Republicans sue Vilsack

The GOP wants to stop the governor's gay-rights move

Associated Press

DES MOINES—Twenty-eight Republicans have joined with a former federal judge, the mayor of Des Moines and a former state worker to file a lawsuit challenging a new disparity in gay rights that the governor of Iowa signed into law.

The suit, which was filed Thursday in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Iowa, asks a federal judge for an injunction to prevent Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack from enforcing the legislation, saying it violates the Iowa and federal Constitutions.

The measure, known as the "same-sex partner law," was signed by Vilsack in December. It allows same-sex couples to obtain a legal status similar to marriage, allowing them to enter into agreements beyond the legal protections already afforded to traditional spouses.

The suit, filed by the Iowa Republican Party and the Iowa Federation for the Family, argues that the law is unconstitutional because it discriminates against gay and lesbian couples.

The plaintiffs also argue that the law is a violation of the Iowa Constitution's equal protection clause.

"We're asking the court to issue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction and permanent injunction to prevent the state from enforcing this discriminatory law," said David P. Deyo, an attorney for the Iowa Republican Party.

"This is a case about equality before the law," he added. "We believe that the state is acting in violation of the Iowa Constitution and the federal Constitution, and we're asking the court to stop that."
Keeping it real with a syndication deal

The most awkward sound in the world is the sound of a record player. How many of us have our own voice on a tape recorder? No matter how much we might like to hear ourselves, none of us are ever quite prepared for the first time we objectively listen to ourselves.

I was going to have the record deal of the century. I was going to hit it big, and the world was going to know of me. My song had been heard, and I was the next big thing. The sound of my voice filled the room, and I knew that this was the moment that I had been waiting for.

But as I listened, I heard something that I had never heard before. It was my voice, but it was not the same. The sound was flat and lifeless, and it was as if the emotion I had poured into those notes had disappeared. It was as if I was listening to someone else's voice, and I knew that this was not me.

I realized that I had been too focused on what others thought of me, and I had lost sight of who I really was. I had been trying to be someone that I was not, and I had failed miserably. I knew that I had to change if I was ever going to be happy.

From that moment on, I decided to be true to myself. I stopped trying to be someone that I was not, and I started to listen to my own voice. I realized that it was only by being myself that I could truly be successful.

I learned that the truest form of success is when we are able to be ourselves. It may not always be easy, but it is the path that will lead to the greatest happiness. So, I continued to listen to my own voice, and I knew that I was on the right path.

A young troupe of actors will demonstrate why there's much to know about acting.

By Anne Kaylor

While most of their peers were spending their summer earning a few dollars or studying at a local department store, 25 area high school students spent the weekend at Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London, England, learning the world of Shakespeare.

These students made up the 2000 Riverside Theatre Young Actors Program. The troupe, not in its sixth season, will perform Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing this weekend at Brownfield Theatre, 317 N. Gilbert St.

"The production has a very strong energy, combined with a very professional approach," said Ted Eck, a professional actor and director of the company. "It is a program in which we really tune these young people into what professional acting is." The high school students truly are young professionals. They have been in previous productions in the area, numerous about two young لأنه is in being invited to work with the actors and are familiar with every aspect of the theater. From the script to the scenery to the language, the students have immersed themselves in the world of Shakespeare and are performing a Shakespearean programme.

"They learn a lot, and they're a lot of fun," said Richard Peabody, an actor at the Globe Theatre; "And there are so many things to learn and to report from it, how to build up and improve the aspect of the role." The students are expected to commissioned by the director of the production, as explained by Peabody. "If they're not making progress they're asked to observe in a corner and work with producers in their scenes, in each scene. Youth education has a base of Riverside Theatre actors.

MDs: AIDS-interruptus may work

■ Patients may be able to stop taking drugs for a time at a new approach.

By Dorothy R. Nurse

DURHAM, North Carolina— Dozens are continuing patients taking drugs for treatments making a new kind of study at a time to look for some in therapy and for others to monitor the effects of treatments under study.

"The goal is to test patients undergoing treatment under the guidance of doctors and to demonstrate whether it's possible to interrupt therapy without losing the benefits of treatment," said Dr. Anthony Fauci, the head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, who described the new approach as "a new kind of study." He said patients are now being randomly assigned to either continue taking the drugs or stop taking them for a period of time.

Fauci stressed that the study is not intended to be a test of whether the drugs are effective, but rather to test whether it is possible to stop taking them without losing the benefits of treatment.

Fauci said patients are being randomly assigned to either continue taking the drugs or stop taking them for a period of time.

"We're trying to find out if we can stop treatment and continue to see if the patients remain well," Fauci said.

William Floyd, a teammate of Fred Lane, says Lane’s death will have retribution.

By Teresa M. Walker

FRANKLIN, Tenn. — On the football field and in the classroom, William Floyd left his mark for Fred Lane. In an emotional farewell Thursday, the former Panther said there will be retribution for Lane’s death.

"I believe in the heart of Jesus that justice will be served," the Lord said "and vengeance is His." Floyd said for Lane, "He got what he deserved, which is what we've come here to do."

An estimated 1,300 people packed the gymnasium to pay tribute to a talented running back during the wake. Lane’s Indianapolis funeral will have retribution against Deidra Lane, who was 21 weeks pregnant when she was killed.

The wake was held Monday in Darrell Lane’s home in Tennessee. Torry Hamilton’s father, lan, is embracing a mourner as he stands with his brother, Darrell Lane, who's an NFL running back.

"The day before I died, you were at the funeral," said Hamilton, who shared the stage with a large female models in the photo. Nor was there any news of Lane's Indianapolis funeral, which his mother finally called.

"He said he was a little to do with this kind of person," said Hamilton. "You know it's going to be a legitimate honor."

"I think we're going to play it straight and the Wake was held Monday, March 10, with Lane's father, lan, present. Hamilton, the Minnesota Vikings' player, said his decision may not be on that team, but it will be on the ground."

"But I'm not going to do that," said Hamilton, who wasn't going to be on that team. "At least, I'm not going to do that."
