The UI Student Government rejected an amendment to its constitution that could have ended mass mailings by UI student groups Tuesday night. The resolution failed after several senators said it would hinder student groups' ability to recruit members. The amendment, sponsored by Sen.

Anthony LaForge, would have revoked UISG recognition of student groups that use unsolicited mass mailings.

Mass mailings include the use of telephone, paper mail systems, and e-mail solicitations sent unrequested to more than 25 people, according to the amendment.

Groups without recognition would not receive funding from UISG and It's punishing student groups for trying to get more members involved. I find it disturbing.

could not check out rooms for meetings on UI property, said UISG Vice President Andy Stoll.

Peter Matthes, a UISG senator and the co-chairman of communications for Students for Bush, said he and his group "whole-heartedly opposed" the legislation.

"It's punishing student groups for trying to get more members involved," he said. "I find it disturbing."

LaForge said the amendment was a "preventive measure" so the UI could avoid problems caused by an abundance of mass mailings. Mass mailings are a problem at the University of Wisconsin's Madison campus, he said.

"Apparently, the UISG has no appreciation for the privacy of university students," LaForge said. "By declining this amendment, it has verbalized this."

UISG Executive Jon Wolseth said the amendment would have hindered UISG's ability to function.

"UISG itself sends out unsolicited mail all the time," he said. "To put this in our legislation would severely hamper our ability to work as an organization."

In other action, the UISG approved a resolution to support the UI group Students Against Sweatshops and called for the UI to create a code of conduct to place a high standard on merchandise that displays the university logo.

The UI apparel is made by maufacturers in the Fair Labor Association, which was set up to monitor the clothing industry. The association does not have an independent monitoring system in its manufacturers to detect sweatshop labor, said UISG President Lana Zak.

"As Hawkeyes, we should take pride in what companies feature the Hawkeye logo," she said.

An alternative group that the UI could join is the Workers' Rights Consortium, which has regulations regarding sweatshop labor, the resolution states.

By Pat Milton Associated Press

NEWPORT, R.I. — Officials prepared Tuesday to turn over the investigation of the crash of EgyptAir Flight 990 to the FBI — indicating suspicions of a criminal act — but delayed the move at Egypt's request. The development came amid indications someone in the cockpit made a religious utterance just before the jet went into its fatal plunge, the Associated Press learned.

Jim Hall, the chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said in Washington that additional Egyptian experts were joining the investigation.

"Given this further development, it is only prudent for the National Transportation Safety Board to fully evaluate this information prior to any final decision on whether the responsibility for this investigation should transfer to the Federal Bureau of Investigation," Hall said. Hall said at a news conference the Hall said at a news conference the government would hire a private salvage concern to retrieve the airplane wreckage from the ocean floor. He said officials were particularly interested in the cockpit.

"Based on the evidence we have seen thus far — the flight-data recorder, the cockpit voice recorder, radar data and the small bits of wreckage that have been recovered — we have found so far no sign of a mechanical or weather-related event that could have caused this accident," he said.

A senior intelligence official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said there still was no clear evidence that terrorism was involved.

The timing of the prayer — before the jet's autopilot was disengaged and the plane dived from 33,000 feet — raised suspicions that Flight 990 was deliberately brought down.

The words apparently came from someone in the co-pilot's seat, but not necessarily the co-pilot.

A source close to the investigation told the AP that Egyptian airline officials tentatively identified the person in the co-pilot's seat as the relief copilot, Gameel El Batouty, 59. They identified his voice after listening to the cockpit voice recorder at the safety board's headquarters.

Twenty-one students from Iowa City's Kate Wickham Elementary School became the youngest benefactors of the Iowa Children's Museum, Coral Ridge Mall, by collecting more than 18,546 pennies in the past year.

Becky Hall, a first- and secondgrade teacher at the school, said the donation process taught students about being responsible.

"We wanted to help the museum raise money, so we set up a penny drive and sent out notes to families telling them about our penny drive," she said.

Volunteers and financial support were crucial in the museum's development, Longou said.

The opening Tuesday marked the end of the project's first phase; the remaining two phases will require more fund raising to complete the project. Included in the phase-one opening were the Cityworks Gallery and the Changing Gallery.

The small-scale Cityworks Gallery, which includes a grocery store, pizzeria, communication center, art and design studio, hospital and literacy center, is designed to teach children while they play.

Jan Gerard, the in vitro fertilization nurse coordinator at the UI Hospitals and Clinics, said money can be a deceptive draw.

"Immediate financial gain is pretty attractive," she said. "When a lot of students talked with us and found out how time-consuming it was, they were not interested."

The UIHC's Center for Advanced Reproductive Care accepts donors between 23-33 years old who pass a physical and psychological evaluation. The center advertises in local newspapers, alluding to, but not including, the exact amount of compensation.

"We do feel that the compensation that we pay ($1,500) is fair," Gerard said. "We want them (donors) to have Each time follicular fluid is aspirated, it is placed in the laboratory, where embryologists evaluate the fluid for the presence of eggs.

Coursepacks fade after copyright decision

Strict regulations on photocopying have dented the popularity of the course supplements.

By Robin Wright The Daily Iowan

The line of people waiting outside Zephyr Copies for coursepacks at the beginning of the semester is getting shorter each year because of a court decision that has made photocopying the coursepacks tedious and expensive.

Coursepacks, put together by professors as course supplements, contain information deemed valuable to a course. They can sometimes include copyrighted material.

A 1980s lawsuit brought against the Kinko's Corp. by the Association of American Publishers forced Kinko's to impose strict regulations against coursepack publishing.

Neils Juhr, a project manager at the Iowa City Kinko's, 14 S. Clinton St., said the store refers approximately 90 percent of its coursepack inquiries to Zephyr Copies, 124 E. Washington St.

The regulations against the coursepack industry, a result from the Kinko's suit, are responsible for the decline in the number of coursepacks at the UI, said James Gilmore, the owner of Zephyr Copies.

Ul junior Jenny Pomey makes copies at Kinko's Tuesday for her Social Science Methods class in the education college.

"I would estimate that the coursepack business has been off 25 to 50 percent in the decade since the Kinko's decision," he said. "We've given up trying to do extensive permission searches because many copyright instances, combined with low enrollment in the class, put prices through the ceiling for the student."

UI senior Rebecca Norell said she wishes coursepacks were used more See COPYRIGHT, Page 7A

Six state legislators presented their priorities and fielded questions from approximately 30 UI studentgroup members during a forum Tuesday night at the IMU. Issues ranging from hog lots to UI tuition and fees were discussed, with legislators saying they would work at the state level to keep UI tuition down by appropriating funds

"This is the first time in 18 years that the regents didn't get the full appropriation they requested," said Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City. "There's an anti-regents' institution attitude among many of our state legislators."

Most area legislators said the anti-regents attitude had negative effects that would eventually affect the Iowa City area.

The state legislators in attendance - Mascher, Dick Myers, Joe Bolkcom, Minnette Doderer, Ro Foege and Robert Dvorsky - represent Iowa City and the surrounding area

The Daily Iowan

UI Democrats and the Johnson County Democrats; it was moderated by UI political science Professor Arthur Miller Several student groups made presentations to the lawmakers during the forum, describing the focus of each student group.

Of concern to several of the student groups on was the disproportionately high number of black inmates in Iowa prisons.

Black Student Union President Lavar Lard said blacks make up an average of 2-6 percent of the state's population; several legislators noted that they make up approximately 25 percent of the state's prison population.

Several representatives suggested taking a comprehensive look at the judicial system, from trial judges to public-defense lawyers, for signs of discrimination.

Doderer said she had been discouraged by the prison system's inability to keep accurate statistics on its inmate population.

The forum also addressed environmental issues facing the state. particularly hog lots.

UI Environmental Coalition President Seth Nieman asked what legislators would do to minimize effects from hog-lot runoff.

Rep. Myers, D-Coralville, said he would like lawmakers to place control of hog-lot placement in the hands of local government but that he was concerned the issue would never reach debate.

"With the price of livestock going down the toilet, that might put more pressure on producers," he said.

The legislators also discussed their plans for the tobacco settlement money the state is expected to receive

Myers said he wanted to spend the money on public-health issues and create a trust fund to pay for these concerns after the tobacco money stopped coming in.

Schools, athletics clubs falling victim to theft

KALONA, Iowa (AP) - A former school secretary in this small eastern lowa town has been accused of taking $10,000 from fund-raisers, the school lunch program, sales of juice and soda pop, and yearbook earnings

A school worker in Bonaparte, in southeast lowa, was accused last month of pocketing approximately $30,000 from sports ticket sales and concessions.

And in Des Moines, the former president of a softball association admitted last month to taking more than $20,000 to pay off his gambling

STATE BRIEF debt.

"Any of these are disturbing," Warren Jenkins, a deputy with the state auditor's office, said Tuesday. "As far as a particular pattern, there are no scientific studies to point to a pattern, but any time someone embezzles money, it needs to be addressed.

Such theft does appear to be happening more often in schools and groups that collect money for children's team sports. Also recently, a former food-services manager was sentenced to probation after pleading guilty to taking more than $4,000 from the Sacred Heart School lunch program

And a Polk County youth wrestling club lost between $4,000 to $5,000. Its former president was charged in June with theft. She entered an Alford plea, in which she did not admit quilt but agreed that prosecutors had enough evidence to convict her; she was sentenced to 80 hours community service

At the time, Fred Gay, an assistant Polk County attorney, said such sports clubs may be vulnerable to embezzlement because of their accounting systems.

'You've got different people handling the money," he said.

Gay did not return phone calls Tuesday.

Robert Lamberti, the former president of the East Des Moines Softball Association, admitted in court last month that he stole more than $21,000 from the group to pay off his gambling debts.

Universities haven't got (many) males

Statistics show that more women are attending college than men today.

By Greg Toppo Associated Press

BALTIMORE - College campuses across America were once dominated by men, but no longer. Women, who in 1970 accounted for fewer than 45 percent of college students, have slowly, steadily passed the guys. Now, it's men who represent 45 percent of students. "This is an absolute revolution," said Oskaloosa, Iowa, based educational researcher Thomas Mortenson, who first raised the enrollment question in 1995. His research opened a conference on the topic Tuesday at Goucher College.

Census figures show that men make up approximately 51 percent of the population. Male attendance at colleges skyrocketed after World War II, with many veterans taking advantage of the GI Bill. Since then, male numbers on campus have population. either risen modestly or stagnated.

Meanwhile, women have shown up in greater numbers. Around 1983, the enrollment numbers were dead even for both sexes. By 1996, women earned roughly 642,300 bachelor's degrees, while men earned just under 522,500, Mortenson said

U.S. Department of Education researchers predict that, by 2008, men will make up approximately 42 percent of college students. The statistics apply across all geographic, economic, ethnic and racial lines. Mortenson said. Men are now in the minority on college campuses in 49 of 50 states - only Utah has more men than women in college. In some states, their numbers are alarmingly low. In Delaware, men account for only roughly 41 percent of the college

Mortenson and others pointed to many possible reasons for the shift: The declining presence of educated adult males in young men's lives, the rise of single parenthood and the high numbers of female teachers in most elementary and secondary schools.

Harvard University psychologist Daniel Kindlon said the modern American elementary school teaches boys that thoughtfulness and manliness don't go together.

Getting smart from far away

New technology has pushed up the enrollment in "distance" education.

> By Chris Rasmussen The Daily Iowan

New technologies have changed "distance" education by allowing instructors to reach out to communities far from campus, which may account for the increase in distance education enrollment at the UI.

The state of Iowa Board of Regents will receive an annual report on distance education today at a meeting in Ames.

The number of students taking classes off-campus increased from 5,235 in 1997-98 to 5,828 in 1998-99, while enrollment in correspondence courses declined slightly, from 4,794 to 4,738. Enrollment in Saturday and evening classes jumped from 9,083 students to 9,698. All of these categories are included in distance courses.

The Iowa Communications Network, a statewide educational telecommunications system started in 1994, has greatly influenced the increased scope of distance education, said Wayne Prophet, the assistant dean for UI credit programs.

"The biggest change has really been the network," he said. "There were 100 sites in 1994, and by 1999, that (number) had increased to 650. The growth has been remarkable."

The UI reports that of the 5,828 students who are taking off-campus courses, 1,644 of them are receiving instruction via the Iowa ommunications Network.

UI alumna Cheryl McKenna, an elementary school teacher from Ankeny, Iowa, who is taking a course over the network, said viewing the professor during lecture is necessary for the UI School Library and Media Administration course in which she is enrolled.

"It makes more sense when people can explain concepts to you, rather than just reading," she said. The network site nearest to McKenna is at the Des Moines Airport.

Some correspondence courses offer students a chance to use the Web, instead of the traditional "snail" mail services, to take desired courses, Prophet said.

They are given a choice of whether to take a course online or by correspondence," he said.

Though Web courses are beginning to develop, Prophet said, distance education's real growth and change is taking place in the communications network, which is DECATUR, Ill. - Leading a made-for-TV demonstration that evoked the style of the civil-rights movement, the Rev. Jesse Jackson was arrested Tuesday as he stepped onto the grounds of a high school to protest the expulsion of six students for taking part in a brawl at a football game.

Jackson was taken away in handcuffs after leading a throng of ministers and other protesters to Eisenhower High. He had promised to force his own arrest to dramatize the students' cause.

"It is an honor to be arrested for a righteous cause," Jackson said hours later, when he and three supporters were released after promising to appear in court on Dec. 16.

Jackson was arrested on charges of mob action and two misdemeanors - solicitation to commit a crime and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. His supporters were arrested on charges including mob action, resisting police and aggravated battery.

Macon County State's Attorney Larry Fichter said he would take some time before deciding what formal charges to file against the men.

Detective Cmdr. Mark Barthelmey said two officers were struck in the face during a confrontation after Jackson was led away. He did not say who was involved. Later, Fichter said at least one officer was treated for an injury, but the prosecutor would not elaborate. The arrests came nine days

Fearing inflation, Fed boosts rates

A tight labor market and fears of wage pressure led to the move, the central bank says.

By Martin Crutsinger Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Federal Reserve pushed borrowing costs higher for millions of Americans for the third time this year Tuesday, boosting a key short-term interest rate by a quarter-point to 5.5 percent.

The central bank said its actions should "markedly diminish the risk of inflation going forward," fanning hopes on Wall Street that there would be no more rate increases for a while.

Investors sent stock prices soar- er inflation. Consumer prices ing on the news.

But private economists warned that the language in the Fed's announcement clearly left open the possibility of further increases if the economy does not slow to a more sustainable pace.

"The Fed continues to be on inflation alert, driven by a strong economy and a tight labor market," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at Primark Global Economics in New York. "The door is still open for more rate hikes - just not before early February."

Economists had been split over whether there would be a rate increase at Tuesday's meeting. Those arguing that the Fed would keep rates unchanged pointed out that there are no signs yet of high-through September are rising at a modest annual rate of 2.8 percent for the year, even with a big jump in energy costs.

Noting the low inflation figures, economists for major business groups argued that Tuesday's rate increase was unjustified.

"Inflation is in hibernation, and this hike in rates is simply illtimed," said Gordon Richards, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers.

Martin Regalia, chief economist for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the rate increases would hit small businesses the hardest because more of their borrowing is tied to changes in the prime rate.

In a one-page announcement issued after its closed-door deliberations, the central bank said, "Although cost pressures appear generally contained, risks to sustainable growth persist." For that reason, the central bank said it was boosting its federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other on overnight loans, to 5.5 percent.

That action triggered announcements from commercial banks that they were increasing their prime lending rate, the benchmark for millions of business and consumer loans, to 8.5 percent from 8.25 percent.

The Fed also increased its largely symbolic discount rate, the interest it charges to make direct loans to banks, by a quarter point to 5 percent.

Drug ads a real downer for people, study says

Consumers use "trite" and "boring" to describe commercials for prescription drugs.

By Lauran Neergaard Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS - You've seen the TV commercials for drugs that promise to relieve allergies, banish migraines, grow back your hair, prevent heart attacks, relieve herpes.

Then comes the stern voice droning on about possible side effects, from annoving diarrhea to startlingly dire problems such as birth defects, addiction, liver failure, heart damage. Average consumers watch nine ing research says they're not happy about it.

"People really dislike these ads," Beth Miller, of the advertising agency Campbell Mithun Esty, told a meeting of the American Association of Pharmaceutical Scientists.

Consumers used the words "trite," "boring" and "goofy" to describe some ads, telling Miller they were tired of healthy-looking "patients" wandering on the beach or windsurfing through wheatfields to sell medication.

But Miller mostly blames all that negative side-effect information. For fairness, the Food and Drug Administration requires the commercials to disclose potential risks of pre-

TV commercials every day for pre-scription drugs, and new advertis-scription drugs, so vulnerable for miracle cures.

"All of these warnings are confusing consumers," said Miller, who wants prescription ads to become "a little less like sitting in a classroom and getting lectured."

"We don't want consumers saying, 'Look at all that bad stuff - I'm going to go get some ginkgo and hope for the best," instead of taking an effective prescription, she said.

In the first half of 1999 alone, companies spent $905 million on direct-to-consumer prescription drug ads, a 43 percent increase over the same period last year, according to the industry research company IMS Health.

But Miller contends that the ads generate far less recognition than all that money should have bought. Just a third of consumers accurately remembered what an advertised prescription treats, concluded her survey of 1,000 consumers and follow-ups with focus groups

In contrast, she found 80 percent consumer awareness from ads for nonprescription drugs - shorter ads that do not have to include sobering side-effect warnings.

But some prescription drug makers are considering turning to commercials that merely urge disease sufferers to "ask your doctor about the latest treatment" or call a drug company for information, said Ron Corey of Pharmacia & UpJohn. If a drug's benefits aren't touted in ads, side effects don't have to be listed.

The alleged shredding which the IRS has not addressed - was conducted to conceal evidence that members of Congress were tipsters who prompted audits of tax-exempt organizations, Landmark said.

The Associated Press reported Monday that members of Congress and White House officials have prompted hundreds of audits of political opponents in the 1990s. The audit requests ranged from the forwarding of constituent letters and newspaper articles alleging wrongdoing by various groups to personal demands for audits from members of Congress.

Landmark sought IRS records from January 1992 through January 1997 in which sources outside the agency requested audits of tax-exempt organizations.

In one written response Harold N. Toppall, an IRS manager in the exempt organizations division, stated: "My office could not locate 114 of the 1,586 potentially responsive case files. These are files missing."

IRS officials declined to address the allegations or allow Hallihan to be interviewed.

"It is inappropriate for the IRS to comment on this particular case while the litigation is pending. We are confident the issues being raised will all be taken up and addressed during the court's consideration of the case," agency spokesman Steve Pyrek

> By Anita Snow Associated Press

HAVANA - President Fidel Castro traded military drabs for an elegant black suit, filling the role of elder statesman Tuesday at a summit of European and Latin American leaders, while some of the participants called for greater democracy in Cuba.

Even with the rare public airing of human-rights concerns, Castro proclaimed that the Ibero-American summit showed his communist government has taken its rightful place in the region despite longtime efforts by the United States and its Latin American allies to isolate it.

Opening the gathering of Spain, Portugal and Latin American nations - which was convened to focus on economic issues - Castro said Cuba's status had changed since the first summit in Guadalajara, Mexico, in 1991,

"I was a strange bird there, an intruder whose admission to that hall had the taste of forgiveness," the Cuban leader said Tuesday. "Cuba had always been left out of every meeting in this continent. Some looked at me with curiosity and even pity.

"Possibly, hardly anyone believed that Cuba could withstand the collapse of the socialist camp.

Now, "we do not need to be summoned or receive anyone's permission to meet like a family without exclusions," Castro said, referring to all the nations present.

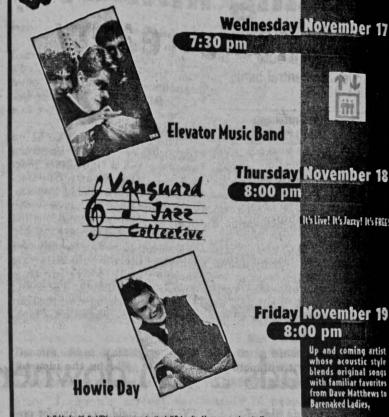

If the Ibero-American nations are family, it was as concerned relatives that some of the leaders made clear their stances on human rights and democracy.

"For me, Cuba is as to Spain as Spain is to Cuba," Spanish Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar said. "For that reason, in the future I would like to see a prosperous and democratic Cuba.

BEIJING - Chinese consumers, Internet entrepreneurs and nimble high-tech firms. To the list of China's winners in its breakthrough trade deal with the United States, add Chinese Premier Zhu Rongji.

With two timely interventions when talks verged on collapse, Zhu salvaged his ambitious mandate to overhaul China's economy, which is mired in foot-dragging by domestic interests, and managed to restore a little luster to the promise that greeted his climb to premier 20 months ago.

"This is a political turning point for Zhu Rongji," said Wang Shan, a political commentator and author. Zhu has been the most avid advocate of China's joining the capitalist World Trade Organization among the ruling Communist Party's collective leadership. And the deal struck Monday with the United States clears the biggest hurdle in China's 13-year quest to join world trade's leading body.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico -Packing 115 mph winds and torrential rains, Hurricane Lenny careened past the Dominican Republic Tuesday on a rare west-to-east course aimed directly at Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Residents, who had hoped the storm season was waning, were rushing to grocery stores to stock up on water, crackers and canned tuna. People piled up furniture in their homes as officials warned serious flooding was possible

"I'm worried about this one," said Idelisa Ramos, while three hardware store employees struggled to mount a new 600gallon water tank on top of her minivan in Bayamon. "It's such a strange storm, it can't be up to any good."

Hurricane winds extended 60 miles from the center and tropical storm-force winds another 175 miles. Late Tuesday it became a Category 3, a designation of a dangerous storm with winds from 111-130 mph.

Lenny surprised many by forming so late in the hurricane season, which ends on Nov. 30. Most hurricanes also follow an opposite path, forming in the mid-Atlantic and sweeping northwest through the Caribbean toward the United States. Forecasters say there is no danger of Lenny hitting the mainland.

The storm was expected to hit Puerto Rico or the U.S. Virgin Islands this morning.

Already on Tuesday, its outerbands brought torrential rain and dangerous, battering waves into nearshore waters off Puerto Rico's southeast coast, the U.S. National Weather Service said.

At a Home Depot near San Juan, nervous shoppers consulted a large wooden map where employees posted stickers tracking Lenny's relentless advance.

The answer, according to a Drake University professor, may be in how your workplace smells.

Marketing Professor Ayn Crowley, who is on sabbatical, has started a company that sells scents to businesses. The concoctions claim to boost energy, overcome burnout, foster cooperation and communication, and promote clear thinking.

"I can tell you that scents have the power to do that - affect productivity, even change people's attitudes," Crowley said Tuesday.

The state of Iowa recently donated $500,000 to Coralville and the Iowa Children's Museum as part of a community attraction, tourist and development award program, which will ensure the completion of the museum's phase two.

The program is designed to assist communities in the development and creation of multipurpose attractions and tourism facilities.

Phase two is scheduled to be completed in 2001; it will include a preschool gallery, a theater and a science and engineering gallery.

UI students have contributed to the museum through workstudy jobs, which allow them to interact with the children and exhibits. UI freshman Andrea Pierce worked at the Sycamore Mall museum branch until it closed on Oct. 3 and said she is looking forward to working at the new Coral Ridge Mall site.

When I first came to this site, it was all cement, and now it's almost done," she said. "I'm looking forward to the public seeing the result of all the hard work."

"Classes with coursepacks are more helpful because you get more recent articles than are published in a lot of books," she said. "Also, the cost of coursepacks is more reasonable than books."

The policy of all copy businesses is to not reproduce copyrighted material without permission, Gilmore said. The Massachusetts-based Copyright Clearance Center holds all information on material. A business looking to photocopy copyrighted material must call or fax the Clearance Center for permission, which may take up to two weeks, he Kinko's, in light of its past, is reputed to be fairly stringent about making copies for coursepacks, said Carolyn Stewart-Dyer, a UI professor of journalism.

"Kinko's is very careful about following copyright policy to the letter of the law," she said. "I've had instances in which I've taken in my own work on the byline and had to demonstrate that it's my own, even though I'm standing right there." At other colleges, copy centers do not perform such extensive verification of authorship or publisher's permission, Gilmore said.

"I talk to professors who came from other states and schools," he said. "In other cities, the diligence by which other operators follow copyright law is rather fast and loose.

Alison Altmeyer, a junior at Marquette University, in Milwaukee, said she has never heard of difficulty in photocopying copyrighted material

"I've had to copy journal articles for presentations and never ran into any problems," she said. "At some of the copy shops near the school, the cashiers do the photocopying for you. They don't even look at who the author or publisher is and never ask if you got permission." At both Kinko's and Zephyr Copies, any person can operate the self-service photocopying facilities; following the law is up to the person's discretion.

"In Iowa City, probably a big reason that coursepack business is so low is because people are finding other ways to reproduce material with or without permission through their use of photocopy machines in various shops. I'm sure that even happens in my shop," Gilmore said. The experience of some students

UI's four-year graduation plan has little effect

The UI's four-year graduation plan has had less of an effect on graduation rates than administrators had expected. At least someone was surprised - the students could have told them that years ago.

In a Nov. 15 Daily Iowan article, Emil Rinderspacher, the UI associate director of admissions, played down the functional significance of the plan, saying, "Even if it doesn't raise graduation rates, this is another planning tool for freshmen.

In other words, according to the UI, the contract that students sign during their freshman year is valuable in that it reminds them that they need to take a certain number of credit hours per year in order to graduate on time. If that's truly the reasoning behind it, then the UI would be wise to rethink the program.

Upon close inspection, it becomes apparent that this "contract" with the students, though highly touted at Orientation as a protection against getting locked out of graduation because of the school, provides minimal substantive protection for students fighting for placement in classes.

The contract promises students that they will be provided with options should they find themselves frozen out of required courses during their fourth year ... if, and only if, a number of requirements have been fulfilled on the part of the student over the previous three years.

One of these stipulations is that the student must complete a specified portion of semester hours needed for graduation each year. If he or she fails to do so - by her or his own fault, or by the fault of the UI's shortage of open seats in classes - the school does not guarantee graduation in four years.

In other words, the student's attempt to graduate in four years can be thwarted because the UI doesn't provide space in required classes - the same problem that the four-year plan sought to eliminate in the first place.

If the UI truly doesn't believe that the four-year plan does more than help students to plan ahead, it should let them know. They can start with the aforementioned comments from Rinderspacher on behalf of the UI. Then, students may know what signing the dotted line will get them. And, more importantly, what it won't.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

The WTO has to go

FOR OUR NEXT FAMILY OUTING, WE'LL TRY SOMETHING YOUR MOM AND I ORAL SURGERY NOULD FIND MORE ENJOYABLE WITHOUT ANESTHESIA,

Would you be scared if a secretive organization, unelected and unaccountable, could overturn laws of your community or country? Halloween may be over, but a corporate Frankenstein walks the planet. The World Trade Organization is making enforceable global laws, giving corporations ultimate control over the world economy, our lives and the planet. The WTO was created by the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs in 1995 to enforce international trade regulations. One hundred thirty-four member countries, including the United States, can challenge each other's laws as violations of WTO rules. Cases are decided in secret by a panel of three professional trade bureaucrats.

Every single environmental and public-health law brought before the WTO courts so far have been ruled illegal. Member countries must then change their law, pay compensation to the winner, or face non-negotiated trade sanctions. When signing on, member nations grant the WTO absolute authority to supersede local.

state and national laws if a corporation pressures its government to challenge a particular mandate.

The main goal of the WTO is to create a fully integrated global capitalist economy "free" of any "discriminatory" barriers to trade or "lost market opportunities." Case studies show that it is corporations that win and democracy that loses

On behalf of its oil industry, Venezuela challenged the U.S. Clean Air Act regulation that required gas refiners to produce cleaner gas. A WTO panel ruled against the U.S. law. Foreign oil refiners now have the option to sell dirtier gasoline in the United States as a result.

Japan is challenging a Massachusetts state law that requires companies to sever ties with the military dictatorship of the Southeast Asian country of Burma before getting government contracts. If it is ruled to be WTO-illegal, we will lose a major tool that helped bring down apartheid in South Africa.

emissions controls and bans on lead in plumbing. Lost market opportunities, as defined by corporations, could include Canada's national health care, our public universities or limits on logging in national forests.

The WTO meets in Seattle from Nov. 29 through Dec. 3. It will be met by tens of thousands of citizens from around the world who disagree with the free-trade robbery. On Nov. 30, people all over the world will organize human billboards, school walk-outs, teach-ins, lobby trips and workplace actions to send a message that the WTO has got to go.

Learning some lessons from the Pokémon school of business he cost of child-rearing, always known to be quite expensive, has risen considerably in recent months, but diapers and minivans have nothing to do with it. At the root of this problem is a marketing device so pervasive that it has become an expensive necessity to the well-being of any child: Pokémon.

Over the past year or so, this institution of toys, cards, video games and the like has blindsided American children with hurricane force. To unsuspecting parents, it seems to have come out of nowhere. Or from Japan. In any case, this Pokémon business is not merely some quirky fad - it is an unstoppable phenomenon that is quickly becoming a way of life.

Just ask the kids who collect and trade the cards or, more importantly, the parents who purchase those cards ($5.99 is the going rate for a pack these days). These cartoon characters have captured the minds of millions of children in a way that is difficult to even comprehend.

Those our age might find it simple to liken this hobby to our collections of "Garbage Pail Kids" cards or Cabbage Patch dolls. But Pokémon has a mind-warping effect that is far more sinister than the Cabbage Patch creators could have ever dreamed of.

Adam White is a DI editorial writer.

Witness the receipts for the Pokémon movie, which opened last week with approximately $32.4 million in receipts. It was enough to put Pokémon: The First Movie ahead of all others, and the film is guaranteed a high ranking at least until the kids' allowance money runs out.

Meanwhile, Burger King recently launched a marketing campaign in which the chain offers Pokémon toys within its kids' meals. The offer began on Nov. 8, and supplies ran out nationwide within about 3.2 seconds.

What's the fuss? Apparently, there a bunch of cutesy characters and a TV show. The Pokémon term stems from "Pocket Monsters," and the premise centers on the creatures and their human trainers. It is a classic battle of Good vs. Evil, as the Pokémon figures aligned with the venerable "Ash" come into conflict with such mischievous creatures as the biologically engineered "Mewtoo."

There is much for kids to absorb from this, it seems. A recent New York Times article said that Japanese values such as "responsibility," "cooperation," "humility" and "respect for elders" are all incorporated into the series. How nice. But what has not been mentioned is the number of American values that also play a strong role: "Consumerism," "marketing schemes" and "childish greed" are equal contributors to the Pokémon mystique.

Granted, it is difficult to assume that most tykes are following Pokémon to catch up on some good ol' cultural values. What intrigues them is that the games and card trading involve a certain amount of strategy and maneuvering that old is more to the Pokémon legend than episodes of "Barney" do not provide.

"Pokémon appeals to children's desire for mastery," said

Stephanie JESSE Pratola, a child psy-AMMERMAN chologist, in the latest issue of Time. OK, then. It's too bad Saddam Hussein never had any of these cards to play with as a child. Another expert in the Time report says the lower cognitive abilities in young children lead them to believe that their odds of receiving the "rare" Pokémon cards in a pack are the same as that of any other card.

Hence, this leads to addictive gambling on the part of the youngsters - sort of a lotto for the elementary school set, and their parents act as enablers. Like cigarettes, I suppose, it all gets started with the first couple of packs ...

It occurred to me at one point, meanwhile, that I needed to slide into the dark and seamy realm of Pokémon and examine this myself. In the name of research, I picked up the cheapest pack of Pokémon cards look for myself. It was the moral equivalent of jumping from a threestory building, and I hadn't felt so shameless since I bought my little sister an N'Sync CD last year. But hey, these are the costs of

I watched the TV show. I gazed at the cards. And I couldn't figure the damn phenomenon out. Listed on the back of the trading cards was an assortment of jargon about "evolutionary stages" and the "Pokédex database." Somehow, children born long after I left my Voltron and Transformers toys in the closet have gotten all of this stuff memorized. It is difficult to tell whether non-

Pokémon followers such as myself should be impressed with this kind of dedication or shocked. While experts are busy analyzing the situation and parents are pre-occupied with satisfying their children's insatiable cravings, all we can do is ride the tide of Pokémon frenzy until it subsides.

Then, perhaps, a nation's parents can dry out their empty wallets.

Jody Strittmatter is someone who's always looking for a challenge.

After winning two Div. II national championships and compiling an 87-3 record in two years at the Pittsburgh-University of Johnstown, he was in need of one. So Strittmatter set out for the pinnacle of wrestling - the Iowa wrestling room: home of a Hawkeye wrestling team that has won 17 national titles in the past 21 years. He couldn't have been a better fit.

Strittmatter is a 125-pounder, the weakest link in Iowa's lineup last season. It is the only weight in which Iowa failed to have a top-10 finisher in the 1999 Big Ten Championships. Iowa needed a 125-pounder. He

Gould: I just wanted to see what made Gable tick

To the spring of 1996, David Gould, a doctoral student, and two of his colleagues, Kevin Kelley and Bryan Less, approached one of Gould's professors with an idea. The three wanted to create a documentary that told a great story about a phenomenal wrestler, Dan Gable. After the professor and Gable approved the plan, Gould went to Dan Lind, director of the UI video center. Lind had worked with Gould in the past and after hearing Gould's plans, offered to pay for the film until the three filmmakers could raise the necessary money.

The junior

Two years later, "Freestyle: The Victories of Dan Gable" was completed. DI sportswriter Lisa Colonno talked with Gould, the film's producer, about the film, Gable's winning ways and what drew Gould to Gable. DI: What made you want to do a documentary on Gable?

DG: In 1972 I was a junior high wrestler. I wrestled for two years which fell over the 1972 Olympic games. I sat in front of my TV and literally watched Dan Gable dominate the world. In that one event, he was in a class all by himself.

One of the things that attracted me to him was that he was not that big and not that strong. He symbolized everyman. He set a goal and every day he worked to accomplish it. Something about that inspired me. Here's a guy with normal ability, but because of his work ethic he took on a folklore mystic. I wanted to see what made him tick.

DI: What is the main message of the film?

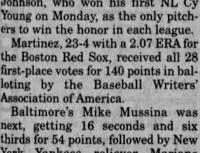

DG: I think that what happens in the film transcends wrestling. Gable is someone who you can look at and measure yourself against. We (Kelley, Less and Gould) use Gable as a motivator and ask ourselves, 'Would Gable do it that way?' and we know exactly what the other guy means. Former assistant coach J Robinson was approached by a professor of one of his wrestlers who said that Robinson's players were missing out on the bars, etc. Robinson said that the players sacrificed (these things so that they) could see the world from the top of the mountain. That is the message behind Gable. The sacrifices made by him made him certainly the top coach in any sport. (The film is about) weighing those sacrifices versus seeing the world from the top of the mountain.

DI: What was Gable's reaction to seeing the film for the first time?

DG: It was more than he could take even with his family there. Seeing some of the goofy outfits he had on during interviews like go-go boot-like shoes and a Russian hat. Obviously, when those things came

HAWKEYEOPPONENT Gophers turn around road fortunes

Minnesota coach Glen Mason is worried heading into Kinnick Stadium this weekend.

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS - The 17th-Minnesota Golden ranked Gophers are shooting for their first unbeaten regular-season road record

"It makes me nervous," Mason said. "I have a concern internally that players and coaches look at that record and say, 'Oh, we'll win that game.' That's why you play the game. Yeah, I'm worried.

Mason said one of his players told him Monday night after practice that he looked troubled. "And I looked at him and said, 'I get paid to be worried," Mason said.

After all, Mason preached against a letdown all last week after the Gophers ended Penn since 1904. All they have to do is beat downtrodden Iowa Saturday at Kinnick Stadium, which isn't as easy as it sounds, Gophers coach Glen Mason insisted Tuesday.

The Gophers (7-3, 4-3 Big Ten) are 20-point favorites over the Hawkeyes (1-9, 0-7), but Mason is leery.

State's national title hopes with the upset of the college football season at Happy Valley.

And, sure enough, Indiana made a game of it for three quarters. "I did everything I possibly could to make sure that didn't happen and we still didn't play as good as we should have," Mason said.

Defensive end Karon Riley said Mason shouldn't fret too much this week.

"We're not the type of program where we can count a victory before we get it," said Riley, the Big Ten's sack leader. "We have to teed in this league, as you can see this year."

The Gophers, who are bowl eligible for the first time since 1986, began the season with a 19-game road losing streak in the Big Ten but beat Northwestern, Illinois and Penn State away from the Metrodome, where they were just 1-3 in conference with those three losses by a combined 11 points.

"They're not (two-time defending league champion) Wisconsin yet, but they're headed in that direction," Hawkeyes first-year coach Kirk Ferentz said.

goals that Detroit's Steve Yzerman needs tonight against Northwest Division-leading Vancouver to reach the 600-goals pinnacle for his career

SPORTSWATCH

It just won't be this weekend. Aikman, who had concussions on Oct. 31 and Nov. 8, will miss a second straight game Sunday when Dallas plays Arizona. Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said it's too soon to know whether Aikman will play four for about three hours Tuesday at the request days later in a Thanksgiving game at home against Miami and former coach Jimmy Johnson.

Rams make room on roster for Little's return

ST. LOUIS - Linebacker Leonard Little, suspended for the first eight games of the season for his involvement in a 1998 fatal accident, was activated Tuesday by the St. Louis Rams.

It's anticipated that Little will play on special teams Sunday at San Francisco. Coach Dick Vermeil said Monday that Little would need more time to make a contribution at linebacker.

Little was reinstated Nov. 9 by the NFL. He pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter on June 16 in a crash that killed Susan Gutweiler of Oakville, Mo.

UNI's Sieverding earns Player of Week title

ST. LOUIS - Northern Iowa's Robbie Sieverding, who averaged 23.5 points in two victories in the Earth Grains Classic, was named Missouri Valley Conference Player of the Week.

Sieverding was selected Tuesday by a unanimous vote of the league's media panel. Sieverding led the Panthers to a 74-73 victory over Alabama and a 70-60 win over Air Force.

Steffi Graf is honored. Serena withdraws

NEW YORK - U.S. Open winner Serena

Williams withdrew from the Chase Championships on Tuesday, a few hours before another champion, Steffi Graf, stepped into the spotlight.

The five-time winner of this season-ending event was given a special tribute at Madison Square Garden, including a video of her career and the hoisting of a blue banner bearing her name to the top of the Garden alongside that of Martina Navratilova.

Gable will push it. DI: Why do you think Gable was/is such a successful coach? DG: For the complete opposite reason most people think. They see him as a tough-asnails coach, cracking his whip and that he beats people with his iron-fist presence. That is on the national scene on Nov. 6, the furthest from the truth. He is a foxy-smart guy. He'll ask you what may seem to be obvious questions just to see how you'll respond. He is a very bright coach.

I'm not saying that Iowa practices aren't extremely difficult. Gable becomes very involved with his wrestlers. He'll get up at 5 a.m. or call them at night. He'll do what he needs to do to make you a champion.

Iowa's wrestlers can look over at Gable and realize that he was not there to chew me out. but that he invested himself in my success. They wrestle for more than themselves and that is his secret. He takes his athletes under his wings and they are his kids in a way.

Karolyi to oversee U.S. women's team

By Nancy Armour Associated Press

With the U.S. women's gymnastics team flat on the mat and the Sydney Olympics a mere 10 months away. Bela Karolvi is coming back one more time.

Karolyi, who retired for a second time after the 1996 Olympics, will be the women's national team coordinator, establishing training programs for elite athletes, advising their personal coaches and overseeing the team's preparations for the 2000 Games. Karolyi, who led Nadia Comaneci, Mary Lou Retton and Kerri Strug to gold, won't be the U.S. Olympic coach.

lot tougher - match in and match out - wrestling a Big Ten schedule, but I'm looking forward to it, and I can't wait."

Strittmatter loves the Iowa wrestling room, with NCAA and Olympic champions lurking around every corner. He said he could have a different practice partner every day for two weeks. "Every day you go with a different partner who's a national champion, or an Olympic champion," Strittmatter said. "It's real tough coming to practice every day, but I love it.'

His teammates said they can't wait to have a competitor like Strittmatter in the Iowa lineup. Last season, Ben Kritsonis, the team's main 125-pounder, finished only 14-15 and didn't qualify for the NCAA Championships. He was the only Hawkeye not to do so. That's not a sparkling performance by Iowa standards.

"125 was a weight last year where we didn't get what we wanted to out of that weight," 141-pound NCAA Champion Doug Schwab said. "(Strittmatter) has come in here every day and he's working with the best guys. He's finding out what it's all about right now. There's no doubt in my mind he's going to take that step up and have success."

It's a big step to go from wrestling against the South Dakota's and Nebraska-Omaha's of the world to powerhouses like Oklahoma State and Minnesota. Zalesky said he and the rest of the team have been prodding Strittmatter, reminding him that he isn't necessarily the dominan force he was in the lower division

"He's done a lot at Div. II, but he hasn't done anything in Div. yet," Zalesky said. "I'm using that to motivate him, keep reminding him that he hasn't done anything yet - it was only Div. II."

Strittmatter expects himself to be a national champion on the mat and so do his teammates. The journey begins Nov. 26 in Fort Dodge, and his first home meet as a Hawkeye is Dec. 1 against Northern Iowa. It's a moment that Strittmatter has been waiting for his entire life.

"It's going to be incredible," Strittmatter said. "I can't even put it into words what it's going to mean to me. Especially coming to Carver running out there in front of those Hawkeye fans. It's going to be great. DI sportswriter Greg Wallace can be reached a

One wrestler expected to make an impact this year despite low national expectations is Paul Jenn. Jenn placed fourth at the Big Ten Championships but still sees himself as an underdog, a role he likes being in.

"It has been more fun to have low expectations, because I have always been the underdog," Jenn said. "The past two years haven't been a whole team effort. I will have to step up this year."

Wes Hand is back for his senior season after a disappointing junior year. Hand was slowed by an ankle injury and missed the last nine dual meets of the season. He came back to place eighth at the Big Ten meet.

Hand also placed eighth at the NCAA meet in 1998 on his way to becoming an All-American that year. Eric Juergens will be returning for the Hawkeyes after an outstanding sophomore campaign where he finished third at the NCAA and Big Ten Championships.

The 133-pounder has set his sights high for this year's Iowa team.

"We are really focused on the national title," Juergens said. "We also want to get the Big Ten title back."

Iowa had won 25 Big Ten titles in a row before getting beat by Minnesota last year.

The Hawkeyes lost to Minnesota three times before coming back and defeating the Golden Gophers at the NCAA Championships.

Minnesota may again be Iowa's toughest Big Ten opponent this season.

"Minnesota has the whole team back and they look pretty strong," Zalesky said. "Illinois will also be tough.

The Hawkeyes will enter the season ranked No. 2 in the nation behind Iowa State. The two teams will meet on December 10 in Ames
