Tendinitis holds Steele back in trials

Former Iowa trackster Stetson Steele falls short at the Olympic trials due to tendinitis in his ankle.

By Jeremy Schnitker
The Daily Iowan

Stetson Steele's quest for a birth on the Olympic team in the 10,000 meters fell two miles short on July 14.

The former Iowa track star, who graduated this past May, pulled up with limp after feeling pain in his ankle just over half way through the race. Steele had suffered from tendinitis in the ankle the last two weeks and had been cleared to run for the trials, but, he said, the pain he felt during the race was too much.

Steele

"It got to the point where I couldn't run straight up," Steele said. "My ankle was really sore."

He had hopes of finishing in the top 10 and said that if his ankle hadn't acted up, he probably could have finished that high. But it wasn't meant to happen this year, Steele said.

Rated as one of the top 15 runners in the meet, Steele said he was not disappointed that he didn't finish — he's already looking forward to the 2004 trials.

"I know I'll be back in four years," he said. "This was a learning experience for me; I can't be too disappointed. I would have liked to finish, but it didn't work out that way."

Steele, who set four Iowa distance records this year and was an All-American in both indoor and outdoor competition, said he wasn't going to let this one run put a damper on all that he has done this year.

"It's been a great year. This one race isn't going to make me feel bad."

Radio shakeup leaves some hosts feeling snubbed

Broadcast officials create a to-do by canceling some local shows and replacing them with on-air chatter.

By Kirsten Veng-Pedersen
The Daily Iowan

The cancellation of a number of local weekend programs on two UI radio stations — and their replacement with "Iowa Talks," a new weekday call-in show — is causing quite a stir with some former show hosts.

Laurence Clements, the associate director of the UI Labor Center, who voluntarily hosted the "Labor Center Forum" from 1993 until this year, said some hosts are upset because they were not consulted before their programs were "substantially changed."

"If they were going to change the format, we felt they should have initially consulted with the people who were hosting this," he said.

Because of the changes, the hosts representing the labor center will meet Friday with officials from WSUI to discuss possible options. John Monick, the director of UI Broadcasting Services, said WSUI officials met last week with David Leshtz, a community-education office program associate, and will meet with the labor-forum members to determine what role they will play in "Iowa Talks" and other programs at WSUI.

Beginning on Aug. 21, some programs, such as those under "UI Radio Forum," will be cut. "UI Radio Forum" consists of a variety of programs hosted by UI experts in subjects such as law, athletics and labor; they are broadcast once a month.

Although the content of "Iowa Talks" will differ each morning, Monick said, he hopes intelligent conversation will be its unifying theme.

One day of "Iowa Talks" will be hosted each week by Dean Borg, the director of information for UI Hospitals and Clinics. Borg's show will focus mostly on the health sciences but will occasionally cover state government and other timely issues.

The content of the weekend programs will be transferred to "Iowa Talks," which will be aired from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., Monday through Friday, Monick said.

Joan Kjaer, the acting program director of KSUI, the UI FM station that runs some of the half-hour shows being canceled, said she views the changes as positive. The better time slot and different format of "Iowa Talks" will help to get important issues out to the public, she said.

Truck overturns; Isaac Newton blamed

Spilled debris clog a downtown intersection, slowing traffic for over an hour.

By Erica Driskell
The Daily Iowan

Downtown Iowa City traffic was moving a little slowly Tuesday morning after a dump truck owned by All American Concrete Inc. of West Liberty overturned at the intersection of Clinton Street and Iowa Avenue.

While debris from the truck spilled into the street, the driver of the truck, All American employee Brian Christianson, sustained no injuries. The accident occurred at 10:16 a.m.

"It slapped me on the ground pretty hard," Christianson said. "I definitely don't want to go there again."

The truck's power take-off, which raises the upper box of the truck in order to dump its contents, was inadvertently switched on while Christianson was driving northbound on Iowa Avenue. The upper box lifted when the lever vibrated itself into gear, putting too much weight on top of the truck, Iowa City police Officer Dan Moore said.

When Christianson attempted to turn left on to Clinton Street, the top-heavy truck toppled on its side, spilling construction debris on the street, Moore said.

Christianson was working on the Iowa Avenue Streetscape project, said Bill Simon, the co-owner of All American.

"Hopefully, in another month we'll be pretty much done with that," he said.

Company officials did not know how much damage the truck suffered, but All American employee

Iowa City firefighter Paul Suedkamp pours cat litter on an oil spill that resulted from an overturned truck Tuesday morning at the intersection of Clinton Street and Iowa Avenue. The truck belongs to All American Concrete, Inc. of West Liberty.

Keith Pearl said the truck will be repaired.

Although large trucks often turn over on interstate highways, UI Public Safety Officer Steve Johnson said, they rarely overturn in cities.

"When they said a vehicle was on its side, I was thinking 'What the heck is going on,'" he said. "You don't see that very often."

Iowa City police officers were called to the scene to help direct traffic during clean-up efforts, as a crane tried to lift the truck back on to its wheels, Moore said. The clean-up lasted for approximately an hour and 15 minutes.

No charges were filed in the accident because police do not believe the cause of the accident was carelessness; instead, officers believe the laws of physics are to blame for the accident.

"It was a very unusual little deal," Moore said. "Sir Isaac Newton is being indicted for this one."

Summit at crossroads; Clinton delays Japan trip

The Mideast peace talks in Camp David head for an all-night session.

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

THURMONT, Md. — With tense Mideast peace talks at a pivotal point, President Clinton early today postponed his long-planned trip to Japan to continue the search for a settlement.

If the president's schedule is not further delayed, he will arrive in Japan Friday for the G8 economic summit, one day later than scheduled.

The White House did not indicate whether the president's decision to remain at Camp David, Md., meant that agreement was possible in the talks between Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

"The president regrets that he will have to delay his trip to Japan for one day," White House Press Secretary Joe Lockhart said in a statement.

"The president believes that this is in the best interests of the Middle East peace process," he said.

The goal of the talks had been an agreement before Clinton departed for a weekend summit with leaders of seven other nations. A delay of one day will allow Clinton to arrive in time for the meetings in Okinawa.

"There are intense discussions and negotiations going on now between the two parties," Lockhart had said earlier, as evening set in over the serene Catocotin Mountains. "I think they understand what they're up against, so far as the issues and the timing."

"We'll just have to wait and see." Clinton met with his staff for approximately 1 1/2 hours. "He stands ready to talk to either leader separately, together, the negotiators — whatever we think is peaceful and constructive," Lockhart said.

Any agreement is likely to provide Arafat with the Palestinian state he has long sought, but Barak was said to be holding firm on East Jerusalem not falling under Palestinian sovereignty.

Barak's political support is shaky. He faces another non-confidence vote in the Israeli Parliament mounted by the Shas orthodox religious party, which quit his coalition before the Camp David summit. Consequently, U.S. mediators are conscious of Barak's need for gains he could point to in any deal with Arafat that might help calm opposition to concessions on statehood.

In Jerusalem, the speaker of the Israeli Parliament, Avraham Burg,

After much discussion over whether an affordable-housing project met Iowa City Housing Commission criteria, the Iowa City City Council approved the undertaking Tuesday on a 6-1 vote.

The affordable-housing development, slated to be located south of Wintergreen and Rosefield drives, will consist of 30 three-bedroom duplexes, each with a one-car garage. The duplexes would be available to low- and moderate-income families.

Meningitis

Health officials recommend that college students get vaccinations.

By Jessi Toddlen
The Daily Iowan

With three recent outbreaks of meningitis in Manchester, Iowa, local health officials are hoping UI students take the American College Health Association's recommendation seriously and get vaccinations for meningitis.

The organization annually encourages college students across the nation to get meningitis vaccinations, and this year is no different.

A recent outbreak in Manchester found three people with different strains of meningitis, said Dr. John Tyrrell of Manchester. The incidents prompted Manchester schools to advise children ages 3-18 get vaccinated, he said.

Although meningitis cases in Iowa City and on the UI campus are not increasing, college students are at more risk for contracting the disease than is the general public. Health officials strongly urge students living in the dorms, attending large lectures and frequenting bars to get a vaccination because they come into contact with more bacteria, said Larry Afifi, the nurse manager at UI Student Health Service.

"The disease is passed through the air, so these lifestyles are at a higher risk, and we suggest the vaccination is very effective, so it would be worth it."

Student Health charges $81 for the vaccination; it protects against meningitis for three years.

Coralville City Council ponders erosion, widening 1st Avenue

Morrison Creek is suffering from extreme erosion, residents say.

By Disa Lubker
The Daily Iowan

The Coralville City Council Tuesday discussed erosion on the banks of Morrison Creek in Coralville and plans to widen First Avenue.

Erosion along the 13th Street section of Morrison Creek, south of Interstate 80, has had a substantial effect on residents in the area, several of whom attended the council's work session and voiced their concerns to the councilors.

The erosion is causing safety hazards around the home of Coralville resident Tom Haman and beginning to kill vegetation on portions of his property bordering the creek, Haman said.

Debris from construction on developments north of the interstate is causing added erosion in an area that is already deteriorating naturally, he said. The erosion of the creek, which runs under Interstate 80, could also be dangerous to the interstate's stability, Haman said. Councilors discussed short- and long-term solutions to the problem with residents of the affected areas who attended the meeting. One possible option is to protect the banks of the creek with concrete slabs.

Tuesday's work session also focused on widening First Avenue. The project will include the portion of road from the Clear Creek bridge near Taco Bell to the railroad bridge that runs over the north end of Mormon Trek Boulevard.

The city plans to add turn lanes to the street in order to make the flow of traffic smoother, said Councilor Jean Schnake. A portion of road will be straightened, and traffic to the area's businesses will be controlled more effectively, she said. Adding landscaping will also be a part of the project, Schnake said.

Improvements on First Avenue are a phase of road construction that included previous improvements on Highway 6.

There could be possible traffic delays when construction begins, which is the primary way the public will be affected, Schnake said.

The council assessed property values along First Avenue to determine how much each property owner should pay toward the project. The cost was assessed using a method similar to using the area of the property and finding the front-foot width of the property, said Jim Schnobelen, a project manager with the Howard R. Green Co. consulting firm.

infection of the meninges, which line the brain and spinal cord. Left untreated, meningitis can cause brain and other organ damage and even death. Symptoms include high fever, headache, stiff neck, skin rash and arthritis. The disease is treated with intravenous antibiotics and occasionally requires intensive care.

UI senior Paula Saxton had meningitis two years ago, and she believes that everyone should be vaccinated.

"I thought I had the flu because the symptoms are similar, but my neck hurt," she said. "My friend's mom, who is a nurse, told me that it wasn't the flu and that I should go to the emergency room."

Although the disease is not a big problem on the UI campus, anyone who can get a vaccination, should, Saxton said.

According to a report published by the health association, nearly 3,000 Americans contract the disease per year, and 300 die. College campuses see 100-125 cases annually, with five to 15 resulting in death.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report that freshmen living in the dorms have a six times higher risk than students overall.

Every summer during Orientation, the meningitis vaccine is discussed, but no special campaign is undertaken concerning the disease, Afifi said.

"I don't know about it and depending on the cost and whether I'm at risk would determine whether I'd even get it now," she said.

Visiting journalist to study press-gov't relations

A journalist from Papua New Guinea will give Americans a glimpse of his culture while learning about Americans.

By Andrew T. Dawson
The Daily Iowan

Papua New Guinea journalist Kevin Pamba will be in Iowa City today through Saturday to learn about life in the United States and to give Americans a glimpse of his country.

The focus of Pamba's visit will be American journalism, but he will also look at U.S. government, economy and society.

During the next four days,

Pamba will meet with UI journalism professors and local media professionals in an effort to promote international understanding in the field of journalism.

Visitors to the United States are often interested in the relationship between the press and government, said Ken Starck, a UI professor of journalism. Starck, who has met with many journalists from around the world, will get together with Pamba Thursday.

"(Journalists from other countries) are often amazed at the amount of freedom our press has and how freedom converts into being responsible," Starck said. "But I always come away with the feeling that I've learned more than they have."

Pamba's visit is part of an ongoing program arranged by the Council for International Visitors to Iowa Cities, an organization that gives guests the opportunity to learn how their professions work in the United States.

The group is one of two volunteer organizations in Iowa that works with the State Department's International Visitor program.

"The idea of the program is to give visitors an opportunity to see how we do things in their field and hopefully, to help with how they do it," said executive director Tom Baldrige. "But another benefit is also to learn from (the visitor)."

During his introduction to Iowa culture, Pamba will eat dinner at a Solon farm, and visit the Science Center's Great Russian Mammoth Exhibit at Sycamore Mall, the Macbride Raptor Center and the Iowa City Crisis Center.

At the Crisis Center, Pamba will discuss the crisis-intervention program and the food-bank program, said Carole Yack, the center's services coordinator.

"The severity of poverty is different in different areas of the world," she said. "I think (Pamba's visit) will help us put into perspective what we're doing here."

Of smoke, hot air and summer thrills

It must be summer; the law professors are getting restless.

Perhaps it's a lack of law students to browbeat. They're all off doing internships, getting browbeaten by the real world. It's a wonder that, after their appointed round of three years, law students have any brows left at all.

Whatever the reason — it could've been something in the water, because there's always something in Iowa City water besides, well, water — UI law Professor Marc Linder got restive last week. Some might even say he got exercised, though they would have a different definition of exercise from that of the sweating hordes who risk shin splints and worse in the vain attempt to look as if they belong on TV.

And thank God he got restless, because he drew much-needed attention to one of the major problems of our time, a conundrum that has not received its deserved ink or TV documentaries or even a CNN Special Report which just last week, I hear from my usual unreliable sources, detailed Britney Spear's tips on tummy-tightening and reading Kierkegaard. Or maybe it was tightening your tummy by reading Kierkegaard.

In any case, we owe Professor Linder. In a world beset with AIDS bowling through the sub-Saharan Africa population like 10 million unleashed trains, hunger more or less the way of life for half the planet, peace in Northern Ireland further away than the discovery of "cold" fusion (actually, my ex-wife and I discovered cold fusion; we just didn't publish the results), a global warming that threatens to vastly widen the already considerable gap between rich and poor nations, and the promise (threat?) from the so-called major networks of yet more "reality" TV, the good professor has managed to pinpoint the major problem facing us:

Actors on UI stages will pull out a cigarette and — get this — have the audacity to light up and smoke. Oh, the horror, the horror, as Marlon Brando says in Apocalypse Now. Or maybe it was somebody (Roseanne?) doing Brando on "Saturday Night Apocalypse."

I had always thought, probably because of my misbegotten youth, that the major air pollution connected with the theater occurred when the several hundred cars of the theater-goers pulled into the theater parking lot before the show, and then again after the show, when they all tried to exit the parking lot at the exactly the same moment.

Silly me. Now, thanks to the good professor (who, of course, concerned about air pollution as he is, always walks to the theater), I understand that when Edward Albee has a character light up, it has nothing to do with character development, it has everything to do with exposing innocent Albee-lovers to carcinogens. Which is not to say that most Albee-lovers are innocent.

It's also not to say that Albee-lovers, or any other kind of theater lovers, are being exposed to carcinogens. The popular (and uneducated) opinion that second-hand smoke causes cancer is mostly due to the EPA meta-analysis of the early '90s, which is to science what the Iranian death-sentence on Salomon Rushdie was to literary criticism.

Salman Rushdie was to literary criticism.

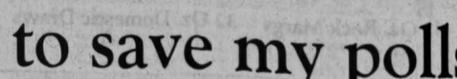

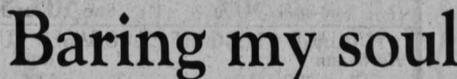

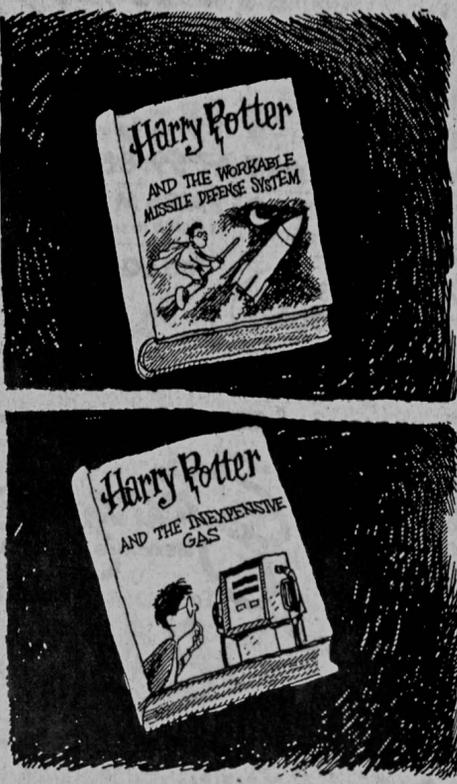

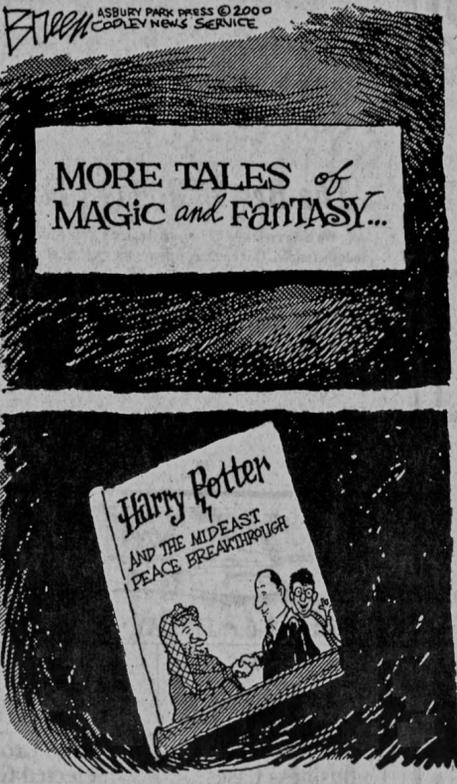

There are many things wrong with the EPA study (reported in this space, July 21, 1998). Briefly, the agency violated its own rules about cancer studies; if it had followed the established guidelines, it would have found no correlation between second-hand smoke and cancer.

More discouraging for the anti-smoking brigade is the 1998 report by the World Health Organization the most comprehensive study done on second-hand smoke, involving 8,000 participants and nearly a decade of investigation. The results were rather an embarrassment for the WHO, which is staunchly anti-smoking: The study, reported in British newspapers but, curiously, hardly at all in the American media, found no correlation between second-hand smoke and cancer.

There's probably a line from Shakespeare about the good professor's battle with the forces of evil as epitomized by actors who dare to light up; the one about sound and fury comes to mind.

Albee could write a play about it. He could title it Who's Afraid of Virginia Slims?

Beau Elliot is a DI columnist.

Baring my soul to save my polls

Over the weekend, the Drudge Report was the first media outlet to report that, according to a soon-to-be released book, Hillary Rodham Clinton once called a co-worker a "Jew bastard."

Ex-National Enquirer author Jerry Oppenheimer's timing is impeccable, as Rodham Clinton fights the GOP's Rick Lazio for one of New York's seats in the Senate.

This is nothing new, though. As politics gets more and more dirty, the accusations of "youthful indiscretions" get more and more colorful. In 1992, the Republicans gasped at the thought that President Clinton smoked weed in college. In 1999, the high-and-mighty (pun fully intended) GOP shrugged off allegations that their golden boy, G.W. Bush, spent his college years snorting Nose Nike. The times, they are a-changin'.

For the past eight years, the GOP has stayed true to this modus operandi. Allegations will always hit the front pages. Hell, it's a lot more interesting than all that nonsense about "budgets" and "wars" and such.

This worries me. Who knows — maybe someday I'll run for office. Just in case, I figured I'd clean out my closet before the GOP does.

In 1996, I got a copy of *Tag Team's "Whoop, There It Is" for Christmas ... and I liked it. Yes, at the time I laughed it off. I told my friends that my cousin gave it to me as a joke. I swore that I only listened to it in jest. But, for a short time, I really dug the Tag Team groove. When they busted out rhymes like You wanna come down to the old school? / Here's a shovel can you dig it fool?, it hit me deep down inside. Can you dig it? We can dig it.*

I watch Sex & the City every Sunday night. The first time I heard about it, I blew it off as a flimsy attempt to win ratings by knocking guys. After a friend suggested I watch it, I tuned, purely out of curiosity. A year later, I'm still pissed at Mr. Big for the way he jerked Carrie around.

I tight-rolled my pants months after it stopped being cool. This one honestly wasn't my fault. For a good nine months of the fourth grade, my tight-rolled Bugle Boy-knockoff pants, complete with roughly four dozen pockets up and down my legs, were just as cool as the other kids'. Three months after the fact, though, no one bothered to tell me how lame I looked. Then again, that was sort of a theme for me throughout 12 years of Catholic school.

I have more than a dozen Oasis posters in my bedroom. For a year now, this secret has been safe with my roommates and the occasional visitor, but it's time to admit my problem. It's like a champagne supernova exploded in our quaint little apartment, and no one bothered to hose down the walls. Sure, they've been passé in the States since 1995. Sure, I'm probably mistaken when I profess that Liam Gallagher is cooler than John Lennon. But why have walls when you can have Wonderwalls? They just released a new album, you know. You probably didn't, and there's probably a good reason for that.

Finally, I once said to my roommates, after drinking a Busch Light, "Damn, that was a quality beer." OK, some things can't be excused. But it was hot out. I was tired. I was confused. I was wrong. I'm so sorry. There's no place in society for that kind of slur.

In the big scheme of things, my youthful indiscretions probably don't rank up there with the exploits of President Clinton ... or even Michael Dukakis. I might still have a future in politics.

Teen arrest

After spending a night in the woods, a 13-year-old surrenders to police.

By Luis Cabrera Associated Press

SEATTLE — A 13-year-old boy accused of climbing onto a cafeteria table and firing a shot into the ceiling during a summer-school session surrendered to authorities Tuesday at his grandparents' house.

No one was injured in the Monday shooting, which occurred at nearby Dimmitt Middle School, but the boy remained at large after the incident. Classes were canceled until Thursday, and the school planned to have counselors available today.

The boy spent Monday night "hunkered down in woods" near his grandparents' home 10 miles south of Seattle, said sheriff's spokesman John Urquhart. His mother notified authorities that her son wanted to turn himself in, and he was arrested peacefully at his grandparents' house.

"Right now it's every police officer's nightmare — kids with guns in school," Urquhart said, noting that the gun was pointed in a

Trial begins

Jesse Wendelsdorf is accused of killing a 2-year-old in a case that caused outrage in Iowa.

By Ken Thomas Associated Press

STORM LAKE, Iowa — Trial began Tuesday for Jesse Wendelsdorf, accused of killing 2-year-old Shelby Duis, whose death prompted public outrage throughout Iowa and an examination of the state's child-protection system.

Wendelsdorf is charged with first-degree murder, first-degree sexual abuse and child endangerment in the child's Jan. 4 death in Spirit Lake.

Shelby's mother, Heidi Watkins, who lived with Wendelsdorf, will face trial on Aug. 8 in Algona on first-degree murder charges.

Prosecutors said Shelby was severely beaten over a period of months before she died. Autopsy reports revealed the girl had suffered brutal injuries, including broken hands, broken ribs and bruises to her skull.

Dickinson County Attorney Edward Bjornstad said the prosecution planned to introduce physical evidence, including a bloodied broom handle that carried the fingerprints of both Wendelsdorf and Watkins. Jurors would also view a two-hour taped interview Wendelsdorf gave to police after he was arrested.

Defense attorney Paul Miller said Wendelsdorf, 26, was working at a construction site at the time of Shelby's death, and none of the prosecution's witnesses could prove he abused Shelby.

But he voiced concern over 12 to 15 "gruesome" photographs of the toddler taken by medical examiners after her death. The defense had unsuccessfully tried to have the photos ruled inadmissible before the trial.

Consumer group: Ban foods spiked with herbal supplements

WASHINGTON (AP) — A cereal and a "memory elixir" iced tea claim to boost brain power. Snack chips purport to contain "an effective antibiotic."

Dozens of foods illegally contain purported herbal medicines that deceive Americans with false health claims and, worse, may be dangerous, consumer advocates charged Tuesday.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest joined with Connecticut's top attorney and a renowned herbal expert to petition the Food and Drug Administration to halt sales of 75 so-called "functional foods."

"The FDA has done a woefully inadequate job of protecting consumers" from "modern-day snake oils," said Bruce Silverglade, an attorney for the science center.

"There is no scientific evidence to support these outlandish and ridiculous claims," said Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal, who is investigating the foods and said he soon will announce a crackdown on deceptive products sold in Connecticut.

Teen arrested in Seattle school shooting

SEATTLE — A 13-year-old boy accused of climbing onto a cafeteria table and firing a shot into the ceiling during a summer-school session surrendered to authorities Tuesday at his grandparents' house.

No one was injured in the Monday shooting, which occurred at nearby Dimmitt Middle School, but the boy remained at large after the incident. Classes were canceled until Thursday, and the school planned to have counselors available today.

The boy spent Monday night "hunkered down in woods" near his grandparents' home 10 miles south of Seattle, said sheriff's spokesman John Urquhart. His mother notified authorities that her son wanted to turn himself in, and he was arrested peacefully at his grandparents' house.

"Right now it's every police officer's nightmare — kids with guns in school," Urquhart said, noting that the gun was pointed in a girl's face during the incident. "This worked out OK this time; they all got out of the building, and no one was hurt," he said.

The boy, identified as Josh Warnock by the county prosecutor's office, was booked into a juvenile detention in Seattle for investigation of assault with a firearm and reckless endangerment, prosecutor's spokesman Dan Donohoe said.

Warnock also may be charged with unlawful possession of a firearm, Donohoe said. The boy's initial court hearing was scheduled for today, and prosecutors were requesting that he be held until then.

Warnock led sheriff's deputies Tuesday to the spot in the woods where he had left the .22-caliber handgun he had allegedly used Monday, and the gun was recovered, Urquhart said. The handgun was believed to have been taken from the grandparents' home, he said.

The boy was shown on KIRO-TV walking out of his grandparents' home in handcuffs, wearing a Detroit Pistons T-shirt. He was described Monday as dressed in black, with blond hair dyed blue at the ends. On Tuesday, his blond hair was cut short, with no dyeing evident.

Warnock was described as an outgoing, usually responsible student who had ended up in summer school after getting behind in his classwork. But classmates said he had taken a dark turn recently.

Deputies seized a note Warnock had written to friends before the incident saying he would not be back home and that he loved his family, family members said.

GOP suit uses Stealth $, Dems say

■ The Democratic Party chairman asks why the Republicans are afraid to name their donors.

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The state's top Democrat accused Republican legislative leaders Tuesday of using secretive "wink-and-nod" fund raising to pay for a lawsuit against Gov. Tom Vilsack.

"Why are the Republicans so afraid to reveal who is supporting their frivolous lawsuit?" asked Iowa Democratic Chairman Rob Tully. "It's time for Republicans to come clean and admit who is funding this pro-discrimination lawsuit."

Tully issued a statement attacking Republicans for the method they've chosen to pay for a lawsuit challenging Vilsack's decision to issue an executive order banning discrimination based on sexual orientation.

Vilsack says he was simply continuing existing state policy, while Republicans argue he exceeded his authority. The order bans discrimination in state employment based on sexual orientation.

The Republican-run Legislature passed a measure overturning the order, and Vilsack promptly vetoed the effort. The lawsuit argues that the Iowa Legislature has repeatedly rejected efforts to ban discrimination based on sexual orientation, and Vilsack can't unilaterally take that step. Lawsuits between the Iowa Legislature and the governor are far from unique, as the two sides jealously guard their powers and act quickly to head off any effort to usurp authority.

Typically, however, when lawmakers sue the governor, they have the lawsuit ratified by the Legislative Council, a panel of legislative leaders, and pay for the effort with tax dollars.

The usual reasoning is that the public has an interest in deciding the lines of authority between the competing branches of government.

In the latest lawsuit, 23 Republicans sued Vilsack and said they would raise money privately to pay for the effort. They are not required to make public the names of contributors to that fund. Senate Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, R-Dows, is heading the effort.

"Without open and full disclosure, what's to stop Sen. Iverson or any of his Republican cronies from promising insider legislative favors to special-interest groups and other wealthy donors in exchange for helping bankroll this lawsuit," Tully warned.

"We have not gotten enough contributions to even talk about this yet," Iverson said. He said lawmakers were trying to save tax dollars by financing the lawsuit privately.

"In this, they've made a conscious decision that the taxpayers shouldn't pay for this lawsuit," Iverson said.

Tully said lawmakers should make public the names of contributors, and any promises made in exchange for donations. He compared the effort with massive "soft money" campaigns by the political parties.

"This is not the Republican Party, this is a group of legislators that decided to go forward," Iverson said.

"Iowans deserve better than this kind of wink-and-nod fund raising," Tully said.

Trial begins in high-profile child-abuse case

■ Jesse Wendelsdorf is accused of killing a 2-year-old in a case that caused outrage in Iowa.

By Ken Thomas
Associated Press

STORM LAKE, Iowa — Trial began Tuesday for Jesse Wendelsdorf, accused of killing 2-year-old Shelby Duis, whose death prompted public outrage throughout Iowa and an examination of the state's child-protection system.

Wendelsdorf is charged with first-degree murder, first-degree sexual abuse and child endangerment in the child's Jan. 4 death in Spirit Lake.

Shelby's mother, Heidi Watkins, who lived with Wendelsdorf, will face trial on Aug. 8 in Algona on first-degree murder charges.

Prosecutors said Shelby was severely beaten over a period of months before she died. Autopsy reports revealed the girl had suffered brutal injuries, including broken hands, broken ribs and bruises to her skull.

Dickinson County Attorney Edward Bjornstad said the prosecution planned to introduce physical evidence, including a bloodied broom handle that carried the fingerprints of both Wendelsdorf and Watkins. Jurors would also view a two-hour taped interview Wendelsdorf gave to police after he was arrested.

Defense attorney Paul Miller said Wendelsdorf, 26, was working at a construction site at the time of Shelby's death, and none of the prosecution's witnesses could prove he abused Shelby.

But he voiced concern over 12 to 15 "gruesome" photographs of the toddler taken by medical examiners after her death. The defense had unsuccessfully tried to have the photos ruled inadmissible before the trial.

"It's our fear it's going to be hard once a jury sees them to consider this case in a rational manner," Miller said.

One hundred people were being considered as jurors for the trial, which is expected to last two weeks. They sat on benches and chatted in the courtroom but hushed when Wendelsdorf — dressed in a gray double-breasted suit — entered with attorneys and a bailiff at his side.

The pool watched a folksy video called "Our Part for Justice," depicting three former jurors who stressed the jury system's civic duty. Prospective jurors already had filled-out a lengthy questionnaire that queried their knowledge of the case and whether they had known anyone tied to child abuse.

Candidates then were questioned in private by attorneys in groups of three. Judge Frank Nelson had decided to review prospective jurors in the small setting to let lawyers explore whether they had experienced any cases of child abuse.

Media coverage surrounding the case forced the trial to be moved about 60 miles south to Buena Vista County.

The case shocked many Northwest Iowa residents, some of whom said they repeatedly reported signs of abuse from Shelby and said child-protection officials failed to act promptly. An internal review by the Department of Human Services found that the child-protection system failed to intervene on Shelby's behalf but that the department was not directly responsible for her death.

The case also angered lawmakers and Gov. Tom Vilsack, who traveled to a public meeting in Spirit Lake and revealed that he had been abused as a child.

Legislators approved a bill giving some high-ranking lawmakers and officials access to confidential child-abuse records in order to assure the public that proper steps were taken by the department.

Bjornstad had requested that the records not be released in the case in order to ensure a fair and impartial jury. He said the details likely would be available following the two trials.

"We're just trying to stay narrowly focused in this situation," he said.

The case was expected to be closely watched by child-protection organizations and the dozens of people who worked to raise awareness of child abuse following Shelby's death. According to Prevent Child Abuse Iowa, seven children were killed in Iowa last year, and eight or nine wrongful child deaths have been reported this year.

"It's something that's so beyond the ability to comprehend it's just very hard to know how to respond to it," said Steve Scott, the group's executive director.

"The only positive thing for this is it has removed any complacency or any denial that we had that stuff like this happens to children."

The tedious process of jury selection was expected to last through the end of today. The first group of three was questioned for nearly an hour, while other candidates read magazines and waited inside the circular courtroom encased with lime-colored panels.

"I do appreciate your patience — it's a long process, but we'll get through it," Nelson told the panel.

fallout from the Hasselhoff incident?

since 1995. Sure, I'm probably mistaken when I profess that Liam Gallagher is cooler than John Lennon. But why have walls when you can have Wonderwalls? They just released a new album, you know. You probably didn't, and there's probably a good reason for that.

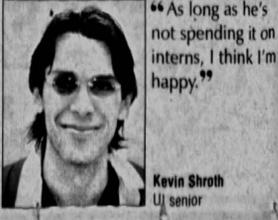

Finally, I once said to my roommates, after drinking a Busch Light, "Damn, that was a quality beer." OK, some things can't be excused. But it was hot out. I was tired. I was confused. I was wrong. I'm so sorry. There's no place in society for that kind of slur.

In the big scheme of things, my youthful indiscretions probably don't rank up there with the exploits of President Clinton ... or even Michael Dukakis. I might still have a future in politics.

NATION BRIEF

Consumer group: Ban foods spiked with herbal supplements

WASHINGTON (AP) — A cereal and a "memory elixir" iced tea claim to boost brain power. Snack chips purport to contain "an effective antibiotic."

Dozens of foods illegally contain purported herbal medicines that deceive Americans with false health claims and, worse, may be dangerous, consumer advocates charged Tuesday.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest joined with Connecticut's top attorney and a renowned herbal expert to petition the Food and Drug Administration to halt sales of 75 so-called "functional foods."

"The FDA has done a woefully inadequate job of protecting consumers" from "modern-day snake oils," said Bruce Silverglade, an attorney for the science center.

"There is no scientific evidence to support these outlandish and ridiculous claims," said Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal, who is investigating the foods and said he soon will announce a crackdown on deceptive products sold in Connecticut.

"State action will be forthcoming if the federal government can't do better" at preventing manufacturers from "betraying consumers," Blumenthal added, saying he is asking attorneys general in other states to investigate, too.

Functional foods claim to have added ingredients that provide an extra nutrition boost, and even the science center acknowledges that some are very healthy. The classic example: Already-nutritious orange juice pumped up with bone-strengthening calcium. Other examples are cereals containing heart-healthy fiber and FDA-approved margarine that contains cholesterol-lowering ingredients.

But the latest fad in food takes this concept a step further: adding unproven and largely unregulated herbal dietary supplements to foods.

"Herbs are drugs," said Varro Tyler, a professor emeritus at Purdue University and an internationally known herbal expert.

"We do not add Viagra to soup. We do not spray Prozac on corn chips," Tyler said, yet numerous companies claim to add herbs strong enough to affect health to foods eaten daily by children, pregnant women and others who could be at risk.

China, Russia join in blasting U.S.

■ The two giants denounce the proposed U.S. missile shield and call for cooperation.

By Christopher Bodeen
Associated Press

BEIJING — In a throwback to the early years of the Cold War, China and Russia joined Tuesday to condemn what they consider U.S. attempts to dominate the global order and pledged to stand together in defiance of American power.

Russian President Vladimir Putin and his Chinese counterpart, Jiang Zemin, put their burgeoning partnership on display during a one-day summit in the Chinese capital. Among the five documents they and their aides signed at a public ceremony, two took aim at the United States, singling out the proposed U.S. missile-defense system.

The leaders' language was not confrontational, but they agreed to closer cooperation on international affairs and denounced the anti-missile shield. In a joint statement, they accused Washington of using the shield "to seek unilateral military and security advantages that will pose the most grave, adverse consequences" to China, Russia and the United States itself.

Putin and Jiang urged Washington to adhere to the 28-year-old Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty, which prohibits the missile-defense system. Their statement warned that altering the treaty "will trigger an arms race and lead to an about-face in the positive trend that appeared in world politics after the end of the Cold War."

Washington argues that its proposed national shield is not aimed at China and Russia but at stopping missiles from North Korea and other smaller states hostile to U.S. interests. Putin and Jiang said "the pretext of a missile threat is totally unjustified."

They also criticized a U.S. proposal for a more limited anti-missile system to protect its troops and allies in East Asia, which Beijing fears would undermine its claim to Taiwan.

most assiduously are the China concerns," Undersecretary of State John D. Holm told reporters in Washington on Tuesday. "It will take considerable work to demonstrate that this system isn't aimed at them."

Hanging conjures up bad days in ol' Miss.

■ The authorities say Raynard Johnson committed suicide, but his family says he was murdered.

By Paul Payne
Associated Press

KOKOMO, Miss. — Raynard Johnson spent a hot evening knocking around with his older brother and trying out a new computer. As darkness fell, the black Mississippi teen-ager was with a girlfriend.

A few hours later, Johnson's body twisted in the evening breeze, hanging by a belt from a low limb on a pecan tree in his yard.

Two autopsies point to suicide in the 17-year-old's death, and investigators note that the girlfriend said she broke up with Johnson just before he died.

But others who knew him said Johnson had everything to live for — a family and friends, good grades and plans for the future. What Johnson also had were friendships with white girls.

Johnson's family, particularly his mother, is convinced that the teen-ager was murdered the night of June 16, sacrificed as a warning to other young blacks who would run with white women.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who has championed the Johnson family's cause at prayer vigils and news conferences, has labeled the death a lynching, conjuring up memories of nightriders who terrorized blacks in the South during the civil-rights movement.

"It has the smell of Emmett Till all around it, and these questions have to be answered," Jackson said. Till, a 14-year-old Chicago youth who was visiting family in Mississippi, was lynched in 1955 for supposedly whistling at a white woman.

The last lynching of a black man in Mississippi occurred in 1959, when Mack Charles Parker, accused of raping a white woman, was pulled from a jail cell, beaten and shot. His body was dumped in the muddy waters of the Pearl River.

"A hanging black man in Mississippi is a powerful thing that conjures up all kinds of images," said Joe Roy of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., whose organization keeps tabs on racist groups. "But it serves us no good to label it all until the investigation is complete."

In the Johnson case, two autopsies, including one commissioned by the family, found that Johnson's injuries were consistent with suicide: There were no bruises or other marks on the body, and nothing at the scene suggested there had been a struggle. Local, state and federal authorities are still investigating.

The possibility that heartbreak, rather than hatred, killed Johnson is reinforced by statements from his girlfriend, who is also black, that she broke up with him only a couple of hours before his death.

"I told him I love him, but I loved someone else," Taccara Matthews told police. "And he sat there just looking at me. And he asked me if I was ready to go home, and I said, 'Yeah.'"

But the Johnsons and Jackson say that the belt around the young man's neck was not his own and that FBI agents lost critical evidence, including an answering machine tape. The FBI refused to comment.

"I know that he didn't take his own life," mother Maria Johnson said. "He's dead, somebody did it, and everybody's a suspect."

Last week, the family secured a promise from Attorney General Janet Reno that there would be a thorough investigation.

"We will not rest until those who committed this murder are brought to justice," Jackson said at a July 8 rally that drew approximately 1,000 demonstrators. "We reject the suicide theory."

WSUI broadcast shakeup causes much ado

"There is absolutely no intention to shut people down; it's to broaden voices," Kjaer said.

However, Clements disagrees. He said some of the possible alternatives to the weekend programs have been for the radio-forum hosts to take over call-in talk shows, which he considered to be conducted in a primarily conservative format.

"If that means broadening, then that's not the definition of broadening I would like to see," Clements said.

Because the program replacing his former weekend show, "The Iowa Center For Arts," is expected to be two hours longer, Peter Alexander, the director of arts center relations, said he is looking forward to "Know the Score," which will be broadcast on KSUI. He had co-hosted the program with Winston Barclay, the assistant director for arts center relations.

"We had long hoped for greater emphasis for arts events taking place here on our radio station," Alexander said.

He said he had consulted with Kjaer, and he expects that he and Barclay will have some input to the new show.

Approximately 15 people will be affected by the weekend program changes, said Gerhild Krapf Greenhoe, the UI assistant vice president for University Relations.

"We're responding to a lot of people's wishes," she said.

Focus groups of both listeners and non-listeners contributed in making the decision, she said.

Besides the other changes, WSUI is now Webcasting and is locally producing more of the news reports, she said. The station also plans to report on more UI-related events, Krapf Greenhoe said.

"The links to university units and departments are getting stronger," she said.

In face of veto, Senate kills 'marriage penalty'

PENALTY

Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo. "I don't think the American people are dumb. They don't want the (surplus) money to go to tax cuts for the wealthy."

In a statement Tuesday, Clinton repeated his offer to sign the GOP marriage penalty bill only if Congress also sends him a measure creating an acceptable Medicare prescription-drug benefit.

"This is the best way to break the partisan logjam and help the tens of millions of older Americans across this country who face rising prescription-drug costs," the president said. "By itself, I would veto this bill."

But Republicans say the standalone tax bill puts Clinton — and Vice President Al Gore — in a tough political spot.

"It's going to be very hard to explain," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss. "Mr. President, are you for eliminating the marriage penalty tax, or not?"

The Congressional Budget

Office now projects an enormous budget surplus of $2.17 trillion over the next decade, far above previous forecasts. That includes an estimated $102 billion surplus in fiscal 2001, up from $15 billion in April.

GOP leaders want to use some of that surplus to permit people to benefit in 2001 from some of the "marriage penalty" cut. The Senate bill delays some key provisions until 2002 at the earliest.

Much of the surplus will be set aside to pay down the public debt. But the new numbers also make it easier for Republicans to push for more tax cuts in this election year, including a proposed expansion in tax-deferred contributions to retirement accounts and repeal of a 1993 tax increase imposed on the Social Security benefits of people with incomes above certain levels.

The administration, said House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, "is officially out of excuses for not accepting tax fairness. These growing surpluses must be applied to debt reduction and tax relief."

Clinton delays trip, searches for compromise said the talks could end with a partial deal in which Israel recognized a Palestinian state.

"Listen, let's not fool ourselves, OK?" he said, having talked frequently to Barak throughout the summit, now in its eighth day. "If it walks like a duck, if it talks like a duck, if it sounds like a duck, it's a Palestinian state."

President Clinton negotiated until dawn Tuesday, the second of two sessions with Barak ending at 4:30 a.m. Clinton then met with his staff. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Sandy Berger, the president's national security assistant, met simultaneously with Arafat until 5 a.m.

Later Tuesday, it was Clinton's turn to meet with the Palestinian leader.

"A variety of people have been up most of the night for the last three nights, so I think you can expect that they're tired, but they're staying at it," Lockart said.

A press plane that was to take reporters to Japan Tuesday night to cover Clinton's visit to Japan was rescheduled to leave Wednesday morning.

Albright, meanwhile, canceled a trip to London in which she was supposed to speak to the American Bar Association today.

Regarding Jerusalem, the toughest of all issues, Barak came to the summit prepared to offer a deal in which some large Jewish settlement on the West Bank would come under Israeli sovereignty, while Palestinian control of areas of the city would be expanded to predominantly Arab villages in the suburbs.

But Hasan Abdel Rahman, the Palestine Liberation Organization's envoy to Washington, said: "Our position on Jerusalem has not changed. East Jerusalem is occupied territory, and we have not changed our position on sovereignty over it."

During the day, some reports surfaced of progress on the Jerusalem front. They were attributed to anonymous Palestinian sources.

Council OKs affordable-housing project cent interest rate, to be paid back over 20 years. This request, however, did not meet the city's criteria.

Although councilors expressed interest in helping the company, council guidelines mandate that loans be for 10 years with interest rates between 3 and 7 percent.

Instead of being turned down for the loan, company officials agreed to meet City Council criteria and take out a loan with a 3 percent interest rate to be paid back over 10 years.

Maryanne Dennis, the executive director of the Greater Iowa City Housing Fellowship, said she opposes the development because she feels that the developers did not follow the guidelines.

"The guidelines say that the loan from the city has to be the last piece of financing for the project," Dennis said. "They have not fulfilled the other money sources."

Although Mayor Ernie Lehman agreed that the guidelines need to be looked at to make sure that they are clear, he did not feel that deferring this particular housing project was fair.

"If we are to defer this resolution for two weeks, we may kill the project," Lehman said. "I think this is a good plan, and it would not be in the best interest of the city to delay it."

Councilor Dee Vanderhoef voiced concern that the plan has 30 housing units in one area. She suggested the development be put on two pieces of land rather than the proposed one.

Jeanne Kelsey, the development coordinator for the Metro-Plains group, explained that if the city wanted to put the units on separate plots of land, the company would not be able to continue its plan to build, thus ending the project.

The criterion for living in the development will be a family income 50-60 percent lower than the Iowa City area's median income.

"We will also do a criminal and credit check on families that move into the development," Kelsey said.

The project will cost $4 million. The council's approval of the resolution means the developer will receive a loan of $225,000 from the city.

The housing will help alleviate the long list of people waiting for affordable housing, said City Manager Steve Atkins.

HAWKEYE BASEBALL

Iowa ranks nationally

■ The Iowa baseball team ranked 28th in the nation in fielding percentage.

By Laura Podolak
The Daily Iowan

Although the Iowa baseball team finished the 2000 season a disappointing seventh in the Big Ten, with a 19-35 record, some evidence of team members' growth and maturity as a team surfaced recently.

The young Hawkeyes learned that 35 losses doesn't pin you as an unsuccessful team. Iowa finished the 2000 season ranked nationally in two categories: fielding percentage and double plays.

The Hawkeyes turned 65 double plays this past season, good enough for a ranking of eighth in the nation. The number of double plays also edged out a previous school record of 60, recorded in 1977.

The skillful play of shortstop Kurt Vitense, second baseman Brian Burks and first baseman Brian Carlson turned 31 out of the 65 double plays.

Vitense, the team's co-MVP last season, will return next year with experience, having been the Hawkeyes' leading batter with a .3 average. He also led the team in hits with 60, and doubles, with 15.

Burks and Carlson, both juniors, will return next year with additional experience and will bring solid play to the roster.

The Hawkeyes also finished 28th in the nation in fielding percentage, boasting a .966 average.

Iowa's last national ranking was 1998, when it finished with a 17 place national ranking in fielding percentage with the same percentage as this year's.

"Our fielding and hitting coach Elvis Dominguez, has done a great job," coach Scott Broghamer said. "We return the majority of our position players next season, so we need to use their experience, along with the pitching staff's abilities to draw groundballs, in order to get better."

Angels get dramatic extra-inning win

■ An 11th inning triple by Troy Glaus gives the Angels a 3-2 edge.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Troy Glaus tripled with two outs in the 11th and scored on Trevor Hoffman's wild pitch as the Anaheim Angels, who blew a ninth-inning lead, beat the San Diego Padres, 3-2, Tuesday.

With the Padres down to their last strike in the ninth, Ruben Rivera tied the game by hitting an inside-the-park home run off Troy Percival, who blew his second save in this series.

Hoffman (2-4) started the 10th and retired five straight batters before Glaus hit to right. Eric Owens broke back on the ball, then had to come in and the ball took an odd hop, allowing Glaus to take third. He then scored when Hoffman's pitch to Bengie Molina hit the plate and bounced away.

Percival struck out the first two Padres batters in the ninth and was one strike away from his 23rd save when Rivera, who struck out 22 times in his previous 11 games, lifted an 0-2 pitch to right field. The ball bounced off the padding near the top of the fence and Orlando Palmeiro tried to make a leaping catch, crash-

Pittsburgh Pirates snapped a season-high six-game losing streak Tuesday with an 8-6 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Josias Manzanillo (1-0) got credit for the win after replacing starter Todd Ritchie, who squandered a 5-0 lead he helped create with an RBI double.

Manzanillo held the Dodgers to an infield single over 3½ innings to earn his sixth major league victory and first since May 15, 1995, with the New York Mets. The right-hander struck out four, including Gary Sheffield and Shawn Green back-to-back to end the sixth.

Rockies 18, Athletics 3

DENVER — Jeffrey Hammonds hit a homer and drove in five runs a day after undergoing root-canal surgery, and the Colorado Rockies drilled the Oakland Athletics, 18-3, Tuesday. The Rockies posted their second straight victory after snapping an 11-game losing streak in the second game of a day-night doubleheader on Monday.

junior-to-be Ladell Betts has established himself as one of the premier ball carriers in the country, and he only plans on getting better. DI sportswriter Julie Matolo spoke with Betts this week about the upcoming season, his offensive line and whom he looks to for motivation.

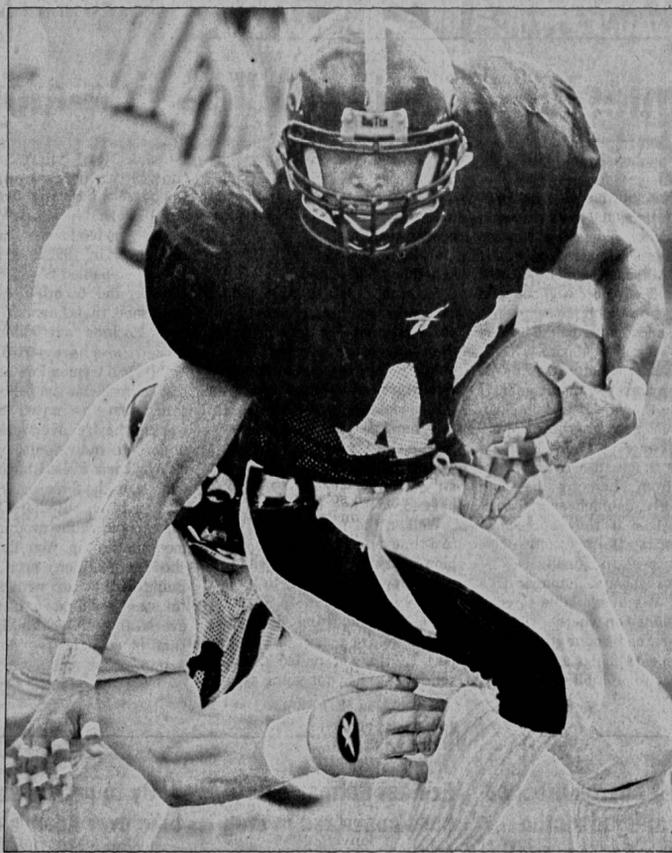

DI: How is your summer training going so far?

LB: Good so far. I feel like I have been stronger and faster. It feels like it has been going well so far. I feel like I am making improvements, and that is the most important thing.

DI: Athlon Sports Magazine has picked you as the preseason first-team All Big Ten running back, along with many other magazines that have chosen you as one of the best running backs in the Big Ten. How do you feel about all of this?

LB: I think it is flattering. I think it is nice to know my name is out

Armstrong struggles in mountains, still in lead

MORZINE, France — It was a rare sight: Lance Armstrong struggling through the mountains, unable to summon an extra burst of energy to stay with his rivals on a climb.

The Texan just couldn't keep up late in Tuesday's 16th stage of the Tour de France and wound up staggering across the finish line in eighth place. He was 2 minutes, 1 second behind stage winner Richard Virenque and 1:37 behind Jan Ullrich, Armstrong's only serious challenger for the title.

Armstrong, though, had plenty of time to spare, and rode well enough to maintain an overall lead that should hold up with five stages left in the cycling marathon.

"Today was the hardest day of my life on a bike," a winded Armstrong said.

His lead over Ullrich, the 1997 champion, was cut from 7:26 to 5:37, but with all five of the decisive mountain stages over, he should have few problems retaining the yellow jersey to the end.

"I had a problem on the last climb. I had no energy left," said Armstrong, who came back from cancer to win the tour last year. "I am lucky that this race goes on for three weeks and that I had a lead of 7½ minutes."

He said he didn't eat properly before the race and was lacking sugar.

Decathlon champ withdraws

■ Dan O'Brien announces he is taking himself out of competition for the 2000 Sydney Olympics.

By Bob Baum
 Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Dan O'Brien, the defending Olympic champion in the decathlon and one of track and field's biggest names over the last decade, said Tuesday he plans to withdraw from the U.S. trials and will miss the Sydney Games.

O'Brien, 34, said he partially tore the plantar fascia, connective tissue on the bottom of his left foot, while practicing the high jump last Wednesday.

"I don't see any way I can participate Thursday at 4 o'clock," he said, referring to the opening of the decathlon competition. "It's heart-breaking. I'm in shock."

He said he had done everything he could to try to compete in spite of the injury.

"I got a big pain-killing shot yesterday, taped up the foot and ankle just furiously, as tight as I could, and it hurts too much even to jog at this point," he said at a news conference. "A couple of times I thought, 'To hell with it, just go for it,' and I can't even take three or four steps without having to stop. It's that painful."

O'Brien said he wouldn't formally withdraw until just before the competition begins.

"I'm 98, 99 percent out right now," he said. "If for some reason a miracle were to happen, my prayers were answered and I woke up Thursday morning and felt like I could sprint, I would be out there giving a try."

Just a week ago, O'Brien had expressed optimism in defending his Olympic title, even though he had been in serious training only eight weeks and had not competed in a decathlon since winning the event at the 1998 Goodwill Games. That was his only decathlon since he won the Olympic gold medal in Atlanta in 1996.

O'Brien said he was practicing the high jump on the Washington State University track in Pullman last Wednesday when he felt something pop in his foot. Two days later, an MRI showed a 60 percent tear.

"I can't run 15 or 20 meters at any kind of speed, not even half speed,"

Major leaguer questioned after police ride-along

■ Colorado second baseman was present on a raid where an innocent man was killed.

By John Mossman
 Associated Press

DENVER — While Larry Walker insists he doesn't fear for his safety when he goes on a civilian "ride-along" with police, he does wear a bulletproof vest.

"I put it on in case something crazy happens," the Colorado Rockies slugger said Monday.

The practice of accompanying police during patrols came to light Sunday when it was reported that Rockies second baseman Mike Lansing was with police when they conducted a no-knock drug raid that left an innocent man dead last Sept. 29.

Police Chief Gerry Whitman said Lansing remained in the police van while officers raided the wrong house and killed 45-year-old Ismael Mena.

The raid by the Denver Metro SWAT unit resulted in the ouster of former Police Chief Tom Sanchez and the reassignment of Public Safety Manager Fidel "Butch" Montoya. The officer who obtained the search warrant faces perjury charges, and Denver paid $400,000 to Mena's family in Mexico.

"I was on the ride, but I didn't go in the home," Lansing said. "I stayed in the van. It's no big deal. I can't really say anything more."

Police were at Coors Field on Monday to get a written statement from Lansing between games of a doubleheader, but it was unclear if they succeeded. The district attorney's office also plans to speak to Lansing.

Rockies general manager Dan O'Dowd was unavailable to comment Monday on whether the club was concerned about its players' safety on ride-alongs and whether it planned to prohibit the practice.

"We have been advised by Mike that he was in a van that evening," club spokesman Jay Alves said. "He wasn't involved in any way and did not see anything."

Walker, however, was outspoken about ride-alongs.

Asked if he felt the club should be concerned, Walker said, "No, absolutely not. We're no different than any other member of the public who wants to do this. We sign waivers that allow us to go on these rides."

"When I go out, I don't get crazy. I sit in the car most of the time. I wear a bulletproof jacket just for my own state of mind. You don't have to wear one, but I do."

Walker, the 1997 NL MVP and two-time defending batting champion, said he won't participate in a ride-along that is likely to subject officers to violence.

"If it's something dangerous where they're going after a suspect they've got nailed down or something, I'm not going there," he said. "They tell you ahead of time. Or if I do go, I just stay in the police vehicle and don't leave."

Walker said he has gone on "two or three" ride-alongs since coming to Denver in 1995 and at times has accompanied SWAT teams in Denver and in other cities. He confirmed that Lansing and former Rockies outfielder Dante Bichette also have participated.

"I have a tremendous amount of respect for what the police do," he said. "I'm fascinated by their work. They're overworked and underpaid individuals, out there risking their lives. I have a lot of friends on the force."

"Just being out there, being in the car and riding around, it gets me pumped up. You don't need shooting, you don't need chasing. Being in that car, with access to the siren and lights and speed and everything — just thinking about that is enough. You don't need action."

University of Michigan narrows athletic director search

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — When Bill Martin agreed to lead the University of Michigan's troubled Athletic Department in March, he was asked to lend a hand to his alma mater for no longer than a few months. Now, he has done such an impressive job that some apparently don't want him to leave.

Departmental sources told the Ann Arbor News for a story Tuesday that a group of Michigan coaches recently compiled a petition asking the school to hire Martin permanently. At the same time, school President Lee Bollinger announced that a search committee narrowed the list of candidates for the job to three.

Martin is not on that list, said Gary Krenz, special counsel to the president, but he wouldn't comment on whether Martin still may be interviewed.

Martin told the paper last week that he had not asked to be considered. University officials would not release the names of any details about the three hopefuls, who Bollinger will interview personally.

"There is a lot of speculation and rumors going around, but we can't comment on it," Krenz said. "All of it runs the risk of losing good people."

Assault charge dropped when alleged victim fails to show for trial

AMES — The simple assault charge against former Iowa State football player Robert Lewis Jr. was dropped when the bartender he was accused of threatening failed to show up for the trial.

Lewis was accused of throwing a drink in Andrew Kelley's face, threatening him and grabbing his shirt at La Boheme Bistro.

"I'm happy of course to just not have to deal with it," Lewis said. "At the same time, I would have loved to prove that I was innocent."

Lewis, 21, the former starting fullback from LaMarque, Texas, lost his spot on the team when he was arrested last month on the charge arising from the April incident.

Athletic Department spokesman Tom Kroeschell said it is unlikely Lewis will be reinstated.

The trial was scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday, and at 10:10 a.m., when Kelley hadn't arrived, Assistant City Attorney Judy Parks asked that the simple assault charge be dismissed.

The incident happened April 2, but Lewis said he did not know there was a warrant for him until he was arrested June 24 in Huxley.

Ex-East German sports boss convicted in drug trial

BERLIN — The former head of East German sports was convicted Tuesday of directing the "systematic and overall doping" of the nation's Olympic athletes in a secret program that ravaged their bodies.

A court found that former East German sports chief Manfred Ewald, 74, and longtime medical director Manfred Hoepfner, 65, shared responsibility for the steroid program that ran from 1974 until the Berlin Wall came down in 1989.

Ewald and Hoepfner were placed on probation. They faced maximum sentences of two years in prison.

The court said Ewald was the "driving force" behind the drug program and kept it going with "merciless hardness."

He and Hoepfner were convicted of being accessories to causing bodily harm; the hormonal changes experienced by the unwitting athletes, many of them minors, who were fed little blue steroid pills and told they were taking vitamins.

The former athletes said the side effects ranged from excessive body hair and deep voices to gynecological problems and, in at least one case, birth deformities in a baby.

Petty to permanently take over Adam's car

CONCORD, N.C. — Still mourning the death of his son, Kyle Petty said Tuesday he will honor him by permanently taking over Adam's race car — a move that signifies a major restructuring at Petty Enterprises.

Petty, 40, has been driving Adam's car on the Busch Grand National series since the 19-year-old was killed in a May crash in practice at New Hampshire International Speedway. He will remain in the No. 45 car for the rest of the year and stay in it next year when they move the car up to Winston Cup.

"I couldn't see putting someone whose last name wasn't Petty back into the car," Petty said. "It's a healing process. Emotionally for me it's been a pretty big boost being in that car."

"We didn't change one thing on that car — not the seats, not the steering wheel. When I sit in the car, I'm sitting in the same seat (Adam) sat in, holding the same wheel, and I feel close to him."

Petty will only drive his No. 44 Winston Cup car until September, then focus solely on the rest of the Busch season. Steve Grissom, who drives on the Craftsman Truck series for Petty Enterprises, will take over Petty's Winston Cup car starting Sept. 3 in Darlington, S.C.

there and people know who I am. But other than that, I don't really pay too much attention to that kind of stuff, because it is preseason, and everything else will be determined out on the field. Everybody likes to look in a magazine and see their names in there, so it's cool.

Di: What can we expect to see from Ladell Betts this year on the field?

LB: Hopefully, I am improved. I am bigger this year, so hopefully a more physical back. Whatever it takes to win. I am really excited about this year. There will be drastic improvements from last year. I just want to get the job done and do my part and everyone else do their part, and we will come out all right.

Di: How do you feel about the young and not-as-experienced offensive line? Also what do you expect from them this year?

LB: Most of the guys played last year and have a year under their belt. They are young, but they obviously made an improvement in spring ball. Many people saw this in the spring game. I am enthusiastic about that, and I look forward

Yankees 3, Phillies 1
 NEW YORK — Denny Neagle made quite a first impression at a most opportune time for the New York Yankees. Pitching in pinstrips for the first time, Neagle took a shutout into the eighth inning as the Yankees beat the Philadelphia Phillies, 3-1, on Tuesday night.

David Justice hit a solo homer and Bernie Williams added a two-run triple off Curt Schilling (5-6) for New York. Schilling finished with a four-hitter. But it was Neagle's night.

 ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Chipper Jones hit his 24th homer, and Greg Maddux scattered seven hits to win his 12th game Tuesday night as the Atlanta Braves beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays, 8-2, for their fifth victory in six games.

Maddux (12-3) struck out six and walked one, and retired 11 of the last 12 batters he faced en route to his fourth complete game of the season and 97th career. It was his third straight win since dropping consecutive decisions on June 24 and July 1.

 CLEVELAND — Manny Ramirez, whose future in Cleveland could be determined in the next two weeks, hit a pair of two-run homers and drove in five runs Tuesday night, leading Dave Burba and the Indians to an 8-2 win over the Houston Astros.

Ramirez, eligible to become a free agent after the season, hit his 15th homer in the fifth inning off Shane Reynolds (6-7). He added another two-run shot in the sixth —

there and people know who I am. But other than that, I don't really pay too much attention to that kind of stuff, because it is preseason, and everything else will be determined out on the field. Everybody likes to look in a magazine and see their names in there, so it's cool.

DI: What can we expect to see from Ladell Betts this year on the field?

LB: Hopefully, I am improved. I am bigger this year, so hopefully a more physical back. Whatever it takes to win. I am really excited about this year. There will be drastic improvements from last year. I just want to get the job done and do my part and everyone else do their part, and we will come out all right.

DI: How do you feel about the young and not-as-experienced offensive line? Also what do you expect from them this year?

LB: Most of the guys played last year and have a year under their belt. They are young, but they obviously made an improvement in spring ball. Many people saw this in the spring game. I am enthusiastic about that, and I look forward to seeing what is going to happen this year. I think they will definitely do their part and will open up some holes for me and create some time for the quarter back so the offense can get some things done this year.

DI: What is the most important thing to take from last season's transition year, in preparing for this year's season?

LB: Personally, last year taught me that there is always going to be adversity, and you have to overcome that. Last year was a tough season for the team and me. That season brought us together as a team because we all went through it, and nobody wants to go through it again. Everyone is working that much harder, and everyone has that much more camaraderie, trying to get better. It is kind of hard to say 1 and 10 is a good thing, but it was a good thing in bringing us that much closer together because no one wants to experience that again.

DI: How does Iowa plan to come back this year?

LB: The only thing you can do is prepare in the off-season as we are doing right now. We go in and work, sweat, run and lift together. Off-season is voluntary, so to see everyone else volunteer as you are doing and to see everyone putting forth the same commitment and same effort brings everyone closer together as a team. We are becoming a more physical team.

DI: What are your goals at Iowa and your aspirations for the rest of your football career?

LB: My goals at Iowa are two of course graduate with a degree and make life-long friends here, which I have already done. For the football aspect, my dream is to have a professional career in football and just win games. That is what I have always wanted to do since I was a kid.

DI: What are you like during practice?

LB: I am not too outspoken. I try to lead by example. During practice I am kind of laid back. I am pretty easygoing, but I always work hard because my coach won't accept anything less.

DI: If you are not on the field, where are you to be found?

LB: In my bed — I sleep a lot. Or I am playing video games with the fellas.

DI: Whom do you look up to for inspiration and motivation?

LB: No further than either one of parents. Both of them are very influential, and both of them are my biggest fans. My mom I look to the most because she is a strong woman. She raised me herself and sometimes that took two jobs to do that. Very religious woman. She e-mails me all the time to keep my head up and always tells me to stay humble. My mom is a great woman, and I love her to death.

DI: What has been your greatest football moment or most memorable game?

LB: Probably my first collegiate game because there was so much pressure and so much hype. After Tavian left, there was a lot of pressure on me for taking over his position. I had two touchdowns for my first collegiate game, so that felt good.

DI: What keeps you driven in the game of football?

LB: The thought that so many other people look at athletes in general and wish they could do what we are doing. And then I always think, well what if I didn't have these abilities, then how would I feel? Then I realize how lucky I am and how blessed I am to have the gifts that I have. Football builds life-long friendships also. There is nothing else I would rather do than play football, and that is what keeps me driven — the love of the game. Sometimes you have to look back and see how lucky you really are.

Words end between Armstrong and Pantani

The day's route of 122 miles passed near the spectacular cable cars that run to the 10,560-foot summit of Carron from Val-Thorens, the highest ski resort in Europe.

Between the narrow winding mountain passes, which made for energy-sapping climbs and potentially dangerous descents, riders passed through scenic villages and the town of Albertville, host city of the 1992 Winter Olympics.

There was no more verbal jousting between Armstrong and Marco Pantani, the 1998 Tour winner, though their public spat — centering on Armstrong's decision to ease off and let Pantani win a stage last week — may have given both riders extra motivation.

Pantani built up an early lead, before dropping back at the start of the day's final ascent up the Col de Joux-Plane. As the Italian faltered, Armstrong, who said he would be thinking during the race about their dispute, sprinted past.

Ullrich, Virenque and Roberto Heras went wheel-to-wheel with Armstrong, and it was Heras who had the strongest legs, opening up a 39-second gap over Armstrong with 12 miles to go.

Suddenly, the strength seemed to drain out of Armstrong.

he said. But O'Brien said there was no way he was retiring from the sport.

"It's hard to think about the future right now but I know for sure I'm not finished," he said. "I want to get healthy. I want to have a season. I want to run in some indoor meets. I want to challenge 9,000 points."

O'Brien underwent surgery for tendinitis on his right knee a year ago, and the recovery from the operation took much longer than he had expected.

He participated in the Modesto Relays in April, but the knee continued to give him problems. Last month, he competed in the 110-meter hurdles and long jump at the Grand Prix meet at Stanford, and pronounced himself ready for a decathlon.

His optimism was bolstered by a 16-foot pole vault in a recent low-key meet.

O'Brien overcame a troubled adolescence growing up in Klamath Falls, Ore., to become the "world's greatest athlete," the unofficial title given to the world record-holder and Olympic champion in the exhausting, two-day, 10-event decathlon.

striking out eight — including five in succession to tie the club record. Hammonds hit his 15th homer, a solo shot off Scott Service, in the sixth inning.

Yankees 3, Phillies 1

NEW YORK — Denny Neagle made quite a first impression at a most opportune time for the New York Yankees. Pitching in pinstripes for the first time, Neagle took a shutout into the eighth inning as the Yankees beat the Philadelphia Phillies, 3-1, on Tuesday night.

David Justice hit a solo homer and Bernie Williams added a two-run triple off Curt Schilling (5-6) for New York. Schilling finished with a four-hitter. But it was Neagle's night.

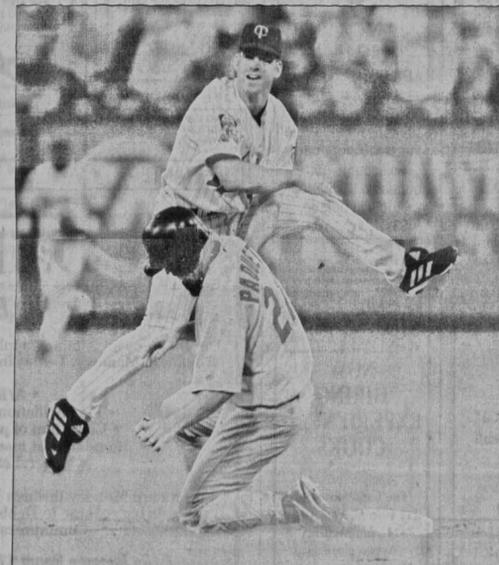

Braves 8, Devil Rays 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Chipper Jones hit his 24th homer, and Greg Maddux scattered seven hits to win his 12th game Tuesday night as the Atlanta Braves beat the Tampa Bay Devil Rays, 8-2, for their fifth victory in six games.

Maddux (12-3) struck out six and walked one, and retired 11 of the last 12 batters he faced en route to his fourth complete game of the season and 97th career. It was his third straight win since dropping consecutive decisions on June 24 and July 1.

his 1,000th career hit — as the Indians improved to 5-1 since the All-Star break.

White Sox 7, Brewers 5

CHICAGO — Mike Sirota struck out a career-high 10, and the Chicago White Sox took advantage of two errors to beat the Milwaukee Brewers, 7-5, Tuesday night for their fourth straight victory.

Chris Singleton hit a two-run single in a four-run third and Greg Norton drove in two runs as the White Sox finished inter-league play 12-6.

Royals 12, Cubs 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Johnny Damon had a career-high five hits — including a club-record four doubles — as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Chicago Cubs, 12-4, on Tuesday night, avoiding a three-game sweep.

Damon's third double was part of a five-run fifth that blew open a one-run game. The previous record of three doubles in a game was accomplished by 23 times, the last by Carlos Beltran in a game at Seattle on May 14, 1999.

Twins 3, Cardinals 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Matt Lawton singled home the go-ahead run in the eighth inning Tuesday night and the Minnesota

Twins beat the St. Louis Cardinals 3-2. Cristian Guzman doubled and Jay Canizaro walked before Lawton's hit. Guzman slid home just ahead of the throw from left fielder Shawn Dunston.

Brad Radke (7-10) allowed eight hits in eight innings. He struck out six and walked two in winning back-to-back starts for the first time since April 18-23.

Mets 11, Blue Jays 7

TORONTO — It was time for Mike Piazza to unload. Piazza hit a grand slam, breaking a light-bulb on a SkyDome clock, and the New York Mets defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 11-7 Tuesday night.

After Chris Carpenter (8-8) loaded the bases by walking Lenny Harris, Derek Bell and Edgardo Alfonzo in the fifth inning, Piazza crushed a ball over the Windows restaurant in left-center field.

Reds 5, Tigers 4

DETROIT — Dmitri Young had three hits and two RBIs, including a solo homer, as the Cincinnati Reds beat Detroit, 5-4, Tuesday night, averting a sweep in their three-game series with the Tigers.

The Tigers announced during the sixth inning they acquired veteran infielder Hal Morris from the Reds for cash.

Elmer Dessens (2-0), making his third start of the season, gave up four runs on seven hits and three walks in 5 1/3 innings.

Red Sox 3, Expos 1

BOSTON — Pedro Martinez struck out 12 to earn his first victory since June 8 and Darren Lewis broke a seventh-inning tie with a suicide squeeze Tuesday night to give the Boston Red Sox a 3-1 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Nomar Garciaparra went 1-for-3 to see his major league-leading batting average drop from .400 to .399.

Martinez (10-3) allowed five hits and three walks in eight innings. Derek Lowe pitched the ninth for his 21st save.

favorite this week. It's what he did after his drive that showed why he can win becoming just the fifth player to win the career Grand Slam.

The ball had dropped into a pot bunker the size of a kiddie pool. There was barely enough room for Woods to take a stance, the back of his knees nearly pressed against the sodded walls.

Woods squeezed the ball out of the sand, over the lip and onto the green, some 15 feet from the flag. The silence finally was broken by two words from his caddie. "Nice shot."

And now, two words for the other 155 players in the field who will try to claim the 129th British Open and keep Woods from becoming only the youngest player to win all four major championships. Good luck.

Woods doesn't win every week, but he has won 14 of his last 26 tournaments worldwide, an astounding rate.

Poppin' punk down the groove

■ "Fun and not pretentious," the Groovie Ghoulies will hit the Green Room tonight.

By Emily Maher
The Daily Iowan

Pop-punksters the Groovie Ghoulies will be gigging at the Green Room, 509 S. Gilbert St., tonight to promote its latest LP, Travels with My Amp.

The band follows old-school punk, bellowing witty lyrics but with a B-movie theme.

"It does a good job of being pop-punk," said Charlie McLeod, an employee at Vibes Music. "And has more interesting lyrics than some bands do. It's subjective, though, I guess. The kiddies like 'em."

A sample of the band's stranger lyrics would be: "Excuse me but have you seen my monkey? He bit me and ran off to the city." The best part is, it rhymes!

Yet, the band also writes lyrics that a struggling college kid can really relate to, such as "I'm running out of money and I'm running out of guns, this job is definitely becoming unfun. Don't make me kill you again." A sentiment that would cheer up any down-hearted punker on a rainy day.

This spooky band has done quite a bit of traveling, playing Lollapalooza, Hootenanny and at the California State Capitol. It's toured with such names as the Donnas, the Mr. T Experience and the Muffs.

During one of its seven U.S. tours a couple years ago, (it's also had two Canadian tours and three European tours), the group made a stop at Gabe's and a little place called Sal's Music Emporium in Iowa City. Sal Leanhart, the owner, said the band has built up a good fan base here.

The group's albums (there are nine of them) regularly sell out at Vibes, said manager Michelle Bradley.

The Groovie Ghoulies include Kevi on vocals, Roach on guitar, B-face on bass and Amy on drums. Sal vaunts that they probably have the cutest lead guitarist on the planet right now, and who knows what color her hair will be this time.

The Groovie Ghoulies (B-Face, Roach, Kevi and Amy) will play an all ages show tonight at the Green Room.

The group members work to keep a clean image, emphasizing tour and travel rather than drugs. The band is rumored to have climbed the Empire State Building and walked the walls of Niagara Falls. They do what they can to keep alive on the road and apparently enjoy late-night talk-show host Art Bell a great deal and often listen to Neil Diamond. And they have just as much energy in their music, said Leanhart.

"Kevi, the lead, never stops between songs. It keeps the energy going, like one continuous three-chord song," he said. "They're really fun and not pretentious at all."

Nothing succeeds like failure

■ A new Web 'zine takes a second look at what didn't work.

By Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press

SCARSDALE, N.Y. — If at first you don't succeed, try failuremag.com.

A new Web magazine called Failure, launched Monday from a three-story house in Scarsdale, gives visitors the chance to vote on which dud tastes better — New Coke or Crystal Pepsi. There's an article about Breakfast Mates, Kellogg's doomed attempt to sell milk and cereal in one package. And at the Failure Store, anyone brave enough to wear it can buy a T-shirt that literally said "failure" all over it.

But founder Jason Zasky says Failure is all about success.

"This is not a site for losers," he said. "We're not out to judge people. We're not out to critique. We're not out to make failure a personal issue. Actually, I think we write about winners because those are the people out there taking risks, making things happen, even if they fail."

The online magazine does tackle some weighty subjects. The first issue has a long article, complete with maps, about "the most monumental failure of the past two millennia" — the defeat of the Moors in 732 by Charlemagne's grandfather, Charles Martel. Author Jack Stesney said that by blocking Arab influence, the battle set civilization back 200 years.

Another complex and perhaps controversial piece is promised for a future issue: "The Failure of Christianity."

The site also celebrates — if that's the word — "This Day in Failure."

Visitors can help predict — sight unseen — which movies opening each week will be turkeys. One of this week's titles seems all too appropriate for failuremag.com: the Amy Heckerling film Loser.

"Some of the shorter, quick-hit content is a little more light-hearted," Zasky said. "But for the most part we're not even talking about things that simply failed. In general, the issues are not that black-and-white."

"Most of the people we write about are really successful and failure is just a part of their life," he said. "The biggest failure is not trying."

Zasky, 30, and his partner, Kathleen Ervin, 34, expect to make a success of Failure, and they're not talking about the kind of Internet success that includes lots of financial losses and a magical stock offering.

"Our approach is much more conservative than most startups," Zasky said. "We're just hoping for a profitable business. I think we can begin making a profit by year's end."

He thinks his site is a natural for some advertisers, such as insurance companies — "Failure is kind of an inevitable thing for them." He also believes the Failure store will make money. "When we tested the idea of the site, one of the things we found was that with the younger portion of the audience, the merchandise was really well-received. People were writing on the surveys, 'Where can I get the hat? Where can I get the T-shirt?' We're already getting orders."

Zasky seems unworried about running out of failures to write about.

"We've already produced content that could last several months," he said. "We have so many ideas it's unbelievable." A story will be coming soon about the $1 coin, he said. And the new-products guy will be watching as Heinz brings green ketchup to market.

■ James Lee receives a maximum of 30 years for various crimes.

By Disa Lubker
The Daily Iowan

The last of four defendants associated with the 1998 homicide of Frank Lee Boyd was sentenced Wednesday at the Johnson County Courthouse. James Christopher Lee, 21, pleaded guilty to charges of involuntary manslaughter, ongoing criminal conduct, distribution of crack cocaine to an individual under the age of 18, obstructing prosecution, assault with a dangerous weapon and absence from custody. Lee will serve a maximum of 30 years for various crimes.

■ The vice president says he would like the U.S. to move step-by-step to universal health care.

By Andrea Mason
The Daily Iowan

Democratic presidential candidate Al Gore answered questions at a town meeting in Cedar Rapids Wednesday evening and then stayed overnight to deliver a speech today. Wednesday night's event brought together approximately 50 residents from Eastern Iowa. The group was selected by sponsors KCRG-TV, the Cedar Rapids Gazette and Iowa Farm Today, based on questions they submitted. Approximately 14 individuals were allowed to pose questions to the vice president, with topics ranging from military spending to prescription-drug payment for the elderly and children to competition from foreign companies. Gore said small businesses would be encouraged to provide health insurance for their employees via tax breaks. In this way, Gore said, he also hopes to help the businesses themselves by allowing them to offer benefits and attract more employees. Gore discussed many solutions for children without health care, including expanding such programs as the UI Hawkeye program.

For minorities starting new businesses, Gore said, he wants to help. He said not helping minority small businesses start and grow has a "ripple effect." "If that person doesn't have access to capital, the person hurt is not isolated to them," he said. "Also hurt are the people who depend on them."

■ The new soccer field is a much-needed shot in the arm for women's athletics, officials say.

By Bridgette...
The Daily Iowan

Culminating a three-year process, the UI will have an athletics center at the state of Iowa approved plans loan at its West Des Moines campus over the next 20 months. The UI will pay for the facility. Phase one of the project, a $10-million soccer field, will begin in August. President Mary Kay Vaughan said the field is a "much-needed" shot in the arm for women's athletics, officials say. "I feel like this will boost the program," she said. "It's really kind of exciting." Both facilities at the intersection of Boulevard and M Street will be built on a 10-acre site. The UI will own the field, and the state will own the building. The new field will be built on a site that was previously used for a parking lot. The field will be built on a site that was previously used for a parking lot.
