Gore, Bush win in Iowa

Gore breezes; Bush pushed by Forbes

By Anne Huyck and Glen Leyden
The Daily Iowan

DES MOINES — Iowa's Democratic caucuses ended with an almost 2-1 margin of victory for Al Gore, while George W. Bush fought off a late surge by Steve Forbes in the Republican race.

Results started coming in from the 2,131 Democratic precincts in the state around 8 p.m. Monday, showing that Gore was leading former New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley by 63 percent to 35 percent.

"The message from tonight is very, very simple, and here it is: We've just begun to fight — for revolutionary education, for universal health care that begins step by step with help for children," Gore said. "That is the message I'm taking to New Hampshire at dawn tomorrow morning."

After both Bradley and Gore's extensive campaigns in Iowa, the two have moved their efforts to New Hampshire, where the first primary in the nation will be held on Feb. 1.

Results began trickling into the Republican headquarters just 10 minutes after caucuses began. The results set the stage for a dramatic week in New Hampshire, the first in a furious flurry of primary elections that could determine the presidential nominations by March 7.

An excited Bush did not note Forbes' late surge during his post-caucus remarks. The Texas governor prevailed with a 41-30 percent margin.

The Texas governor described the caucus results as validation of his compassionate conservative agenda. "It's a solid victory, and I'm humbled," Bush said.

"Today marks the end of the Clinton era," he said. "I want your votes, and I'm going to work hard to earn your Locally, observers say, the caucuses had a high turnout.

Crowded caucus sites — one even running out of registration forms — has some Johnson County caucus-goers speculating that there was a high county turnout in Monday's caucuses.

With 98 percent of the precincts reporting, results from Johnson County precincts showed Democratic candidate Bill Bradley and Republican candidate George W. Bush leading.

Fifty of the 51 Johnson County Republican precincts reported results, with 18 percent of registered voters turning out and 2,408 votes. Bush led with 43 percent, followed by Forbes and Keyes, a close second and third, with 20 percent and 19 percent, respectively. Democratic results for the county were not available at press time.

"Most of the candidates worked Johnson County hard and really recently," said UI political science Chairman John Nelson. "I saw the turnout in the state was down, but in the caucus I attended, there seemed to be a lot of people."

As in 1988, Monday's caucuses had lots of competition but not quite as high a turnout. The state saw a 98 percent turnout that year.

The UI Dance Marathon is on target to surpass last year's total pledges.

By Sky Eilers
The Daily Iowan

As many as 1,500 dancers and other volunteers are expected to take part in the UI Dance Marathon on Feb. 4-5, a 30-hour-long event to raise money for children with cancer.

The money raised for Dance Marathon, expected to surpass last year's total of $355,000, is turned in through three installments so that dancers don't have to raise all of their money at once, said Jess Villanueva, a UI senior and the marathon executive director.

"I think a lot of people got their money raised over break from family and friends," Villanueva said. "We haven't had anyone coming into the office freaking out about not having it yet."

The first installment called for $100 on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, and the final two call for $125, said Karla Lee, a UI junior and the marathon business director.

Denise Powell/The Daily Iowan
Kourtney Hoffman, the Hospitality Director of Dance Marathon, and Corey King, development director, revise their schedule for upcoming Dance Marathon events.

It's easier to collect during break because there are no classes and few distractions, said Sara Abdo, a UI senior and a marathon morale captain.

"My biggest money raiser was writing letters to friends and family, and I collected a lot of that money during Winter Break," she said.

Beth Elliott, a UI senior and a marathon representative for Alpha Phi sorority, said she also got most of her money during the holiday break.

"It's difficult asking people for money during the holidays, but I think it can be especially rewarding for people to donate money for this cause during the holidays," she said.

There are still opportunities for dancers to raise the $350 minimum before the Feb. 4 deadline.

UI physics class ponders strong force of Sunday tests

In order to allow more time in which to take tests, a UI class may explore a nontraditional option.

Sunday. A day of rest, relaxation and ... exams?

For UI students enrolled in College Physics II, a yearlong class required for many pre-med majors, exams will be held on Sundays, said Jack Scudder, a UI professor of physics and astronomy.

The unorthodox testing period resulted from requests by students for longer exam periods than the one hour allotted on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, he said.

"If we take exams on Sundays, it would be designed to give the students more time for the test and inconvenience as few people as possible," Scudder said.

The tests cannot be incorporated into the class meetings because students need to cover the maximum amount of material in lecture in order to prepare for the MCATs, Scudder said.

Thomas Boggess, the associate chairman of the physics and astronomy department, said he has received a few complaints regarding the non-traditional test time. While Scudder said no students have complained directly to him about the Sunday tests, some students have contacted undergraduate academic advisers about the issue. The academic advising office told him that there is no rule on the books prohibiting exams on Sundays, Scudder said.

If there's no policy on a matter, the faculty member can decide what to do until

Union goes trucking for Gore

Volunteers take to the highway to inform Iowa's union members about the campaign.

By Heather Pavnica
 The Daily Iowan

Volunteers from the Service Employees International Union Local 199 squeezed into a purple trailer and chatted with thousands of union members during the past 12 days in an effort to gain support for presidential hopeful Al Gore.

The Mobile Action Center, which was stationed at the former Hawk-I Truck stop in Coralville, is equipped with 12 computers and phones. The trailer, owned by the union's international headquarters in Washington, D.C., arrived in Iowa on Jan. 13 and will leave today for Maryland.

The center reached 800 out of approximately 2,000 union members on its first day, said Sarah Swisher, the political coordinator for Local 199.

The union volunteers encouraged union members to go to Monday's caucuses and choose Al Gore. The callers hoped to educate the union members, many of which are employed at the UI Hospitals and Clinics, about the presidential candidates and the campaign, Swisher said.

The union supports Gore because of his position on health care (including his desire to expand health care for children) and his pro-labor stance and because he opposes the Republican Party's goal of getting rid of Medicaid, she said. "He's been there for the union when we needed him," Swisher said. "He became the obvious choice."

The trailer is one of three that travels to gain support for Gore. The trailers are identified by the purple-and-gold logo painted on the side, said Karen Bahow, the executive director of the service employees union.

The center has more than 50 volunteer callers who use phone banks to contact union members in the seven-day-a-week operation, Bahow said.

Gore's efforts in the Senate made her choice for president an easy decision, she said.

"I think it is very important to have found a candidate who is strong about issues ... such as health care and having a union," Bahow said. "We know we can trust what he says."

The union's trailer is used as part of its membership education program; it is funded by the operations budget, said Todd Cook, a member of the union's political department.

Local 199 will continue its campaign efforts after the trailer leaves, Swisher said.

Everything's coming up Rosie

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Rosie O'Donnell will be back for this year's Grammys.

The talk-show host's stint last year earned the awards their second-highest rating in six years.

"From the moment Rosie first appeared on the Grammy stage last year, it was apparent she was loved by the audience, and throughout the evening, she demonstrated her passion for the music," Michael Greene, president of the Recording Academy, said in a statement Monday.

Patricia Smith no longer Ms.-ing out

NEW YORK (AP) — Patricia Smith, who was forced to resign from the Boston Globe after admitting she made up sources and quotations, has been hired by Ms. magazine.

Her first column, about a visit to her jailed 22-year-old son, will appear in the February-March issue. She does not disclose why he is behind bars.

Marcia Ann Gillespie, Ms. magazine's editor in chief, said she was shocked by Smith's 1998 admission that she fabricated material but doesn't think the writer should be banned from journalism forever.

Gillespie said she is not worried about Smith's integrity.

"It doesn't even occur to me that there would be any issue," she said. "And, by the way, we also do fact-checking, so — duh — I don't think it can be a problem."

Gotti beats cancer rap

NEW YORK (AP) — John Gotti is cancer-free after radiation and surgery for throat cancer, the New York Post reported Monday.

"He looks great, and thank God, the odds are in his favor," an unidentified relative of the Mafia boss was quoted as saying.

Gotti, 59, got a clean bill of health last month at the federal prison hospital in Springfield, Mo., where he was treated for a particularly virulent form of cancer, the newspaper reported. He was diagnosed in 1998.

Gotti is beginning the eighth year of a life sentence in Marion, Ill., for racketeering and murder.

Experts assess statewide prison 'telemedicine'

More Iowa prison inmates are receiving health care services at the UI without leaving the correctional facilities due to advanced, two-way video systems and diagnostic equipment that allow long-distance consultations between Iowa Department of Corrections and the UI medical staff.

Moreover, the quality of "telemedicine" care for prisoners and its cost-effectiveness will only improve as the number of consultations increases, according to a UI telemedicine expert.

"A couple of years ago, only a handful of states were developing prison telemedicine programs. So in many ways we've been at the forefront of providing this type of service," said Michael Kienzie, the associate dean for clinical affairs and biomedical communications in the UI College of Medicine. "However, as telemedicine expands — not just in serving the prison population but in other areas of health services delivery — it will be a common way to do certain medical consultations."

The collaborative prison telemedicine project began in March 1997, using the Iowa Communications Network and existing Integrated Service Digital Network technology. Both the UI and the prison telemedicine sites have high-resolution television monitors that allow the consulting physician at the UI and inmate/patient to interact visually and audibly in real time.

Sub shop lacks a hammed-up opening

Quizno's lacked an announced grand opening when it opened for business in the Old Capitol Mall Monday.

Quizno's owner Shari Sweeting said the restaurant opened ahead of schedule to take advantage of the mall's sidewalk sale.

"The reception today was fantastic because we didn't advertise at all," she said. "We finished construction on Jan. 21 and just decided to go."

There was a steady flow of customers all day, but employees were busy in spurts, said Jason Wright, a UI junior and Quizno's employee.

"It's convenient to work here because it's near everything, and it's not open too late," he said.

Quizno's opened with approximately 15 employees, most of whom are UI students; it is still taking applications.

The shop is open during mall hours, but, Sweeting said, the hours may be expanded at a later date.

Sweeting and her husband, Art, also own the Quizno's at 3560 E. Court St.

Neighboring Taco Bell, located across the hall, is not concerned about the new store because of cost and speed of the food, said Taco Bell night manager Minh Tran.

"We have inexpensive, fast food," Tran said. "They're expensive, and they take longer."

Coralville literacy gets a $2,000 boost

The Rotary Club of Coralville-North Corridor presented a $2,080 donation to the Iowa City School District Monday afternoon at Coralville Central Elementary School.

Superintendent Lane Plugge accepted the money, which was donated by various rotary members. The funds will be used to improve literacy and reading skills for the students and their families through the Family, Food and Fun program, said Rotary Vocational Director A.J.

Mahler.

The program will be held at Wickam, Kirkwood and Coralville Central Elementary Schools in Coralville, Plugge said.

"We have had rotary readers at our school for several years," said Coralville Central Principal Michael O'Leary. "The kids really benefit from this."

Eight to 10 families participating in the program will meet for two hours a week for six weeks. During each work session, the parents and children will split up and discuss various topics ranging from behavior-management techniques to substance abuse.

This program was designed to teach students in kindergarten and first-grade at the three elementary schools, Mahler said.

"Literacy is a real problem in the world," he said. "And illiterate parents cannot read to their children."

The main point of the program is to get parents to read to their children, Mahler said.

"Some people don't know how important reading is, and some parents don't read to their children at all," he said.

Englert's fate still in holding pattern

While Iowa City and a community group wait for an answer from Kip Pohl on whether he will sell the Englert Theatre to the city or the group, Pohl has not publicly announced if he closed the deal with the Des Moines-based Central States Theatres Monday.

Pohl, owner of the Union Bar and Malone's, was expected to buy the Englert Theatre, 221 E. Washington St., but would not comment on the deal. Arthur Stein, the owner of Central States Theatres, could not be reached for comment.

The Iowa City City Council said it would consider buying the theater from Pohl and then selling it to the Englert Theatre Coalition, a community group, under a loan agreement. The coalition wants to turn the building into a community theater and arts center.

If the council decides to purchase the theater, it hopes Pohl will sell the building for the amount he paid for the property, $725,000, said Steve Atkins, the city manager.

The Englert Theatre Coalition has raised $50,000 and will need to do more fund raising. The coalition hopes the council will decide to buy the theater because Pohl offered to sell it to the coalition for $1.5 million, said Larry Eckholt, a member of the Englert Theatre Coalition.

Pohl has not contacted the coalition, said coalition member Daryl Woodson Monday.

"I have no reason to hear from him," he said. "It is City Council's decision now."

The council will vote on whether to buy the theater during a Feb. 1 meeting if Pohl decides to sell it to the city.

Online textbook company prowls streets of I.C.

Varsitybooks.com has taken to the streets to promote its 40 percent discounted books with a semi-truck that puts its billboard under a spotlight.

The online textbook company has dispatched 50 trucks in the heartland, said driver Rex Hamilton.

"When people see this truck, especially at night with the lights on, they look at me strangely and exclaim, 'What is this?'" he said.

Hamilton has circled Iowa City in the truck since Jan. 21; he will leave tonight for Grand Forks, N.D. He makes his living driving trucks for creative advertising.

"From the time I spent here, I really like Iowa City," he said. "The people are some of the friendliest at any college I've seen."

"I've been driving from 11 a.m. until 9 p.m. every day, trying to find good areas that are safe for the vehicle. It's pretty cool because I make $8 (an hour) and have 80 hour weeks. They also pay for my lodging

Council reviews long-term projects

The Iowa City City Council reviewed its budget for capital improvement projects Monday, including $1 million in renovations for bridges and $36.7 million for street reconstruction by 2004.

Monday's budget workshop was the second chance for councilors to review proposed long-term spending.

A portion of the street reconstruction will aid the Downtown Streetscape project.

Approximately $1.4 million will go toward Pedestrian and Bike Trails. The Parks and Recreation Department will receive $5.2 million in improvements, including an outdoor theater stage with seating in City Park, which is under construction.

A total of $38.2 million will be spent on water-related projects, including a $3.8 million dam renovation for the new water plant.

The city budget is expected to be $175.8 million over the next four years.

Councilor Connie Champion said she thinks it has taken a lot of work but the council is on schedule and will be scheduling many more work sessions to stay that way.

"I think that a lot of people thought that because there were a lot of new council members, we would be in turmoil, and I was the first to say it would be total chaos, but it hasn't been," she said. "Everything is going much better than expected. Now I think we just have to work on what's important and what can be postponed."

Mayor Ernie Lehman said he also thinks things are going smoothly, thanks to the new councilors.

"Our first council meeting was last Tuesday and the three new council members were not afraid to express their views, and that's unusual for new members. So I think we'll do fine," he said.

Chicago seeks Iowa's help in serial-killer case

■ Detectives are asking out-of-state authorities for help in searching for the killer of eight women.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Detectives searching for an attacker who they believe killed eight women on Chicago's South Side are asking law-enforcement agencies in 10 states, including Iowa, for help.

In a move that widens their current investigation, detectives are asking the out-of-state agencies if they've seen similar pattern slayings. The killings stopped abruptly six months ago.

Chicago officials are sending out a description of the common elements of the crimes. The victims are all black women who have been arrested on drug or prostitution charges. Detectives say they were all found strangled in abandoned buildings. The killings started in 1993 and ended in June 1999.

The information has been sent to authorities in Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Colorado.

Authorities speculate that the killings may have stopped because of stepped-up police presence in the areas in which the crimes occurred or because city workers are becoming more vigilant about boarding up abandoned buildings.

Police announced last summer they were looking for four pattern killers they believe were responsible for more than 10 slayings. Three men have been charged with one killing, and another has been charged with three slayings.

respect and your confidence." Forbes was at least as happy with the results, saying, "We vastly over-performed the polls and have emerged as the conservative candidate" going into New Hampshire.

While Bush was challenged by the flat-tax platform of Forbes, the man who is expected to be his primary challenger for the Republican nomination, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., captured 5 percent of statewide votes.

McCain spent most of his time concentrating on the upcoming primary in New Hampshire and was not in Iowa for the caucuses.

Although Gore swept up in Iowa, New Hampshire is predicted to be a tighter race. According to a Jan. 22 Reuters-WHDH poll, 49 percent of New Hampshire voters planned on supporting Gore, 39 percent supported Bradley, and 12 percent were undecided.

Bradley spoke enthusiastically to his supporters, assuring them that he will work hard and congratulate Gore.

Even after winning the Iowa caucuses, Gore has a tough road ahead of him to get the Democratic nomination, said Mark Schwartz, a Gore volunteer.

"We anticipate him to be the nominee, but it will definitely be a struggle for the presidency," Schwartz said.

Former President Jimmy Carter, in 1976, was the last candidate to win the Iowa caucuses, be nominated as the Democratic candidate, and go on to be elected president. With this in mind, Bradley announced that he will continue to campaign.

"The Iowa caucuses are more about eliminating non-viable candidates from the field than choosing from the remaining," said John Nelson, the chairman of the UI political science department.

Republican Orrin Hatch has planned a news conference for today, and an adviser said he would likely drop out of the race. Gary Bauer was said to be deeply disappointed and assessing the future of his candidacy but told 50 supporters he would forge on to New Hampshire.

In the weeks to follow, most of the major states, starting with New Hampshire and South Carolina, will hold their own caucuses and primaries. So although the nominations will not come until summer, the candidate who will receive the Democratic nomination will be obvious within a few weeks, said campaign workers for Bradley and Gore.

Meanwhile, some Bradley supporters remain optimistic that he will rebound from his Iowa loss.

"I love Bradley; I know he'll win," said Erik Alvarez, 17, who attended a caucus in Des Moines. "This is only the beginning; people are excited about him now."

Johnson County sees high turnout

VOTER TURNOUT

Iowa counties, Terrence Neuzil, a UI graduate and an Iowa City resident, pointed out the county's high turnout.

"Some counties had less than 10 percent turnout, but that's still good, because caucuses take more time and effort than primaries," he said.

Iowa City's Precinct 3 caucus was moved to a larger room in the IMU to hold the larger-than-expected crowd, while caucusgoers at Iowa City City High School spilled out into the hallways.

The Democratic caucus at Precinct 23, held at City High, had such a high turnout that it ran out of registration forms, said

Maile Sagen, an Iowa City resident who volunteered at the site.

At a Republican caucus held at Iowa City West High School, city resident Dick Perkins said that it was easily the biggest caucus he ever attended.

"The last one had just 15 people," he said. "Tonight we've got 55."

Josh Bowen, a member of UI Students for Bush, attended the Precinct 6 Republican caucus at Lincoln Elementary and said the majority of people who showed up were students.

"Four years ago, only 10 voters showed up at this precinct. This year, 48 showed up," he said. "We were pretty proud of the fact that we could get so many students."

Bradley and Bush triumph in county

■ The Texas governor saw a low student turnout, but the students turned out for Bradley.

Staff Reports

The Daily Iowan

While Bush took the state in the Republican race, few UI students turned out to support him at the Johnson County caucuses.

Only nine people turned out at the 19th Precinct Republican caucus, held at Horace Mann Elementary School, but Peter Matthes, the co-chairman for communications for UI Students for Bush, called the evening a success.

"I thought it was a nice, quaint group of people," he said. "We only had a total of nine people, but we had a good time."

UI senior Sarah Claypool said that when it came to selecting the county delegation, the group seemed to have a lack of interest.

"It was very strange that no one wanted to come from this precinct," she said. "They have an opportunity to make a difference."

Bush won the 19th with five of the nine available votes, while Forbes received two, Keyes took one, and McCain grabbed the final vote.

In the 20th Precinct, also held at Horace Mann, 27 voters turned out, including an unusually high number of students.

"I'd have to say half to a little bit more were students, and it was good to see the students get involved," said Marc Parino, the secretary of Students for Bush.

The caucus lasted more than an hour at the 20th Precinct and included a debate over which candidate deserved the nomination.

Bush took the 20th precinct as well, finishing with 17 votes. McCain came next with five votes, while Keyes took three and Forbes received one.

Meanwhile, at Iowa City West High School, Precincts 7, 8 and 9 filled the classrooms.

"This is my fourth caucus, and we've never had this huge of turnout. One group had to move into the hall because the room couldn't fit them all," said Randy Joss, secretary of Precinct 7.

West High senior Maureen Perkins also felt the event was an intriguing showcase and said she would like to return to the caucuses in four years.

"I want to have a say, not just sit around like some of my friends and skip getting a voice. It's really not that hard to come," she said.

Precinct 7 began the meeting with the pledge of Allegiance, followed by the nomination of the chairperson and circulation of a contribution bag for Johnson County Republicans.

Three-minute speeches were then allowed for the six candidates. After voting, the results were announced to the cheers and groans of the classroom. Texas Gov. George W. Bush had a strong showing with 41 of the 87 votes.

Much to the delight of Steve Becker, an Alan Keyes supporter, Keyes finished second with 14 votes.

"Of course I wanted Keyes to win, but I'm really happy with second," he said. "It's the best we could have hoped for."

On the Democratic side, even though Vice President Al Gore won the state handily, Bill Bradley won Johnson County with strong student support.

Tonight is not an end but a beginning ... I'm proud of where we are tonight.

— Bill Bradley, Democrat

Tonight is a victory of principles and ideas. It puts the establishment on notice.

— Steve Forbes, Republican

I think as time goes by, more Americans are going to realize that the real purpose is to vote ... our hearts.

— Alan Keyes, Republican

I am proud of the hardy Iowans who came out to support my candidacy in the Iowa caucuses tonight.

— John McCain, Republican

I wasn't raised to be a quitter. About half of our caucusgoers tonight were first-time caucusgoers.

— Gary Bauer, Republican

I would like to thank the good people of Iowa and Alaska who went out to their caucuses tonight.

— Orrin Hatch, Republican

Iowa goes a little nuts on caucus night

■ The blare of brass bands heralds the state's place in the sun.

By Katie Bernard and Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

DES MOINES — While the Iowa caucuses Monday marked the beginning of the upcoming presidential race for supporters, it also marked the end of a lengthy process for caucus organizers and members of the local media.

Shortly after it was announced that George W. Bush would hold on to a closer-than-expected caucus win, the blare of the Council Bluffs High School band trumpeted the optimism of supporters at his party Monday night at the Des Moines Marriott.

"They seem anxious," said Conrad, Iowa, resident Brett Folkerts. "Bush knows what it takes to win."

There was euphoric feeling in the air — and satisfaction, said Texas resident Brendalyn Johnson, a longtime supporter.

"We feel that our efforts have not been in vain," he said.

With 95 percent of the precincts reporting in the Republican caucuses, Bush's 11 percent lead over Steve Forbes seemed insurmountable to some.

"Everything's geared for him to do well," said Dallas resident Jim Hamlin. "The mood is a very strong Bush."

Throughout the day, reporters from around the world milled around the halls of the Hotel Fort

Des Moines, the Democratic Party headquarters, where the results from the 2,131 precinct caucuses results would stream in.

Reporters spent the evening positioning video cameras throughout the halls and entryways, hoping to catch a glimpse of candidates and then relay the results of the caucuses to the nation, which watches Iowa for the first indication of a new national leader.

The Democratic Party handed out more than 750 media credentials for Hotel Fort Des Moines and displayed results on an 8-foot-high television screen in the main ballroom.

"I am absolutely exhausted," said Jenny Katz, a film editor with Fox News in Los Angeles. "I have been here since last Thursday, and I am up every night until at least 3:30 a.m., editing film. Tomorrow, I fly to New Hampshire at 8:30 in the morning."

At the Republican tabulation center at Drake University's Knapp Center, a 15-by-20-foot TV screen displayed vote totals from the Republican caucuses.

Approximately 100 long white tables filled the court reserved for the media. Republican supporters were at other locations throughout the city.

In the smoking lounge at Hotel Fort Des Moines, ash trays were filled to the brim as reporters sipped coffee and complimentary cans of soda.

Political rookies get their feet wet

■ Beginners jump head first into Iowa's political scene by attending their first caucus.

By Lisa Livermore
The Daily Iowan

UI freshman William Barnum held up a tape recorder and clutched his camera Monday night to capture the essence of his first Iowa Democratic caucus.

As a member of UI Students for Bradley, Barnum said, he wanted to experience this caucus because he does not think Iowa's grassroots caucuses will be around much longer.

Eric Parker, a UI freshman and member of UI Students for Bush, said he has faith in the political process and wishes other students shared his optimism.

"I've been all around the state with the campaign, and I've seen the apathy on campuses — but the people who get involved are very involved," he said.

These students joined hundreds of others making their caucus debuts Monday night at the IMU Democratic precincts and at the Pappajohn Republican precinct.

UI sophomore Amanda Hamilton, who served as Bradley caucus chairwoman in Precinct 6, said that though this was her first caucus involvement, she would do anything for presidential hopeful Bill Bradley.

"It's been a wild and crazy ride," she said of the crowded caucus in the IMU Iowa Room.

Some precinct sites held volatile debates among students, while other caucus newcomers were unsure of procedures but wanted a firsthand look at the procedure.

"I feel it's my responsibility to do my part," said Karolina Czerwinski, a UI freshman and Democrat who said she was nervous about her first caucus but wanted to learn about the democratic process.

Parker said he has worked for more than 60 hours for Students for Bush because he was raised as a Republican.

"I've loved politics since I've been old enough to watch a debate," he said. "It's probably the most influential thing I've ever done. It's my chance to really go out there and advocate for the government."

UI freshman Bryan Shaw supported the Republicans with Parker outside the south cafeteria of Burge Residence Hall, hoping that students would get involved in an effort that first whetted his political appetite when he was 4 years old.

"I wrote a letter to Ronald Reagan, and I got a picture — that got me interested," he said.

Getting involved by ignoring the caucuses

■ Some local residents opted to express their views outside the caucuses Monday night.

By Cassie Huisman
The Daily Iowan

The months-long hoopla surrounding the first-in-the-nation Iowa caucuses did not have much of an effect on Greg Thompson, a Johnson County resident and independent voter.

Thompson, along with roughly 26 other like-minded people, eschewed the caucuses Monday night and attended "an alternative social event," sponsored by the Johnson County Labor Party and the Iowa City Green Party at the Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St.

"I didn't go to the caucuses as a statement that the Democratic and Republican parties are no longer legitimate," said Thompson, the publisher of a newsletter called the "Green Acre News."

UI senior and singer Jennifer Danielson provided the event's entertainment, which was followed by an open mic for anyone who wanted to voice her or his political views.

Danielson said she has never been to a caucus and was unsure about her decision to miss another.

"I was torn about whether or not I should go to the caucuses," she said. "I support people getting involved, but I don't know enough about it."

Al Achtner, the chairman of the Johnson County Labor Party, said this is his first year since 1980 that he missed the caucuses. He said the reason he skipped this year's was to support the debut of the Blue/Green Party, the combination of the local Labor and Green parties.

UI freshmen Cara Hamann and Beth Borchers said they attended the event for a class and to learn more about politics, but they weren't sure if they wanted to speak out. The two said they liked having an alternative to the traditional caucuses.

"It's a very relaxed environment," Borchers said. "I felt like I could express myself here."

While many in attendance opted not to attend the caucuses, some came after the caucuses finished.

"I went to the Democratic caucus reluctantly," said Leslie Lanning, a Johnson County resident.

DANCE MARATHON

"All this week we're going to be 'canning' at the basketball games and the Ped Mall," Abdo said.
 The second increment of donations is due today and Wednesday; they can be turned in at the University Box Office.
 If dancers haven't raised enough money, they can turn to their morale captains for help, said Jen Rothman, a UI senior and marathon morale captain.
 "Unless somebody hasn't raised any money or shown any motivation, morale captains and Dance Marathon executives will bend over backwards to get people to dance," she said. "We'll help them 'can' or even give them some of our own money."
 Dance Marathon uses the money raised to sponsor 118 families of children with cancer, said Josh Taustein, a UI senior and the event's assistant director of family relations. This year, 86 families are attending from across Iowa, and a family that used to live in Iowa is flying in from New Mexico, he said.

"Families are getting really excited because we get together about five times a year so students can really get to know the families and vice-versa," Taustein said. "For them, the event is kind of like a reunion."

Also contributing to this year's event will be the rock station 94.1 KRNA. "The Morning Rock Show" has been selling a CD that has raised more than $8,000 for Dance Marathon and is still selling, said Jay Wells, a UI senior and radio personality on "The Morning Rock."

Student dancers say they are excited about the Dance Marathon; the experience is one that every UI student should try.

Class mulls possibility of Sunday tests

SUNDAY CLASSES

a policy is established, Boggess said. The final decision is in the hands of the department's chairman, Wayne Polyzou, he said.

"Tests are supposed to be given during the regular class meeting or during the allotted finals time," said Ann Rhoades, the vice president for university relations. "However, if everyone in the class agreed to taking tests on Sundays, we would allow them to."

Some students in the class contacted by The Daily Iowan said they opposed the Sunday tests, and some wanted to remain anonymous for fear their grades would be affected.

UI freshman Adam Langer, a pre-med and pre-nursing major, thinks that Sunday tests infringe on the weekend and should not be expected of students in his program.

"Sunday is a day to prepare for tests during the week," he said.

Whether Scudder will administer tests on Sunday will be decided by the students in the near future with an e-mail straw vote.

Scudder said a majority of students need to approve the exam time in order to enact it.

"In any exam, there will be approximately five to 10 students who can't take the exam because of family emergencies, work, illness, etc.," he said. "The policy for religious holidays is that the student can make up exams if there's a conflict."

The policy was outlined in the course syllabus that students received at the beginning of the year but was not printed in the registration booklet.

Court reaffirms campaign $ limits

■ In a 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court backs state limits on contributions.

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a timely election-year ruling, the Supreme Court Monday reaffirmed states' sweeping power to place limits on campaign contributions to political candidates.

The justices, splitting 6-3, reinstated Missouri's limits for state races and safeguarded for now the $1,000 cap on individuals' contributions to candidates for federal office — who could spend $3 billion nationwide this year.

Approximately two-thirds of the states impose campaign contribution limits. In California, voters will be asked in a March 7 initiative to impose limits and ban corporate and union contributions in state races.

The court's three dissenters said Monday's decision tramples free-speech rights and voted for letting people contribute as much as they want to all candidates by overturning a 1976 Supreme Court landmark decision that shapes the nation's political landscape.

The court said fighting corruption, or even the perception of corruption, justifies contribution limits.

"Leave the perception of impropriety unanswered, and the cynical assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardize the willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance," Justice David H. Souter wrote for the court.

"Democracy works only if the people have faith in those who govern, and that faith is bound to be shattered when high officials and their appointees engage in activities that arouse suspicions of malfeasance and corruption."

Left unaffected by the ruling is currently unregulated "soft money" — contributions made to groups that spend money without ties to specific candidates.

President Clinton praised the decision as "a victory for democracy" in a statement read by Press Secretary Joe Lockhart. "The American people know that our political system needs to be fixed, and today's decision sets the stage for further reform," said Clinton, who is urging Congress to pass more campaign-finance changes this year.

Sen. John McCain, an Arizona senator and Republican presidential contender, also applauded the ruling as "marvelous." He has made campaign reform the centerpiece of his bid for the GOP nomination.

E. Joshua Rosenkranz, of the pro-limits Brennan Center for Justice, called the ruling "a grand slam home run reformers have been waiting for" because the court "holds in no uncertain terms that it is the province of the legislature, not the courts, to set contribution limits."

But James Bopp, an Indiana lawyer who represents the National Right to Life Committee, the National Rifle Association and other groups in challenging contribution limits, said restricting donations "is bad for democracy."

Bopp said courts still can strike down contribution limits found to be set so low they prevent candidates from financing campaigns.

The nation's highest court had not ruled on contribution limits since 1976, when, in a decision called Buckley v. Valeo, it said free-speech rights trump any attempt to limit an individual candidate's spending. But the court also said in the ruling that contributions to federal candidates could be limited to $1,000.

Masses held for victims of Seton Hall fire

■ More than 1,500 people filled the church services of the three freshman victims.

By John Curran

LONG BRANCH, N.J. — The teen-age pallbearers cried all the way up the aisle, their faces contorted, their sobs echoing off the marble floors and wooden rafters of St. Jerome Roman Catholic Church.

In the pews, Frank S. Caltabilota Jr.'s classmates and friends listened intently to the priest's words, dabbing at their noses with tissues and wiping away tears. His mother sat in a front pew, clutching a teddy bear, her husband's arm draped over her shoulders.

"Why did Frankie have to die so young?" asked the Rev. Frederick Jackiewicz. "We have no answers for these questions. We do not understand the ways of God. We try to the best of our limited ability to understand, but we cannot."

The heartbreaking tableau was mirrored in two other New Jersey churches as three Seton Hall University freshmen who died in a dormitory fire last week were laid to rest. Like Caltabilota, John Giunta, 18, and Aaron Karol, 18, were remembered as upbeat, selfless, promising young men.

In West Long Branch, more than 800 people filled the church for the service for Caltabilota, who aspired to a career in medicine. Those who could not get a seat were ushered downstairs, where a video monitor was set up to broadcast the proceedings.

University Chancellor Thomas Peterson was among 450 people who crowded into St. John the Evangelist Roman Catholic Church in Dunellen to say goodbye to Karol, a soccer enthusiast and criminal justice major who hoped to someday work for the FBI.

"We say that Seton Hall is a family, and it is," Peterson said. "We, like yourselves, have lost a son."

Three busloads of Seton Hall students went to Vineland, where approximately 500 people turned out for Giunta's funeral Mass at St. Francis of Assisi Roman Catholic Church.

Giunta, an elementary education major who aspired to teaching in the inner city, was remembered as a generous, loyal person with a

At Seton Hall, meanwhile, some freshmen returned to their rooms at Boland Hall for the first time since the fire.

IT'S TIME TO ASK THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES...

Hope. Progress. Answers.

Dear Presidential Candidates:

Last year, cancer killed half a million people nationwide and over 6,600 people right here in Iowa. These individuals, and their families, represent the true health care crisis in America — coping with sickness, pain and death.

On behalf of cancer survivors, patients and their families, we want to know what your plans are to fight cancer? Your presidency can help us move toward a cure.

Fighting this disease is not just an issue of increasing funding for cancer research. It's a war that must be fought on multiple fronts. We urge you to set a goal and work toward it; support the American Cancer Society's goal of cutting cancer deaths in half by 2015. Ensure patients have the option of participating in clinical trials — cutting-edge treatments that can reduce suffering and prolong life. And increase health care access for uninsured Americans including preventive measures for screening cancers, such as mammograms, so people get the care they need and deserve.

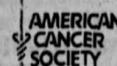

As Americans we all share common experiences, and sadly, coping with this disease is one of them. Talk about your experience with us. Tell us how that experience formed an impression upon you to want to beat this disease.

Near the end of every term, presidents focus on their legacy — what did they actually accomplish that made life better in this country? Would you be satisfied if at the end of your presidency, historians said you helped cure cancer?

We need your help to beat this disease.

Sincerely,

The American Cancer Society in Iowa

Thai army storms hostage hospital

■ Hundreds are trapped as Burmese rebels seize a hospital near the Thailand/Burma border.

By Matthew Pennington
Associated Press

RATCHABURI, Thailand — Thai security forces attacked a hospital Tuesday where heavily armed insurgents from Burma had trapped hundreds of patients, visitors and staff in a 22-hour hostage drama.

Automatic weapons fire crackled, and explosions thudded from inside the hospital, possibly from grenades or mines that the hostage-takers had rigged after taking it over Monday morning.

Reporters in front of the sprawling hospital compound throughout the daylong crisis had been steadily moved back by police. When the assault began, journalists could see trucks and jeeps filled with police and soldiers speeding into the walled, six-acre hospital compound.

Sporadic gunfire and occasional explosions were still ringing out over the compound more than 15 minutes after the operation began.

There were no initial reports on casualties in the attack, which was launched in the predawn hours.

The rebels, who belong to God's Army, an insurgent group led by 12-year-old twins, took the hostages in an attempt to pressure the Thai government to help their beleaguered movement.

The rebels, who reportedly were aided by dissidents from the group that took control of Burma's embassy in Bangkok in October 1999, wanted helicopters to make their escape.

The rebels released at least 40 patients Monday afternoon, some in exchange for food, and dozens of others escaped. Those freed included a pregnant 18-year-old who went into labor and an 8-year-old boy in a coma after brain surgery.

The takeover began at dawn, when the raiders hijacked a Thai bus near the border with Burma and forced the driver to take them 45 miles to Ratchaburi.

Approximately 10 rebels wearing camouflage gear and masks forced their way into Ratchaburi provincial hospital. A food vendor, Somboon Sangthong, said he saw two men overcome guards at the hospital gate, wire explosive devices to it, and fire shots into the air.

"I was shocked, and everybody started to run away," she said.

Security officials said the rebels threatened to blow up the hospital if attacked.

In the past week, God's Army has come under sustained attack by troops from Burma — known as Myanmar by the country's military junta — at its jungle base near the border, driving at least 1,000 minority Karen refugees into Thailand. Thai troops have fired artillery to prevent the fighters from crossing the border.

After the hospital was seized, army commander Gen. Surayud Chulanond said Thailand would stop its shelling, allow civilians refuge, and let injured guerrillas receive treatment in Thai hospitals. Rebels seeking refuge would have to surrender their arms.

"We will deal very carefully with the situation," he said. "Our first priority is every one of the hostages to be safe."

Approximately 200 medical staff and 600 patients were in the hospital when it was seized, said Dr. Kawat Suntrajarn of the Public Health Ministry. Roughly 200 were believed to be in the five-story administrative building and emergency room building which were held by the insurgents.

Bus accident kills 26 in South Africa

QUEENSTOWN, South Africa (AP) — A bus traveling through South Africa's rural southeast skidded off a rain-slicked roadway and overturned in a ditch, killing 26 aboard, police said Monday. At least five of the dead were children.

Police had earlier put the death toll at 30, but later revised that. They were still trying to determine what caused the accident Sunday evening outside Queenstown, 400 miles south of Johannesburg.

The driver of a car trying to pass said he had to slow down quickly as the bus drifted into the passing lane, police Capt. Mzoli Kopolo said.

The bus driver was killed, Kopolo said, and passengers in the front who might be able to shed light on the cause of the accident were too seriously injured to question.

The accident occurred during a light drizzle, which slicked over the two-lane roadway, Kopolo said.

The bus had picked up passengers in various towns in Eastern Cape Province and was headed north. Many of the 76 passengers were returning to school, visiting husbands working in the mines or returning from their home villages to work, Kopolo said.

Russian troops struggle for control of Chechen capital

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Russian troops and Chechen rebels fought house-to-house in the frigid ruins of Grozny neighborhoods Monday, while Russian shells screamed into rebel-held areas in the capital and to the south.

The Russian forces appeared to be making little progress in their weeks-long campaign to wrest Grozny from the rebels. In some areas, the Russians have made hard-fought advances during the day, then retreated at night when they are more vulnerable to rebel ambushes.

Taking Grozny would be the war's biggest political prize, and Russian commanders frequently claim they are close to defeating the city's well-entrenched rebels. But snipers pick off Russian soldiers from battered buildings and have mounted ambushes from the city's sewage tunnels.

Skirmishes flared along Grozny's perimeter, the Interfax news agency reported. The heaviest fighting was reported in the area around Minutka Square in central Grozny, which the rebels control. The square is near a key Russian-held bridge across the Sunzha River, which bisects Grozny.

Palestinian/Israeli peace talks kick into high gear

■ The February deadline approaches, and negotiators question whether an agreement will be met.

By Samar Assad
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — With three weeks to go and not even a draft agreement in sight, Palestinian and Israeli negotiators announced plans Monday for marathon negotiations aimed at meeting a Feb. 13 deadline on the outline of a final status agreement.

Prime Minister Ehud Barak, limping on the Syrian track, is eager to show results with the Palestinians. His office said in a release Monday that negotiations would be held on several levels "with the intent of speeding up the talks."

The talks will likely start on Feb. 1, somewhere near Washington, according to Palestinian officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity. They will address the sensitive issues of borders, Palestinian refugees, the status of Jerusalem and the future of Jewish settlements.

Even with the renewed efforts, Israeli negotiator Oded Eran said Monday the February deadline would be "very difficult" to meet.

Barak, elected in May on a platform of thawing peace talks frozen by his hard-line predecessor, ambitiously set the February deadline for the outline of an agreement. He predicted permanent peace agreements with the Palestinians and the Syrians by the end of 2000.

The renewed talks with the Syrians have proven more complex than he realized, however, and have sidetracked him from the Palestinian track.

According to Palestinian officials, Barak's distractions have meant that there is not even a draft of an outline agreement, three weeks before the deadline.

Talks with the Syrians have all but collapsed over demilitarization and border issues and — to the Palestinians' delight — Barak has returned to the Palestinian track.

His renewed involvement appeared to spur the resolution of disagreements over the implementation of an interim agreement — a side issue that had nonetheless also dogged the final status talks.

Top Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat said after his 3½-hour meeting with Eran Monday that they had reached an agreement on a delayed Israeli troop withdrawal from 6.1 percent of the West Bank. The withdrawal, which had been scheduled for Jan. 20, will now take place by Feb. 10.

The Palestinians want the Israelis to hand over Arab suburbs of Jerusalem, currently under joint control, to full Palestinian control in the next withdrawal. Israel has resisted, apparently hoping the Palestinians would settle for the suburbs as a substitute for Jerusalem in the final status agreement.

Stormy Monday: Stocks plummet

Both the Dow and NASDAQ drop, as investors worry that the Fed might raise interest rates.

By Eileen Gintion
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks plunged Monday because of fears that the government will raise interest rates next week to stave off inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 243.54 to close at 11,008.17, its steepest loss since Jan. 4, when it lost 359 points. The selloff was broad: 27 of the 30 stocks that make up the Dow finished lower.

General Electric, down 6 to $138, and Johnson & Johnson, down 6 to $83, led the decline.

Broader stock indicators also fell. The technology-heavy NASDAQ plummeted 139.32 points to close at 4,096.08, its worst drop since it fell 150 points on Jan. 5 and its fourth-biggest decline ever. The NASDAQ had risen 67 points in early trading.

The Standard & Poor's 500 fell 39.45 to 1,401.91, and the Russell 2000 index of smaller companies fell for the first time since Jan. 12, losing 10.99 to close at 522.95.

After a strong opening, stocks began to slide at midday, as investors looked ahead to the next meeting of the Federal Reserve on Feb. 1-2. Many on Wall Street now fear that an interest-rate increase at that meeting will be the first of several this year, as the central bank works to stave off inflation.

In 1999, the Fed raised interest rates three times, hoping to keep inflation under control. While most economists see little evidence of inflation now, continued signs of economic strength have persuaded some that inflation could escalate at any time.

On Monday, Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta President Jack Gwynn unnerved investors by saying last year's interest-rate increases had little effect on economic growth.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan is scheduled to testify today before a Senate committee about the federal budget. While Greenspan is not expected to specifically address interest rates, his comments will be closely watched for signs of the central bank's course.

"It's become a foregone conclusion that interest rates are on the rise, and no matter how much, that hurts investors' psyche," said Arthur Hogan, chief market analyst at Jefferies & Co.

The depth of the selloff suggested that other factors influenced the market Monday. Traders said some investors sold stocks to collect profits from a solid rise in the NASDAQ last week. Cisco Systems fell 6 to 109, and Sun Microsystems dropped 5 to 79.

Also, Hogan said, companies in the S&P 500 are expected to report strong earnings — an average profit growth of 20 percent for the fourth quarter — and those numbers will become especially tough to match if interest rates continue to rise.

Still, some of those strong corporate earnings prompted investors to buy. Eastman Kodak rose 1 to 62 after reporting it earned $1.27 per share in the fourth quarter, beating analysts' estimates of $1.24. Kodak, which has faltered in recent years due to tougher competition from Fuji, also issued a strong outlook for 2000.

NYSE consolidated volume totaled 1.38 billion shares, compared with 1.46 billion in the previous session. The NASDAQ had its busiest session ever, with 1.97 billion shares changing hands.

Heartburn drug can kill, FDA warns

Propulsid should only be used for patients who have been given an EKG, the agency says.

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The popular heartburn drug Propulsid can cause dangerous irregular heartbeats and even sudden death, the government said Monday. The medicine should be used only as a last resort — and only by patients first given heart tests to ensure they are at low risk for the side effect, it warned.

Patients now taking Propulsid should ask their doctors about switching medication, and doctors should not prescribe the drug without first performing an EKG — electrocardiogram — the Food and Drug Administration said.

Nor should anyone with heart disease or a list of other illnesses use the drug, the FDA said.

The FDA's unusually strong warning comes in the wake of 70 deaths and 200 other reports of irregular heartbeat and other heart rhythm disturbances since Propulsid hit the market in 1993.

Manufacturer Janssen Pharmaceuticals, based in Titusville, N.J., mailed the warning to thousands of physicians Monday.

The FDA first warned in June 1998 that Propulsid can cause serious heart problems, but it continued to receive reports of deaths and hospitalizations.

So Monday, the agency took additional steps to make sure Propulsid is used only by patients with severe nighttime heartburn who get no relief from other drugs — and only if they appear at low risk for the cardiac side effects.

The FDA said it was not pulling Propulsid off the market because the drug can help some patients and because the new warnings should make using it safer.

The cardiac risk is relatively small considering that an estimated 30 million Propulsid prescriptions have been written since 1993, and most people who suffered the heart problems had clear risk factors, said Dr. Florence Houn, FDA's chief of gastrointestinal drugs. That means careful doctors who heed the new warnings should be able to keep Propulsid away from the patients most likely to be hurt, she said.

"We want warnings to go out. We want education to the prescribers to be reinforced," she said. "This drug requires careful prescription."

But an expert on drug-induced irregular heartbeats said it will be difficult for the doctors who most prescribe Propulsid — gastrointestinal specialists — to comply.

"FDA warnings have not been as successful as we would like in being translated into care," said Dr. Raymond Woosley, a pharmacologist at Georgetown University Medical Center. "This one will be especially difficult because many physicians don't have an EKG" machine in their offices.

Also, some computerized EKG equipment doesn't accurately read a critical type of heartbeat measurement called "QT prolongation," requiring doctors skilled in reading EKGs to determine that manually, he said.

Rodham Clinton bashes Giuliani on right-wing ties

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Rudolph Giuliani would be "beholden to the far right of the Republican Party" rather than to New Yorkers if his out-of-state fund raising helps him win election to the Senate, Hillary Rodham Clinton said Monday.

The mayor called her contentions "hilarious."

Rodham Clinton, after a campaign speech in White Plains, said Giuliani fund-raising letters branding her a left-winger "demonstrate clearly that his campaign has gone to those who have always funded right-wing causes."

The letters, made available to reporters by Rodham Clinton's campaign, describe her as "leader of the ultra left-wing Democrats" and "the champion of every left-wing cause you can imagine." They are signed by Giuliani.

Giuliani, who was in Albany when told of Rodham Clinton's comments, said, "We're doing the right-wing conspiracy again? That's déjà vu all over again ... I think the right-wing conspiracy thing is hilarious."

His campaign manager, Bruce Teitelbaum, said, "This is New York, and New Yorkers are too smart to fall for that old Clinton line of blaming everything on a vast right-wing conspiracy. They've probably used that line too often."

Rodham Clinton said the fund-raising letters went to out-of-state supporters because Giuliani "has learned from people like (conservative Republican Sen.) Jesse Helms that you run these campaigns, these negative campaigns, out of state so you can go around saying you're not doing it in-state and hope that nobody will catch you."

U.N. tends to Central Africa's cease-fire

■ African presidents pledge peace in the Congo and call for help from U.N. peacekeepers.

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — In an extraordinary meeting orchestrated by the United States, the presidents of countries warring in the Congo pledged Monday to recommit themselves to a faltering cease-fire and to peace in Central Africa.

But the half-dozen African leaders, including Congolese President Laurent Kabila in his first U.S. visit, also demanded that the world body deploy a U.N. peacekeeping force to monitor the 6-month-old truce.

The United States has acknowledged holding up authorization for the force, arguing the mission would be doomed because the cease-fire has been so widely flouted by all sides.

Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni agreed there was an enormous risk and cost in setting up the peacekeeping force, which U.N. officials have estimated could require some 25,000 members.

"But the cost of inaction, as witnessed in Rwanda, would be too ghastly, more costly and morally repugnant," he told his counterparts in the Security Council chamber, the first time they have met outside Africa over the war in Congo.

Congo's war has drawn in a half-dozen African nations, with Uganda and Rwanda backing the rebels who rebelled against Kabila in August

Kabila subsequently enlisted the support of Zimbabwe, Angola and Namibia to fight a war that has destabilized the entire Great Lakes region of Central Africa, killing untold numbers and uprooting close to 1 million people from their homes.

The governments signed a cease-fire agreement in Lusaka, Zambia, last July, and the rebels signed on in August. But fighting has persisted.

U.S. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke visited several African countries late last year and invited their leaders to New York to shore up the Lusaka agreement.

Despite the absence at Monday's meeting of the main rebel groups in the Congo, U.S. officials said they hoped the mini-summit of leaders, which will continue this week behind closed doors, would produce a "Lusaka-Plus" agreement.

U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who chaired the meeting, praised the leaders' willingness to come to New York.

Albright said she would work with Congress to obtain its approval for the next installment of the U.N. peacekeeping plan for Congo, "provided our efforts this week result in renewed impetus towards implementation of the peace agreement."

In a report to the Security Council last week, Secretary-General Kofi Annan asked the council to authorize a mission of 500 military observers and 3,400 troops to protect them. The next step would be a full-fledged peacekeeping force. Annan said Monday the United Nations was prepared to do its part but that the real responsibility rested with the countries involved.

"If peace is to take hold, and if international engagement is to be sustained, the warring parties face a paramount challenge: They need to demonstrate the political will to apply the agreement fully, without further delay," Annan said.

Kabila said he was prepared to work for peace and launch talks immediately.

"Although history has not always been kind to my country, we are a people — a people who know how to forgive," Kabila said. "And I am here today once again to offer my hand of reconciliation to those that have done us harm."

Museveni and Rwandan President Pasteur Bizimungu pledged to work to implement the Lusaka agreement but said the United Nations should deploy the peacekeeping force.

"It is your responsibility," Bizimungu said. "All you need to muster is the moral authority and courage to do it."

President pushes for equal pay for women

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton appealed Monday to members of Congress to "do the right thing" by closing the wage gap between working women and men. He suggested they could start by approving his $27 million plan to bolster enforcement of equal-pay laws.

"I made this request last year, and Congress failed to pass it," Clinton said as he looked out at approximately 10 lawmakers who attended the White House ceremony where he announced the proposal. "I hope you will help us do this."

But the chairmen of two House committees who deal with workforce issues noted that money for equal-employment enforcement already is at its highest level ever. They accused Clinton of trying to gain a political advantage by timing his announcement to coincide with the Iowa presidential caucuses.

"It is no accident that he has repackaged an initiative that went nowhere last year and unveiled it on the day that the election season officially begins," Reps. Bill Goodling, R-Pa., and John Boehner, R-Ohio, said in a joint statement. "We are optimistic that women voters will see through this flawed initiative and realize that it would serve primarily to ensure full employment for lawyers."

ATLANTA (AP) — Even with a fire in the fireplace, it was a chilly 47 degrees in Bernadette Martin's house Monday.

And like the more than 100,000 other Georgians still without power after a weekend ice storm, she was worried about temperatures dropping even lower and the possibility that the electricity may not be restored until today or Wednesday.

"I hate to leave the house in case everything freezes," Martin said. "But we might have to get a hotel for the kids to keep them warm, if we can find one of those that has power."

The storm spread snow, ice and rain and cut off electricity across much of the Southeast. More than a half-million customers lost power in Georgia, and thousands were blacked out in Alabama and the Carolinas.

The Red Cross opened 10 shelters in Georgia for people without heat, and Gov. Roy Barnes declared a state of emergency in 20 counties. Schools from Atlanta north were closed Monday.

Georgia got more snow Monday, and the forecast called for temperatures to plunge into the teens and 20s Monday night. Another round of frozen rain is expected Friday.

Life in the glaciated lane

So it's the bottom of winter, and you're wondering what to do. A futile exercise around these parts, of course. It's Iowa City, after all.

The wind is in from Canada, bringing us the left-over weather from Alberta and Saskatchewan and generally making the town look as if the glacier decided to return after a 10,000- or 12,000-year hiatus. Welcome back, you want to say. Thanks a whole lot for remembering us.

And, with the caucuses over, the political circus has packed its Gucci bags, struck its garbled tense, and set off for New Hampshire, leaving us nothing to do but wait for the end of February. Which is kind of like waiting for Godot, only slower. And without the classy French accent. (If you're writing a paper on Godot, here's a hint your professor will love: The French accent is classier when the play stars Marcel Marceau.)

It's too bad about the politicians' leaving, actually. The reason the Iowa caucuses are first in the nation has nothing to do with politics; on the political scale of things, Iowa is about as important as a diatom.

No, Iowa holds the caucuses merely to enliven January. Without the political carnival, Iowans would have nothing to do this time of year except watch the glaciation of the landscape, which gets a bit old after the first two or three minutes. Trust me on this one. I've been scoping out the alley behind my house.

This year's edition of home-town politics in action was somewhat duller than usual, given that the outcome was pretty much decided by last July. That's one of the problems with politics today — we never get to have any real horse races. Of course, given most of the candidates we're faced with this year, if they were truly horses, we'd immediately consign them to the glue factory. I'm not saying that most of them are spavined, necessarily, but most of these guys do a better impression of spavination than my alley does of glaciation.

Take the honorable governor of Texas, George W. Shrub. Please, as the old joke goes. It's hard to remember when a "serious" candidate for president has possessed quite so much intellectual vacuity. His Shrubness is a living, breathing reminder that nature does not, contrary to reports, abhor a vacuum.

The Shrub is also a living, breathing reminder that admission to an Ivy League school isn't always based on intellectual capacity but sometimes on who your father was, which makes his anti-affirmative action stand seem more than a little hypocritical. But who's counting?

His Shrubness didn't escape the snow fields of Iowa without one last stumble, which is good, if you're in the business of laughing. On Sunday, his staff, the Shrublets, announced that the campaign would truncate press conferences because reporters have this pesky habit of asking questions about all number of issues, and that harms "the message of the day."

Turns out that his Shrubness has trouble handling more than one issue at a time — too many cue cards to shuffle.

Well, that's a shame. But probably nothing that he can't overcome, given some practice. Lots of handicapped men have become president — Calvin Coolidge, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, the Shrub's father, just to touch on the low points. It's one of those things you work on. Start out slow; try walking and chewing gum simultaneously.

BEAU ELLIOT

On the other side, just for comic relief (as if the Shrub weren't comic relief enough), there's the other George, George W. Gore. Or George II.

George II had the Democratic nomination all wrapped up, but then along came that pesky Bill Bradley. It's so typical of life; just when you're ready to be coronated, here comes a gatecrasher.

George W. Gore responded as any red-blooded American male with a propensity for dullness would: He started lying about his opponent. Bradley would destroy Medicare, George II said. Not true, but it made for some good TV sound bites. Bradley voted against flood relief for Iowa in 1993. Again, not true, but TV sound bites rule in this version of the universe. It's as if Lee Atwater, the infamous GOP gunslinger, had taken over George II's campaign.

George W. Gore will probably win the Democratic nomination, but it might turn out to be a Pyrrhic victory. A lot of Democrats had more than their fill of Atwater-style politics back when the Shrub's father was busy spinning Willie Horton fantasies. A lot of Democrats might just stay home, come November, giving us President Shrub. Which sounds like the vegetation from hell.

Such a rosy future to contemplate, with February staring us in the face. Oh, well. Good luck with those Godot papers.

Hate graffiti a result of poor UISG planning

Let us all pause for a brief moment and thank the UI Student Government for once again creating a problem that could have been avoided. The tunnel near the English-Philosophy Building was again adorned with graffiti last week, and this time the graffiti contained hateful words.

Remember long ago, before October 1998, when the tunnel used to be painted with vibrant colors expressing people's feelings in a non-offensive way? The UI's characteristic tunnel changed drastically because of the UISG.

During October 1998, the UISG proposed to paint over the graffiti in either white or with a mural — an attempt to cover and stop the graffiti. UISG went for the white option. This was part of "Clean Sweep '98," a feeble attempt to make the campus a more aesthetically pleasing place.

There was a lot of controversy at the time about painting the walls of the tunnel. People cried censorship, but UISG ignored them and proceeded to paint the tunnel a sterile white. These walls were once a place where students expressed themselves openly — sure it was vandalism, but at least the themes that this graffiti undertook were peaceful.

The tunnel has once again been riddled with vandalism. Racial slurs and derogatory remarks about sexual orientation were inscribed on the walls for the community to see.

Perhaps the hateful words would never have appeared on the walls if the tunnel was left alone or painted professionally. When the UISG painted over the walls with plain white paint, it may as well have written "Vandalize me, please." The UISG was just asking for more vandalism when it decided to whitewash the walls.

So, UISG, how about fixing the problem you have created the right way? Here are three possible solutions. Plan A: Let student groups paint the tunnel, advertising their associations. Plan B: Allow art students to paint the walls — it will not only be lovely, but will give the students more portfolio work. Plan C: Paint the walls every two days to cover the daily vandalism and waste more money.

When the UISG painted over the walls with plain white paint, it may as well have written "Vandalize me, please."

Male presidential candidates ignore rights of women in abortion debate

The Kahun Papyrus is the oldest written document found to date that refers to birth control. It describes the uses of pessaries — vaginal suppositories made of things such as crocodile dung and fermented dough as early as 1850 B.C.

Young women in Constantinople used sea sponges dipped in lemon juice before inserting it into themselves. Two thousand years ago, a plant called Queen Anne's lace was a popular contraceptive and is still used today as a morning-after precaution. Men were concerned about birth control as well — Casanova sewed strips of fine linen together for a condom and some of the earliest condoms were made from snakeskin. As we continue into the new millennium, birth control continues to be a topic of debate among activists and political candidates.

Jan. 22 marked the 27th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, which legalized abortion in the United States. Hundreds of activists from both sides of the abortion debate protested in the nation's capital in preparation for the annual March for Life Rally, which included a march up Constitution Avenue to the Capitol and the Supreme Court buildings.

The landmark decision gave women the right to an abortion based on personal privacy through the 14th Amendment. However, GOP presidential candidates have been debating the ethics of abortion as part of their platform to court conservative Iowans. Forty-three percent of participants who go to the Republican caucuses said they are "born again" or fundamentalist Christians. Abortion is a key issue with religious conservatives.

The next U.S. president will likely appoint two to three justices to the U.S. Supreme Court, and the president's attitude toward abortion could provide a basis for which types of justices he will select.

Republican candidate George W. Bush said that he would not impose an abortion litmus test on nominees to the Supreme Court. "It should be up to state legislatures," he said. Bush criticized the 1973 decision legalizing abortion as "a reach" and would only appoint judges who are "strict constructionalists." His exceptions include rape, incest and instances where the life of the mother is in jeopardy.

Forbes, Keyes and Gary Bauer seek to differentiate themselves from Bush by elevating the abortion issue. Many attribute this to voters who have put greater emphasis on moral issues due to Clinton's impeachment trial.

All people, regardless of sex, should be concerned with the dangerous rhetoric posed by these candidates. Women are not property of the government and should not be told what they can and cannot do with their own bodies.

This is a case of patriarchy in which men seek to gain control over the reproduction process. According to historian Rickie Olinger, author of Abortion Wars; A Half Century of Struggle, 1950-2000, women have struggled collectively on three main issues: "the legalization of abortion; contraception; and non-racist, non-class based policies supporting access to reproduction self-determination."

The beginning of contemporary reproduction politics began after World War II, when women were a part of the paid workforce, and people — generally men — sought to define the American woman through the media. Motherhood came to define womanhood and was only to occur within the sanctity of marriage.

During this time, Olinger said, various powers organized to suppress women by controlling fertilization and those willing to help them. Although it was not legal until 1973, hundreds of thousands obtained abortions from practitioners who specialized in abortions. They were known to the community at large and were considered an asset because of the health benefits. If they could not find one of these practitioners, women were left to take matters in their own hands with self-operations or by seeing "butchers," which more often than not led to death. Contrary to activist Pat Buchanan's belief that before Roe v. Wade, we were an abortion-free country closer to God, women have been controlling their ability to have children regardless of what is written in the law books — in the United States, throughout the world and throughout time.

If candidates want to be effective and really have an interest in the welfare of women, why don't they concentrate on family planning and improving the lives of millions of children who live in poverty? The only thing the GOP candidates are accomplishing is proving how out of touch they are with the people. They spend their time catering to a minority of voters, who tend to be monolithic in culture and apply their ideas to our rapidly changing and diverse population.

What will be next? Condoms? Birth control pills? Men and women should be concerned with the rhetoric that threatens a woman's right to choose.

Ha Jin, a recipient of many writing awards, will read from his first novel Wednesday.

When he was 14 years old, Ha Jin was carrying shells as a member of the artillery in the People's Liberation Army in China.

Today, Jin, now an American citizen, has exchanged the shells for numerous writing awards. He is

In his days in the army, in the early 1970s, tensions were high between China and the Soviet Union. Jin, stationed along the northeast border between the two nations, believed that war was imminent.

But the tensions eased, and Jin found he had to educate himself for a peacetime career.

"In my second year in the army, I became a telegrapher," Jin said in a telephone interview with The Daily Iowan, and with the new assignment came private quarters.

"At night I could read," he said. Jin taught himself middle and high school courses while still in the army. He later passed China's university entrance exams and eventually received a master's degree in American literature from Shandong University in 1984. A year later, to continue his education, Jin took another step.

"It was almost natural for me to come to the United States," he said.

Jin went to Boston, where he did graduate work at Brandeis University and studied fiction writing at Boston University. He earned his Ph.D. in English from Brandeis in 1993.

Long before he started writing fiction, Jin had written poetry in both English and Chinese. He intended to continue writing in Chinese, believing that his first book of English poetry, Between Silences, published in 1990, was merely "an excursion."

But Jin soon realized he would have to write exclusively in English. The Tiananmen Square massacre and the lack of a Chinese audience for his work both contributed to the difficult decision.

"It took me a year to give up Chinese," he said. "The instinct for survival was behind it all."

He began writing fiction when he realized it better suited some of his subject matter than poetry.

"I realized that some of the material, especially the material about army life, would work better in fiction," he said.

Jin has since published two collections of short fiction, one of which, Facing Shadows, won the PEN/Hemingway Award. In 1999, Jin published Waiting.

Set in 1960s China, Waiting tells the story of physician Lin Kong, long ago forced into an arranged marriage with an illiterate peasant but in love with Manna Wu, a nurse at the hospital where he works. Though he only sees his wife for 10 days each year, Lin and Manna are prohibited from consummating their relationship for 18 years, due to his wife's reluctance to grant a divorce.

Jin heard a similar story 18 years ago, while visiting his wife's parents. But he waited until 1995 to start writing it.

"Intuitively, I knew this would be a good story for a novel," he said. "But I had to come up with my own interpretation. Otherwise the story might lack purpose."

Currently, Jin is an associate pro-

American Beauty, Malkovich lead director award

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The directors of American Beauty, Being John Malkovich, The Green Mile, The Insider and The Sixth Sense were nominated for the Directors Guild of America award, considered a barometer of the Oscars.

The first-time nominees announced Monday were American Beauty director Sam Mendes, who won directing honors at Sunday's Golden Globes, Spike Jonze for Malkovich and M. Night Shyamalan for The Sixth Sense.

Frank Darabont of The Green Mile was nominated in 1994 for The Shawshank Redemption, another prison film also based on a Stephen King story.

Michael Mann of The Insider got his first nomination for a feature film.

The winners will be announced on March 11. The Academy Awards will be held on March 26.

Ratings down for Golden Globes telecast

NEW YORK (AP) — Faced with some stiff competition, the Golden Globe awards on NBC Sunday night saw a 9 percent drop in viewership from last year.

The awards ceremony was a triumph for HBO, which won eight of the 11 television trophies, with four of the awards going to "The Sopranos," honored as the best television drama.

As it turned out, "The Sopranos" may have been one of the reasons Golden Globe ratings sank. The second episode of its second season aired Sunday night in direct competition with the Golden Globes.

More likely, the awards show suffered because of "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," ABC's continuing sensation. The game show drew 29 million viewers Sunday night, according to Nielsen Media Research.

The three-hour Golden Globes telecast drew an average audience of 22.1 million viewers, down from 24.2 million in 1999, Nielsen said.

Sweet 16-0 for Orangemen

■ Connecticut was unable to deal Syracuse its first loss as the Orangemen routed UConn, 88-74, Monday night.

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Syracuse answered another question with its most impressive victory in a so-far perfect season.

The fourth-ranked Orangemen remained the nation's only unbeaten team with an 88-74 victory over No. 6 Connecticut on Monday night as six players scored in double figures.

It seemed no matter what Syracuse did this season, there was a question about how good the Orangemen really were.

Syracuse's first 10 games were all at home and the competition wasn't too steep. Then the Orangemen (16-0, 6-0 Big East) went on the road for three straight games and won all three.

Connecticut (13-4, 2-3) was the first ranked team for Syracuse and the Orangemen responded with an emphatic win.

"That's about as well as we've played this season and we're getting better," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said after the Orangemen matched the 1917-18 team for the best start in school history. "We did a good job defensively and a good job on the boards. We played well."

The game also added to the questions facing Connecticut, which has lost three of its last six and has now doubled its loss total from last season's national championship run.

"To put it bluntly, they punked us," Connecticut guard Khalid El-Amin said. "They got up on us, got in our face. We didn't bring our intensity tonight and that's not characteristic of this team. We're 2-3 in the league and can't afford to drop any more games."

To put it bluntly, they punked us.

IOWA MEN'S BASKETBALL
Recker challenges Griffin

■ Rob Griffin said his increased intensity can be traced to transfer Luke Recker, who matches up with Griffin in practices.

By Mike Kelly
The Daily Iowan

Iowa's start to the Big Ten season means an increased intensity in games, but this year Iowa forward Rob Griffin turned the intensity up in practice at the midway point as well.

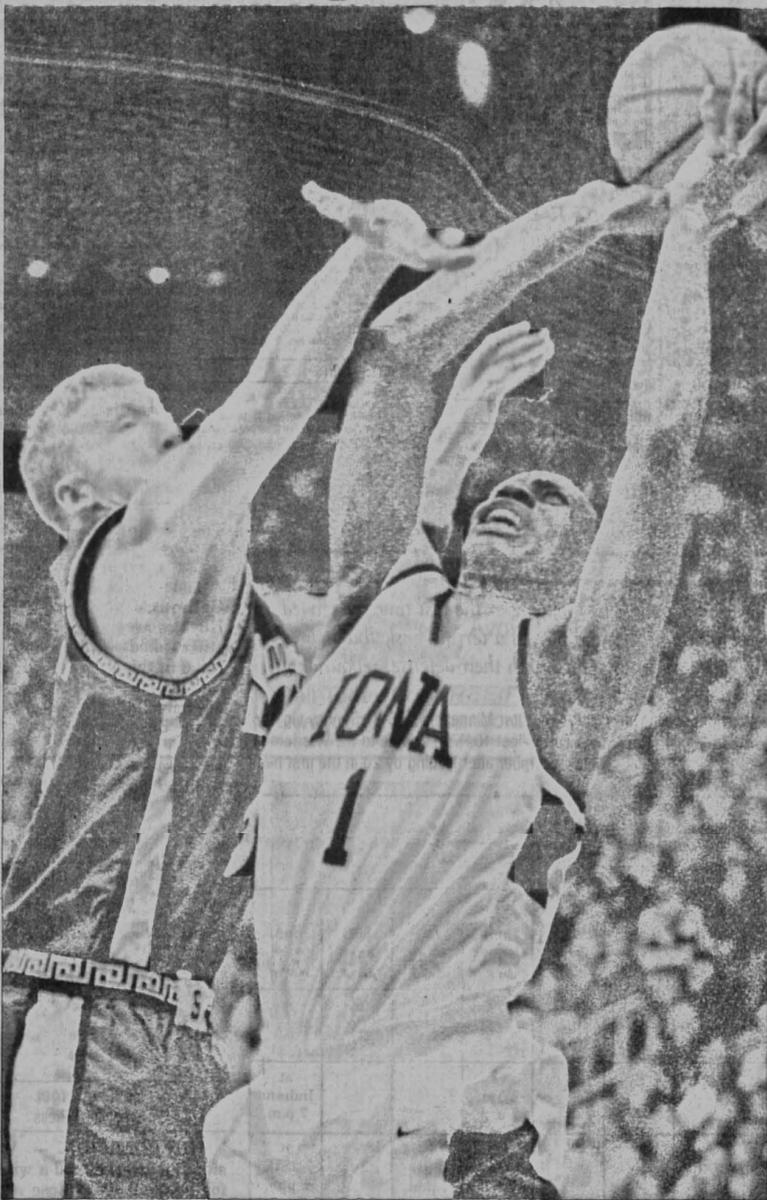

He did not do it alone, though. Iowa coach Steve Alford said Griffin's play in practice improved since the addition of Arizona transfer Luke Recker at the beginning of second semester. Even though Recker must sit out the rest of the season due to NCAA transfer regulations, he provides a stiff challenge for the 6-foot-6 Griffin every day in practice.

The added practice speed has paid dividends for Griffin. He leads Iowa in scoring during Big Ten play, averaging 16 points per game and has scored in double figures seven of the last nine games. Griffin had a game-high 20 points in Iowa's 83-77 win against Michigan Saturday.

"There is a pride situation among your peers," Alford said regarding Recker's influence. "If Griff does not come out hard in practice, he's going to get it handed to him by Recker."

Practices are Recker's games this season. He said he anticipated having to sit out would be difficult, but he never imagined it would be so hard to watch his new teammates suit up and not be able to join them.

Recker said he wanted to do everything possible to help the team. He accepted early that if playing against Griffin in practice to make him a better player was his job, so be it.

Anyone can make the Super Bowl at any time

■ Free agency and the salary cap have turned the tides on which teams will be Super Bowl contenders.

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Not since 1982, when Cincinnati and San Francisco both went from 6-10 the previous year to the Super Bowl, has there been anything like it.

The St. Louis Rams and the Tennessee Titans who were a combined 12-20 last season are competing for pro football's biggest prize. The Rams are transplanted from Los Angeles. The Titans are the former Houston Oilers, who have spent four seasons in four different stadiums in three cities.

"It gives everyone hope regardless of where you are the previous year," said Atlanta coach Dan Reeves, who took the Falcons from 7-9 in 1997 to 14-2 and the NFC title last season. "You can be in last place one year and in the Super Bowl the next. I don't know that you could do that in the past."

You couldn't. Before free agency and the salary cap, the better organizations drafted well, built good teams and stayed good.

Between the 1981 and 1995 seasons, only five teams, all from the NFC, won Super Bowls — San Francisco did it five times, Washington four, Dallas three, the New York Giants twice and Chicago once. And when those five weren't winning, they were making it deep into the playoffs and losing to one of the others.

The AFC was losing Super Bowls, but it had repeat champions, too — Denver in three of the four seasons between 1986 and 1989, then Buffalo for four straight seasons starting in 1990.

Free agency and the salary cap, however, have brought everyone to the middle — nine of the 31 teams finished 8-8 this season. Reeves' Falcons went from 7-9 to the Super Bowl and back to 5-11 this season, finishing there because of injuries and free agent defections.

But the Titans and the Rams aren't the flukes some people think they are.

Tennessee has had talent since Jeff Fisher took over as coach in November of 1994 when the team was still in Houston and known as the Oilers.

By 1996, they had announced their intention to move and were drawing

Kansas City's Thomas faces paralysis in his legs

■ Chiefs linebacker Derrick Thomas has no feeling in his legs after a car accident that killed his best friend.

By Doug Tucker
Associated Press

LIBERTY, Mo. — Derrick Thomas, one of the most feared pass rushers in NFL history, has a broken neck and back and might never walk again.

The star linebacker of the Kansas City Chiefs has paralyzed legs following a car crash on an icy road in which his friend was killed.

Thomas has use of his arms and upper chest, and doctors held out hope he might fully recover. Doctors said the 33-year player faces extensive rehabilitation and probably will have surgery.

"I don't think you can say anything right now," Dr. Jon Browne, the Chiefs' team physician, said Monday. "These type of injuries have a mind of their own and a treatment pattern of their own. They're all uniquely and individually different."

Thomas was being transferred from the Liberty Memorial Hospital to the Ryder Trauma Center at Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami. Thomas was born in Miami and his mother lives there.

Friends and teammates came to the hospital Monday. Also visiting was Steve Palermo, a former American League umpire who was shot in 1991 and left partially paralyzed.

"Do not rule anything in," said Palermo, a Kansas City resident and friend of Thomas. "And do not rule anything out. He understands the gravity of it. But he's also very optimistic."

Thomas has fractures in vertebrae in his neck and back.

"Derrick's injuries are primarily to the spinal column," Browne said. "He does have some neurological impairment which is continuing to evolve."

With an infectious smile and fun-loving attitude, Thomas is one of the most popular athletes in Kansas City history, almost on a par with baseball great George Brett. Friends dubbed him "social director of the NFL."

"We drafted this young man 11 years ago and you hope for a lot of

Jackson asks players to protest Georgia flag

ATLANTA (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson announced a campaign Monday to encourage players for the Tennessee Titans and St. Louis Rams to wear the American flag on their helmets during the Super Bowl to protest Georgia's flag.

The state flag incorporates the Confederate battle flag, which symbolizes slavery and racial supremacy to many blacks and other minorities.

"As we approach the Super Bowl game, we're in the awkward and disgraceful position of playing the Super Bowl game — the most watched event in America — under the Confederate flag," Jackson said in a telephone interview from Chicago, the headquarters of his Rainbow/PUSH Coalition.

Georgia's flag bears the state seal on the left and a representation of the Confederate battle flag on the right. The Confederate emblem was added by legislators in 1956, two years after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled racial segregation illegal in public schools.

Wizards' president of basketball operations Michael Jordan leaves team practice wearing his familiar number 23 on a Wizards practice jersey after practicing with the team Monday in Washington at the MCI Center.

Wiz say MJ's still got game

Michael Jordan practiced with the Washington Wizards Monday, and the players said No. 23 was the man in charge.

By Joseph White
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Michael Jordan was the first to arrive. He put on a No. 23 Washington Wizards jersey, ragged on Rod Strickland for being less than punctual, then took to the court as a dunking, trash-talking, coaching part-owner.

More than anything, MJ was in charge.

"Not yet! Press out!" Jordan barked when reporters entered at their usual time to watch the final few minutes of practice. It was Jordan's order and Jordan's alone, even with majority owner Abe Pollin, general manager Wes Unseld and coach Gar Heard in the gym.

Reporters were allowed in at the end of practice, Jordan's first as an active, playing participant since he joined the Wizards last week as part owner and president of basketball operations.

"I could go for a beer right now," said Jordan, smiling and looking slightly winded as he made his way up the stairs.

By all accounts, it was some practice.

"He's definitely moving the same way," said forward Tracy Murray, who guarded Jordan during some of the drills and the two scrimmages. "Dunking the ball, shooting a jump shot, fadeaway. Still got the same game, hasn't gone anywhere."

"And as soon as he sets foot in that gym, he starts talking trash, so of course the intensity is going to pick up."

Good thing there are some large dumpsters underneath the MCI Center. The trash talk made a huge impression with every single player, and some of them returned it.

"He's not 25 anymore," rookie Laron Profit said. "I try to remind him of that every time we matched up together. I'm the 22-year-old now. I've never been known as a shy one. He talked. I talked. He talked a little more. And I talked a little more, and he talked some more. I left him alone after that."

"Mike is Mike. He could still come back and lead the league in scoring. He was having fun, but I'm sure he was evaluating. He was competing, and he was going to see who was going to compete with him."

That's exactly what Jordan was doing. By being himself, he turned a Wizards practice into something it hasn't been in a while — energetic and fun.

"Which is what we should expect every day," Jordan said. "Actually, I told them they shouldn't have to wait for me to come out to show the energy that they had today. I just tried to keep them focused, challenge them, say whatever I have to say. If they can play hard against me, they can play hard against anybody. It was fun."

Since Jordan became part of the operation, the Wizards (13-29) have been their usual frustratingly inconsistent selves. They lost bad at home to Dallas, beat Indiana at home impressively, then were routed by Atlanta on the road.

Jordan, who says he'll be a commuter-president, watched the Indiana and Atlanta games on TV at home in Chicago. He reached the same two conclusions everyone else has:

— The Wizards have talent, but no chemistry.

— The Wizards won't have salary cap room for three years, so it's the current roster of players that is going to have to play better if there's any short-term hope.

"You've got three solid players, Mitch Richmond, Rod Strickland and Juwan Howard," Jordan said. "The point is getting them to play with the continuity and the chemistry it takes to play basketball."

Jazz edge Lakers in double OT

Karl Malone scored 31 points to send the Lakers to their fourth loss in six games.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Karl Malone scored 31 points and John Stockton had 18 points, 15 assists and nine rebounds as the Utah Jazz outlasted the Los Angeles Lakers 105-101 in double overtime Monday night.

Quincy Lewis scored six points in the second overtime and Stockton added four as the Jazz sent the Lakers to their fourth loss in the last six games.

Jeff Hornacek, the NBA's top free throw shooter who had missed the last three games with knee and back strains, made two foul shots with 53 seconds left to make it 99-95 and added two more with 7.9 seconds to play to make it 101-96.

Kobe Bryant made a long 3-pointer to cut it to 103-101 but Lewis sank two more free throws and the Jazz escaped with their fifth win in six games.

Shaquille O'Neal lead all scorers with 36 points and played 55 minutes but scored just four points after regulation. Bryant had 26 points on 9-of-24 shooting and Glen Rice added 20 for Los Angeles.

Bulls 83, Pacers 82

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls smothered old nemesis Reggie Miller, holding him to six points Monday night. And with Elton Brand scoring 28 points and Toni Kukoc hitting a go-ahead free throw, they stunned the slumping Indiana Pacers 83-82.

Chris Carr, playing on his second 10-day contract, scored all 17 of his points in the second half as the Bulls rallied from a 14-point halftime deficit for just their eighth victory of the season, but certainly one of the most satisfying.

The Pacers, who have lost four of their last five games and four straight on the road, got a final shot to win, but Rik Smits' short jumper was way short just before the buzzer.

Jalen Rose led the Pacers with 18 points and Mark Jackson and Sam Perkins had 13 each. But Miller, who has burned the Bulls repeatedly during his career with last-second shots and big games, matched his season low, hitting just 3-of-14 shots.

Knicks 112, Sonics 106

NEW YORK — Gary Payton might have said too much again, this time to a referee.

One night after criticizing his teammates for their lack of hustle and toughness, Payton got himself ejected late in the first quarter of a 112-106 loss to the New York Knicks on Monday night.

Payton had to be restrained by his teammates as he stormed after referee Ted Bernhardt, who whistled him for two technical fouls. The Sonics, playing with the passion that Payton had complained was missing, kept the game close, the rest of the way but still suffered their third straight defeat.

Shammond Williams, a seldom-used second-year guard who took over the playmaking duties after Payton was ejected, led Seattle with a career-high 22 points. Williams' previous career-high, reached Friday night in a loss at Boston, was three points.

Payton drew a technical foul for arguing after he was called for a personal foul while defending Sprewell with 1:28 left in the first quarter. After the technical foul shot, Payton continued to talk to Bernhardt near center court, with both men smiling at one point in their conversation.

But seconds after Payton turned and walked away, Bernhardt called another technical and tossed Payton out. Payton took off after Bernhardt and had to be held back.

MELBOURNE, Australia — Martina Hingis felt sorry to see Serena Williams depart so soon from the Australian Open, only because she wanted to knock Williams out herself.

There is no love lost between the two teen-agers, and the memory of Williams' victory in their U.S. Open final last year still rankles the highly competitive and somewhat imperious Hingis.

On a court she considers her personal playpen, Hingis looked forward to avenging the defeat in New York and butressing her standing as the top player on the women's tour.

Hingis won her 25th consecutive match at Melbourne Park Monday, 6-1, 7-6 (3) over Sandrine Testud, moving within three victories of her fourth straight title Down Under.

Williams, seeded No. 3, might have stood in Hingis' way in the semifinals but self-destructed with unforced errors in a 6-3, 6-3 loss to Russian Elena Likhovtseva.

Asked whether it was a relief for her to have Williams gone from the tournament, Hingis smiled and shook her head.

"I would have liked to play her, especially from what I've seen of her play," Hingis said. "She didn't do that great, so I thought I would have a good chance to beat her, because it has been my tournament for the last three years.

"She's one of the top players. You always want to compete against the best."

Hingis caught only a televised replay of match point in Williams' loss, a backhand into the net that pushed her total of unforced errors to 32 — 12 more than Likhovtseva.

"A champion, even if she's not playing well, still gets through matches like that," Hingis said in a jab at Williams. "But she hasn't played much."

To become the first player to win the Australian Open four times in a row in the open era, Hingis must get past Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario in the quarterfinals, Likhovtseva or Conchita Martinez in the semifinals, and, most likely, No. 2 Lindsay Davenport in the final.

"All these girls, especially the younger ones, they hit the ball so hard," Hingis said. "They run and they work every day. Then you see Conchita and Arantxa still in the draw and they make the quarterfinals again, over and over, because they use what they have. They use their weapons very well and they are very experienced. They know what to do. Sometimes that's more important than anything else."

As far as Hingis is concerned, though, Davenport is the one to beat.

"Nobody gives her the credit for what she has done, what she has achieved, but she is always there," Hingis said. "She doesn't lose to just some girl on the other side. She has been there and she brings the tough result. I've lost to her three times, so I would love to play her in the final."

Groh second choice, but first in charge of Jets

■ Another Bill Parcells disciple, Al Groh, became the New York Jets' head coach after Bill Belichick quit abruptly.

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Al Groh was waiting for the question. With Bill Parcells watching his every move, how does he go about being the coach of the New York Jets?

"Obviously, I've thought about it," he said Monday. "It's something to be dealt with. I think the best chance to replace Bill Parcells is to be a Parcells guy."

Groh is exactly that. The 55-year-old New Yorker who grew up 15 minutes from Jets camp, has served with Parcells at five stops — two in college and three as an NFL assistant with the Giants, Patriots and Jets.

Now, after following one of the NFL's best coaches around for more than 30 years, Groh follows Parcells as the leader of the Jets.

"This staff and this team will be my staff and my team," Groh said. "I do not want to be the continuity candidate or the stability candidate. We're dealing with the future."

Parcells will remain with the Jets until midsummer. He will then meet with new owner Robert Wood Johnson IV to discuss his future.

"I'm going to act in a support role, as a consultant to Al, a supporter and adviser," Parcells said. "We are committed to him. He's smart and tough and has the ability to stay focused. He will do a good job."

Groh, whose only previous head coaching experience was at Wake Forest from 1981-86, signed a four-year contract worth $3.2 million.

Groh hadn't expected the job, but that changed when coach-in-waiting Bill Belichick resigned Jan. 4, one day after he was announced as Parcells' replacement.

Belichick wants to coach elsewhere next season, but the NFL ruled he is bound to the Jets for the 2000 season. Any club wishing to hire Belichick must work out a deal with him and the Jets before Feb. 1.

Belichick sued the NFL on Monday, seeking a temporary restraining order that would allow him to negotiate with other teams. A hearing in Newark, N.J., was scheduled for Tuesday.

Groh said he won't deviate much from Parcells' philosophy, one that turned losers like the Jets into playoff contenders. Parcells' teams always "played tough, were strong, extremely well prepared, disciplined, game-smart and game-aware," Groh said.

Parcells won two Super Bowls with the Giants, got the Patriots into a Super Bowl and led the Jets to the AFC title game in 1998.

Groh's first chore is to settle on a staff. On defense, he needs a coordinator and secondary coach to replace Belichick, who could end up as coach/GM of the Patriots; a line coach to replace Romeo Crennel, who left to join the Cleveland Browns; and a line-backers coach to replace himself.

On offense, coordinator Charlie Weis' future has yet to be decided.

Grizzlies' new owner to keep team in Vancouver

■ Chicago billionaire Michael Heisley is committed to making the Grizz a winner in Canada.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — A Chicago billionaire who made his fortune buying and rebuilding struggling companies may face his biggest challenge with his latest purchase — the struggling Vancouver Grizzlies.

Michael Heisley stepped into the void left by Bill Laurie's recent exit, purchasing the Grizzlies on Monday. BCTV, citing an unidentified source, said the sale was for $160 million.

The deal still needs NBA approval, although Heisley has two things in his favor.

He wants to keep the franchise in Vancouver, something Laurie wasn't prepared to do. And Heisley has already held discussions with NBA commissioner David Stern, who suggested the Grizzlies would be a good fit for him.

At a news conference at GM Place, Heisley assured Vancouver and Grizzlies fans that he plans to make the team a winner on and off the court in the city.

"I intend to do everything in my power to make this franchise a success in Vancouver. Having an owner that is committed to this market is an important part," Heisley said.

He becomes the Grizzlies' fourth prospective owner in the franchise's five-year history. Arthur Griffiths, the team's founder, eventually had to sell his interests to Seattle's John McCaw, who formed Orca Bay, the parent company that also owns the Vancouver Canucks and GM Place arena.

McCaw, citing the financial burden of owning two pro teams and an arena, tried to sell the Grizzlies for $200 million in September to Laurie, who's wife Nancy is an heir to the Wal-Mart fortune. Laurie, however, was forced to walk away from the sale because he was blocked by the NBA from moving the franchise to St. Louis, where he also owns the NHL St. Louis Blues and the Kiel Center arena.

Laurie dropped out of the picture Friday when he agreed to pay $12 million to cancel his sale agreement with Orca Bay.

Name change particularly lucky

■ The former Tennessee Oilers experienced amazing luck during their first year as the Titans.

By Teresa M. Walker
Associated Press

ATLANTA — By now, nearly everyone has seen the cross-field lateral and the 75-yard kickoff return known as the Music City Miracle. And Colts fans are painfully aware that instant replay caught Terrence Wilkins' right foot out of bounds.

Pure luck? Maybe. Destiny? Perhaps.

Either way, the Tennessee Titans are in the Super Bowl — something they never managed to do in their previous life as the Houston Oilers.

"This is a very blessed season that's all I can say," running back Rodney Thomas said. "Everybody prays for a win, but not everybody gets it."

Remember, this is the franchise that specialized in losing whether home was Jeppesen Stadium, Rice Stadium or the Astrodome in Houston, the Liberty Bowl in Memphis, or Vanderbilt Stadium in Nashville.

Oilers fans still think officials stole a touchdown from Mike Renfro in the 1979 AFC Championship against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

They went 8-8 the previous three seasons thanks to blown leads and debacles such as a game against Seattle on Nov. 3, 1996. The Oilers needed only Al Tennessee Titans players Eddie George, left, and Yancey Thigpen board a bus headed to the airport on the way to Atlanta from the team's facility in Nashville, Tenn., Monday.

Del Greco's last-second field goal for a victory when Michael McCrary blocked the kick, setting up a 61-yard TD return. Final score: Seattle, 23-16. In 1998, Del Greco wasn't even on the field when the Chicago Bears beat Tennessee on a botched field goal.

This season, playing as the Titans, things were very different. They finished 16-3 through the playoffs, a franchise record, and went 9-0 in their first year at Adelphia Coliseum.

"It has come full circle," tackle Kenny Holmes said. "It seems like we're getting all the breaks." It has taken the Titans most of the season to buy into the idea that the gods aren't against them anymore. Winning five of six games in the final two minutes during the regular season didn't do it.

The Titans trailed 16-15 when they prepared to take a kickoff from the Buffalo Bills on Jan. 8 in the wild-card game with 16 seconds remaining. Then Frank Wycheck tossed the ball back to Kevin Dyson, who ran untouched 75 yards for the winning TD.

Thomas called it divine intervention; others called it luck.

Then Wilkins returned a punt to the Tennessee 3 with the Colts trailing 16-9 in the fourth quarter. "When the punt return happened, you kind of had that feeling, 'Golly, here we go again,'" safety Marcus Robertson said.

But Del Greco was yelling on the sideline that Wilkins had stepped out a couple of times, the first at the Colts' 33. Officials checked the replay and agreed.

"Something would've been wrong with the camera angle the year before," Holmes said. "Everything has been going our way. I can't say enough about how hard we've worked for things to go our way. We create luck. It isn't just something that happens."

POINTCOUNTERPOINT

Will the St. Louis Rams win the Super Bowl?

Cinderella will go to the ball — and she'll wake up in her dress on Monday morning too. Not some rags like Robert may think the Rams will end up in.

The Titans should be counting their lucky stars that they're even going to Atlanta. Bud Adams should donate his playoff winnings to the NFL referees' pension fund — because that's how Tennessee got there, with instant-replay influenced wins over Buffalo and Indianapolis.

The Rams proved on Sunday they aren't all offense. They won with a gritty, gutsy performance against the Buccaneers, the NFL's best defense. And while the Titans defense is impressive, it's not up to Tampa Bay-caliber.

Don't discount the dome factor, either. The Rams will be used to the noise inside, having gone 10-0 in the TWA Dome this year. And expect Ram fans to travel strong — they will be hungry for a win.

And while the Rams aren't all offense, it's still a big part of their game plan. They can score like no team in recent memory. By the end of the divisional playoff game, the Vikings' corners were little more than charred spots on the TWA Dome turf.

Tennessee also lost safety Marcus Robertson in the AFC title game to a broken leg, which can only help Warner's chances.

I forecast a high scoring game, which can only improve the Rams' chances. The Rams will win any shootout they get into. Jeff George threw for 425 yards and five scores — and still didn't have a fighting chance against the Warner Bros.

Tennessee fans better get used to the Bob'N Weave — they'll be seeing it in their too much moonshine induced nightmares after losing Sunday night.

—Greg Wallace

St. Louis has had a nice run, but sorry, Greg — the Cinderella story will be coming to an end this weekend on the road.

How soon do we forget that the Titans defeated the Rams 24-21 earlier this season in Nashville, including a 21-0 lead in the first quarter before nearly self-destructing in the second half. Eddie George carried the ball only 17 times in the game and then the Titans got away from the running game, which allowed the Rams into the game. The ground game has been the key in their drive to the Super Bowl and you can bet they will not get fancy this time around.

Sunday, the Rams proved vulnerable on the ground and things could be sketchy again with tackle Fred Miller getting the assignment of shutting down Jevon Kearse. Like so many foes before, Kearse man-handled Miller in the first meeting. Miller committed six false starts and two holds in the first game. The Rams could be in even bigger trouble if they have to start changing blocking schemes to compensate for Kearse.

St. Louis will get the advantage of playing on turf in Atlanta, but the game is still on the road, which could mean trouble. The Rams went 5-3 on the road this season. The wins: Cincinnati, Atlanta, San Francisco, Carolina and New Orleans. The class of the cellar-dwellers in the NFL this season.

The Titans will be less than 100-percent, however they are one of the few teams in the NFL that match up well with St. Louis. They were able to defeat St. Louis before and the team was not even at the top of its game. As the better team on the road, Tennessee has the edge in this game.

JIM LITKE COLUMN

Warner comes through at the right time

■ NFL MVP Kurt Warner didn't have a solid game Sunday, but did just enough to pull the Rams through.

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — He pulled himself together long enough to make one big throw. Otherwise, Kurt Warner's season might have ended just as improbably as it began.

"The character of this team has been that somebody has stepped up to make a play every game," Warner said.

The line of somebodies determined to do that Sunday for the St. Louis Rams was a very short one, at least on Warner's side of the ball. What looked just last week like the offense for the next century will be lucky to make it to the end of the month.

In the NFC Championship game Sunday, the St. Louis Rams scored 11 points.

"I thought we could get in the 20s," coach Dick Vermeil said. "I really did."

He did not say exactly how, but then, Vermeil didn't have to. Because somehow, Tampa Bay found a way to score only six.

"When we look at the tapes, we'll both say, 'Jeez, there was a lot of things that we could have done or should have done,'" Vermeil said. "But I know our destination right now is the Super Bowl in Georgia and to improve on this week and play a lot better in a much bigger game."

"And," he said, "I think we can do that."

There better be no maybe about it. During the regular season, the Rams scored more points than all but two teams in NFL history. A week ago, they toyed with the Minnesota Vikings before shredding them 49-31 as Warner, the Arena League-NFL Europe refugee, threw passes to 10 receivers and touchdowns to five of them.

Afterward, Warner joked that in the Arena League, "It would have been an average day, but I'll take it."

Against the Bucs, Warner threw exactly one touchdown pass, and receiver Ricky Proehl had to go up over the top of defender Brian Kelly to get it. It was set up when Dre' Bly picked off a pass from Tampa Bay's rookie quarterback, Shaun King, and returned it to the Bucs 47-yard line. There was just under five minutes left to play and the Rams were trailing 6-5, only the third time all season they had been behind at home.

"It seemed like everything we did, they knew what to expect," Warner said.

Except maybe Proehl. Warner threw 41 touchdowns during the regular season, a feat only Dan Marino had previously accomplished. Yet somehow, not one of those went to Proehl.

"The guy was our MVP last season, but we've got so much talent on this football team that he became a situation guy this year. Somebody told me in the locker room that he had 34 catches this year and 25 of them went for first downs. He did the exact same thing today that he's been doing all year," Warner said. "He came up big."

It would be hard to exaggerate how big.

The Rams and Warner and their low-tech coach with his high-octane attack have been the best story of the NFL season. With aging stars John Elway, Reggie White and Barry Sanders retiring, marquee names Terrell Davis, Steve Young, Michael Irvin and Jamal Anderson sidelined, and traditional powers like the Broncos, 49ers, Packers and Cowboys staggering, the quality of play has been uneven at best.

The Rams ran off a half-dozen wins to begin the season, and even more impressive was the way they won. Warner, who was stocking shelves in a grocery only a few years ago, stepped in for injured starter Trent Green in August and almost immediately brought St. Louis offensive coordinator Mike Martz's mad-scientist schemes to life.

Tyson shows soft side with kids

■ The former heavy-weight champ loves children, something most people don't know.

By Stephen Wade
Associated Press

LONDON — Legs crossed and on their best behavior, dozens of children sat mesmerized. Only this was no puppet show: This was Mike Tyson at work in the boxing ring.

The former heavyweight champion knocked his sparring partner silly, dropping him to the canvas as two dozen kids fidgeted for a better look.

Tyson, preparing to fight Julius Francis on Saturday in Manchester, removed his gloves, tugged off and joined his young fans. For 25 minutes he signed autographs, posed for family snapshots, got on his knees to shadow box and feigned a knockout blow or two.

"It doesn't matter what anybody says about me," Tyson said. "I'm a totally different entity to what people think."

Tyson has been mobbed like a rock star since he arrived a week ago in England despite protests from a women's anti-rape group. Tyson served half his six-year sentence for a 1992 rape conviction.

His reception last week in racially mixed Brixton was compared to visits there by Muhammad Ali, Nelson Mandela and royalty.

Youngsters are admitted daily to his workouts. Tyson said playing with young fans after his workouts makes him think about his four children.

"I haven't seen my kids in a while," he said.

Shelly Finkel, Tyson's boxing adviser, said Tyson was showing "his other side."

"He loves kids," Finkel said. "When I went with him to the hospitals in Phoenix and reporters were there he kicked them out. He didn't want it as publicity."

Finkel recounted how Tyson had paid anonymously for the funeral of a young child killed in a drive-by shooting in 1998 in Phoenix.

He recalled Monday how an unidentified black boxer once snubbed him for an autograph after he'd signed for dozens of white kids. He said that left an emotional scar.

"Now I understand," Tyson said. "It wasn't because he was an Uncle Tom, maybe. He was just tired ... but it hurt me so badly. It messed with me all my whole life. I was distorted by it. So I never wanted to make anyone feel the way I felt that time."

Tyson made a point to pose for family photos with 9-year-old Saba-Nur Mirza, who has a rare inherited heart disease and whose growth has been stunted to that of a 5-year-old.

The youngster, afflicted with Noonan's syndrome, was able to join the training session when her father, Steve Mirza, got a request through to Tyson on Sunday. "It's a disease they say only 400 people in the world have and we're trying to draw attention to it," said her mother, Waqar. "We're not asking for money. We just want to put the spotlight on her and see if we can get help in treatment."

Finkel said Tyson was accosted a few days ago while eating lunch in his plush Park Lane hotel.

"Someone comes up and says: 'These are my kids. Will you put them through school?'" Finkel said. "It can be brutal."

Frank Warren, who is promoting the fight, said Tyson has been a "perfect gentleman, tender at times."

"There was a young girl who had a very bad birthmark on her face," Warren said. "We came out of the elevator and he bent down and he kissed her on the cheek — on the good side. As he walked away, I could see what he was thinking. And he went back and kissed her on the other side."

Tyson said he knows his love of children won't change his image of a convicted rapist and the man who bit off a chunk of Evander Holyfield's ear.

Former champ Dokes sentenced

■ Boxer Michael Dokes was convicted of attempted murder, kidnapping and battery.

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Former heavyweight champion Michael Dokes was sent to prison Monday for a night of terror in which he beat and sexually assaulted his live-in girlfriend.

A tearful Dokes apologized for his actions, but it wasn't enough to prevent a judge from giving him up to 10 years in prison for an attack that left the victim's face so beaten that an arresting officer said he couldn't recognize her from a driver's license photo.

The victim told the court that it took her a year to recover physically from the attack, and that she still suffers emotionally.

"Is he going to have to kill somebody before you put him away?" she asked.

Dokes, who won the WBA heavyweight title in 1982, pleaded guilty earlier to charges of attempted murder, second-degree kidnapping and battery with intent to commit sexual assault for the August 1998 attack in which the victim was held against her will for six hours in the home they shared.

"I'm remorseful. There's no excuse for my actions," Dokes said. "I love that woman with all my heart. I truly wanted to spend the rest of my life with her as husband and wife."

The 41-year-old Dokes, far heavier than the days in which he fought for the heavyweight title, was led away in handcuffs after District Judge John McGroarty imposed a sentence that will keep him in prison for a minimum of four years and two months.

McGroarty said the severity of the crime outweighed the numerous letters and testimonials offered by friends and associates of Dokes, who said he was a kind person who was involved in charitable work.

Third man wearing seatbelt was released things from a No. 1 draft choice," Chiefs president Carl Peterson said. "But he's given of himself far beyond anything I could hope for. He's touched so many lives."

Thomas was driving with two friends to Kansas City International Airport on Sunday headed for the NFC Championship game in St. Louis.

He lost control of his car on a snowy highway and it flipped several times. Thomas and Mike Tellis, 49, of Kansas City, Kan., were not wearing seat belts and were thrown from the car, police said. Tellis was killed instantly.

A third man in the car who was wearing his seat belt was treated and released.

The crash happened about 10 miles from another highway pile-up in which 10 people died.

Thomas, a nine-time Pro Bowl player, holds the NFL one-game record of seven sacks and ranks ninth all-time with 126.5 career sacks.

The seven-sack game came against Seattle in 1990 near Veterans Day. He dedicated his effort to his father, an Air Force pilot who was killed in Vietnam in Operation Linebacker II.

With one of the quickest first moves of any defender in the league, Thomas became known for his "sack and strip" move in which he would close fast on a quarterback's blind side and hack at his arm to knock the ball out of his hand.

The 6-foot-3, 255-pounder holds Chiefs' records for career safeties (3), forced fumbles (45) and fumble recoveries (19). He starred at Alabama and was named to the Pro Bowl his first nine seasons.

Thomas made headlines in 1998 when he lost his temper in a Monday night game against Denver and committed three personal fouls during the Broncos' final touchdown drive. He was fined and suspended for one game and apologized to the Broncos and to the youth of America.

He has been active in the Kansas City area with his "Third and Long" literacy program. "God willing, all the initial reports will be off and he'll be OK," Chiefs center Tim Grunhard said. "Right now, I'm not concerned with Derrick Thomas the football player. I'm worried about Derrick Thomas the person."

Concern for Thomas also was on the minds of some Super Bowl-bound players.

"It's something that made me think how lucky I am to be here," said St. Louis Rams linebacker London Fletcher. "Nothing in life is guaranteed."

Griffin: I'm learning to be humble

MEN'S HOOPS

"Luke's is a hard worker and that makes me work harder in practice," Griffin said. "When you play against a guy like Luke in practice, it makes the games a hell of a lot easier."

Griffin said he could attribute his performance of late not only to the addition of Recker, but the experience that simply comes from playing more at the Division I level.

Early in the season Griffin landed in Alford's doghouse for academic problems and making bold predictions about upcoming games.

After the Northwestern game on Jan. 5, Griffin said he was "looking forward to Michigan State game so we could get another win." Michigan State held Griffin to just one point in Iowa's 75-53 loss to the Spartans.

Now Griffin is letting his play do the talking — on and off the court.

After the Michigan win,

Alford told Griffin when he was talking to reporters, "Hey Rob, Illinois is good."

"He thought I was going to go wild," Griffin said of Alford's reminder. "I'm learning to be more humble."

Griffin said he learned the key to being a successful player at the Division I level is consistency. The Ypsilanti, Mich., native will try to put up his third-straight 20-point game when Iowa hosts Illinois Wednesday at 7:05 p.m.

Titan fans emerged as Adelphia was built

less than 20,000 to the Astrodome. They finished 2-6 and three-2 on the road, the first of three straight 500 seasons.

The next year, as the Tennessee Oilers, they played in Memphis before less than 30,000 fans, many of them rooting for the opposition. Again they went 8-8 as they did last season, when they played in Vanderbilt Stadium in Nashville.

But when they opened Adelphia Coliseum this year and were rechristened the Titans, the fans started showing up and rooting fervently. That energized everyone, from veterans like offensive lineman Bruce Matthews, a 12-time Pro Bowler at age 38 to rookie Jevon Kearse, who had 14.5

sacks, an NFL rookie record.

The rest of the team jelled around them, from quarterback Steve McNair and running back Eddie George, two renowned college players, to Frank Wycheck, a journeyman who found a home at tight end in Nashville and youngsters like cornerback Samari Rolle.

"We grew and learned from the years of traveling," said McNair, whose 91 yards rushing were one of the keys to the 33-14 victory over Jacksonville in the AFC championship game Sunday.

Added Gary Walker, who wandered through the wilderness with the Oilers before signing this year with Jacksonville:

"To go through what they've gone through — to finally get a home — they just deserve a lot of credit."

The Rams were 4-12 last year. But they got a surprise season from quarterback Kurt Warner, who had played in the Arena League and NFL Europe and was left exposed in the expansion draft for the Cleveland Browns last spring. Only when Trent Green, the big off-season free-agent acquisition got hurt, did Warner get a shot, and even then the Rams went looking for a veteran.

They never needed one. Warner threw 41 touchdown passes, the only quarterback other than Dan Marino ever to surpass 40, and was voted the league's most valuable player. Running back Marshall Faulk, obtained for just second- and fifth-round draft picks from Indianapolis, was offensive player of the year, becoming just the second player ever to run for more than 1,000 yards and catch more than 1,000 yards in passes.
