points. But a harassing F.I.T. Zone defense efficiently denied Goodfellow's inside-outside passing by pushing Earl away from the basket.

The lack of interior presence relegated Goodfellow to a perimeter game, where the team hit only 10-of-34 3-pointers.

"They played great team basketball, and we just fell apart as a team," said PTL MVP Oliver, who registered 38 points and six assists.

The championship game featured a halftime awards ceremony, in which this year's top PTL players were honored with applause from the crowd. In addition to Oliver (MVP) and Jenkins (Defensive MVP) receiving recognition, Iowa City Ready Mix guard Darryl Moore won the Chris Street Award, given to the player who best exemplifies on-and-off court excellence and dedication.

U.S. TRACK AND FIELD

Jones looks to conquer five golds

Superwoman of track and field Marion Jones is ready to get a record five Olympic gold medals.

By Bert Rosenthal Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Five gold medals in one Olympic Games? Impossible?

Not for Marion Jones. The Superwoman of track and field has said for two years she wants five. Skeptics questioned her.

— She's too young, they said. — No woman has ever won five, so why does she think she can? She went for four at last year's World Championships and wound up with one. Florence Griffith Joyner tried for four at the Olympics and got three.

— She can't long jump consistently.

— The schedule is too tough. Forget all those negatives. Jones is on target, at least for now, for five.

She survived a strenuous U.S. Olympic trials by winning the 100 and 200 meters and long jump, giving her three spots on the U.S. team. In addition, she will run the 400 and 1,600 relays at Sydney.

At 5-foot-10 and a solid 140 pounds, Jones is big enough and strong enough to survive at the Olympics, where the temperature is not expected to be as hot as the 90-degree days in Sacramento. She also is smart enough and cool enough to shrug off Olympic pressure.

At Sydney, the only extra running she will be required to do will be one more round each in the 100 and 200, plus the 400 and 1,600 relay finals. The relays were not contested at the trials.

The way she competed at the trials, she appears to be a certainty to win the 100 and 200. Nobody in the world has run faster than her in those events this year, and only FloJo ran faster than Jones' career bests.

In the relays, she probably will run the anchor legs, and again her speed is unquestioned.

Only in the long jump is there uncertainty.

Her fluctuation is that event is so wild that she could win or not even make the final.

"I've always been the first one to say that going for the five events is not going to be easy," she said Sunday, the final day of the trials at Sacramento State's Hornet Stadium. "It's going to be very hard.

"But I don't even want to think about

Claiborne's pre-trial begins court process

The UI dental student faces a number of court dates in the near future.

By Disa Lubker The Daily Iowan

Beginning with a pre-trial conference scheduled for today, multiple trial dates draw near for Tarsha Claiborne, the UI dental student charged with sending threatening e-mails to classmates and faculty.

Claiborne's pretrial conference is scheduled for 9 a.m. today at the Johnson County Courthouse, said court officials.

Alfredo Parrish, a member of Claiborne's defense team, which is based in Des Moines, called the courthouse Tuesday morning to request an appearance via telephone, court officials said.

Parrish did not return phone calls, and Leon Spiess, Claiborne's other attorney, is vacationing and could not be reached for comment.

Pre-trial conferences are generally a time for attorneys from both the defense and prosecution to meet with the judge and discuss the status of the case before the trial, said Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White. The conference could be a time for the defendant to plead guilty and be sentenced, he said.

Claiborne was arrested on April 20 and charged with two counts of hate crime, trespassing, threats and six counts of harassment. She was also charged with possession of marijuana after police searched her apartment, according to court records.

The harassment charges stem from threatening e-mails received by several faculty members and eight minority students at the dental school on March 28 and March 30 from the addresses minoritygetout@excite.com and minorityrid@excite.com (containing the spelling "minority").

One hate-crime charge is related to an April 4 incident in which a black male third-year dental student found a bowl of noodles dyed red with food coloring and a note that read "dead black man's brains" on his doorstep.

On May 2, Claiborne was transferred to the UI Hospitals and Clinics for psychiatric evaluation and treatment. There she was diagnosed with depression, possibly linked to the recent death of her father.

The court allowed her to return to Baton Rouge, La., to live with her mother, Lillie Claiborne, on May 17.

The trial for trespass and threats charges is scheduled for Sept. 18, and the trial for the marijuana possession charge is scheduled for Aug. 14.

Cyber-crime forces police to get wired

A "completely new ball game" means authorities must use new methods of investigation.

By Kirsten Veng-Pedersen The Daily Iowan

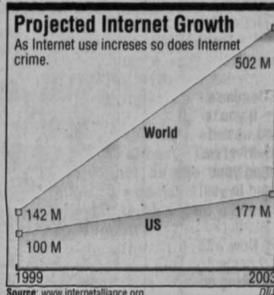

Although the hate mail and bomb threats allegedly made by UI dental student Tarsha Claiborne would have been possible without the Internet, the rise in Internet crime has forced authorities to go about investigations in a different way.

"It's a completely new ball game," said Sgt. Duane Papke of UI Public Safety.

Internet crime increases continually, he said, adding that his department didn't deal with Internet crime until the 1990s.

"It's definitely something that we will be dealing with more on a daily basis in the future, so we need to be prepared," Papke said.

The ability to fight Internet crime is also a concern addressed in a report on Internet Law Enforcement and Security released in May by the Internet Alliance, an organization of Internet policy professionals.

"Lacking the resources and experience, especially at the local level, police agencies are struggling to keep up with the increasing level of cyber-crime," the report said.

UI scores well in external funding

While down slightly from last year, external funding was the second-highest ever, an official says.

By Jessi Todden The Daily Iowan

While the UI's funding from the state was cut by $10 million for this year, the UI's faculty and students received $252.5 million from grants, gifts and contracts for research, development, education and service.

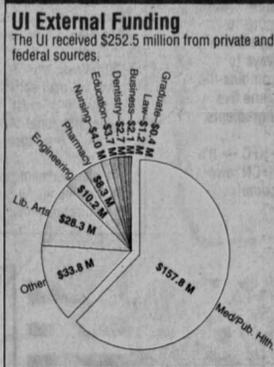

Fiscal year 2000, which ended June 30, is the fourth consecutive year in which the UI surpassed $200 million in external funding.

This year's total is the second-highest amount raised, coming in 2.3 percent lower than 1999. Fiscal year 1999 totaled $259.5 million, up from 1998 ($217.3 million) and 1997 ($208 million).

David Skorton, the UI vice president for Research, said he is very pleased with the external funding totals.

"We have seen dramatic growth in the last 10 years," he said. "I believe this is an enormous accomplishment."

Despite the slight decrease from last year, the amount raised by faculty and staff exemplifies a strong dedication to writing and winning grants and contracts, Skorton said. This year's total is simply a temporary plateau in what has been a steady increase over the last several years, he said.

Débris from the nose and cockpit of the Air France Concorde plane lies at Gonesse, outside Paris, Tuesday.

With engines ablaze, French Concorde crashes, killing 113

The crash, which was the first for a Concorde, occurred as the plane tried to take off from Paris.

By Angela Doland Associated Press

GONESSE, France — With flames and smoke streaking from its engines, an Air France Concorde carrying German tourists to New York for a Caribbean cruise crashed into a hotel outside Paris shortly after take-off Tuesday. At least 113 people died.

It was the first fatal crash for the needle-nosed supersonic aircraft, and all the other Concordes — for 30 years the pride of French and British aviation for their luxury, safety and speed — were grounded.

Air France said one of the plane's four engines appeared to have failed. Some witnesses reported that an engine burst into flames even before the plane left the ground.

The passengers on flight AF4590, chartered by a German tourist agency, included 96 Germans, two Danes, one Austrian and one American, as well as nine crew members, the airline said. The American was a retired Air France employee, but the company did not release a name. Four other people were killed at the small hotel that was leveled in the crash, the Interior Ministry said.

A pall of acrid smoke rose from the blackened wreckage and over the wheat fields at Gonesse, a small town near Paris' Charles de Gaulle airport. Firefighters sprayed the rubble with water, and the twisted metal from the plane — which was fully fueled for its trans-Atlantic run — was hardly recognizable as a fuselage.

French television showed a dramatic photograph of the disabled plane flying low over the airport, flames spewing from the engines on one wing.

The Concorde struggled to gain altitude, then banked before slamming into the hotel.

"We saw flames shoot up 40 meters (120 feet), and there was a huge boom," said Samir Hossein, a 15-year-old student from Gonesse who was playing tennis. "The pilot tried to yank it up, but it was too late."

Early Wednesday, the transportation ministry said the plane's two flight recorders, which were damaged in the crash, had been found.

Cheney pleases most local Republicans

A local Students for Bush official sees no negatives in the choice of the former Defense secretary.

By Erica Driskell The Daily Iowan

George W. Bush's campaign ticket became a duo Tuesday, as Bush announced that his vice-presidential candidate would be former Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

UI Students for Bush expect positive results from Cheney, said Jennifer Jaehrling, the executive director of the group, although Cheney's appointment came as a bit of a surprise.

"It was a surprise in that he didn't join the list of possible candidates until last week, and then Bush names him as a candidate the next week," she said.

Cheney's experience with foreign policy and Desert Storm and his name recognition may pull in independent votes for the Republican ticket, which could lead to a victory for Bush, Jaehrling said.

"There are always plus sides and negative sides, but with Cheney, I can't really think of anything negative as far as what he has done in the past," she said.

Although Cheney is an appropriate candidate, vice-presidential appointments do not make a dramatic difference in persuading voters to support one ticket or another, said Tim Hagle, a UI associate professor of political science.

"Vice presidents do not matter as much as the attention they are actually getting," he said. "Presidential candidates look for a vice president who will not hurt them and, hopefully, help them."

The Iowa Electronic Market, which tracks support for various candidates, has shown little change since the announcement of Cheney as the Republican vice president.

UI student wins national scholarship

Martin Jones, a graduate student in the UI College of Public Health, is the third recipient of the Clyde M. Berry Scholarship from the American Industrial Hygiene Foundation.

The national scholarship is named after UI Professor Emeritus Clyde Berry, who was a student and faculty member in the UI Department of Preventative Medicine and Environmental Health, now the UI College of Public Health.

The $6,000 scholarship is awarded based on scholarly achievement, professional growth and leadership in the industrial-hygiene profession. Applicants, who must be industrial-hygiene students, are nominated by faculty members.

Jones refers to Berry, known as a health and safety pioneer for his support of the Occupational Safety and Health Act prior to its inception, as "the consummate mentor, doing whatever it took to help his students." Funds for the scholarship were raised by Berry's former students who have pursued careers in the field.

State goes online to aid businesses

■ The Iowa secretary of State hopes to increase the number of Iowa businesses.

By Erica Driskell
The Daily Iowan

A new Online Business Center designed to help Iowans find resources on how to start their own businesses was promoted Tuesday in Iowa City by Secretary of State Chet Culver.

The center, which is located on the Iowa Secretary of State's Web page (www.sos.state.ia.us), is part of the office's Business Services Division.

Culver and Rob Berntsen, an assistant director of business services, introduced the new Online Business Center as part of a statewide tour of Chambers of Commerce in order to promote the center.

The center allows users to easily locate necessary forms, perform searches, and learn the basics of starting and maintaining a business in Iowa.

"I think the government needs to be on the cutting edge," Culver said. "This will help services be available."

The center will help prospective Johnson County entrepreneurs by allowing easily accessible information and answering questions, said Paul Heath, the director of the UI Small Business Development Center.

"It will help, because before now information had to be sent to (entrepreneurs), but now we can just refer them to this site," he said.

In the future, Culver said, all businesses are going to expect something like the online center from their states, which could benefit Iowa now.

Approximately 65 percent of 18- to 24-year-olds own a computer; they may expect such an online center when they enter the work force, Culver said.

"If it makes it easier to start a business, then it could make a difference between locating here or in Illinois," he said.

High demand was the motivation behind the online center, Culver said, adding that in the past, Iowa handled customer services over the phone.

Iowa has approximately 10,000 to 13,000 businesses, compared with 100,000 in other Midwest states, he said.

"We need to figure out how to get the numbers up," Culver said.

Through the center, entrepreneurs can learn more about the options available to them, obtain forms, and receive tax information. People will be able to fill out the forms and submit them through the computer, Culver said. Although the center does provide useful information, Berntsen said, he recommended that people obtain legal, financial and tax advisers before investing.

Laws are constantly changing, he said, and he expects the center to update the site as changes occur.

There are six felony charges against Filmer: two counts of sexual abuse in the second degree, two counts of lascivious acts with a minor and two counts of indecent exposure.

The charges stem from alleged incidents between May 1997 and November 1999. Filmer allegedly sexually abused friends of his daughter, all girls ages 6 to 9 years old, at his residence, 1044 West Side Drive, according to court records.

The defense lawyer, Crystal Usher, said she will request a motion for postponement.

Usher said she is unsure of what exactly will take place at the conference. A trial date or status conference date is scheduled to be set, she said.

The status conference, if granted, will be a time for the court to see how much progress has been made by lawyers on either side, then set an appropriate trial date.

Board gives superintendent rave reviews

The Iowa City School Board unanimously gave first-year Superintendent Lane Plugge a positive evaluation and extended his three-year contract during a closed session Tuesday.

The board's assessment is partly due to Plugge's ability to communicate well with the district, said board member Pete Wallace.

Plugge has made a large effort to go to the district's schools and speak with teachers, parents and the board, which, board members said, they feel is important.

"People don't get intimidated by Lane," Wallace said. "His low-key demeanor is tremendously effective."

After their evaluation, the board members approved a roll-over of one year for Plugge's contract as well as a pay increase.

Plugge said he is pleased with the board's evaluation and looks forward to implementing its ends policies.

School Board reviews math goals

■ The policy would involve close teacher-parent communication, members say.

By Bridget Stratton
The Daily Iowan

In an attempt to improve and individualize students' math proficiency, the Iowa City School Board reviewed the academic ends policy, or goals, for mathematics at a meeting Tuesday.

The policy is similar to the reading ends policy, which went through a year-long review process. The reading policy says there should be an improvement in the number of students who are considered to be proficient each year as well as ensuring that those who are not proficient have the special attention they need, said board member Pete Wallace.

The board intentionally did not specify how much improvement it expected because of the nature of assessing improvement, he said.

"We try to stay away from specific scales on improvement," he said. "It is hard to judge on a large scale."

Rather than setting a scale on improvement, the School Board hopes to help each student's progress individually by creating and maintaining teacher-parent communication. "Through individual consultation) the teacher and parent can define what the focus needs to be for each student," Wallace said.

The notion of open communication with parents concerning their child's progress in math and reading came from discussion between board members and parents, who felt it was an important aspect of a child's learning, said board member Nick Johnson.

Because the policy depends on teacher participation with students, board members

Superintendent Lane Plugge plan to allot time for teacher feedback on the policy before it becomes official.

"I have no desire to do something that would not do something that would not be good for teachers and students," Plugge said. "I will be working with teachers to get their input on the policy."

Because the math ends policy follows almost exactly the same format as the reading policy in its goals of improvement and teacher and parent involvement, the board expects the teachers to approve the policy, Plugge said.

The board is scheduled to have a second reading of the policy at its Sept. 11 meeting.

Camp David summit down for the count

■ The centuries-old quarrel over Jerusalem scuttles U.S. peace effort.

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

THURMONT, Md. — The Middle East peace talks at Camp David collapsed Tuesday over rival claims to East Jerusalem. Disappointed, President Clinton said he tried several approaches during 14 days of intensive negotiations but could not come up with a solution.

"They couldn't get there; that's the truth," Clinton said at the White House.

Despite the failure, Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat pledged to continue their efforts to resolve the issues that have divided their people for 52 years.

"This is agonizing for both of them," Clinton said at a hastily arranged news conference. "I think they both remain committed to peace. I think they both will find a way to get there if they don't let time run away from them."

Clinton, Arafat and Barak met for a final time Tuesday morning, shortly before the official announcement that the talks had collapsed. A photograph released by the White House showed all three looking grim.

"Israel was ready to bring an end of the conflict for a painful price but not at any price," Barak said at a news conference. "On three things we cannot make concessions: on security for Israel, on the holiness of Israel and the unity of the nation."

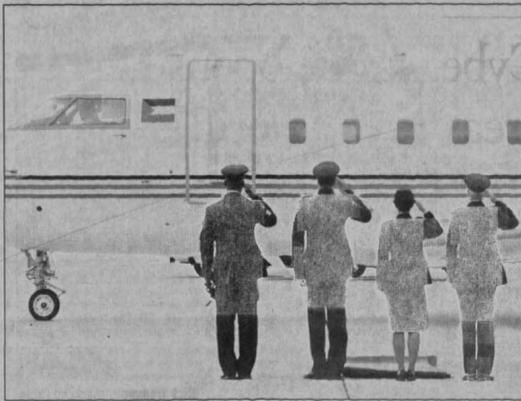

Arafat left the talks without talking to reporters, but a top aide, Saeb Erekat, said he was confident that the differences between the Israelis and Palestinians could be overcome.

"The alternatives to a peace agreement are very ugly," said Hassan Abdel Rahman, the PLO's representative in Washington.

Despite the collapse of the Camp David talks, the two sides did explore a radical notion, one being aired for the first time in an official forum: that the city both want so badly could somehow be shared.

"They were really coming to grips with things they had never come to grips with before," Clinton said in a somber post-mortem on the peace talks. "This is agonizing for them, both of them. And unless you have lived there and lived with them and talked to them or lived with this problem a long time, it is hard to appreciate it."

As Barak and Arafat headed home to their respective publics, neither said much about just what kind of a deal he might have been willing to make on Jerusalem.

Meanwhile, Clinton's own time to arrange a historic settlement could be running out. With less than six months left in office, his legacy as a peacemaker rested on the summit talks at the presidential retreat in Maryland's Catocin mountains.

He was skeptical about bringing Barak and Arafat back to Camp David for another try but said peace was the goal, not which American president helped achieve it between two people destined to live side by side and to share "a common future."

U.S.-backed troops target heart of coca

■ In Colombia, a U.S.-sponsored offensive angers some local officials and human-rights activists.

By Andrew Selsky
Associated Press

PUERTO ASIS, Colombia — It was an all too common sight in a region where leftist rebels and right-wing paramilitary groups battle for control of the world's biggest cocaine-producing region: a man's body with a handwritten sign on his back saying he was killed for collaborating with the guerrillas.

Now, U.S.-trained and equipped troops are entering the lethal environment as part of a major anti-narcotics offensive that has alarmed not only coca farmers but local officials and human-rights advocates.

Colombian army troops, trained by Green Berets and other U.S. Special Forces, will be flown into the jungles of Putumayo province aboard U.S.-donated Blackhawk and Huey helicopters. Their mission: to seize coca plantations so that low-flying planes can spray them with herbicide without being shot down. Thousands are expected to be forced from their homes.

The government contends beefing up the military will strengthen peace negotiations with the rebels. But that logic is lost on many Putumayo officials.

"This is not a plan for peace. It is a plan for war," snapped Manuel Alzate, the mayor of Puerto Asis, a town in the heart of the coca-growing region. He and other Putumayo officials are trying to persuade the national government to call off the offensive.

But there is no sign the government is wavering.

Also involved in the drug trade is a national paramilitary group, the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia, with strong ties to the Colombian military and many former government soldiers. It is a notorious violator of human rights.

The paramilitary commander of Putumayo, who insisted on being identified by his nom de guerre, Falcon, casually acknowledges that his forces commit abuses.

Such tactics make the paramilitary group a vital component to government forces, he said.

"We can operate effectively because we don't have the judicial restraints that are imposed on government forces," Falcon said.

Meanwhile, rebels of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, are preparing a counterpunch.

The FARC — which observers say earns millions of dollars per week from a drug-protection racket — is reportedly already giving weapons training to some coca farmers.

The Putumayo area has earned a deadly reputation. Barely an hour after the interview with Falcon, Associated Press journalists came across a body on a muddy road outside town.

"They killed me for being a collaborator with the FARC (and) for being an informant," said a sign placed on the man. Passers-by quickly moved on.

Few people dare discuss the killings.

"Here, it's the law of silence," said a woman vendor at a Puerto Asis street stall. "Talking can cost you your life."

Hot economy swells black middle class, report says

■ A study paints a picture of two black Americas: one doing well, one mired in deprivation.

By Paul Shepard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For some black Americans, these are the best of times.

Néver have so many owned their own homes and, with unemployment reaching an all-time low, the black middle-class is swelling, says the National Urban League's annual overview on the state of black America.

"Our move towards the economic mainstream continues steady as it goes," league President Hugh Price said in an interview. "The strong economy is proving a powerful magnet for growth. But we still have a way to go to achieve parity."

Still, the picture emerging from the report has a downside: Blacks represent a disproportionately high number of adults and juveniles in prison and those dying of cancer, AIDS and other diseases.

Black men trail black women in educational success — and that gap is widening.

In many ways, the report, to be made public today, presents information that is both encouraging and sobering on employment and wage gaps, political power, educational levels and child poverty.

Overall, a picture of two black Americas emerges — one an improving land of opportunity and another one mired in deprivation.

"The strong demand for labor has lifted all boats in the American economy, and we are no exception," Price said.

What Price described as one of the most troubling gaps doesn't divide black and white: It is the gap between black men and black women in educational attainment.

The implications are far-reaching: If few black males enter higher education, black men will continue to be rare in corporate boardrooms and others spheres of power.

Price said the gap between black women and men could be "troublesome" for the future of the black family.

"As the economic gap widens, questions of whether black women will find black men who can carry their (financial) share in the household will become more evident," Price said.

WORLD BRIEF

Study hints of coffee-rheumatoid arthritis link

LONDON (AP) — A new study raises the possibility that people who drink a lot of coffee might be more likely to develop the debilitating immune system disease rheumatoid arthritis.

The Finnish study, published this week in the British Medical Association journal Annals of the Rheumatic Diseases, found that people who drank more than three cups a day had twice the chance of getting the disease as those who drank less.

While the study does not prove drinking coffee causes rheumatoid arthritis, it is the first to produce evidence of a possible link.

Scientists do not know what causes rheumatoid arthritis, which afflicts approximately 1 percent of the population, including more than 2 million Americans, and is incurable. But recent studies have raised suspicions about smoking and obesity.

This is not the type of arthritis common in the elderly because of the wear-and-tear of aging. Rheumatoid arthritis occurs when the immune system goes awry and attacks the joints, causing severe inflammation, pain and stiffness.

The new study followed the coffee-drinking habits of 19,000 Finnish people over 15 years. None had rheumatoid arthritis when the study began in the 1970s.

By 1989, 0.5 percent of those who drank more than three cups of coffee developed rheumatoid arthritis. Approximately 0.2 percent of the people who drank three cups of coffee a day or less got the disease.

Because the Finns are heavy coffee drinkers, there weren't enough non-drinkers to make a comparison that might show how important a role drinking coffee might be, said one of the study's authors, Dr. Kimmo Aho, a professor of immunology at the National Public Health Institute in Helsinki.

But Dr. David Isenberg, the director of the Center for Rheumatology at University College, London University, said he was skeptical of the study's conclusions.

"If Finland has a high rate of coffee drinking, why doesn't it have a higher prevalence of rheumatoid arthritis than other countries?" he said.

■ In the wake of the Claiborne case, many look at hate crimes differently.

By Andrew T. Dawson
The Daily Iowan

When UI graduate student Sharon Clarke first heard that someone was sending threatening, racist e-mails to UI dental students, she was scared. But, after learning that a minority student was accused, her fear turned into shame.

"I felt ashamed that it was a black female like myself," Clarke said. "I don't know what would have made her do that."

As the Tarsha Claiborne case gets underway, Iowa City residents say that while the city is a relatively safe place to live, racism still exists.

"Iowa City is the safest place in the United States that I have lived," Clarke said. Originally from the Dominican Republic, Clarke can compare her three years as a UI student with the time she spent as an undergraduate in Washington, D.C., and Virginia.

"There are things I would do in Iowa that I would never do in Virginia," she said. One is leaving her doors open at 2 a.m., she said. Still, when the dental-school threats began, Clarke said, the comfort she felt in Iowa City was turned on its edge.

can vice-presidential candidate, said Tom Rietz, a UI associate professor of finance and a market manager.

The market shows a virtual dead heat between Al Gore and Bush, he said.

"As of yet, the market has had little change, but the market can react very quickly," Rietz said.

One drawback for the ticket may be Cheney's experience under former President Bush as Defense secretary, which may lead potential voters to believe that George W. Bush is not capable of running his own office, Jaehrling said.

"Some people may think Cheney is too closely tied to his father and Bush can't run on his own, but he has his own ideas that are not speaking for his father's ideas," she said.

Cheney has the potential to deflect attacks against Bush that he lacks foreign-policy expertise, Hagle said.

"The thing that Cheney brings to the ticket is foreign policy," he said. "He's experienced in terms of executive and legislative branches."

Although health has been an issue in the past for Cheney, Hagle said, the issue will be of little concern to either sides of the political spectrum because it has been more

Swapping rug rats for big bats

Only one thing is more American than baseball, and that's one-sided baseball trades.

Nothing in sports is more celebrated than a good of fashioned steal — on the bases or in the front office. Lou Brock for Ernie Broglio. Babe Ruth for $125,000. Sammy Sosa for George Bell. Ronald Reagan for Jimmy Carter. Now, we can add one more to the list:

Andy Morales for Elián González.

In case you missed it, Morales, a star third baseman for the Cuban national team, recently defected to the United States, leaving a wife and family behind to await their chance at emigration. Judging by the stat breakdown below, it was a hell of a deal for the home team.

Cuban baseball players defecting to the States is nothing new. In 1998, newly defected Livan Hernandez was a hero in the Florida Marlins' winning of the World Series (actually, they sort of bought the title that year — that's the other American pastime). There have been about 34 others in the past 10 years. Some have prospered on the field; others have floundered. Either way, few try to send them back to Castro.

Well, except for Elián González. Remember him? The rookie with the lackluster fastball? You know, the one we sent back to Cuba faster than we could say "Jose Canseco-who?"

I'm not surprised by the apparent double-standard of treatment received by these two athletes. U.S. immigration policy seems to dovetail nicely with baseball talent pools. For example, no one really minds when someone arrives from the Dominican Republic — home of Sammy Sosa and several other heavy hitters. But if you want to come here from Mexico, don't even bother crossing the border. Trade may be free, but travel patterns aren't, especially since Fernando Valenzuela lost his touch.

This isn't a "Republican thing" or a "Democrat thing." Both sides are behind this trend. Want proof? Two weeks ago, at the behest of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the Democratic Justice Department launched an investigation into the operations of the Baltimore Orioles, apparently because owner Peter Angelos refuses to sign Cuban defectors.

And you thought there was an embargo on trade with Cuba ... There may be better things to base our immigration policy on. You know, things like willingness to contribute to the workforce, love of liberty, or maybe even just a man's God-given right to live where he wants to. I'd bet those thoughts crossed Elián's mind from time to time.

Once upon a time, our immigration policy sounded something like "Give us your tired, your poor, your huddled masses." Now, it's something closer to "give us a left fielder, a third-round draft pick and a player to be named later."

It's just too bad that Harry Caray isn't still around to sing:

Take me out to the ballgame,
Take me out to the crowd.
Buy me a team full of refugees
Send a 6-year-old boy overseas!
'Cos if you're a fast center fielder
Our border's open, you see?
But if you can't hit, pitch or catch
Es adios para ti.
¡Jugamos al béisbol!

Student classifications are outdated

Once upon a time, four years of college culminating with the awarding of a bachelor's degree in one discipline was the norm. At such a time, the terms freshman, sophomore, junior and senior seemed to adequately describe the status of one's progression in one's studies.

Circumstances are much different now, however. Advancement Placement tests, five-year programs, increased study-abroad and internship opportunities, and multiple majors, among others, has distorted the synchronicity of the progression of one's studies and the progression of time. There are seventh-year seniors and first-year students with sophomore standing. "What year are you?" is no longer the simple question it once was for most students. "Well, this is my second year at Iowa, but I came in with a lot of test credit, so I'm a junior by credits." A second-year junior? Or would that term denote someone in the second year of being in junior standing, regardless of how many years one has been at the university?

If this were only a semantic issue, it wouldn't merit argument, but these labels have an impact on what you have access to. What about those students in their second year who still have first-year/freshman standing? Can they take first-year student seminars? What about scholarships that are specific to one of these terms — freshman, sophomore, etc.? Does a second-year student with junior standing apply for the sophomore or junior scholarships?

A more consistent and accurate way of describing a student's status must be created. More than anything, a different system is necessary for clarity. A diversifying student population has rendered the traditional "freshman, sophomore, junior, senior" terminology useless and arbitrary.

The UI has a history of challenging traditional pedagogical constructs that have become obsolete. Revising the classification system would offer institutional recognition and support for students who do not fit neatly into the traditional terms.

Putting the bite back in megabytes

Coming soon: an alternative to those pesky, unreliable photovoltaic solar-energy panels. It's semi-autonomous! It's environmentally sound! It's got a cute name! It's Chew Chew, the meat-eating robot!

Last week, members of the University of South Florida's Gastrobotics Group unveiled Chew Chew the gastrobot, the latest development in robotics. Dr. Stuart Wilkinson, director of the Gastrobotics Group, said a gastrobot is "an intelligent machine (robot) that derives all its energy requirements from the digestion of real food." Chew Chew, a 12-wheel toy-like train, operates on a microbial fuel cell that breaks down food with E. coli bacteria and converts the chemical energy to electric energy. As a result, Chew Chew can re-charge its own batteries.

While the concept of gastrobots seems both alarming and unsettling, future models could significantly reduce energy use. One of the primary goals is to create a lawnmower that derives energy from grass cuttings, re-fueling as it operates. In an age in which fossil fuels are diminishing quickly, the prospect of autonomous machines that can feed themselves invokes optimism for efficient re-useable energy.

For now, scientists must resolve some of Chew Chew's shortcomings. Members of the Gastrobotics Group hope to rework the machine so it can feed itself instead of merely using the food given. Scientists currently feed sugar cubes to the gastrobot to cut down on waste, though meats provide more energy. Also, Chew Chew remains unable to move readily, as it invests all its energy into recharging. A more substantial diet, while producing more waste, will afford more power. Despite the current limitations of gastrobots, the potential created by the prototype opens an arena of possibilities for saving energy. Large-scale machines, such as cars and airplanes, would require massive amounts of food. But with time, perhaps scientists can conceive of a solution to meet the demands of major machines, simultaneously causing fossil fuel consumption to plummet.

Chew Chew will officially debut in August at the robotics conference in Hawaii. The occasion will not only mark a new level of technology but also provide a glimpse into the future.

Supreme Court's abortion decision

As evident from his July 3 editorial and radio address, the author suggests that the Supreme Court's decision in Stenberg v. Carhart, pulled by its kicking legs almost completely of application will meet constitutional requirements. Gilmore states that the justices' concerns the woman's right to choose not only "partial birth abortion" but also "partial birth abortion" are problems with this argument. First, the attorney general needs to vouch not to apply the validating the court's concern.

In addition to Gilmore's faulty argument, I am appalled by the overall inaccuracy of the author's reporting. The author's description of the abortion procedure is almost completely of resemblance to the dilation and extraction method. As has been pointed out by another reader, usually performed in the third but the second trimester. Though I do not expect complete objectivity and more than a perfunctory source check from the National Review Web site, Irresponsibly, Gilmore's should be culled before they can reflect on the quality of the newspaper as a whole.

Celebrate diversity, but not at the expense of unity

"Birds of a feather flock together." I repeat this because I have seen this phenomenon occur over and over again during my travels around the world.

I was under the impression that the international atmosphere in a large college campus such as the UI would be a bit different, with some form of solidarity, cooperation and coalition between the various international groups, but I guess that I was mistaken.

When I started working in New York City, probably one of the most diverse and cosmopolitan cities in the world, I found that each ethnic group had holed up separately within its own confines in each borough.

Before I decided to go to graduate school for my Ph.D. in education, I thought that the university atmosphere would be a state of utopia that would have an international and cooperative flavor attached to it. I may have been biased because of my personal vision of one global citizenry and a common world government. I found it to the contrary.

Each ethnic group tends to stick within the confines of its own community. This is fine, but I strongly believe that it is essential to assimilate within the local culture and people so as to learn and adjust. This helps to strengthen the bonds between the locals and the international students, and vice versa.

I fully understand the cultural shock that international students go through, as I went through the same thing. During this initial period, it is fully understandable that they would prefer to be within their own ethnic groups, as this will help ease the transition into the mainstream. But as I mentioned before, this process of alienation continues for a long time after the initial arrival of the international students.

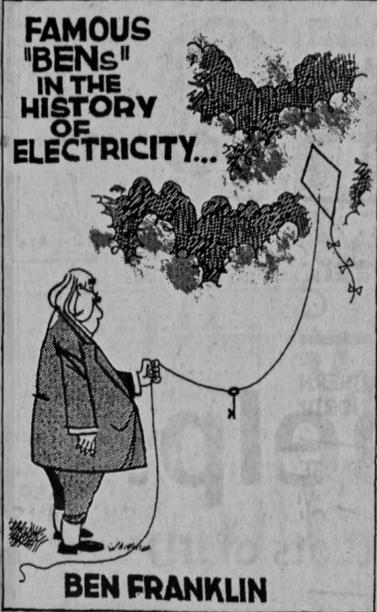

I continue going to the UI Field House to try to keep my aging body a bit healthy. Sometime back, a colleague and friend of mine mentioned to me to look and see for myself the ethnic atmosphere at the Field House. I found that each ethnic group seems to play different sports within the confines of its own group, and the members hardly make any effort to get to know and play with other ethnic nationalities and groups. If they do, then this seems to be a rarity.

The above is exactly what I am trying to hit at. The bonding issue is a wonderful learning experience for all groups involved, be it the various international groups within themselves or the international groups as a whole with the local students.

We should all try to function as one unit, now that we have this wonderful opportunity and time in the academic world, so as to make it easier on ourselves to adjust and achieve better things later in the real world. Let us all work toward changing the saying "Birds of a feather flock together" to "Birds of various and different feathers bond together."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Supreme Court's abortion decision was appropriate and significant

As evident from his July 3 editorial and radio stint on KRUI, Aaron Gilmore fails to appreciate the significance of the Supreme Court's decision in Stenberg v. Carhart. Criticizing the court's dismissal of Nebraska's law due to its "vague" language, the author suggests that the Supreme Court should uphold laws that are overly broad in scope just to see if their application will meet constitutional requirements. The majority understood that this law could be interpreted as limiting a woman's right to choose not only "partial birth" abortion but other kinds as well.

Gilmore states that the justices' concerns that the law will be applied to other forms of abortion are unwarranted because "Nebraska's attorney general vowed explicitly not to apply this law to any other form of abortion." There are two obvious problems with this argument. First, the attorney general's position, unlike most Supreme Court decisions, is temporal. There is no guarantee that the next attorney general will make or fulfill the same promise. Second, the very fact that the attorney general needs to vow not to apply the law to any other type of abortion supports that majority's view that it can be, validating the court's concern.

In addition to Gilmore's faulty argument, I am most concerned with the propagandizing style and overall inaccuracy of the article. His description of the child, "pulled by its kicking legs almost completely out of the mother," bears little resemblance to the dilation and extraction method discussed in Stenberg v. Carhart. As has been pointed out by another reader already, the procedure is not usually performed in the third but the second trimester.

Though I do not expect complete objectivity from an editorial, I expect accuracy and more than a perfunctory source check from any generic "right to life" Web site or the National Review Web site. Irresponsible and poor editorials such as Gilmore's should be culled before they can reflect upon the staff of the DI and the quality of the newspaper as a whole.

scholarships that are specific to one of these terms - freshman, sophomore, junior, senior? Does a second-year student with prior standing apply for the sophomore junior scholarships?

A more consistent and accurate way of describing a student's status must be created. More than anything, a different system is necessary for clarity. A diversifying student population has rendered the traditional "freshman, sophomore, junior, senior" terminology useless and arbitrary. The UI has a history of challenging traditional pedagogical constructs that have come obsolete. Revising the classification system would offer institutional recognition and support for students who do not fit neatly into the traditional categories.

Johnson may still run 200s

Michael Johnson is backing off statements that he will never run a 200-meter race again.

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — For a world-champion sprinter, Michael Johnson is backpedaling pretty fast.

Johnson, who bowed out of the U.S. Olympic trials last week with a severe leg cramp during the 200-meter final, is backing off statements he would never run the distance again.

His coach, Clyde Hart, also chimed in, saying Johnson was probably finished with the race this year but could run it in years to come.

On Monday, Johnson said on NBColympics.com he was finished with the event in which he owns the Olympic goal medal and world record at 19.32 seconds.

"There's nothing for me to gain from it, so no more 200s for me," Johnson said. "There's no reason for me to run 200s."

On Tuesday, however, USA Today quoted Johnson as backtracking on his earlier statement.

"I'm not saying I've totally retired from the 200," Johnson said.

Attempts to contact Johnson were unsuccessful. Calls to his publicist's office by The Associated Press were not immediately returned.

But his coach said Johnson could be back in the 200 in years to come.

"I feel confident we will not run any more 200s this year but forever is a long time," Hart said.

Hart said Johnson's original declaration of quitting the 200 was likely the result of frustration over the publicity surrounding his ballyhooed matchup with Maurice Greene and the failure to qualify in the event for the Sydney Olympics.

"I think it was a heat-of-the-moment thing. The trash talking — he just doesn't like that," said Hart, noting that the 32-year-old Johnson is still in prime racing form in the 200. "He's run more sub-20s this year than he has in his lifetime."

Yankees pound Orioles by 18

■ New York got a season-high 20 hits along with five homeruns.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Paul O'Neill had six RBIs, four hits and a homer, and Bernie Williams hit a grand slam as the New York Yankees hammered the Baltimore Orioles 19-1 Tuesday night.

Derek Jeter, Ryan Thompson and Clay Bellinger also homered and Jose Vizcaino had four of the Yankees' season-high 20 hits. New York has won eight of 11 to move 11 games over .500 (53-42) for the first time since May 12.

An eighth-inning homer by B.J. Surhoff enabled the Orioles to avoid the worst shutout loss in franchise history. Baltimore's most lopsided defeat was by 19 runs, 26-7 at Texas in 1996.

Hawkeyes get young addition

■ After just completing her collegiate eligibility, Holly Killion has been given a job on the Iowa softball coaching staff.

By Laura Podolak
The Daily Iowan

Holly Killion has made an early move into the coaching ranks. After concluding her eligibility this past spring with Western Illinois University, Killion has been named a second assistant coach to the Iowa softball team.

For most college coaches, a long résumé and years of experience are necessary, especially when dealing with a top-flight program such as Iowa's. But for Killion, who is still student-teaching, a college degree wasn't necessary to make an impressive career move.

"I was surprised when (I was) called about the job. But once I came here for an interview, I felt comfortable, and everything just clicked," Killion said.

Iowa head coach Gayle Blevins said she thought a lot about hiring a player who had just finished her eligibility who would be close to the same age as the players.

"She can relate to the players and will understand what they are going through and help them through the lows," Blevins said.

Killion said she thinks her age will be both difficult and helpful for her new coaching job.

"Experience-wise, I think it'll be tough, but it will be easy to relate to the players because I just finished playing," she said. "I can help them through their problems. I think I will have a good relationship with the team. It will also be an interesting transition from student-athlete to coach."

In addition to youth, Blevins said, Killion's great personality and love and enthusiasm for softball will be assets.

"Personally, Holly has great people skills and is an outgoing person who will help a lot with recruiting. We're very excited to have her join the Hawkeye family," Blevins said.

The timing of Killion's hiring couldn't be any better, Blevins said. "She will have the chance to work with our incoming freshman, Sarah Thompson, and also help continue the development of Kristi Hanks. Pitching is a specialty position in our sport, and she (Killion) has great experience both collegiately and professionally," Blevins said.

Killion said she will bring in a knowledge of the game from both collegiate play and professional experience. She said the numerous pitching coaches she had, with many their different pitching styles, will help her accommodate the Iowa pitchers.

Blevins said she does not expect Killion to change anything in the pitchers but instead give ideas to build on their skills. She said it is not a goal to clone pitchers but simply find out what techniques are most useful for each one.

"She'll do really well. She will bring different strengths to the coaching staff, so we can better deal with different issues," Blevins said.

Blevins also said Killion has instant respect from her and the players because of all her accomplishments and credentials.

Killion was named third-team NFCA All-American last year, in addition to being ranked second in the nation with a 0.58 ERA, seventh in winning percentage (.810) and eighth in strikeouts per seven innings (9.3). She was also named Mid-Continent Pitcher of the Year, All-Tournament MVP and first-team All-Conference.

Killion is also playing professional softball for the Ohio Pride this summer, where she has a win-loss record of 3-4 and has helped lead her team to second place in the standings and a 12-9 overall record.

Texas hurting after Rodriguez injury

■ After losing the league's MVP, the Rangers are looking for help.

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — When Ivan Rodriguez's right thumb crashed into the barrel of Mo Vaughn's bat, there went the last bit of hope from an already disastrous season for the Texas Rangers.

Losing the reigning AL MVP and the team's only All-Star for the rest of the season with a broken throwing hand ended any remote chance of Texas retaining the AL West title it has won the last two years.

Rodriguez was scheduled to undergo surgery Tuesday on the broken bone.

Rangers general manager Doug Melvin is getting more than consolation calls from his counterparts. With Texas 11 1/2 games out, contenders are combing Texas' roster in search of players to put them over the top.

John Wetteland, David Segui and Luis Alicea are the most likely to leave. All are free agents after this season, meaning the Rangers could lose them anyway. Dumping them now would bring something in return and help trim a payroll that's among the highest.

Wetteland, the MVP of the 1996

World Series with the Yankees, is the most attractive but teams may view him as a rent-a-reliever because he would wind up re-signing with Texas in the winter.

"I don't know where this leaves us," Melvin said following Rodriguez's injury Monday night. "All I know is it is a sad day."

Rodriguez was hurt in the first inning of a 6-5 loss to Anaheim while throwing to second base on Kevin Stocker's steal attempt.

Vaughn had swung and missed and was trying to duck out of the way, but his bat stayed up and Rodriguez caught it flush with his follow-through.

"As soon as it happened, my thumb went numb," Rodriguez said. "There was swelling and I knew it was broken and I'd be out for the season."

Doctors say the bone should be healed within 10 weeks and Rodriguez can resume athletic activity in two to four months. Unless something goes wrong, Rodriguez should make a full recovery.

"I have a strong mind," Rodriguez said. "I'll be ready for spring training."

■ After a disappointing 1996 Olympics, gymnast Vanessa Atler wants to prove she's back.

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — With a sparkling personality and an infectious smile, Vanessa Atler was the perfect successor to the Magnificent Seven of the Atlanta Olympics.

As the 1996 junior national champion, she certainly had the talent to make the medals podium in Sydney. With a Mary Lou Retton-like charm, she was a marketing dream. She did a candy commercial, and gymnastics fans flocked to her Web site.

There was just one problem: Atler couldn't quite live up to the hype.

Oh, sure, she won a share of the 1997 national title, but it was hers all alone until she fell off the uneven bars. She fell each of the next two years, too, and finished second.

Suddenly, with the Sydney Games a year away, Atler was no longer alone in the spotlight.

"There was pressure, but that's no excuse. Everybody else has to deal with that, too," she said. "You can look at it in two different ways, and I think I took it a bad way. I took it as, 'If I mess up, everyone's not going to like me anymore,' instead of taking it like, 'Wow! Everybody thinks I'm great, and they want me to do well.' I think that's what I've learned now."

Fans will see a new Atler when the U.S. Gymnastics Championships begin Wednesday. She's got her old confidence, a new coach and more energy, thanks to a switch in her diet that gave her vitamins she'd been lacking.

 TORONTO — Roberto Alomar returned to the lineup by hitting a two-run homer, and Cleveland scored seven runs in the eighth inning to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 10-3 on Tuesday night.
 Toronto had its consecutive homer streak at home end at 22, one short of the AL record.
Tigers 6, Devil Rays 4
 DETROIT — Deivi Cruz, batting cleanup for the first time in his career, hit a two-run triple in the first inning that started the Detroit Tigers toward a 6-4 win over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Tuesday night.
 Cruz was Detroit's No. 4 batter because Juan Gonzalez and Tony Clark are on the disabled list and Dean Palmer rested an ailing shoulder.
Twins 4, Red Sox 2
 BOSTON — Joe Mays pitched seven strong innings and David Ortiz had two hits as the Minnesota Twins won for the fifth time in six games, beating the Boston Red Sox 4-2.
 Mays (6-11) struck out seven and allowed two runs on seven hits and a walk before leaving in the eighth inning. Ortiz went 2-for-3 and drove in an insurance run in the eighth.
Brewers 4, Pirates 1
 PITTSBURGH — Jose Hernandez drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single in the 11th inning as the Milwaukee Brewers ended a four-game losing streak with a 4-1 win over the Pittsburgh Pirates on Tuesday night.
 Hernandez's hit came off Jason Christiansen (2-8), who got one out before allowing a double, Geoff Jenkins' third hit of the game. Charlie Hayes was intentionally walked and Jeremy Burnitz drew another walk to load the bases before Hernandez lined a single to right.

Escrow tax takes chunk out of players' paychecks

NBA players will lose 10 percent of their 2001-02 salary.

By Chris Sheridan
 Associated Press

PARADISE ISLAND, Bahamas — NBA players, from the highest-paid superstar to the lowest-paid rookie, will lose 10 percent of their paychecks in the 2001-02 season.

"I think players are going to be really upset when they learn about it," said Orlando's Pat Garrity, who was elected Tuesday as the union's secretary-treasurer. "Ten percent is a pretty big chunk."

The 10 percent giveback is known as the escrow tax, which the players agreed to during negotiations to end the 1998-99 lockout.

The tax would be triggered only if players received more than 55 percent of basketball-related income. But projections show the players will receive 64 percent of such income in the upcoming season.

Collectively, the players will be returning more than $150 million to the owners in 2001-02. The tax will stay in effect for the 2002-03 and 2003-04 seasons under current basketball-income projections, meaning the players will fork over close to a half-billion dollars by the time the six-year collective bargaining agreement expires.

"It's not really something people are thinking about," Garrity said. "But the comfort is that the alternative was a hard salary cap, which wouldn't have been good for anyone."

Players received $1.38 billion in salaries and benefits during the 1999-00 season, and the median salary rose 19 percent to $2 million.

The median salary is up 40 percent in the two years since the lockout, and 76 percent of the players are earning $1 million or more, union officials said.

Seven players, including Garrity, were elected to the union's executive committee Tuesday.

Alonzo Mourning of Miami, Sam Mitchell of Minnesota, Jay Allen of Milwaukee, Jerome Williams of Detroit, Theo Ratliff of Philadelphia and Antonio Davis of Toronto replace Tyrone Corbin of Sacramento, Juwan Howard of Washington, Dikembe Mutombo of Atlanta, Mitch Richmond of Washington, Mark West of Phoenix and retired Herb Williams.

"Great guys to work with," said union President Patrick Ewing, who has one year left of his term.

Garrity replaces New Jersey's Jim McVaine as secretary-treasurer, and first vice president Michael Curry of Detroit remains in his post.

Rothschild suspended for two games, unsure on appeal

DETROIT (AP) — Tampa Bay Devil Rays manager Larry Rothschild will wait until today to decide whether he'll appeal a two-game suspension for bumping an umpire and arguing excessively.

"It was a little more than I thought," Rothschild said of the penalty before Tuesday's game against the Detroit Tigers. "I need to think it over before I make a decision."

The suspension, announced Tuesday along with a fine, is to start today at Detroit.

Rothschild's arm struck plate umpire Laz Diaz during a July 18 game. Both benches emptied after Atlanta's Greg Maddux hit Tampa Bay's Jose Canseco with a pitch in the ninth inning of the Braves' 8-2 win.

Canseco shouted at Diaz as the umpire escorted him toward first base, and Rothschild made contact during an argument over whether Maddux hit Canseco intentionally.

"I was wrong in bumping the umpire," Rothschild said but added that he still thinks Maddux intentionally hit Felix Martinez in the fifth inning before plunking Canseco.

coach Ricky Hunley at the Friday event in Kansas City. Players Justin Smith and Dwayne Blakley also will attend.

Smith, 60, was scheduled to return to Columbia Tuesday night after being released a day earlier from a Tucson, Ariz., hospital. He had checked himself into the hospital July 19 due to complication from the blood clot.

Smith said he was feeling good and planned to work today. He said his doctor had suggested not attending Media Day because it involved traveling to Kansas City.

The university is making plans for a teleconference so Smith will be available to the media Friday morning as scheduled.

McCarney, staff get pay raises

AMES — Iowa State football coach Dan McCarney and his staff have received pay raises.

McCarney will make $300,000 this year, which includes a base salary of $169,855 and guaranteed outside income for weekly broadcasts and speaking engagements. McCarney's package last year was worth $263,505.

Laurie Gustafson, associate athletics director for finance, said the average pay increase for each returning assistant coach is 3.23 percent.

The Cyclones went 4-7 last season and haven't had a winning season since 1989.

McCarney, whose current contract runs through 2001, is 13-42 in five seasons.

"We feel he's doing a good job," said Murray Blackwelder, vice president for external affairs.

Blackwelder said McCarney's annual salary is still in the bottom third of Big 12

Iowa coaches get pay raises

IOWA CITY — University of Iowa wrestling coach Jim Zalesky has won three consecutive national titles — and now it's starting to pay off.

While most coaches received somewhere between a 3 percent and 4 percent raise for the 2000-2001 fiscal year, Zalesky got a whopping 31 percent increase.

"He's won three national championships," said Bob Bolsby, the Iowa athletics director.

"We felt he deserved to be paid as one of the top wrestling coaches in the country," Zalesky will earn a base salary of $85,000 after making $64,800 last year.

Iowa rowing coach Mandi Kowal received the second-highest raise at 11 percent. Her base salary will be $50,000, compared with $45,023 last year.

Kowal, who has coached the rowing team since its varsity debut in 1994, led Iowa to a fifth-place finish in the Big Ten Championships in April.

The highest-paid coach at Iowa is football coach Kirk Ferentz. He will make a base salary of $299,936 in 2000-2001, up 4 percent from last year.

Toronto's home-run streak ends

BASEBALL

Indians 10, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO — Roberto Alomar returned to the lineup by hitting a two-run homer, and Cleveland scored seven runs in the eighth inning to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 10-3 on Tuesday night.

Toronto had its consecutive homer streak at home end at 22, one short of the AL record.

Tigers 6, Devil Rays 4

DETROIT — Deivi Cruz, batting cleanup for the first time in his career, hit a two-run triple in the first inning that started the Detroit Tigers toward a 6-4 win over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Tuesday night.

Cruz was Detroit's No. 4 batter because Juan Gonzalez and Tony Clark are on the disabled list and Dean Palmer rested an ailing shoulder.

Twins 4, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Joe Mays pitched seven strong innings and David Ortiz had two hits as the Minnesota Twins won for the fifth time in six games, beating the Boston Red Sox 4-2.

Mays (6-11) struck out seven and allowed two runs on seven hits and a walk before leaving in the eighth inning. Ortiz went 2-for-3 and drove in an insurance run in the eighth.

Brewers 4, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Jose Hernandez drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single in the 11th inning as the Milwaukee Brewers ended a four-game losing streak with a 4-1 win over the Pittsburgh Pirates on Tuesday night.

Hernandez's hit came off Jason Christiansen (2-8), who got one out before allowing a double. Geoff Jenkins' third hit of the game. Charlie Hayes was intentionally walked and Jeremy Burnitz drew another walk to load the bases before Hernandez lined a single to right.

Mets 5, Expos 0

NEW YORK — Mike Piazza had three hits and two RBIs to back the stellar pitching of Glendon Rusch as the New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos 5-0 on Tuesday night.

Piazza delivered an RBI single in the first inning to give the Mets the only run they would need. He drove in another run with a fifth-inning single.

Braves 6, Marlins 5

ATLANTA — Javy Lopez hit a tiebreaking, three-run homer in the sixth inning, and Tom Glavine kept pitching out of trouble as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Florida Marlins 6-5 Tuesday night.

Glavine (12-5) gave up 11 hits — all singles — in 6½ innings to win his fifth straight start, while his counterpart, Ryan Dempster, allowed only four hits.

Cardinals 7, D'backs 3

ST. LOUIS — Fernando Tatís hit his fourth career grand slam, and the St. Louis Cardinals chased Randy Johnson during a six-run sixth inning to beat the Arizona Diamondbacks 7-3 Tuesday night.

Johnson (15-3) lasted just 5½ innings in his shortest outing of the season, allowing five runs — four earned — and five hits with seven strikeouts.

Royals 6, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Jermaine Dye hit a pair of two-run homers as the Kansas City Royals beat the Chicago White Sox 6-1 Tuesday night to stop a three-game losing streak.

Dye homered in the fourth and sixth innings, raising his season total to 25

Morales wants shot at World Series

■ Morales successfully left Cuba, now he wants success in baseball.

By Jaime Hernandez
Associated Press

MIAMI — One full day into his life in the United States, Cuban baseball star Andy Morales already has hopes of winning the World Series.

"My aspirations are to play in the major leagues and play on a team that will reach the World Series," Morales said July 21 during a news conference in Little Havana. "I have no preference on any teams."

Morales, who came ashore near Key West with eight other migrants, said the group spent two days on a deserted island with very little water in their journey from Cuba to the United States. It was Morales' second try. He was caught at sea on his first attempt and taken back to Cuba by the U.S. Coast Guard.

"I feel happy," said Morales, flanked by agent Gus Dominguez and Rene Guim, Dominguez's publicist.

"I tried to leave, and U.S. immigration laws made me turn back. This time, thank God I was successful."

However, Morales refused to say whether the migrants were smuggled into the country. The U.S. Border Patrol is investigating the possibility that they might have been smuggled in on a speed boat for up to $5,000 each.

Dominguez said five teams have expressed interest in signing Morales. He declined to name the teams.

But the agent said he hadn't discussed with Morales about going to another country to try to get a work visa so he can negotiate with major league clubs as a free agent. Otherwise, Morales would have to enter baseball's amateur draft and risk being selected by a team he might not want to play for.

Dominguez said his primary concern was "making sure he's spoken to his family back in Cuba and making sure he feels OK."

Morales, a third baseman, caught the eye of baseball fans when he hit a home run in Baltimore last year in the Cuban national team's 12-6 victory over the Orioles.

He looks to join other Cuban national team members who have defected to play baseball in the United States. They include New York Yankees pitcher Orlando "El Duque" Hernandez, his half brother, San Francisco Giants pitcher Livan Hernandez, and New York Mets shortstop Rey

Nicklaus still the best in golf history

■ Tiger Woods, with his Grand Slam victory, starts his quest for Nicklaus' records.

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland — Nice going, Tiger.

Now do it again. And again. And then some.

Woods, 24, became the youngest player to claim all four major championships, winning the U.S. Open and British Open five weeks apart by a combined 23 strokes.

Where does that leave him? Two more Grand Slams and 14 majors shy of the standard established by Jack Nicklaus in a career that still ranks as the greatest in golf.

Woods departed St. Andrews with a silver claret jug. Nicklaus owns three of them.

A 12-stroke victory in the Masters made Woods the youngest player to wear a green jacket. Nicklaus slipped one over his shoulders six times.

Nicklaus won a record four U.S.

Open titles, as many as Ben Hogan and Bobby Jones. Woods' victory at Pebble Beach gave him as many as Lou Graham and Steve Jones.

Next month at Valhalla Golf Club — a course Nicklaus designed — Woods will try to win his second PGA Championship. Nicklaus won five of them.

One thing Nicklaus never had is the level of expectations placed on Woods. Not even five years into his career, the countdown is under way.

When Nicklaus won the British Open at St. Andrews in 1970, he walked into the press room and was told, "Only three to go." He had no idea what they were talking about.

It was his 10th major, including two U.S. Amateur titles, leaving him three shy of the record set by Bobby Jones.

"It never entered my mind until that day," Nicklaus recalled. "From then on, that was the first time I ever thought about numbers."

He won three of his next seven majors and tied Jones. A year after that, in the 1973 PGA Championship, Nicklaus set a new benchmark that eventually stretched to 18 professional majors.

And that's the only number by which Woods ultimately will be judged.

"I'm sure Tiger has a number in mind, but I don't think he'll be looking at that number until he gets around 10," Nicklaus said. "If he's starting to worry about numbers now, it will drive him crazy. When he gets to 12 or 13, that's realistic."

But four? True, Woods is winning major championships in a fashion few could have imagined. His 12-stroke win at Augusta National was the largest ever in the Masters, and the largest in a major championship since Young Tom Morris won the 1870 British Open by the same margin.

The record was 13 strokes by Old Tom Morris until Woods took care of that with his 15-stroke victory at Pebble Beach.

He failed to win by double digits in the British Open, settling instead for a record score at St. Andrews (269) and a record score in relation to par (19 under) in any major championship.

No one could recite such records until Woods came along and broke them. Because the only record that matters at the end of a career is how many majors a player won.

Panthers make changes in defense

■ Carolina used seven draft picks, got four free agents and Reggie White to stack defense.

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

SPARTANBURG, S.C. — Eric Davis' smile was gaping. As he looked around Carolina's practice field Tuesday and saw all the new faces, the cornerback could envision a very good season.

That's exactly what coach George Seifert had in mind when he completely revamped the Panthers' defense. He brought in four key free agents during the offseason, used seven draft picks on defensive players, lured Reggie White out of retirement, and signed Eric Swann.

"I always want the best players on my team and looking around, we've got 'em," Davis said. "That's George — he's not going to start a race planning on coming in second. "That's the mentality he wants the rest of us to have, and he doesn't want anyone around who doesn't feel that way."

Seifert proved that with an aggressive overhaul of a team that finished 8-8 last season — one game out of the playoffs.

Because Carolina's offense was ranked sixth overall in the league, he left it alone. The defense ranked 26th, and Seifert believed major changes were needed to push Carolina into the postseason.

"The future is now in this deal, so we want to put the best team or product on the field," Seifert said. "You've got to go for it. That's the mentality."

Seifert started in February, when he convinced defensive end Jay Williams to leave the St. Louis Rams. Williams had four sacks in a reserve role with the Super Bowl champions, and Seifert offered him a shot at more playing time.

He then went after defensive end Chuck Smith, who left Atlanta ranked second on the Falcons' career sacks list. Smith, who had 10 sacks last season, takes over on the right side of the line for Chuck Wiley, who had none.

Then Seifert signed cornerback Jimmy Hitchcock away from Minnesota for a three-way battle with Davis and Doug Evans for the two starting corner spots.

Next came linebacker Lee Woodall, who played under Seifert in San Francisco, and fills the void created when Kevin Greene retired and Michael Barrow was released.

And on draft day, Seifert used his first two picks on defensive backs. One of them, either Rashard Anderson or Deion Grant, will start at free safety on opening day.

But Seifert's biggest triumphs came in the last week when he persuaded White to come out of retirement and Swann to sign a one-year deal worth below his market value.

Yankees finish trade

■ The Indians choose Jake Westbrook and Zach Day.

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Cleveland Indians made their choice — they want pitchers Jake Westbrook and Zach Day from the New York Yankees.

The Yankees have sent Westbrook and Day to the Indians to complete last month's trade for outfielder David Justice, the Indians said Tuesday.

"I'm going to a very good organization. It gives me a new opportunity," Day said Monday at the Yankees' complex in Tampa, Fla.

"I was kind of shocked. But the way things have been going, nothing surprises me. The Yankees are going after it," he said.

The Yankees sent outfielder Ricky Ledee and two players to be named to Cleveland for Justice on June 29. At the time, the teams agreed on about a half-dozen players the Indians could pick from.

Westbrook, a 22-year-old right-hander, was 0-2 with a 13.50 ERA in three games, two of them starts, for the Yankees.

Westbrook lasted only 1½ innings against the Chicago White Sox in his major league debut June 17. Boston chased him after 2½ innings in his other start June 22.

At Triple-A Columbus, he was 5-7 with a 4.87 ERA. He was recently put on the disabled list with a strained left side.

The Yankees acquired Westbrook from Montreal last December in the deal for pitcher Hideki Irabu. New York had hopes that he could someday be part of the rotation — he started the exhibition opener for the two-time World Series champions.

State lawmakers, Red Sox reach tentative deal on new ballpark

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts lawmakers and the Boston Red Sox agreed Tuesday night on a financing plan for a replacement for Fenway Park. Boston would contribute $140 million for land acquisition and site preparation, as well as $72 million for a parking garage, while Massachusetts would pay $100 million on infrastructure costs, such as road and subway improvements. The Red Sox would pay $352 million for construction of the 44,000-seat ballpark, which would be adjacent to the site currently occupied by Fenway Park, which opened in 1912 and holds slightly more than 33,000. It is the oldest ballpark in the major leagues. To make the $12 million annual payment on the bonds to be taken out by the city for its portion of the cost, a $5 parking surcharge will be levied on spaces around the park on game days, as well as a 5 percent surcharge on general-admission tickets and a 15 percent surcharge on luxury box tickets.

Killion looks forward to working under Blevins

COACH
Just as her athletic accomplishments are remarkable, so are her academic achievements. Killion was named an NFCA Academic All-American and to the NFCA Scholar Athlete Team. Killion joins an already impressive coaching staff that includes Blevins, the Big Ten all-time winningest coach, and assistant Rich Calvert.

The Hawkeyes, the reigning Big Ten League champions with a record of 45-14 overall on the past season, also qualified for the NCAA tournament and made it to the semi-final round before Florida State University ended the Hawkeyes' run at a national championship. "I am very excited to learn Coach Blevins' strategies," Killion said. "What I like about her is how she is willing to try new things. She is not set in her ways.

She wants me to bring in my own strategies that I have learned both at Western Illinois and from the pros. She is learning as she teaches." Killion will start her duties as assistant coach at the beginning of the fall season, when she finishes the season with the Pride. She said she is also currently interviewing for student-teaching jobs in the Iowa City area, where she must complete an eight-week program in order to graduate with an elementary-education degree. Killion admits that it is slightly intimidating joining a well-known program such as Iowa's for her first coaching job. "It is intimidating to go into the Big Ten, but Gayle is a great teacher. I couldn't ask to learn from anyone else," Killion said. Iowa begins next season with a deep roster, losing only three players from last year's team: Shaina Barnes, Jill Knopf and Kelly Zeilstra.

Atler is better prepared for Sydney Olympics

GYMNAST
She arrives on a roll, having finished first at the U.S. Classic against a field that included 1999 Pan American Games champ Morgan White and Mag Seven members Amy Chow, Dominique Moceanu and Jaycie Dupin. Though a selection committee will choose the women's team for the Sydney Olympics, scores from nationals and next month's trials will help determine the outcome. Six women and six men will make the Olympic teams. "When I go out there, I'm going to feel a lot better because I know everybody wants me to do well," Atler said. "And I don't care if people don't like me. I know that everyone I feel is important is going to like me. That's all that matters." Atler says that with confidence and a smile now, but figuring it out caused the 18-year-old plenty of pain. She began gymnastics when she was 5½ after telling her mother she wanted to be a cheerleader. A few days in the gym, her dreams of pom-poms and megaphones were history. In 1995, when she was 13, she finished second at nationals in the junior division and won the junior title the following year. Competing at the senior level, she finished second at the 1997 American Cup, a prestigious, international competition. But there was trouble lurking. At the 1997 national championships, Atler had the title essentially wrapped up until she fell off the uneven bars. She ended up sharing it with Kristy Powell. She fell again the next year, and this time, the title went to Kristen Maloney. "It's always been an event I didn't like," Atler said. "Everybody has their event that they don't like. That was mine. I just always had trouble on it when I was little, always fell on it all the time. I think it's just always been a mental block for me."

Dan Rooney joins father in pro football Hall of Fame

The Rooneys are only the second father-and-son combo in Canton. By Alan Robinson
Associated Press
PITTSBURGH — Dan Rooney was only 5 when he was introduced to pro football by his father, Art, the Pittsburgh Steelers' founder and patriarchal leader. This day, Art Rooney's fatherly skills were clearly lacking. "Players were fooling around with me, and they tried to pick me up," Dan Rooney said. "Someone picked me up, but they didn't pull me high enough and — boom! — I went right down. Broke my nose. My mother was really quite mad. My father was not a very good baby sitter." Art Rooney Sr., however, was a skillful owner who treated his players as partners rather than employees, and whose patience after 40 mostly unsuccessful seasons paid off with one of the greatest teams ever in pro sports. Like father, like son? Dan Rooney had far too much individualism to copy his famous father's every trait and mannerism. Rather, he took what his father had helped build and made it even better — not just the Steelers, but also the league they played in — and for that reason will be inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame on Saturday. The Rooneys will be only the second father and son enshrined in Canton, joining father Tim Mara and son Wellington Mara of the New York Giants. "Dan helped build and manage one of the premier franchises in sports, and he has been a tremendous contributor to the overall success in the league," NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue. Soon after Dan Rooney graduated from Duquesne University and took on an increasingly active role in the Steelers' organization, it was evident he had been blessed with an ability to arbitrate, mediate and delegate. Luckily, too, for the Steelers, he had better organizational skills than his father, who sometimes based decisions on what his heart told him rather than his head. One of Dan Rooney's greatest strengths during his 45 seasons with the Steelers has been a knack for relating to his players. He is a former player himself, second team All-City quarterback for Pittsburgh North Catholic in 1946. "My teammates said, 'How could you let that guy beat you out?'" Rooney said.

Youth workshop steps up to footlights

A group of sixth- through eighth-graders will present the results of their hard work at Riverside Theatre.

By Karen Schmiedeskamp
The Daily Iowan

High-energy performances featuring prison escapes, murder mysteries, Little Red Riding Hood and the abstract will fill the stage tonight as Riverside Theatre presents the Young People's Workshop.

The workshop is an improvisational group for young artists in grades six through eight. For the past two and a half weeks, 16 youths have been creating and preparing ensemble theater pieces for tonight's public performance.

The participants learned to think on their feet, to speak and move with focus and specificity, and to listen and respond to other people in improvisational situations. Then they used those skills in small groups — writing, directing and rehearsing short pieces that were based on their improv work.

Early in the workshop, students concentrated primarily on acting exercises. Then they began to develop material, creating pieces based on their own ideas, said

Ron Clark, the co-artistic director of Riverside Theatre.

"We'd get into groups of two to four people to create a skit," said the workshop member Sarah Chapman, a seventh-grader at King Murphy in Evergreen, Colo. "Things were kind of confusing at first, but I got the hang of it."

Director Allison Moore guided the students through the creative process and helped polish the pieces for performance. The work these budding theater artists produce is consistently surprising and full of imagination, she said.

The workshop began approximately five years ago after a group of parents approached the theater about creating something for their middle-school-age children, Clark said.

"I was very excited when I found a group for kids my age; most of the summer theater programs in Iowa City focus on high schoolers or little munchkins," said workshop member William Callahan, an eighth-grader at Southeast Junior High.

The workshop is designed to give junior high students insight into the theater world and to improve their skills in a number of theater-related areas.

"It's a program we are extremely proud of. Educational outreach is an integral part of Riverside's mission, and giving youth a chance to find their own voices is deeply satisfying," Clark said.

Many students, such as first-year member Matt Hibbs, learned about the program from their drama teachers. Others learned of the program via pamphlets or older siblings.

"I was into drama, and my drama teacher told me about it and gave me a pamphlet," said Hibbs, a freshman at City High. "I've learned lots of improv skills this summer, and I can also think faster now when I'm put on the spot."

During the past five years, the workshop has had a very positive response, with some members returning year after year.

"This is my first year taking part in the workshop," Chapman said. "It's really, really fun, and I would love to do it next year, too."

'N Sync, Eminem lead the MTV awards with 6 nominations apiece

The music channel announces its annual awards nominations.

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — D'Angelo's steamy single-camera clip for "Untitled (How Does it Feel)" will compete with chart-toppers Eminem and 'N Sync for best music video at the MTV Video Awards.

Eminem and 'N Sync both earned six nominations apiece for MTV honors Tuesday, with the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Metallica, Sisqo and Christina Aguilera winning five nods each.

Marlon and Shawn Wayans, hot from their production of Scary Movie, will be hosts of the awards, which will be broadcast live from New York's Radio City Music Hall on Sept. 7. 'N Sync and Rage Against the Machine are among the scheduled performers.

Video artistry has long taken a back seat to outrageous behavior at the annual awards show, especially as MTV plays fewer videos, and younger artists concern themselves more with dance steps and wardrobes than compelling clips.

The prominent exception this year was D'Angelo, whose video of his naked torso cemented his reputation as a sex symbol.

"He did have nice abs, man," an admiring Damon Wayans said.

Other nominees for the year's best video include Eminem's "The Real Slim Shady," 'N Sync's "Bye Bye Bye," Blink 182's "All the Small Things" and Red Hot Chili Pepper's "Californication."

Aguilera, who won the Grammy Award for best new artist in February, will compete for the designation of best new artist in video with Papa Roach, Macy Gray, Pink and Sisqo.

D'Angelo and Eminem were nominated for best male video, along with Kid Rock's "Cowboy," Moby's "Natural Blues" and Ricky Martin's "Shake Your Bon Bon."

Best female video nominees include Aaliyah's "Try Again," Britney Spears' "Oops! ... I Did it Again," Aguilera's "What a Girl Wants," Gray's "I Try" and Toni Braxton's "He Wasn't Man Enough."

Novak gets vertigo watching fire destroy home

EAGLE POINT, Ore. (AP) — Veteran actress Kim Novak watched helplessly as many of her priceless mementoes went up in flames when a fire swept through her one-story wood-frame house.

The Monday fire was apparently electrical and probably linked to a tree falling across a power line the night before, said Deputy Fire Marshal Phil Cardinal.

The flames destroyed her scripts from the Alfred Hitchcock classic Vertigo and Picnic, as well as the computer on which she had been writing her autobiography. Novak said her dogs, horses, llamas and a family of orphaned geese she had raised were spared.

"I take it personally as a sign my story should not be told," Novak said of the book she has been working on for a decade. "I read signs. Unfortunately, they have to be pretty heavy duty signs for me to recognize them."

Novak's husband of 23 years, veterinarian Bob Malloy, said a cottonwood fell across a power line Sunday night, and power company crews restored electricity about midnight.

When the couple woke the next morning, Malloy said he switched a circuit breaker to restore power. The next thing he knew, flames had spread across the back of the house.

Novak, 67, said this loss was easier to take than the destruction of her home in Bel Air, Calif., during a mudslide in the 1960s, which carried off paintings by Picasso and her own work.

"That made me realize what was valuable," she said.

The fair is holding a mock presidential election as a way to remind people to vote in November.

By Carolyn Kresser
The Daily Iowan

The first mock presidential election sponsored by the Johnson County Auditor's Office is being held at the Johnson County Fair this week, providing "practice" voting and garnering interest for the upcoming Nov. 7 election.

The mock election ballot consists of 11 parties' candidates.

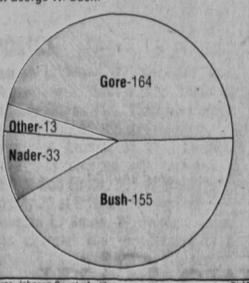

As of 5 p.m. Wednesday, Vice President Al Gore was leading with 164 votes, followed by George W. Bush with 155 votes. Ralph Nader, the Green Party candidate, had 33 votes. In all, 365 people had voted.

"There's been a lot of interest in the election," said Sherawn of the Johnson County Department of Public Health and a worker at the booth. "Even if people don't vote, there has been a lot of interest in how the election is going and who is ahead."

The closeness of the race helps interest potential voters, but there will be plenty of interest no matter what for this election, said Tim Hagle, a UI associate professor of political science who
