Friends mourn UI junior's death Monday

■ The transfer student found in Slater Monday is remembered fondly.

By Bridget Stratton
The Daily Iowan

Officials are investigating the death of UI junior Justin Reschly, who was discovered by his roommate in his bed in their fifth-floor Slater Residence Hall room Monday morning.

Reschly's roommate came home from class at approximately 9:40 a.m. and was unable to wake Reschly, said Steve Parrott, the director of University Communications. His roommate then called the front desk, which called 911. Officials do not suspect foul play, Parrott said.

"On behalf of the UI, we would like to extend our sympathies to Justin's family and friends," Parrott said. Reschly's dorm mates at Slater remember him as a good person who would do anything for a friend.

"The one thing I noticed about him is that he'd always stop in to say 'hi' when the door was open," said UI freshman Ryan Quisenberry, who lives on the fifth floor of Slater. "He was sociable like that."

Originally from Wayland, Iowa, Reschly was 20 when he died. He previously had attended Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn., before transferring to the UI this fall to be closer to his family and friends.

At Southwest State, Reschly played center on the basketball team, had a grade point average above 3.0, and was active in a Bible study group with members of the team, said basketball coach Tim Miles.

"I used to call him baby face," he said. "He was young and fresh-looking, a tremen-

Finding their niche at the UI

A UI graduate student digs deep into his pockets to pay for his education, a sophomore says goodbye to the dorms and moves into her first apartment, and a recent UI graduate takes a break from nursing to jump out of an airplane at 14,000 feet.

In August, The Daily Iowan introduced four UI students and a recent graduate. This month they share where they are this semester in the second installment of the DI's yearlong "You Are Here" series.

Life is busy and expensive for grad student

"Busy" is the single word UI graduate student Brian Davis used to describe his past month, especially last week.

"It's actually been the week from hell," he said. With the stresses of paying for school on his mind, Davis tries to occupy his time with clubs, friends and classes. He recently spent a good portion of his time helping a friend prepare for his wedding. He also is busy teaching physics, taking graduate classes, and planning activities for the UI Ski and Snowboard Club.

As the club's social chairman, Davis has spent much of his time preparing details for the upcoming fall trip to Park City, Utah.

Davis said that the UI gives a little money to the club, which it uses to produce fliers to sell the trip to students. His job includes arranging accommodations and transportation for the trip.

The physics teaching assistant's time is also spent preparing for both the classes that he teaches and the classes that he takes.

"There's a lot of work to do," Davis said. On top of all of these time-consuming activities, he is also wondering just how he is going to pay for his education.

With the recent state of Iowa Board of Regents' decision to increase tuition costs and Al Gore and George W. Bush's speeches about the cost of education, Davis has been worrying about how he's going to pay for school.

"Current presidential candidates are debating about lowering the cost of education — but what about these kids that are already in debt? Like me," Davis said. He continues to take out more loans, even though he's still trying to pay off loans from his undergraduate school, Earlham College, in Richmond, Ind.

"Loans are my only option until some rich relative I don't know decides to show up and pay for my school," Davis said.

He is disappointed that the UI doesn't waive tuition for graduate students, as other Big Ten universities do.

"Iowa does have slightly better pay for teaching, but then I have to pay more taxes on it," Davis said. "And the pay still is not enough to pay for my tuition costs."

Because of his high-stress lifestyle, he said, he would have liked to take a year off between undergraduate and graduate school.

"It would have been nice to recuperate. In between," Davis said. "I'm just so busy right now."

Holding signs that translate "He's finished," referring to President Slobodan Milosevic, opposition supporters shout anti-Milosevic slogans during an opposition rally Monday.

'We are flying,' Serb opposition declares

■ Tens of thousands of jubilant anti-Milosevic demonstrators pour into the streets of Belgrade.

By Dusan Stojanovic

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Tens of thousands of jubilant opposition supporters celebrated Monday their apparent electoral victory over President Slobodan Milosevic, who was seeking to force a runoff despite calls to accept the end of his 13 years in power.

Chanting "Kill Yourself, Slobodan, and Save Serbia," more than 40,000 people jammed a downtown Belgrade square for the second night in a row after the pro-Western opposition challenger, Vojislav Kostunica, claimed victory. Thousands also gathered in the Serbia's two other major cities of Novi Sad and Nis.

On the streets of Belgrade, an opposition stronghold, the mood was jubilant, with people celebrating what they thought was the end of Milosevic's neo-communist rule.

"Finally, we are free," said university student Milica Danilovic, 22. "We can start breathing like normal people. Smiles are back; the pressure is gone; we are flying!"

Belgraders lit flares that cast a flickering red glow over the sea of people, some waving the three-fingered victory sign or banners emblazoned, "He's finished" — referring to Milosevic — until the crowds dispersed late Monday.

Still, the lack of any official results more than 24 hours after polls closed Sunday raised fears that Milosevic would rig the results to force a second round of voting.

The United States and more than a dozen other countries said they would not accept fraudulent claims of victory. The United States also pledged Monday to lift sanctions against Yugoslavia once Milosevic accepts defeat.

Kostunica, a 56-year-old law professor, demanded that the State Election Commission release official results within the next two days and warned that if Milosevic tried to tamper with the vote, "we will defend our victory by peaceful means, and we will protest for as long as it takes." His party said its own unofficial count gave him around 55 percent of the vote.

In the absence of official results, Milosevic's coalition insisted Monday that the president was ahead in the vote count but not far enough to guarantee that he would avoid a runoff with Kostunica on Oct. 8.

At a press conference to bolster morale among the president's shocked and demoralized followers, Gorica Gajevic, Milosevic's party general secretary, said that with 37 percent of the ballots counted, Milosevic was ahead by 45 percent to Kostunica's 40 percent.

"This result gives us optimism that we can win in the first round," Gajevic said. Ljubisa Ristic, a neo-communist Milosevic ally, insisted that the dictator could still win. "At this moment, the sample is too small for us to say, as we would like to, that our candidate won in the first round," he said.

Ristic, however, admitted Milosevic's coalition suffered a sweeping defeat in municipal elections. The Democratic Opposition of Serbia claimed it has won 102 seats in Belgrade's 110-seat City Hall.

Ristic predicted the parties allied with Milosevic will have a majority in the federal Parliament. Parliament has become a relatively ineffectual

Late library hours raise students' concerns

■ The lack of Cambus when library closes at 2 a.m. has some students worried.

On a cold, pitch-black night in September, UI freshman Nicole Hayslett exited the Main Library shortly before 2 a.m. She said the silence of the dim streets caused her to tremble as she prepared for the long walk to Currier Residence Hall.

Late-night hours at the Main Library means students such as Hayslett walk home late, feeling uneasy about their security. For the first time, the Main Library is accessible until 2 a.m., raising concerns among some students who are stuck without a ride.

Students would have a greater sense of security if the Cambus ran until 2 a.m. every

UI student interns catch life in the political lane

Several UI students got up-close and personal with the American political scene this summer.

By Erica Driskell
The Daily Iowan

As presidential candidates Al Gore and George W. Bush battle to reach the top of the political ladder, a few UI students recall getting their feet on the first rung.

Spending the summer as an intern in the White House was an experience UI senior Erin Bradley never thought she would have.

Through a program called the Washington Center, Bradley supervised a group of volunteers who typically made phone calls for public-opinion polling. She created a spreadsheet from the information supplied, which eventually made its way to the president, Bradley said.

"I was able to get my hands on the polls of America," she said. "It was really interesting to see how people actually felt about America."

The atmosphere of Washington, D.C., contrasted immensely with that of Iowa, Bradley said about her first trip to the heart of the political arena.

"It was like I was taken out of my incubator," she said. "I made a lot of friends and proved that I could make it in the work force."

On the second day of the job, Bradley was shocked to see Hillary Rodham Clinton stroll by her office.

And she said watching the Fourth of July fireworks from the White House lawn was far more fun than she had anticipated.

"It hits every kind of facet in your life, and on top of that, you are able to find out who you are," Bradley said.

UI sophomore Cassidy Kruser and UI junior Josh

Bowen spent two intense weeks in Philadelphia during the Republican convention, learning about the process and experiencing it first-hand.

Bowen interned with the security at the Wyndham Hotel, where GOP candidate Gov.

George W. Bush, his family and most members of Congress stayed. Kruser interned for Talk Radio News Service, which is broadcast throughout the nation.

"I never expected to be working so close with Bush's family and the Secret Service, but, after that, I know that anything can happen," Bowen said.

Bowen and Kruser attended various lectures in the morning, interned during the day, and attended the convention and parties hosted by congressmen at night, which resulted in fewer than four hours of sleep each night, Kruser said.

Although the conventions are broadcast on television, Bowen said, actually being at one brings the event to a different level.

"You're able to see the whole picture by seeing what's going on the floor and talking to protesters," he said.

The conventions are a turning point in the campaigns, marking the home stretch before the election and unifying the parties behind their candidates, Bowen said.

"I cried at the end of the two weeks," Kruser said. "I didn't want to go home. It was that incredible."

Before the convention, she was unsure of whether the political scene would be a part of her future, but now she has no such doubts.

"The convention was so inspiring," said Kruser, who plans to attend every presidential convention in the future.

The Democratic convention in Los Angeles was just as intense for UI senior Jeff Bogacki, who worked as an intern for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee in Washington during the summer.

Each night, officials would rent an LA club, where contributors, congressmen and celebrities would go, Bogacki said.

"It was a really fast-paced lifestyle," he said. "Partying until the sun came up every morning."

Living in Washington during the summer provided Bogacki with experiences that Iowa could not offer, he said.

During the week, various members of Congress would hold press conferences and lectures, and there was always the possibility that well-known politicians, such as Rodham Clinton, would unexpectedly show up, Bogacki said.

"There is always something to do," he said. "Just being in Washington, D.C. — that's what it's all about."

Center adds computers with help from local neighborhoods

The Wetherby Friends group donates two new Dell computers to the neighborhood center.

By Andrew Bixby
The Daily Iowan

Two neighborhood organizations in southeastern Iowa City are working together to rejuvenate their area.

One of the key members in the effort is the Broadway Street Neighborhood Center, 2105 Broadway.

The center offers day care and after-school care to children from birth to age 18, as well as parent-support programs and community-building activities to much of southeastern Iowa City, said Pat Meyer, the center's community development director.

Another component in the neighborhood's improvement is Wetherby Friends and Neighbors, the neighborhood association for the area between Keokuk Street and Broadway. The group helped to design and build a new playground, put in new stop signs and street lights, and fought unnecessary extensions, said Jerry Hansen, the chairman of the group.

Wetherby Friends announced Monday that it received a $4,000 grant through Iowa City's Program for Improving Neighborhoods in order to buy two new Dell computers for the Broadway center. The group will deliver the computers to the Broadway center Friday.

"We have a lot of kids over here with not a lot to do," Hansen said. "The computers will not only give kids something to do, but they'll have something to learn from also."

Meyer said she anticipates that adults from the community will use the new computers to fill out job applications and type up résumés.

"We're really excited about the new computers," she said.

"This is something we've wanted to do for a long time. Having a group go out and do this for us feels really good."

Wendi Rooks, 25, said she and her two children have been going to the center since her oldest child was born five and a half years ago. She said she thinks the new computers will benefit both her and her children.

"It will enable me to type up résumés and find information on the Internet," she said. "And having it available to the kids will help them learn more and get them used to computers at an early age."

Meyer said the center has never had computers that could access the Internet. The only systems the center has are eight years old and unusable. She said she hopes the new computers will do everything from showing residents how to vote to helping them stay in touch with the Iowa City police.

"Now that the Iowa City Police Department is online, we're hoping that (members of the Broadway community) can e-mail the police with questions and problems."

Tribes win 9,000-year-old bones

U.S. government decides the Kennewick Man skeleton belongs to five American Indian tribes.

By Aviva L. Brandt
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — In a setback to scientists, the U.S. Interior Department decided Monday that Kennewick Man, one of the oldest skeletons ever found in North America, should be given to five American Indian tribes who have claimed him as an ancestor.

The decision comes after four years of dispute between the tribes — who want the remains buried immediately — and researchers, who want to continue studying the 9,000-year-old bones that have already forced anthropologists to rethink theories about where the original Americans came from.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt said the remains were "culturally affiliated" with the five tribes because the bones were found in the Columbia River shallows near the tribes' aboriginal lands.

"Although ambiguities in the data made this a close call, I was persuaded by the geographic data and oral histories of the five tribes that collectively assert they are the descendants of people who have been in the region of the Upper Columbia Plateau for a very long time," Babbitt said in a statement.

However, the fate of the bones may be decided in court.

Eight anthropologists, including one from the Smithsonian Institution, have filed a lawsuit in federal court in Portland for the right to study the bones. The remains are being kept at the Burke Museum of Natural and Cultural History in Seattle.

The lawsuit was put on hold pending the Interior Department research. Now that Babbitt has issued his determination, the scientists say they will ask the judge to let the lawsuit go forward.

"Every decision they have made in the four years since the litigation was filed has been consistent with having a closed mind from the start," said Paula Barran, a lawyer for the scientists.

Found in 1996, Kennewick Man is one of the most complete ancient skeletons found in North America. Radiocarbon dating of the 380 bones and skeletal fragments place their age at between 9,320 and 9,510 years old.

The disposition of the bones has been hotly contested ever since the first anthropologist to examine Kennewick Man claimed the skull bore little resemblance to today's Indian people.

Police: 2 sex offenders living in area

Both men have been convicted of sexual assault.

The Daily Iowan

Local law-enforcement agencies are informing the public that two sex offenders are living in the area.

Sean Elliot Megan, 24, 1910 Taylor Drive, is considered to be a high risk to offend again, according to the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation.

Megan was convicted of third-degree sexual conduct and kidnapping in Ramsey County, Minn., in 1998. His victim was a 20-year-old female.

Megan is a white male with brown hair and blue eyes. He is 6-1 and weighs 180 pounds. Megan also has scars on his right thigh and abdomen and has tattoos on his right arm, chest and back, according to the Iowa Sex Offender Database.

City police would like to remind the public that it notifies it of sex offenders only so persons may protect themselves. Police warn that any action taken against Megan and Martin can result in arrest.

As of Sept. 1, 125 sex offenders who are at risk to offend again live in Johnson County, according to the DCI. This includes persons incarcerated at Oakdale.

UI to offer classes in Winter Break

While officials still don't know the specifics, the university will have a three-week interim session.

By Jessi Todden
The Daily Iowan

The UI plans to begin offering a three-week class session during the Winter Break, but university officials are still working out the details.

The UI is offering classes in an attempt to provide students with educational experiences they would not normally be exposed to because of scheduling conflicts and class availability, said Doug Lee, the UI summer-session director.

"The idea arose because the three-week summer session has been so popular with students, and there is a lengthy break between the fall and spring semesters," he said. "This will also help provide students an additional advance toward graduation."

The UI will probably schedule the interim session to begin after the Christmas holiday and to run until Martin Luther King's birthday — just before the start of the spring semester. But the university has set no dates, UI Provost Jon Whitmore said.

Only a few classes will be offered in order to keep the pilot project "modest in scope" in order to determine whether the classes are something the UI wants to continue, Lee said.

The UI will establish which classes will be offered by the end of October, he said. Officials have not decided when students will be able to register for classes.

"We are still trying to determine what classes may be appropriate and what may not be," Lee said.

In determining which classes will be offered, administrators will also determine the amount of credits they will carry, Whitmore said. One of the ideas being pitched for a class is the opportunity to study abroad during that time, which would allow students a chance to get some international exposure, he said.

"Depending on how the faculty and staff receive the program, we will expand it to include more classes," Lee said.

I think it's an interesting option for those people who need to graduate.

— Michelle Hessel,
UI senior

The UI will follow its normal residence-hall procedure during Winter Break — leaving one dormitory open while closing the rest — to accommodate dorm residents interested in taking classes during the interim, Whitmore said.

The program is modeled after that at several schools, in particular Johns Hopkins University, located in Baltimore.

Johns Hopkins' interim session runs from Jan. 3-26 and is a blend of non-academic, academic and independent studies, said Debra Cebula, a special assistant to the dean at the school.

The students are taught by a faculty member as well as by an alumnus, she said. The classes are worth one credit and range from Financial Literacy to Media Technology, she said.

"In many classes, they end with a field trip. For example, the Financial Literacy class travels to Wall Street for two days, while the Media Technology class will end with a trip to the CBS studios in New York City," Cebula said.

The classes are an extension of the normal tuition; the trips have a fee ranging from $200 to $250, she said.

"This program has been very popular while we continue to expand it," Cebula said.

The prospect of having more time to take classes is inviting, but some UI students value their Winter Break more.

"I think it's an interesting option for those people who need to graduate, but I personally wouldn't take any because

Vilsack continues to press for immigrants

The governor says Iowa needs immigrants to reach its 2010 workforce goal.

By Ken Thomas
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Iowans need look no further than their own family roots to understand the benefits of adding thousands of immigrants to the state's work force, Gov. Tom Vilsack said Monday.

With an economy that could be choked by a stagnant work force in the next decade, Vilsack said immigrants could help the state reach its goal of adding 310,000 people by 2010.

"There is something that's compelling that family to leave what they know to come to a place that they don't know. It is, in fact, what has driven everyone to this opportunity," Vilsack said.

"If all of us think about it, at some point in time in our own family's life, someone made that decision," he said.

Vilsack said he plans to push forward with an agenda to retain the state's college graduates, lure former residents back to the state, and make Iowa a welcoming depot for people from around the world.

Since announcing an all-out attempt to lure immigrants to Iowa's work force, Vilsack said he's received hundreds of letters from people around the world interested in moving to Iowa.

Three men from Uganda asked for immigration information to move to "your beautiful Iowa state." Another man wrote about his family members in Pakistan who "live in constant fear for their lives."

"I read your article about how Iowa wants to have immigrants, and my heart jumped up," wrote a woman from the Netherlands.

The governor said he plans to work with at least one community to establish a plan to help welcome a group of immigrants into their town. Meanwhile, an anthropology professor at the University of Northern Iowa is developing a handbook that communities could use as a model for welcoming people from around the world.

The governor has already announced the opening of immigrant-welcome centers in Muscatine and Sioux City. The centers offer English-language classes and job referrals in the communities.

The governor said past attempts to buttress the work force with immigrants failed because state officials did not put a structure in place that created a smooth transition.

Prairie grass may be energy alternative to coal

A generating plant in Ottumwa is testing the burning of switchgrass to produce energy.

Associated Press

MILLERTON, Iowa — Growing switchgrass, a native prairie grass, for its environmental benefits could also produce profits for farmers if it is burned instead of coal to produce electricity.

If test burns at Alliant Energy's generating plant in Ottumwa succeed, the future for switchgrass could be bright.

Replacing 5 percent of the Wyoming coal now burned at the plant would require 200,000 tons of switchgrass a year.

"That would take between 40,000 and 50,000 acres to do that," said John Sellers Jr., who coordinates the Chariton Valley Biomass Project.

In 1985, the Conservation Reserve Program was enacted, encouraging farmers to use soil conservation measures and prohibiting farmers from selling or grazing on reserved lands. Southern Iowa farmers planted thousands of acres of switchgrass and other native prairie grasses.

In 1996, the U.S. Department of Agriculture granted permission to use 4,000 of the program's acres for the coal-substitution experiment. While switchgrass has approximately 90 percent of the heating value of coal, it burns more cleanly.

The Chariton biomass project, which began in the early 1990s, involves about 50 producers.

Other issues being investigated include the economics and agronomics of growing switchgrass as well as the environmental benefits, which Sellers says are many.

The stands of tall prairie grass provide a haven for whitetail deer and pheasants. Along streams, the grass can trap eroded soil, reducing the load of fertilizers and pesticides that might otherwise wind up in the water.

The grass also helps reduce global warming, which scientists blame on a buildup of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

Switchgrass plants consume carbon dioxide in the air and convert it into carbon, which gets stored, or sequestered, in the roots.

Switchgrass, Sellers said, has a large root mass. Fields converted to switchgrass can store more carbon than row crops.

Raising switchgrass is currently expensive.

"The cost of production right now for switchgrass is pretty high," said Mike Duffy, an Iowa State University Extension farm management specialist.

"We are going to have to get the yields better or look at some other aspect to get money ... and carbon sequestration may be a way," he said.

Coffee and Conversation

Provost Jon Whitmore is holding a series of open conversations on topics of general interest and importance to the University. In the first discussion of this series Whitmore will discuss the Office of the Provost's academic initiatives for the 2000-2001 year.

Some of these initiatives will include the writing initiative, the information technology initiative, current searches, and more. Faculty and staff are invited to join Whitmore in this discussion on Sept. 26 from 4 to 5 p.m. in the Lucas-Dodge Room (256 IMU).

Iowa farmland price up 3 percent in last year

Northeast Iowa leads the way at 4.1 percent.

By Ken Thomas
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The price of farmland in Iowa has increased more than 3 percent during the past year, according to a survey released Monday.

Members of the Realtors Land Institute said the cost of farmland has gone up 3.3 percent since September 1999, helped by increased sales for recreational land by non-farmers.

"We are continuing to see what one might describe as consumption land — row residential, recreational land — be very strong. Buyers who are not depending on agricultural returns in that marketplace," said Roger Poppen, an agricultural realtor in Nevada and the chairman of the farmland values survey.

The survey showed a 2 percent increase since March 2000.

Among the state's nine crop-reporting districts, northwest Iowa showed a 0.9 percent decrease while northeast Iowa prices increased 4.1 percent, and south central prices were up 3.9 percent.

Poppen said the industry's growth area — pasture and timber land — had greater increases during the past six months. Pasture prices increased 4 percent statewide and timber land grew by 6.2 percent during the past six months.

The report was the second-straight farmland values survey showing increases. Realtors said they were hesitant to call the findings a lasting trend. "A lot of it is up in the air," said Sam Kain, a regional sales manager for Farmers National Company. "The land is going into a lot stronger hands than it has in the past with very little money being borrowed."

The Pulliam Journalism Fellowship

Jump-start your newspaper journalism career with a solid program that boasts four Pulitzer Prize winners among its alumni - the Pulliam Journalism Fellowship. The Fellowship offers myriad career opportunities; in fact, a Pulliam Fellow from our first class of 1974, Barbara Henry, now serves as president and publisher of The Indianapolis Star. Moreover, a new graduate of our year 2000 class has just been hired as a full-time staff reporter at The Indianapolis Star.

Now entering its 28th year, the 2001 Pulliam Journalism Fellowship helps build a bridge from the classroom to the newsroom. Fellows are assigned to The Indianapolis Star or The Arizona Republic in Phoenix for 10 weeks each summer as staff reporters. We award 20 fellowships annually. The stipend is $5,775.

Traditionally, our fellowships have been open only to graduating college seniors. In 2001, we will be expanding eligibility to include college sophomores and juniors as well as seniors pursuing a career in newspaper journalism. We will be accepting applications for our Summer 2001 program in September 2000.

Visit our Web site at <http://www.starnews.com/pjf> or e-mail Fellowship director Russell B. Pulliam at russell.pulliam@starnews.com for an application packet. You also may request a packet by writing:

Bush blames Gore for low test scores

■ The Texas governor goes on the offensive, trying to sway women and undecided voters.

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

BEAVERTON, Ore. — George W. Bush, courting women and undecided voters, tried to seize the offensive on education Monday, citing stagnant test scores and saying "our leaders are not bold enough to reverse this slide."

"America is in the midst of an education recession," Bush said, using a phrase designed to generate new interest in his education package.

His campaign began distributing a 16-page pamphlet called "Ending the Education Recession." And the Republican National Committee planned to begin running ads on the subject in 17 battleground states.

Bush opened a three-day West Coast swing with appearances in Oregon and Washington. Recent polls show close contests in both states.

Speaking in the gymnasium of Bethany Elementary School in this Portland suburb, Bush sought to blame the Clinton-Gore administration for declining reading and math performance of American students.

As vice president, Al Gore has "defended the status quo and has resisted real reform," Bush said.

Bush said that while the economy is fundamentally sound, reading, math and science scores of American students first declined and have since stagnated.

"This is a leading indicator of trouble to come," he said.

Although education is an issue traditionally associated with Democrats, Bush has given it significant attention in his campaign speeches and has scored well on it in public opinion polls.

With the race tightening, GOP strategists hoped that by pounding away on educational themes, Bush could pick up the support of some undecided voters, particularly women.

America is in the midst of an education recession.

— George W. Bush

He was expected to stick with the education message through the week.

A new CNN-USA Today-Gallup poll showed that almost all of Bush's gains in the last week have come among women.

Gore was up 53-36 in the poll taken Sept. 14-16 among women and is now up only 48-44. Bush is up 49-44 among men now, and was up by 3 points Sept. 14-16, according to Gallup poll Executive Editor Frank Newport.

Bush has proposed a $47.6 billion, 10-year plan that would boost spending on literacy programs and college scholarships and give extra money to states that improve pupil achievement.

He also would require states to set up their own standards for testing each year from grades three through eight.

Gore: No dignity for seniors in Bush plan

■ The vice president warns seniors that Bush's Medicare plan would force them to welfare offices.

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Al Gore warned Monday that George W. Bush's Medicare plan would strip senior citizens of their "sense of dignity" by forcing many into welfare offices for prescription-drug coverage.

"I believe seniors deserve better than a plan that leaves out millions of middle-class seniors, varies in coverage from state to state, and could run seniors through welfare offices," the Democratic presidential candidate said in this hotly contested state with a motherlode of elderly voters.

The accusation drew protests from Bush's campaign, though GOP aides did not deny that states could require seniors to go to welfare offices under Bush's plan.

"He's trying to turn voters against Gov. Bush by scaring seniors," said Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer.

The hyperbole-filled exchange opened a critical week of campaigning in which Gore will focus on Medicare while Bush highlights what he calls "an education recession" in America.

National polls show the race is a dead heat, with Republican intensity rising and Bush regaining his footing.

In the all-important race for 270 electoral votes, Gore is faring well in states that Bush had hoped to sew up by now, including Florida, Nevada, North Carolina, Arizona and Colorado. Bush is still doing better than expected in Democratic-leaning Oregon, Washington state and Wisconsin.

The vice president will begin airing ads in Nevada today. Democrats are polling in Arizona to determine whether their nominee should begin competing there, according to a senior Gore adviser.

After the first head-to-head debate next week, Democrats will poll voters in North Carolina, Georgia and Colorado to gauge whether to dramatically expand the vice president's target list, the adviser said.

Bush probably can't get to 270 electoral votes without Florida, where his brother Jeb is governor. Despite spending $5 million in TV ads since the conventions, Bush is mired in a tie with Gore in most polls.

Appealing to voters here, Gore called good health "a basic right" and pledged to increase penalties on HMOs that exclude seniors. He said he would protect and expand Medicare.

"I will veto the use of any money from Medicare, for anything other than Medicare," he said.

Gore compared Bush's idea of Medicare reform with what he called GOP efforts in the past to "dismantle the program."

"He's supported the Newt Gingrich assault on Medicare," Gore said of Bush on "ABC News," referring to the former GOP speaker of the House.

Bush spokesman Fleischer said he didn't know what Gore was talking about. He noted the Clinton-Gore administration in 1997 signed into law Gingrich's proposal to cut $225 billion from Medicare over seven years.

I believe seniors deserve better than a plan that leaves out millions of middle-class seniors.

Verizon seeks less government regulation

■ The head of the telecom giant says federal controls stifles high-tech development.

By Kalpana Srinivasan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The president of the country's top local phone and wireless company said Monday that U.S. regulatory policy has stifled the development of new technologies, hampering investment in the telecom industry.

Ivan Seidenberg, the president and co-chief executive officer of Verizon, warned that outdated approaches to regulating the communications sector threatens to leave U.S. businesses behind their global counterparts.

"Public policy may not concern itself with stock prices. But it should concern itself with attracting the investment that will fuel economic development and job creation," said Seidenberg, addressing a luncheon at the National Press Club. His company was formed by the summer merger of Bell Atlantic and GTE Corp.

Verizon and other Bell operating companies have been pushing for a relaxation of federal rules that prohibit them from carrying long-distance data traffic within their local calling region. The firms say they could help speed the rollout of high-speed Internet access if they were freed from the restriction.

Seidenberg expressed confidence in the marketplace on other matters, including the impact of the pending merger between giants America Online and Time Warner.

Regulators have broached executives at the regional Bell operating companies to discuss concerns that AOL will only offer its popular Internet service over Time Warner's high-speed cable lines and not over the competing fast Web service offered by those phone companies.

But Seidenberg said the drive by AOL to reach as many customers as possible will force the company to use distribution means other than cable, such as the so-called "digital subscriber lines" offered by Verizon and other Bells.

"AOL will need DSL connections to make sure their portal is distributed across the country," he said.

On the subject of digital subscriber lines, Seidenberg acknowledged that the installation process for the fast Web service could be speedier and smoother.

"We could do better as an industry," he said, pledging that consumers would see progress on that front in months to come.

Scientists defrost Iceman to run tests

■ Researchers remove samples of bone, tissue and teeth from the 5,300-year-old mummy.

By Peter W. Mayer
Associated Press

BOLZANO, Italy — Scientists thawed out the Iceman, removing samples of bone, tissue and teeth from the 5,300-year-old mummy Monday in hopes of shedding light on the life and times of the ancient man who once roamed the Alps.

The temperature in the refrigerated display case housing the Bronze Age hunter was gradually lowered for 12 hours. Then, at 8 a.m., the Iceman was wheeled into a sterile laboratory at the South Tyrol Museum of Archaeology in Bolzano.

For four hours, scientists garbed in operating scrubs scraped off bone enamel, chipped away bone and snaked an endoscope into his intestines, harvesting samples for study at half a dozen research institutions and universities.

A forensic expert from the University of Glasgow will try to determine how the ancient hunter died by looking at bone and blood samples that could reveal whether he died a natural death or by accident.

In Zurich, scientists will analyze lead and strontium deposits on his teeth — "chemical footprints" that can reveal more about his environment.

"We have no solutions but plenty of questions," Peter Vanezis, a forensic-medicine specialist, said at a news conference after the Iceman was returned to his chilled case.

DNA tests will be featured in the new round of research into the ancient man.

Scientists in Italy and Britain will examine both the Iceman's DNA and that of the microbes in his intestinal tract. The microbes could be a clue to what sort of food he ate, Italian anthropologist Franco Rollo said.

He said the DNA tests will also look at the mitochondria genome (mtDNA), which could reveal a common ancestry or genealogical continuity between inhabitants of the Alpine regions of 10,000 years ago and those of today.

New York Reformers snub Buchanan

■ The New York Reform Party backs John Hagelin and breaks with the national organization.

Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — The New York wing of the Reform Party Sunday turned its back on Pat Buchanan by giving its presidential ballot line to rival John Hagelin and then voting to sever ties with the national organization.

After handing Hagelin their presidential ballot line for November, the leaders of New York's Independence Party voted overwhelmingly to disaffiliate from the national Reform Party.

"It sends the right message," said Jeff Graham, the state party's U.S. Senate candidate, after the disaffiliation vote. "We should be on record as being against what Buchanan

We should be on record as being against what Buchanan stands for.

— Jeff Graham,

Independence Party Senate candidate

stands for."

Independence Party leaders also rejected an effort by Ralph Nader to secure the ballot line. Nader is already on the state's November ballot as the candidate of the Green Party.

Buchanan is on the ballot, too, having qualified on an independent "Buchanan-Reform" line.

While Hagelin has managed to get on some ballots as the Reform Party candidate, Buchanan has locked up the majority of such state lines and was awarded some $12.6 million in federal campaign funds by the Federal Election Commission. The FEC rejected Hagelin's plea for the money.

In New York, Hagelin, of Fairfield, Iowa, topped Nader by a better than 10-1 margin in the weighted voting.

"We cannot wait to begin campaigning on behalf of the Independence Party," Hagelin told the convention after his victory. "We will make you proud."

Buchanan had been the darling of many in New York's Independence Party, gaining the support of one of its most prominent leaders, Lenora Fulani, a perennial candidate of the left-leaning New Alliance Party for everything from governor to president.

But Fulani broke with the conservative Buchanan before the Reform Party's national convention in August over his social views and his refusal to support her bid to become state chairwoman of the New York Independence Party.

would stall at any moment.

Before she knew it, recent UI graduate Amy Valesh was at the door of the plane. Her tandem master, Brent Romberg, shouted in her ear, "Are you ready?"

Valesh shouted back "Yeah!" while she thought to herself, "I can't believe I'm doing this!"

Romberg pushed Valesh out of the airplane, and they tumbled through a few flips before reaching the correct position. Valesh screamed and her adrenaline pumped as they plummeted at 175 mph toward the ground.

Looking down from 14,000 feet, Valesh thought everything looked small. She barely noticed how fast she fell until Romberg pulled the cord for the parachute.

"Being up in the air, you feel like you can do whatever you want," she said. "Nothing is holding you back when you are in the sky."

It was a nice break from her night-shift schedule of more than 40 hours a week as a nurse at the UI Hospitals and Clinics, where every minute is spent worrying about details. Valesh rarely sees the sun because of her long hours and odd sleeping schedule.

"I think that it is good to go out and challenge yourself," Valesh said. "Hard times don't seem like such a big deal when you have."

Co-workers were convinced that Valesh's skydiving trip would land her in the hospital as a patient herself. They even went so far as to ask her which room she wanted. But for Valesh, going to the hospital was the least of her worries.

"If my chute didn't open, I would have ended up in the morgue," she said.

But the danger didn't deter her. She was equipped with two parachutes, and the second had a computer mechanism that would activate the second chute if the first one failed.

"I wouldn't have gone unless these people (at Skydive Iowa) had experience," Valesh said.

After her first jump, Valesh said, she loved it; she has already paid for the certificates to jump again.

Valesh does not know what kind of challenge she will seek for herself next. So far she's gone paragliding, climbed Mount Fuji, and jumped off waterfalls in Switzerland. But her days of living dangerously may be nearing their end.

"The longer I work in places that take care of traumas, the less likely I will be to do things like (skydiving)," she said.

Freshman scopes the 'babes' and hits the books

UI freshman William Holscher, wearing a gray Iowa sweatshirt, a baseball hat, nylon jogging pants and sandals, studies the abundance of Polo button-down shirts and jeans hanging neatly in his closet.

It's Friday evening — time for Holscher to get "pimped out" for a night out on the town.

His routine is well-executed. He blasts his favorite Tupac song, "Only God Can Judge Me," as he walks down the Burge 1500s hallway to take a shower. Then, in front of the mirror, he tells himself that he is going out tonight to "have a good time."

Holscher tucks his shirt in so he looks "respectable to the ladies" while standing next to his framed poster of John Belushi in his famous "College" sweatshirt from Animal House. Next is the most crucial part of his evening preparation: his hair.

"Gel is key," Holscher says with a boyish laugh while holding a jar of Crew Pomade.

After meticulously fixing his hair, he "loads up" on Armani cologne and brushes his teeth. Almost ready, Holscher stands in front of the mirror from across the room and turns from side to side to ensure that he looks good.

Then, he struts toward the mirror like a model on a catwalk and flashes a smile at himself. Holscher pats his hair and eyebrows in place three times, looks at his face from side to side, slaps his hands together, and is "ready to go."

On a typical night out, Holscher may go to his favorite bar, the Union Bar, 121 E. College St., or attend a party at his fraternity house.

As is evident in his "going out process," he does things in extremes. To Holscher, this means he takes his classes just as seriously as his night life.

"When it is time to study, I study hard, and when it's time to party, it's freakin' time to party," he said.

Realizing that time-management skills will get him through school, Holscher curbs his nights out. Instead of going out every night, he stays in Monday and Tuesday nights to study. The rest of the week, he does enough homework to get him through the next day of classes, he said.

Holscher now studies between two to three hours a night, including the nights he goes out. Now, six weeks into the semester, he has not missed a class or gotten into trouble.

However, after his first college test, which he began studying for a week in advance, Holscher knows his system of studying needs to be altered.

"I know the test didn't go too well. I don't know what I can do (to do better)," he said, shaking his head. "I guess I should go to the (professor's) office hours."

Finding a new home off campus

After two years in Quadrangle Residence Hall, UI junior Toni Neykova was desperate to escape. Two weeks ago, she did.

Neykova, who came to the UI from Plovdiv, Bulgaria, to play tennis, and her roommate, UI junior Brandy Okones, moved into their two-bedroom apartment, 207 Myrtle Ave., after a two-day hunt.

Neykova said she has enjoyed her stay so far.

"It's really nice," she said. "In dorms you have to share rooms, but I like my own space where I can listen to music and have no one to disturb me."

Neykova and Okones met last summer while working together as counselors for the UI sports camps. As the two became better friends, which Neykova attributes to their similar personalities, they began discussing the possibility of renting an apartment together.

They wanted a place that was didn't cost too much and as close to campus as possible, Neykova said.

In just two days, they discovered an apartment in the

Special to The Daily Iowan

Amy Valesh, a UIHC nurse and UI alumna, takes a break from nursing at 14,000 feet.

Add Sheet that appealed to them — especially to Neykova, because it was close to the tennis courts, she said.

With the help of friends and Okones' parents, they were able to move in within a couple days, Neykova said. Okones' parents and grandmother also supplied furniture, something Neykova was unable to contribute because most of her belongings are still in Bulgaria.

The one thing they will not have for about another week is a telephone.

"It's horrible," Neykova said. "I haven't talked to my teammates besides on the courts. I miss calling them and just gossiping about things."

Aside from this inconvenience, she said, she prefers the privacy of her apartment to dorm life.

"Sleeping is a lot better because it's actually quiet," she said.

However, Neykova does miss some aspects of the dorms, including meal plans and a laundry room right around the corner.

Adapting to independence has required an increase in responsibilities, Neykova said. Not only must she do her own shopping and more cleaning, but she also had to learn how to manage her money.

"A few years in a dorm doesn't educate you as much as living in an apartment," she said. "People really need to learn this somehow."

So far, Neykova said, the only complaint about her new home is her rowdy neighbors, who constantly seem to be having parties.

"They're just a bunch of weirdoes," she said. "But we don't care as long as they don't bother us."

Midterms interfere with plans for easy year

The first midterms have arrived, and UI senior Elliot Royer is starting to feel a little overwhelmed.

"I'm getting pulled in every direction," he said.

Royer not only has to attend class and study for midterms, he also works 10 hours a week at the UI Hygienic Laboratory, practices with the men's rowing team six days a week from 6-8 a.m., and finds time to spend with his girlfriend of almost six years. Somehow, Royer said, he's finding time to juggle it all.

He's coping, but as soon as midterms are over, he will feel much better.

"I'm just trying not to stress out too much," Royer said.

Things have changed since the beginning of his senior year. Before classes started, Royer, an exercise-science major, thought he might be able to take it easy this year. He was only concerned with post-graduation plans, but he's now finding out that he has to concentrate on the present before he goes anywhere.

"I just have midterm after midterm over the next few weeks," he said. "There is so much information to go over and not enough time."

He is most worried about his anatomy test Wednesday. He is confident he can handle the test, but memorization takes a lot of time — something he doesn't have.

He is using his time efficiently, though, by quizzing himself to prepare for his exams. His girlfriend is also helping him prepare, and Royer plans on doing well.

One strategy that has helped in the past is using a lucky pencil. If Royer does well on an exam, he keeps using the pencil until the luck runs out. The pencil he'll be using for this test is on its trial run. He's hoping it will do the trick, but if not, he knows it's only one test.

"I'll just try to do better for the next time," he said.

With the little free time he does have, Royer is watching every moment of the rowing competitions in the 2000 Olympic Games.

Royer hopes his passion for rowing will help the UI team in its upcoming season. The team is getting ready for its first competition of the year in Des Moines on Sept. 30.

"Our boat still needs a lot of work," he said. "This is our first time rowing together. We don't know what to expect."

dous young man who was always willing to work hard."

What first comes to the mind of Southwest State senior and basketball teammate Brad Bigler about Reschly was how he embraced every detail of the moment and encouraged everyone to be better.

"He was the kind of guy that made you want to be more like him," Bigler said. "He always encouraged people to think before they acted."

Reschly always wanted to be a Hawkeye, said Bigler. Reschly played for the Prime Time League with on the Highland Park Development team. Freinds said Reschly hoped to one day walk-on at Iowa.

Several friends of Reschly at Slater gathered in a closed session Monday night to grieve and share their feelings about his death. Counselors are available for anyone wishing to talk about Reschly's death, said David Coleman, the assistant director of resident life.

"When this happens to a student, to any young person, we feel an eerie weight," he said. "But it is something that happens, and we have to deal with it."

An autopsy was performed Monday, said Johnson County Medical Examiner T.T. Bozek,

Late library hours worry some students

night to accommodate the change in library hours, Hayslett said.

"It would be nice for the buses to run later, because I hate walking home by myself at 2 in the morning," she said.

Cambus manager Brian McClatchey said modifying the Cambus schedule would be very difficult because the few people who use the service would not warrant the need for later service.

"We don't have any plans to change our schedule on weekdays to past midnight at this point, but I certainly see the rationale in extending the hours," he said.

Funding for Cambus is the major concern.

Cambus is a self-supporting organization that receives funding from various sources, including student fees. Cambus usually makes the decisions on changes internally, but occasionally, it requires approval from the UI administration, McClatchey said.

"(Extending Cambus hours) is feasible, but we would have to look at the cost compared to our resources and base our decision on the significance and our priorities," he said.

Although UI administrators pushed for the extra library hours, they have made no attempts to alter the Cambus schedule or develop other programs to provide students with additional services pertaining to their safety, said Steve Parrott, the director of University Communications.

"Now that the libraries are open later, it would make sense to raise the question of student safety and find a solution like having the buses run later," he said.

One option students do have is Safewalk, a program run by UI student volunteers, which provides escorts for students on campus from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. Sunday through Thursday. But the program doesn't cover the last hour that the library is open.

Safewalk coordinator Stephanie Soileau said the new library hours have increased the number of students using the organization. "Some people feel safe walking home at night, but some people don't," she said. "This is why we need services available for students."

Yugoslav opposition declares victory over Milosevic legislature since Montenegro, the republic that with Serbia forms Yugoslavia, has been boycotting federal institutions. An opposition leader said, however, that his group would not accept a runoff simply to appease Milosevic.

"There will be no bargaining," Zoran Djindjic said.

"Milosevic should better avoid tormenting the people because he would be wiped out in the runoff."

The Democratic Opposition of Serbia party claimed that with 65 percent of polling stations counted, Kostunica was leading with 55.30 percent, compared with Milosevic's 34.37.

A spokesman for the coalition, Cedomir Jovanovic, said that if the State Election Commission remains silent about the results by Wednesday night, the opposition would "proclaim official results no matter what the government thinks, because it is becoming clear that they are rejecting the possibility to accept the defeat."

Opposition claims were based on reports from its poll watchers stationed voting stations. All political parties are allowed to have representatives present when votes are counted locally at the 10,000 precincts.

Poll watchers sign an affidavit accepting the count and are free to report the results to their national headquarters.

The opposition claimed its margin was so wide that Milosevic could not persuade the public that he had won. The outcome may turn more on public perceptions than on whatever the election commission announces.

Arafat, Barak meet under U.S. pressure

■ A Palestinian-Israeli peace deal is still on hold because of disagreements over Jerusalem.

By Ron Kampeas
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Israeli and Palestinian leaders met in Israel Monday, under U.S. pressure to come up with a permanent deal, but they had little to show after two months of massaging the deal-breaker — Jerusalem.

Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Yasser Arafat met for three hours late Monday night at Barak's home in the town of Kochav Yair in central Israel, Barak spokesman Gadi Baltiansky said in a statement.

He said the meeting, which ended just after midnight local time, was conducted "in a very good atmosphere and a positive spirit" and described it as an "evaluation and an exchange of views." He said the leaders did not negotiate "specific" issues.

That suggested that they avoided discussion of Jerusalem, the issue that broke up the U.S.-sponsored Camp David talks in July. Aside from an exchanged greeting or two at the U.N. Millennium summit earlier this month, the two have not met since then.

Negotiating teams from both sides were to leave for Washington within hours of the meeting's end for separate talks with the Americans.

All four negotiators headed for Washington — Mohammed Dahlan and Saeb Erekat for the Palestinians, and Acting Foreign Minister Shlomo Ben-Ami and Gilead Sher for the Israelis — were at the meeting, along with other senior officials.

Dahlan, who said the Americans had proposed the new round of meetings, expressed the hope that the U.S. ideas would be more developed than those the Palestinians were asked to consider two months ago. "At Camp David, they proposed an initiative that was not deeply studied, and because of that, they failed."

CALCUTTA, India — Rescue crews used boats and military helicopters Monday to help some of the millions of people washed out of their homes by floods that authorities believe have killed more than 700 in India and Bangladesh. Authorities were trying to ferry victims to higher ground, but most remained marooned atop buildings. Air force helicopters were dropping food and water-purification packets.

The vast majority of the deaths have been in India, but the toll in both countries was expected to rise, and water-borne diseases were said to be breaking out. "The task is gigantic. There are many villages that have been cut off as floods inundated roads," Soheli Ahsan, a relief worker in Bangladesh, said in a telephone interview.

Almost all the districts on either side of the southern India-Bangladesh border have been ravaged since Sept. 18, when late monsoon rains sent flashfloods over riverbanks and dams. The floods have submerged highways, villages and the homes of more than 10 million people in eastern India and 200,000 in Bangladesh, authorities say.

In the Indian state of West Bengal, 652 people were feared dead, more than half of them in Murshidabad district, said Buddhadev Bhattacharjee, the state's deputy chief minister. The death toll rose to 39 Monday in the neighboring state of Bihar.

Cubans decry 'murderous' U.S. immigration policy

■ Protesters say the U.S. Cuban Adjustment Act prompts illegal migration.

By Anita Snow
Associated Press

HAVANA — Thousands of people answered the Communist government's call to crowd outside the U.S. mission Monday and protest the immigration policies it blames for last week's dramatic departure of a group of Cubans aboard a stolen plane.

President Fidel Castro presided over the rally, which began with a rendition of the Cuban National Anthem by a military band.

A string of Cuban students read speeches condemning the "murderous" Cuban Adjustment Act, which Havana says encourages its citizens to migrate illegally to the United States, sometimes stealing boats or planes to do so.

During Monday's rally, the crowd cheered when the government broadcasted the voices of members of Cuba's Olympic delegation in Sydney, chanting against the Cuban Adjustment Act. The 1966 law allows Cubans who reach U.S. shores to apply for American residency — an automatic right not granted to immigrants of any other nation.

Images of the Cuban delegation were shown simultaneously to regular TV viewers during a live national broadcast of the rally.

The Cuban government organized similar rallies almost daily during the seven-month national campaign to repatriate 6-year-old Elian Gonzalez, the subject of a protracted custody battle that ended in June, when the boy returned with his father to Cuba.

Since then, Castro has promised to keep up the protests against U.S. immigration laws. Every Saturday, the government organizes a large rally in a different provincial city.

Last week's dramatic air departure evidently has caused special consternation in the Cuban government because the pilot, Angel Lenin Iglesias, and his wife, Mercedes Martinez, were not only members of the Communist Party but came from families with strong ties to the party nomenclature.

Filipinos flee army attacks

Thousands of Philippine villagers escape an assault on Muslim rebels, who are holding 17 hostages.

By Jim Gomez
Associated Press

JOLO, Philippines — More than 36,000 villagers have fled their homes to escape a military assault on Muslim rebels holding 17 hostages on a southern Philippine island, officials said Monday.

Military officials said troops were still searching for the hostages — 10 days after the assault began and the separatist Abu Sayyaf rebels took off — and gave no indication of when the fighting would end.

Unconfirmed reports continued of civilian casualties and heavy damage to villages from the attack, which involved 4,000 troops. But the military insisted only two civilians have been killed and four injured.

Independent verification was not possible because the military has blocked access to many areas of Jolo island and has attempted to prevent journalists from traveling there.

For the first time Monday, the military escorted a group of 37 journalists for a brief, tightly controlled tour of the island's capital and an evacuation center and then took them back to Zamboanga, a city 85 miles away.

Aaron Favila/Associated Press

Army vehicles occupy the road Monday as soldiers secure Indanan, Sulu province, in the southern Philippines.

Brig. Gen. Narciso Abaya, the commanding officer who initially predicted that assault would be over in six days, said the military is no longer estimating how long it will take to save the hostages.

"Before you can rescue them, you have to find them," he said. "This is a very difficult mission. They just keep on running. They don't fight us."

Abaya acknowledged the military still has little information about the location of three Malaysians who were kidnapped on Sept. 10 from a Malaysian resort and brought to Jolo by boat.

The Abu Sayyaf rebels are also holding an American and 13 Filipinos.

Local officials have said troops were nearing the rebel faction holding American Jeffrey Schilling of Oakland, Calif., in eastern Jolo, but Abaya refused to comment. Schilling was abducted on Aug. 28, when he visited a rebel camp with his Filipino wife, who is related to several rebels.

Abaya said some soldiers were pursuing the rebels on another island, but he refused to elaborate. There have been unconfirmed reports that some Abu Sayyaf rebels were able to escape to nearby Basilan island.

Russian media sale ignites controversy

The Russian prime minister says a top official erred in signing an agreement.

By Nick Wadhams
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Russian Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov scolded the nation's press minister for signing an agreement at the center of a controversy surrounding Russia's biggest private media group, and bailiffs moved Monday to freeze the company's assets.

The document spells out the terms for the sale of Media-Most to the natural gas monopoly Gazprom. It was signed in July by Media-Most head Vladimir Gusinsky, Gazprom-Media chief Alfred Kokh and Press Minister Mikhail Lesin.

Gusinsky claimed last week that he had signed the agreement under duress in exchange for dropping fraud charges against him. Press-freedom advocates saw the charges as part of a Kremlin campaign to muzzle Media-Most's outlets, which have been critical of President Vladimir Putin.

In a meeting on Sept. 23, Kasyanov told Lesin that he had erred in signing the document, the Interfax news agency said, citing the government information department. A government spokesman refused Monday to comment on the Interfax report.

On Monday, court bailiffs went to the headquarters of several Media-Most news organizations, including its flagship NTV television, to give notice of a freeze on the group's stock.

Moscow's chief bailiff, Svetlana Kukushkina, told the Associated Press that the bailiffs were executing an order issued last week by a Moscow court to bar transfer of shares pending the outcome of the dispute with Gazprom.

Oil drop, steady euro cheer money summit

The world's finance leaders breathe a sigh of relief as their tough words over the weekend work.

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czech Republic — World finance leaders savored fragile victories Monday in their efforts to cut oil prices and boost the shaky European currency while pledging to double by year's end the number of poor countries receiving debt relief.

Finance ministers and central bank presidents found themselves breaking away from the annual International Monetary Fund and World Bank summit to get updates on world markets concerning the price of oil and the exchange value of the euro, which is used by 11 members of the European Union.

day was positive, showing that their strong words over the weekend on coordinated efforts to push oil prices lower and the implied threat that rich nations might intervene to buy more euros on currency markets were having the intended effect.

Oil prices dropped $1.35 per barrel early Monday on the London futures market, though they drifted higher as the session went on. North Sea Brent crude for November delivery was off by 42 cents, at $30.83 per barrel, in late dealings.

The euro held firm, bringing 87.5 cents late in the day, compared with 87.8 cents late on Sept. 22, after the coordinated support effort was launched and pushed the euro about 2 cents higher.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers said other countries at the finance meetings had welcomed President Clinton's decision to release 30 million barrels of oil from U.S. reserves in an effort to lower prices.

"What the impact will be, I don't know," Summers said in a Prague television interview.

Private analysts, however, stressed that they believed oil markets were still unsettled heading into today's meeting of OPEC oil ministers. They also said the euro was likely to come under renewed selling pressures, forcing further intervention efforts.

Worries about the euro and oil prices took over as top agenda items at discussions over the past three days of policy-setting committees of the IMF and the World Bank, whose annual meetings will formally start today. Delegates from 182 nations are expected to attend. Protesters are threatening to disrupt the summit, hoping to repeat the points they made through mass demonstrations last year at a World Trade Organization meeting in Seattle and in the spring at the IMF and World Bank meetings in Washington.

In Prague, demonstrators are threatening to form human chains to keep delegates from leaving the convention center this afternoon. However, by late Monday, there were only a few hundred protesters at most events — far fewer than the 20,000 leaders had predicted.

WORLD BRIEF

Museums return more than 80 artworks to Jewish heirs

BERLIN (AP) — Two German museums returned more than 80 artworks Monday to a Jewish art-lover's heirs decades after they first sought compensation for a collection seized by the Nazis.

At a Berlin ceremony, officials from the western city of Hanover handed over an oil painting by Lovis Corinth valued at up to $470,000, while the eastern city of Leipzig returned more than 80 works, mostly drawings and prints by Max Klinger.

The action comes a year after a request to the museums on behalf of the heirs of Leipzig-based publisher Gustav Kirsstein by the Commission for Art Recovery, a body set up by the World Jewish Congress to help heirs reclaim art treasures stolen during World War II from their families.

"I'm overwhelmed with emotion," said Thekla Stein Nordwind, a niece of Kirsstein who traveled from the United States for the ceremony. "I never thought we'd see this moment, though it is a bittersweet moment."

Embarrassed by stories such as that of the Kirsstein heirs, whose request for compensation was rejected by the authorities in 1964, the German government has urged museums to comb their collections for possible looted art and publish the details to encourage new claims.

The government on single motherhood ... Deliver a better plan

Earlier this month, the government attempted to support its welfare-reform campaign with something tangible — monetary prizes. Donna Shalala, the secretary of Health and Human Services, awarded $100 million to the District of Columbia, Alabama, Arizona, Illinois and Michigan for showing the largest declines in out-of-wedlock births.

As good as the prizes sound, these decline of single motherhood may not mean as much for welfare reform as Shalala thinks it does.

First, the government does not require winning states to report what they did to reduce their number of out-of-wedlock births, nor does it require that the decline in births actually translate into a reduction in the number of single mothers receiving welfare benefits.

That means that the winning states could be doing nothing to reduce out-of-wedlock births and seeing a decline merely because of a decline in the number of women of childbearing age. It also means that the number of recipients in a winning state could be growing rather than declining, as the government seems to assume.

The current award program does more to attack single mothers than reduce the number of welfare recipients.

Second, the government's award program for reducing all out-of-wedlock births ignores the growing number of self-supporting single women who choose to have children without getting married. Single motherhood is increasingly a choice rather than a mistake, yet women who choose to give birth out of wedlock are included in the statistics the government is using for welfare reform.

Although welfare reform is certainly a noble goal, the government's current award program seems to be doing more to attack single mothers than reduce the number of welfare recipients. The Department of Health and Human Services even acknowledges this fact.

"It's true that (the award program) doesn't target welfare recipients, because it's based on all out-of-wedlock births, and doesn't distinguish among economic background, or the age group, of the unmarried mothers," a department spokesman told the New York Times.

Because even the government acknowledges that financially rewarding states simply for a decline in their number of out-of-wedlock births misses the goal of reducing the number of welfare recipients, it's time to head back to the drawing board. The Department of Health and Human Services needs to come up with a better-designed program to reform welfare, one that holds states accountable for their actions and directly targets welfare recipients.

Doing good by blowing hot air

Don't look now, but there's a new group afoot, and it's coming to save you.

And like most gaggles of do-gooders, it's coming to save you whether you want to be saved or not.

That's the great thing about goody-goody do-gooders — their lives are so perfect, so exemplary, that they want you to be just like them. They want that so much that they're quite willing to pass laws to make you be like them if you won't do it voluntarily.

Ain't freedom great? This new group is called Clean Air For Everyone, or some such thing. Now you'd expect, just given the name, that the members would be girding their collective loins to fight the industrial polluters, maybe even (gasp) take on the auto industry.

Perhaps, in their crusade for clean air, they're planning on taking the battle down to Texas, which, under Gov. George W. Shrub's environmental stewardship, has become home to some of the dirtiest air in the country. After all, during the tenure of his Shrubness, Houston has surpassed Los Angeles to become the smoggiest city in the nation. Quite an honor — you have to work awfully damn hard to surpass LA.

But you'd be wrong if you thought the clean-air folks were taking on industrial pollution or automobiles or the environmental cesspool that is Texas. Dead wrong.

No, the clean-air do-gooders are taking on the true bad guys in air pollution: smokers in Iowa City restaurants.

Let you didn't know that smokers in local restaurants were the major cause of air pollution. I'll bet you looked at the coal-fired power plant smack dab in the middle of town and thought that might foul the air a little bit. I'll bet you took a gander at the thousands upon thousands of cars and trucks that roar up and down Iowa City streets and said to yourself, Well, that can't be all that good for the air quality.

You'd be wrong again. It's them damn smokers.

That's why the clean-air folks want the City Council to pass an ordinance banning smoking in the local restaurants.

I have to admit, I was a little confused when I first heard about their proposal. Granted, I don't go to every restaurant in town, but of those I do frequent, a large number already ban smoking. Others have segregated smoking and non-smoking areas.

If you want to dine out in this town, and you want your culinary experience to be smoke-free, you have plenty of options.

Of course, you'll have to put up with the pollution caused by autos on your way to the smoke-free restaurant.

But the do-gooding clean-air folks aren't satisfied with having plenty of options when it comes to dining. In their own authoritarian manner, they want to force smokers out of every restaurant.

For health reasons, they say. Second-hand smoke is dangerous.

Of course, they don't have a scientific breath to stand on when they make that claim. The most comprehensive study of second-hand smoke ever done, the World Health Organization's study of 1998, found no connection between second-hand smoke and disease. Zilch. Nada.

No, what the clean-air folks are trying to do is stop people from smoking. And they're quite willing to try to legislate human behavior if that's what it takes.

Of course, legislating human behavior always fails. Whatever else is in their make-up, human beings resent being bossed around. What they resent almost more than anything is to have some do-gooder tell them how they should live their lives.

That is the fundamental rule about human behavior: If you try to tell people how to act, they will try their utmost to do the exact opposite. Every time they can.

All other human behavior is a corollary.

The anti-smoking brigades want to stop smoking? They should get George W. Gore and his Shrubness to tell people that they think smoking cigarettes is the sexiest thing they've ever seen.

The tobacco companies will go broke next week.

And the automobile and the coal-fired plant will still be polluting the air.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Women should not be forced to protect themselves from violence

Although I admire James Edward Johnson's disgust about violence against women (DI, Sept. 22), I am once again fed up that victims are told to solve the problem. Johnson said, "Violence against women is a problem? Women should arm themselves." He presents a solid argument for the right to bear arms, yet he never addresses the real issue, which is that men should stop raping and committing violence against women.

I find it appalling that men constantly tell women to take self-defense classes and carry guns instead of demanding men stop committing violent acts.

Women do need to protect themselves. Sensible women such as myself participate in self-defense classes and take safety precautions. However, I would like to walk freely around campus when I wish. I am tired of worrying about someone attacking me when I walk from my car to my apartment at night. I don't want to buy a gun. I want men to learn not to attack women. Johnson gives an argument for the right to bear arms and the right for a woman to protect herself, but I know simply arming myself isn't going to prevent me from being a victim. Personally, I am physically weaker than most men. He also ignores that many rapes occur by a woman's friend, boyfriend or even husband. Men need to start saying to each other, "Women deserve to be safe, women will not be raped, women can walk alone WITHOUT carrying a gun."

I'd like to thank Johnson for addressing an issue women face every day and an issue few men talk about. However, I'd ask him to take a deeper look at solving this problem. Carrying a gun may be a temporary solution to protect myself, but I want long-lasting results. I want women to feel safe against attacks from vicious men.

Putting my gameday faith in antitrust

Janet Reno, stand up for consumers and destroy this monopoly that plagues our society.

The Hawks have got to go.

I never thought I would hear myself say this, but recent events have changed my perception of the world. Free-market ideals aside, I'm ready to embrace political reality.

When Janet Reno & Co. took on Microsoft, I cheered for Bill Gates. Unfortunately, Bill lost, at least in Round One, and so our political reality is that the government can and will take action to curb the market power of companies who exercise that power to exclude competition from entering the market.

That being said, why did I spend the weekend sitting through a 42-13 shellacking against Nebraska ... the Hawks' 12th straight loss?

Here's why: We consumers don't have a choice. I, for one, think it's time for government intervention.

I'm sure at least two or three of you reading this don't agree with me. Well, consider this:

• A "monopoly" has, by definition, only one seller in the market. How many college football teams do you see around Iowa City?

• A monopoly agent tends to produce less of a good than would be supplied in a competitive market. Does anyone out there think the Hawkeyes are producing anything at all?

• At the same time, a monopoly agent will charge more for its product than the prevailing price in a competitive market. What's the going rate for 12 straight losses? So far this season, at home games alone, the average student ticket price is $10 per game, and the number of wins per game is 0. Therefore, the average cost per win is $10 divided by zero, which is impossible to compute! Impossible! Even UNI's cost per win is a real, computable number. If the Hawks can't name their price, they need a better pricing scheme.

The Hawkeyes appear to have won themselves a monopoly share of the local "college football market" through some sort of exclusive contract with a local university. After months of thorough research, I've come to conclude that the university in question, using a combination of federal and state funds along with local dollars supposedly earmarked for "education," has funneled a sizable chunk of change into football equipment, promotional materials, a playing field of some sort and other amenities. At the same time, barriers have been put into place to prevent any other

"football teams" from entering the campus football market.

Department of Justice officials were unavailable for comment but, given their recent proactive stance on market intervention, I would assume that they're already on the case. You should assume so, too. It's fun.

As far as I can see, there is only one workable remedy: Split up the Hawkeyes.

In U.S. v. Microsoft, Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson ordered that Microsoft be split into two smaller companies so as to diffuse its general market power. If it worked for Microsoft, it could work for the Hawks. The Justice Department could split the Hawkeyes up into their subunits — namely, Offense, Defense and Special Teams — or into three fully operational smaller teams.

The roster on the HawkeyeSports.com puts the current team size at nearly 100. Not only is this enough for three teams, but it could facilitate the creation of more than nine teams if the boys were up to two-way "ironman" football of days of yore.

Hmmm ... maybe three is enough.

Pearl Jam jams with 25-disc release

The band will release recordings of more than two dozen concerts in an effort to beat bootleggers.

lected most of them. The musicians rather wickedly considered releasing a compilation of the best live recordings from those discs. After all, what were the bootleggers going to do — sue Pearl Jam for stealing their unauthorized recordings of the band's music?

But Curtis said Pearl Jam took its own approach when the band members realized there wasn't enough well-recorded material in the bootlegs for a full album.

"We're not trying to talk people who usually don't buy this stuff into buying it," he said. "It's more for the people who buy it already. We really didn't have any idea of how many people that is. We still don't."

For a few weeks, the discs have been available through the band's Web site, selling at $10.98 each for fan club members and $12.98 for others. More than 50,000 discs have been sold that way, he said.

Curtis has run into some trouble among record retailers annoyed with having to stock 25 discs at the same time. Some retail chains are ignoring the release, and others are carrying

NEW YORK — Pearl Jam fans will have their loyalty tested today. The rock band isn't just releasing a new album — it's sitting out 25 of them.

In an unprecedented attempt to beat bootleggers at their own game, the Seattle-based band is selling live two-CD sets recorded at more than two dozen concerts during a European tour earlier this summer.

"We just thought it was pretty cool," said guitar player Mike McCready. "If fans have to buy bootlegs, it can cost them $50. We wanted to do something that was cheaper."

Each album carries a suggested retail price of $16.98.

No one can remember one act flooding the marketplace with so much music at one time. Even Pearl Jam admits it's not for everyone.

Most musical acts don't vary their set lists much from city to city, making such a project redundant. But like Phish or Bruce Springsteen, Pearl Jam rides itself on being unpredictable in concert. Each show contains approximately two dozen songs; Pearl Jam played more than 80 different songs during the European tour.

Its record company, Sony, had to be persuaded to go along, band manager Kelly Curtis said. Pearl Jam records all its shows anyway, so the biggest expense was already taken care of, he said.

Virtually every Pearl Jam concert is made available on disc by bootleggers, he said. Curtis knows, because the band has col-

Book foundation to honor Bradbury

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray Bradbury, who is best known for writing science fiction, will receive a lifetime achievement medal at this year's National Book Awards ceremony for his "tremendous impact on every genre of writing."

"Since the 1930s, he has been one of America's great literary talents," said Neil Baldwin, the executive director of the National Book Foundation, which gives the award in November. Bradbury joins the likes of Toni Morrison, Eudora Welty and Studs Terkel in receiving the honor.

The 80-year-old author wrote The Martian Chronicles, Fahrenheit 451 and many other books. He was first published in 1938, when his story "Hollerbochen's Dilemma" appeared in Imagination! magazine.

Injuries cripple Hawks

By Jeremy Schnitker
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa's brutal non-conference schedule may be over, but the team may still be feeling the effects of it — especially when it comes to injuries.

The Hawkeyes went down to Lincoln Saturday a few cards short of a full deck.

Freshman return man Fred Russell fractured a bone in his leg on Sept. 17 and will sit out four to six weeks. Offensive lineman Eric Steinbach did not suit up for the Nebraska game because of ankle injuries; neither did Jeremy Allen. Kahlil Hill was limited to punt returns after missing all of last week's practices. Hill slowly worked his way in late in the game and played much of the fourth quarter. Offensive lineman Dave Porter was also knocked out of the game with an ankle injury.

To add to the mix, Anthony Herron sprained a knee Saturday; he returned in the fourth quarter.

Katch Kasper

For the fourth time in nine games, Iowa senior receiver Kevin Kasper went over the 100-yard mark in receiving, with eight catches for 129 yards.

For his career, Kasper has 104 catches for 1,328, which puts him at No. 11 on Iowa's all-time receptions list and No. 15 in all-time receiving yards. Kasper's play drew the praise of Nebraska coach Frank Solich.

"I thought that Kevin has played well the entire season," Solich said. "He's a big play guy and also a guy that, down after down, you get his best shot. I feel that he's an excellent player, and we knew that going into Saturday's game."

Hawkeyes face tough non-conference tune-up

Iowa's volleyball team takes on Northern Iowa tonight, a Sweet 16 team last season.

By Todd Brommelkamp
 The Daily Iowan

When Big Ten schools host a non-conference opponent such as Northern Iowa in any sport, the result is usually an easy victory. Iowa volleyball coach Rita Buck-Crockett will tell you otherwise when it comes to the Panthers.

"I expect nothing less than a dog fight," she said.

The Hawkeyes step back into non-conference action today with a 7 p.m. match with UNI at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Admission is $3 for both students and adults, while children 5 and under will be admitted for free.

Northern Iowa enters tonight's match with a record of 10-4. The Panthers had their best season in school history last year, finishing 30-1 and making an appearance in the NCAA tournament. Northern Iowa lost only two players from last season's Sweet 16 squad and will be a very tough opponent for Iowa, Buck-Crockett said.

"This is going to be a tough match," she said. "I know my players will be ready for it."

The Hawkeyes look more than ready for the test, carrying a 6-3 record into tonight's tilt and riding a six-match win streak. The last time Iowa won six straight was in November 1994, which was also the last time Iowa made an appearance in the NCAA tournament.

What: Northern Iowa (10-4) at Iowa (6-3)
When: today, 7 p.m.
Where: Carver-Hawkeye Arena
Tickets: $3

Coincidentally, 1994 was also the last time the two teams tangled. The Panthers defeated Iowa, 3-1, that year to extend their winning streak over the Hawkeyes to five matches. Iowa has not defeated UNI since Sept. 9, 1989, but the Hawks are confident they will be able to turn the tables.

"We all want to prove that we are the best team in Iowa," said middle blocker Carolyn Giese, one of four Iowa natives on the Hawkeye roster.

The Panthers feature Iowa City native Jill Arganbright. After competing at West High last season, the freshman has taken over setting chores for the Panthers, leading the team with 491 assists. Both schools have done an excellent job of recruiting in recent years, and that should add to the competitive spirit of tonight's match, Buck-Crockett said.

She also hopes Iowa's biggest advantage will be playing the match at home, where the Hawkeyes are unbeaten this season.

"We're lucky that we're home," Buck-Crockett said. "I hope we can take advantage of our advantage."

Tonight's contest will be the last time Iowa plays at home until Northwestern comes to Iowa City on Oct. 6.

A day of ups and downs for Team USA

By Bob Baum
 Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — Michael Johnson has known only one color in major international championships — gold.

Johnson became the first man to repeat as Olympic 400-meter champion with a wire-to-wire triumph on Monday night in 43.84 seconds, 0.44 seconds ahead of teammate Alvin Harrison.

"You know how I feel about making history," Johnson said, "and to be able to do that and end my Olympic career like that is a dream come true."

It was the ninth time the United States has gone 1-2 in the event and third in the last four Olympics.

When the race was over, the scene was far less emotional than the one that followed Johnson's world-record triumph in the 200 meters four years ago in the Atlanta Games. That victory, in an incredible 19.32 seconds, made him the first man to win the 200 and 400 in the same Olympics.

Johnson has won four Olympic medals and nine more in the world championships — all of them gold.

"I didn't want my last Olympic race to be a bronze or a silver or anything but gold," he said. "That was the big motivator that I was thinking about all day today was just basically keeping my Reports say C.J. Hunter, husband and coach of Marion Jones, failed four drug tests.

By Stephen Wilson
 Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — Marion Jones, the fastest woman in the world, may not be able to run fast enough to escape the scandal that has suddenly engulfed her.

Jones' pursuit of an unprecedented five golds became more than a series of sprints and a long jump when she was swept up in the disgrace her husband, world shot put champion C.J. Hunter, brought by testing positive for the anabolic steroid nandrolone.

Hunter failed four separate tests for steroid use this summer, results that international and American track officials knew about but never reported, the IOC's drug chief said

Tuesday (Monday night EDT).

Prince Alexandre de Merode, chairman of the IOC's medical commission, said Hunter failed three out-of-competition tests in addition to a test conducted after the Bislett Games in Oslo, Norway.

All the tests showed Hunter with levels of the steroid nandrolone 1,000 times the allowable amount.

Hunter and Jones appeared together at a press conference, where Jones kissed her husband in a show of support and asked reporters to leave the couple alone.

"Aside from him being an athlete and me being an athlete, he's my husband and I'm here to show support for him," she said. "I have full and complete respect, and believe the legal system will do what it needs to do to clear his name."

Manning and Indianapolis pummels Jacksonville

Peyton Manning threw for 440 yards and four touchdowns as the Colts won 43-14.

By Dave Goldberg
 Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — If there was anything wrong with Peyton Manning, it was cured Monday night — with help from some unexpected quarters.

Manning passed for a franchise-record 440 yards and threw for four touchdowns as the Indianapolis Colts dominated the second half to beat Jacksonville 43-14.

Terrence Wilkins, playing his first game of the season, chipped in with nine catches for 148 yards and a touchdown. And the defense that blew a 21-point lead at home to Oakland two weeks ago showed up this time, sacking

Mark Brunell five times, once for a safety and picking off a pass that set up a score.

But it was Manning's show as the Colts went on a 22-0 run in the second half after leading by only a touchdown at half-time.

After throwing three interceptions in his first two games, he was perfect Monday night, starting with a 76-yard TD pass to Marvin Harrison on the Colts' third play from scrimmage. Manning also had a 27-yarder to Wilkins and a 16-yarder to Jerome Pathon as Indianapolis (2-1) took a 21-14 lead.

Manning added a 4-yarder in the final quarter for the first four-touchdown game in his two-plus NFL seasons. Edgerrin James completed the scoring with a 14-yard TD run.

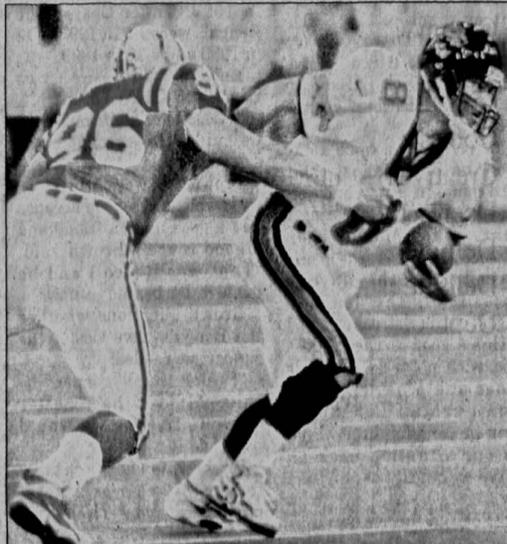

Manning, who completed 23 of 36 passes, broke his own team record of 404 yards against San Diego last Sept.

26. Hall of Famer Johnny Unitas' top total was 401 for Baltimore.

Wilkins, who missed the first two games with a concussion, almost doubled his career high of five catches as a rookie last year.

And the defense, which entered the game with one sack, had five this time, two each by Ellis Johnson and Chad Bratzke. Bratzke sacked Mark Brunell for a third-quarter safety, the first safety by the Colts since 1997. Mike Peterson had an interception that set up one of the first-half TDs.

Brunell was 21-of-35 for 229 yards for Jacksonville (2-2) with touchdown passes of 9 and 26 yards to Jimmy Smith. But after getting 159 in the first half, Brunell had only 3 yards in the first 25 minutes of the second half, while the Colts were putting away the game.

Coslet out in Cincy

Bruce Coslet resigned as head coach of the winless Bengals Monday.

By John Nolan
 Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Unable to win, barely able to even score, the Cincinnati Bengals found themselves with a new coach Monday with the season all of three games old.

Bruce Coslet unexpectedly quit as coach of the NFL's worst team of the past decade and was replaced by defensive coordinator Dick LeBeau in the first NFL coaching change this season.

The resignation came a day after the Bengals lost their third game in a row and second straight without scoring a point. They have been outscored 74-7 this season and haven't made the playoffs since 1990, the league's longest current streak.

"He's a good teacher ... he's good with players," Bengals owner and president Mike Brown said of LeBeau. "I think he can step in now and get our situation back on course as quickly as anybody could."

LeBeau, a former star cornerback for the Detroit Lions, becomes an NFL coach for the first time at 63. He has spent 28 years as an assistant on other coaches' staffs. "There will be some changes," LeBeau said at a news conference. "I think we have to take a look at everything."

"We think we can win on a regular basis with this football team," he added. "We think we have a good, young, talented football team."

Coslet coached the New York Jets from 1990-93 and became coach of the Bengals in 1996. Under Coslet, the Bengals were 7-9 in 1997, 3-13 in 1998 and 4-12 in 1999.

LeBeau said he was stunned by Coslet's decision. "I tried to talk him out of it," he said. "He was not to be swayed."

Brown, too, was surprised. "It was hard for me because he's a good man, a friend and a good coach," Brown said. "That was his call and he made it. It's behind us now."

Brown questions whether the Bengals gave Coslet the support he needed.

"I think we all wonder," he said. "If we had better answers, maybe we would have had success."

Brown intends to continue to run the team as general manager rather than hire someone else.

"I have no plans to make that change as I stand here today," he said.

Official says Hunter had massive amounts of drug

Hunter, kept breaking down and fighting back tears as he spoke.

"Nobody on the planet could say that I don't love my wife and I don't love my kids," he began. "I have never in my life, nor would I ever, do anything to jeopardize their opinion of me. I don't know what has happened and I don't know how it has happened. How it may affect me is the least of my concerns."

Hunter said Cochran would represent him as he fights the doping charges, but Cochran said he was only there "as a family friend."

Jones lined up all smiles for the 100 meters two days earlier, as oblivious to pressure as she was to any threat from her rivals. That was just a race and, as it turned out, not much of one as she blew away the field as calmly as she blew kisses to the crowd.

Now the daunting task the 24-year-old Jones set for herself on the track has turned into a test of all the inner strength she can muster, starting with the 200 heats and long jump qualifying on Wednesday.

"The challenge that Marion Jones was facing, a real athletic challenge, has only been enhanced by all the developments here thus far," said Craig Masback, chief executive officer of USA Track & Field.

"Marion has done a great job so far in light of the recent situation," Michael Johnson said Monday night after capturing the men's 400 gold. "Hopefully she'll be able to focus on what she's here to do."

It was a sentiment shared by all of Jones' track and field teammates, even those angry about Hunter's alleged steroid use.

"I think it's tragic. I think it's very sad," said Kim Batten, the 1996 silver medalist in the women's 400-meter hurdles. "I hope it doesn't affect Marion. It's tough no matter how you look at it for her. I'm sorry for her. It's a major event in her life."

No one is accusing Jones of using banned performance enhancers. But she cannot avoid questions about whether she knew her husband used nandrolone and how the disclosure of his drug tests are affecting her.

The 330-pound Hunter, the most prominent of the athletes accused during the games of drug violations, had been among the favorites for a shot put gold medal in Sydney before he withdrew two weeks ago. Reached in his hotel room, he declined to discuss his case or the impact it is having on his wife.

"I know what's going on and I am aware of the allegations and am going to defend myself vigorously," Hunter said in a statement given to NBC.

Harrison gives Johnson a run at the gold

reputation intact."

In his trademark style of running standing virtually straight up, like Jesse Owens, Johnson never was seriously challenged.

"It was tough. Harrison was running well and I didn't draw a very good lane," Johnson said. "Basically, I had to go in there and tell myself just do what I've been doing for the last 10 years, not worry about what's going on behind me and just run the race I knew I could run."

He said he didn't go out as fast as he normally would because he was out in lane six and wouldn't be able to see his toughest competitors as they rounded the turns.

"I just held a little bit for the end in case I'd have some trouble," he said.

When it was over, Johnson raised his arms in triumph.

But there was no throwing the shoes into the crowd, as he has done before. These shoes have droplets of gold in them. He would keep them. After all, they matched all of his medals.

Johnson and Harrison each grabbed American flags and paraded with them together around the track.

On the medal stand, there was that big, bright smile that Johnson saves for such occasions.

His individual Olympic career is over, but he has one more race to run in Sydney — the anchor leg of the 1,600 meters Saturday. He will finish with the same race in which he won his first Olympic gold eight years ago in Barcelona.

"The relay has always been fun," he said, "but I think this race, knowing it will be my last Olympic race ever and having some good guys to run it with, it will be good just to really enjoy the moment."

Iowa holds Nebraska without rushing TD

IOWA NOTES

Bend but don't break, kinda

Iowa's defense may have surrendered 331 yards rushing Saturday, but it did not allow Nebraska to score a rushing touchdown the entire game. Saturday marked the first time Nebraska had not scored a rushing touchdown since the 1998 Holiday Bowl against Arizona.

However, to compensate for lack of scoring on the ground, Eric Crouch, Nebraska's quarterback, threw for a school-record-tying five touchdown passes. Tight end Tracey Wistrom caught a school record three touchdown catches.

"We knew that they were going to try to pass the ball more this game," Iowa cornerback Mikkel Brown said. "We went into this game ready for both the run and the pass. I was kind of surprised at the number of touchdowns they had throwing the ball; I thought they would try to run the ball at us more."

Streaking

A few streaks were advanced in the Nebraska game this weekend. One was Nebraska's stadium capacity, which reached 78,070, a school record. Also advanced was the number of consecutive sellouts for Memorial Stadium — an NCAA-record 235th time.

On the Iowa end, the Hawkeyes advanced their losing streak to 12 Saturday, which ties a school record dating back to 1974. Iowa's streak also rates as the second-longest in the nation, behind Ball State, which has 20 consecutive losses.

Indians split odd twin bill

CLEVELAND — The Indians were afraid all these doubleheaders would catch up to them sooner or later, and that's exactly what happened in the eighth inning Monday night.

Torii Hunter hit a game-tying two-run single and Jacques Jones drove in the go-ahead run off Bob Wickman in the eighth as the Minnesota Twins beat Cleveland 4-3 in the nightcap of a historic, three-team doubleheader.

In the day game, Dave Burba got his 16th win in Cleveland's 9-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

It was only the second three-team doubleheader in the majors since 1900 and first since Sept. 13, 1951, when the St. Louis Cardinals played host to the New York Giants and Boston Braves at Sportsman's Park.

The Indians had kicked and screamed about having to play the doubleheader — their third in six days — when the AL announced that a Sept. 10 rainout with Chicago would have to be made up.

Cleveland was worried that its worn-out pitching staff might not hold up, and relievers Paul Shuey (4-2) and Wickman couldn't close out the sweep.

With history being made, the Indians said they would send a ball from each game, signed by the starting pitchers, along with tickets and the lineup cards to the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y.

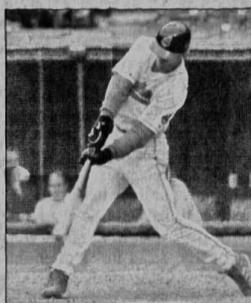

Devil Rays 5, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Fred McGriff hit a three-run homer and Paul Wilson pitched seven scoreless innings as the Tampa Bay Devil Rays defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 5-1 Monday night.

The Blue Jays, who have six games remaining, began the day 3 1/2 games behind Oakland in the wild card race.

Just 20,715 fans showed up for Toronto's last home game of the season. The Blue Jays attracted 1,819,886 fans — 343,578 fewer than last year — for the team's lowest total since 1982.

One day after rookie Travis Harper pitched a two-hitter against the Blue Jays, Wilson held them to three hits for his first AL victory.

Ron Schwane/Associated Press
Cleveland's Russell Bryan belts a RBI single off Chicago pitcher Matthew Ginter Monday.

The Blue Jays scored their lone run in the eighth on Todd Greene's homer off Esteban Yan. The shot gave Toronto 134 homers at SkyDome, a new AL record for home runs at home.

Braves 6, Expos 0

Glavine (20-9) allowed eight hits in his second shutout of the season, striking out three and walking none. He joined Toronto's David Wells as one of the only 20-game winners in the major leagues.

"It's awfully hard to win 20 games on a team that's not good, that's not winning many games," Glavine said. "As a pitcher, trying to pitch a good ballgame and give your offense a chance to win games ... if you can do that, you're going to win a lot of games."

Glavine got his 19th victory Sept. 5 against Arizona, then lost to the Expos, Diamondbacks and Mets. He also won 20 games in 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1998.

Tigers 15, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — Dwight Gooden was ineffective in his first start in eight weeks. David Cone was even worse in his first relief appearance in eight years.

Damion Easley and Bobby Higginson hit two-run homers as the Detroit Tigers pounded New York's former Cy Young winners in a 15-4 win over the Yankees on Monday night.

On a crisp night when the weather conjured thoughts of playoff baseball, the Yankees played nothing like it in their final scheduled home game of the year.

49ers suspend Owens

San Francisco takes action against Terrell Owens for his antics Sunday against Dallas.

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Terrell Owens won't be celebrating anything this Sunday.

Owens, San Francisco's top receiver, was fined a week's salary and suspended for a game by coach Steve Mariucci on Monday for his touchdown celebrations during the 49ers' victory at Dallas.

After both of his touchdowns in the 41-24 victory at Texas Stadium, Owens sprinted to midfield and celebrated on the Cowboys' star logo. Some of his teammates said the displays fired them up, but others said Owens embarrassed them.

"This decision is based on how we intend to conduct ourselves," Mariucci said. "It disturbs me when the integrity of the game is compromised in any way, shape or form."

Owens will lose $24,294 and won't be allowed to practice or meet with his teammates this week. San Francisco (1-3) plays Arizona at home Sunday.

Mariucci said he spoke to the league office about his decision to discipline Owens, and he didn't know whether the NFL planned to level its own fine or suspension as well.

Owens, a five-year veteran best known for his game-winning TD catch with three seconds left in a 1999 playoff game against Green Bay, is San Francisco's leading receiver for 328 yards and four touchdowns.

On Sunday, Emmitt Smith responded to Owens' first outburst with his own midfield celebration after a 1-yard TD just before halftime.

When Owens caught a 1-yard TD pass with 4:05 left to make it 41-17, he again took off toward midfield. Dallas safety George Teague followed Owens and leveled him as he kneeled on the logo, touching off a heated confrontation between the teams.

Teague was ejected, while Owens received a penalty for taunting but was not ejected. The victory was San Francisco's first in four games this season.

"T.O. is a guy who likes to celebrate, and this time it just got a little out of hand," quarterback Jeff Garcia said. "I don't agree with things like that. When great things happen, we celebrate as a team."

The 49ers said the punishment wasn't technically a suspension, and Owens will be left on the team's 53-man roster. Owens' absence will mean additional playing time for receivers Jerry Rice, J.J. Stokes and Tai Streets.

"Terrell is a different kind of guy," Rice said. "He plays on a lot of emotion. This has to be very difficult. Hopefully, with this little break, he can think over the situation and just be better."

POINTCOUNTERPOINT

Is Nebraska the best team in the nation?

The slogan on Nebraska's media guide says it best (even though it gets the century wrong): "The Dominant Team of the 1990s Heads Into a New Century."

And 2000 will end with another national title. True, Nebraska will need to get better to win it all, but it will. The Huskers always do. Right now, their defense and special teams are weaker than in past seasons, but I'm sure most teams in college football would like to have Nebraska's problems.

Last year, Texas beat Nebraska to end the Cornhuskers' title hopes. This year, the Huskers will look to avenge the defeat. Kansas State, the Longhorns, Oklahoma and — according to some Iowa State fans — the Cyclones are threats to defeat the top-ranked Huskers once again. Not a chance.

Florida State will be Nebraska's chief opponent in the polls and deservedly so. The Seminoles are a fantastic team led by a great quarterback, Chris Weinke, but behind the nation's best offensive line is one of the nation's best quarterbacks: Eric Crouch. Behind him is the nation's best backfield with Dan Alexander and Correl Buckhalter. See the trend?

Until the Huskers solves their defensive and special teams woes (they've given up 50 points and allowed Notre Dame two special teams' TD returns) they will resort to scoring points — they've tallied 118 this season — and they will continue to win.

And by the time New Year's Day comes, they will have solved all their problems and won all their games and will be playing in the Orange Bowl, the site of their last national championship. — by Melinda Mawdsley

The punch line to a classic joke that made the rounds a few years ago went something like this: ... and then the Nebraska player replied, "The 'N' on the Nebraska helmet stands for knowledge."

Far be it from me to criticize the fine academic institution over there in Lincoln, but this year the 'N' could just as easily stand for "Not championship caliber" or "No way deserving of a No. 1 ranking" or even "Nine and three," which will be Nebraska's record at the end of the season.

Nebraska is a good team, but it is far from a great team. Eric Crouch is an incredible talent leading a gifted offense that can and will put points on the board. The Husker defense, however, is suspect. Notre Dame and Iowa showed that you can pass against it, and Ladell Betts's big gains prove that even the Husker run defense doesn't dominate as it has in past years.

In addition, watching the Nebraska special teams is like watching old episodes of "The Nanny" — it's awful. Iowa punt and kickoff returns totaled 143 return yards against the Huskers. Notre Dame settled for 317 return yards. Three hundred-seventeen! That was 43 more yards than the celebrated Huskers rushing game produced that day.

If you're not persuaded by statistics, consider that Nebraska didn't put Iowa away until the fourth quarter. Don't get me wrong: The Hawkeyes played their best game of the season Saturday and will break their losing streak soon, but nonetheless, a championship-caliber team would not have struggled against a team with an 11-game losing streak.

An Oct. 28 trip to Oklahoma and a Nov. 11 visit to Kansas State will be, pardon the spelling, a Nockout punch to the Huskers' championship aspirations. — by Jeremy Shapiro

After week 4, most is normal in NFL

■ The first few weeks brought some surprises, but St. Louis is still elite.

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

The NFL is back to normal. All teams are equal except St. Louis and Cincinnati.

After four weeks, or a quarter season give or take a bye or two, we now know:

• That Keyshawn Johnson's mouth is bigger than his stats against his old team — one catch for 1 yard. If Wayne Chrebet is a flashlight, what's Keyshawn? A one-watt bulb?

• That Washington is not as bad a team as it looked in the first three weeks and that the Giants aren't as good. What's new there? The season is 16 games, not three (Redskins), and a team that isn't good enough to start 4-0 generally won't.

• Dallas now has the star on its 50-yard-line back in its possession, courtesy of Emmitt Smith and George Teague. Terrell Owens tried to seize it for San Francisco on Sunday in an egotistical display worthy of Keyshawn.

• There's no home-field advantage yet. Visiting teams were 10-3 Sunday and are 29-28 for the season.

From the top:

- St. Louis: which is averaging 40 points a game, is in a class by itself, particularly since its defense came around in Atlanta — eight sacks (one by demoted Kevin Carter), two interceptions and a fumble return for a touchdown. Kurt Warner has thrown for 1,557 yards in a quarter-season, which translates to 6,228 for 16 games, or 1,144 more than Dan Marino's single-season record.

Moreover, the schedule's easy because the NFC West is a cream puff division. But the 1972 Dolphins don't have to worry yet — too many road-blocks ahead, such as games at the Chiefs, Giants and Bucs and home games with the Redskins and Vikings. There's a loss or two in that bunch.

Tampa Bay, which looked like the league's best team for three weeks, reverted to last year's philosophy: "Let the defense do it." It did for 58 minutes then fell flat. Next come games in Washington and Minnesota that will tell more.

As for the Bengals, they've been outscored 74-7 in three games. They'll probably make a late-season push and finish 3-13 or 4-12, but Bruce Coslet won't be there to oversee it — he quit Monday. The next step is up to the clueless front office.

• The Keyshawn Bowl: The NFL occasionally produces a game, like last January's Super Bowl, that's worth the hype. That was Jets-Bucs on Sunday. When did a defense like Tampa Bay's blow an 11-point lead in the last two minutes? Maybe in 1997, when the Vikings came back from nine points down to beat the Giants in a playoff game.

But this had the weeklong buildup — New York media in Tampa goading Johnson into calling himself a star and Chrebet a flashlight. And it had the drama of Chrebet catching the winning TD pass on a halfback option from Curtis Martin with 52 seconds left.

"I don't know who wrote the script for this, but I thank them," Chrebet said.

Turner calls for instant replay

■ The head of Big Ten officials says the referees made errors during Illinois loss to Michigan.

By John Kelly
Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — The Big Ten admitted Monday that two game-turning fumble calls late in Michigan's 35-31 win over Illinois were mistakes, and Illini coach Ron Turner called on the NCAA to use instant replay to review such plays.

Big Ten officiating coordinator David Parry said both disputed fumble rulings would have gone Illinois' way instead of Michigan's if an NFL-style instant replay system had been available Saturday.

Turner will not blame the blown calls for Illinois' loss, saying Michigan played well enough to win and there were many other factors in the Wolverines' rallying from a 21-7 deficit in the third quarter.

"You would at least like to get it right and let the players decide it," Turner said. "I'm not saying that didn't happen in our last game."

Turner, a former assistant with the Chicago Bears, said colleges could copy the system used by the NFL in which coaches can request a replay but lose a timeout if the officials' ruling stands.

Parry, who also is the national coordinator of officiating for the NCAA, called instant replay "highly, highly unlikely" because of the cost and logistics involved in equipping every stadium. Parry acknowledged the two fumbles in question from Saturday's game would have been overturned after a review of tape.

Leading 31-28 late in that game, officials ruled halfback Rocky Harvey fumbled when it appeared the ground jarred loose the football. Harvey recovered the loose ball, but it was taken from him in the pileup.

On the ensuing Michigan drive, tailback Anthony Thomas dropped the ball near the goal line but officials ruled him down. The replay showed otherwise, but the Wolverines kept the ball. Thomas scored on a 3-yard run on the next play, putting Illinois down four points with just 2:30 left.

"There's no question in this case that technology shows that we've had a couple fumbles that could have been officiated better," Parry said. "At normal speed, they were probably inconclusive. But when you use the technology, it does not defend the judgment of the officials."

Following Turner's lead, Illinois players refused to cite officiating as an excuse.

"It's definitely not the refs' fault," quarterback Kurt Kitner said. "You can't put the refs in position to make those kinds of calls. You protect the football so there aren't those borderline situations."

Parry is not done reviewing the Michigan-Illinois game, which he said was officiated by one of the Big Ten's most experienced and highest-rated crews. He has spoken with Turner, Michigan coach Lloyd Carr, officials and other league officials who were at the game.

"We talked a lot, but nothing came out of it," Turner said.

Turner is not changing his stand on replay just because of Saturday's game. He's a long-time replay proponent. He said he has often seen officials at college basketball games look at television monitors outside in a disputed situation.

And the Illinois complaints come just two weeks after Tennessee lost to Florida, 27-23, on a controversial Gators touchdown. But Turner isn't optimistic that the NCAA is going to change its rules.

"It won't happen in the near future because coaches will fight it," Turner said. "A lot of coaches don't like change."

Fox bids to get entire baseball postseason package

NEW YORK (AP) — Fox has offered about $2.5 billion in a bid to grab major league baseball's entire postseason package from 2001-06, the Associated Press has learned.

That figure, which would also cover an extension of current deals for regular-season games on Fox and its cable outlets, was confirmed Monday by three TV industry and baseball sources speaking on condition of anonymity.

NBC and ESPN, which hold rights to some postseason games under five-year contracts that expire after the World Series, had until today to match Fox's bid, industry sources said.

With the old deal, Fox and NBC split the league championships and alternated televising World Series.

Olympic gymnast stripped of gold

■ Andreea Raducan of Romania tested positive for a banned stimulant.

By Salvatore Zanca
Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — Romania's Andreea Raducan was stripped of her all-around gymnastics gold medal after testing positive for a banned stimulant.

The decision earlier today (Monday night EDT) to strip the medal of the 16-year-old, who's drawn comparisons to Nadia Comaneci for her looks and talent, was made by the International Olympic Committee's executive board, following the recommendation from its medical commission.

The team doctor who gave Raducan the drug in two cold medicine pills was expelled from the games and suspended through the 2002 winter games in Salt Lake and 2004 summer games in Athens. The decisions were confirmed by Thomas Bach, a member of the IOC executive board.

Raducan is the first gymnast to be stripped of a medal because of a drug violation and is the second athlete at these games to lose a gold. She is the sixth positive drug case at the Sydney Games. IOC Vice President Kevin Gosper said there was considerable debate among the board members on what action to take, and a difference of opinion among many of them.

"It is a most unusual case," Gosper said. "You have three events, during which the athlete proved to be positive in one. I don't know of any case like that before. It was a long discussion. It was not easy."

Ion Tiriac, president of Romania's National Olympic Committee, refused to comment immediately after the decision.

The action against Raducan came a day after 330-pound shot put world champion C.J. Hunter, the husband and coach of gold-medal sprinter Marion Jones, was identified by world track officials as having tested positive for steroids at a meet in Oslo in July. Hunter is not competing at Sydney.

With Raducan's disqualification, another Romanian, Simona Amarnar, gets the gold and teammate Maria Olaru goes from bronze to silver. Liu Xuan of China, the original fourth-place finisher, now gets the bronze medal.

Raducan was allowed to keep her other medals, a gold from the team competition and a silver from the vault. IOC executive board member Anita DeFrantz said she also could remain in the Olympic Village with her team for the rest of the games.

Raducan tested positive for pseudoephedrine, which is on the IOC's list of banned stimulants, Bach said.

She underwent three different tests after each competition, Bach said. She tested negative after the Romanians won the team gold last Tuesday, but positive after she won the all-around Thursday.

She tested negative after winning a silver in the vault Sunday. The drug was given to her by a team doctor in two cold medications, Tiriac said early Tuesday. Raducan took two pills, one containing pseudoephedrine and the second an over-the-counter drug, Tiriac said.

"He has the real responsibility in this case," Bach said of the doctor. "He prescribed the medication to this girl. It's a good signal to all the people surrounding the athletes that they can be punished."

Romanian officials were told Monday afternoon of the positive test, Tiriac said, but Raducan competed anyway in the individual floor exercise final that night. She finished seventh out of eight.

Freeman is first aborigine to win gold

■ Australia's Cathy Freeman wins the women's 400 meters.

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — Most Olympic races simply are won. This was much more than a victory for an aboriginal woman and a nation trying to come to terms with its past.

In the stadium where she ignited the Olympic torch in a stirring start to the Sydney Games, Cathy Freeman won the gold medal her country expected her to win, her 42nd victory in her last 43 400-meter races.

On a chilly but dry Monday night, she wore a full body suit of yellow and green, her country's team colors. Halfway through the race, Freeman trailed Lorraine Graham of Jamaica but the crowd spurred her on. Thirty meters from the finish, she turned up the heat and pulled away.

When Freeman crossed the finish line, she seemed stunned. She glanced down at her hands and looked around. It was a long, long time before she finally smiled.

She grabbed a flag, half-Australian, half-aboriginal, and waved it to the deafening roar of an Olympic record crowd of 112,524. "Sport is a reflection of life — anything can happen," Freeman said. "My dream came true when I crossed the line."

Afterward, on the medal stand, she sang along to the anthem "Advance Australia Fair" and the crowd joined in a chorus that echoed through Sydney Olympic Park.

"I was totally overwhelmed by the crowd," she said. "I could feel the crowd all over me. All the emotion and happiness and joy in every pore of my body. It was beyond words."

On her shoulder is a tattoo that reads "Coz I'm Free," a statement of pride that has carried her through good times and bad as she worked to emphasize her aboriginal heritage through her development into one of the best runners in the world.

In 1994, just 21 years old, Freeman won the 400 meters at the Commonwealth Games in Victoria, Canada, then stunned Australian team officials by waving an aboriginal flag instead of an Australian one.

After being reprimanded by team officials, she won the 200 and waved the aboriginal flag again.

What a difference six years have made.

At the Olympics, Freeman was presented as a symbol of a new Australia. Her pictures are everywhere. She stares from bus stop after bus stop, and a 20-story poster of her covers the side of a 35-story building in the central city.

At the opening ceremony, wearing a shimmering silver suit, Freeman stood with the torch held high as a ring of water rose around her; then she ignited the flame.

Freeman didn't talk to reporters throughout her early heats. She is a quiet champion.

"It's really nice my Olympic dream came true," she said. "I made a lot of people happy, and I'm happy. I try to be businesslike and not get too emotional. That's my focus, to keep life simple and do what makes me happy."

She much preferred racing to lighting the flame.

"Running is like breathing. To me it was fun. I had a great time. Winning the gold is more precious than lighting the cauldron," Freeman said. "When I lit the cauldron, I was relieved I didn't fall in the water."

She plans two more Olympic races, the 200 meters and the anchor leg of the 1,600-meter relay. This, though, was her best event and the one she wanted to win the most.

Celtics Paul Pierce stabbed

BOSTON (AP) — Paul Pierce, an emerging star on the Boston Celtics, was recovering Monday after being stabbed in the face, neck and back at a night club.

He was with several friends when he was attacked during a fight in the pool room of the Buzz Club in the city's theater district.

The 22-year-old Pierce was treated at New England Medical Center, police spokeswoman Mariellen Burns said. The hospital would not release information except to say he was in fair condition.

"He's doing fine. We're all hoping for a speedy recovery," coach Rick Pitino said as he left the hospital.

WBZ-TV reported that Pierce had been hit over the head with a bottle and that most of the stab wounds were superficial except for a 7-inch deep cut to his sternum. Several stations reported that teammate Tony Battie was with Pierce at the club early Monday morning.

There were no immediate arrests. Witnesses told police the fight involved security guards connected with the local rap group Made Men, but it was unclear what role Pierce might have played, Burns said.

horoscopes

Tuesday, September 26, 2000 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can successfully pursue your personal goals. Travel, entertainment and creative endeavors should be on your mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You'll have real-estate opportunities. Moves will be to your advantage. Family members may not agree with your decisions. Don't change your plans because of unreasonable demands.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not let others stand in your way. Follow your heart. In-laws will cause a lot of grief if you allow them to interfere in your personal life. You have to make your own decisions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't overspend on gift items, entertainment or children. You should be focusing on doing a great job and maybe even putting in some extra hours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your emotional whims will drive your mate crazy. Your reluctance to do your share around home will cause family feuds. Try to be honest in your communications, or nothing will be resolved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your hot temper will lead you off on a tangent. You are not likely to see situations with clear vision. Think twice before you point the finger at someone or retaliate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Romantic opportunities will come your way if you become involved in organizational functions or are traveling. Accept the changes taking place in your home environment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Residential problems are likely. Don't overload your plate, or you will never handle the disruptions. You may have to take a trip to straighten out a situation concerning relatives.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You will be drawn to exotic destinations. Book a trip that will fulfill your fantasies. Family members may be upset with your travel choices.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Investments will end up costing more than you anticipated. Do not get involved in joint financial ventures. Put your energy into behind-the-scenes activities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You need to be entertained. Your spirits have been down. Pleasure trips and social activity may be the cure. You will want to have a greater involvement with children.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Social activities will be productive. You will attract members of the opposite sex with your compassionate interaction. Children will need your input in their creative endeavors.
