Sosa wants a contract extension

Sammy Sosa says that if the Cubs don't offer him an extension, it means they don't want him around.

By Greg Beacham Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — With trade rumors still swirling and his agents' talks with the Chicago Cubs apparently going nowhere, it appears Sammy Sosa just wants someone to want him.

Sosa took a little extra time tripping off his uniform in the ramped visitors' clubhouse at County Stadium on Sunday, and his famous smile was nowhere to be seen. He didn't speak to reporters after the Cubs blew a one-run lead in the eighth inning of their 4-2 loss to the Brewers.

The weight of trade rumors and slump at the plate are taking their toll on Sosa. On Saturday, he said if the Cubs fail to offer him a contract extension, it's a sign they don't want him around anymore. "If they don't show me a contract, it's telling me I'm not going to be here," Sosa said. "It's as simple as that. It hurts my feelings because I think I deserve a little bit more than that. But this is business, and I understand that. I just got to sit back, relax and wait."

A trade between the Cubs and New York Yankees involving Sosa fell apart last week when the Yankees decided the prospects they would be forced to sacrifice were worth more than Chicago's slugger. New York then swung a deal for Cleveland outfielder David Justice.

Now, Sosa said, it's time for the Cubs to come to him. Though the near-deal with the Yankees last week had him talking about his time in Chicago in the past tense, he said he has never given up on the idea of staying with the Cubs. "My people were looking for (an offer). We haven't had an answer yet," he said. "They know that they can talk to me. They know I'm here. It's up to them to come talk to me."

Sosa is under contract through 2001 at about $11 million per season. Most think he is seeking a four-year extension, worth at least $17 million per season.

The Cubs could still trade him before the July 31 deadline, but

Off in PTL

The Galloway of Active Endeavors will test their three-point shooting against fellow Iowa guard Rob Griffin of Iowa City Ready Mix. The game poured in 44 points on June 29 as Active Endeavors losing effort against Fitzpatrick's.

In the 9 p.m. matchup, Goodfellow Printing and Nike-Merrill Lynch will be the court for the night's finale.

Goodfellow Printing is led by newcomer Glen Worley and Jared Reiner. So far in the PTL season, Worley has been averaging more than 20 points per game, and Reiner has shown great progress.

Reiner will have a good opportunity to test his progress, as he will most likely be guarding former Hawkeye NBA player Brad Lohaus of Nike-Merrill Lynch. Brody Boyd of Goodfellow Printing looked sharp in his PTL game on June 29 as he put up 28 points.

According to league Director Donny Larson, most of the players participating in the PTL will be present at the games despite Tuesday being the Fourth of July.

Locals cautiously optimistic about Mexico

Incoming President Vicente Fox outlines new initiatives for Mexico.

By Kirsten Veng-Pedersen The Daily Iowan

Mexico's President-elect Vicente Fox acknowledged Tuesday that improvements in the Mexican economy and changes in foreign policy will be necessary to improve the situation in his country. Fox said he would make fighting poverty his first priority, and he proposed a long-range plan for development in Mexico — with the help of local and foreign funding.

UI junior Cesar Herrera said development will be key to solving Mexico's problems. "I think most of us migrated because we didn't have good jobs," said Herrera, who left Mexico seven years ago.

While development is important to Mexico's interests, it will not be easy, said Eliza Willis, an associate professor of political science at Grinnell College in Grinnell, Iowa.

"Development has been concentrated in the hands of a few people," she said.

Most development has occurred in the urban centers, yet it is most needed in rural areas, Willis said.

Fox also promised changes in Mexico's foreign policy of strictly opposing intervention — even by international organizations — in other countries' domestic conflicts.

Willis said if Mexico does move toward a stance that favors such intervention, it will mark a significant shift in policy. Mexico has long been uncomfortable with the intervention of international organizations into the affairs of other countries, she said.

SAS caravan to target Target

The anti-sweatshop group claims that some of the apparel at Target — and Kohl's and Wal-Mart — is made under sweatshop conditions.

By Jessi Toddan The Daily Iowan

Members of UI Students Against Sweatshops plan to journey Saturday across Central and Eastern Iowa to protest stores allegedly participating in sweatshop labor.

Fifteen SAS members will leave from the IMU at 7:45 a.m. They will travel with other anti-sweatshop groups to Kohl's, Target, and Wal-Mart stores in Des Moines, Williamsburg, Coralville, Cedar Rapids and Davenport.

The caravan is part of a national solidarity campaign organized by the Campaign for Labor Rights. More than 100 protests have taken place on behalf of the workers in a Nicaraguan factory throughout the country.

The factory Mil Colores in Nicaragua allegedly uses scare tactics in an effort to disband a burgeoning union movement. Clothing made in the factory is sold at Target, Kohl's and Wal-Mart stores, SAS members say.

The protesters plan to hand out leaflets and talk with customers to inform the public and store employees of the alleged violations of workers' rights in factories that the stores do business with. SAS members hope that the customers they talk with will put pressure on CEOs of those companies, said Doug Anderson, a UI graduate student and SAS member.

"Those companies need to demand that the factory owners treat their workers fairly and pay them a honest wage for the work," he said. "They have a moral responsibility to make sure that workers who produce for them don't work in sweatshop conditions."

SAS members say the factory's owner, Gregg Miller, uses harassment and intimidation to discourage union organizers.

More than 200 Mil Colores workers have been fired and criminal charges have been filed against 68, according to a report by the National Labor Committee. The report also said workers are forced to work 10-hour shifts six days a week, with occasional 15-hour shifts and Sunday work.

Nicaragua is part of Las Mercedes, a free-trade zone, where labor laws are suspended.

"Companies can go in and take advantage of the free-trade zone to exploit workers," Anderson said. "The overhead is very low in these areas because of the leniency of labor laws."

Two local stores allow customers to purchase pieces of other cultures.

By Luc Hunt The Daily Iowan

Because of the warm reception from customers that it has received in its first nine weeks, Special Collections, Coral Ridge Mall, plans to expand to Iowa City.

Special Collections, which has two rented kiosks in the mall, and Mythos, 5 S. Linn St., are two area stores that provide pieces for people who find fascination in the endless creativity and representations of various cultural phenomena.

The owners of both stores say the reasons for their stores' success are the American love of original and rare objects and the growing popularity of using other cultures' artifacts in home decoration.

Eric Ogoli, a co-owner of Special Collections, said that because of good business at the current Special Collections, he and his wife and co-owner, Michelle Ogoli, are looking to open locations in Iowa City and Cedar Rapids.

ues, masks, instruments and icons Johnson has gathered on trips around the world.

"The name Mythos means a people's collective truth — a historic explanation of their own existence," he said. "Different peoples with different cultures describe the universe in different ways. There are many elaborate explanations for spirituality, and in these artifacts, one begins to see a shared reality in those explanations."

Mythos is a veritable treasure chest of art history and cultural perspectives. The store is neatly packed with artifacts from Italy, France, Egypt, Greece, Guatemala, Tanzania, India, Cambodia and many other countries.

Serbs deny Bosnian rapes were war crimes

Before a war-crime tribunal, defense lawyers say the dozens of assaults against Muslim women were isolated incidents.

By Jerome Socolovsky Associated Press

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — After months of testimony by sobbing Muslim women who identified three Bosnian Serb fighters as their rapists, defense lawyers Tuesday admitted to an international judicial tribunal that rapes took place but denied their clients were guilty of war crimes.

Defense attorneys opened their case before the U.N. criminal court without directly addressing the allegations that Dragoljub Kunarac, Radomir Kovac and Zoran Vukovic participated in gang rapes and beatings of Muslim women and girls as young as 12 years old.

But they denied that the assaults against dozens of female detainees in the southeastern Bosnian city of Foca at the outset of the 1992-95 ethnic war constituted anything more than isolated incidents.

"Even though there were serious crimes, we cannot call them atrocities," said Kovac's lawyer, Momir Kolesar. He said evidence would be presented to show the assaults "cannot be considered an all-embracing and systematic case of rape."

Sixteen rape victims have testified since the trial began on March 20. It is the first case of wartime sexual enslavement before an international court.

Prosecutors are trying to prove the women were victims of a systematic sexual assault as part of an "ethnic cleansing" campaign aimed at forcing the Muslim population to fleeing areas conquered by Serb forces.

The defendants, former paramilitary fighters, are charged with 32 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity including rape, torture, enslavement and outrages upon personal dignity. On Monday, the court rejected a defense motion to have the torture charges dismissed.

Tuesday's session got off to a rocky start when judges repeatedly scolded defense attorneys for trying to turn the proceeding into a Balkan history lesson.

Australian Judge David Hunt's anger peaked when Kunarac's lawyer, Mara Pilipovic, ignored reminders that the tribunal's jurisdiction begins with the disintegration of Yugoslavia in 1991 and sought to begin her presentation with the Slav settlement of the Foca region in 1363.

"We are not concerned with what happened in the 14th century!" Hunt exclaimed. "Do you understand?"

After tempers cooled, lawyers described their clients as ordinary soldiers who had been maligned by the prosecution.

"Zoran Vukovic is not the kind of man that the prosecution has painted him to be," said his counsel, Goran Jovanovic.

Kunarac, also charged with commanding troops who raped women, took the witness stand and insisted he was just a volunteer fighter.

His title of lance corporal was given to him informally, he said, because of his training as a Yugoslav army mine expert. He denied he possessed anything more than operational control of units of fewer than 10 men.

"I was a rank-and-file soldier like all the other soldiers," Kunarac testified. "I had no command authority."

Scientists link charisma to libretto exposure.

In findings released on Wednesday, scientists confirmed a direct link between human charisma and opera attendance. "It's inextricable," explained Dr. Art Mann of New York University. "If you don't attend opera, you will not have charisma. It's that simple." The NYU study interviewed 15,000 U.S. residents known for their irresistibility. Not only did all attend opera, research showed that their charismatic features did not manifest until after they began attending opera.

"History has been trying to tell us this for years," Mann added. "JFK loved opera. Guevarra loved opera. Even Elvis loved opera. Even Elvis loved opera. Remember the two-bit street trollop, and two weeks after seeing an opera she was engaged to a billionaire. Well, yes," said Mann, "with Gilbert and Sullivan's The Yeomen of the Guard in particular. Once someone sees it, you see them signing autographs a week later."

Courthouse more efficient, official says

■ Restructuring the clerk of court's office is better for the public and for confidentiality, the clerk says.

By Disa Lubker
The Daily Iowan

A reorganization of the Johnson County Courthouse, which officials have implemented over the last few months, has made the courthouse more efficient, they say.

The Clerk of Court office recently underwent major restructuring, arranging the space to separate the public from the work area, said Lodema Berkley, the Johnson County clerk of court.

Before the changes in the office, the public could walk through the area more freely, Berkley said. With confidential material in the office, it was in the best interest of the office to restrict access to the space, she said.

In addition to the rearrangement, new cubicles were installed to make the working environment more convenient for employees, Berkley said.

"One of my main goals here is to run an efficient and friendly office," she said. "It's a very interesting job. There's never time to get bored."

The clerk's office manages all records, Berkley said. Payment of all tickets and other debts to the county occurs there as well.

The 24 people working in the office have 164 collective duties and receive added responsibilities almost every time a new law comes out. Their responsibilities are split up into four divisions, civil, criminal, probate and juvenile.

People can find information at the courthouse by using the public-access computer terminals in the clerk's office to find case numbers. To access a file, the case number needs to be known, said J. Patrick White, the Johnson County attorney. Once the case number is available, one of the employees in the office can assist in getting the file.

Although the process may seem cumbersome for those not familiar with the system, it is not an uncommon one. Many other courthouses at both the state and federal level have similar processes for accessing records and files.

At the Lancaster County Courthouse in Nebraska, site of Lincoln and the University of Nebraska, people must supply a name and an offense, and someone at the front desk of the clerk's office will retrieve the file, said Bonnie Sanford, an assistant clerk.

The Champaign County Clerk's office in Illinois uses computer terminals for detailed searches, but members of the public can also walk up to the counter and ask for the name and file, said court officials.

Help or information is available from employees throughout Johnson County's building, White said.

Jessica Pieters, a UI junior, who has paid a ticket at the courthouse, said the process was "pretty easy."

"They tell you where to go as soon as you go into the lobby," she said.

Almost all court proceedings take place in the courthouse, with the exception of weekend initial appearances which take place at the jail, White said.

Cases are heard in the six courtrooms in the building. Daily dockets are usually posted in the building for the cases that will be heard in each courtroom, White said.

Three magistrates, two district associate judges and 12 district judges that cover Iowa, Linn, Johnson, Benton, Jones, and Tama counties preside at the courthouse on a rotating basis, he said.

There are 12 assistant county attorneys in the attorney's office. The county attorney prosecutes cases and is the county's civil lawyer.

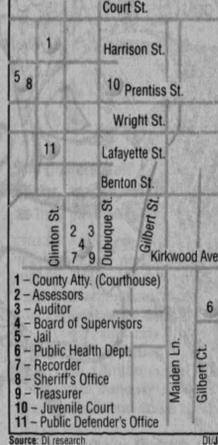

The courthouse is a resource for the public that should be taken advantage of, said John Nolan, an Iowa City attorney.

"(The courthouse) is not just valuable but absolutely necessary," he said. "It's the public's courthouse; it doesn't belong to the judges and lawyers."

UIHC changes mouthpieces

■ UIHC Information Director Dean Borg's job title hasn't changed although his job description has.

By Andrea Mason
The Daily Iowan

The Joint Office for Planning, Marketing and Communications for UI Hospitals and Clinics has taken over some of the responsibilities of Dean Borg, the director of UIHC information.

Borg's title will not change, but as of July 1, he works with the UI's two radio stations, WSUI and KSUI.

Before the change, the Office of Public Information and the planning, marketing and communications office worked together on media relations with Borg as the official spokesman.

Borg has relinquished the official spokesman role to UIHC Media Coordinator Tom Moore in exchange for more outreach on the part of his office through his radio work.

Moore said no new staff will be needed to carry the added workload. Rather, current office staff will share the load of the new responsibilities, he said.

Media requests, press releases and patient-condition reports are included in the list of responsibilities to be taken on by the planning, marketing and communications office, Moore said.

"This is something our office has already been doing, as far as media relations," he said. "We're just extending it to being the official spokesperson."

Moore has been involved in public relations for the last several years. Because Borg's new duties will make it impossible to continue managing media relations, Moore said, the tasks were transferred to his office.

The opportunity for Borg to work with the UI on a television project arose approximately a year and a half ago. Now, he said, he has been given the opportunity through UI radio to promote UIHC.

"I am grateful to the university for having the confidence in me to allow me this new opportunity," he said.

Borg has a hand in producing new programming at the two UI radio stations. He said his background is in both science and political reporting, and he is now in charge of reporting health and state political news.

"I am looking forward to a more active role in journalism and being a more active journalist," Borg said.

WSUI news director Al Kern said he is looking forward to Borg's presence.

"He brings vast experience in reporting through his years not just at the hospital, but in his television career," he said. "He can widen our scope considerably."

Among Borg's credentials is his position as host and moderator of the Iowa Public Television program "Iowa Press."

Divided they'll stand, united they'll fall

Women's athletics at the UI earn increasing respect with time and success, but the present circumstances threaten the progression of the department.

With Dr. Christine Grant stepping down after a noble 27-year run as director of the women's Athletics Department, the university may offer combined reins to current men's A.D. Bob Bowsby. While UI President Mary Sue Coleman maintains that officials are searching for a replacement for Grant as well as considering Bowsby, it seems almost certain that the departments will combine. The UI currently stands as one of only six Division I schools to sustain separate Athletics Departments, and far be it from the UI to diverge from the conformist route.

No one with any concept of Bowsby's credentials can doubt his capacity to run a thriving Athletics Department; this is beside the point. After all, Bowsby and his crew hired Steve Alford, Kirk Ferentz and Jim Zalesky. This year, the university sought his help in the search for the new women's basketball coach as well. But with undeniable discrepancies in the treatment of women's and men's athletics today, relating particularly to the public and financial attention given each, a consolidated department will degrade both constituents.

Men's teams earn more money for the UI and pull in considerably more spectators on the whole. Because of this, Bowsby has his hands full upholding, if not strengthening, the department's stability and reputation. The 12 women's teams, growing in prevalence, require full-fledged attention, something impractical under a combined Athletics Department. The last thing that maturing women's teams need is a department inclined to devote its attention to the men's teams, which have adequate funding and widespread spectator loyalty.

If the UI has high hopes for the women's Athletics Department, officials need to seek a replacement for Grant who will dedicate full effort to the development and advancement of women's athletics and allocate unbiased funding to its teams. Meshing the two departments begs for a decrease in esteem for women's sports. If the men's teams flounder, funding will go toward their reconstruction. If the very same teams flourish, funding will go toward augmenting their greatness. Meanwhile, women's teams will undoubtedly be overshadowed and underrepresented at the university. The "real money makers" will benefit from the combined Athletics Department's resources.

Separate goals call for individual, objective direction. Consolidating the two departments ensures that both men's and women's athletics will receive less of the individualized attention they require.

Intolerant Gumbel should go

CBS spent big bucks last winter to get former "Today" host Bryant Gumbel to anchor the network's morning program, "The Early Show." Now the network faces the possibility of losing Gumbel, but not because he wants to leave.

CBS has been confronted with demands for Gumbel's immediate firing after he called Robert Knight of the Family Research Council a "fing idiot" on live television during last Thursday's edition of "The Early Show." Knight was on the program in support of the Boy Scouts of America regarding the Supreme Court decision that upheld the Scouts' right to exclude homosexual leaders.

Regardless of the position one takes on that decision, there is no excuse for Gumbel's sophomoric remark in reference to a guest on his show, which he made while he apparently thought his microphone was turned off.

Understandably, the complaints regarding Gumbel's gaffe are many. Most notably, the American Family Association has called on CBS President Leslie Moonves to terminate Gumbel immediately. Also, the Family Research Council is planning to file a complaint with the Federal Communications Commission.

Whatever the FCC decides is irrelevant. Gumbel lost massive proportions of personal integrity and journalistic credibility with his comment. The FCC should recommend Gumbel's dismissal, but before that happens, Moonves and CBS ought to act on their own and fire Gumbel for his overtly bigoted statement. At a time when diversity and tolerance are openly embraced throughout the United States, Gumbel's comment is loaded with intolerance toward Knight's traditional Christian family point of view. Gumbel is an experienced and seemingly professional journalist who is supposed to be unbiased and maintain objectivity in interviewing and reporting. With his comment, Gumbel clearly portrayed that he is neither unbiased or objective and therefore, unfit to do his job.

CBS spoke out openly against John Rocker's comments in a Sports Illustrated interview, in which the Atlanta Braves pitcher gave his negative views on minorities and homosexuals. The network would be hypocritical not to fire one of its own for making a comment that is at least equally offensive.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Celebrate your independence by working for world peace

Who wants war? Who wants to serve in wars such as World War I and II? Why does the world have so many conflicts and armed battles to maintain a halfway peaceful world? Aren't we all looking for the day when the whole world will have a truly peaceful environment to live a happy, productive, enjoyable life?

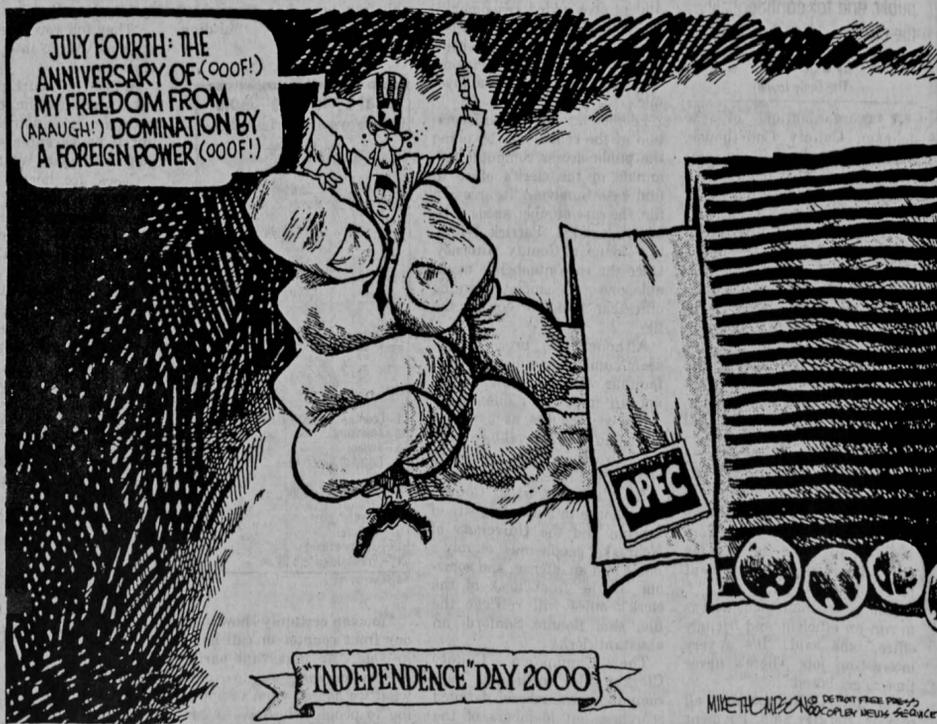

What if all people in the whole world followed the Golden Rule principles that our country was founded upon? It certainly appears there would be a much more peaceful world if all the "war lords" would use the Golden Rule as a daily guide and settle their differences in more peaceful ways.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur understood the answers to these questions when he spoke aboard the USS Missouri on Sept. 2, 1945: "Let us pray that peace be now restored to the world and that God will preserve it always." He declared, "We have had our last chance ... if we do not devise some greater and more equitable system. Armageddon will be at our door. The problem basically is theological and involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character. It must be one of the spirit if we are to save the flesh."

In all, we need to honor, respect and remember these days of remembrance because of the tremendous sacrifices all Americans have made since the first Independence Day to keep America and the rest of the world as peaceful as it is in 2000. Each time we remember these days of victory we can realize the war doesn't really make a peaceful world and ponder the words of Gen. MacArthur.

Learning independence from forefathers and grandfathers

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one person to dissolve the bonds that tie him to a society that which promotes victimhood, envy, malaise, and codependence, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that he should declare the causes that impel him to the separation.

Will anyone recognize the source of that admittedly haphazard adaptation? For a generation that knows virtually nothing about independence, let alone the world-shaking piece of prose that paid it homage, the prospects are not promising. Luckily, it's not too late for us to learn something about independence.

Living in a Currier dorm room, 60 miles away from my family in Bettendorf and the friends I grew up with in Dubuque, I thought I knew something about independence.

Moving out to an Arlington, Va., apartment hundreds of miles away from home, where I knew no one, I thought I knew something about independence.

Sitting in the front pew at Holy Trinity Church in Dubuque last April, saying goodbye to the greatest man I've ever known, I knew that I had a lot to learn.

Dale Phillips was born in 1927 in Madison, Wis. While still a young man, he left all he knew behind to serve his country as a soldier in the U.S. Army in World War II. He was one of many who left behind careers, schooling, family, and freedom to cross the Atlantic and fight for the freedom of a continent, for the freedom of cities and villages of strangers.

Returning from the European Theatre, Dale Phillips began a four-decade career as a teamster. Each day he rose early, worked hard, retired to bed exhausted, and found no fault with the difficulties of supporting a family while saving for the future.

I only witnessed the last 20 years of his life, but in this short time, I saw heroic deeds in regular life.

I saw him and his wife, Evelyn, build a family that embraced and promoted the wide array of talents and interests held by each of its members.

I saw him hold fiercely to his beliefs in right and wrong, while at the same time not afraid to admit that he could be wrong and that it was never too late to change.

I saw him care for his wife through years of debilitating illness, allowing her to live out her final days and months in the comfort of her own home, among familiar surroundings.

I saw him fight cancer in his leg, his back, and in what seemed like a thousand other places on his body, in hospitals and at home. I saw him use every ounce of his strength to climb 20 steps every night to sleep in his own bed. I saw him fight weakness just to visit me at my internship in D.C.

I sat with him, on the end of his bed, in the last weeks of his life, when the only thing he cared about was making his imminent passing as easy on his children and grandchildren as he could, as we struggled to find the words to say goodbye.

I hold this truth to be self-evident: I don't know a damn thing about hardship, about true love, about selfless suffering, or about any of the other spectacular gifts that make life worth living. But I'm trying to learn, with each and every day's little lessons. Dale Phillips and his contemporaries offer a shining example of independence, one that won't be found at $5 Cup Night, at Rush Week, or at SAS rallies. It's time for us to learn. Dale Phillips was just one of the countless role models we have in our midst. Those that Tom Brokaw rightfully called "The Greatest Generation" are still with us. Let's not squander our time with them.

For the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the Protection of Divine Providence, I pledge my Life, my Fortune, and my sacred Honor.

OpSail 2000 makes it a special Fourth of July for the New York Harbor.

By Larry McShane
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Like pages of a history book sprung to life, towering tall ships with crisp white sails and crews in formation glided through New York Harbor Tuesday as OpSail 2000 marked a very special Fourth of July.

Spectators came from across the city and around the world for a rare look at the floating parade, which included two dozen warships from 14 countries in only the sixth International Naval Review in history.

President Clinton, standing on the flight deck of the USS John F. Kennedy, was among those impressed by the 11-mile line of sea-faring craft of all sizes and shapes. The ships sailed into sight with the Statue of Liberty as a backdrop.

The Operation Sail marked the first return of the tall ships to New York since 1992's 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' journey. The 26 Class-A sailing ships, those over 160 feet, came from 19 countries.

They had miles of canvas, but inconsistent breezes and tight maneuvering space forced them to use their engines. More than 100 smaller wind-powered vessels also were part of the parade of sails.

A man wanted for murder holds 15 hostages for five hours in an arcade before surrendering.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A gang member wanted for murder shot and wounded five people and took 15 others hostage on the Santa Monica Pier before being talked into surrendering and releasing his last two captives early Tuesday, police said.

The pier and its small amusement park, restaurants and arcade remained closed much of the day as police collected evidence and interviewed more than 100 witnesses who were huddled at the west end of the pier during the five-hour hostage crisis.

The confrontation started around 1:04 a.m., when San Bernardino County Sheriff's deputies told Santa Monica police that a pair of men wanted for three separate gang-related killings were on the pier, Santa Monica police Lt. Gary Gallinot said.

The two men were spotted talking on a pay phone near the Playland Arcade. One man, identified as Jose Flores, 30, was arrested after a scuffle, and two weapons were confiscated, Gallinot said.

The second man, Oswaldo Amezcua, 25, ran toward the arcade, turned and fired at officers who were chasing him, police said. Three officers, a 17-year-old boy and a 35-year-old woman were wounded, Gallinot said.

Amezcua then took 15 hostages inside the arcade, Gallinot said. Between 75 and 100 patrons and employees were herded into a restaurant at the ocean end of the pier and guarded for the duration of the crisis.

NEW YORK — Like pages of a history book sprung to life, towering tall ships with crisp white sails and crews in formation glided through New York Harbor Tuesday as OpSail 2000 marked a very special Fourth of July.

Spectators came from across the city and around the world for a rare look at the floating parade, which included two dozen warships from 14 countries in only the sixth International Naval Review in history.

Park from the Bronx with her 10-year-old son, Michael, who was buying an OpSail T-shirt.

"We're very excited," she said moments after a Stealth fighter buzzed overhead as part of the festivities. "This is the closest I've ever been to a Stealth fighter. It's very interesting."

Nearby, Samuel Johnson of Brooklyn wielded his video camera over the heads of spectators standing 20-deep in Battery Park. They watched as the extraordinary water show was led by the Coast Guard barque Eagle — a craft seized from the Nazis after World War II.

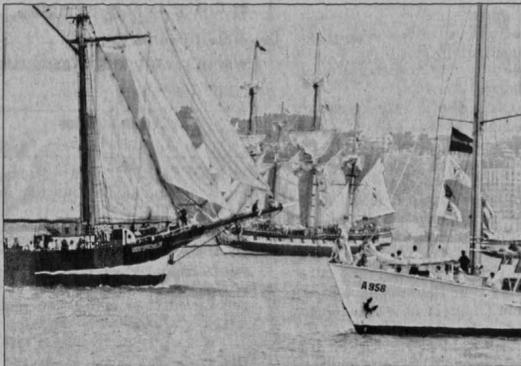

Up at Riverbank State Park in Harlem, the crowd stretched across 10 blocks. It took the parade almost two hours to reach the park, but spectators both young and old said it was worth the wait.

"They're beautiful ships," said 78-year-old Lawrence Gibson, a retiree from the Bronx. "It's the first time I've seen anything like this ... I'm used to seeing these ships just in books."

The tall ships, drawing the biggest oohs and aahs, led the floating parade beneath the Verrazano Bridge, emerging as if beamed in via time machine through a morning harbor haze.

Clinton, speaking shortly after the ships headed north on the Hudson River, delivered a message of good will.

"Our ancestors came here on immigrant ships and slave ships," Clinton reminded his audience, calling for acceptance of immigrants and people of color. "We must resolve never to close the golden door behind us."

He also announced that America's next generation of destroyers would be named for late Adm. Elmo Zumwalt Jr., architect of the modern U.S. Navy. Clinton called Zumwalt, who died in January at age 79, "my mentor, my friend and a magnificent role model."

About halfway through the naval review, the gray clouds and haze vanished, giving Clinton a better view of Ellis Island, the Statue of Liberty and the New York skyline. More than 10,000 U.S. and foreign sailors participated in the review, many standing at attention on the decks of their ships and saluting Clinton.

Crew members on a Canadian frigate, the Ville de Quebec, not only took off their hats and shouted "hip hip hooray," but blasted a rendition of the song "New York, New York" from their loudspeakers.

NATION BRIEF

Got Milk?

BLOOMER, Wis. (AP) — A number of dairy farmers around the nation dumped their milk on the Fourth of July to protest low milk prices, an organizer of the effort said.

Steve Siverling of Bloomer said hundreds of farmers from 11 states had pledged to withhold at least 500,000 pounds of milk from market or put it to other use, but he would not have final figures for several weeks on how many actually took part.

He said he sprayed 3,500 pounds of milk on his fields.

"We have an election year. We have a lot of disgruntled farmers. We have the lowest prices we've ever had," Siverling said. "If we don't change the system, there won't be any farmers out there producing."

Farmers were getting approximately $16 per hundred pounds of milk last September, but it has declined since and is now about $10 for that amount, he said.

The farmers are urging the government to establish an emergency basic price of $13.50 for 100 pounds of milk.

They also want a mandatory supply-management system that would factor in farmers' cost of production and more controls over the guaranteed income that processors are allowed to use in setting their prices.

Chetek dairyman Don Moos, who helped Siverling organize the strike, said it costs the average dairy farmer approximately $17.50 to produce 100 pounds of milk.

Zen Miller, a University of Wisconsin Extension dairy and livestock agent, said he doubts whether the milk strike will have much effect on prices.

"We'll see a little price rise, but it won't take enough product off the market to make much of a difference," he said.

David Metzger, the owner of Union Star Cheese Factory in Winnebago County, said he sees the strike as symbolic.

"They're definitely going through very hard times now. It's not easy watching it," he said.

Benefits outweigh risks with Pill, study finds

A new report concludes that the risk of strokes for women on the Pill is not high enough to matter.

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — A new report suggests that while women taking birth control pills — even the newer, low-dose forms — are at higher risk of stroke, that risk is outweighed by the contraceptive benefits of the pills.

The report, an analysis of 16 previous studies, is in today's

Journal of the American Medical Association.

The low-dose forms, taken by most of the more than 10 million U.S. women using oral contraceptives, contain less estrogen than the pill introduced 40 years ago and are thought to be safer. Still, women taking them were nearly twice as likely as non-users to suffer a stroke, while women using higher-dose pills faced nearly a threefold risk.

However, because strokes are so rare in women of reproductive age, the risk translates to only one additional stroke yearly per 24,000 women for low-dose pill users and one per 12,000 women for higher dosages, the report concludes.

The risks were associated with current rather than previous use.

Strokes are a known risk factor for higher-dose pills, but previous research had been less clear about lower dosages — pills with less than 50 micrograms of estrogen, said S. Claiborne Johnston, a co-author of the report and an assistant professor of neurology at the University of California, San Francisco.

"The key is about whether this risk matters," given how effective the pill is at preventing pregnancy, he said.

If oral contraceptives were replaced by condoms, an estimated 687,000 additional unintended pregnancies would result each year, the study authors said. Some of those women likely would have abortions, and those who didn't would face health risks associated with pregnancy plus "major psychological and economic consequences" of unintended children, Johnston said.

Stroke risk linked to the pill thus appears to be outweighed by its benefits, the authors wrote.

The study was funded by the National Stroke Association and the National Institutes of Health.

5 wounded in Santa Monica pier shootout

A man wanted for murder holds 15 hostages for five hours in an arcade before surrendering.

By Gary Gentile
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A gang member wanted for murder shot and wounded five people and took 15 others hostage on the Santa Monica Pier before being talked into surrendering and releasing his last two captives early Tuesday, police said.

The pier and its small amusement park, restaurants and arcade remained closed much of the day as police collected evidence and interviewed more than 100 witnesses who were huddled at the west end of the pier during the five-hour hostage crisis.

The confrontation started around 1:04 a.m., when San Bernardino County Sheriff's deputies told Santa Monica police that a pair of men wanted for three separate gang-related killings were on the pier, Santa Monica police Lt. Gary Gallinot said.

The two men were spotted talking on a pay phone near the Playland Arcade. One man, identified as Jose Flores, 30, was arrested after a scuffle, and two weapons were confiscated, Gallinot said.

The second man, Oswaldo Amezcua, 25, ran toward the arcade, turned and fired at officers who were chasing him, police said. Three officers, a 17-year-old boy and a 35-year-old woman were wounded, Gallinot said.

Amezcua then took 15 hostages inside the arcade, Gallinot said. Between 75 and 100 patrons and employees were herded into a restaurant at the ocean end of the pier and guarded for the duration of the crisis.

Police, deputies and hostage negotiators then surrounded the pier, which has been used as a locale in several movies. With the pier's glowing neon sign and its famous Ferris wheel in the background, the Pacific Ocean glistened under the glare of television helicopter lights.

A crisis negotiator was brought in after Amezcua took hostages in the Playland Arcade. Three children and a woman were released around 4 a.m., Gallinot said. In the next two hours, more hostages were released unharmed and only two hostages remained around 6:15 a.m.

A shirtless Amezcua surrendered peacefully about 6:40 a.m. and was taken into custody. He faces four counts of attempted murder and 15 counts of kidnapping, said Santa Monica Police Chief James Butts.

Amezcua and Flores were wanted for gang-related homicides that happened last month in Victorville and Ontario, said Cindy Beavers, a spokeswoman for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department.

The pair were also wanted for a June 25 shootout with a sheriff's deputy in Fontana, she said. The deputy was not injured.

Spy-target denies terrorist link

■ A Swiss-Lebanese man says his Islamic center was religious in nature, not anti-Israeli.

By Alexander G. Higgins
Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — A Swiss-Lebanese man at the center of a bungled Israeli spy operation said Tuesday that the Islamic center he ran was set up for religious purposes and was not linked to anti-Israeli activities.

On the second day of the trial of an Israeli Mossad agent caught in a February 1998 espionage attempt, lawyers for the Swiss government and the agent probed for links between Abdallah el-Zein and terrorist masters in Lebanon and Iran.

But a Swiss police expert testified that investigators had been unable to connect the worldwide network of Ahl El-Beit centers to Hezbollah, the Iranian-backed guerrilla group that fought to oust Israeli troops from southern Lebanon.

"The suspicion exists," said Hans Knaus of Switzerland's federal police. "But we have not been able to confirm it."

Other police officers described Tuesday how they caught the Israeli agent, identified as Issac Bental, and four colleagues installing bugging equipment after midnight in the basement of an apartment building where el-Zein had lived near the capital, Bern.

Police were called in when neighbors reported strange noises.

Rudolf Leuenberger of Bern state police said he and his partner found Bental and two other agents in the basement and said there were enough suspicious elements, including identical stamps in their Israeli passports, that police decided to take them in for questioning. Two other agents keeping watch outside were also questioned.

Only Bental was arrested, because he was holding a bag with tools to install the wiretap.

Contained in two hollowed-out boards about four feet long, the bugging system included a cellular phone, a timer and 24 batteries. The phone was set up to dial a recording center every time the telephone in el-Zein's apartment was taken off the hook.

"It could have worked for years," said Victor Rufenacht, the federal police technology expert.

El-Zein told the court that the Ahl El-Beit center he ran organized soccer teams, promoted friendship, and sent money to orphans in Lebanon and Iraq, but its main purpose was to encourage Islamic worship.

Chechen suicide bombings stun Russia

■ Russia imposes a curfew and threatens to shoot without warning anyone caught violating it.

By Lvoma Turpalov
Associated Press

GUDERMES, Russia — Russian troops rounded up suspects in a succession of suicide truck-bombings in Chechnya and threatened Tuesday to fire without warning on violators of a new curfew as wounded soldiers recounted the deadly weekend attacks.

"I was watching television with the guys. It's the last thing I remember. I regained consciousness when the guys were digging me out of the ground," Lt. Vladimir Volodin told the Associated Press Tuesday. He suffered a broken leg and a chest injury and was scarred by shrapnel wounds.

Volodin was recovering in a hospital in the city of Vladikavkaz, just west of the Chechen border, after the Sunday night bombing near his barracks in the central Chechen town of Argun.

The blast, which killed 26 soldiers, was one of five suicide truck-bombings aimed at Russian forces in Chechnya that night — the Russians' biggest setback in months. The organized attack underscored the difficulty Russia is having in defeating the rebels, despite far more troops and fire power.

The head of the Federal Security Service, the main successor to the KGB, Tuesday blamed lax military commanders for failing to prevent the bombings despite intelligence warnings.

The blasts "are the failures of the commanders who are in charge there," Nikolai Patrushev was quoted by the Interfax news agency as saying.

Russian troops searched several Chechen towns and cities for suspected rebels Tuesday. Police detained 46 people in the southwestern town of Urus-Martan, the site of one of the blasts, and a dozen elsewhere, military officials said.

Volodin, the wounded officer, said fighting was raging as he regained consciousness and it took two hours before he was extracted from the rubble.

■ Mark Kotsay's two-run double helps Florida gain fifth-straight victory.

MIAMI (AP) — Mark Kotsay tied the score with a two-run double and came home with the go-ahead run on the front end of a double steal as the Florida Marlins used a six-run fifth inning to beat the New York Mets 9-8 Tuesday.

Florida, which began its comeback from a 5-0 deficit on Alex Gonzalez's three-run homer in the fourth, has won five straight for the first time since a seven-game streak last Aug. 6-13.

Bobby M. Jones (0-1), recalled from the minor leagues before the game, led 5-3 in the fifth but walked pinch-hitter Mark Smith, then allowed Luis Castillo's single and Kotsay's double.

Cliff Floyd reached on an infield single, with Kotsay advancing. Pat Mahomes relieved, and Floyd broke for second on the first pitch to Preston Wilson.

When catcher Todd Pratt threw to second, Kotsay broke for the plate and scored as Pratt's one-hopper got away from shortstop Melvin Mora.

After walks to Wilson and Derrek Lee loaded the bases, Mora's two-out error on Mike Redmond's grounder allowed Floyd to score. Smith followed with a two-run single that made it 9-5, with Redmond tagged out during a rundown between home and third.

Mike Piazza's 21-game hitting streak ended when he pinch hit in the ninth and grounded into a fielder's choice. Piazza was not in the Mets' lineup because of a slightly bruised left elbow sustained in New York's 2-0 loss Monday night, when he was hit by Wilson's back swing in the ninth.

Cardinals 14, Reds 3

ST. LOUIS — Jim Edmonds hit a pair of two-run homers and Andy Benes won his fifth straight decision, leading the St. Louis Cardinals over the Cincinnati Reds 14-3 Tuesday.

It was the 10th career multihomer game for Edmonds and second this season, with both homers going to the opposite field. He hit a 3-1 pitch from Ron Villone (7-6) into the Reds' bullpen in a six-run first and hit his 24th homer off Scott Williamson in the third.

Edmonds, who also walked and scored in the second, is 12-for-25 against the Reds this season with four homers and seven RBIs.

Keith McDonald homered in his first major league at-bat, pinch hitting in the eighth off Andy Larkin.

Tigers 11, Devil Rays 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Dean Palmer had two homers and four RBIs, and Dave Micki won for the first time since May 20 as the Detroit Tigers beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 11-0 Tuesday for their season-high fifth straight victory.

Bobby Higginson and Deivi Cruz also homered for the Tigers, who got a solo shot from Palmer in the third and three-run shot in the ninth for his first multihomer game since April 21, 1999.

Micki (3-9), who went 0-4 in six starts since beating Boston, scattered eight hits in seven innings. He struck out four, walked none and only allowed ■ Cleveland manager Charlie Manuel has Ping-Pong table and couches removed from clubhouse.

By TOM WITHERS
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) — Play time is over for the Indians. Here are the new rules: No paddles, no poker and no pillows.

In an attempt to get his team focused on winning, Cleveland manager Charlie Manuel had a Ping-Pong table and two cushy couches removed from the Indians' clubhouse.

He's also banned card games. Only the big-screen TV survived. Trouble is, you have to stand to watch it.

"I felt these things were a distraction from what we really wanted to accomplish, to play baseball — winning baseball," Manuel said Tuesday before the Indians opened a three-game series against the Toronto Blue Jays. "This is not a punishment. We want to be more professional, and we want the players focusing on baseball."

Manuel announced his decision to redecorate the clubhouse during a meeting following Sunday's win over Minnesota.

N. Ireland seethes as marching season nears

■ Protestants menace streets and attack police as clash deepens.

By Shawn Pogatchnik
Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Masked youths set vehicles ablaze, and police traded gunshots with protesters in a Protestant area of Belfast Tuesday, as anti-Catholic extremists menaced the streets of Northern Ireland for a second straight night.

Rage flared as the British territory braced for more violent Protestant protest over British authorities' determination to restrict traditional parades in Catholic areas.

Near the volatile town of Portadown, 30 miles to the southwest, police used water cannons — rarely deployed in Northern Ireland — to disperse several hundred people protesting the banning of a Protestant march through a Catholic neighborhood this Sunday.

The paramilitary outlaws coordinating the mayhem from behind the scenes have warned that rioting will intensify if the Orange Order, a legal Protestant fraternal group, isn't allowed to conduct a banned march through the main Catholic district of Portadown on Sunday. Britain and the province's police commander, Chief Constable Ronnie Flanagan, say that won't be allowed to happen.

Britain's Northern Ireland Secretary, Peter Mandelson, condemned the violence as "huggery, nothing more and nothing less."

Annual confrontations over

Orangemen's thwarted efforts to parade down the disputed Garvaghy Road in Portadown ignited widespread street violence in 1996, 1997 and 1998.

Relative peace reigned last year after Orange leaders opted not to challenge a police blockade at their Portadown march's midway point, an Anglican church near the Catholic area. But history appears set to repeat itself with tensions and destruction mounting — and some of the province's most feared terrorists returning to the fore.

Guarded optimism marks local reaction to Fox's victory

Willis said one of Mexico's strongest policy differences with the United States has been over relations with Cuba. Fox said he would maintain Mexico's "intense relations with Cuba and intensify them if possible."

The talk of change assumes that Fox will have the power and ability to push through his new policies, Willis said. This could be much to ask of the president-elect, whose party does not control the Senate, she said.

She also pointed to the possible problem of the bureaucracy in state and local governments.

"Corruption runs pretty deep in Mexican society," she said.

On drug trafficking, Fox called on the U.S. government to abandon the "certification" of other countries' anti-drug efforts and instead join in a regional anti-narcotics organization — an idea Fox said he had already discussed with Colombia. "We can check on each other," he said.

Mexico had earlier rejected a Panamanian proposal for a type of hemispheric anti-drug center.

Clearly, Fox has a challenge ahead of him, Herrera said. To make a better Mexico, Fox needs to change people and ideas, he said.

Herrera said many Mexicans are hopeful about the new Fox administration because they believe that a change in their government could mean a change in their lives.

SAS to take protest across Iowa

SAS CARAVAN

Dale Mathias, the manager of the Target store in Coral Ridge Mall, said the store's employees know the protesters are coming, but his store does not yet have plans to deal with the group.

"Target denies any of these claims," he said.

Ned Bertz, a UI graduate student and member of SAS, said Target claimed to have investigated the factories and reported conditions to be fine.

"They should open up the company to independent monitors and publicly disclose all the locations of the factories they use," he said.

In addition to the caravan, SAS members have talked to new students at UI Orientation and handed out leaflets at this past weekend's Jazz Fest. They are also preparing a benefit concert at the Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St., to be held on July 30.

The benefit will raise funds for the defense of SAS members arrested earlier this year.

AFRICAN ART

In the store are figures of Buddha, Christ, Krishna, Horus, Oedipus, Zeus, the Sphinx and more. There are icons, pottery, walls of ceremonial masks, stones, bronzes and drums. For the rather small size of Mythos, it would take days to accurately catalogue its contents, Johnson said.

"Each tribe or people has specific perspectives of natural phenomena," he said. "Each culture's art, as unique representations of inner-spiritual beliefs, was a way of naming the unknown. Like saints praying to God for deliverance, religion is often the process of gaining, controlling, and placating its power."

At Special Collections, imported masks, jewelry, animal and human figurines, baskets, drums, table settings and a wide variety of other colorful African artifacts stand out amidst hurrying mall crowds.

The two kiosks are full of decorations — real art for those willing to appreciate it, said Eric Ogoli, a native of Kenya.

"I have come to give the best parts of Africa to people, to share my culture with Iowa, because it has been so good to me," he said.

Ogoli said each piece of art is handmade and unique, and some pieces represent religious customs, symbols of family, dignity, self-respect and fertility. Yet a majority of the artifacts serve strictly aesthetic purposes — their functions being more cultural than religious, Ogoli said.

Much of the art captures the freedom and agility of animals. Ebony carvings and egg stones of indigenous African creatures line the small kiosks.

"Animals are known to be the best friends of human beings," Ogoli said.

"This art represents a way to find beauty, heritage and pride in African cultures," said Linda Hinderks, a Coralville resident, as she purchased an artifact from Special Collections. "I feel like I hardly see animals anymore. In America, we have driven them away. In Africa, they have made these small monuments. There is a magic and mystery to it."

This kid not just kidding around

■ Toby Kid, who has performed across the country and in Europe, will bring his act to Iowa City.

By Luc Hunt
The Daily Iowan

When Toby Kid was 6 years old, he already knew he wanted to be funny when he grew up. By the age of 16, Kid had already begun to emulate such comic geniuses as Captain Kangaroo and Red Skelton.

Kid, a prop comic, juggler, magician, clown, actor and stand-up artist, has toured Europe as a solo performer, entertained audiences in 48 states, and even visited comedy-rich Canada with success.

Kid

Tonight, he will perform at One-Eyed Jake's, 18 1/2 S. Clinton St.

"I started performing in Iowa in 1984, got exposed to some national agencies, and worked with some cool people along the way," Kid said. "The most meaningful message I would like to get across is to break the pace of life, to make people smile and to have fun."

Kid, the youngest of nine boys in a German-Catholic family, was born and raised on an Iowa farm. He spent his youth in the spotlight, playing football, participating in student government, romancing girls, and working hard to stay on the school's honor roll, he said. After graduating from Iowa State University, he set out to become a comedian.

"I did not set out to be famous," Kid said. "I have a feet-on-the-ground, goal-oriented background. That materializes in maintaining a family, making an income and improving my routines. As long as I make people laugh, I know that I'm doing my job."

Kid's philosophy on comedy is simple. His routine is story-based, meaning its foundation is his own personal experiences. He likes to use his sense of humor to invite people to join his own esoteric world, to let people see the world differently, he said.

"See, when you're a comic, you think about culture and the world in very different ways from those of others," he said. "Because your job is always for a live audience, you have to convince people of what is happening on stage. It's your job to make them believe, and believe me, there is a lot of good and a lot of bad comedy out there."

Kid adheres to the idea that anything can be made funny in the right context.

"Once, my senile grandfather had a wedding anniversary. I brought jam, because my grandmother was making toast. People laughed," said Kid, who plays a punning stage character in all his acts.

And though his routines are not limited by language, he has no problems with presenting himself as a strictly clean comic.

"I've performed private engagements for more than 300 of the Fortune 500 companies, knowing that not all my jokes could be told. Quality is what they expect. There is no reason to offend people with language."

"Tonight's audience can expect to be loose with his language, at ease in his 'kidding' around with audience members.

"If you saw me on the street, you wouldn't think I'm a comic," Kid said. "Some of the most successful comics in America are unknown. But the thrill of a live show is undeniable. We're all pros, and we all die on stage."

LOS ANGELES - In the latest network bid for a share of the reality-based television trend, 10 people will surrender their privacy Wednesday night on the new TV series "Big Brother."

CBS is seeking to match the success of "Survivor," which gathered 16 contestants on a Malaysian island to outlast each other for $1 million prize under television's watchful gaze.

In "Big Brother," the contestants are isolated in an 1,800-square foot home built on a corner of a CBS Studio Center parking lot. They were to meet for the first time when they enter the house late Tuesday evening.

The network was withholding the identities and hometowns of the contestants - who sent in videotaped applications and underwent what CBS called extensive screening and background checks - until the group was secluded in the house.

Although the original Dutch version of "Big Brother" was harshly criticized as exploitative and voyeuristic, the show became a hit and was copied in Germany and Spain.

Criticism has been more muted in America, although some media observers have questioned how far the reality-TV trend might go. Fox already saw how far it could go with "Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire?"

"People want something different. There's more of a voyeuristic nature to our watching habits," said Leslie Moonves, the president of CBS Television, which paid a reported $20 million to the show's Dutch creator for the rights.

"Big Brother" is intended to be "fun," according to series producer Paul Romer. "Humans are curious beings. We like to know how other people live."

The show's debut tonight comes right after the sixth episode of "Survivor" and is intended to capitalize on its popularity. The castaways show was the first series to make a dent in the ratings of ABC's hit "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire."

Like "Survivor," the contestants on "Big Brother" will gradually whittle their ranks down to a final participant. Every two weeks, the housemates will nominate two colleagues for expulsion, and TV viewers vote out one of them by phone. The audience chooses the winner of the $500,000 prize from the three remaining players.

Unlike the island show, which was filmed last spring, "Big Brother" is airing five nights a week (Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday is its regular berth).

The daily record made by 28 cameras and 60 microphones installed throughout the house will be quickly edited for the next broadcast. The Thursday episode, which will feature the contestant ousted that week, will be a live-in-studio edition.

The house, with adjoining vegetable garden, is stocked with staples (minus the rats that served as a "Survivor" menu item). There's no TV, radio or newspapers, although each person can bring a small suitcase with books or games.

Roving Mullinix

■ She may be a bit chancy, but Siri Mullinix has her coach's approval.

By Joseph White
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — Siri Mullinix plays goalkeeper as if she'd rather be somewhere else. She often strays 20-25 yards in front of the goal, and it's certainly not her style to wait by the net for the next shot to be fired her way. Her game might look chancy to the nervous fan in the stands. To U.S. women's coach April Heinrichs, it's cutting edge, and that's why Mullinix has moved ahead of World Cup hero Briana Scurry in the buildup to the Sydney Olympics. "I don't think it's a difficult decision," Heinrichs said after Mullinix recorded her 10th

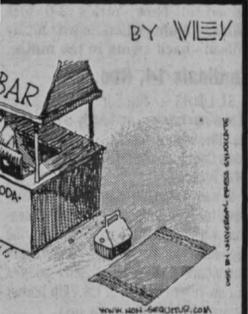

Anthony Mason released after French Quarter arrest

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Charlotte Hornets forward Anthony Mason was released from jail Tuesday after being accused of starting a riot and assaulting a police officer in the French Quarter. Mason, 33, was arrested Monday night after being sprayed with pepper by officers, police spokesman Joseph Narcisse said. Two officers noticed two groups of men arguing over women on Bourbon Street, Narcisse said. When the officers tried to separate the groups, the 6-foot-8, 270-pound Mason hit one of the officers and began rallying the crowd, the spokesman said. "The officer who had been hit tried to subdue Mason with pepper spray but with little effect, Narcisse said. Other officers arrived and some in the crowd threw bottles and shouted racial slurs

Anthony Mason released after French Quarter arrest
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Charlotte Hornets forward Anthony Mason was released from jail Tuesday after being accused of starting a riot and assaulting a police officer in the French Quarter.
Mason, 33, was arrested Monday night after being sprayed with pepper by officers, police spokesman Joseph Narcisse said.
Two officers noticed two groups of men arguing over women on Bourbon Street, Narcisse said. When the officers tried to separate the groups, the 6-foot-8, 270-pound Mason hit one of the officers and began rallying the crowd, the spokesman said.
The officer who had been hit tried to subdue Mason with pepper spray but with little effect, Narcisse said.
Other officers arrived and some in the crowd threw bottles and shouted racial slurs

SAY WHAT?
We can't guarantee that we won't have 17 days of hailstorms; we can't guarantee there won't be some unfortunate security incident. We can't guarantee there won't be a sudden contagious illness that causes us to lose half our workforce, those sorts of things, acts of God.

Roving Mullinix surpasses Scurry as U.S. goalie
She may be a bit chancy, but Siri Mullinix has her coach's approval.
By Joseph White
Associated Press
FOXBORO, Mass. — Siri Mullinix plays goalkeeper as if she'd rather be somewhere else. She often strays 20-25 yards in front of the goal, and it's certainly not her style to wait by the net for the next shot to be fired her way.
Her game might look chancy to the nervous fan in the stands. To U.S. women's coach April Heinrichs, it's cutting edge, and that's why Mullinix has moved ahead of World Cup hero Briana Scurry in the buildup to the Sydney Olympics.
"I don't think it's a difficult decision," Heinrichs said after Mullinix recorded her 10th shutout of the year in Monday night's 1-0 victory over Brazil in the Gold Cup final. "You watch what's happening in front of you, and you see Siri Mullinix is playing on the cutting edge of international women's soccer. We're going to continue to go with her."

Scurry is one of the most familiar faces from last year's phenomenal World Cup run. She made the diving save in the penalty shootout in the final against China, setting up Brandi Chastain's winning kick and take-off-the-shirt celebration.
But Scurry hasn't played much since, just one half of one game this year, because of shin splints. The long layoff means she's not in match shape, although she is expected to rejoin the team later this month for a tournament in Germany. Right now, she's stuck at 99 international appearances, her milestone century cap on hold.

Enter Mullinix, who was in the American talent pool last year but didn't make the World Cup roster.
Like Mia Hamm and several other U.S. team regulars, Mullinix is a product of the University of North Carolina soccer dynasty. At first, she felt some wariness from her teammates because she was filling in for an established star on a close-knit team.
"A little bit, but it came down to the bottom line," Mullinix said. "She's injured, and there's really no other option. With time and chance, I think they have confidence in me."
What was supposed to be an interim role is instead becoming a passing of the torch. In 13 games, Mullinix has allowed just two goals — both on penalty kicks. The only score she has allowed in open play came when she entered a game as a second-half substitute for Scurry.

When Canada scored on a penalty kick in the Gold Cup semifinals, it ended Mullinix's 512-minute shutout streak. Her 10 shutouts are only two short of Scurry's best for an entire year, and the hugs Mullinix received after she was named top goalkeeper of the Gold Cup showed no doubt she's now an accepted member of the top crew.
"This whole tournament, the last few months, she's been incredible," defenseman Lorrie Fair said.
After an initial adjustment, the players say they've come to prefer the roving style Mullinix honed at North Carolina. She often looks like a defensive sweeper, chasing down loose balls or trying to stop a breakthrough before it can start.
"The farther she can extend her range, the less running and tracking we have to do," Fair said.

SPORTSWATCH
"Shayne Corson doesn't have to fight Tie Domi and I don't have to fight Shayne Corson," added Roberts. "So I think we're all going to get along just fine."
Roberts led the Hurricanes in power-play goals with 12 and finished third on the team in points and goals. He is the sixth player in NHL history to score 300 goals while collecting 2,000 penalty minutes.
Tour to ask Supreme Court to take up Martin case
With opposite opinions from two federal appeals courts on whether walking is an integral part of championship golf, the PGA Tour said Monday it would ask the U.S. Supreme Court to review the decision that allows Casey Martin to ride in a cart.
The tour said it would file its motion today, the deadline imposed by the Supreme Court. The court probably will not decide until late October whether to take up the case.

Williams' father might not be in attendance for their match

Yet he insisted he would not watch Thursday's semis, saying he plans instead to attend the funeral of a friend of a Wimbledon steward he met.

"I don't want to watch Venus beat up on Serena or Serena beat up on Venus," he said. "Who would I pull for? The wife would leave me. I'm going to go to the funeral because coming to watch Venus and Serena, my two girls, that is a funeral. One of them is going to be buried. I might as well go to a real funeral. At least I get the music."

Venus and Serena, both of whom are coming back from injuries and long absences from the tour, were surprised to hear he might not watch them and still expect him to be there.

If Mrs. Williams wants to watch at court-side, she'll have to fly in from Florida quickly after deciding to stay home this tournament.

Venus celebrated her victory on the Fourth of July by grabbing a large American flag handed to her by fans near the front row. Then with a towel draped over her shoulders, she mouthed, "Unbelievable," as she soaked in the ovation from the crowd and the guests in the Royal Box.

There was an urgency to Venus' victory for her and the whole family. Hingis had won all three of their previous Grand Slam duels — in the 1997 U.S. Open final, the 1998 French Open quarters, and the U.S. Open semis last year — and had become a rival to both sisters, the kind of steady, clever player they both felt they should beat but often couldn't.

Serena cracked through first, downing Hingis for the U.S. Open title last year after Venus' defeat, and now Venus used to taste the same satisfaction.

All of the quarterfinals Tuesday, Venus' victory over Hingis generated the most heat — two players near the top of their game, playing aggressive tennis, going for winners. Williams sizzled in the first set, surging forward point after point, boldly smacking volley winners from midcourt and at the net, outlasting Hingis on rallies.

The momentum shifted, and Hingis, the 1997 champion, had her dominant moments, moving Williams side to side, pressuring her into mistakes. But then Williams came on strong again, serving aces, clubbing winners, beating Hingis at her own game in long rallies.

Williams won the last three games of the first set, finishing with an ace. But after going up a break at 3-2 in the second set, she couldn't put the match away. Suddenly, neither one could hold service, each receiver taking on the role of irresistible force. Hingis broke back to 3-3, saved three break points for a 4-3 lead, then broke Williams again for 5-3. After dropping serve when Williams ripped a return down the line, Hingis broke her once more for the set.

The third set began the same way, with five straight service breaks. But rather than sinking into sloppiness, as many matches do when neither player can hold serve, this one soared with the spectacle of two women refusing to yield.

Williams finally held to take a 4-2 lead that she never relinquished. Serving for the match at 5-4, she closed it out at love with an ace into the wide corner. That set off a long, lingering standing ovation for both players.

"It's a great way to end it," Williams said of her eighth ace. "Either I was making winners or making mistakes. But I was willing to take that risk."

in a second-round win over Karol Kucera.

He looked perfectly healthy — some players have accused him of exaggerating the injury — in beating Jonas Bjorkman in three sets on Monday, improving to 50-1 at Wimbledon in the last seven years.

"Even if he (Samppras) had a broken leg, I wouldn't say the match is won," said Gambill, a 23-year-old American who is 1-2 against Samppras and won the last time they played just over a year ago in a hardcourt tournament in Scottsdale, Ariz. This is Gambill's 12th Grand Slam and the first time he's been past the third round.

Agassi and Philippoussis are playing for the first time on grass, with Agassi leading 3-1 in head-to-heads. They met earlier this year at the Australian Open, where Agassi won in four sets in the round of 16 en route to the title.

The 23-year-old Philippoussis, runner-up in the 1998 U.S. Open, has hammered 132 aces in four matches, 45 more than anyone else.

McGwire, Sosa, Piazza are others who highlight All-Star lineup

ALL-STAR

Rodriguez, one of the few players on Texas who hasn't slumped, received the most votes (2,808,456), ending the streak of Ken Griffey Jr., the top vote-getter the previous four years and five times overall before his off-season trade from Seattle to Cincinnati.

"Maybe I opened the door for the catchers," Rodriguez said. "This will be more special for me because I got the most votes. I never expected it to be like that. It's a dream come true. I didn't realize I had so many fans."

Rodriguez, the first AL catcher to top voting, will be appearing in his ninth consecutive All-Star game, his eighth straight as a starter.

Mets catcher Mike Piazza, elected for his seventh straight start, received the most votes among NL players, 2,780,452, marking the first time the top vote-getters in both leagues were catchers.

Piazza, who had the largest margin of victory, finishing 2,034,838 ahead of Pittsburgh's Jason Kendall, also led NL voting in 1996 and 1997 while playing for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"It's a tremendous honor. I'm flattered at the support of the fans in New York and the rest of the country," Piazza said. "I'm flattered considering the players you're up against."

The rest of the NL lineup has Mark McGwire of St. Louis (2,347,317) at first, Barry Larkin of Cincinnati (1,593,944) at shortstop, Chipper Jones of Atlanta (1,553,944) at third, and Griffey (2,188,169), San Francisco's Barry Bonds (2,015,590) and Chicago's Sammy Sosa (1,800,444) at the outfield.

Brody Boyd is looking to show Iowa City what he is all about. The future Hawkeye basketball player scored 24 points for Nike/Merrill Lynch, helping his team to an 11-point victory.

Rod Thompson, a junior for Iowa, also helped to show that the Hawkeyes were serious, scoring a team-high 27 points. Brad Lohaus and Jeff Hrubec led the team in rebounding, grabbing 11 boards each.

Corey Hahn scored a team-high 29 points for Goodfellow Printing, Glen Worley and Brandon Sain followed with 21 points each. Worley also pulled down a team-high 18 rebounds.

Ready Mix 103, Active Endeavors 99
Daryl Moore scored 32 and Rob Griffin pitched in 28 to lead Ready Mix past Active Endeavors.

With stars Kyle Galloway and Luke Recker not competing for Active Endeavors, Craig Callahan and Brad Jones had a chance to score 36 a piece, but it wasn't enough offensive firepower. Callahan added 11 rebounds in the losing effort.

Line-ups for All-Star game released

Jeff Kent and Jermaine Dye are making their debuts and Ivan Rodriguez was the top vote-getter for the game.

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The starting line-ups for the All-Star game have new faces in Jeff Kent and Jermaine Dye and a new top vote-getter in Ivan Rodriguez.

Kent overcame a 138,000-vote deficit in the final week to overtake Craig Biggio and Edgardo Alfonzo and win the NL's starting spot at second base in next week's All-Star game.

Kent, who leads the National League with 80 RBIs for the San Francisco Giants, led NL second basemen with 1,018,430 votes in totals released Tuesday. Houston's Biggio was second at 964,316, followed by New York's Alfonzo at 865,853.

"It's probably a more special honor to be elected by the fans whom you are entertaining," Kent said. "That's why you play the game in a sense, outside of trying to win a championship, to entertain the fans."

In voting through last week, Biggio was first at 452,863, Alfonzo second at 387,893 and Kent third at 314,907.

"I was pleasantly surprised," Giants manager Dusty Baker said. "This is a prime example of a person getting what he deserves. He worked for it and earned it. Nobody gave him anything."

Dye finished second in the voting among AL outfielders and became the first Kansas City starter since Bo Jackson 11 years ago. Starting the July 11 game at Atlanta's Turner Field is especially meaningful because the Braves traded Dye to the Royals.

"I'm very blessed and excited," he said. "I left there on a good note, I think. I had a good year there. I think the fans were sad that I left."

WIMBLEDON

Sister Act: Williamses are at it again

Serena and Venus Williams will go against each other for the fourth time as they face off in the semifinals.

By Steve Wilstein
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — From the time they were little girls, Venus and Serena Williams envisioned playing against each other at Wimbledon.

The time has come. Venus let her net game fly Tuesday, then sang out in joy when she served one last screaming ace at 118 mph to beat Martina Hingis 6-3, 4-6, 6-4 and reach the Wimbledon semifinals against her kid sister Serena, a 6-2, 6-0 victor over Lisa Raymond.

Defending champion Lindsay Davenport wore down Monica Seles 6-7 (4), 6-4, 6-0 and will play in the other semifinal against seeded 17-year-old Australian Jelena Dokic, who beat Magui Serna 6-3, 6-2.

Venus, 20, and Serena, 18, now stand in the way of one another for a chance to play for the family's first Wimbledon title, a chance to add an ornate silver plate to the cup Serena won at the U.S. Open last year.

"She had a dream to win the U.S. Open. I had a dream to win Wimbledon," Venus said. Venus and Serena were barely more than toddlers when they began believing they would someday face each other across the net here, Venus said, "because our parents told us that this would happen. That's what we were working for. That's how we saw it."

Their match Thursday will be the first between sisters in a Grand Slam semifinal. The only time sisters played each other so deep into a major tournament was in the inaugural women's championship at Wimbledon in 1884, when Maud Watson beat her sister Lilian in the final.

Serena, who finished her match in 41 minutes then hustled over to Centre Court to watch her sister take more than three times as long to win, couldn't have been more excited for her.

"I think that's one of the happiest, besides when Venus had the run at the (1997) U.S. Open, that I've seen her after a match," Serena said. "That was very exciting for our whole family."

Not content with their singles victories, the sisters then won in doubles to set up a quarterfinal match against Martina Navratilova and Mariaan de Swardt.

Richard Williams, the sisters' father and coach who is attending his first Wimbledon, had shuttled between the matches — "Serena was running through there like a wild rabbit," he said — and when Venus jumped around on court in giddy celebration, he bounced up and down in the guest box.

"That was an unbelievable match from the time it took off," he said. "Both were out there cramping like dogs. It feels phenomenal."

Iowa recruit now weighs his options

He's reneged on his oral commitment to Iowa, now high school football standout Blake Larsen is looking around.

By Molly Thomas
The Daily Iowan

Ever since he was a little boy, Blake Larsen idolized Notre Dame football.

His room was decorated in blue and gold, and to Larsen, Lou Holtz was the master of football.

The 6-foot, 7-inch, 295 pound senior-to-be from Atlantic, Iowa, had already orally agreed to take a football scholarship at Iowa. But when Notre Dame and 12 other schools also offered him scholarships, he decided to step back and consider his options.

While Larsen wants to see what other colleges can offer him, he said the Hawkeyes are still at the top of his list and that coach Kirk Ferentz is the most genuine coach that he has spoken with yet.

"I've got a good relationship with Coach Ferentz," Larsen said. "He's the one who encouraged me to look around at all of my options. He is looking out for my best interests, because he doesn't want me to be unhappy with my final decision."

Larsen said he would accept a scholarship from Ferentz last August during his first college visit, but said the attention from Hawkeye football was overwhelming and may have caused him to make his decision too fast.

Now Larsen is being offered scholarships from big time programs like Notre Dame, Nebraska, Michigan, and Michigan State.

Recruiting analyst Allen Wallace of Superprep Magazine lists Larsen as one of the top three offensive linemen in the nation for the class of 2001.

With the recent attention Larsen has garnered in the recruiting world, he still says the Hawkeyes are in his top three, along with Notre Dame and Michigan State.

"Something different sticks out at every school," Larsen said. "As far as coaching, I'm finding out that it is hard to top Coach Ferentz, but Notre Dame has a great football tradition, and Michigan State has a strong football program as well."

His popularity as a recruit comes from his success as a left tackle and defensive end for Atlantic, a team with a strong football tradition in Class 3A. Larsen was named second team All-State following his performance last season.

Although Larsen said Iowa's losing record of 1-10 last season did influence his decision to consider his alternatives, he said that he changed his mind mostly out of curiosity.

"I'm not expecting Iowa to be in a bowl game or anything," he said. "I would just like to see the team improve, and if it does, then you'll see me at Iowa. Right now, I just have to make sure that I am making the right decision."

Though his father played football for Iowa State, Larsen said, his family members have been Hawkeye fans for years. They have attended many Iowa games and are familiar with the Hawkeye atmosphere, he said.

His mother, Cathy Larsen, travels with him on his college visits and said she mainly gets a feel for the coaches and their style.

"Kirk Ferentz is the most down-to-earth of any of the coaches that we have spoken to," Cathy Larsen said. "He is very honest. There are a lot of coaches whom I have to question their motives, but Coach Ferentz is really out for the best interests of the player."

Cathy Larsen said she's glad her son is looking around, so hopefully he'll have made the right choice.

"If he didn't look around, he might always question himself. Now, at least he can stand back and say that he really did see everything that was out there."

Sampras gunning for record seventh title

Six-time champ Pete Sampras is three matches away from setting the all-time champ record.

By Stephen Wade
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Casual fans may not recognize two of the men in the Wimbledon quarterfinals: Alexander Popp and Vladimir Voltchkov.

But one quarterfinalist is unmistakable: Mr. Wimbledon himself, Pete Sampras. The six-time champion goes into Wednesday's match against fellow American Jan-Michael Gambill on the verge of making more history.

Sampras, 28, is three matches away from winning his seventh singles title at the All England Club, which would match the all-time men's record set by William Renshaw between 1881 and 1889.

Another Wimbledon would also be Sampras' 13th Grand Slam championship, eclipsing the men's record of 12 he shares with Roy Emerson.

In Wednesday's other quarterfinals, 1992 Wimbledon champion Andre Agassi is up against the powerful serve of Australian Mark Philippoussis, two-time U.S. Open champion Pat Rafter plays Germany's 6-foot-7 Popp, and Byron Black gets qualifier Voltchkov.

Sampras, who would face either Black or Voltchkov in the semifinals, has improved throughout the tournament, overcoming a bout of tendinitis just above his left ankle

Hawkeyes shine in Monday night PTL action

Iowa basketball players Dean Oliver, Brody Boyd and Rob Griffin led their teams to wins.

By Molly Thomas
The Daily Iowan

Jason Price did it again. The Hawkeye veteran scored a team-high 31 points to lead Highland Park Development to a 115-105 victory over Fitzpatrick's in Prime Time League action Monday night.

Tobey Newson followed Price with 27 points for Highland Park, while former Hawkeye Sam Okey put up 18 points and added 12 assists.

Though defeated in the end, Reggie Evans and Jacob Jaacks of Fitzpatrick's didn't go down without a fight. The two hit 22 points each.

Ryan Hogan and Joe Fermino put up 14 points each for Fitzpatrick's, while Evans pulled down 20 of the team's 44 boards.

victory over the F.I.T. Zone. However, Oliver did not act alone. Duez Henderson, a junior for Iowa, and former Hawkeye Acie Earl put up 18 points each. Earl also grabbed 11 rebounds. Jason Smith scored 21 points for the F.I.T. Zone. He was followed by David Kruse, who added 16 points, and Troy Washpun and Sean Sonderleiter, who scored 10 each. Washpun also led the team with six assists, while Sonderleiter brought down seven rebounds. With the win, Goodfellaz moved to 5-1.
