Vilsack's gay order to draw GOP lawsuit

■ The majority leader of the Iowa Senate claims that the governor overstepped his bounds.

By Kelly Oulman
The Daily Iowan

Iowa Republicans held their state convention this past weekend, and, among other business, there was talk of suing Gov. Tom Vilsack in response to his executive order that aimed to stop discrimination based on sexual identification. Senate Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, R-Dows, plans to file a lawsuit against Vilsack within the next few weeks. Iverson and the Republicans are upset about the governor's executive order directing state agencies not to discriminate on the basis of sexual identification or gender identity.

Vilsack refused an offer made by legislators to draft a bill containing the exact language of the executive order, Iverson said. The Iowa Constitution states that only the Legislature has the power to make laws, he said.

State Republicans said Vilsack circumvented the legislative process and overstepped his bounds by issuing the order said Rep. Rosemary Thomson, R-Marion.

The lawsuit was a topic of conversation during the convention in Des Moines. The Republicans also heard from strategists and elected officials and took care of such business as electing delegates to the national convention and creating a party platform.

Republicans elected 25 delegates to go to the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia on July 31. Three delegates were elected from each of the state's five districts, and 10 were elected at-large.

Delegates from the First Congressional District, which includes Iowa City, are Thomson, Keith Chiavetta of West Branch and Kathy Kist of Cedar Rapids.

The state party platform was largely conservative, including such issues such as declaring abortion unconstitutional, scrapping the tax code, restoring parental control to education and eliminating the Environmental Protection Agency.

"The party platform for states is probably not as important as the national platform," Thomson said. "You don't always agree, but you concentrate on what you do agree about."

Keeping the Iowa caucuses first in the nation is at the top of Thomson's agenda for the national convention. Education, national defense and Social Security are other issues that Republicans will concentrate on at the national level.

Iowa Republicans will support Bush at the national convention because they are strongly in agreement with what he is doing, Thomson said.

"People are tired of not being able to believe the president," Kist said. "It's time for loyalty, and it's time for honesty."

The Iowa Democratic Party will hold its state convention in Des Moines next weekend. Important issues in the party's platform include health care, education, the environment and civil-rights issues.

Delegates will be elected to attend the Aug. 14 Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles. Iowa Democrats will support Vice President Al Gore because of his commitment to working people, equal rights and education, as well as other issues, said Rod Sullivan, the head of the Johnson County Democratic Party.

While no formal announcement was made Thursday, players leaving the team's minicamp took word of Young's decision to retire in stride, including former Canadian Football League star Jeff Garcia, who will move into the job held by Young and Joe Montana for the last 19 years. "I've been preparing myself for that situation all offseason, so I'm ready for it," said Garcia, adding he won't be fazed by following in the footsteps of Young's Hall of Fame-caliber career.

Miller rediscovers his hate

■ Indiana's Reggie Miller is angry with himself after shooting 1-for-16 in Game 1 of the NBA Finals.

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Reggie Miller feeds off his hatred, playing his best when he loathes the most.

Well, in what could be good news for the Indiana Pacers and bad news for the Los Angeles Lakers, Miller rediscovers his malice Thursday.

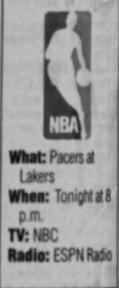

All it took was one look in the mirror.

"You need that extra motivation, you need to create that little something that gets you ticked off, and I think I've created it myself by going 1-for-16 in Game 1 of my first-ever NBA Finals," Miller said. "So, I'm more upset with myself now, and I've got to contend with myself, which is kind of scary."

Aside from Shaquille O'Neal's 43 points and 19 rebounds, Miller's rightful shooting performance in Game 1 was the most eye-popping statistic from an opening game that was controlled by the Lakers throughout.

After reviewing the game, Miller pointed out that 11 of his 16 shots were wide-open ones that he simply missed. His only basket came on a layup midway through the third quarter, and his seven points — five coming from the foul line — were a career playoff-low.

Arts rule during festival

■ The Iowa Arts Festival fills downtown with music, art and smiling faces.

A young woman sat slicing strawberries and mangos. Sounds of strings and folk lyrics filled the balmy streets with an air of gaiety. Children, artists, admirers and other smiling people danced throughout downtown Iowa City during the 12th annual Iowa Arts Festival held over the weekend.

"It's motley; it's eclectic; it's what it should be," said Michael Conroy, an Iowa City resident.

The sky clouded over Sunday as a clown on stilts sauntered under tent after tent of artwork. People laughed and ate as they meandered from place to place. Activity continued even as the festival neared its close.

Corrine Smith, a painter of nature and geometry, summed up her third Iowa Arts Festival experience by saying, "The city is great; the people are lovely."

Smith watched the crowd move by her shaded tent on Dubuque Street, ripe with paintings inspired by marriages of opposites, such as form and space or style and function.

Like Smith, there were several artists

Assad's son jockeys to succeed dead father

■ Bashar Assad is nominated as the sole candidate for president and is appointed head of armed forces.

By Donna Bryson
Associated Press Writer

DAMASCUS, Syria — Bashar Assad, son of the late Syrian leader, was unanimously nominated as the only presidential candidate Sunday, another indication he will succeed his father as president in a country where most people have known no other ruler.

The ruling Baath Party also appointed Bashar commander of the armed forces. President Hafez Assad, who died on June 10, was the previous commander.

In anointing Bashar Assad, the hierarchy is opting for a smooth, stable transition — instead of the uncertainty and violence that characterized power changes in Syria before Hafez Assad took over in a bloodless coup in 1970. Hafez Assad's strong-willed, strong-arm stewardship ended a series of coups that followed independence from France in 1946.

It remains to be seen whether Bashar Assad, who has held no major political office, will be tough and canny enough to hold onto the power he is inheriting. But the British-educated eye doctor was a favorite with ordinary Syrians, many of whom seemed incapable of imagining their country without an Assad at the death-penalty cases that were appealed from 1973 through 1995 were successful, report researchers who contend the nation's capital-punishment system is "collapsing under the weight of its own mistakes."

A study of 4,578 appeals during those years showed that most cases "are so seriously flawed that they have to be done over again," said Columbia University law Professor James Liebman, the lead author.

"It's not one case, it's thousands of cases. It's not one state, it's almost all of the states," he said in an interview. "You're creating a very high risk that some errors are going to get through the process."

The study comes at a time of increased debate over capital punishment.

Earlier this year, Republican Gov. George Ryan of Illinois imposed a Fund-raising weekend enlivens Englert's cause

■ Members of the coalition to save the theater say the Iowa Arts Festival was good for the cause.

The Englert Theatre once again saw people streaming through the entrance over the weekend — but not to view a movie or play.

Instead, as part of the theater's fund-raising efforts, visitors were welcomed to tour the Englert, said David Pierce, the secretary of the Englert board of directors.

The Englert Theatre Coalition accepted donations during the Iowa Arts Festival in order to raise money for renovation costs and the purchase of the building from the city of Iowa City by Nov. 8, he said.

The weekend events were considered a success, Pierce said, who estimated that close to 400 people opted to take tours.

"I think we are in very good shape, considering we have been fund-raising for only two to three weeks," he said.

One of the people showing support for the fund-raising efforts was UI junior Liz King, who took a tour Sunday.

"I think Iowa City is a place where we can appreciate a building like this," she said. "I am in favor of fewer bars and more activities like this."

Although dollar figures were not available, Matt Falduto, a member of the Englert programming committee, said it received many donations as well as a few large checks.

Along with optional donations, a stand outside the theater provided a chance for passers-by to buy "Save the Englert" T-shirts and bumper stickers.

"We are encouraging people who are traveling to take a photo with their bumper stickers," Pierce said. The Englert coalition will continue to accept both volunteers and donations, Falduto said.

"There are a lot of groups here interested and getting involved," he said. "They are excited about this

The Boss' song irks cops

NEW YORK (AP) — There will be plenty of police on hand tonight for the opening of Bruce Springsteen's 10-concert stand at Madison Square Garden.

But the officers not on duty are being urged by their union, the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, to boycott the concert and not attend on their own.

A Springsteen song inspired by last year's police slaying of an unarmed West African immigrant in the Bronx has prompted a call for a boycott of his concerts by the police union.

Amadou Diallo, 22, was hit by 19 bullets and killed in the vestibule of his apartment building. The four officers involved in the shooting were acquitted of murder in February.

Springsteen's unrecorded and unreleased song, first performed in Atlanta a week ago, opens with the words "41 shots, 41 shots" — the number of bullets fired at Diallo.

It includes the line, "You can get killed just for living in your American skin."

"I happen to like Springsteen," Officer Orlando Vega told the Daily News. "But we're trying to work in this community, and him opening old wounds just makes our jobs more difficult."

A Springsteen spokesman had no comment last week on the new song or its inspiration.

Jackson and director John Singleton said the studio wanted to soften the lead character.

Jackson plays his nephew in the lead role, also a hip New York detective named John Shaft.

Grammer lessons

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Kelsey Grammer, who will play the title role in Macbeth this summer on Broadway, says he is returning to the stage partly because of a heightened sense of mortality.

The 45-year-old star of the sitcom "Frasier" says the untimely deaths of his father and sister made him more aware of how short life is.

"I will always be foolhardy because, to me, the best fruit of life is the idea that you don't always play it safe. If you don't reach beyond where you're comfortable, you will not grow," he says in the June 17 issue of TV Guide.

Christie Vilsack to help launch KSUI's reading service for blind

Iowa's first lady, Christie Vilsack, will join WSUI/KSUI radio Tuesday to launch a regional news program offered by the Iowa Reading Information Service for the blind and print-handicapped.

Vilsack will go "on-air" at 9:15 a.m. at the KSUI studio. The volunteer reading service is scheduled to begin operation in Iowa City today.

The IRIS broadcasts provide timely and topical information to Iowans who are blind, visually impaired and/or physically challenged. IRIS broadcasts into individual homes, retirement communities and nursing-care facilities throughout Iowa.

In Eastern Iowa, the service is broadcast on a subcarrier of KSUI, the 100,000-watt public radio FM station. Special subcarrier receivers are being distributed to the blind and print handicapped in the area at no charge.

A state and national reading service is also broadcast 24 hours a day, seven days a week, on the subcarrier. But the new regional service starting today will bring local news and features to the blind of Eastern Iowa for the first time.

Sally Vander Linden, the executive director of IRIS, said, "We're thrilled that Christie Vilsack has agreed to come to Iowa City to help kick-off the program. The first lady's participation will bring attention to the work being done on behalf of the blind in this area."

Since Tom Vilsack became Iowa's governor in 1999, Christie Vilsack has been an advocate for literacy and reading disability issues, as well as education and library programs.

Gov't dismisses white-male complaint

■ The complaint stems from Ann Rhodes' white male "joke" during a press conference about Tarsha Claiborne.

By Disa Lubker
The Daily Iowan

In reaction to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights decision not to follow up on a complaint filed against the UI by the European American Issues Forum, the group says it intends to file a request for reconsideration.

The group had complained that the UI discriminated against European-Americans on the basis of race and gender after a comment about white males made in April by Ann Rhodes, the vice president for university relations. The group has seen other cases of this nature followed through up with an investigation, said Louis Calabro, the president of the forum.

"There were other cases that were less egregious than this, and they commenced an investigation," he said.

Calabro said he intends to request a reconsideration from the civil-rights office in the coming days.

In a letter to the forum, Jody Van Wey, the associate director of the civil-rights office, said the group did not provide facts to support its contention that white men faced a hostile environment at the UI.

The forum contends that because the minority population of the state of Iowa is 3 percent and many of the professional schools at the UI have minority enrollment rates that are equal to or higher than that figure, a hostile environment for white men is created on campus, Calabro said.

The UI is committing sins of omission by not encouraging more European American student and faculty groups, he said.

"The fact that the university does not have a student or faculty organization on campus to protect, promote, and celebrate the best interests of European American men are facts that may contribute to a campus atmosphere of a 'hostile environment' against white men," Calabro said.

"OCR will take no action with regard to your questions about the university's affirmative-action program, diversity recruiting program, women's and ethnic studies programs, and actions to dispel stereotypes," Van Wey said in her letter.

Rhodes' statement was made at an April 20 press conference to announce the arrest of Tarsha Claiborne, a UI dental student who has been accused of threatening classmates and faculty in the College of Dentistry via e-mail.

Asked if she was surprised that the suspect was black, Rhodes replied, "I figured it was going to be a white guy between 25 and 55 because they're the root of most evil ... but what do I know?"

A few hours after making the comment, she apologized and said it was "a poor attempt at humor."

Complaints stemming from Rhodes' comment were also filed by a Coralville man and a Cedar Rapids man with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission, but were not pursued.

The comment made by Rhodes was inappropriate but taken out of context, said UI Student Government President Andy Stoll. The UI community should spend less time pointing fingers and more time looking at larger issues on campus, he said.

"I would like to see the issue laid to rest and more attention paid to larger issues related to diversity and the question of whether our campus provides a comfortable atmosphere for all of our students," Stoll said.

CITY BRIEFS

Iowa City's season of road construction continues

Iowa Avenue's eastbound lane between Gilbert and Van Buren streets will be closed for the next several weeks so the city can repair and replace storm sewers, said Kim Shera, the city public works civil engineer.

A short detour will be available, she said. Drivers will be able to use Jefferson Street and come back down Van Buren Street. Many Iowa Citizens should find no problems utilizing alternate routes and avoiding the construction all together, Shera said.

Iowa Avenue's westbound lane will be closed for approximately one week following the completion of construction on the eastbound lane to alleviate flooding in the Iowa State Historical Society building.

And both lanes of Iowa Avenue between Gilbert and Linn streets, which are currently closed, will remain so until the end of this summer.

Additionally, the southbound lane of Madison Street between Washington and Burlington streets will be closed from June 19-23. Construction will improve the chilled water system for the Lindquist Center, said Richard Gibson, the associate vice president for the facility services group.

An Iowa City man charged with seven acts of sexual abuse has entered a plea of not guilty.

Dominic Jason Fillmer, 28, entered a written plea on June 9. His arraignment, previously scheduled for June 15, will not take place.

According to court documents, the provisions in the order for arraignment included the option of entering a written plea prior to the scheduled arraignment.

Fillmer entered the written plea so he wouldn't have to be brought to the courthouse from Johnson County Jail, said Crystal Usher, Fillmer's attorney.

Fillmer is being held in the Johnson County Jail. His bail was raised from $37,000 to $100,000 last week and has yet to be posted, she said.

His family is contacting individuals about a possible bond payment or reduction or possibly assisting in defense, Usher said.

The defendant allegedly sexually abused female friends of his daughter, aged 6 to 9 years old, at his residence, 1044 Westside Drive.

Fillmer allegedly committed the acts between May 1997 and November 1999.

Construction worker dies after Coralville accident

An iron worker who had been in a coma as a result of injuries suffered on a Coralville construction site last week died on June 9 at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Chad Larson of Cedar Rapids sustained head and spinal injuries on June 1, his first day on the job at a Hawk-I Harley Davidson construction site on Commerce Drive. The injuries were a result of Larson falling to a concrete surface 15 feet below a ground-level hole.

The Hawk-I Harley Davidson will be part of a commercial park that is being developed north of Interstate 80 and west of Highway 965.

Larson, 21, had been in a coma at UIHC since the accident.

Mary Bryant, an administrator for the Iowa Occupational Safety and Health administration, said she had not heard that Larson died and was unsure of what action her office would take. However, Bryant had previously said the organization would investigate the accident if Larson were to die.

Larson was employed by Cedar Valley Steel of Marion; he was a member of the Iron Workers Local 89 union in Cedar Rapids.

Another downtown casualty - Arby's to close

■ After Friday, curly fries fans will have to head for Coralville or Highway 1.

By Kirsten Veng-Pedersen
The Daily Iowan

Employees at the Old Capitol Town Center Arby's will serve up their final roast beef sandwich and pull their last batch of curly fries out of the fryer Friday.

The downtown institution will close its doors after nearly two decades of business. The lease at Arby's Roast Beef Restaurant is up this month, and the franchise decided not to renew it because of a decrease in business, said manager Travis Lant.

Business during the lunch shift is good, but the evening shift doesn't fare so well, he said.

"There's no night business here after 5 o'clock," he said. "It's completely dead."

Not everyone seems to be happy about the plans for Arby's.

"I think it's very inconvenient when this kind of place closes," said Yongjin Kwon, a UI graduate student.

The closing of Arby's will give people fewer options for dining and will also affect other shops in the mall, Kwon said.

The July 1998 opening of the Coral Ridge Mall contributed to decreases in sales at the Old Capitol Arby's, Lant said.

Kristi Salasberry, an assistant manager at the Coral Ridge Arby's, agreed that Coral Ridge has taken business away from Iowa City but added that the downtown area was dying before the mall was built.

While the Old Capitol Arby's may have been hit hard by Coral Ridge, another Coralville Arby's location, 801 First Ave., has no plans of closing, said Don Schrader, the store's general manager.

Schrader said business was down moderately after Coral Ridge first opened but returned to its normal levels after several months.

Schrader plans to recruit at least two employees from the Old Capitol location for his store.

"We never waste potential," he said.

Gabe Eggers is one employee who plans to transfer to another Arby's location after the closing Friday.

"They're offering to pay well for experienced employees," he said.

While employees move on, Arby's patrons are less willing to do so.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Was the Microsoft division justified?

YES. Microsoft has abused its market power, and breaking up the company will protect consumer welfare.

Last week, Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson made a decision that American consumers have needed for years. In ordering Microsoft to split its Windows operating system from its software products, Jackson took a giant step towards restoring true competition in the computer industry.

Microsoft supporters argue that the company does not inhibit competition because other operating systems and software programs are currently available to any consumer who chooses them.

Microsoft's business practices make it all but impossible to use these alternative systems, however. Windows is the default operating system on most new computers, and Microsoft has refused to do business with PC makers who don't want the Internet Explorer Web browser and other Microsoft programs such as the Office suite linked to the Windows operating system.

When consumers buy a computer with Windows already installed, part of the purchase price goes for Windows and the programs Microsoft has linked to it. Those who want to use a different operating system or even a different word-processing program must pay extra to do so.

Even if consumers choose to pay more for these alternatives, they're faced with Microsoft again if they try to use more than one computer. Imagine typing a paper at home using Word Perfect on your Linux operating system, then trying to print it out at an ITC with Windows and Microsoft programs. It's hard enough now to negotiate the Mac-PC divide, but it's next to impossible to go from computer to computer when using alternative software and operating systems.

Although Microsoft doesn't have a monopoly on software and operating systems in the strictest sense of the word, the company does restrict competition by making consumers pay extra for alternative products and by making its products incompatible with most others.

Jackson's ruling should eliminate these problems by forcing Microsoft to provide other companies with the technical information they need to make their products compatible with Microsoft's, as well as prohibiting Microsoft from linking software programs to the Windows operating system. When consumers can stop paying extra to override their standard Microsoft programs and can find new software compatible with the Microsoft products they already own, the amount of legitimate competition in the computer industry will surely increase, bringing with it lower prices and better products.

NO. Regulating Microsoft as a natural monopoly would protect consumer welfare better than a breakup.

The fundamental rules of economics would indicate that monopolies are bad for consumers and that breaking them up will increase competition, driving prices down and quality up.

Just ask Microsoft. According to Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, Microsoft has broken a few federal anti-trust laws. Thus, it should be penalized. But splitting it into entirely separate operating system and applications businesses may be the wrong course of action, as it could actually harm consumers more than the status quo has.

In the coming years, we can expect higher prices from both Baby Bills. Costs for each will rise, and each will still be enjoying residual market power — it takes a while to go away — so consumers will pick up the slack when they shell out for their upgrades. And as long as the upgrades are cheaper than starting over with a new program, they'll keep paying.

Along with the hike in prices, the rates at which Microsoft cranks out these innovations will slow as research and development teams — indeed, entire business structures — are rebuilt.

But all of this is eventually supposed to settle into a competitive market, resulting in higher quality and lower prices, right? Don't count on it — this forecast is based on assumptions that may not hold.

The most dangerous assumption is that consumers will choose the best software in terms of quality and price. Empirically, this is false. Alternatives to Microsoft's products are readily available; many are extolled by computer gurus to be of higher quality, and some (but not all) are cheaper than their Microsoft counterpart. Yet most consumers continue to choose the path of least resistance by sticking with familiar, widely compatible and consistently available Microsoft.

Instead of breaking up the company, the government could better-serve consumers by regulating it as it would other natural monopolies. The marginal cost of creating every extra copy of a Microsoft product is infinitely small — really, just the cost of stamping out another CD. For that reason, it is very easy for a dominant company to flood the market with a new product at bargain prices and drown out the competition — just as it did when it gave away its Web browser and beat Netscape.

Microsoft's business practices should be more closely monitored by the government because its grip on the software industry — particularly in the operating system market — make it a de facto natural monopoly. Jackson's breakup order is dangerous to those consumers whom antitrust laws were constructed to protect.

The state of film: summer blockbusters

The summer blockbuster season usually provides the types of movies that keep the money-paying, popcorn-eating public dumbstruck and happy.

Many of these movies are made purely for financial gain with the basic expense of big-action special effects and, usually, Will Smith. The basic summer blockbuster message tends to be good characters beat bad characters for whatever reason.

And when do you expect to see these big-action, no-brain or base-comedy minimal-plot films? Perhaps during the summer blockbuster season, gee maybe? Nobody wants to be engaged in deep thought or contemplation after watching a movie in which more money was spent on one car explosion than on the script. But this is exactly where I found myself after watching two of the new mega-money action blowouts of the summer, contemplating how either movie could be so grossly sexist.

I read reviews before I see movies. I go on the Internet and watch trailers. I talk to people, peruse magazines, and listen for the gossip about what is good or bad. However, I rarely pay attention to advice — if I want to see a movie, I will see a movie. No matter the reviews. In fact, the movie that I loved most last year got horrible reviews (at first), but talking about that goes against the first rule of the film and the second rule of the film. Because of all this background work before seeing a movie, I was personally shocked by the two movies in question, for no one, from The New Yorker to Entertainment Weekly (to shame on us) The Daily Iowan, made mention of the blatant misogyny latent in each film.

The first movie I am talking about is Mission: Impossible 2. This movie has the simple plot: Secret agent gets job to recover horrible vaccine from secret agent gone bad, thus saving the world. They do not get much easier than this — even Indiana Jones had some Latin involved. If simplicity was the basis for great plot lines, then M:I-2 would win 8 million Oscars this year, and Tom Hanks would be depressed that he missed out on playing Ethan Hunt.

But the underlying plot of this new John Woo-directed, Tom Cruise-starring in/produced/rock climbed movie deals with the use of the smartest character, a woman, by the seemingly powerful men, as a pawn because she is beautiful. OK. In some parts of the world, we like to call this prostitution. The head honcho (played by Sir Anthony Hopkins) takes this a step further by telling Mr. Cruise that any woman can lie to a man she is sleeping with, simply because she is a woman. I went to M:I-2 expecting a movie that would engage me for two hours, show me cool explosions, and earn a place in the genre of summer blockbuster. But when themes like this are present, then the audience is forced to reconsider, for sexism is sexism, no matter how hidden it maybe under cool fight scenes with pigeons flying around.

The other movie that made me think, despite the complete lack of plot, character development and for that matter, anything redeeming, was Battlefield Earth. (Yes, when I die and I go to movie heaven, I will probably have to do something to redeem this grievous sin.) But I wanted to know what all of the hype was about. C'mon, John Travolta as an 8-foot "Psycho" with dreadlocks, I figured it would be horrible. Sorry to say, I have seen

"I thought it was going to be about George W. finding a running mate that will make him look good."

worse movies. Producer John Travolta expected this to be another film that was supposed to fit the summer blockbuster role of no plot and big effects, with a Scientology message. None of these concepts are present, and the movie is only made worse by the lone female actor's shallow role. The film seems to be saying that as time passes, and humans become an endangered species, women seem to revert to the role of completely dependent on males. For despite the heroic efforts of the female character in defying her father and fighting to save the Earth, her basic desires are shown as nothing more than raising children. I like to think that as we evolve further, even if aliens overrun us, that the thinking of Gloria Steinem, my mother and other proud women will not be neglected. But the summer blockbuster market is saying, in these films, that despite the strength of women, they remain in some demented subservient role. This was a horrible movie. But it only made me wretch when it made these blanket statements about women.

But just as I was coming to grips with this new trend of misogyny in the summer blockbuster genre, learning to calm down and not think about this gross trend, my editor calls me to remind me of my deadline. And what does he say to my answering machine, "I hope you are thinking about your column." If he only knew at the time how much thinking has bothered me so far this summer, then he might have amended his statement.

In Kosovo, hate lives on

■ A year after NATO's arrival, Albanians see it as a savior, Serbs as an oppressor.

By George Jahn
Associated Press

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — For Kosovo's Albanians, they came as saviors. Most Serbs saw them as the enemy. But both sides agree that since NATO-led peacekeepers arrived one year ago, their province has not been the same.

For the Albanians, the entry of NATO-led peacekeepers on June 12, 1999, signaled a new beginning — self-determination after decades of Serb oppression, peace after more than a year of war against a powerful enemy and a chance for democracy and prosperity.

For Serbs, NATO's arrival meant the end of Serbian control. It also meant the end of the good life as a privileged minority with all the state jobs, and most other perks.

A year later, the big guns are silent, Serb-led Yugoslav forces are gone, and the ethnic Albanian Kosovo Liberation Army has been disbanded, officially at least.

But small arms continue dealing out death in near daily killings motivated by ethnic hatreds. Most Albanians are no longer targeted because of their ethnicity. But Serbs now are, in a slew of revenge killings and other crimes meant to make them pay for the earlier crimes Serbs committed against them.

On Sunday, a crowd killed three Kosovars near the divided northern city of Kosovska Mitrovica, but NATO spokesman Maj. Jose Pardo de Santayana said, he could not confirm reports that the mob who attacked them spoke Serb.

Across the province, whole villages are being rebuilt — but only those inhabited by Kosovars. Although Serb communities suffered little damage during the war, Serbs who did not flee earlier are doing so now because of continued threats.

No wonder that Serb and Albanian look back at NATO's arrival differently.

"There are many wrong things that happened during this year," says Besa Kabashi, a 23-year-old Albanian. "But the most important thing is that the Serb forces are out of Kosovo once and forever, and we have the NATO troops to protect us here."

To the north, on the Serb side of Kosovska Mitrovica, Rade Zivic curses the day the first NATO peacekeeper trod on Kosovo's soil.

"I hated them before, and I hate them now," says the 44-year-old laborer. "I will live in fear as long as NATO is here."

Few residents actually saw the first troops arrive on June 12, 1999.

Most Albanians unable to flee the province stayed in hiding, after months of Serb rule.

Considering the battle for Kosovo lost, many Serbs fled ahead of the peacekeepers. Others barricaded themselves in their homes.

"Mostly, the streets were empty," recalls Maj. John Spitzer, of the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Infantry Regiment, who was part of the first wave to arrive from Macedonia. "There was hardly anybody out there. It was pretty desolate."

Spitzer, 38, of Diamond Bar, Calif., remembers the chaos that met the growing number of NATO-led troops as they spread out across the province — the Americans to the East, the British in the center, the Germans to the South, the French to the North and the Italians in the West.

■ A new poll shows that the Internet is attracting key segments of the news audience.

By Will Lester
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Key segments of the nation's news audience, particularly younger and better-educated Americans, and those seeking financial information, are turning increasingly to the Internet, says a new poll on media trends.

The Web's rapid growth as a source for news continues a splintering of that audience among the Internet, cable and broadcast television, and print publications.

"People have so many different ways of communicating with one another and learning about the outside world that the environment in which the news is put out and received is very different from five years ago," said Andrew Kohut, director of the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press, which conducted the survey.

A third of the public now goes online for news at least once a week, compared with a fifth two years ago, according to the Pew poll. Fifteen percent get daily reports from the Internet, almost three times the number two years ago.

The credibility of Internet news sources varies widely, with the highest ratings given to Web sites run by network or cable TV outlets or national newspapers. Well-known Internet names such as America Online, Netscape and Yahoo ranked higher on credibility than lesser-known sites.

For active financial investors, the Internet largely has supplanted traditional media as the leading source for stock quotes and investment advice, the poll suggested. Almost half of active traders, 45 percent, said the Internet was their main source for stock market updates.

Slightly more than half of those polled, 54 percent, said they go online sometimes to access the Internet or use e-mail. That number has more than doubled from 23 percent in July 1996.

Some find the wealth of information overwhelming.

Almost a third, 30 percent, said they feel overloaded — up slightly from 23 percent five years ago — while twice as many, or 62 percent, said they liked having the information available.

The poll of 3,142 people, taken from April 20 through May 13, has an error margin of plus or minus 2.5 percentage points, slightly higher for subgroups.

Newspapers went through a difficult period in the 1970s and 1980s due to increasing options on television and other changes in American lifestyles. Newspaper readership has held relatively steady since then, with almost two-thirds saying they read a paper regularly, according to the poll.

Now, it is the television industry — particularly broadcast — that is feeling pinched by the fast growth of the Web and cable TV as optional sources of information, Kohut said.

WORLD BRIEF

Rwanda routs Ugandan forces in Congo

KISANGANI, Congo (AP) — Rwandan troops drove Ugandan forces from Kisangani Sunday in a fierce seven-hour battle that ended a week of terrifying, indiscriminate shelling and enabled the United Nations to deploy between the two armies and prepare for their withdrawal.

The bullet-riddled bodies of at least 40 Ugandan soldiers lay strewn along the gravel road that leads up to the bridge where Rwandan troops halted the Ugandan push into the city. The stench of death was everywhere in this Congo River port city, and there was no water, electricity, food or medicine. But a handful of unarmed U.N.

observers were in place to monitor the cease-fire and for Kisangani, the worst appeared to be over.

At the bridge, the observers raised the blue U.N. flag and declared that any further fighting would be considered an act of aggression against the international community.

This round of fighting, which began on June 5, was the third in Kisangani between the two armies, who both support rebels trying to oust Congolese President Laurent Kabila. The city has become a strategic logistics base for both armies, and disagreements about the conduct of the 22-month war have increased, as has personal animosity between senior army commanders on both sides.

THEATER REVIEW

The birds argue chirp for chirp. A dog lends his bark to the conversation. Drowning out both is the news helicopter that glides overhead, presumably on its way to a breaking story.

Now what did that actor just say?

I asked myself this question more than once at the just-christened Riverside Festival stage in Lower City Park on June 9. With the temperature in the low 80s, no clouds in the sky and a cooling breeze making the complimentary hand-held fans unnecessary, I took in Riverside Theatre's production of William Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, or What You Will.

Just as I did, members of the audience could be seen looking up at the stars or perking their ears at the strains of the Terrence Simien Band's rendition of the Jackson 5's "I Want You Back" made their way from the Iowa Arts Festival downtown all the way to the park. How could the actors on stage compete? Cleverly, they didn't try to compete. They just let the atmosphere happen.

Such is the triumph of the Riverside Theatre Shakespeare Festival. By presenting Shakespeare's poetry in the open air, as it was meant to be heard, Riverside has struck a winning compromise, trading the stiffness of "serious theater" for the charm of a relaxing evening in the park. All elements of summer that drift into the mix simply add to the experience, even at the expense of a line or two of the Bard's famed verse.

Not to say that Riverside's Twelfth Night isn't a serious production. The story of Viola, who creates a romantic commotion in the city of Illyria by disguising herself as a boy, falling in love with the Duke Orsino and catching the eye of the Countess Olivia, is expertly staged by director Mark Hunter.

The cast makes full use of the beautiful new stage, the design for which is loosely based on London's original Globe Theatre. The action darts from the thrust stage to the overhanging balcony, from the edges of the stage's facade to the theater's aisles, rewarding the audience with multiple areas of interest.

The acting suffers slightly from the open-air conditions, with the un-miked performers sometimes seeming overly conscious of their announcement and volume. However, a few performances are worth mentioning.

David Q. Combs' Malvolio is a hilarious hybrid of professional wrestler and aspiring romantic. His monologue in the final scene of Act Two is a deft blend of verbal and physical humor as he accompanies his halting "I ... Will ... Smile!" by etching a labored leer into his normally stony countenance.

Also, Douglas Howington elevates the role of Antonio from incident to focal point, his intensity commanding the audience's attention whenever he appears on stage. The bottom line? Riverside Theatre must be praised not for staging an astonishing production of Twelfth Night but rather for creating a fabulous atmosphere in which to enjoy Shakespeare. Check out the Riverside Festival Stage and get a little summer with your summer theater.

observing people who came to sell their work and gain exposure and reactions to their crafted reflections. Throughout the four-day festival, David Zahn, a sculptor from Moline, Ill., sat behind his sculptures — one of which was a bust of a warrior on a podium — observing the people who passed him. "I would like to have sold more work, but that's not the only reason for being here," he said. "It's been an enjoyable weekend." While the artists observed the people who walked by, those people in turn observed the artists and their art, the booths of food and the street performers. As Iowa City resident Jay Williams took in the sights, he expressed his support for the event, saying such an festival is a necessity. "The city should host this more often," he said. "It would end up paying for itself. It would attract young artists to stay in the area and give them a way of living off of their work." The conglomeration of music and visual arts attracted a number of participants to downtown Iowa City. Vicki Jennings, the executive director of the festival, predicted there would be 40,000 or more visitors for this year's event. The variety of free entertainment, culinary delights and people have all made downtown Iowa City a center of cultural accessibility, she said. The essence of the festival was achieved, said Robyn Hepker, the vice president of the Iowa Arts Festival. She said Saturday night's highlight performance by Shawn Colvin was one of the largest of its kind downtown. "We wanted to throw a great

Abdel-Halim Khaddam, one of two vice presidents, declared as law Sunday a constitutional change that Parliament made on June 10, lowering the minimum age for president from 40 to 34. Bashar is 34. Meanwhile on Sunday, Israel viewed with trepidation a new power vacuum in the Middle East, Arab states went into mourning, while Europeans and Asians paid tributes — many fulsome — to Syria's dead president. Britain welcomed the prospect of his son taking over. Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak devoted a special Cabinet meeting Sunday to events in Syria, in part out of concern that Syrian stability could be at risk. "He's very impressive... I think he would be very good news for the Syrian people and very good news for the peace process," said British Foreign Office Minister Peter Hain in an interview with Britain's GMTV. "But that doesn't mean to say he would be a pushover in the peace negotiations." Assad was credited with bringing stability to Syria. He also entered peace talks with Israel and had joined the U.S.-led coalition against long-time rival Iraq during the 1990-91 Gulf crisis. Peace talks with Israel broke down in January over a sliver of land by the Sea of Galilee and the Golan Heights, which Israel captured from Syria during the 1967 war. Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak at a Cabinet meeting Sunday declared that Assad's death meant "the end of an era." "We are standing before another Middle East that we will have to study," he said, according to his office. However, former Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir bluntly denounced Assad, saying the Syrian leader's only real success was maintaining power and stability, which he did "through brutal, merciless means." "While the death of a man after a long illness should never provoke joy, neither can I say that the news makes me sad," Shamir was quoted as saying in an interview with an Italian newspaper, La Repubblica. It had long been clear Hafez Assad was grooming his son to rule after him. The political apparatus the autocratic Assad, 69, left behind began preparing to carry out those wishes soon after he died.

moratorium on capital punishment in his state after 13 death row inmates were exonerated. Texas Gov. George W. Bush recently approved his first 30-day reprieve in a death-penalty case — after permitting 131 executions. But public support for capital punishment remains high. A Gallup Poll in February showed 66 percent back the use of death sentences, down somewhat from Gallup polls during the 1990s that showed support ranging from 71 percent to 80 percent. The Columbia study said only 5 percent of the 5,760 death sentences imposed from 1973 through 1995 were carried out. The study, written with Professor Jeffrey Fagan and graduate student Valerie West, examined 4,578 death penalty cases in which at least one round of appeals was completed. Of those cases, a state or federal court threw out the conviction or death sentence in 68 percent of the cases. "Our 23 years worth of findings reveal a capital punishment system collapsing under the weight of its own mistakes," the study said.

Richard Dieter of the Death Penalty Information Center, a group critical of how capital punishment is administered, said, "It's amazing how many mistakes are being made... Those supporting the death penalty might look at it and say this isn't getting us anywhere." Dudley Sharp of Justice for All, a Houston-based victims' rights organization, said, "We all know that these cases get the closest scrutiny imaginable... All systems can be improved, and the death penalty is certainly one of those systems." But, he added, there has been no proof of an innocent person being executed in the past century. The study said the rates of reversals varied widely from state to state and among federal appellate circuits. Texas, which executed 104 people during the study period, showed 52 percent of its death penalty cases reversed on appeal. Florida, which executed 36 people, had a 73 percent reversal rate. On the other hand, Virginia, which executed 29 people, had a reversal rate of only 18 percent. The study suggested that may be partly because of Virginia's strict limits on appeals in death-penalty cases and the overall low reversal rate in the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which hears appeals from that state. Liebman said the 68 percent reversal rate appears to have come down since 1995. A second study to be released later this year is expected to look at those numbers, as well as the reasons for which death-penalty convictions are thrown out. The main reasons appear to be incompetent defense lawyering and misconduct by prosecutors, the Columbia study said.

After Belmont, trainer looks for 3-year-old champion

The Belmont Stakes saw the end of the Triple Crown; now, trainers look for the next 3-year-old champion.

By Ed Schulyer Jr.
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Triple Crown is over. The race for the 3-year-old championship is about to begin.

"You have to say what day and what hour," D. Wayne Lukas, trainer of Belmont Stakes winner Commendable, said Sunday when asked who he thought the leading 3-year-old might be.

"It's not an easy decision and I think we're going to have to get into the second season, as you would call it," Lukas said, referring to important stakes such as the Haskell and Travers in August and the Woodward, Jockey Club Gold Cup and Breeders' Cup Classic in the fall.

The last three 3-year-old champions — Silver Charm, Real Quiet and Charismatic — each won the Kentucky Derby and Preakness and clinched division honors in the Triple Crown even though they failed to complete the sweep in the Belmont.

On June 10, the Belmont was run without either Derby winner Fusaichi Pegasus or Preakness winner Red Bullet. Fusaichi Pegasus suffered a minor foot injury when startled in his stall a week before the race, while the owners of Red Bullet elected to skip the 1.5 mile test.

Commendable's victory in 95-degree heat — he paid $39.60 — snapped a six-racing losing streak dating back to a win in his debut Aug. 14.

Lukas believes the victory makes Commendable a player in the race for the division title.

"All I can say is we're one of them," Lukas said. "I'm not sure High Yield is not one of them."

High Yield, who did not race in the Belmont, has won two Grade 1 stakes but finished 15th in the Derby and seventh in the Preakness. "That's not to say he won't have a big fall," said Lukas, who has won four Belmonts and a total of 13 Triple Crown races.

The two leaders at this time, however, have to be Fusaichi Pegasus and Red Bullet.

Fusaichi Pegasus has won five of six starts this year, including the San Felipe and Wood Memorial in addition to the Derby. A second in the Wood is the only loss in five starts for Red Bullet, whose wins besides the Preakness include the Gotham. He did not run in the Derby.

Trainer John Orseno is talking about starting Red Bullet in the 1-16-mile Dwyer July 9 at Belmont Park, the 1-1.8-mile Haskell Invitational Aug. 6 at Monmouth Park and the 1-mile Travers Aug. 26 at Saratoga. Plans for Fusaichi Pegasus have not been revealed.

If either one those colts falter, however, the likes of Aptitude, Unshaded, Wheelaway and Impeachment could make a move with a big victory or two.

Aptitude finished second in the Belmont, just as he did in the Derby. The margin of defeat in each race was 1 1/2 lengths.

Bobby Frankel, Aptitude's trainer, was unhappy with Alex

Solis' ride. The colt was 10th with a half-mile remaining.

"I think the mile and a half intimidated him," Frankel said. As to whether he would replace Solis, Frank said, "I'll have to talk to the boss (Prince Khalid Abdullah of Saudi Arabia) about that."

Unshaded, making his Triple Crown debut, finished third, then had to be treated for a mild case of heat exhaustion. Trainer John Kimmel and jockey Richard Migliore said the heat also affected Wheelaway, who finished fourth, one place better than in the Derby. Impeachment, third in both the Derby and Preakness, was fifth in the 11-horse Belmont.

Impeachment is the only horse to have run in all three races.

It was the first three-way Triple Crown split since 1996, and the first time both the Derby and Preakness winners missed the Belmont since 1970.

Despite the absence of Fusaichi Pegasus and Red Bullet, the fact that no Triple Crown was at stake and the sweltering heat, a crowd of 67,810 attended.

Through it all, Lukas kept his cool.

"When they hit the five-eighths pole, I turned to a perfect stranger and said, 'Commendable is going to win the Belmont,'" the trainer said.

Zimbabwe native Sally Northcroft does not want to play for her violent home in the 2000 Olympics.

MUNCIE, Ind. — The event is everywhere. It's in her scars and bruises on her hand and her walls lined with awards. There's also the she lives by: "no short cuts." Sally Northcroft of Ball State was the best women's field player in college last season. On Monday, she will be in Orlando, Fla., with the Award for her sport. She picked up another award as the Honda-Broderick Collegiate Woman Athlete of the Year.

Her mother was unable to make it from her home in Zimbabwe for Northcroft's graduation last month. But she is to be there for this ceremony. This is the latest in a series of awards for Northcroft during her four years at Ball State, in 1998 and 1999 Mid-American Conference player of the year. Now, as she begins a career as an assistant coach with

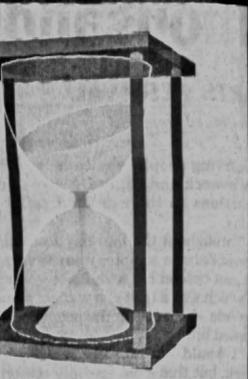

Astros players involved in fight

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Houston Astros pitcher Matt Lincecum was cut out of his rotation when he was punched by rookie leadoff hitter Mitch Meluskey during batting practice before Sunday's game against the San Diego Padres.

According to witnesses, Meluskey punched Lincecum in the batting cage two days before Sunday's game. Lincecum was hit in the head and Meluskey, a 23-year-old pitcher, was hustled away from the field. Meluskey was treated on the ground. The fight happened about an hour before the game, with several hundred fans in their seats.

Manager Larry Dierker wouldn't comment on the fight before the game. Tim Lincecum, the Astros' assistant general manager, said he was trying to piece together the incident. Neither Meluskey nor Lincecum were in the starting lineup. The defending NL champion Astros began the game with a 3-0 lead, but the Padres won their worst record in the majors.

Zimbabwean dreams of Olympic team to pay for Zimbabwe native Sally Northcroft does not want to play for her violent homeland in the 2000 Olympics.

By Rex W. Huppke Associated Press

MUNCIE, Ind. — The evidence is everywhere. It's in her eyes, in the scars and bruises on her legs and on her walls lined with awards. There's also the phrase she lives by: "no short cuts."
 Sally Northcroft of Ball State was the best women's field hockey player in college last season.
 On Monday, she will be honored in Orlando, Fla., with the Honda Award for her sport. She might pick up another award as well — the Honda-Broderick Cup for Collegiate Woman Athlete of the Year.
 Her mother was unable to make it from her home in Zimbabwe for Northcroft's graduation last month. But she planned to be there for this ceremony.

Michael Conroy/Associated Press
Sally Northcroft and her mother, Dawn Duly of Harare, Zimbabwe, pose on the sidelines of the Ball State University field.

Cardinals, only one achievement will satisfy her: the Olympics.
 Therein lies the problem.
 Northcroft is a citizen of Zimbabwe, so she can't play for the U.S. national team. The southern African country is embroiled in conflicts, and her father died in the violence more than 20 years ago. The turmoil makes her hesitant to return.
 "It's hard because everyone else I know that's at the same level as I am is going on to the next level," Northcroft says. "And I'm kind of watching everyone else go by."

 She pauses.
 "I'm kind of scared because I don't want to be left out of it," she says.
 Northcroft is 23, a fourth-generation African, born and raised in Harare, the Zimbabwe capital. Her father, Donald Northcroft, was a flyboy for the Royal Air Force, a stocky, strawberry blond-haired pilot.

 He traded his wings for a farm in the 1970s but was killed by Zimbabwean militants in 1977 during a political uprising. Sally was a toddler at the time and knows her father only through stories and photos.
 "I think I inherited every single athletic gene he had," she says.
 At 14, Northcroft made a commitment to field hockey, a sport most children in the former British colony play. She earned a scholarship to Ball State in 1996, arriving in a small town in Middle America, oozing raw talent.
 "I view her as a once-in-a-career player," field hockey coach Karen Fitzpatrick said.
 But Northcroft had to learn the U.S. style of field hockey and improve her foot work.
 "Once she knew what it was all about, she came back as a sophomore as a different person," Fitzpatrick said. "That's when it really started."
 That's when Northcroft started making moves that left coaches asking, "How did she ever do that?" Like hitting a reverse chip shot from within a circle of defenders, powering the ball through a one-foot space between the goalie and the goal.

Astros players involved in fight

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Houston Astros outfielder Matt Mieske was cut over his left eye when he was punched by rookie teammate Mitch Melusky during batting practice before Sunday's game against the San Diego Padres.
 According to witnesses, Melusky was late for his turn in the batting cage and he jumped in ahead of Mieske. The two exchanged words and Melusky, a catcher, hit Mieske. Melusky was hustled away and Mieske was treated on the ground.
 The fight happened about an hour before the game, with several hundred fans already in their seats.
 Manager Larry Dierker wouldn't comment on the fight before the game. Tim Purpura, the Astros' assistant general manager, said he was trying to piece together specifics.
 Neither Melusky nor Mieske were in the starting lineup. The defending NL Central champion Astros began the game with the worst record in the majors.

Yankees sign Gooden to minor league deal

NEW YORK — The New York Yankees are giving Dwight Gooden yet another chance.
 The 35-year-old right-hander, 10 victories shy of 200 in the major leagues, has signed a minor league contract with the Yankees.
 "We still feel like he has something left in his arm," Yankees pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre said Sunday. Stottlemyre coached Gooden with the Mets and the Yankees.
 Gooden, released by the Tampa Bay Devil Rays two weeks ago, told The Sunday Record of Hackensack that he was "totally blown away" at the opportunity to pitch for the Yankees again.

Violence strikes Euro 2000 again

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands — World Cup champion France made a commanding start at the European Championships on Sunday, the second straight day in which violence struck the showcase tournament.
 The French, bidding for a second European title, defeated Denmark 3-0, and Italy needed a second-half penalty kick to beat Turkey 2-1. In the day's last game, the Netherlands played the Czech Republic.
 The Italy-Turkey game prompted a fight between rival fans watching on a giant screen 125 miles away in Genk, Belgium.

Hentgen takes no-hit bid into seventh inning threw to third, but Young slid and beat the play by inches. That brought up Sosa, who tied the game in the seventh but also was 2-for-13 with nine strikeouts for the series.

Pena walked Sosa, loading the bases with one out. Meyers pinch-hit for Willie Greene and hit a bouncer to short.

"I saw the ball hit off the bat, saw where it was going, put my head down and ran for my life," Meyers said. "I didn't do much, but my little part was enough."

Valentin threw to second to get Sosa, but Meyers beat Durham's throw to first and Young scored the go-ahead run.

"The last play came down to a tenth of a second," White Sox first baseman Paul Konerko said. "It was just that close. It was a heart-breaker today."

St. Louis 7, Detroit 3

DETROIT — Pat Hentgen took a no-hit bid into the seventh inning Sunday and Mark McGwire and Jim Edmonds homered to lead the St. Louis Cardinals over the Detroit Tigers 7-3.

Hentgen (5-6) allowed just two base runners until Bobby Higginson's one-out single in the seventh started a three-run burst.

McGwire's 22nd homer, and first since May 24, keyed a three-run first. The Cardinals picked up four more in the second to chase Dave Mlicki (2-8), who has lost his last three decisions.

Reds 7, Indians 5

CLEVELAND — Aaron Boone's two-run single in the 13th inning helped the Cincinnati Reds snap a five-game losing streak with a victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Boone's base hit off Scott Kamieniecki (1-3) was set up by second baseman Roberto Alomar's throwing error in the inning.

Ken Griffey Jr. hit a three-run homer in the eighth when Cincinnati scored five runs to tie it 5-5. Griffey also singled leading off the 13th.

Manny Aybar (1-2) worked two innings for the win.

Red Sox 5, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Jose Offerman led off the eighth inning with a double and kept on running when Gold Glove center fielder Andrew Jones kicked the ball against the wall, scoring the tiebreaking run as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Atlanta Braves.

Boston starter Ramon Martinez, doing a pretty good impression of younger brother Pedro, allowed only one hit through five innings.

extra innings. The Royals, trying to finish off their first interleague sweep ever, took a 5-4 lead into the ninth before Giles doubled off rookie Jeff D'Amico.

Warren Morris, who was 4-for-6 after going 5-for-6 on Saturday, committed a fielding error at second base that helped the Royals score three times in the seventh.

Brewers 5, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — John Snyder snapped an eight-game losing streak and Marquis Grissom homered and scored three times as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Minnesota Twins.

Snyder (1-2), who hadn't won since Aug. 9, 1999, a span of 12 starts, allowed three runs on eight hits and four walks, two of them intentional, in 5 2-3 innings.

Devil Rays 7, Marlins 6

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Bubba Trammell hit a go-ahead two-run homer in the seventh inning as the Tampa Bay Devil Rays won back-to-back series for the first time this season with a victory over the Florida Marlins.

Orioles 7, Phillies 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Mussina pitched a five-hit ball over eight innings and Will Clark hit his first homer since last July as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Philadelphia Phillies.

Mike Bordick and Jeff Conine also homered for the Orioles, who took two of three to win their first series since May 23-25.

Rob Ducey homered for the Phillies, who have lost 10 of 15 against Baltimore since interleague play began four seasons ago.

Blue Jays 8, Expos 3

TORONTO — Tony Batista hit a grand slam and Carlos Delgado hit a tiebreaking RBI single in the eighth inning as the Toronto Blue Jays defeated the Montreal Expos.

Robinson wins cup after taking over late

deficit so insurmountable that only one of the 26 teams facing it has recovered, they stubbornly refused to yield the Cup.

They persevered through the longest scoreless tie in NHL playoff history before winning 1-0 on Mike Modano's goal in the third overtime of Game 5, then were a goal away in yet another multiple overtime elimination game from forcing an all-or-nothing Game 7.

"We took the cup off the champions," Devils forward Bobby Holik said.

Before the series, there was considerable talk about how the teams were so similar, with their mirror-image neutral zone traps, unwillingness to commit errors that lead to goals, excellent goaltenders and punishing defensemen.

So, it was almost fitting the Devils won the cup almost exactly the way the Stars did a season ago. A year ago, the Stars outlasted the Buffalo Sabres on the road in a three-overtime Saturday night Game 6. This season, the Devils won the cup in a multiple-overtime Saturday night Game 6 on the road.

"We know what it's like to carry that thing around the ice," Modano said. "Now I know how the Sabres felt last year after we won it there."

Many of the Devils knew, too, since this was their second cup since 1995. But it was the last for 82-year-old owner John McMullen, who recently sold the team, and the first for coach Larry Robinson, who took over a division-leading but disgruntled team from former coach Robbie Ftorek with eight games left in the season.

No Stanley Cup-winning coach has ever had so little time with a team before winning professional hockey's ultimate prize.

"This has just been a fairy tale to me," Robinson said.

And to the Devils, who more than made up for four years of playoff disappointment after winning the cup in 1995. Despite three Eastern Conference championships, they advanced as far as the second round only once.

Fishermen aim to host Big Ten Championships

BASS-FISHING

that the team will be around for a while. Schmooke and Thompson hope it will be around for years to come.

"I definitely think that this will carry on after we leave," Schmooke said. "We've recruited a lot of young guys. We'd like to come back in five years and see it still going."

Fishing partner Joe Lang, who does not participate with the university club but assists the team with equipment, said that Thompson and Schmooke have started a good thing by getting younger kids outdoors.

"These guys have done some great stuff by giving students opportunities to experience fishing," Lang said. "I hope they keep it going." Lang also can tell from the times he's fished with the two that they've gotten better.

"They continue to learn more and more and progress into competition in the Big Ten," Lang said.

With all the work and spare money that goes into starting their own club (Schmooke and Thompson said they've spent hundreds at a time putting fliers out for recruiting and stuff), just being able to fish for their school makes it all worthwhile.

For the people out there with dreams of starting their own club, a lot of desire and a lot of work might bring them the same success these two guys have had.

Cubs salvage final game against Sox

After losing the first two games by a total of two runs, the Cubs pulled out a nail-biter of their own.

CHICAGO (AP) — White Sox fans will have to find some other uses for their brooms.

Sammy Sosa tied the game with a two-run double in the seventh, and pinch-hitter Chad Meyers drove in the winning run with a ninth-inning grounder Sunday as the Chicago Cubs beat the Chicago White Sox 6-5, avoiding a three-game sweep in the crosstown series.

"They can take that broom and sweep their house," Cubs starter Ismael Valdes said. "But not today."

The loss snapped a six-game winning streak for the White Sox, whose 37-24 record leads the AL. But they maintained their two-game lead over Cleveland in the AL Central when the Indians lost to the Reds 7-5 in extra innings.

The loss also spoiled a two-homer day by Jose Valentin, who got his 100th career homer on a solo shot in the first inning. The White Sox also got home runs from Ray Durham, Frank Thomas and Magglio Ordonez.

"It's not how many home runs you hit," Valentin said. "It's how many runs you score."

And the Cubs, who had led for just two half-innings the entire series, finally got some offense when it counted. With Eric Young on first in the ninth, Brant Brown singled to shallow center off reliever Jesus Pena, dropping the ball perfectly into the gap in right-center.

Ordonez scooped the ball up and

Relaxed Pacers defeat Kobe-less Lakers in Game 3

Reggie Miller poured in 33 points in and glared at Phil Jackson for good measure in the 100-91 win.

By Chris Sheridan Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Back home in Indiana, the Pacers relaxed instead of panicking and allowed themselves to breathe easier in the NBA Finals.

Getting 33 points and one angry glance from Reggie Miller, 21 points from Jalen Rose and a number of timely shots from Travis Best, the Pacers looked like a different team as they defeated the Los Angeles Lakers 100-91 Sunday night in Game 3 of the best-of-seven series.

Playing brazenly, refusing to be pushovers and eager to get in the Lakers' faces, the Pacers certainly didn't act as inferior as they looked in Games 1 and 2 in Los Angeles.

Instead, they took a double-digit lead early, went ahead by as many as 18 points and held off the Lakers' rally in the fourth to cut their deficit to 2-1 in the series.

Miller all but sealed the victory by making two free throws with 2:02 left, casting an angry stare at Lakers coach Phil Jackson as he turned upcourt. After Ron Harper hit a 3-pointer to make it a three-point game with 14.8 seconds left, Miller calmly made two from the line — sans the stare this time, but with an emphatic side-to-side shake of his head — to make it 96-91.

"If we were down 3-0, you could pretty much have written us off," Miller said. Best had 14 points and Austin Croshere added 12 for the Pacers, who were not afraid to confront the Lakers — whether it be with flagrant fouls, dirty looks or timely shots.

Despite not making a fourth-quarter field goal for the third straight game, Miller had his best game of the series as he shot 11-for-22 and played 46 of a possible 48 minutes.

"I'll rest when I'm dead," Miller said at halftime.

Thanks to his energy, chutzpah and foul shooting, the Pacers are far from dead heading into Game 4 Wednesday night.

By then, the Lakers could have Kobe Bryant back in the lineup. He never showed his face, staying in the locker room for the entire game after testing his sprained left ankle and deciding it was too sore to play on.

The Lakers missed Bryant's offense, getting just six points from Brian Shaw, his replacement in the starting lineup.

"We knew they were shorthanded, and it wasn't the real Laker team because Kobe wasn't out there," Miller said. "We needed a gutsy effort from everyone and we got it. I think the key to the game was we got into the game quickly and we did a good job of moving the basketball around our offense."

Shaquille O'Neal followed up his 43-point Game 1 and 40-point Game 2 with a 33-point, 13-rebound performance, but he went just 3-for-13 at the line, missing six of seven free throws in the fourth quarter.

Ron Harper added 14 points, and Robert Horry and Derek Fisher had 10 apiece for the Lakers, who shot just 8-for-19 at the foul line and were outrebounded badly in the first half when Indiana took control for good.

After the Lakers pulled within five points early in the third, Indiana used a 23-8 run to reassert command. And after the Lakers got their deficit back down to three late in the fourth, the Pacers nonchalantly closed them out.

Kicking some bass

The pipe dream of two Iowa students resulted in the creation of the Iowa bass-fishing team.

By Jeremy Schmitker The Daily Iowan

The University of Iowa bass-fishing team?

You heard it — there really is one. It's the real deal, too — it has approximately 30 members, competes with other universities, and even has a rival.

For UI juniors Bill Schmooke and Scott Thompson, founders of the UI bass-fishing team, a dream came reality approximately two years ago — two college kids, headed to Iowa, wanting to do some fishing but didn't know where to go.

"Our freshman year, Scott and I talked about getting a bass-fishing team, but it was mostly just a dream," Schmooke said. "The next year, we got our stuff together and went down to student services and got things going."

It's an official club now, with one year of competition under the members' belts, and they're looking to make a move up the Big Ten ranks.

Now wait a minute, you say. There's actually conference competition for bass fishing? Yeah, there is, and it's pretty intense.

It's the Big Ten Classic. While it's not quite the Big Ten Basketball Tournament, considering the infancy of bass fishing as a sport, it's quite a meet.

It drew the eye of Bassmaster Magazine, one of the premier bass-fishing magazines in the country. The meet had grown so much that Bassmaster featured it in an article in January 1999.

Matt Holst/Daily Iowan

In the Big Ten Classic, such teams as Purdue, Indiana, Michigan and our own Hawkeyes square off for bragging rights among the Midwest's premier schools.

Teams host the meet on a lake near their school and compete to see who can either get the most weight of bass or length of the fish they catch.

According to Thompson, competition can get pretty feisty. The Hawks, who took second to last in the meet last year, had a run in with the Michigan team after the classic that left a little fire in their bellies.

"We were all kinda pissed off after last year," Thompson said. "The winning weight on this cesspool of a lake we fished on was like four pounds, which is just insane."

After the meet, the Iowa team stopped at a McDonald's to get a bite to eat on the way home and ran into Michigan, the meet champions.

"They carried the trophy in with them, which is a pretty big trophy," Thompson said. "Their coach saw us and said, 'Oh, sorry guys' — like they didn't mean to do that."

Ticked off by the arrogant gesture, the Iowa guys went outside, found two vans with Michigan plates, and wrote, "Next year Iowa," on the dusty windshields.

Starting a rivalry at their first tournament — who says bass fishing can't be exciting?

In hopes of avoiding fishing on any more "cesspools," the Iowa guys hope they can host a meet in Iowa City, most likely at the Coralville Reservoir, before they graduate.

"Our goal is to have it up here by our senior year," Thompson says of the classic, which will be held in Wisconsin next year. "There's a bit of competition to get it at your home lake. All the teams want to host it — it's a huge advantage."

The ability to host the tournament would speak volumes about the progress the two Hawks have made since they created the club. Having the team be just a dream two years ago, then hosting the conference championship is a sign

Kuerten captures French Open

The Brazilian out-lasted Magnus Norman for his second title at Roland Garros Sunday.

By Steve Wilstein Associated Press

PARIS — Gustavo Kuerten celebrated his second French Open title 42 minutes and 10 match points too soon.

The umpire wouldn't give Kuerten the victory the first time he thought he'd earned it, and neither would an amazingly resilient Magnus Norman, who fended off more match points than perhaps anyone in Grand Slam history.

Not until Norman sent a forehand inches wide on the 11th match point to give Kuerten the tiebreaker 8-6 — 52 tense points after the disputed call — could the Brazilian claim the championship Sunday, 6-2, 6-3, 2-6, 7-6 (6), and the No. 1 spot in the rankings race.

"Every time I thought I was going to win, and then it was one more, and one more, and one more," an exhausted Kuerten said after the 3-hour, 44-minute match.

There were chants of "Gu-ga, Gu-ga" by the dozens of yellow-blue-green-clad Brazilians in the crowd throughout the match, and when it was over they danced round and round Roland Garros to the sound of steel drums.

"Here I am again," the 23-year-old Kuerten, winner of the 1997 French Open, told the crowd during the trophy ceremony as he accepted the $600,000 winner's check. "I'm so happy to be here."

The drama didn't truly begin until Kuerten took a 5-4 lead in the fourth set. Norman, in his first Grand Slam final, had played nervously and sloppily in the first two sets, uncharacteristically slamming his racket on the court several times, while the spindly but strong Kuerten put on an artistic show without facing much pressure.

New Jersey wins series that wouldn't end

Jason Arnott scored the winning goal in double-overtime to usurp the defending Stanley Cup champions Saturday.

By Alan Robinson Associated Press

DALLAS — Two nights passed into morning, and still a Stanley Cup had not been won.

The New Jersey Devils and Dallas Stars spent five overtimes over two extended evenings fighting for the same cherished piece of silver, one that has been tarnished somewhat by age but certainly was not by their performance.

For six games, the Stars held tightly to the Stanley Cup they won last season, refusing to let go no matter how hard the Devils tugged and pulled.

Finally, a mistake was made, a tiny opening developed, a perfect pass was made, a shot was buried, a cup was decided. In overtime, of course.

The Devils won their second Stanley Cup in six seasons Saturday night — or more precisely, Sunday morning — as Jason Arnott one-timed Patrik Elias' backhanded pass by goaltender Ed Belfour at 8:20 of the second overtime for a 2-1 victory in Game 6.

It was a near-perfect play — the timing, the pass, the shot all had to be executed precisely in a sliver of time — and it created the perfect ending to a series that seemingly would not end. At least not in regulation time.

"He made a great pass," Arnott said. "We needed a play like that to beat Ed Belfour."

There was no controversy this time, no Brett Hull skate in the crease, no debate to last an entire off-season. This time, there was only exhaustion, and relief.

For the second straight year, the Stanley Cup was awarded not in the prime of night, as are most major sports championships, but deep into the night. It is considered the hardest prize in sports to win because of the two-month post-season effort needed to secure it. But, this time, it also became the hardest to lose.

Even after the defending champion Stars fell behind in the series 3-1, a
