Outcry to shelve First Ave.

■ The mayor proposes delaying the controversial project one year because of deep divisions among residents.

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman recommended Monday that the Iowa City Council postpone the extension of First Avenue one year — until 2003 — because of severe divisions among Iowa City residents. The proposal is expected to pass when councilors formally vote today on the amendment to the budget. The one-year interim would allow the city to grade the road and install a water line, at a cost of $1 million, and continue its plans to acquire property for a fourth fire station, Lehman said. Councilor Mike O'Donnell expressed skepticism about adding a fourth fire station without an arterial street, which the extension of First Avenue would provide, but said he would vote in favor of Lehman's proposal. "We need that road. We've needed that road for 20 years," he said. Vehement public debate persuaded Lehman and Councilor Connie Champion to favor a postponement of the extension. "I think what a lot of folks said didn't need to be said," Lehman said. "As a result, we've had remarks that have been less than civil. We add to that division when we don't make a decision." In the four years the council has delayed the extension, the project's cost has risen from $1.2 million to $1.7 million. As budgeted for the fiscal year 2002 budget, the First Avenue extension would cost $6.5 million in conjunction with the extension of Captain Irish Parkway. "(The delay) will ensure that it will be done," Lehman said. "The most important thing is it'll put this thing we've argued about for years to rest." Champion, once considered to be the deciding vote on the project, said the one-year delay would be best utilized by alleviating the concerns among citizens. "It would be damaging to continue it with so much dissension," she said. See COUNCIL, Page 8A

'E-vote' seems to appeal to students

■ Turnout in the UISG election is expected to surpass last year's by approximately 1,000 voters.

By Ryan Foley and Heather Pavnica
The Daily Iowan

As the first online UI Student Government election comes to a close today, the Student Elections Board estimated there will be approximately 1,000 more voters than last year's 3,028 voters. Meanwhile, the appeal of a $5 per person fine against the Brown/Bare ticket was not decided on, nor did the Elections Board reach a decision on an alleged violation of campaign rules by the Stoll/Linn ticket. The UISG elections went online this year in hopes of coaxing more students to vote. The elections started at 7 a.m. Monday and will continue until 7 p.m. today. UISG presidential hopefuls include UI junior Marquez Brown, UI sophomore Andy Stoll and UI junior Adam Tetzloff. On Monday, Joel Wilcox, the director of the Web ISIS development program, said his team would be able to do a first-day tally for the number of people who voted in this year's UISG election, but Elections Board Chairwoman Megan Bygness said she did not want to reveal any numbers until the last ballot is cast tonight. A tally before the completion of the election may bias potential voters based on high or low voter turnout, she said. A See UISG, Page 8A

UI study: Allergy pills, driving don't mix

■ Over-the-counter antihistamines may affect driving more than alcohol, researchers say.

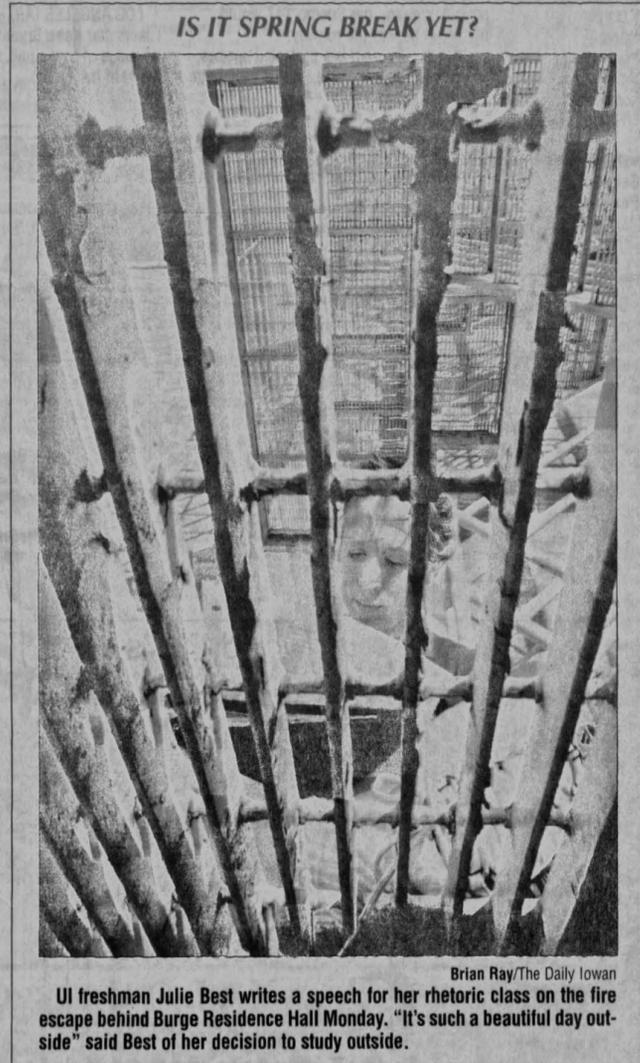

By Kate Thayer
The Daily Iowan

A UI Hospital and Clinics study found that over-the-counter antihistamines may have a greater effect on driving capabilities than alcohol. Forty seasonal allergy sufferers ranging in age from 25-44 were tested in the UI driving simulator after being given either a first-generation antihistamine (Benadryl), a second-generation antihistamine (Allegra), alcohol or a placebo, said Ginger Watson, a research scientist at the National Advanced Driving Simulator who conducted the study with John Weiler, a UI professor of internal medicine. The subjects' driving performance was rated on precise measurements of near collision, open driving and car following, Watson said. The subjects who took the over-the-counter antihistamines crossed lines and headed into oncoming traffic more often than the subjects who were legally drunk, according to the study. The study also had subjects rate themselves before and after the 50-minute drive in the simulator, Watson said. "People were not able to predict their drowsiness, which tells us that they may not stop themselves from driving after taking such medications," she said. "Poor performance, coupled with the fact that people may not be able to self-regulate their driving, makes this dangerous." More than 39 million Americans suffer from hay fever and allergies, and 4.8 million take prescription drugs, the researchers said. Most go without treatment or take over-the-counter medications. The maker of Benadryl, Warner-Lambert Co., attacked the UI study as being "seriously flawed" because it was partially funded by Aventis, the

Gore, Bush campaigning to stagger Bradley, McCain on Super Tuesday

■ The four major presidential candidates let loose a last-minute blitz for Super Tuesday.

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hoping for a Super Tuesday worthy of the name, George W. Bush and Al Gore campaigned on opposite coasts Monday in parallel pursuit of the victories needed to settle their parties' nominating struggles. "Rest is for another day," said Gore's rival, Bill Bradley. And on the eve of a virtual nationwide presidential primary with contests in all regions of the country, all sides seemed to agree. Republican John McCain said he sensed a backlash developing against campaign commercials aired by Bush and "his sleazy Texas buddies" in New York and elsewhere. The front-runners, Bush and Gore, both courted Jewish voters as they tailored their messages as much to the general election as today's primaries. "Tolerance can never be assumed, and it always must be taught," Bush said at the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, where he also stressed his support for "a safe and secure Israel." Gore, in New York, told a Jewish organization he would be a "good and helpful and loyal friend" to Israel if elected to the White House. Public opinion polls had Gore ahead of Bradley virtually everywhere. Bush's position wasn't as commanding, although he led McCain in

Zarek picked as new Daily Iowan editor

■ Managing Editor Cori Zarek will take over as DI editor in chief in June.

In the end, Monday's decision to select UI junior and Daily Iowan Managing Editor Cori Zarek as the next editor in chief came down to one thing, SPI Board Chairwoman Vanessa Shelton said: daily management experience. The other applicant for the position was Joe Plambeck, the current assistant viewpoints editor. "They are both very dedicated and have worked for The Daily Iowan for a few years," Shelton said. "In the end, we knew Cori had quite the experience with day-to-day management." The announcement came Monday night after a March 3 informal meeting and a formal interview Monday with the two candidates and members of the SPI Board, the body that administers the DI. Shelton hopes Zarek will continue to motivate the staff and encourage growth. Originally from Carter Lake, Iowa, Zarek is a recipient of the DI in-state tuition reimbursement scholarship, which, she said, played a big role in her journalism career. "I was working in the newsroom before I stepped foot in the classroom," she said. Zarek has been a metro reporter, assistant metro editor, metro editor and managing editor during her three years at the DI.

She said she will need to watch Laura Heinauer, the present editor in chief, a lot more closely to prepare for the position, which she will officially assume in June. "We've started a lot of good things this year," Heinauer said. "I hope she'll keep high standards next year." DI reporter Cassie Huisman can be reached at: cassie-huisman@uiowa.edu

NPR duo to talk on Gulf captivity

■ Neal Conan was held hostage for a week during Desert Storm.

By Leanna Brundrett
The Daily Iowan

Even after being held hostage for a week in the Persian Gulf, National Public Radio correspondent and "Weekly Edition" host Neal Conan never questioned his decision to become a journalist 16 years ago.

His wife, Liane Hansen — the NPR "Weekend Edition/Sunday" radio host — never thought she would face being the news instead of reporting it.

The two journalists will speak in the Buchanan Auditorium, Pappajohn Business Building, at 7:30 p.m. today. The lecture is free and open to the public.

The duo will focus on Conan's captivity while covering Desert Storm

Being held hostage was very scary. It was a truly adrenal experience, and I experienced a tremendous range of emotions during that week.

— Neal Conan,

National Public Radio correspondent and "Weekly Edition" host in Saudi Arabia in 1991, he said.

While on assignment, Conan was captured and held hostage for one week by Iraqis. Hansen was granted leave from NPR because the network did not want her to have to face the possibility of reporting her husband's death, he said.

"Being held hostage was very scary," Conan said. "It was a truly adrenal experience, and I experienced a tremendous range of emotions during that week."

The experience gave him a small idea of what other journalists who have been held hostage have felt, he said.

Though frightened during his captivity, Conan never had second thoughts about his decision to become a reporter.

"When I thought about it professionally, I never questioned it," he said. "It was a little more difficult on the personal side of the situation."

The Friends of WSUI/KSUI asked Conan and Hansen to speak because many of the members of the group were interested in hearing them speak, said Ford Ballard, the marketing manager for UI Broadcasting Services.

Ballard said they also thought it would be interesting to find out what it's like for Conan and Hansen to balance their careers and their married life.

Conan has been working for NPR for 23 years, while Hansen has been working off and on for 15.

The ears have it

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — A rare lizard with no ears has forced organizers of Queen Elizabeth II's visit to Australia to reroute her flight.

The Eastern lined earless dragon, an endangered species, lives near Canberra Airport, where the queen had planned to start her two-week trip on March 17. But accommodating her Boeing 747 would require widening the runway.

Because the lizard is a protected species, any changes to the runway would have to go through a 90-day consultation period before they could be approved. So the queen's plane will touch down in Sydney instead.

President Clinton's 747 was able to land at Canberra Airport in 1996 because Air Force One is a military aircraft that does not need as wide a runway as the queen's civilian aircraft.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles Lakers star Kobe Bryant, a master of the language of basketball, showed off his command of Italian, too.

Backstage at the Soul Train Music Awards on March 4, Bryant offered a few lines in Italian, translations from his first album, Visions, to be released in June.

Bryant, 21, spent eight years as a child in Italy while his father was establishing himself as a basketball star. He speaks fluent Italian.

"I would like to get back to do something in that culture," he said.

After his NBA career is over, Italy's the place where he would like to live, he said. In December, he bought a half-interest in Olimpia Milano, an Italian team for which his father played.

When things aren't black or white

■ Direct descendants of Thomas Jefferson and Sally Hemings will speak at the UI tonight.

By Rupa Shenoy
The Daily Iowan

Two direct relatives of Thomas Jefferson and his slave Sally Hemings will speak on race relations and family tonight in the IMU Main Lounge.

Recent DNA tests have "strongly suggested" that Jefferson and Sally Hemings had children together.

The descendants of Jefferson and Hemings range in ethnicity from American Indian to Chinese. Shay Banks-Young, who is black, and Julia Westerinen, who is white, have been proven to be descendants of Jefferson and Hemings; they will hold a joint discussion.

"We prove color has nothing to do with family," Banks-Young said. "Our coming together has an impact because we make people realize how molded together we are. We create a room for conversation on what it means to be black or white."

Westerinen and Banks-Young will speak on their life experiences using different racial viewpoints before they take questions from the audience.

Erin Crawford, a member of the UI Lecture Committee, said interest in this issue should be considerable.

"The findings just came out about this. This should be a topic everyone is interested in," she said. "It's fun to watch the viewpoints raised in conversations such as these."

Banks-Young said she was encouraged by Alex Haley, the author of Roots and one of the few people who knew about Hemings before the DNA findings. Haley told her to write down her history and formally document it, she said.

While Banks-Young knew of her relation to Hemings and Jefferson, Westerinen did not discover her heritage until the 1970s, when a family member found the connection in an autobiography of Jefferson.

Banks-Young and Westerinen met during a November 1998 "Oprah Winfrey Show" soon after the DNA results that confirmed relations between Jefferson and Hemings were released. They became friends, went on to other TV appearances together, and eventually began lecturing together, Banks-Young said.

"Julia chose to embrace her African-American heritage," Banks-Young said. "Other people might've seen it as a bad thing, but we truly are a family."

This family, Banks-Young said, has Jefferson as one person in a family tree of 10 generations, but that is not its paramount aspect.

"Jefferson owned my family. I know he did some great things as president, but I think of him as a slave-holder," Banks-Young said. "My pride comes from my black ancestors, who survived through that time."

In the talks she and Westerinen will give, the focus is placed on the unimportance of color and the emphasis that should be put on families. This attitude, Banks-Young said, will eventually lead to a more cohesive nation.

Between 800 and 900 people are expected to attend the lecture, said Brandon Hayes, the Lecture Committee's co-sponsorship chairman. The event will begin at 7:30 p.m., with a reception following on the Sun Porch. Both are free and open to the public.

"I hope this promotes racial understanding on campus," Hayes said. "It's an opportunity to learn how race relations affects our culture."

Cancer study focuses on smoking

■ According to "Cancer in Iowa: 2000," smokers make up 85 percent of lung-cancer deaths in the state.

By Christy B. Logan
The Daily Iowan

When Tipton native Tom Spear began smoking several years ago, little did he know that his easily adapted habit would follow him for the next 40 years and cause one of the most life-threatening ailments in America — cancer.

Since having his right lung removed two years ago, Spear, 55, spends his time far from tobacco-related products and thinks about the importance of increasing public awareness on the effects of smoking.

"I enjoyed smoking," Spear said, about his habit, which developed when he was a teen-ager. "When you're young, you don't think about the consequences. If people are smart and study the evidence and legislation, they won't smoke."

In an annual report by the Iowa State Health Registry and the UI College of Public Health on "Cancer in Iowa: 2000," Spear was able to share his story with faculty, staff, UI physicians and members of the public during a panel discussion Monday.

This year, more than 6,300 Iowans will die from cancer, while another 14,000 will be diagnosed with cancer, according to the report. This is more than 13 times the number of deaths caused by automobile fatalities in Iowa. The report found that 85 percent of Iowa's approximate 1,700 lung-cancer deaths are a result of smoking.

"There is clearly a dose-dependent phenomenon. The more you smoke, the more dependent you are," said Jeffrey Kern, a UI professor of internal medicine. "Our approach is not to talk about the death rate, but what happens to your body."

Kern also said impotence in men and overall changes in appearance are a few side effects caused by smoking.

At 30 percent, Iowa currently exceeds the national average by 6 percent for the number of smokers between the ages of 18-24.

In Johnson County alone, an estimated 300 new cases of cancer will be diagnosed this year, according to the study.

"Cigarette smoking is the single most important preventable cause of cancer mortality in Iowa," said Charles Lynch, a UI professor of epidemiology and the medical director of the Iowa Cancer Registry. "It is important to get the message out there and contact legislators."

In 1973, the state began a campaign to combat smoking and its effects by collecting data on cancer incidences. It will also participate in two dozen cancer-funded research projects this year.

"Putting more money into the issue is part of the solution, but we need more people to share first-hand experiences in order to help," Lynch said.

Speakers push UI to dump sweatshop group

■ The university should leave the Fair Labor Association, 25 people tell committee.

By Andrew T. Dawson
The Daily Iowan

The local anti-sweatshop campaign continued during a forum Monday night, as 25 people addressed the UI Committee on Human Rights to voice their concerns about the UI and unfair labor practices.

Made up of students, faculty and staff, the committee held the meeting to hear opinions concerning the UI's affiliation with the Fair Labor Association and the possibility of signing with the Workers Rights Consortium. Both organizations serve as corporate factory monitors to guard against universities' apparel being made under sweatshop conditions.

The committee will make a recommendation to UI President Mary Sue Coleman concerning the issue.

At the start of the meeting, Laraine Carmichael Nelson, the director of student services in the nursing school and the committee chairwoman, told the crowd of approximately 40 people that the committee takes as a "given" that the UI sells some apparel made under sweatshop conditions.

The speakers, who had three minutes each in which to address the committee, were unanimous in their belief that the UI should terminate its contract with the labor association and immediately sign with the workers' consortium.

UI sophomore Amanda Hamilton said she came to the meeting to become more informed on the issue. After hearing details of the working conditions in some factories, she said, her mind is made up.

"As a UI student, it's embarrassing that the UI is afraid to take a stand against sweatshops," Hamilton said.

Nelson assured the audience that the urgency to make a decision was understood, and the committee would work as quickly as possible.

The UI Students Against Sweatshop has given the university a March 10 deadline to pull out of the labor association and sign with the WRC in order to attend its April 7 founding meeting. While UI officials say it is not likely that a decision will be made by then, SAS members have not declared what action, if any, they might take if the UI does not comply.

UI graduate student Douglas Anderson said the committee meeting would help to educate the campus.

"This decision is too important for a committee or the president," he told the panel. "It is only our numbers that will stop (sweatshop labor)."

The committee will meet again Thursday before making its recommendation.

CITY BRIEFS

Kinko's says goodbye to Iowa City today

After nearly 15 years in business, Kinko's, 14 S. Clinton St., will permanently close at 5 p.m. today.
Store manager Troy Hodson said he doesn't know what will become of the space after Kinko's closes, though the belief among co-workers is that it will become a restaurant or bar, given its location.
Kinko's will be allowed to terminate its lease at the end of April, which was earlier than previously expected, Hodson said. There has been interest shown in the building, and the owner should be able to let quite a few people look at it before Kinko's lease is up, he said.
Some employees, such as those who have been on staff for 12 to 13 years, have a great attachment to the business, Hodson said, and the entire staff wants to make the last day as much fun as possible.

"As co-workers, we're sorry we have to close," Hodson said. "But being Fat Tuesday, we're going to come in with our Mardi Gras beads and have a good time."
Hodson said he and other employees will still be in the building from March 8-10 to clean up and transfer equipment.

Local man briefly escapes custody in courthouse

Darrin W. Plantz, 28, of Iowa City escaped custody of an officer in the Johnson County District Courthouse on March 3 after making an initial appearance on felony charges.

Plantz, 711 Orchard St., was found a short time after his escape, hiding behind a couch in a judge's chambers on a different floor of the courthouse.
He was then taken back into custody and returned to jail by Johnson County Sheriff's officer George Werner. Werner could not be reached for comment.
Iowa City police Officer Arnulfo Trevino said the escape is considered a Class "D" felony, punishable by maximum five-year imprisonment and a $500 to $750 fine.
Bail is set at $9,750; a preliminary hearing has been set for March 14 at 2 p.m. on the escape charge.
Plantz is under four other pending felony charges, according to court documents.

A remembrance of the passionate times

■ A work by a UI grad student examines freedom through movement, slapstick and tango.

 Tonight through March 9 at 8

Dolores de los Tiempos Pasados, an original work by UI graduate acting student Noemi de la Puente.

The play will begin tonight at 8 and run through March 9 in Theatre B, UI Theatre Building.

The play reminds me that each of us is a legend; each of us is history.

— Ralph Hall,
 director of Dolores de los Tiempos Pasados

The play, which will be performed in English, combines several aspects of the theatrical world to create a dramatic whole. Movement, slapstick, tango, mime and even a speaking chorus will be included.

The drama documents the life of a museum curator who becomes obsessed with an exhibition about La Passionara, a famous political activist in the Spanish Civil War.

The curator's passionate encounter with this freedom fighter from the past leads her to new and dramatic discoveries about her own need for freedom and purposeful action.

Director Ralph Hall, a lecturer in the theater department, said that even though the setting and story may be something that people may feel they can't relate to, it actually is relevant to all.

"The play reminds me that each of us is a legend; each of us is history," he said.

De la Puente, who is also a member of the performing ensemble, said she drew from her own experience and the memories of her father for the inspiration for the play, being very careful to keep things real, honest and accurate.

"This piece grew out of memories of my father's childhood Spanish Civil War stories," she said. "It's difficult, because I've had to walk a fine line between honoring one's past and idolatry." Tariq Olson, the lighting designer, said he can't speak for everyone in the production, but certain parts of the production made his job challenging.

"For a long time, the script was still in revision, so where sound effects were going to be placed was constantly changing, and this was both difficult and somewhat frustrating," he said. "But I think in the end, it has all pulled together. But the audience will be the final judge of that."

Dressed for a reaction

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jennifer Lopez's jaw-dropping dress at the Grammys was still a hot topic at the weekend's Soul Train Music Awards.

At one point, co-host Shemar Moore walked on stage in a skimpy top with jagged edges, exposing much of his chest and belly.

"I'm not going to lie," Moore told the crowd on March 4. "Jennifer Lopez helped me pick this one out."

The Versace dress Lopez wore to last month's Grammy Awards opened in a deep V all the way to navel, with a large brooch holding some of the blue and green print fabric in place.

Lopez was nominated for best female R&B album at the Soul Train Awards but lost to Mary J. Blige.

Michael Jackson may extend overseas

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Michael Jackson is heading for Warsaw next week to meet with a city official with whom he agreed to develop a theme park.

The two-day visit, starting on March 14, comes at the invitation of Mayor Pawel Piskorski.

City officials and Jackson's spokesman refused to give any details on the trip, but the King of Pop is believed to be searching for a site for his family theme park.

Jackson signed a letter of intent with

Warsaw officials in 1997 to develop a $500 million park, but the two sides have not agreed on a location.

Rock hall greets new inductees

NEW YORK (AP) — Eric Clapton, whose solo career has veered between pop hits and blues explorations, was set to join the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame for the third time Monday. His fellow inductees included Bonnie Raitt, James Taylor and Earth, Wind & Fire.

Sixties hit-makers The Lovin' Spoonful, doo-wop pioneers The Moonglows and embattled music executive Clive Davis were also to be inducted in a ceremony at New York's Waldorf Astoria Hotel.

Earth, Wind & Fire's Maurice White, who last week revealed his battle with Parkinson's disease, was to make a rare appearance performing with the band he founded.

Clapton is already in the rock hall for his work as a member of two groups, the Yardbirds and Cream.

This time, the guitarist's solo career was being spotlighted. His hits have spanned three decades, from "After Midnight" and "Wonderful Tonight" in the 1970s to the Grammy-winning "Tears in Heaven" and "Change the World" in the 1990s.

He's kept current on the pop charts while not abandoning his blues roots, which he explored on the "From the Cradle" album in 1994.

Blues-rocker Raitt was largely a cult favorite until her 10th album, "Nick of Time," won four Grammy Awards in 1989 and made "Thing Called Love" a hit. She started the Rhythm & Blues Foundation to help older artists who didn't reap financial rewards from their work.

"Sweet Baby James" Taylor was the quintessential 1970s singer-songwriter with hits like "Fire and Rain," "How Sweet It Is" and "Carolina in My Mind." He's still a major concert draw, and now his children, Ben and Sally, have their own performing careers.

Earth, Wind & Fire favorites "Shining Star" and "September" are enjoying renewed popularity because of radio formats devoted to 1970s soul. White continues to record with the band but hasn't toured since 1995 because of his Parkinson's Disease.

The Lovin' Spoonful's string of mid-1960s hits included "Do You Believe in Magic?" and "Summer in the City." The Moonglows' signature tune was "Sincerely."

For Davis, who founded Arista Records and is now involved in a public battle with Arista's owners to keep his job, the induction is another well-timed salute. He guided the comeback of Carlos Santana, who won eight Grammy Awards less than two weeks ago.

I think to count abstentions with the majority is a disservice to the citizens of Iowa City.

— Steven Kanner, Iowa City councilor. Kanner refused to vote three times during a Feb. 16 council meeting. City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes has recommended the council accept abstentions as votes with the majority or in the affirmative in the case of a tie.

Poverty is not a novelty

“Beecher is Flint’s dump. It’s where you go when you have nothing left to your name.”

— Michael Moore, producer of the documentary, Roger and Me

She probably did not see or hear it coming before the bullet entered her shoulder and traveled through her torso. The 6-year-old boy didn’t expect the gun to go off. He only wanted to scare the girl.

According to Arthur A. Busch, the Genesee County prosecutor, “the boy is too young to understand.” Despite the boy’s age, it was an accident waiting to happen. As he explained himself to authorities, he sat and drew pictures, unable to understand the severity of his own actions.

This is extremely problematic. A 6-year-old understands death. I understood the death of my dog when it was killed by my own bus driver. It was not the same as if a person were killed, but I felt extreme grief. This boy, however, does not seem to care or understand that he took the life of 6-year-old classmate, Kayla R. Roland, at Buell Elementary in the Flint Beecher School District.

Authorities are scurrying to find someone to blame or sue. Many are pointing fingers to the boy’s mother, Tamarla Owens, who was evicted from her home in January. She sent her boys to live with her brother and family friend in a crack-infested home. A member of the state’s Work First Program, she worked in order to receive benefits, including food stamps and medical care. The mother was working outside of Flint, traveling by bus away from home for up to 12 hours.

Flint enjoys the reputation of having the highest rates of rape, theft and murder — the symptoms of a terrible sinus infection called poverty. This is due mostly in part to the 1980s, when General Motors laid off thousands of workers. I am not a mother, but I can understand survival techniques. Why should she be blamed for making decisions she thought were best for her children?

The boy’s uncle, 21, was arrested on a theft warrant. A bag of cocaine, a stolen 12-gauge shotgun and a 9-mm pistol with ammunition were found in his home.

The 6-year-old’s biological father has been in the Genesee County Jail since Feb. 20 on a parole violation. His solution: divorce the mother and seek custody of the two children.

The Bureau of Statistics said that 1.96 million children have parents or a close relative in prison. There are 5 million children who have parents on probation, on parole or who have been previously incarcerated.

Yet the boy did not know that a gun is meant to harm another individual.

When one is 6, you know that if you touch a hot stove, you will get burned. Judging from the boy’s environment, he did know the gun would kill the girl. The only knowledge the boy lacks is human compassion. But in a place like the Mount Morris

Judging from the boy’s environment, he did know the gun would kill the girl. The only knowledge the boy lacks is human compassion. But in a place like the Mount Morris Township, how could one possibly understand that? He is a product of his community.

Township, how could one possibly understand that? He is a product of his community.

The automobile industry had no compassion for the city. Presidential candidates had no compassion for the city. They bypassed it for more important cities that reflect the true nature of the country. Places such as Ann Arbor, where everyone is educated and has a good understanding of politics and technology. People who access their Web pages for information. People who vote.

Perhaps John McCain thought his “straight talk” ban on cheap guns, requiring safety locks and gun-show checks wouldn’t be too appealing to a place like Flint. So his tour bus passed on. George W. Bush did the same, but we wouldn’t expect him to step up to a leadership position and take a stand on anything that might threaten his bright future.

Children are poor because their mothers are poor. The mother of the boy suspected of the crime was evicted after six months’ worth of unpaid rent piled up on a single-story home at $300 a month.

In the “era of prosperity,” we sit and sip coffee while pondering such profound questions: Should Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan raise interest rates to keep inflation under control? What should we do with the budget surplus? What should we do with Social Security? Are two of the Backstreet Boys really getting married? All are important questions to the survival of our society.

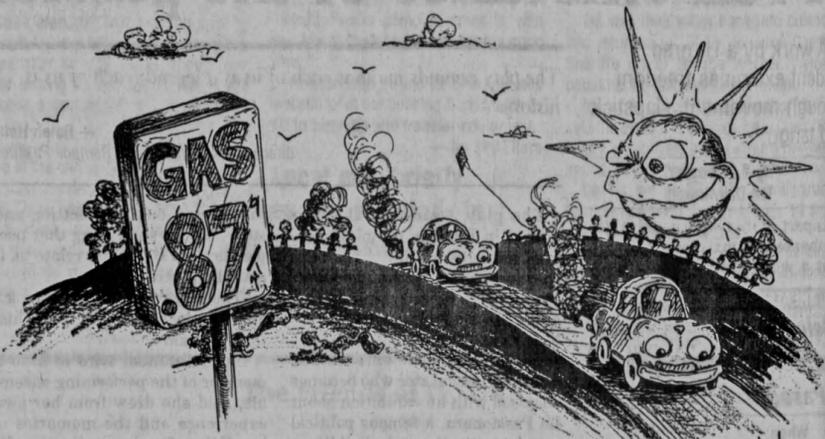

But if we as a country cannot save the lives of our children or help the people who directly affect their well-beings, what difference do the answers to our economic problems make? There will be no one to collect benefits or be educated in the jobs that pay high enough wages to support these policies. The elements that concocted this tragedy are many, complex and thoroughly embedded in every city across the nation. Poverty is not a novelty.

According to a Parents Resource Institute for Drug Education survey in September 1999, 800,000 children carried guns to school. At the rate we are going, a small number of the population will have their 100-foot SUVs, yacht club memberships and loaded guns in their homes to protect their prized possessions. They will have to move to satellite stations in outer space and leave this place we call a “dump, the place you go when you have nothing to your name,” the United States of America.

Those Were the Days

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tetzloff/Haldeman offers a rebuttal

My unorthodox campaign has again come under fire from some as being a “stunt.” I can only offer my assurances that this is far from the truth. It is not, as former UISG President Allison Miller says, “easy to be funny.” If it were, no one would have taken any notice of my party’s campaign. This notice — recognition by students otherwise unconcerned or bored to death by student government — was my goal. Many people who would have paid little attention to two “serious” candidates bickering do respond to talk of slip ‘n’ slides or facts about sexy things.

I agree, however, that there is nothing funny about a 20 percent tuition increase or lack of student parking. However, these events took place with a “serious” candidate in office.

That’s funny, farts are funny, tuition hikes are not funny. I also find it funny that you are so willing to base your knowledge and criticism of my party on what you read in The Daily Iowan.

What I found hilarious was the comment, “Good campaign platforms will probably have identical ideas and goals.” That’s easily the most inane, idiotic statement I’ve ever heard. I’m amazed you were ever president with views like that. You see, democracy is about diverging opinions. That is why there are so many pissed-off people when their candidate does not win. This struggle is why we have elections, and why people give a rat’s ass. Also, democracy gives us the right to bitch about such matters and blame it on the stupidity of our leaders, even if we did vote for them. It’s true that I am inexperienced, and that I have few dealings with UISG at present. I can learn, and I will.

As for the other candidates, I like them. They are good kids trying to win an election, for whatever reason. They don’t see me as a threat really, because I’m just the moron who’s funny. However, if you consult the DI in which your letter is printed, tell me who stuck his face in a pie?

Interfaith Forum was full of speakers

I was disappointed that the otherwise fine article by Andrew Dawson (DI, Feb. 29) made it sound like Julia Easley and I were the only ones with anything to say at the Interfaith Forum held at Hillcrest Residence Hall Monday evening. In fact, each of us on the panel spoke eloquently (I think) about our respective traditions, while at the same time acknowledging that each tradition adds its richness to the whole of religious experience. It was an exciting and enlightening experience for me to be a part of. I am grateful to the Association of Campus Ministers and the other organizers of the forum for their courage and dedication in bringing about this event.

On the ‘Fourth Floor’

I read with interest Courtney Usher’s review of the “Fourth Floor” cartoon strip (DI, March 1), and Danielle Busch’s response to the same (DI, March 3). Although I would probably have worded my comments a little differently, I am in substantial agreement with Usher on the subject. Why, if I may also be so bold as to ask, is the cartoon named “Fourth Floor”? How does the title relate to the subject matter of the cartoon, the characters, or any opinions expressed? Fearing that as a non-native English speaker I was missing some idiomatic subtlety, I consulted reference works and native speakers, but none could resolve the difficulty.

Perhaps Busch will be so kind as to try to answer this, before she expects reasoning individuals to accept her tirade against Usher. It is improper to simply ask people to look elsewhere when confronted with mediocrity, and one hopes that such is not the philosophy of life Busch has developed after going to college at the UI.

Dancing through the pixilated dixilated scene

And so here we all go, cheerfully making the scene, as spring comes tiptoeing in a month or so early. Not that we’re sure what the scene is.

Oh, there’s the political scene, although those who make the scene wouldn’t call the political scene a scene, unless they meant scene of the crime. At least they wouldn’t rave about the political scene.

And then there’s the war zone that is the Congo, which resembles a lot of other places that the United States deemed important during the Cold War — then walked away from once the evil Ruskys Empire crumbled. It’s your scene now, America said cheerily, dusting its hands as if there had been a job well done.

And, somewhat closer to home, though not so close that you would actually go there or anything, there’s the First Avenue scene — which, if you had been out that way recently, you’d admit didn’t look much like a scene, either. It pretty much looks like suburbia heaped upon suburbia, in rather neat rows, like newly mown hay.

You can see why the folks out there are so desperate for a First Avenue extension. Who wouldn’t want to get out of there quickly?

That’s one of the great things about American real-estate developers — they take this farm land, laid out in rather neat rows, and, quicker than an MTV juxtaposition, poststructuralize it into suburbia, in rather neat rows, like freshly mown etc. Upon etc. Upon etc.

And they wonder why teen-agers turn to computers and video games. Born to be pixilated.

No wonder John McCain has been such a phenomenon on the national scene.

Not that McCain-ia will last much longer, probably. The forces of George W. Shrubdom, it seems, are about to bury him; if not today, then next week. Money may not be everything, but in today’s version of America, it beats the hell out of whatever is second. If this were a movie, it’d be called The Empire Shrubs Back.

The whole Sen. McClean thing was pretty much a media creation, anyway. You take a fairly regular conservative Republican with fairly regular conservative votes — anti-choice, anti-environment, anti-Equal Rights Amendment, anti-gun control — dress him up as a “maverick” in campaign-finance reform clothes, even though he’s a member of the Keating Five, and presto, change, you’ve got Luke Skywalker. All that the media types needed were Princess Leia and Han Solo.

Unfortunately, they were busy doing other kinds of make-believe.

It helped that, after one primary loss, the Shrub immediately switched from doing his impression of Mr. Rogers, compassionate conservative, to Darth Vader, heavy breathing through the mask and all.

The Darth Vader thing seems to be working for his Shrubness, if you can believe the polls. His latest move, which his campaign denies is a move on the part of the campaign, is to have two old cronies from Texas plow $2.5 million in “soft money” into pit bull attack ads that lie about McClean’s record on clean-air legislation.

Of course, having the Shrub attack your environmental record is rather like having Saddam Hussein accuse you of cruelty towards the Kurds.

Far more than a little ironic, actually, given that, under the Shrub’s governorship, the air of, say, Houston and Dallas, has yet to become anything that you’d particularly want to breathe. It’s kind of like the pot calling the hashish a drug.

And if that weren’t Darth Vader enough, the Shrub’s next ploy was to imply that McClean was pro-breast cancer. When reporters pointed out that McCain’s sister was a survivor of breast cancer, his Shrubness responded by summoning up all his compassion: “All the more reason to remind him.”

It’s this kind of sensitivity that endears the Shrub to the right wingers and the Confederate-flag-waving types. It’s this kind of sensitivity that, when questioned about the Texas inmate whose conviction was overturned after he had spent 16 years on death row because his lawyer had fallen asleep during his trial, leads the Shrub to say, See? The system works. Sixteen years on death row and the system works.

It’s this kind of Darth Vader empathy that will probably sew up the Republican nomination for him.

But it’s also the kind of sensitivity that will make him a ripe target for George W. Gore, who, as he’s shown in the last few months, can do a fairly mean impression of Darth Vader himself.

It should make for an interesting autumn, if you’re into heavy breathing through masks.

Talk about pixilated.

Southwest Airlines jetliner crashes, doesn't burn

■ A runaway jetliner misses a Chevron station's gas pumps by 39 feet.

By Erica Werner
Associated Press

BURBANK, Calif. — Southwest Airlines called it the worst accident in its 29-year history, but a day after a jet carrying 142 people hurtled off a runway and skidded to a stop just short of a gas station, talk centered on what could have happened instead of what actually did happen.

After landing at Burbank from Las Vegas, Flight 1455 screeched through an airport fence Sunday evening in a cloud of smoke and stopped with its nose just 39 feet short of the gas pumps at a Chevron station on Hollywood Way.

The Boeing 737-300 struck a car, pinning its hood under the aircraft, but the driver and her 4-year-old daughter weren't hurt. Fifteen passengers on the plane were slightly injured.

Airport shuttle bus driver Abayomi Omolewu said he and two other drivers were waiting to be sent on a call when they saw the plane blast through the airport fence.

"We saw it was going to crash into the gas station, and the gas station was going to get into a flame," he said Monday. "That's why we were like, 'Man, is that plane going to fall on us?'"

Omolewu said he and the two other drivers ran. Omolewu turned around to grab his cell phone, but because of the smoke, he couldn't see to dial.

As the noise subsided, Omolewu and others ran toward the plane, where they helped frightened passengers climb down off the wing and off an emergency chute.

The 54-ton jetliner still had approximately 1,000 gallons of fuel in its 5,311-gallon tanks. Thousands of gallons of gas were stored at the Chevron station. Although the plane leaked approximately 10 gallons of fuel, there was no fire.

"My feeling is they were very fortunate that it wasn't more serious than it was," said Southwest CEO Herb Kelleher. The airline, known for its bargain ticket prices, has never had a fatality.

Investigators said the cause of the crash was not yet known.

The battered plane was hoisted by cranes Monday and towed to a secure area of the airport. Cockpit data recorders were removed from the aircraft and flown to the National Transportation Safety Board's lab in Baltimore for analysis.

The pilot, a Southwest veteran since 1988 with more than 18,000 flying hours, will be interviewed today, said Jefferey R. Rich, the NTSB's lead investigator. The weather was clear at the time of the crash and the jet, built in 1985, had its last maintenance check on March 2.

The plane landed on a relatively short runway — 6,032 feet — at Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport, northeast of downtown Los Angeles. The runway is well known to arriving travelers, who have to brace themselves for the rapid stop when thrust reversers and brakes are applied.

Depending on weight, flap configuration and runway conditions, a Boeing 737-300 requires between 3,200 feet and 4,500 feet to land, Boeing spokesman Craig Martin said.

"I have no idea what the gross weight of that particular airplane was," he said. "There are a whole lot of things that go into it.... It depends on what flaps they were using, wet or dry runway, on and on and on."

Back to school with teddy bears, police

MOUNT MORRIS TOWNSHIP, Mich. — Greeted by teddy bears and extra security, Buell Elementary School children returned to class Monday for the first time since a first-grader was shot to death in her classroom.

Children and parents alike expressed fears at first about returning to the school, where 6-year-old Kayla Rolland was killed on Feb. 29, allegedly by another first-grader.

"He was afraid it was going to be him next," Lisa Davidson said of her second-grade son, Tim.

Room 6, where the shooting occurred, had been cleaned and repainted. Trauma counselors with teddy bears were in each room to help the children, and by the lunch break, some children were skipping on the sidewalk out front.

Plainclothes and uniformed police officers were inside and outside the school. School Superintendent Ira Rutherford said officials wanted to increase security without having too strong a police presence and scaring the children.

Slow aid angers Mozambicans

■ "When the West wants to intervene militarily, it gets there in record time," says one newspaper.

By Andrew Selsky
Associated Press

MAPUTO, Mozambique — Waiting to board a plane to inspect the damage wrought by catastrophic floods, former first lady Graça Machel summed up Mozambicans' growing bitterness over wealthy nations' failure to hurry to her country's aid.

"It seems the world has no conscience when it comes to human life," said Machel, who is now married to Nelson Mandela, the former South African president.

Planes and helicopters crisscrossed the southeast African nation Monday, delivering food and other aid to hundreds of thousands of flood victims. But an editorial in the country's main newspaper, Noticias, echoed the sentiments of many Mozambicans: "When the West wants to intervene militarily anywhere in the world, it gets there in record time."

The anger focused on the hours and days after Feb. 27, when a wall of water roared down the Limpopo River valley from neighboring Zimbabwe, sweeping away hundreds of villages and thousands of people.

Seven South African air force helicopters rushed into action to pluck flood victims from the tree branches and rooftops. They were soon followed by two more choppers from impoverished Malawi. But in the next few critical days, no one else pitched in.

"A lot of people are getting killed," U.N. World Food Program spokesman David Schaad said on Feb. 27.

Despite appeals from Mozambican officials and aid agencies, it wasn't until Sunday that additional helicopters arrived from Germany, Britain and Spain. And U.S. military choppers will not be flying over Mozambique until today or Wednesday, U.S. Air Force Maj. Mike Young said.

South African air force crews rescued more than 12,000 flood victims from trees or rooftops. It will never be known how many lives might have been saved with more helicopters and more boats.

For all the praise it has received for its rescue mission, South Africa itself had more helicopters in its air force. Foreign Ministry spokesman Ronnie Mamoepa said Monday the aircraft were unavailable because they were being used for rescue operations at home or were on emergency standby.

"Our forces and resources were stretched," Mamoepa said by telephone from South Africa.

Bureaucratic wrangling and poor storage facilities also impaired the relief effort. There were reportedly delays in getting money to fund the deployment of helicopters. And water destroyed 15 tons of emergency food supplies in the Limpopo River valley.

Africans have long complained of a double standard in how world governments respond to emergencies on the continent compared with those in Europe and Asia.

Ross Mountain, special envoy for U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, described the international response to the catastrophe as "rather good" but conceded it had shortcomings. Other U.N. officials have said it was an unusual emergency in that it evolved over several weeks.

"There was initially heavy rains causing some flooding without indications that this was going to be a major crisis," U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said Monday. "Then you had a cyclone, which turned the flooding into a major crisis indeed. And the rest is just response time."

First Ave. project may be delayed

Although Councilor Irvin Pfab shared Champion's concern, he said, he favored a complete stop to any work on First Avenue. Pfab proposed that the city stay out of the extension debate and create a group of community leaders to reach a compromise with the help of a private mediator. Councilor Dee Vanderhoef said she would only vote yes if the grading and water line are included in the amendment. "To get the project moving, I could support the idea if we have the grading and everything there but the concrete," she said. Pfab and Councilor Ross Wilburn said they would both vote no on Lehman's proposal today, which will be the last day to make amendments on the proposal. Wilburn said it has been his position for the past three to four years to see if Scott Boulevard would alleviate traffic and meet the goals of economic development on the Southeast Side of town. DI reporter Chao Xiong can be reached at: chao-xiong@uiowa.edu leave 25 residents displaced, said Sean McIntyre, the Southgate Management property manager. The residents in the complex, a mix of UI students and local professionals, will be booked at an area hotel, he said. The amount of damage, cause of the fire and extent of the victims' injuries were unknown. "We are trying to get everyone taken care of. We hope the two injuries weren't too great," McIntyre said.

He would not release the names of the injured residents. MidAmerican Energy Co. was on the scene to shut off power to the complex and prevent other problems, McIntyre said. Jan Ballew, a third-floor resident, said she heard an explosion that sounded like someone knocked out her door. "I tried to run out the door, but I couldn't. I could see the light of the fire from my bedroom," she said, adding that she ran out into the balcony and was rescued by firefighters. Another resident, Andy Jarrard, said he heard the commotion from his second-floor apartment. He saw a woman with her hands and face burned. "She was frantically yelling that her husband was trapped," he said. He did not know the injured resident. Jarrard said he couldn't walk through the smoky hallway, so he tried to climb up the balcony to find the trapped resident, but his efforts were thwarted by smoke. Three third-floor residents said they also witnessed the blaze and were relieved that their 7-year-old son was safe. "I got my son out — he's OK," Beth Butters said. DI reporter Lisa Livermore can be reached at: lisa-livermore@uiowa.edu high turnout may persuade students that their votes don't count, and a low turnout may encourage voter apathy, Bygness said. Elliott Dennis, a UI sophomore and lab monitor at Weeg, said he did not notice more students using the computer labs. Most people don't know that the UISG is using online voting this year instead of paper ballots, he said. Dennis said the only reason he voted last year was because he saw a polling booth when he walked through the IMU. He voted for the Zak/Stoll ticket last year but plans to vote for Tetzloff this year because he is a classmate.

Turnout up in UISG 'e-election'

"I like his platform, and he is a really smart guy with a lot of great ideas," Dennis said. UI junior Kevin Gluba said he has not voted in the past but plans to vote for Brown this year because they are classmates. Most students will vote based on name recognition, he said.

Matt Raw, a UI sophomore, said he is not going to vote this year because he doesn't know anything about the candidates or how student government serves the students. "I have not gone out and researched them, but they haven't gone out and caught my eye," he said. Students can vote under the "My U Iowa" link on the quick menu of the ISIS on the Web! program.

Monday evening, the nine-member Student Judicial Court did not have a five-member quorum and therefore could not decide on an appeal of a $5 fine for the members of the Brown/Bare ticket.

The ticket was fined $5 on March 1 by the Elections Board for passing out a handout of its platform that had not been approved.

Chief Justice Lawrence Houston, who appealed the fine, said he will not bring the appeal up again, even though, he said, the low fine sets a bad precedent.

Also, the Elections Board did not reach a decision on an alleged violation of campaign rules by the Stoll/Linn ticket.

The Elections Board could not decide on the case because the elections are ongoing, Bygness said. It is against the board's policy to make a decision on a case during the elections, she said.

Yasser Dahab, a member of the Brown/Bare ticket, filed a complaint on March 3, alleging that a member of the Stoll/Linn ticket violated campaign policies by using door-to-door solicitation to pass out campaign materials.

The decision on the case will be suspended until after the elections, Bygness said.

maker of Allegra. Weiler strongly defended his work, saying, "I am not for sale."

UI senior Katie Averill said that while she is aware of the dangers of driving after drinking any amount of alcohol, she does not stop herself from driving when taking over-the-counter antihistamines.

"I know that these medications make you drowsy in class, but I never consider the effect they would have on my driving," she said. "I don't think anyone really thinks about not driving with cold medicines, because it is not against the law."

Pat O'Neil, the owner of and a pharmacist at Pearson's Drug Store, 202 N. Linn St., said he warns customers who buy over-the-counter antihistamines to consider alternative forms of medications if they need to drive or do any activity involving concentration.

"There are more antihistamines out there that are less sedating, such as the second-generation antihistamines, which require a prescription," he said. "I think many people are aware of the side effects and decide to take these types of antihistamines."

Duane Papke, the associate director of UI Public Safety, said he has seen drivers who have acted intoxicated but are actually reacting to their medications.

"While this does happen occasionally, there are other factors that may be affecting driving capabilities," he said.

In 1998, the National Transportation Safety Board blamed a Greyhound bus crash that killed seven people on the Pennsylvania Turnpike on the driver's impairment by antihistamines and irregular work hours.

the polls in several key states, including Ohio, Maryland, Georgia, Missouri and in the winner-take-all competition for 162 California delegates. McCain's strength was in New England, and he and Bush battled fiercely in New York.

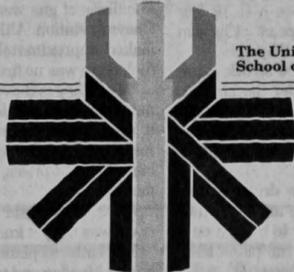

Bush and McCain girded for elections in 13 states in all, 11 primaries and two caucuses, with 613 delegates up for grabs. Democrats had contests in 15 states and the American Samoa, 11 primaries and five caucuses with 1,315 delegates in play. Many states predicted record voter turnouts.

Aides said the Bush campaign was making 2 million get-out-the-vote calls in nine states in the Super Tuesday lineup.

Beyond that, though, the Texas governor's high command was looking ahead. They said he will try to raise as much as $10 million in the coming weeks for use against the Democrats. They also said there have been informal discussions about expanding his team of advisers for the fall campaign.

McCain, upset about privately sponsored environmental ads, announced at day's end that he had filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission alleging that the ads were illegally coordinated with Bush's campaign.

Basketball battle NCA begins

The worst fight men's basketball the NCAA will see anytime soon.

By J. Assoc.

People see in direction and work of college basketball. Relax. There's a reason.

The game must be fun because it is one — especially in college. Two years ago, shaving at North Carolina's Final Four. Last year, academic fraud. It's kids getting prep school tuition. Amateur Athlete. Somebody else's college.

The rule book receiving special attention on the NCAA board.

What about mudslinging and the NCAA board's cases turned up months. It didn't help. Schools involve weights — University of Cincinnati, Miami State, Temple, stretching from college.

"If there was a profane word you would put them in the trash cans and NCAA," Temple said.

Chaney was the one to suspend one of the players dating to college, under investigation.

Basketball's battle with NCAA only beginning

The worst fights between men's basketball programs and the NCAA will not be ending anytime soon.

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

People see mud flying in every direction and worry about the future of college basketball. Relax. There's more where that came from. The game must thrive on controversy because it never seems to lack one — especially around tournament time. Two years ago, charges of point shaving at Northwestern rocked the Final Four. Last year, it was claims of academic fraud at Minnesota. Now it's kids getting clothes, cars and/or prep school tuition bills paid by their Amateur Athletic Union coaches or somebody else connected to the programs.

The rule barring athletes from receiving special benefits has been on the NCAA books for at least 15 years. What touched off the current mudslinging bout between coaches and the NCAA are seven high-profile cases turned up in the last three months. It didn't help that the schools involved are all heavyweights — UCLA, Michigan, Cincinnati, Missouri, Oklahoma State, Temple and St. John's — stretching from coast to coast.

"If there was a book that had every profane word you could think of, I would put them in a couple of ... trash cans and heave it onto the NCAA," Temple coach John Chaney said.

Chaney was the latest coach forced to suspend one of his players for violations dating to high school. Kevin Hyde, under investigation because

Hawks hope to break streak of Big Ten Tournament losses

Iowa has been eliminated in the first round of the conference tournament the past two years.

By Mike Kelly
The Daily Iowan

Dean Oliver has never experienced a spring break without basketball. While some college students are testing their tequila limit south of the border, Oliver and the rest of the Iowa Hawkeyes have been playing in postseason basketball tournaments. This year will be a different story, unless Iowa makes an upset-laden run through the Big Ten Tournament and sneaks into the NCAA Tournament or NIT on the flimsiest of bubbles. "It's something no one wants," Oliver said regarding the possibility of watching the Big Dance on television. "No one even bothers planning trips to Mexico or Florida like everyone else does. As a basketball player, you don't plan on having one." Iowa's struggle is compounded by the fact that the Hawkeyes have never won a game in the Big Ten Tournament. Iowa has lost in the first round of the 3-year-old event, in 1998 to Minnesota and in 1999 to Wisconsin. Penn State is the only other Big Ten squad without a win in the tournament. The seventh-seeded Hawkeyes will try and reverse that trend against 10th-seeded Minnesota Thursday at 3:30 p.m. at the United Center in Chicago. If Iowa gets past its first round game against Minnesota, they must face Michigan State, a team that handed the Hawks a 22-point home loss in January — and that's just quarterfinals. Like any competitor, Iowa coach Steve Alford knows that if his team goes into the weekend expecting anything less than a championship, they might as well stay home. But on the same lines, he knows how hard the road is going to be.

"I don't know if there is anything harder than winning back-to-back-to-back-to-back games in the Big Ten conference," Alford said. Playing in a Thursday game is something new to the Hawkeyes as well. Iowa will practice today and Wednesday, before departing for Chicago Wednesday night. Alford said he would be devoting more time to film work during practice this week and cutting back on the physical practice. Coming into the tournament as a seventh-seed is a far cry from Alford's position a year ago. His Southwest Missouri State team earned an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament

Wrestlers eye NCAAs

The Hawkeyes returned to Iowa City with the Big Ten title, but all they are concerned with is the national meet.

By Jeremy Schnitker
The Daily Iowan

An undefeated dual record. A Big Ten Tournament championship. A No. 1 ranking — and they're still not satisfied. Nope, not the Hawkeye wrestlers. For them, satisfaction is a national title — nothing more, nothing less. Fresh off a Big Ten title Sunday, the Hawkeyes did little celebrating, and began to turn their attention to NCAAs. "The Big Ten Tournament — this isn't ultimate goal, the National Tournament is," said 141-pound Doug Schwab. "You can never be satisfied. That's Iowa wrestling — that's our philosophy. "Now it's the national title." The 2000 NCAA Wrestling Championships, held at the Kiel Center in St. Louis, Mo., do not start until March 16, but the Hawkeyes are already getting focused to bring home their sixth-consecutive national title. Even before the Big Ten title was in their possession, Iowa was talking about its next meet. "We point to the national tournament," coach Jim Zalesky said just after the first day of competition in the Big Ten Tournament. "We don't want to over-emphasize this tournament. We talk about just getting 10 guys through." Individual-wise, Iowa looks to be in good shape. They're sending nine of their 10 wrestlers to the tournament, four of which will be No. 1 seeds, with Wes Hand seeded third. Team-wise, Iowa has defended their belt all year by winning the Big Ten and Midlands tournaments. They've also beat No. 2-ranked Minnesota, No. 3-ranked Iowa State and No. 4-ranked Oklahoma State in dual meets. On paper, it looks like the Hawkeyes should have a relatively easy time defending their title, but according to 133-pound Eric Juergens, the Hawkeyes still have to keep their noses to the grindstone. "We're confident," Juergens said.

UI coaches use variety of methods to motivate

Dan Gable may be Iowa's most famous when it comes to sports psychology, but more and more Hawkeye coaches are picking up different techniques.

By Molly Thomas
The Daily Iowan

When doubting his team's mental toughness in early February, Iowa men's basketball coach Steve Alford turned to a man well-known for his motivational tactics, Dan Gable. As the former Iowa men's wrestling coach, Gable earned fame for his techniques to the point where books have been published and movies have been made to show his expertise in the area.

The men's basketball team is not the first program to use Gable's talent to help with team mentality. The men's tennis and men's cross country team have also benefited from his tactics. However, Gable is no longer alone in the use and development of sports psychology. Many coaches at Iowa have taken Gable's advice, and the use of mental training is increasing among Iowa's athletic programs.

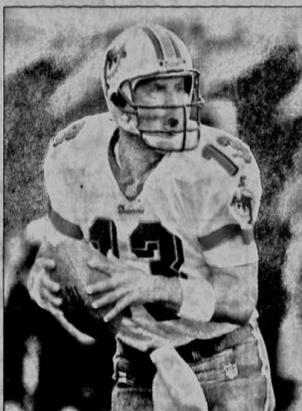

The key is to get to the point where you can read people well enough to get inside their heads. Only then can you give them a wish-list and show them what they are going to work for.

— Dan Gable

"A team is only as good as its individuals," Gable said. "It's tough because you have to get to know each individual to a fine point. The key is to get to the point where you can read people well enough to get inside their heads. Only then can you give them a wish-list and show them what they are going to work for." Gable said that with all of his years as an athlete and a coach, he could probably help anyone as long as he could clearly communicate with them. Gable describes himself as idealistic, which gives him the ability to motivate individuals to reach and go beyond their capabilities.

Gable's approach is not the only method of sports psychology though. Several techniques can be used in the psychological training of an athlete. Iowa women's tennis coach Paul Wardlaw has developed an existential approach to training his team's mental attitude toward the game.

Dan Marino was reportedly offered Minnesota's starting quarterback job last week.

Minnesota to Marino: Let's talk

Sources say, the Vikings offered Dan Marino their starting quarterback position, however Marino may be leaning toward retirement.

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — At least one team in the NFL doesn't think Dan Marino is washed up. Dennis Green is trying to lure the league's career passing leader to Minnesota, where he would become the Vikings' eighth starter in eight seasons. Marino turns 39 this year and has spent his 17-year career in Miami. He is considering an offer from the Vikings, but also considering retirement. The Vikings feature receivers Cris Carter and Randy Moss, but they also lost Pro Bowl offensive linemen Randall McDaniel and Jeff Christy to rival Tampa Bay. Marino was offered Minnesota's starting quarterback job last week in talks with Green, two sources close to Marino and speaking on condition of anonymity confirmed Monday. Marino, who has never won a championship, most likely will decide by the end of the week, one of the sources said. The offer was first reported Sunday night by ESPN and Fox Sports Net, citing unidentified sources. "I'm just flabbergasted," Dolphins president Eddie Jones said. "I have no idea about Dan Marino and any report about him going anyplace. I know nothing about where Dan's head is at or what he plans to do." But Jones said for the first time Monday that if Marino plays next season, the Dolphins want him. "Danny has been told he can come back," Jones said.

POINTCOUNTERPOINT

Is the new women's basketball coach going to be able to turn around Iowa's program quickly?

Now that the Angie Lee saga has finally blown over, Iowa can begin concentrating on basketball again for the first time in a while. Next season, all of the pieces should begin to start falling together. —Despite Iowa's 9-18 record, the Hawkeyes managed to defeat No. 25 Illinois earlier in the season and despite its youth, hung with top-tier teams such as Connecticut and Purdue before losing focus in the second half of both games.

The results were not pretty, but the margin of victory was very small in most cases this season. The youth movement is over and next season, with a majority of upperclassmen — the experience to play a full 40 minutes should be a definite improvement.

Lindsey Meder and Cara Consuegra will return, but the experience of playing inside was invaluable for players such as Jerica Watson this season. The return of Watson next season will open up more scoring opportunities for the big two. Combined with Randi Peterson and Leah Wagner, Iowa will finally put an experienced team on the floor with two seniors and three juniors who know the ins and outs of the Big Ten.

The truth is Iowa beat itself much of the season. Youth can no longer be an excuse and Iowa will be out to prove naysayers wrong about its ability to compete as a team next season. With experience, the growing pains should begin paying dividends in the future.

— Robert Yarborough

Right, the youth movement is over, but that does not mean Iowa is going to be any better next season.

Chances are they are going to have an energetic young coach who will inspire the Hawkeyes and breathe new life into a program that has been progressively dying since C. Vivian Stringer left.

That still does not make the potential for a turn-around in the win column much greater. Iowa is not that close to being an upper-division Big Ten team.

Cara Consuegra is good, and so is Lindsey Meder, but after that the Iowa roster drops off considerably from the rest of the Big Ten.

Iowa finished the season at 9-18 and bowed out in the first round of the Big Ten Tournament this season. The mark was the Hawkeyes' worst since 1982-83.

I don't foresee it getting that much better, either.

Some have criticized Angie Lee for not getting the top in-state recruits, but I don't really care where she got her recruits from as long as they are good.

There is not enough untapped potential on this Iowa team that makes me believe that a major turnaround is around the bend. There are no diamonds in the rough and there are no incoming recruits that are going to make Iowa into a NCAA Tournament-caliber team.

— Mike Kelly

Because of her performance at Big Tens, Loehndorf was named Athlete of the Month by the Iowa Women's Intercollegiate Sports Council.

Storm washes out State Farm Classic

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — The splash of a singles final between No. 1 Martina Hingis and No. 2 Lindsay Davenport vanished in a thousand puddles when the State Farm Women's Tennis Classic was canceled because of rain.

The decision was made Monday after the eagerly awaited match of this year's

The rainout is the first for a WTA Tour event since the 1998 DFS Classic in Birmingham, England, a grass-court warmup for Wimbledon that was canceled after the quarterfinals.

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Veteran tackle John "Jumbo" Elliott retired Monday and will undergo back surgery later this month.

Elliott asked the New York Jets to place him on the reserve-retired list and the team said it would do so. But Elliott could return to the Jets following the surgery, should he feel healthy enough to continue his career.

Bothered by back pain last season, Elliott, 34, still started 15 games and played in all 16.

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Two associates of indicted agent Tank Black pleaded innocent to fraud and money laundering charges Monday, setting the stage for a trial in May that could bring several NFL players to the witness stand.

James Franklin and Alfred Twitty walked into court in leg shackles. They were released on bail following a brief arraignment in the federal case.

They were the last two of the five defendants to make initial court appearances for the trial scheduled for May 1. All five face prison sentences of up to 25 years if convicted.

Growth spurt marks Davey's first season

■ In his first year as coach of the men's swimming team, John Davey had three Big Ten Champions.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

Heading into his first official season at the helm of the Iowa men's swimming program, coach John Davey had a few small goals in mind for members of his squad. Individually, he wanted them to improve their times, and as a team he wanted them to move up a spot at the Big Ten Championships. They managed to do both.

Iowa finished the season at 2-6 in dual meet competition and still has the NCAA championships and NCAA diving qualifiers to go before beginning work on next season.

"We've grown up a lot as a team this year," said Davey, following the team's final performance of the year at the Iowa Senior Championships.

With the team's many accomplishments this season, the Big Ten may be in for a full-grown pain next year.

For the first time since 1994, Iowa had three champions crowned at the Big Ten Championships and came home with the Swimmer of the Championships as well.

Glenn's 200 freestyle time of 1:36.84 brought home one championship, while Abersek caught fire in both the 100 and 200-yard butterfly, winning with times of 47.68 and 1:44.93. His time in the 200 was fast enough to earn him a spot at the NCAA Championships later this month.

Glenn may also receive an invite for his performance as well, Davey will hear later this week if Glenn made the field.

Abersek's performance also earned him the Swimmer of the Championship award, topping off the team's eighth-place finish in the Big Ten.

While Glenn and Abersek stood out during the Big Ten's, this season was a complete team effort, according to Davey.

"As a whole we stepped up this season," he said, "our schedule really paid off."

The Hawkeyes swam a much tougher schedule than in years past, and though their win-loss record suffered, Davey attributed the individual and team success to the higher quality of competition.

The Hawkeyes managed to win only one Big Ten meet during the season, defeating Northwestern in their final conference meet of the season 133.5-107.5.

Iowa's only other victory came in front of an enthusiastic home crowd at the UI Field House pool against Kansas 137-106 in December.

The Hawkeyes will return Glenn and Abersek along with junior All-American diver Simon Chrisander, and eight other swimmers, to form the core of an already solid team.

Jason Willer, Avi Mednick, Jason Kolfenbach, Aaron Kahn,

Thad Hackney, Mark Fastabend and Bogdan Deac graduate leaving Davey with several holes to fill to stay competitive.

"Recruiting is the name of the game right now," said Davey. He said he expects to pick up four or five recruits by April 5, which is the national signing date. Currently, only Jason Snyder of Des Moines, an Iowa High School State Champion, has committed to the program.

Iowa will also welcome back a familiar face in Marko Milenkovic. The junior redshirted this season in order to compete for a spot on the Slovenian Olympic team.

Davey said he feels good about his team's chances to continue to improve and feels they could surprise in the Big Ten next season.

Sticking with what seems to work, Davey said he has a few goals in mind for next season, including having more guys come back to swim finals at the Big Ten's and to move up another spot in the conference.

Ray Bourque headed to Colorado

■ After 21 seasons in Boston, the veteran defenseman wanted to be traded to a contender.

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Ray Bourque, the longtime leader of the Boston Bruins who won five Norris Trophies but never a Stanley Cup, got his wish for one more chance at a championship when he was traded to the Colorado Avalanche on Monday night.

"We limited ourselves to teams where Raymond Bourque would have a chance to win the Stanley Cup," Bruins general manager Harry Sinden said after a 5-1 loss to Ottawa.

"It may not be his first choice; it may be. I'm not sure. We felt we had to do the best for the team as well."

The 39-year-old defenseman was traded along with forward Dave Andreychuk for forward Brian Rolston, defenseman Martin Grenier, center Sami Pahlsson and Boston's choice of a first-round pick in either 2000 or 2001.

Bourque took the game puck from the referee after Saturday's loss to Philadelphia, then said goodbye to his teammates and skipped Sunday's practice. He was not at the FleetCenter on Monday night as the Bruins closed in on the deal.

Andreychuk left the building after he was scratched from the lineup, signaling that he was also part of the deal. Both he and Bourque are expected to play for Colorado at Calgary on Tuesday night.

"We are thrilled and greatly excited to announce these acquisitions to our fans," Avalanche general manager Pierre Lacroix said. "Ray Bourque and Dave Andreychuk bring us an outstanding background and extended depth to our present lineup."

Colorado is 30-27-10 and in seventh place in the Western Conference. With the loss, Boston is 19-29-17 and essentially out of the playoff race.

Fans were subdued during the game, yelling "We want Raymond" after the Senators took a 1-0 first-period lead and mixing the chant with other jeers after Ottawa scored three goals in 100 seconds to go up 4-0 in the third.

But the crowd showed no anger towards Bourque, wishing him well with hand-lettered signs that said, "It won't be the same without No. 77," and "It's a sad day without Ray."

"It's hard not to miss him when you hear the fans cheering for him," Bruins defenseman Hal Gill said.

Bourque has played for the Bruins for his entire 21-year career, and is the team's career leader in scoring and games played. Although he had said he would rather finish his career in Boston than win the Stanley Cup elsewhere, he changed his mind as it became clear the Bruins would not make the playoffs this season.

"You have to see it as a nice thing for him to do," Bruins forward Jason Allison said. "Hopefully, he'll get a chance to do something that everybody who plays the game wants to do. He's certainly earned it more than anybody."

Bourque's 395 career regular-season goals places him first among defensemen in NHL history. He is second to Paul Coffey in career assists for a defenseman with 1,111.

Overall, he is ninth in scoring with 1,506 points and fifth in games played, with 1,518.

Creighton beats Alford's old squad for MVC title

■ The Bluejays advance to the NCAA Tournament for the second year in a row.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Ryan Sears scored 15 points Monday as Creighton beat Southwest Missouri State 57-45 in the Missouri Valley Conference tournament championship game to earn the league's automatic bid to the NCAA tournament for the second straight year.

Sears was chosen most valuable player for the tournament as the Blue Jays (23-9) set a Missouri Valley season record for most 3-pointers at 277, breaking the record of 268 set by Southern Illinois in 1995-96.

The Bluejays made nine 3-pointers in the game after hitting seven on Sunday to upset top-seeded Indiana State.

Southwest Missouri fell to 22-10, but probably remains in contention for an at-large bid to the NCAA.

Sears, playing with a dislocated finger on his left hand, made three 3-pointers in the first half to help Creighton to a 35-20 lead at halftime.

Matt West added 11 points and three 3-pointers.

Creighton, which has now won five games in a row, also turned in a strong defensive effort. The Bluejays held Southwest Missouri scoreless during a stretch of 7:18 in the opening half.

Creighton returns to the NCAA tournament a year after upsetting Louisville in the opening round before falling to Maryland in the second round.

With Sears leading the way, Creighton put together runs of 11-0 and 13-0 in the opening half on the way to a 35-20 lead. Sears and Kyle Korver combined for three 3-pointers in a span of 1:47 midway through the half to erase an early 11-4 deficit. Korver, Sears and West keyed a 13-0 spurt later in the half.

Johnson scored three points in the first two minutes of the second half to push the lead to 38-20. Southwest Missouri battled back to climb to within seven at 43-36 with 17:04 left before Sears silenced the comeback with another 3-point shot. West's 3-pointer with 5:48 remaining put Creighton back in control 52-38.

The loss snapped a 10-game winning streak by the Bears.

Kevin Ault, Matt Rueter and Scott Brakebill led Southwest Missouri with eight points each.

Central Connecticut St. 63, Robert Morris 46

TRENTON, N.J. — Central Connecticut State earned its first NCAA tournament birth since joining Division I in 1986, beating Robert Morris 63-46 for the championship of the Northeast Conference tournament on Monday night.

NEC player of the year Rick Mickens had 17 points and center Corsley Edwards had five of his 11 in a late 11-2 run that sent the top-seeded Blue Devils (25-5) to the show just a year after they lost the title game to Mount St. Mary's.

Pedro Martinez rocked in first outing

■ The dominating Boston pitcher gave up three runs in two innings in his spring training debut.

By The Associated Press

In his first outing of the spring, Pedro Martinez looked nothing like the unhittable pitcher of last September and October. Then again, it was spring training.

"Everything went fine. Those are not the results I would like," he said Monday after allowing three runs and three hits in two innings as the Boston Red Sox lost to the Texas Rangers 13-6 on Monday.

Using mostly fastballs, Martinez gave up a double, triple and homer while throwing 32 pitches.

In the first inning, Martinez faced Ivan "Pudge" Rodriguez with one out and a runner on third. The Rangers catcher edged Martinez for AL Most Valuable Player last season when two writers left Martinez off their ballots because they didn't think pitchers should get the award. Martinez won this much less important matchup, getting Rodriguez on a called strike on the outside corner.

"I like challenges," Martinez said. "Pudge is one of the players I like to face and he's going to be one of the players that I want to face most of the time in spring training so I know how to get him out."

The other matchup should have been more one-sided — the AL Cy Young Award winner who was 23-4 with a major league-best 2.07 ERA and AL high 313 strikeouts vs. Luis Alica, who has 36 homers in 10 seasons.

Alicea sent the fifth pitch, a fastball that didn't go as far inside as Martinez would have liked, over the 20-foot wall in right field for a second-inning home run.

"I could have gotten Alicea out, maybe, with some other pitches but that's not exactly what I want," Martinez said. "I don't want to get hurt trying to get Alicea out in spring training."

At Winter Haven, Fla., Richie Sexson drove in four runs with a home run and a double as Cleveland routed the Yankees 15-1, dropping New York to 0-5 this spring.

The World Series champions have been outscored 49-16 and have not held a lead in any game this year.

Sexson's second spring-training homer came in the fourth off reliever Mike Buddie. He added a two-run double during an eight-run fifth.

Jaret Wright pitched two hitless innings in his spring debut. Wright, trying to hang on to the fifth spot in the Indians starting rotation, needed just 18 pitches to retire his six batters.

"Even though it's spring training, you like facing good teams, and it's still the Yankees," Wright said. "It's always good to skate by that first one and get it out of the way."

Carlos Perez, who struggled last year, was pounded for six runs and five hits in two innings as the Los Angeles Dodgers were routed by the Baltimore Orioles 17-3 in Vero Beach, Fla.

After signing a $15.6 million, three-year contract, Perez went 2-10 with a 7.43 ERA last season.

"This is the first game," Perez said. "I'm still working. It's no big deal."

All five games in Arizona were wiped out by rain.

The rain also canceled the State Farm Classic tennis final.

Some Texas Rangers go to bat for George W. Bush

■ The Rangers' players say their former owner would make a decent president.

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. — Kenny Rogers was holding court in the clubhouse when Texas teammate Rafael Palmeiro wandered over and asked the topic.

"Politics," Rogers said. "Let me in," Palmeiro replied, pulling up a chair.

Usually, the most popular subject at spring training is the NCAA basketball tournament pool. But this year a lot of Rangers have good reason to take a keen interest in the campaign trail.

The team's former owner, George W. Bush, is running for president. The Texas governor is hoping a strong showing in the Super Tuesday primaries will boost his bid for the Republican nomination.

About a half-dozen players remain from the days when he used to regularly roam the same

Gulf Coast locker room. They all said they'd vote for a Bush leaguer.

"I just think it would be cool to know the dude in the White House," pitcher Darren Oliver said.

Pitcher Rick Helling recalled Bush's easy manner.

"I was a rookie when he was here, and probably a majority of owners wouldn't know who I was," Helling said this weekend. "But he was real personable and sociable. He still comes around once in a while, and it's always like, 'Hey, Rick, how are you doing?'"

Said eight-time All-Star catcher Ivan Rodriguez: "He's a great guy. He'd make a good president."

Bush was part of the group that bought the Rangers in 1989. He was active in the team's affairs, often watching from a front-row seat at Arlington Stadium until he ran for governor.

When Bush was elected in 1994, his interest in the club was placed into a blind trust and Tom Schieffer succeeded him as a general partner. The team was sold to Tom Hicks in June 1998, and Bush made about $15 million in the deal.

Juan Gonzalez won two AL home run titles in Texas when Bush's main interest was baseball. Traded to Detroit in the off-season, the slugging outfielder was talking to a friend over breakfast Sunday about Bush.

"He looks you in the eyes when he's saying something," Gonzalez said at the Tigers' camp in Lakeland, Fla. "That's important to me. I know I can trust him."

When Bush owned the Rangers, Gonzalez contributed $100 per RBI to a Texas literacy program the future governor founded. The two still visit a few times every year.

"He is a warrior. In my opinion, he's the best presidential candidate, for the Republicans," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez and Rodriguez both said they prefer Bush over Republican rival John McCain and Democratic contenders Al Gore and Bill Bradley. As residents of Puerto Rico, however, they cannot vote in the presidential election.

Rogers, meanwhile, is talking up Bush to anyone who will listen. "A couple of days ago, I asked

I just think it would be cool to know the dude in the White House.

— Darren Oliver, Rangers' catcher

Raffy who he was going to vote for," the pitcher said. "I said, 'You're going to vote for the man, aren't you?'"

"I really hope he gets elected. You just get a good feeling when you meet him," he said. "You see the other guys you have to vote for and there's not even a choice."

Palmeiro, who joined Rogers on the Rangers in 1989, also prefers the son of former President George Bush. The prospect of lower taxes, especially in his bracket, pleases the All-Star first baseman.

"I see the things he's done in Texas and think he can incorporate some of those things for our country," Palmeiro said. "Plus, he's got good bloodlines. I've watched a little of the debates, and I like him."

Court says Casey Martin can keep riding in his cart

■ An appeals court refused to overturn the decision that allowed Martin to ride a cart on the PGA Tour.

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal appeals court refused today to overturn the Casey Martin golf cart decision, ruling that federal law allows the disabled golfer to ride between shots in PGA tournaments.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a federal magistrate's 1998 ruling that allowed Martin, who has a circulatory disorder that makes it painful for him to walk long distances, to become the first golfer to use a cart on in PGA events. He made his tour debut in the Bob Hope Classic in January.

The court rejected the PGA's argument that allowing Martin to use a cart would alter the fundamental nature of a golf tournament. The Americans with Disabilities Act requires accommodations for the disabled but does not require measures that would change the fundamental nature of goods or services.

"The central competition in shot-making would be unaffected by Martin's accommodation," said Judge William Canby in the 3-0 ruling.

"All that the cart does is permit

Martin access to a type of competition in which he otherwise could not engage because of his disability. That is precisely the purpose of the ADA."

U.S. Magistrate Thomas Coffin, whose order allowed Martin to use the cart, found that the purpose of the PGA's requirement that players walk between shots was to inject a fatigue factor into the game. But Coffin also found that the fatigue factor was not significant in golf, compared to other factors like stress and motivation.

Canby said Coffin's findings were supported by ample evidence. He also noted that Martin must still walk about 25 percent of the course, which is not accessible by cart, and cited Coffin's conclusion that Martin suffers more fatigue with a cart than his competitors endure by walking.

Roy L. Reardon, a lawyer for Martin, called the ruling "a great result for the millions of other disabled in the United States who are simply looking, through the Americans with Disabilities Act, for an opportunity to just participate."

A telephone call to the PGA was not immediately returned.

Indiana women's basketball coach fired

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana University fired head women's basketball coach Jim Izzard on Monday.

Athletic Director Clarence Doninger said he appreciated everything Izzard has contributed to the program, but it was time "to make a change and go in a different direction."

Izzard is the program's most successful coach. He compiled a 188-159 overall record during his 12 seasons as head coach. The Hoosiers went 10-18 this year and were bounced from the first round of last weekend's Big Ten tournament.

Izzard spent four seasons as head coach at DePaul University before taking the Indiana job.

Izzard becomes the second Big Ten women's coach to step down. Iowa's Angie Lee resigned amidst scrutiny last weekend. Lee said she had been planning on resigning since Christmas.

on their way to a Sweet 16 berth. He said his team's win over Penn State Saturday may not have meant much seeding-wise, but it went a long way towards showing the coach that his team was not dismissing this season yet. "It is a lot better going into this tournament with a win instead of

Oliver named third-team All-Big Ten by league's coaches

Iowa guard Dean Oliver was named the 1999-00 All-Big Ten Basketball Team as selected by the Big Ten coaches. This is the second year in a row Oliver has been named to the third-team. Oliver said being selected to the team is nice, but if he wants to move up to the first and second-teams, he has to do what guys like Mateson Cleaves and Scoonie Penno do — win. "I'm happy to get the honor," Oliver said. "I had a lot on my shoulders this season and think I performed adequately. Penn and Cleaves get all the attention because they're teams are always winning. That is something I will try to do."

Divide between NCAA and coaches runs deep

his AAU coach paid for a summer school course, sat out Saturday as Temple beat George Washington easily. Even so, the result hardly cooled Chaney's ire.

"Why don't they go back and see if the kid changed his diapers in the crib? I don't understand it," he concluded. "I've never heard of this rule."

The NCAA replied it's simply doing the dirty job it was given.

"This isn't a witch hunt," spokesman Wally Renfro reiterated Sunday. "Three of these cases came our way because of federal grand jury investigation, two were self-reported by the schools, one came because of an investigation by the conference and only one began with an investigation by our staff."

"The schools in this association have promised each other they won't play kids who are ineligible. Whatever you think about the rule, we have no choice but to enforce it."

The NCAA would have you believe it was going to skip the name-calling until St. John's crafted misleading alibis for twice-suspended star Erick Barkley. And that was after coach Mike Jarvis' went over the top with his claims of persecution.

Jarvis just seemed lightheaded when he compared the NCAA to totalitarian countries and the Gestapo during a news conference last month. Turns out he was only warming up.

"I hope that none of you feel the way I have the last two days," Jarvis said, "as if someone had come into my house and raped me."

He apologized publicly the next day, but his words illustrated how deep the divide runs. Nobody connected to college basketball disputes that summer league coaches, team sponsors, sneaker companies, camps and so-called street agents wield too much influence. What the coaches and NCAA disagree vehemently over is how much needs to be done.

The coaches contend it's the NCAA that's out of control — and the organization makes an inviting target. It just pocketed $6 billion for the TV rights to the tournament. Cracking down on poor kids any time looks bad, but never worse than after signing a lucrative deal and especially for taking things before the kids enrolled in college. Even the organization's timing is open to questions.

The NCAA's Amateurism and Agents Subcommittee is proposing to change the amateur rule so an athlete could turn pro before college, then change his mind and still have eligibility remaining. Under the proposed legislation, similar to NCAA rules already covering tennis, each year of playing pro would require the athlete to sit out one season. Assuming it passes muster with the conferences and the organization's board of directors, the proposal could cover basketball players by this time next year.

To coaches, that's a nightmare. Recruiting is dicey enough now, guessing which frontline players will abandon school on just the whisper of a quick NBA buck. Letting kids try out the pros —

Lorenzen uses textbook method with team

SPORTS PSYCH

Wardlaw developed this system in 1991. His approach focuses on the individual, not only as a tennis player, but as a person.

"The players are going to change, develop, and grow with time," Wardlaw said. "Through this growth they need to get a sense of who they are and what they are capable of. What we are trying to do is get them to tap into their own potential."

Unlike Wardlaw's personal program development, Iowa women's gymnastics first-year coach Mike Lorenzen looks to the experts for advice on psychological training in sports.

Lorenzen said that he believes it is important for his athletes to understand that training the mental side of the sport is at least as important as the physical side. Lorenzen trains his athletes in a half hour group session once a week, where he presents sports psychology material straight from the book to his team.

"We are not doing anything revolutionary," Lorenzen said. "We get our material from a book which describes a theory to help athletes reach their ideal performance state. If we put time into developing that state, it will have a direct impact on their performance."

Gable said that he doesn't believe in following a specific theory because each individual is different and unique in the world, so it wouldn't make sense to deal with every athlete in the same way.

"I'm not set to any particular method or book," Gable said. "In my own method, I can work with anyone by reading the situation and adapting to meet the necessary conditions around me."

Iowa women's basketball coach Angie Lee said she also tends to take her own route in motivating her players. While she doesn't criticize psychological approaches, Lee said she would rather use quotes or anthologies to create a close relationship between the player and the game.

"I am more of a motivational person than focusing on the mental side of things," Lee said. "I try to find things that relate to life and then talk to the girls about how closely basketball relates to the game of life in some ways."

Many Iowa athletes have used the different sports psychology programs to improve their skills. Senior gymnast Courtney Burke said that the program that Lorenzen is using has raised her confidence level and made her believe in herself.

"I feel more in control of my gymnastics than I ever did," Burke said. "It feels good just to be able to be myself and go out and do what I know I can do."

Schwab on NCAA preparation: If you can't stay focused now, you never will be able to

"We're gonna bust our butts this week and try to peak."

Schwab agreed that the Hawkeyes can't start to slack now. "Everybody is in shape now," he said. "It's just now we have to start doing the little things. We have to put the edge on, stay mentally focused."

Does Schwab think his team will have a hard time keeping focused?

"No. It's what we work for — this is it. If you can't stay focused now, you never will be able to."

Tickets are still available for the final two sessions of the tournament, costing $44 per person. To purchase, log on to ticketmaster.com or go to your local ticketmaster outlet.
