who was combobulated, grunted, ruly or peccable? And where are all those people who ARE spring chickens or who would ACTUALLY hurt a fly?

• English was invented by people, not computers, and it reflects the creativity of the human race (which, of course, isn't a race at all).

Backstreet Boys don't want it that way

WARREN, Mich. (AP) — A 5-year-old girl undergoing chemotherapy for leukemia had one wish — to meet the Backstreet Boys when it performs in suburban Detroit this weekend.

But the pop quintet refused Morgan Zaleski's request, made on her behalf by the Rainbow Connection, a group that grants the wishes of seriously ill children.

The group gets "thousands and thousands of requests" daily from organizations similar to the Rainbow Connection and can't possibly grant them all, said Marcee Rondan, vice president of MSO, the Los Angeles-based firm that handles publicity for the Backstreet Boys.

Students calm about office violence

Some UI students say Iowa City is not a likely place for an office shooting.

By Dana Ritzmann
The Daily Iowan

Despite recent office shootings in Honolulu and Seattle, some UI students say they are not worried about a similar incident happening in their workplaces.

"I think it's kind of a rare thing," said Brian Smith, a UI M.B.A. student who worked for 10 years in different offices in Iowa City and Cedar Rapids before going to graduate school.

Bomb threats or co-workers going crazy are the worst things that Smith said he thinks could happen at work, but he is not afraid that they might occur.

"It's not something that crosses my mind," Smith said.

Nick Laul, another UI M.B.A. student, said he could imagine something like that happening but not in the Iowa City area because the employment situation is good.

On Nov. 1, 1991, five UI employees were killed and one was injured when Gang Lu, a UI doctoral student from China, went on a shooting spree in Van Allen and Jessup halls. Lu was apparently upset about not receiving an academic award after completing his Ph.D. dissertation.

If the employment situation worsens and people become frustrated, they might go out and shoot people, Laul said. More hostility among people and greater access to guns are also problems nowadays that lead to shootings, he said.

"People think this is the easiest way to take revenge for losing their job or if they had an argument with their boss," he said.

Laul has worked for National Computer Systems, Highway 1 and I-80, for six months and said his office has a very relaxed and friendly atmosphere.

There is a lot of work and stress, he said, but that doesn't lead to problems among the employees.

"They do a good job in controlling the atmosphere," Laul said.

The UI Tippie College of Business tries to prepare its students for future jobs in a stressful environment, said Robert Forsythe, the senior associate dean of the college.

"We actually offer stress classes for faculty and staff," he said.

The college covers a variety of issues, including stress management, he said, adding that the subject is also discussed in classes.

"It's not that it goes untouched," Forsythe said.

The business office in which Katina Panagopoulos, a UI sophomore, did her summer internship had a closed-door system that meant not everybody could walk in, she said.

Panagopoulos said she tends to be more afraid of making a mistake and losing her job than about office shootings.

For students who must deal with stress, the University Counseling Service offers group or individual counseling, as well as stress and anger-management programs, said Gerald Stone, the director of the service. Students need support, new ways of dealing with stress and new ways of thinking about stress, he said.

"We see approximately 2,000 students per year clinically," he said, and approximately 5,000 students are involved in outreach and prevention programs.

It's hard to evaluate if stress is linked to any specific major or field of study, Stone said.

"In terms of stress, a common theme is a sense of being overwhelmed and a sense that the demands seem to exceed their personal resources," he said.

There are different reasons for stress leading to violence, said Stone, naming alienation, disengagement or feeling that the only alternative to gain some self-respect is through a violent act.

"It's certainly a concern for our country," he said. "It seems we are missing some of the intermediate steps in conflict resolution, and I don't know why that is."

I.C. water to be subject of monitoring

The Iowa Ground Water Association outlines the benefits of building a new water-treatment plant in I.C.

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City is one of 10 cities in the state picked for chemical and biological monitoring of its water as a part of $1 million set aside by Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack for the 1999-00 fiscal year.

At the Iowa Ground Water

Association's annual fall conference in Coralville Thursday, Carol Sweeting, public information and education coordinator for the Iowa City Water Division, gave a presentation outlining the benefits of building a new, larger water-treatment plant. Such benefits include the ability to expand water production in the future to provide services for an expanding population.

"The Iowa Water Works Park will begin construction shortly after Jan. 1 and is expected to be completed by 2002," she said.

The plant will be located at 2551 N. Dubuque St.; it will cost just over $50 million and will be funded by customers' water rates, Sweeting said. The current water-treatment facility, 330 N. Madison St., will be demolished after the new plant has been built, Sweeting said.

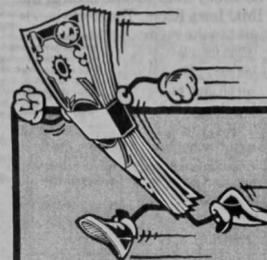

The date and location for the annual spring ground-water association conference has yet to be decided.

Iowa Ave. may get literary walk

Plaques to tribute UI and Iowa writers are a possible addition to the Iowa Avenue Streetscape project discussed by the UI Campus Planning Committee Thursday.

"The addition of a literary walk to recognize famous writers from the UI and the state could be added," said Brian Clark of Brian Clark and Associates, the landscaping architect for the project.

The walk would include plaques showcasing individual writers along Iowa Avenue, he said.

"The idea behind the project is the hope that it would probably become a major tourist attraction," Clark said.

The streetscape project will include added parking and a delivery zone for businesses, Clark said.

UI junior Travis Lowe, who attended the meeting as a representative of the UI Student Government, said the project is long overdue.

"I think the streetscape is something that needs to be done; it will both attract people to Iowa City and attract students to the campus," he said.

"I think it will help bring Iowa City and the UI together," said UI Campus Planner Larry Wilson.

SANDRA HOLLIN FLOWERS was born in Yuma, Arizona, but has called Georgia home for much of her adult life. Along with the difficult cultural issues of gender and race, she has grappled with reconciling serious writing with her faith. Her creative and scholarly work include I Heard a Crazy Woman Speak: The Autobiography of a Woman Who Comes of Age in the '60s and Falls Apart in the '90s (novel, 1998), "Hope of Zion" (short story, 1994) and All I Want For Christmas (a two-act play, 1993). Dr. Flowers earned her B.A. and M.F.A. in Creative Writing from the University of Arizona and completed her Ph.D. in African-American Literature and Political Thought from Emory University in 1990. She has been an Associate Professor of English at Mercer University in Macon, Georgia since 1990.

Flowers to speak at UI

The noted author and professor will speak on the topic of Christian fiction this weekend.

By Nicole Schuppert
The Daily Iowan

Novelist and educator Sandra Hollin Flowers will be speaking about contemporary Christian fiction at the UI Friday and Saturday.

She will give a lecture Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Buchanan Auditorium, Pappajohn Business Building, and will conduct a workshop Saturday from 10 a.m.-noon in the IMU Iowa Room. The workshop is open to the public; a $5 donation is requested.

Flowers will discuss the genre of Christian fiction, which in the past hasn't been considered significant in literature but is increasing in popularity, said Jason Chen, a campus minister and convener. She will also talk about her life struggles, ranging from discrimination she has faced as a black woman to how she integrates her faith into her professional life.

"She sees writing as a way of serving God and keeps religious values in whatever she writes," Chen said.

The Geneva Lecture Series, in cooperation with the African American World Studies Program, is co-sponsoring the event.

"We wanted to bring someone to the campus in the area of arts or writing," Chen said.

Kathleen Staley, an assistant director of the university counseling service and a member of the Geneva committee, said Flowers is a role model for everyone on the UI campus.

"It's very exciting to have a currently active, published writer here at the UI talking about her work," she said.

Since 1990, Flowers has been a professor at Mercer University, a small school in Macon, Ga.

Some of Flowers' literary accomplishments include the 1994 novel I Heard a Crazy Woman Speak: The Autobiography of a Woman Who Comes of Age in the '60s and Falls Apart in the '90s; a 1994 short story called "Hope of Zion"; and a two-act play published in 1993 titled All I Want For Christmas.

Flowers earned a B.A. and an M.F.A. in creative writing from the University of Arizona and a Ph.D. in African-American literature and political thought from Emory University in 1990.

CITY BRIEF

Arts Iowa City receives $15,000

The Iowa City Public Art Committee voted Thursday to allocate $15,000 to Arts Iowa City, a non-profit organization that sells artwork and sponsors several cultural and educational events.

The $15,000 brings Arts Iowa City halfway to its goal of $60,000 that it needs for annual expenses, said Nancy Purington, president of the board of directors for the group.

In October, the organization requested $30,000 from the Iowa City City Council.

The council agreed to allocate $15,000 from its general fund and suggested that Arts Iowa City request additional funding from the Public Art Committee.

The Public Art Committee has a $100,000 annual budget, funded by the City Council, said Karen Franklin, director of city planning.

"Arts Iowa City will still receive $30,000 from the city," she said. "Half of it will be coming through us."

Eckholt is optimistic that this strategy will generate the remaining $30,000 the organization needs.

Indian festival to light up IMU

tional and modern Indian music.

"You practically get to see a little bit of India in Iowa City," said Rashmi Gupta, the association's president and a UI graduate student. "There's more to Indian culture than good dress and good food. I really think it's about the hospitality and courtesy, and I hope that's what this event reflects."

The festival originated as a Hindu celebration of the victory of good over evil, marking King Rama's defeat over demons, Gupta said; it is now celebrated by Indians of all religious affiliations.

Across India, houses are strung with lighted lanterns, and firecrackers are lit in worship of Lakshmi, the goddess of prosperity. Saturday's festival will be lit with Christmas lights, said Vijay Ramnathan, the association's vice president and a UI graduate student.

Ramnathan predicts that a recent cyclone, which is reported to have taken 10,000 to 20,000 lives in the eastern state of Orissa, will not dampen Diwali, a holiday that spans socio-economic ties.

"It will be a little toned down, but it's still going to be very festive," he said, adding that most people will probably contribute half of their money, intended to buy festival related items, to relief funds. "I would look at Diwali as being kind of a cure for them."

He said a booth may be set up to collect relief funds but that the focus will not be taken away from Diwali.

Upon arrival at the UI from India last fall, Ramnathan said, he was greeted with open arms; he sees Diwali as a means of reciprocity for that kindness.

"It's an opportunity for us to celebrate our culture with the community," he said. "When we came here, we were welcomed by the community."

The event is completely run by students; it expects to attract a crowd of 600, with many families attending from Ames, Cedar Rapids, Des Moines and the Quad Cities, Ramnathan said.

"We're trying to bring awareness of Indian culture to the community," Baby said. "It's such a broad culture. We want everyone in the community to partake in it and enjoy the beauty of it."

A $10 ticket, available at the IMU Box Office, is required for a 6:30 p.m. dinner, which will be catered by the India Cafe, Gupta said, adding that people can attend the other festivities from 8:30-11:30 p.m. for free, although they are "strongly encouraged" to buy a ticket to avoid overcrowding.

It's tailgating time - do you know where your parents are?

TAILGATING

for anyone who is not drinking — but because it provides free food, the inevitable complication of inebriated tailgaters dropping on the alcohol-free event does arise, said Steve Parrott, the interim director of university relations.

"I don't doubt whether we have people coming from other tailgates," he said. "Anyone is welcome, and as long as they're nice to us, we'll be nice to them."

Controversy over where and how tailgaters choose to party is always a factor before the football games. Already, just in the 1999 football season, the UI Department of Public Safety has issued 44 charges of possession of alcohol under the legal age, 37 public intoxication tickets, 11 open-container violations and three operating while intoxicated charges, Lt. Lucy Wiederholt said.

"We do look for people to charge with PAULA at tailgates because that often leads to other charges such as injuries, property damages, drunk driving, etc.," she said.

Violators can be punished if they carry open alcoholic beverages on the street and sidewalk, or in parking lots or common areas of apartment buildings, such as stairwells or halls, said Iowa City police Sgt. Sid Jackson. House porches are considered to be private property, but people drinking on them can be asked to show proof of age, and any minors can be ticketed for possession of alcohol under the legal age, he said.

Loud tailgating parties can also draw unwanted attention away from the game.

"It's not unusual to get calls about noise levels during tailgating times. People are more tolerant of noise during the football game, but we do get loud party calls," Jackson said.

During the last home football game, on Oct. 23, Iowa City police issued a noise ordinance violation to a tailgating group on Melrose Avenue, Jackson said.

"During that situation, people called about the loud music, saying it was drowning out sounds from the game, and we responded and gave them a warning," he said. "They turned the music back up, and we gave them a noise ordinance."

Getting popped for a loud party can result in 30 days in or a $100 fine, Jackson said.

I've been told that Iowa is incredible and that I have to come this year. I picked up an Iowa sweater and pennant, and now I'm ready to go.

The project has received initial approval from the state of Iowa Board of Regents; the UI will seek final approval at the regents' meeting in November, Van Oel said.

Merger plan reflects UI administration's mentality

“It is terrible to die of thirst in the ocean. Do you have to salt your truth so heavily that it does not even quench thirst any more?”

— Friedrich Nietzsche

Rebounding from its stymied attempt to eviscerate the International Writing Program, the UI administration has turned its sights toward five language departments in the College of Liberal Arts. Looking to merge these five departments into one, the administration has fired the first verbal shot in what looks to be another battle in the ongoing war between administrative bureaucrats and faculty for control of the UI.

Leading the barrage is none other than Liberal Arts Dean Linda “Scorched Earth” Maxson. Those familiar with the IWP battles will recognize Maxson as one of the more prominent figures in the UI administration rogue's gallery. On Oct. 25, Maxson said five language departments will undergo a review to decide how they will be structured in the future.

The departments — Asian Languages, French and Italian, German, Russian, and Spanish and Portuguese — are separate departments.

Maxson stated that following a collective review of the departments, to be completed in May, a decision will be made on how to structure them.

However, many suspect the decision to merge the departments has already been made and that the bureaucrats — having learned from the public outrage following the attempted gutting of the IWP — are implementing a kinder, gentler public-relations strategy. “I think they have an idea, but they won't tell us because we might fight about it ahead of time,” Russian department Chairman Ray Parrott told the Iowa City Press-Citizen on Oct. 28.

The review and potential merger have been characterized by Maxson as necessary due to declining enrollments. With the exception of Spanish, the five language departments have each seen their enrollment numbers decline over a six-year period. The logical impetus behind the review is that student enrollments affect departmental resources. This is by no means established practice. In fact, it is a deceptive smoke screen.

Departments such as English and communication studies, departments with some of the highest undergraduate enrollments, are understaffed and underfunded. Rising enrollments do not bring increased resources from the UI, although declining enrollments provide a convenient reason to downsize.

The real rationale behind the impending merger is that the languages do not make money for the UI. As fellow columnist James Tracy has convincingly shown, the mission of the UI is a far cry from its public platitudes about undergraduate, liberal-arts education. Its mission is the business of corporate and governmental research.

Governmental funding for languages is practically nonexistent. Former federal resources available for these programs from the National Endowment for the Humanities — or the U.S. Information Agency, in the case of Russian during the Cold War — are things of the past. Like the IWP, the language departments no longer bring in outside funding and therefore become easy targets for bureaucratic raiders.

Far from being just a turf war between administration bureaucrats and faculty, the outcome has serious consequences for current and future students and alumni. If the five language departments are merged into a single department (the department of non-English?), students would suffer from the real decline in financial and faculty resources, and the prestige of the departments would likely suffer.

Parrott pointed out that the merging of the language departments is predicated on short-term enrollment numbers: “What happens when you take away all the resources, and all of a sudden you get a spurt of interest?” (DI, Oct. 28).

Indeed, what happens when you continually cut, or fail to adequately provide, resources to an increasing number of liberal-arts departments? What happens when an institution that has been progressively built up and supported by generations of students and taxpayers over the course of 150 years is drawn and quartered by its supposed leaders? How can we stop this senseless race to the academic bottom?

These questions, I am afraid, are neither considered by our barbarous bureaucrats, nor do they welcome such blunt interrogations.

MATTHEW KILLMEIER

EDITORIAL

Consolidation should be approached with caution

Some at the UI have speculated about consolidating foreign-language departments, and a committee was recently formed to explore the possibility.

Those in favor of consolidation claim that foreign-language programs could save money if they shared resources. Also, it might be easier for smaller foreign-language programs to survive. It has been argued before that the UI should have an Arabic program, and consolidation might be a way to have one: It would be less of a hassle to hire one Arabic professor as part of a larger department than to start an Arabic department from scratch.

Another argument is that consolidated departments might be better equipped to handle cyclical enrollment. When a part of the world becomes an international hot spot, many more students are interested in learning the language that is spoken there. Enrollment grows until attention is focused on another area, and then enrollment drops. If foreign languages share a department, maybe one would be waxing while another was waning, and the department could easily re-allocate resources.

This argument has several problems, however. First, the languages in a department might all grow and shrink at the same time, which would magnify the problem.

Second, should a university really pull resources away from a language, an area of scholarship, just because enrollment drops? Simply because fewer students are interested in learning a language in a given year does not mean that it is not as important to continue to add to the knowledge in that field.

A university is much more than just a student diploma factory. Professors do important work in contributing to knowledge in their fields: doing research, publishing findings and coming up with theories and ideas that influence the world. The UI administration does professors a disservice if it acts as though cutting costs and managing enrollment are the most important issues facing the university.

When the administration tells the academic community that a foreign language isn't important enough to merit its own department, the entire university loses respect and academic credibility. Strong professors and national recognition go to strong departments.

University officials should remember that the UI is a nationally respected academic institution. It is a serious liberal-arts university that has more than just one or two important departments.

The committee should take its task very seriously. Hopefully, its members will start with an open mind and a goal to make the UI the best academic institution it can be.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Elliot's column blows smoke

Beau Elliot's column this week (“The Eternal Halloween bash, full of smoke and mirrors,” DI, Nov. 2) began with one subject and ended in a diatribe against the regulation of tobacco use in public places.

As a firm supporter of smoke-free public facilities, I am not, as Elliot intimates, a Neo-Nazi, but a long-standing liberal who has faced armed troops and drunks in the 1960s to bring an end to the Vietnam War. I have also worked locally in recent years for various liberal causes (most recently the oust of Thornberry), always managing to do it without the product of a meta-national megalith dangling out of my face.

I have some dear friends who are smokers. At my age, all of them are the worse for their habit, but I do not see the need to lecture them because they, unlike Elliot, do not make a virtue out of what has become for them a sad necessity.

But to Elliot I say this: I have always considered liberalism to be based on intelligent observation and scientific evidence, rather than the kind of innuendo and inanities typical of a Rush Limbaugh or tobacco darling Strom Thurmond, who blithely ignore the evidence on side-stream smoking in the name of corporate profit.

Elliot can smoke himself to death for all I care — I am not interested in saving him. I do hope, however, that the young readers he may influence will not be misled by the sidestream smokescreen of his irresponsible pseudointellectualisms.

Bradley decision not disloyal

For 18 years, Bill Bradley served the Democratic Party faithfully in the U.S. Senate. Then, in 1996, he retired from the Senate to run for president. In recent speeches to Democrats, Vice President Al Gore has described Bradley's '96 decision as an act of disloyalty to the party.

We miss Bradley's towering presence in the Senate. But we are enriched to have his stature and intellect in our party's contest for president. We will thrive if we have a true choice in selecting our candidate, a choice based on leadership and issues, not based on petty squabbles and loyalty tests.

Gore would probably prefer to have no competition in his bid for the White House. But he shouldn't confuse Bradley's positive decision to reach for a higher office with political (or personal) disloyalty.

Gore should know better.

Should the UI consolidate its foreign language departments?

“No, because they're all different languages and all different cultures.”

Brad Henderson
UI sophomore

“I think it'd be a good idea if they didn't require foreign languages. I hate Spanish.”

Julie Ryberg
UI junior

“No, because of cultural and historical differences that different languages hit upon.”

Duffy Blackburn
UI senior

“What would be the purpose of that? If they get more money, that'd be great, but then they'd be squabbling among the different languages.”

Kendra Barbie
UI junior

“Yeah, sort of. It would probably create more structure between the different languages, and they could agree on more issues.”

When term papers pile up, head for the barber

If there were to be a Murphy's Law list for college students, right up near the top would have to be one definitive principle: When college kids have a lot of stuff to do, and they don't necessarily feel like doing it, they will search out any alternative form of diversion.

Simplified, or, in “lay-person's” terms, it basically means that when you've got a crap-load of work to do, you'll procrastinate like hell with anything else that looks even the least bit appealing. This includes a wide gamut of things that you would never otherwise consider as diversions. Helping people move, baby-sitting and re-grouting tile fall into this category.

Which is where I find myself now. I've got a paper and a speech whose due dates are really demanding that I finish, so what do I decide to do? Well, by golly, I find that I'm in dire need of a haircut. And I'm not a person who cares much about such trivial things as a fantastic personal appearance.

People have tried to hint around this fact, uttering such subtle phrases as, “Gee, that 1999 outfit would really look great in your 1994 wardrobe” or “I saw this mirror at the store today, and I didn't think you already had one, so, Happy Boxing Day!” Friends are such a blessing.

LEAH KIND

I've discovered that this procrastination-at-any-length syndrome is not a characteristic isolated to me, apparently like the way I walk. (“Whaddya mean? I walk just like everyone else!” “Oh no, Kind, definitely not.”)

A friend of mine took this to the extreme during finals one semester. Instead of studying for a very important test, he just went out and nonchalantly got a tattoo. I don't think my case has gotten quite that severe just yet, but for me, getting a haircut seems just as permanent as having dye injected under my skin.

And maybe I do really kinda sorta need a haircut, but definitely not right at this moment. The very fact that I would consider allowing some Delilah, shears in hand, anywhere near my head plainly shows how much I really don't want to do my real work. I fear change, and change to my look especially. My hair has basically remained in the same style for years and years.

And this should not be taken to construe the notion that I keep it this way because I love it. I've found a look (if one can call a perpetual ponytail a look) that I think doesn't make me appear too stupid, so I've kept it. The last time I had really short hair was in high school, and let's just say it wasn't the best thing I could have done for my fragile ego back then.

Changing one's appearance denotes that the person choosing the alterations has either a lot of self-confidence (or a great facade of self-confidence) or is just pretty blasé about her or his appearance. I am neither.

Sometimes people just decide that it's time for a new look, that dressing and looking the same as they have their whole lives is no longer satisfactory. Plus, it's always a good idea to discover how you can change and, perhaps, enhance your appearance before reaching real maturity. Thus, walking into the office and sitting down in your cubicle, ready to crunch some numbers and sporting a blue mohawk, is probably not the best career move one could make.

Being ready to make such changes could be seen as an important step in maturing and becoming more of an adult. I commend all those folks ready to make such a leap, while I cower here behind the kindergarten-activity table.

And there's no one absolute incident that a psychiatrist could point to and thus classify my entire fear of haircuts as a phobia. I've had no dangerous run-ins with the shampoo person, or other particularly hair-raising experiences. It's not the act of the haircut itself I fear, it's the resulting repercussions I dread.

But through repeatedly psyching myself up, and then psyching myself out, but then psyching myself up again, I have come closer and closer to completing the deed. Of course, there are many ways for a modification-weenie like myself to dance around the actual fulfillment of the mission. One such ploy is to waltz into the hair-logging establishment, ask them if they have an appointment open right then, that very minute, and then if they don't, waltz back out the door.

This technique is remarkably effective. Surprisingly enough, the coif-cutting places around town don't cater their entire schedules to accommodate me. I was really astonished, as I am almost guaranteed to get a haircut at least twice a year.

Now the crunch time is here. I made the appointment and even used my real name. I can't back out of it now, for fear that I'd get blacklisted and be forced to wield a Flowbee in the privacy of my own room. And I guess that even if I end up looking like Keith Richards on a good day, at least I'll have taken a chance.

Now I know how Samson felt.

Fear grips Seattle area after shooting

Police call the Wednesday slayings in a boat shop a "deliberate, calculated act."

By Tim Klass
Associated Press

SEATTLE — Residents left their porch lights on and walked their children to school Thursday in the middle-class neighborhood where a camouflaged gunman killed two boat shop employees and wounded two others before vanishing. Police called Wednesday's shooting a "deliberate, calculated act" and tried to reassure residents of Seattle's Wallingford district that they were safe, even with the killer at large. Police said they did not know his identity and had not found the handgun used in the attack.

"We are confident this was not a random act," Police Chief Norm

Stamper said. "I think that those who live and work in that area can be assured that they are not at risk ... This is not an individual who is going to repeat the act."

Stamper would not elaborate on why police thought it was a deliberate attack.

One man was questioned and released overnight. Police were searching in the neighborhood around Northlake Shipyard for the man in his 30s who entered the nondescript, two-story building, strode into a back office with gun drawn, and opened fire without a word.

Peter Giles, 27, and Russell James Brisendine, 43, were killed at the shipyard. The two wounded workers were in serious condition.

The suspect was described as having curly brown hair and a mustache, a baseball cap, sunglasses and a dark overcoat over camouflage clothing.

Police used search lights through the night as they checked yards, basements and garden sheds. Residents also left porch lights on, making the neighborhood "so bright you could barely sleep," Paula Nemzek said.

Nemzek was waiting with her daughter, Cezanne Camacho, for a school bus Thursday half a mile from the shipyard.

"We're still a little worried," she said. She usually walks her daughter to the bus stop, but "a lot of other moms are saying they feel a little worried about letting their kids walk to the bus stop by themselves today."

At Hamilton Middle School, the school closest to the shooting scene, doors were locked and five security guards were on duty rather than the normal force of one.

Clinton, pro sports push inner-city hope

The president says now is the time for the poor to share in the nation's prosperity.

By Sonya Ross
Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — President Clinton sat in the Malcolm X Shabazz High School library, his back to a shelf loaded with university catalogues, listening to 17 teen-agers dream aloud of college and careers.

There was the aspiring surgeon who wants to go to Princeton, the would-be lawyer with her eye on Spelman College, the athlete who may become a chef — if the pro football thing doesn't work out.

These students were already assured of scholarships upon completing a Project Grad program, which helps at-risk teenagers improve their grades and steers them toward college. And on Thursday, the New Jersey Nets adopted Shabazz High as part of a $2.5 million commitment to inner cities from the National Basketball Association, National Football League and Major League Baseball.

Clinton challenged other teams and sports to follow the lead.

He gestured at Nets players alongside him onstage, saying, "There are a lot of guys this tall that aren't playing basketball. They got a chance, and they made the most out of it. And that's what we ought to offer to every child."

In addition, several major corporations committed about $4 million in response to Clinton's "New Markets" initiative — a plan to ensure that the nation's less-well-off rural and urban areas share in the booming economy.

"Now is the time to say the rest of American should be part of our prosperity, and they are the next great opportunity — the new markets of the 21st century," Clinton said.

Later, Clinton was traveling to Hartford, Conn., to tour an indoor marketplace that is helping to revitalize a downtrodden Latino community near Trinity College.

The New Markets proposal seeks to spur $15 billion in new investment in poor communities through tax credits and loan guarantees.

While Clinton was in the library, other students lined the bleachers in the gym, swaying to the rhythms of the marching band and chanting along with the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who exhorted them to "keep hope alive." They erupted into cheers when Clinton walked in with the athletes, including many of the New Jersey Nets and their star, Jayson Williams.

Second defendant in Matthew Shepard case gets life

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — Aaron McKinney, who beat gay college student Matthew Shepard and left him to die on the prairie, avoided the death penalty Thursday by agreeing to serve life in prison without parole and promising never to appeal his conviction.

Shepard's parents agreed to the deal. "I would like nothing better than to see you die, Mr. McKinney, but now is the time to begin the healing process,"

Shepard's father, Dennis, said in court. "Every time you celebrate Christmas, a birthday, or the Fourth of July, remember Matthew isn't. Every time you wake up in that prison cell, remember you had the opportunity and the ability to stop your actions that night."

McKinney, 22, a high school dropout and drug dealer, is the second defendant in Shepard's slaying to get life in prison. Russell Henderson, 22, pleaded guilty to murder earlier this year.

McKinney was convicted Wednesday of murder, aggravated robbery and kidnapping for luring Shepard from a Laramie bar, robbing him of $20, lashing him to a fence and cracking his skull with blows from a pistol. Investigators said that robbery was the main motive but that McKinney and Henderson singled out the slightly built Shepard because he was gay.

The jury was to begin hearing arguments Thursday on whether McKinney should get the death penalty or life in prison. Instead, he accepted a deal that his lawyers had proposed to prosecutors Wednesday.

"I really don't know what to say other than that I'm truly sorry to the entire Shepard family," McKinney said in court. "Never will a day go by I won't be ashamed for what I have done."

Thousands mark embassy takeover

■ On the hostage crisis' 20th anniversary, the Iranian crowd is smaller than in previous years.

By Afshin Valinejad
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Chanting invectives against the United States and burning Uncle Sam's effigy a hundred times over, 10,000 students rallied outside the former U.S. Embassy Thursday to mark the 20th anniversary of its seizure by Islamic militants.

But the demonstration was a far cry from rallies held in previous years, when hundreds of thousands gathered to celebrate the takeover of the mission in Tehran.

The low turnout reflects a diminishing enthusiasm for the militant fervor that drove the students to storm the embassy on Nov. 4, 1979, and hold 52 Americans hostage for 444 days. It is also another clear sign of the struggle for control of Iran's future between hard-line clerics and reformist President Mohammad Khatami.

On Wednesday, about 500 Khatami supporters held their own rally, during which they demanded a new foreign policy, chanting: "In policy and diplomacy, we will deal with the United States with rationality."

Countering the reformers, hard-liners Thursday yelled: "We will always consider America as our enemy. We condemn those who talk in favor of dialogue with America."

Speakers — in addition to a statement read at the end of the rally — criticized the government's recent moves toward better relations with the United States.

The demonstrators burned hundreds of Uncle Sam effigies amid chants of "Death to America! Death to Israel!" Members of the hard-line group of paramilitary volunteers, the Basij, scaled the scaffolding of a four-story building opposite the embassy to burn American and Israeli flags.

"America is not looking for relations with Iran. Instead, it wants Iran to surrender and become dependent on it," Mohsen Rezaei, a former commander of the elite Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps, told the crowd.

The competing rallies are further evidence of the rift between hard-liners, who champion the fiery spirit of the 1979 Islamic revolution, and moderates who back Khatami's policy of a "dialogue between civilizations."

relations with Iran. In January 1998, Khatami appealed for "a crack in the wall of mistrust" and proposed exchanges of scholars, athletes and artists. Several U.S. academics and sports teams have since visited Iran.

The embassy building is now used as a school for paramilitary revolutionary guards.

Indians burn bodies to prevent disease in cyclone aftermath

PARADWIP, India (AP) — Officials set fire to hundreds of bodies stacked on the beach Thursday, hoping to stave off disease in eastern India, where the first significant aid was finally beginning to arrive a week after a devastating storm. Among the dead were migrant laborers who had fled crippling poverty in their villages to seek jobs in the port city of Paradwip. The huge shantytown where they lived, located dangerously close to the sea, was wiped out by the giant waves generated by the cyclone.

Ajit Kumar Das saw the waves rise, fall back, then rise again like growing mountains. He and 20 other men from the shantytown tried desperately to save relatives and friends.

"We crouched and ran because we would be hurled away if we stood up," he said.

Because migrant workers made up most of the shantytown's residents, the real death toll in Paradwip may never be known — there are few records, and unclaimed bodies were quickly cremated. The official death toll from the Oct. 29 storm has only reached 924, according to the Orissa government, but rescue workers expect the number to reach several thousand. Some have estimated 10,000.

The first distribution of food was expected in Paradwip today.

Life with Herring begins for Hawkeyes

■ Iowa takes on the Brazilian National team in exhibition game Saturday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena

By Lisa Colton
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's basketball team will face its first competitive season as the Hawkeyes when they play the Brazilian National Team at Carver-Hawkeye Arena Saturday.

The tip-off for the Hoopfest exhibition game is scheduled for 7 p.m.

The Hawkeyes lost only one game from last season, graduated center Amy Herring, and several players returning in 1999. The team is anxious to get underway.

"We want to be in the Big Ten and get into the NCAA tournament," Consuegra said. "We will persist the whole time."

"We are working on it and want to come in with the same attitude and determination that we had last year. We may be a little young, but we are wise we aren't."

No seniors are on the team this season. Consuegra, a junior, and Randi Peterson are the only players returning from last season. Peterson also returns for a second year with a year of experience under her belt.

Lee sees the team's potential.

"It is a great thing to have no seniors," Lee said. "We have two solid years with talented players. I really like that, our sophomore and junior players more combined playing for any other team in the world. We have the most experience in playing for Iowa."

Life without Herrig begins for Hawkeyes

Iowa takes on the the Brazilian National team in an exhibition game Saturday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

By Lisa Colonno
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's basketball team will face its first competition of the season as the Hawkeyes host the Brazilian National Team at Carver-Hawkeye Arena Saturday.

The tip-off for the Wendy's Hoopfest exhibition game is scheduled for 7 p.m.

The Hawkeyes lost only one player from last season, graduated senior center Amy Herrig, and with nine players returning in 1999-2000, the team is anxious to get the season underway.

"We want to be in the top five in the Big Ten and get back to the NCAA tournament," guard Cara Consuegra said. "We want to be consistent the whole time."

"We are working on consistency and want to come in every day with the same attitude and get it done. We may be a little young, but experience-wise we aren't."

No seniors are on Iowa's roster this season. Consuegra and forward Randi Peterson are the team's eldest members as juniors. Seven sophomores also return for the Hawkeyes, all with a year of experience under their belts.

Lee sees the team's youth as beneficial.

"It is a great thing (that we have no seniors)," Lee said. "We will have two solid years with the same faces and players. I really like that. Along with that, our sophomore class has more combined playing time than any other team in the nation, so we have the most experience. The best experience is playing time."

Defense on the defensive for Iowa

It has not been a strong season statistically for Iowa this year, but the Hawkeyes hope to turn it around against Illinois.

By Greg Wallace
 The Daily Iowan

The images flash through your head like a nightmare caused by some bad pizza.

Ohio State's Ken-Yon Rambo sneaking behind Tarig Holman, and catching a ball for a 58-yard gain. Buckeye quarterback Steve Bellisari weaving his way through the Iowa defense like it's not even a challenge. Indiana's Antwaan Randle El being pinned on the left side of the field, and somehow finding his receiver for a 49 yard touchdown.

And that's just the passing game.

Don't forget Iowa State's Darren Davis pounding through the Iowa defense, or the many previously unknown fullbacks that have torn through the front seven almost unchallenged.

These are just a few of the many examples of big plays and bad decisions made by the Iowa defense. The defense has been plagued all season by poor tackling and poorer pass coverage. They're problems Iowa hopes to correct before Saturday's game with Illinois.

"I'm at a loss, I wish I knew," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said after the Ohio State game. "The last two weeks, I've been at a loss for how we've played on defense."

Through eight games, Iowa is giving up an average of 444.9 yards per game, almost 50 yards worse than the 398 yards per game the 1998 Hawkeye defense allowed. Iowa ranks 108th in total defense among the 114 Division I-A teams, and 110th in both rushing and passing defense.

It's been the little things that have given Iowa fits in 1999.

Brian Ray/The Daily Iowan

Iowa's Joe Slattery tries to take down Ohio State running back Michael Wiley during the Hawkeyes' 41-11 loss Oct. 30. The defense has taken its lumps this season trying to stop the run.

Iowa's main problem against Ohio State was that they just couldn't seem to make a third down stop. The Buckeyes converted three third-and-long situations in the first half, including a Steve Bellisari touchdown run on third-and-goal from the Iowa 18.

"Defensively, it was kind of disappointing," Ferentz said. "In the first half, we had some situations where we just couldn't get off of the field."

Speed, or lack thereof, has also plagued Iowa. The quicker, taller Rambo seemed to be permanently open Saturday, and if an Iowa defensive back did pick him up, he was no more than a stride or juke away from catching the ball and burning the defensive back covering him.

Speed isn't exactly something that you can add in a week's time, though. It's built over months and months of hard work, and even then the gains are minimal unless you have natural ability. Ferentz recognizes that his defense could use more speed, but doesn't see it as a solution to all that ails.

"You're always trying to get more speed out on the field, you'd love to," Ferentz said. "That's always an advantage, especially defensively. But we just have to play better, a little more cohesively."

He says that experience could be the key to this year's defenders closing the gap. He feels that the linebacker that looks slow this year may not be

Iowa's last test before UConn

Steve Alford said he will sub less against the Dominican Republic tonight at 7:05.

By Mike Kelly
 The Daily Iowan

Even though it will not count in the standings, Iowa is treating tonight's exhibition against the Dominican Republic as an official game.

Steve Alford said he would give his team a chance to show if they can maintain the intensity needed to play an entire 40 minutes effectively.

One of the main question marks heading into tonight's 7:05 tip-off is whether Iowa center Jacob Jaacks can play more than 30 minutes without getting deep into foul trouble.

"We won't do as much subbing against the Dominican team," Alford said. "I need to see if Jake can play 30 minutes before I try to play him that way in a game."

Against the World All-Stars last Sunday, Jaacks was dominating in the paint with a team-leading 14 rebounds, but fouled out of the game with seven minutes left.

Jaacks said he needs to cut down on what he and Alford call "tick-tack" fouls — fouls that are not aggressive and could easily be avoided with a more cerebral approach to defense.

The 6-foot-8 senior from Cedar Rapids said foul trouble would be the only reason he would not be able to go the entire game. After an intense preseason conditioning program, Jaacks said he was down to 235 lb. and was in the best shape of his life.

"This is going to be a test," Jaacks said. "The main thing I have to watch are the fouls that are mental breakdowns. Those are the ones I am going to have to eliminate."

The Dominican Republic Select Team takes the place of the Moscow All-Stars who were unable to enter the United States in time for the game. Tickets to the game are $10 each and fans that show their Iowa football tickets for the Illinois game get in the door for $5.

Iowa soccer makes first post-season appearance

Iowa takes on rival Illinois today in the first round of the Big Ten Tournament.

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Write November 5, 1999, in the Hawkeye record books.

Today's date marks the first ever post-season game in Iowa women's soccer history.

Big Ten Tournament action opens at 11 a.m. with No. 3 seed Iowa, 13-6 overall and 7-3 in the conference taking on No. 6 seed Illinois (11-7-2, 3-5-2) in Bloomington, Ind.

Iowa is 2-1 lifetime against Illinois, including a 2-0 defeat two weeks ago under the lights in Champaign, Ill., but the favored Hawkeyes don't expect Illinois to simply concede the win.

"I see Illinois coming out strong. They'll obviously be looking for revenge," said senior Jenny Hyngstrom. "It will be really exciting. The three, four, five and six seeds are all pretty even."

The qualifiers in order of seeding are: Penn State, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, Ohio State, Illinois, Michigan State and Wisconsin.

Even though Scott Mullen's stats over two games are more than comparable with Kurt Kittner's, the lack of a running game for the Hawkeyes makes me give the edge to the Fighting Illini.

Who has the edge?
By Mike Kelly

COACHES
Ron Turner inherited a position similar to Kirk Ferentz when he took the job at Illinois. He is starting to see improvement.

INTANGIBLES
The Hawkeyes have dominated Illinois in the last three meetings, and Iowa can't really go winless in the Big Ten... I think.

SPECIAL TEAMS
Tim Dodge is still leading the Big Ten in kickoff returns and Jason Baker has been solid all season kicking the football away. Ferentz and his staff have hit special teams hard this year and it shows.

DEFENSE
Defensive woes have hindered Iowa all season and the Ohio State game magnified it. Stopping the run is Iowa's biggest challenge and until they reverse the trend of allowing more than 200 yards a game, I can't pick them.

Iowa got off to a quick start, scoring the first eight points of the game, but the Ohio State offense converted some key third downs and ran the ball 51 times.
The Buckeyes went on to defeat the Hawkeyes 41-11.

Say this for the 1999 Iowa football team, they are well-coached. Rarely do they commit stupid penalties and that shows up in the statistics. Give props to Illinois coach Ron Turner as well, his squad is second in penalty yardage.

HAWKEYE BRIEFS

Men's Tennis
This weekend: Six Iowa men's tennis players will travel to Wisconsin to participate in the last meet of the fall season, the Rolex Tournament. This is a regional tournament with 35 teams, including all of the Big Ten teams. Tyler Cleveland, Jake Wilson, Petar Mandic, Stuart Waters, and J.R. Chidley will be playing singles competition; and Eric Koslowski and Waters will join forces in doubles competition. Players who finish first and second in this single-elimination tournament will advance to the nationals that will be held in February.
Standout Statistic: Two Iowa players have advanced to the nationals of the Rolex Tournament in the past. Bryan Crowley won the event in 1994 and got a chance to attend the national tournament. Klas Bergstrom was a runner-up during the early 90s and also advanced to the national level.
Coach's comment: "This tournament is going to be very tough competition because the very best players of each team are going to be there," said Steve Houghton. "I think that Tyler Cleveland definitely has a chance of making it to the finals, and the other guys are quite capable of doing well too, but everyone is going to have to play really hard to do it."

consists of 32 teams.

Volleyball
This weekend: The 4-16 (3-10 Big Ten) Hawkeyes travel to Evanston Ill. this Saturday night to take on the 2-20 (0-12 Big Ten) Northwestern Wildcats at 7 p.m. Both teams are struggling in the tough Big Ten conference this year, as Northwestern has not won a match in the league yet. The Hawkeyes have racked up three Big Ten wins, however, they haven't won a match since Oct. 8.
Last match: Iowa lost to No. 19 Minnesota in three games on Wednesday in Minneapolis.
Previous matchup: The Hawkeyes dominated Northwestern in their match earlier this season, winning in three games (15-8, 15-11, 15-7). Iowa was led by senior Julie Williams who amassed 23 kills in the outing. Sophomore Sara Meyermann added 13 kills.

Player's outlook: "This is a game we definitely need to win," said Williams. "If we go out, play well and do our best, I think we can win."
Next weekend: The Hawkeyes stay on the road to face Wisconsin and Purdue on the 12th and 13th of November. Both games are scheduled to start at 7 p.m.
-Jeremy Schnitker

Gabbert, Beglin honored
Two Iowa coaches were named Big Ten coaches of the year in their respective sports.
Stephanie Gabbert was named the Coach of the Year in soccer while Beth Beglin won the honor in field hockey.

Gabbert took her team from ninth place to third place in the Big Ten and the team clinched their first Big Ten Tournament berth.
Beglin's team dominated the Big Ten this season, losing only once for their first Big Ten title since 1996.
Both coaches are competing in the Big Ten Tournaments this weekend.
The soccer team is looking for a bid to the NCAA Tournament, while the field hockey team hopes to play host to a NCAA regional next weekend.

IBF president accused of taking bribes

■ A federal prosecutor claims IBF rankings were bought and not earned.

By Jeffery Gold
Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — In the latest blow to the integrity of boxing, the IBF president and three officials were indicted on charges of taking bribes from promoters and managers to manipulate rankings during a 13-year scheme.

None of the 23 boxers believed to be involved was named in the indictment, but it referred to a fight in which a heavyweight champion faced a previously unranked boxer in 1995. There was only one such fight that year, when George Foreman defeated Axel Schulz to retain his title.

The 32-count indictment, issued Wednesday by a federal grand jury and unsealed Thursday after the arrest of the IBF president's son, includes charges of conspiracy, racketeering and money laundering.

"In the IBF, rankings were bought, not earned," federal prosecutor Robert F. Cleary said. "The defendants completely corrupted the IBF ranking system."

Stuart Ramson/Associated Press
Robert W. Lee Sr., left, head of the IBF, was indicted on charges of taking bribes of up to $25,000 Thursday.

He said the bribes, totaling $338,000, started shortly after the IBF was founded in 1984 and affected rankings in 10 of the 15 weight classes, with larger payments made in the heavier divisions.

Indicted were IBF president Robert W. Lee Sr., 65; his son Robert Lee Jr., 38, a liaison to the president; former Virginia boxing commissioner Donald William Brennan, 86, a past president of the U.S. Boxing Association, which is now the IBF; and Francisco Fernandez of Colombia, an IBF commissioner. Each faces up to 20 years in prison if convicted.

The elder Lee was a New Jersey boxing commissioner until being removed from office in 1985 after a state panel ruled he violated ethics regulations. He denied the latest accusations after being released on $100,000 bond.

"I'm innocent of these outrageous charges," Lee said, declining to answer any questions.

Cleary would not say if a June raid on the Florida offices of promoter Don King was related to the investigation, and declined to say if King was a target.

The investigation began before a controversial draw in the Evander Holyfield-Lennox Lewis heavyweight title fight, which prompted New York law enforcement agencies to start their own probes of the IBF. A rematch is scheduled for Nov. 13 in Las Vegas.

In Mexico City, WBC president Jose Sulaiman said the IBF indictment "is indeed shocking and it might hurt the image of boxing."

next year after a winter locked in the weight room.

"You might not be quick enough, you may not read things as quickly," Ferentz said. "That's experience sometimes. There's football speed as opposed to real speed. There are a lot of players that have played pretty good defense that have defied size and speed requirements."

Ferentz has gone to a youth movement on his defense in past weeks, and it has been successful. Freshman linebacker Fred Barr has emerged as one of the unit's rising stars.

In addition, freshman Colin Cole and sophomore Shane Hall have seen significant action all season long.

Ferentz said he is happy with his defense's performance, despite the adverse results.

"We're going to have to do some evaluating and make sure we have some guys in the right spot," Ferentz said. "I'm comfortable where we're at right now."

the added incentive of a possible Big Ten title, Iowa coach Stephanie Gabbert expects emotions to be high.

"It's exciting given our history and our competitive games. There's not a lot of motivation needed for this game," Gabbert said. Taliaferro and her Fighting Illini are just as excited as the Hawkeyes.

"We want to play our style and remain composed," Taliaferro said. "We have the personnel to play closer than we did. We're excited to have another chance at them."

The winner of the game will play either Michigan or Michigan State on Saturday at noon. The Hawkeyes split the season's matches against the Michigan teams, falling to Michigan, 1-0 but defeating the Spartans by the same score.

"We're looking for the win. We feel confident," Hynegstrom said. "We'd like to reach the semis and maybe play Michigan again. Everyone's excited and ready to play."

overall and 7-9 in the Big Ten despite the dominating play of Herring. The All-American, All-Big Ten player averaged 18.7 points per game for the Hawkeyes. She scored 504 total points and broke a school record with 42 points scored in a single game.

This season Consuegra, who owns Iowa's single-season assist record at 153, and Peterson are taking over the leadership role.

"It's harder for me to get used to it," Peterson said. "I gave the ball to Amy a lot and I was not a go-to (player) in the post. But this year we have balance so one person doesn't have to have all the pressure on them."

Singh quickly falling in love with Valderrama

SOTOGRADE, Spain (AP) — Valderrama Golf Club was nothing like Tiger Woods or the rest of the Americans remembered from the Ryder Cup two years ago. All Vijay Singh knew was that his round Thursday was worth savoring.

On wider fairways and slicker greens, Singh kept the ball in great position most of the day for a 4-under 67 that gave him a one-stroke lead over Jim Furyk after the first round of the American Express Championship, the final World Golf Championship event of the year.

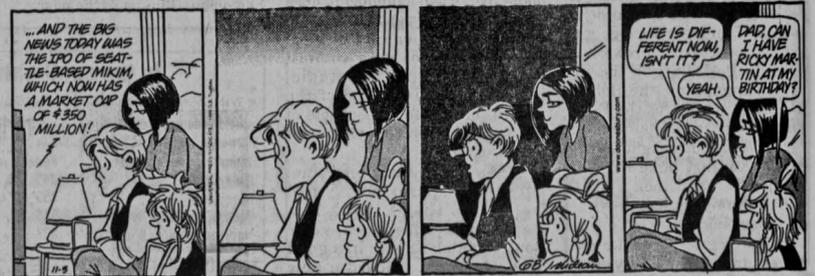

"It's a golf course where you need to place the tee shots and iron shots precisely," Singh said. "When you play well, you like it. I liked it today."

The 67 was impressive considering the "levante" wind that swirled off the Mediterranean coast and kept low scores to a minimum. Only 11 players from the elite, 62-man field managed to break par.

Psycho-Celtic music to Drover you wild

The Drovers will drive into Iowa City for another of its widely anticipated shows.

By Jeremy Erwin
The Daily Iowan

If you mention the Drovers to anyone who has been around Iowa City for a while, you'll most likely hear, "Yeah, I love that band!" or "Sure, I've seen it once or twice." Tonight at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St., this Celtic-psychadelic four-piece will once again make its annual fall pilgrimage to Iowa City.

Formed nearly a decade ago, the Drovers has amassed a dedicated regional fan base through three remarkable albums; however, its outstanding live performances are what have put the band on the map.

Basic rock 'n' roll instrumentation, flavored with mandolins, electric fiddle and a distinct Celtic rock sound, may keep you doing an Irish jig until your legs give way, but an occasional reworking of the Beatles' "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds" or the Rolling Stones' "Sympathy for the Devil" will stop you dead in your tracks.

The Daily Iowan caught up with guitarist/vocalist Mike Kirkpatrick as the band took a break from recording its fourth studio album in its hometown of Chicago.

DI: You regularly make two appearances in Iowa City every year. Is this something you do with a lot of college towns?

MK: Well, of course we like to come back to places where our music is enjoyed, and that's obviously the case with Iowa City. I've always thought that you can tell a lot about a city by its used-record stores, and Iowa City has some amazing ones, which shows that the people there really know their music. It's a very cosmopolitan city, and we really enjoy the crowds that turn out.

DI: The Drovers hasn't put out an album since 1995, but I've heard that you've been in and out of the studio lately working on a new one.

MK: Well, actually I'm still in the studio as we speak. It's progressing with a good hand. We've had a number of false starts over the past year or so, trying a number of different recording methods and such. We'll probably stay in the studio, recording until the end of the month, mix stuff for a couple of weeks, and then see what happens from there.

The Drovers (above) will perform with California Lightening today at Gabe's at 9 p.m.

DI: You went through a lineup change approximately two years ago that I think had very little effect on your sound, which I mean in a good way. However, I heard a new track on the Internet called "Dreamy," which seems quite a bit different from your previous work.

MK: There are a lot of different things on this album that we've never done before, like "Dreamy," which is a different type of thing for us.

One of the great things about the studio situation that we're in is that we have a lot of access to it, so we can kind of come in whenever we want, giving us the freedom to do a lot of things we've never had the chance to do before. We're having a few guest artists record with us, including a trombone player who used to perform with the band. If everything works out

Henley sues Sarasota man for infringement

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — A man who owns several Web addresses containing Don Henley's name is being sued by the musician for copyright infringement.

Henley and his company, Eagles Ltd., filed the suit two weeks ago in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles against Mark Elsis of Sarasota.

The suit faults Elsis for using addresses that include Henley's name, the name of one of his songs and the name of his former band, the Eagles.

Henley is seeking an injunction against Elsis' use of the domain names, the transfer of the names to Henley and the Eagles, and the payment of damages and attorneys' fees and costs.

Elsis, 41, runs LOVEARTH.net, an organization that attempts to raise consciousness about the importance of rain forests. He also controls approximately 2,000 Internet addresses that he sells at prices ranging from $5,000 to $100,000.

Elsis has written thousands of letters to Henley and other celebrities, urging

Cash recovers from pneumonia

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Johnny Cash has been released from a hospital after a two-week stay to recover from pneumonia.

The 67-year-old country star left Baptist Hospital on Sunday night, hospital spokeswoman Jessica Etz said.

Cash has Shy-Drager's syndrome, which can cause blackouts, tremors and muscle stiffness, and makes him more susceptible to contracting pneumonia. He was hospitalized twice last year for pneumonia and nearly died from it last fall.

A Word From the Editor

For Hawkeyes, it's not the wins, it's the game

By Mike Kelly
The Daily Iowan

It is November, and the possibility of this year's Hawkeye football team going to a bowl is non-existent. With the changing of the weather, the talk around Iowa City is changing as well—to basketball season.

There are three games left to salvage something of the season, three more chances for this team to send seniors like Matt Bowen, Bashir Yamini and Rob Thein out like winners after their honorable Iowa careers.

Remember the baseball movie Bull Durham? The 1987 film was centered on baseball, but the themes in the movie regard the beauty of persevering through life.

A few parallels could be drawn between this year's Iowa football team and Crash Davis, the protagonist in the movie. Crash was an aging catcher who was a guy just trying to finish out his final season in the minor leagues on a struggling team.

Late in the season, Crash breaks the record for most career home runs in the minor leagues and only a few people notice. Crash would never be good enough to be a major leaguer, but he stuck around long enough to break the record because he respected and loved the game of baseball.

The same can be said for Iowa players. In this edition of Pregame, we took the time to find out what was it about the game of football that made the players' love for the game transcend the standings.

We tried to find out what made practice worth it every day, especially for the seniors who did not have a next year to go through.

We found out it was not the game in and of itself, rather it was the mentality of the people that played the game that made the end of the season worthwhile, despite the 1-7 record.

If Iowa beats Illinois this Saturday, it is doubtful that it will make the cut on

We have an ongoing love affair with the underdog. The Doug Fluties and the Sacramento Kings of this world hold our attention and capture our hearts in a way even the most successful athletes cannot.

Sportscenter, or even be more than a space filler in newspapers outside of the region. But like Crash's home run in Bull Durham, getting attention is not the point of why the players devote so much of their college careers to the sport of football.

One of the most respected characteristics in our culture is perseverance. We have an ongoing love affair with the underdog. The Doug Fluties and the Sacramento Kings of this world hold our attention and capture our hearts in a way even the most successful athletes cannot.

That might be one of the reasons fans still flock to Kinnick every Saturday, regardless of the record. In supporting a team that keeps doing all they can to win, the fans persevere as well.

Maybe an even more fundamental reason why the players still play the game and the fans still revolve their weekends around college football in Iowa City is the sheer joy that comes from playing or watching a game.

It is like what Crash told his protégé after a particularly bad game— "This game's fun, goddamnit!"

The Offensive Line

The Daily Iowan - PREGAME - Friday, November 5, 1999

Scott Mullen and Kevin Kasper

Blondes have more fun

Scott Mullen and Kevin Kasper have emerged from obscurity to become Iowa's No. 1 offensive option.

By Greg Wallace
The Daily Iowan

Unless it's some sort of blond-haired telekinesis, Scott Mullen and Kevin Kasper claim they have no sort of special bond or connection.

Because they never lie, the numbers suggest otherwise.

When Mullen took over the starting job three weeks ago, Kasper had only fourteen catches and 142 yards. Since then, the former walk-on has snagged 25 balls for 255 yards, nearly doubling his pre-1999 career totals of 14 catches and 281 yards. He tied an Iowa record for receptions in a game with 13 grabs against Ohio State last week.

Kasper's rise to prominence has paralleled Mullen's; the duo is clearly Iowa's No. 1 receiver/passer combination, something that the offense has been searching for all season.

"There's no explanation," Kasper says. "You just have to get open and run good routes, and you have to get the ball and make something happen."

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz can't explain it, either. "I don't know, maybe it's the hairdos," Ferentz said, making light of the blonde dye job that both Mullen and Kasper sport. "Some things just happen. Kevin gets open a lot out there."

All kidding aside, there's more to the duo's success than a bottle of Lo'real. The duo's emergence can be attributed to Iowa's increased use of the short passing game and the offensive line's improvement over the past few weeks.

The short passing attack that Iowa has employed means the inexperienced line doesn't have to hold their blocks in place as long as they would for a running attack, or a high-wire passing game, a la the days of Tim Dwight. The absence of speedster Kahlil Hill, suspended for the season due to an unspecified violation, doesn't help either. Iowa's average per catch is down more than two yards this season, to 11.1 from 13.7 in 1998.

"The routes have been called to (Kasper's) side, and he's a good receiver who plays with a lot of emotion, and gives 100% intensity," Mullen said. "He finds a way to get open, and when a guy's that open, you have to throw him the ball."

Kasper's rise has been almost as amazing as that of the guy throwing him the ball. Mullen began the fall as the No. 3 quarterback, after losing a battle with Kyle McCann and Randy Reiners for the starting job. It would not be a permanent position. In two starts, McCann failed to move the offense, giving way to Reiners for the season's third game.

Reiners had a bit more success, collecting the season's only win, a 24-3 victory over

Northern Illinois. But the same offensive line that has protected Mullen so well gave defenses free will to attack Reiners, and he was forced to the sidelines with a myriad of injuries after the Northwestern game Oct. 16.

Enter Mullen. And what an entrance it has been. He threw for 426 yards and the offense had a season-high 31 points against Indiana Oct. 23. Mullen followed it up with a 283 yard day against Ohio State, although the numbers were tainted by three interceptions. Ferentz admitted that he was apprehensive as to how Mullen would respond, but Mullen solidified his grip on the starting position, no small feat for a guy who was No. 3 just two months ago.

Ferentz says that Mullen reminds him of another No. 3 man who made the move up on the depth chart in his previous term.

"I'm a dumb line coach, but the only thing I was sure of coming out of spring ball in 1987 was who our No. 3 quarterback was, it was Chuck Hartlieb," Ferentz said. "I was sure that Tom Poholsky or (Dan) McGwire were the top guys. And we all know how that one turned out."

Hartlieb had one of the best passing seasons in Iowa history in the 1987 campaign. He passing for more than 3,000 yards, and 19 touchdowns, leading Iowa to a 10-3 season and a Holiday Bowl win. The similarities between Hartlieb and the man they call 'Moon' could become more apparent if Mullen gets a full season behind center.

Mullen knew he had the ability to be Iowa's starter; he just needed the opportunity.

"You get your chance, and you make the most of it," Mullen said. "I'm getting my chance now, and I'm trying to make the most of it. I'm just trying to make the best plays I can."

It wasn't easy being the No. 3 guy, but Mullen knew that the No. 1 slot was always just within his reach.

"It was frustrating for me being No. 3," Mullen said. "You want to be No. 1. But the coaches said, you never know what can happen. The jump from No. 3 to No. 1 can happen just like that, and it did for me."

It hasn't been a perfect jump. Mullen was pulled down on the final play of the Indiana game short of the goal line, when he should have gone out of bounds. And three interceptions in OSU territory underscored the point. Mullen will suffer growing pains, just as any quarterback with three career starts will experience. Of course, moving the Iowa offense the way he has tempers some doubts about his ability.

"That's just something that I'll correct," Mullen said. "I'm just going to do everything I can to make myself a better player. The more I play, the more comfortable I get in my role, and the better I'll be able to make plays."

The connection may be fleeting. In fact, it may even be part of the design. Kasper has already taken a beating typical of a top Big Ten receiver, and he is questionable for this week. Mullen says he wants balance in the passing game, and that Kasper is a key to opening up the deep-ball offense that wideouts like Bashir Yamini and Tim Dodge thrive in.

"I think teams are going to flock to him a little more, and it's going to open things up more for the other guys," Mullen said. "I hope it does."

This most unlikely of combinations may not last, but for now, let's just savor what Mullen and Kasper have given us: a couple of bleached-blonde surfer guys, playing catch. And if you think it's fun now, wait till they actually win a game or two.

The Kasper File

1999: 39 catches for 397 yards and one touchdown. Has averaged 56.7 yards per game.

Tied Nick Bell's school record for catches in a game with 13, in a loss to Ohio State.

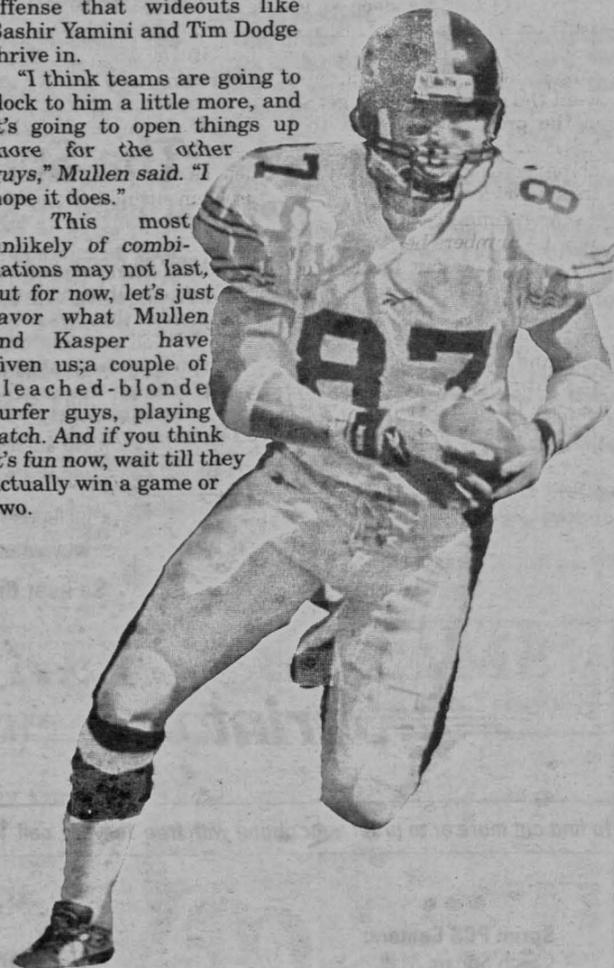

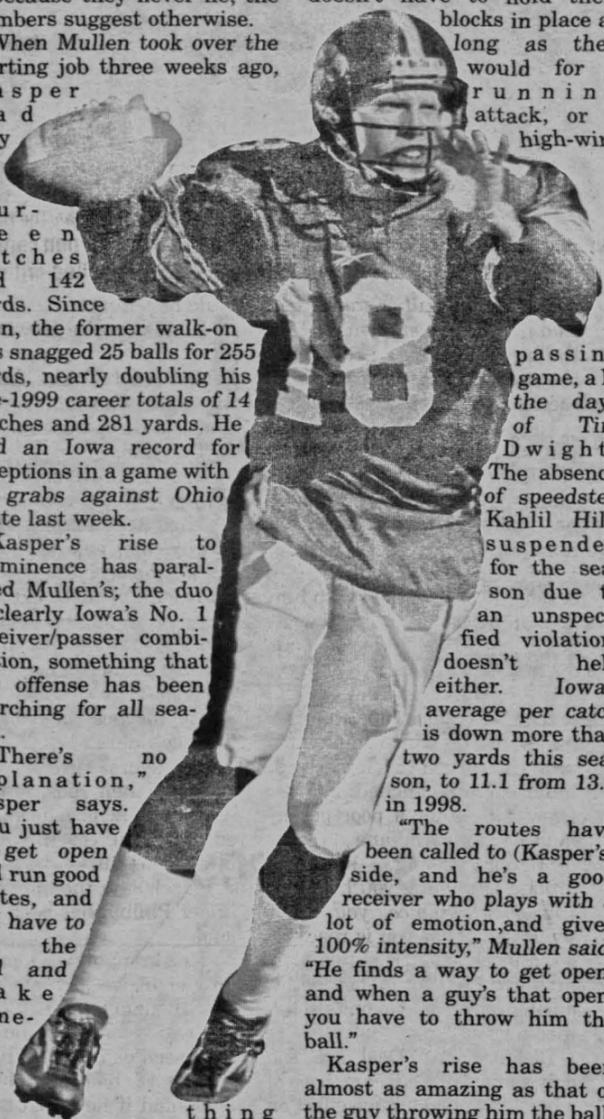

1998: 14 catches for 281 yards, and one touchdown. Played in all eleven games, but did not start any of them.

1997: Saw only limited action, mostly on special teams. Caught one ball for 19 yards, in Iowa's win over Iowa State.

1996: Redshirted, after joining team as a walk-on.

Originally from Burr Ridge, Ill.; played his high school football at Hinsdale South High School.

Earned first-team all conference and all-area honors as a senior. Team MVP as a senior.

What's the Skinny on Scott Mullen?

1999: Has played in six games, with two starts. Has thrown for 709 yards and one touchdown, and five interceptions on 108 attempts. Threw for 426 yards against Indiana on October 23, good for fifth-best yardage in school history.

1998: Played in eight games, with two starts. Completed 27-of-54 attempts for 311 yards and one touchdown. Started against Purdue and Ohio State, before breaking collarbone in Ohio State game and missing the season finale at Minnesota.

1997: Started at Wisconsin, and played against Indiana and Minnesota. Completed two of seven attempts for 22 yards, no touchdowns, and an interception. Rushed for a touchdown in season finale against Minnesota.

Fading back into the woodwork

The offensive line is learning the reward for its improvement is anonymity.

By Greg Wallace
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa offensive line hasn't been getting much attention lately. That's fine with them.

It's a welcome change from the early season, when the focus of the press was only on the men with the plus 50 numbers and the weakest skills on the team. They took it like men; with sharp wit and a resolve to get better.

Now, eight games into the season, the line is gelling, and is no longer reporters' No. 1 priority after games. They're becoming anonymous, and loving it.

"It's like being a deep snapper," backup center A.J. Blazek said. "You don't want to get talked about too much. You want the running back to get all of the press. That means that he's doing something, and you're doing something right. It's a trickle-down effect."

The running back hasn't gotten the numbers he might have liked this year, but Iowa's third quarterback of the year, Scott Mullen, has. Mullen stepped into the starting role two games ago, and has averaged 355 passing yards per game, giving the offense life it didn't have under Randy Reiners or Kyle McCann.

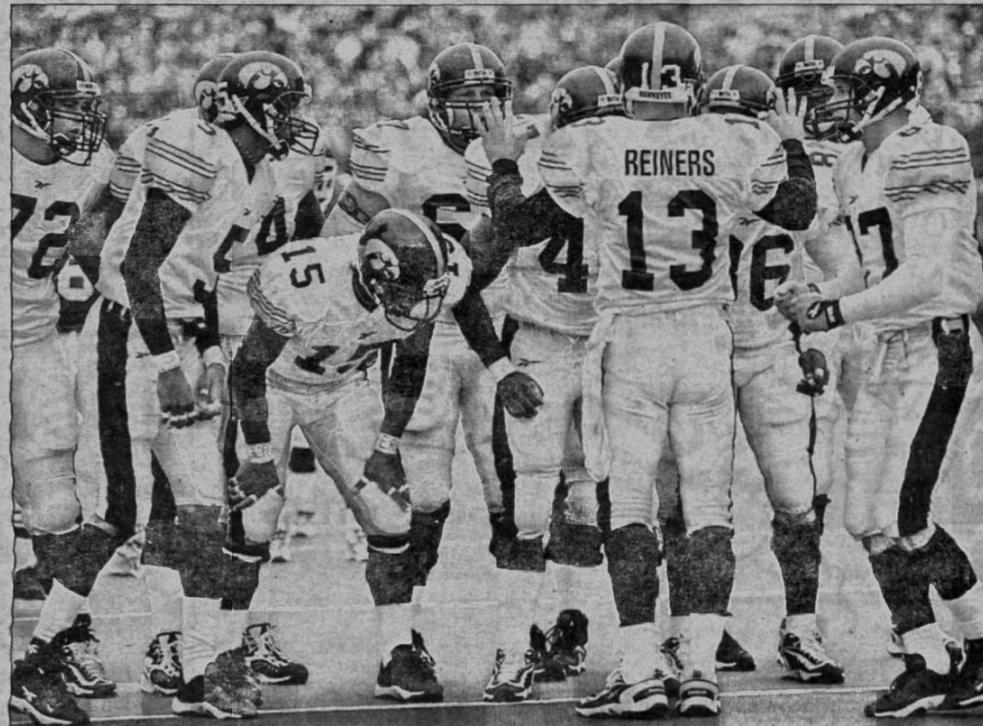

"Two games in a row, they've played great," Mullen said. "Two sacks in 120 attempts, you can't ask for any more than that."

Mullen's emergence has allowed the line to concentrate less on run blocking and more on pass blocking, which they clearly have a better comprehension of. While Kirk Ferentz wants a balanced offense, the running game has averaged only 74 yards per game (including a minuscule 7 at Michigan State), while Iowa has passed for 228 yards per game.

"Right now, we're inexperienced as far as the run game goes," Bruce Nelson said. "It's kind of a learning experience, but if we keep working and improving, we'll have a run game soon enough."

Give them credit; the run game has improved, just not as fast as the pass. Betts has no problem sitting back and letting the pass game take control. Ferentz praised his attitude about the team's offensive plans.

"The only thing I wanted to tell him was that he's got a lot of good football ahead of him, and those guys up front are going to be able to grow and do some things for him," Ferentz said. "He knows that, and I wanted to complement him on the way he's handled himself; I haven't seen any selfishness at all."

If anything, the success has been a group effort. The line has had eight different starters, and no combination has started more than two games. Injuries have played a part; Jay Bickford has missed three games with an ankle injury, and Chad Deal missed the first three contests with a groin pull. Ferentz has said that he is just trying to find the best combination to put on the field, a philosophy the linemen have readily agreed with.

Nelson is comfortable with the shuffling; he's more concerned with the defensive linemen that want to take Mullen's head off hunched two feet from him.

"I don't worry about the guy beside me, I've worked with him all summer and I know what he's going to do. I worry about the guy across from me."

Blazek likes the system; he prefers to have competition for his position, which motivates him. He learned this lesson first hand, being benched against Ohio State after a poor performance against Indiana.

"Being young, shuffling around is making you better. If you don't produce, you know someone behind you is ready to go," Blazek said. "It puts a little pressure on you to get better during the week. No one's solidified a spot."

Bickford and Deal are the only seniors on the team, both of whom have had a huge effect on the group's attitude this year. The group includes four freshmen and Blazek, who is a junior college transfer, and three converted tight ends. Not an easy group to hold together. Bickford in particular has been the emotional leader, and placed the blame squarely on his back to the press earlier in the season.

Ferentz has seen great progress from the group, and feels the tail end of the season could be telling.

"I think they're growing. I see growth, I see improvement," Ferentz said. "We're moving in the right direction right now. The next three weeks will be big for that group."

Their improvement is exponential, but it could be even more so next season. Everyone is on weight gaining programs; for example, Nelson eats the equivalent of three extra meals per day in snacks with good calories, and expects to put on 15 to 20 pounds before next season begins.

The coaches have helped in the line's development, as well. The players rave about Joe Philbin, their position coach. And Ferentz is a former NFL offensive line coach, which certainly can't hurt.

Blazek says the improvement under Philbin has been miraculous.

"He's brought us a long way in only eight weeks," Blazek said. "You thought we didn't look good against Nebraska; you should have seen us in spring ball!"

Ferentz has preached balance, and if he is patient, they may get it next season. A winter and spring spent in the weight room could be work wonders.

Blazek says there's a long climb ahead, but he has hope.

"I think we have a lot of riding left to do," Blazek said. "We're only halfway up the mountain in my eyes."

If they ever reach the summit, watch out.

Going down swinging

By Mike Kelly
The Daily Iowan

Getting through the Big Ten conference schedule is challenging. The physical punishment adds up after every devastating tackle and every special teams wedge.

It would be hard not to fathom that the mental challenges would be great as well, especially on a team with a 1-7 record like Iowa has.

It would be easy for a team to say "screw it" or become disenchanted with the program and question why they put so much time into something when the tangible results are not always straightforward.

Maybe it is the mentality of an athlete or maybe it is something special about this year's Iowa football team, but there is no sense of disillusionment amongst this year's Iowa football team.

"You have to keep resetting your goals," center A. J. Blazek said. "You have to do that because things don't always go your way in big time Division I sports."

Linebacker Fred Barr said the attitude in the locker room has not changed over the course of the season. Iowa started the season with a strong sense of optimism and has carried it over throughout the season, despite the team's struggle in the standings.

Players point to an outstanding example of senior leadership as part of the reason for the sustained optimism in the Iowa locker room this year.

All season long Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz has sung the praises of seniors like Matt Bowen, Randy Reiners and Zeron Flemister. This year's graduating class has seen both the highs and lows of the Iowa program, and Blazek said the seniors have been inspirational throughout the season.

Freshman left tackle Bruce Nelson said the seniors have been a source of motivation for the younger players on the team. Persistence and consistency were the words Nelson used when describing what the seniors contributed to the team.

Brian Ray/The Daily Iowan

Senior wide receiver Bashir Yamini manages to crack a smile during Iowa's 41-11 loss to Ohio State Oct. 30. Despite the team's poor season, the Hawkeye seniors have managed to keep everyone motivated during this, Iowa's toughest season of the 1990's.

"Without a doubt, the seniors have kept us going this season," Blazek said. "Every day, a senior talks and they get pretty emotional. That is understandable because no one likes losing. We would have fallen apart a long time ago if it were not for them."

The seniors seem to take care of the motivational speeches for Ferentz. Ferentz said he gives about a one minute talk during the warmup period before games, which takes care of about all of the explicit motivation he offers his team.

Ferentz does not leave his stoic demeanor at the locker room door when he speaks to his players about keeping the intensity up in practice.

Judging from the way he said his team has practiced over the last month, it seems to be working well.

"I keep talking about why you play and why you practice," Ferentz said. "I am not a big gimmick guy. I think you should do things for the right reasons; you play because you love to play and coach because Without a doubt, the seniors have kept us going this season. Every day, a senior talks and gets pretty emotional.

— A. J. Blazek,
Iowa junior center

you love to coach. You only get 11 games in a season and that should be enough motivation each and every day."

Selfishness is another disease that sometimes is infectious among teams that do not fare well. It hasn't penetrated the Iowa locker room, though.

When teams play poorly, a lot of the problems on the team tend to stem from finger-pointing and arrogance among members of the team who disregard team goals when the season becomes trying.

A player that could have gone that route but did not was Ladell Betts.

Behind an inexperienced line, Betts has only averaged 70.9 yards per game on the ground. Over the last two weeks, his carries have been limited due to the increased reliance on passing in the Iowa offense.

Ferentz said he pulled Betts aside after the Indiana game and told the sophomore running back he was proud of the way he has handled his role in the Iowa offense this season, especially in practice.

"The comments he has made about his teammates have been positive and that really says a lot about the attitude of the team," Ferentz said. "I just wanted to tell him he had a lot of good football ahead of him and I think he knows that."

With three games left in the season, all the Hawkeyes can do is build for the future and finish off the season on a positive note. Nelson said even though he wishes the team were winning, the future is promising for Iowa.

"We owe it to ourselves to win," Barr said. "Everyone wants to do well to finish off the year."

Happy Fans

It's not easy, but fans keep the faith

■ The Iowa football team's poor showing has not stopped Hawkeye fans from coming to Kinnick.

By Troy Shoen
The Daily Iowan

The farm fields of Iowa have been known to produce corn, ghosts of legendary baseball players, and Hawkeye football fans.

That is something Indiana coach Cam Cameron, who recently brought his Hoosiers into Kinnick Stadium, isn't going to argue with.

"You go into a game at Iowa City and they drive from...I don't know where all those people come from," Cameron said.

Despite Iowa having only one win this year, Kinnick Stadium continues to draw large numbers of Hawkeye supporters.

Over 62,000 tickets have been sold for this Saturday's game against Illinois. Iowa's last home game is against Minnesota on November 20.

Barring a late November blizzard, this will be the 17th straight year that Iowa averages over 60,000 fans for home games.

By comparison, Indiana has yet to sell out its home, 50,000 seat Memorial Stadium, even though the team has a 4-5 record. The Hoosiers have attracted just over 34,000 fans to their six home games.

Even though Iowa is in last place in the Big Ten, the

An unidentified female fan gets caught up in the action during the Nebraska game Sept. 4. Although the Hawkeye football team has had a poor season, it hasn't stopped fans from coming to games in droves; Iowa will average more than 60,000 fans for the 17th straight season.

Hawkeyes are averaging just over 66,000 fans in their four home games.

All of Iowa's support comes despite a team that has an average losing margin of 22 points in its seven losses so far this year.

"Fans will support our team as long as they see a commitment from the university," said Rick Klatt, assistant athletic director. "I visit with fans all the time and a majority of them are understanding that this is a transition time."

Iowa football fans have not had to adjust to a new football coach in 20 years. During that time many Hawkeye fans have enjoyed successful teams and are not used to losing.

Few Hawkeye fans can recall the last time Iowa finished the season with only one win. That last happened in 1971, when the team finished 1-10 under coach Frank Lauterbur.

"The loyalty between Iowa fans and the football team is a by-product of the commitment the university has toward having athletic teams that compete and do it the right way," Klatt said. "These are things Iowans appreciate."

Klatt believes it is important for the veteran Hawkeye fans to teach younger fans about the loyalty of Iowa supporters.

Brian Ray/The Daily Iowan

Members of the student section show their enthusiasm for the Hawkeyes Sept. 18 during the game with Northern Illinois. Although vocal, the students have been criticized for being the last to arrive to games and the first to leave if the Hawkeyes are losing.

Two long time fans are Nels and Rowena Nord. From their perch at Kinnick Stadium the Nord's watch the Hawkeyes struggle under the first year head coach. The couple has sat in the same spot at Iowa football games for over 20 years.

"We have seen some great games," Rowena said. "Over the last 20 years I have seen a lot of ups and downs. I remember the game when people were throwing roses out of the press box after Iowa beat Minnesota to qualify for the Rose Bowl."

It hasn't always been rosy for the Hawkeyes but the Nord's have stood by Iowa in the past, and they have no plans of stopping their support.

"I am a diehard Hawkeye fan and I love being at the games," Nord said. "As long as the team puts out the effort that is fine. The losing won't last."

With only two games remaining on the Iowa schedule, the Hawkeyes are guaranteed their second losing season in a row. The last time that happened was in 1979 and 1980, the first two seasons under former coach Hayden Fry.

Klatt hopes that the fans who experienced Hawkeye football during the tough years can motivate younger fans to not abandon the bandwagon.

Prior to Hayden Fry, Iowa had nine straight losing seasons, yet still averaged nearly 50,000 fans a game in Kinnick Stadium.

"People who have been season ticket holders for 30 years have a strong allegiance," Klatt said. "They will be with us through this transition year. Recent graduates have not experienced what we are experiencing now. It is a challenge for older fans to pull the younger fans aside."

The lack of loyalty from UI students is evident at the end of games.

Against Indiana on October 23 many students chose to watch the end of the game from their television sets. The once full student section turned to a wasteland for hot dog wrappers as Iowa marched down the field on its final drive.

"Like students at other schools, when the team is losing we feel there is something else we could be doing that would be more fun," said Ryan Gray, UI senior. "We would rather watch other games on TV."

Illini on the warpath to a bowl game

■ Illinois has gone from an 0-11 record in 1997 to challenging for a bowl this season.

By Lisa Colonno
The Daily Iowan

The Fighting Illini are taking it one week at a time.

Since coach Ron Turner took the head coaching job at Illinois in 1997, positive things have happened in Champaign, Ill.. And 1999 looks to be the best season yet in the Turner regime.

Illinois holds a 4-4 (1-4 Big Ten) record going into Saturday's game versus Iowa at Kinnick Stadium. Despite needing only two wins to qualify for the program's first bowl in five years, the team is concerned only with what they can and need to do Nov. 6.

So forget about the future, for now anyway.

A lot of hype surfaced around the Fighting Illini football team since the team defeated then-No. 9 Michigan on Oct. 23, overcoming a 27-7 second-half deficit. Many are predicting an Illinois bowl game berth at the conclusion of the season.

But Turner and his players are focusing on the here and now.

"We are worried about focusing on this week," Turner said. "That is all we are thinking about right now. Our goal is to have a winning season and we can do that starting Saturday.

Illinois coach Ron Turner and his players celebrate after Turner's first win as head coach, a 48-20 drubbing of Middle Tennessee State on Sept. 12, 1998. Turner has Illinois in contention for a bowl game.

"One of our goals is to have a winning season and if a bowl game is there, fine. We need to get to six, but we need to get to five first."

Before Turner took over in 1997, Illinois had won four of 16 Big Ten games the previous two years, including only one in 1996.

In 1997, Illinois struggled under its new coach, going 0-11 in Turner's first season. But progress is slowly being made.

Last season, the Fighting Illini won two conference games and went 3-8 overall with wins over Middle Tennessee State, Northwestern and Indiana.

Courtesy Illinois Sports Information

This year, Illinois has already surpassed last year's mark and has the opportunity to have its first winning record since 1994. Illinois' remaining games are against Iowa, Ohio State and Northwestern.

"I'm taking it one week at a time and I'm doing the same things each week to prepare," quarterback Kurt Kittner said.

"This week we're preparing for Iowa and we are going to do what we can. Hopefully, it will all fall into place."

Turner said that there will be a good match-up against Iowa this weekend and that the game will be decided by who wants it the most.

"They are much better than their record indicates," Turner said. "They have a new system (under Kirk Ferentz) and they lost two conference games on the last play of the game. It's not like they are getting blown out. They are playing hard and are getting better each week."

"We are two evenly matched teams."

Both teams are entering Saturday's game fresh off of a conference loss. The Hawkeyes were pummeled at Ohio State, 41-11, and the Fighting Illini fell to Penn State, 27-7.

Despite the loss Oct. 30 to the nation's No. 2 team, Illinois remains positive as the team is still feeding off of their Michigan victory.

"We are having more fun in practice," Kittner said.

"Everyone is having a good time and is really competing and beating up on each other. We work a lot harder during the week than early in the season. Everyone has a chip on their shoulder now and everyone's attitude is a lot better. That day really changed our team and the way we've played."

Kittner's come a long way since 1998

■ Illinois quarterback Kurt Kittner has progressed nicely in his sophomore season.

By Lisa Colonno
The Daily Iowan

Illinois quarterback Kurt Kittner got his first start of his college career last season against Iowa.

A lot has changed for Kittner since that fateful day.

Kittner owns the Illini's starting job in 1999 and is leading his team to a possible bowl game berth.

At 4-4 (1-4 in the Big Ten), Illinois also has the chance to have its first winning season since 1994.

But Kittner isn't taking the credit.

"A lot more stuff on our offense has improved," Kittner said. "Our passing game is a lot better and the whole team has really come together from last year."

Kittner became Illinois' first true freshmen to start at quarterback in 52 years when he took over against the Hawkeyes last season.

Although he did not walk away from that game with a "W," he completed 13 of 33 passes for 245 yards and went 8 for 16 in the fourth quarter alone for 216 yards with 50- and 40-yard completions.

Kittner started the next four games and finished with 782 yards and a 44.4 percent completion percentage on the year.

Despite his success in 1998, he battled it out with senior Kirk Johnson in training camp this fall for the starting position. Kittner became the No. 1 choice of Illini head coach Ron Turner, thanks to a lot of hard work.

"I worked out over the summer with the guys," Kittner said. "At camp I was pretty consistent. Coach picked who was consistent."

Turner is pleased with his decision.

"So far he has had a good year," Turner said. "He is progressing and leading the team. He has good accuracy throwing the ball."

"He has been as good as we hoped for protecting the ball.

It's good to see him throw away the football and not keep it and get the sack. That's a sign of a quarterback improving."

So far this season Kittner is 145 for 270 in passing with two interceptions for 1,747 yards and 16 touchdowns. He is second in the Big Ten, averaging 218.4 yards per game.

"He's a good football player, and it's certainly panned out the way they want it to," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said. "They've certainly got off and running with him. He's been their guy, and he's done their job for them."

Kittner came out of Schaumburg, Ill. as one of the state's most sought-after recruits. In 1997 he threw for 449 yards in a single game and totaled 1,200 yards passing before missing the final four games of the season with a broken thumb.

In 1996, he passed for 1,891 yards and 20 touchdowns on a team that advanced to the state playoffs for the second consecutive year.

This Week in the Big Ten

It's a dogfight for second place

THIS WEEK IN THE BIG TEN

The only people who think this week's Big Ten matchups are vitally important are the organizers of the Rose Bowl. And they're not watching Penn State; they'll be taking second pick this year. That's because after the Nittany Lions, everyone's fighting for second place in the conference.

I know that Penn State has two tough season-enders, but let's be honest, Michigan? Blowing a three-touchdown lead at home is bad enough. But against Illinois? Come on. The Nittany Lions face a strong challenge the last week of the season at Michigan State, but I didn't trust the Spartans coming into this season, and I sure don't now.

This week, the only games worth your viewing effort are the Purdue/Wisconsin and Michigan State/Ohio State clashes. Other than that, there's no reason not to go to Kinnick, blue-sweatshirts and all, and be a bandwagoning suburbanite/Illinois fan. I know you're out there, and I'm sure I'll see your smiling faces Saturday. Bleah.

Wisconsin at Purdue

The Boilermakers face the Badgers in my Game of the Week. Last time these two teams hooked up, Drew Brees threw 83 times, but Purdue came out on the short end of the stick. Now, with Ricky Williams' rushing record in reach, Ron Dayne may be the one taking the ball 83 times. OK, maybe not 83 (Ron's a big guy), but clearly, Dayne will be the key to Wisconsin's success or lack of it.

This may be the last chance for Boilermaker fans to see Brees in action. He's a junior, and quite frankly, it would be smart for him to get out now; Purdue may have reached the plateau of their success.

Purdue ranks near the middle of the pack in rushing defense, which doesn't bode well for stopping Dayne, one of the nation's elite backs and players. Wisconsin has the No. 2 pass defense, which could come in handy if Brees chucks it up 83 times again.

In the battle of the unstoppable force (Brees) and the immovable object (Dayne), the immovable object should win.

Wisconsin 31, Purdue 17 Ohio State at Michigan State

This one's personal. The Spartans spoiled Ohio State's undefeated season last year, going into Ohio Stadium and pulling a stunning 28-24 upset.

One year later, Ohio State wants blood.

"We definitely have a chip on our shoulder," Buckeye linebacker Na'il Diggs told the Associated Press. "We had the best team in the country, and in my opinion, and probably others, we lost to an OK team. That's hard to grasp."

This year, the Spartans are certainly more than OK. They rose to No. 5 in the country after a 5-0 start, but are reeling after two blowout losses. The Spartans' tailspin makes me, among others, question their heart. Nick Saban said this team had the personality of a 13 year old—moody, and I believe him. The Buckeyes have all of Columbus on them to win. That's not an easy thing; OSU fans think 8-3 is cause for drawing and quartering John Cooper on the 50-yard line of Ohio Stadium. The Buckeyes like Cooper, and don't want anything to happen. The Spartans, I don't know what their problem is.

Ohio State 38, Michigan State 14

Minnesota at Penn State

The last time Minnesota went into Happy Valley in 1997, Penn State was lucky to escape with a 16-15 win over the unranked Gophers. Since then, the Gophers have become one of the up-and-coming Big Ten squads, and need only one win to go bowling. Chances are, though, that it won't happen here. The Nittany Lions are second in the BCS polls, used to determine the national championship game, and are threatening to turn the Rose Bowl into a second-class dumping ground.

The only noteworthy thing about this game besides a Penn State rout is the trophy the Lions will take home—the Governor's Victory Bell. This trophy is six years old, and was thought up by politicians. How lame. I like my rivalry trophies steeped in tradition, like the Little Brown Jug or the Old Bourbon Barrel, not manufactured. If I was Joe Paterno, I'd leave this trophy on the field; it seems to be nothing but an excuse for politicians to make a public appearance.

Penn State 49, Minnesota 9

Northwestern at Michigan

The ugliest matchup of the week. Northwestern has proved that those back-to-back Big Ten championships were a fluke, beating only Iowa. Michigan is smarting hard after blowing a big lead against Illinois and barely beating Indiana. A dash of Wildcat always seems to cure what ails Big Ten teams, though.

Michigan still has a chance at the Rose Bowl, and the Citrus is a strong possibility too. The Wildcats are lacking in talent and in heart. Chalk one up for the Wolverines, though that Kustok kid might have one up his sleeve.

Michigan 19, Northwestern 3

Pregame Pick

Blue and orange the dominant colors on Saturday

Greg

PREGAME PICK

If anyone had told me in August that Iowa would finish 1-10, I would have laughed at them.

No way, I would have said. Too much leadership, too much pride. They won't be world-beaters, but 5-6 or 4-7 isn't out of the question, I thought.

Now it's November, and cold, harsh reality has set in. Iowa's 1-7. Younger guys are seeing time. It's officially a rebuilding season. And 1-10 looks mighty possible, with an improved Illinois team coming to Kinnick, a trip to Wisconsin to face Ron Dayne gunning for the career rushing record, and a finale with a Minnesota team playing for its first bowl trip in 13 years.

The dog days start Saturday when Illinois invades. Those days when Illinois was Iowa's whipping boy seem so distant and faded. Oh, wait— that was last year. The Fighting Illini have made great strides from 1-10 last season to playing for a bowl this season. And with Ohio State and Northwestern on their schedule, chances are they'll do it.

As bizarre as it sounds, Iowa fans can use Illinois as a blueprint for success. The Illini took their lumps for much of the 90's, putting up a 3-8 season last year, and 0-11 and 2-9 before that. The fact is, rebuilding happens, and Iowa is right in the middle of it happening.

Quarterback Kurt Kittner is the second-best quarterback in the Big Ten, and the Kittner that Iowa saw when the sophomore made his first start against Iowa last season is a faded memory. He has presence in the pocket, and is accurate; fourteen touchdowns and only two interceptions this season.

Over the past two weeks, Scott Mullen made his case to be Iowa's starting quarterback by throwing for an average of 355 yards per game. He's starting this week, officially because of Randy Reiners' injured neck. But unofficially, it's probable that his outstanding games would have pushed him ahead of Reiners, healthy or not.

He's still a little rough around the edges, making decisions that are typical of someone who's had four career starts. That explains not getting out of bounds at the end of the Indiana game and the three picks inside the Ohio State 40 last week.

Iowa's main problem is not the offense, despite Ladell Betts' lack of production on the ground. That's a product of Mullen and the line's capabilities, not a fault of Betts'.

The problem is the defense; you're not going to win any games giving up 500 yards per outing, unless you have Drew Brees or Antwaan Randle El on your team.

Too many times this season, their lack of speed has hurt them as a posse of speedier wideouts has victimized Iowa's secondary.

An improvement in Iowa's tackling wouldn't hurt, either. It's not something that a week of practice can fix. Past Matt Bowen and emerging freshman Fred Barr, the defense needs an infusion of toughness. You can't install that like a nickel package.

I'm not saying that a win this week is impossible. Iowa has shown flashes of life each of the last three weeks; they just haven't put a full game together. This week could be the time for it to happen, but more likely, it won't be.

Picks To Click

Greg Wallace,

Pregame co-editor: Matt Bowen. It's his last chance to win against an Illinois team. That's big for him.

Mike Kelly,

Pregame co-editor: Ryan Barton. If Kasper can't go....

Megan Manfull,

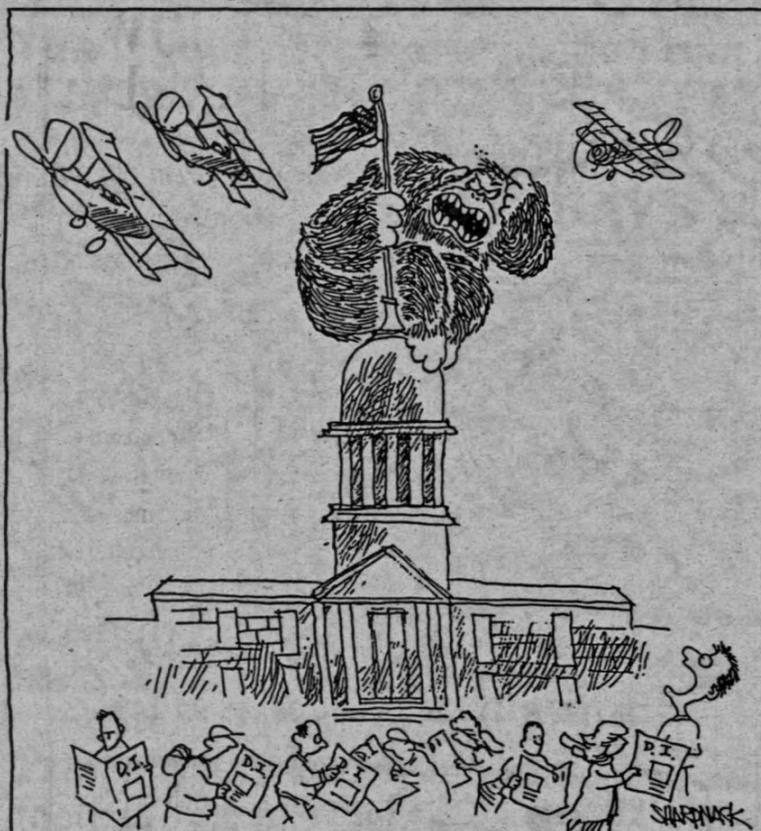

Daily Iowan sports editor: Kirk Ferentz. He's bound for a Big Ten victory.

Illinois is a program on the rise, while it appears that Iowa is headed for the basement of the conference, for a stay of length unknown.

There's something to be said for knowing how to win. Illinois is in the intermediate levels of that course, while Iowa is only beginning to take the teacher's lessons to heart.

1-10 isn't so surprising anymore, but Illinois leapfrogging Iowa is. Guess that's what parity's all about. As much as I hate it, there will be a lot of blue and orange in Iowa's student section Saturday, and I won't be able to say anything about it. Can you blame them? Everyone loves a winner, and at least for one Saturday, they'll be able to support one, if they wear the colors of the Illini.

UAC chef makes sure Hawks are full

■ No Iowa football player
 leaves the University
 Athletic Club hungry.

By Molly Thomas
 The Daily Iowan

Although a smorgasboard
 filled with fish, chicken, pork, carved prime rib, pasta, two starches, vegetables, and a full salad bar sounds like a meal for a king and his court,
 it's the meal that the Iowa football team and coaching staff eats every Wednesday and Sunday night at the University Athletic Club.

Rod Bowman, the team chef, executes as well as plans these meals. According to Bowman,
 "feeding 150 football players and coaches requires the equivalent of what 300 people would normally consume."

Bowman came from Kansas
 City to Iowa City in February to take the chef position at the University Athletic Club. He previously worked with large hotels and country clubs.

"I don't really get the time to sit back and chat with the players," said Bowman. "I guess what I'm looking forward to most is watching the players get older and more mature and perhaps even seeing some of them go on to be professionals someday."

 The players don't get to hoard all of the food on Wednesday and Sunday
 evenings; the coaches also eat at the University Athletic Club and some even bring their families along. Bowman said he understands the coaches' need to bring their families, since they don't have much time during the season to spend with wife and kids.

The University Athletic Club has been serving the football team for the last two years. The players eat in a buffet-like style in which they are provided with a lot of variety. According to freshman linebacker, Fred Barr the food is above average, but it mostly depends on what you eat.

"The food is really good,"
 offensive lineman A.J. Blazek said. "We get fed really well with things like steak and seafood. The shrimp's not the best, but shrimp is shrimp to me."

With all of the variety and quantity the team is served during meals, the players
 never go away without a heaping plate full of food. Bowman said that the team is fed well and treated well at the club.

According to Bowman the most interesting thing about

Iowa defensive backs Joe Slattery and Matt Bowen (with potato wedge) clown around at dinner at the University Athletic Club. They are only two of 150 football personnel who eat there twice per week. serving the players is the fact they have no sense of worldliness with food. They like to keep their meals simple, but big.

Charlie Wittmack/The Daily Iowan
 then they'll take it and they'll take a lot of it."

COLLEGE FINANCING 101

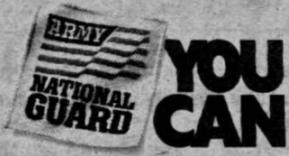

Each year thousands of college students are forced to drop out. The problem is not with their academic standing, it is their financial status. They can't pass or CLEP out of "College Financing 101." The Iowa Army National Guard has over $36,000 available to each student who qualifies. Through programs such as the Montgomery G.I. Bill, 50% Tuition Assistance and Guard pay, students can concentrate on grades, not bills. The Guard offers hands-on experience, as well as technical and leadership training.

All it takes is about two days a month and two weeks a year. Serving your country and community today can help build a better tomorrow.

Women's soccer flies into Big Ten tourney

■ In only its third year as a varsity sport, women's soccer has made a splash on campus.

By Melinda Mawdsley
The Daily Iowan

Three years.

It took three years to transform Iowa women's soccer from a club team to a Big Ten title hopeful.

In 1997, the UI made soccer an intercollegiate sport. The program took off. Soccer Buzz, a magazine site for women's collegiate soccer, named Iowa's Stephanie Gabbert Coach of the Year for first-year programs. Gabbert directed the Hawkeyes to an 8-11 overall record and 2-7 in the conference. The season highlight was a 3-0 victory over defending Big Ten champion Indiana.

In 1998, Iowa went 6-10-2 but started out 5-1-1 beating up on non-conference foes. The Hawkeyes ended up 1-7-1 in the Big Ten, one of the toughest conferences in the country.

"I think we had a very good year last year," said Gabbert prior to this season. "I don't think our record showed the growth and development that we accomplished. We made great strides as individuals and as a team."

Brian Ray/The Daily Iowan

Iowa's Jenny Sturm tries to ward off a defender during Iowa's win against Ohio State. The Hawkeyes are ranked for the first time in program history.

With the improved development of the roster and the addition of the nation's seventh best recruiting class, as dubbed by Soccer Buzz, the Hawkeyes had the pieces to make something happen.

"It's hard to tell where we'll finish. We're definitely able to finish somewhere in the middle of the pack," Gabbert said prior to this year's Big Ten opener against Wisconsin. "We may surprise a few Big Ten teams. I'm excited to see what this new team can do in the conference."

This new team took defending Big Ten Champion and No. 5 Penn State to overtime back on Oct. 8, but fell 3-2. The effort Iowa gave didn't go unnoticed by Nittany Lion coach Pat Farmer.

"We should be by the team playing that great and with that much composure," said Farmer. "If only Penn State's program would have been where Iowa's is after three years."

That game was in the middle of Big Ten season. Iowa went on to finish 7-3 in the Big Ten, earning third place and a third seed in its first ever Big Ten Tournament.

Gabbert and her players attribute the conference jump to several factors.

"Two main things. The veteran players have experience, allowing them to maintain composure when its needed. Also, the freshmen came in and made an impact right away," Gabbert said.

"This is the best year we've had. To go from third to ninth is awesome," said senior Meredith Taylor. "We have lots of energy and feed off that."

The experience, composure and energy generated during the regular season needs to carry over into post-season play. The Hawkeyes are not only making their first ever Big Ten Tournament trip, they are the favorite against Illinois.

"We are looking for the win. We played well against them the first time," said senior

Jenny Hyngstrom. "We expect a tougher game Friday, but we feel confident."

Iowa defeated the Illini, 2-0, two weeks ago in Champaign, Ill., so the Hawkeyes know they can win. Combine that with the 17 Illinois natives on Iowa's roster, and the search for motivation ends.

"Any game will be tough," Gabbert said. "It's exciting given our history and competitive games with Illinois. Not a lot of motivation is needed for this game."

"We know a lot of people. It's a fun rivalry," said freshman Sarah Lynch. "We'll get up more for them than maybe another team."

The Iowa/Illinois game begins at 11 a.m. at the Bill Armstrong Stadium in Bloomington, Ind. Should Iowa come out victorious, they will play Sat. at noon against the winner of No. 20 Michigan/Michigan State. Iowa defeated Michigan State, 1-0 earlier this year in East Lansing. Michigan, then No. 12, defeated Iowa by the same score. The championship game is Sunday at 1 p.m., with the winner receiving an automatic bid to the 48-team NCAA Tournament.
