Gore, Bush duke it out over taxes, drugs

The two major-party candidates face off in the first of three debates.

By Sandra Sobleraj
Associated Press

BOSTON — Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush clashed over tax cuts, Medicare prescription-drug benefits and campaign finance Tuesday night in their first debate of the fall, a pivotal point in the closest White House contest in a generation. Combative from the outset, Gore charged that his rival's tax plan would "spend more money on tax cuts for the wealthiest 1 percent than all of the new spending he proposes for education, health care, prescription drugs and national defense all combined."

Bush, standing a few feet away on a debate stage at the University of Massachusetts, said Gore's economic plan would offer tax cuts only to the middle class. "Everybody who pays taxes ought to get relief," he said. At the same time, he said, Gore's blueprint would produce "dramatically" bigger government with 200 "new or expanded programs" and 20,000 new bureaucrats.

"It empowers Washington," added the governor, who hastened to tell a national viewing audience he was from West Texas — not the nation's capi-

Students protest Nader's exclusion

Local supporters say the Green Party candidate would offer an alternative to corporate politics.

By Erica Driskell

Ralph Nader supporters rallied on the Pentacrest Tuesday afternoon in order to raise issues they said would not be addressed in Tuesday's debate between Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush.

They also wanted to vent their frustration that Nader was not allowed to debate with the two "mainstream" candidates, said UI graduate student Jeff Carlson, a member of UI Students for Nader.

Nader, who is attracting between 3 to 10 percent of the vote in various national and state polls, offers stances on issues that differ from the center-of-the-line Republican and Democratic candidates, he said.

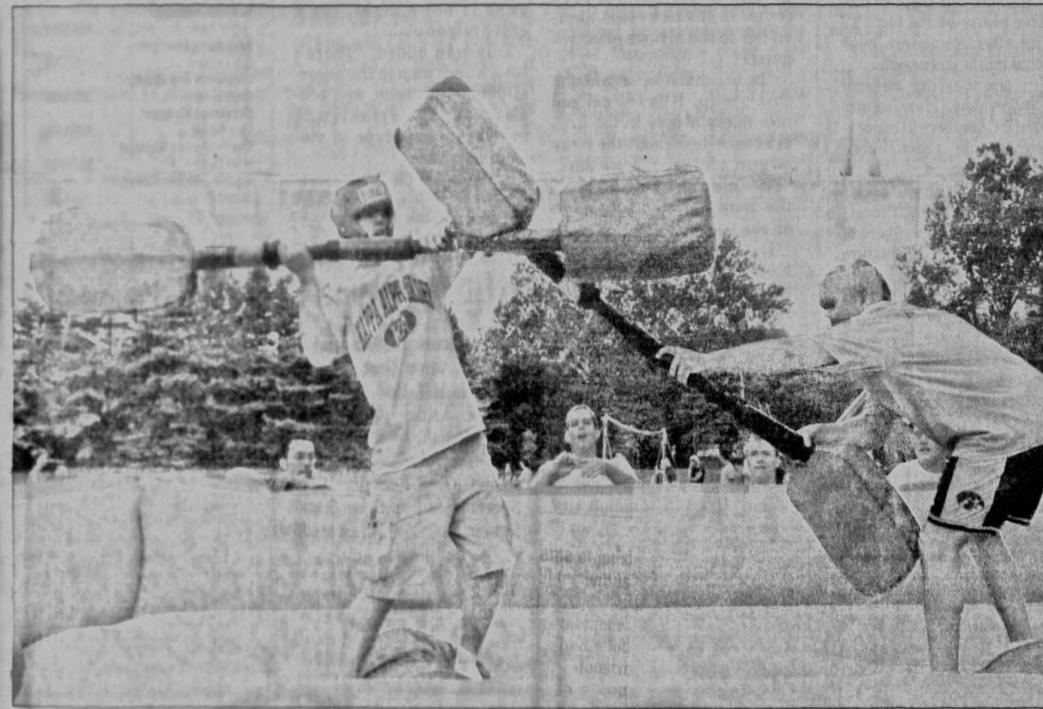

"We aren't arguing for a third-party alternative," Carlson said. "We are arguing for a second party."

Nader was not allowed to participate in the debate because both the Republican and Democratic parties fear

Homecoming 2000

Wreaking Havoc at Hubbard

Conrad Schmidt/The Daily Iowan

UI junior Josh Sax, left, and UI senior Corey King battle it out in a game of joust in Hubbard Park Tuesday afternoon. The joust was one of the games offered at Havoc At Hubbard as part of Homecoming 2000 festivities. Both said it was a lot of fun but harder than it looks.

The annual outdoor activity is more than games for Greeks this year.

By Natasha Lambropoulos
The Daily Iowan

Homecoming activities Tuesday afternoon gave some students a break from classes. Havoc at Hubbard, held in Hubbard Park and sponsored by the Homecoming Council, offered students a chance to challenge their skills at dodge ball, volleyball and jousting.

Both Greek chapters and non-Greek student organizations competed in activities from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

"The turnout this year is excellent because it's not just Greeks," said UI junior Kelly Lavery, the UI Homecoming sweepstakes director.

The events were scheduled and offered to any group that had pre-registered. Events were booked solid all day with extra people looking to join in, Lavery said.

"It was nice to see other organizations get involved," said UI senior Karla Lee, a member of Dance Marathon. "I had a lot of fun."

Jousting, a 2-on-2 event held in a bouncy, air-inflated ring, was the most popular activity. Students were equipped with padded helmets and jousting sticks they used to knock opponents down.

"Jousting was a lot of fun, but kind of hard," UI sophomore Amanda Batcheller said. "It took a lot out of me because the jousting sticks were too big."

Some members of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity said the day's events needed some music, sun and competition. Toward the end of the afternoon, a few teams did not show up, causing automatic forfeits.

"This is a good stress reliever and a chance for the university to come together," said UI sophomore Jen Sorem.

For many students, Havoc at Hubbard was a recreational break from midterms and classes.

"At least it was better than going to class," said UI freshman Kevin Purtill, a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

Program offers free cancer screenings

The project, along with many others, coincides with Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

By Sharyn Hosemann
The Daily Iowan

Thirty-one women in the Johnson County area died of breast cancer in 1999. It is a leading cause of cancer-related death among women.

October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, promoting the message that early detection is key in fighting the disease. The Iowa Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program sponsors free services to qualified participants.

"The women with the highest risk are ages 50-64. Our program targets women in that age bracket with either no or limited health insurance," said Erika Keppy, a UI nursing student and the coordinator of the Johnson County Breast Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program.

The yearlong program, started in 1990 and funded by Johnson County, works with local physicians and health professionals who perform the screenings for breast and cervical cancer. UI Health Care participates along with practices in Lone Tree, Tiffin, Muscatine and various communities in Johnson County.

The screenings are performed in participating physicians' offices and women should ask their doctors to see if they offer the program, Keppy said. Significant advances in medical technology have made early detection through screening a necessity for fighting breast and cervical cancer, Keppy said.

"It is an average of 1.7 years before a woman can feel a cancerous lump, and mammography can locate cancers too small to be felt during a clinical breast exam," Keppy said. "Women 40 years and older should get checked on an annual basis."

Breast cancer awareness is a year-round mission for Veronika Kolder, a gynecologist at the Trillium Women's Health Service, 1040 William St. in Iowa City, who encourages her patients to perform self exams on their breasts

Breast Cancer in Brief

Breast cancer is a leading cause of cancer-related deaths among women ages 40-59.

During the year 2000, 182,800 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer, and 40,800 women will die of breast cancer.

The majority of women with breast cancer have no known significant family history or other known risk factors.

Only 5-10% of breast cancer diagnoses are due to heredity.

Most women who are diagnosed with breast cancer survive the disease. If detected early, breast cancer has a five-year survival rate of over 95%.

Serendipity to change 'Ladies' Night' promotion

Since 1989, such specials have been illegal in Iowa.

By Peter Rugg
The Daily Iowan

Since opening the "lifestyle emporium" Serendipity, 702 S. Gilbert St., nine weeks ago, co-owner Ben Richards has been looking for a way to bring in more business.

After discussing with some patrons of the bar/laundromat what promotions bring in customers, Richards decided to promote a "Ladies' Night." On Oct. 6-7 from 10 p.m. to midnight, women would drink

Ben Richards
owner of Serendipity

free. He spent $380 promoting the special.

Because of state laws however, Richards will have to change his theme.

"I'll have to change it somehow," Richards said. "I could say any guy who wants to wear a dress can drink free. But I'll just change it to having the same special for both men and women to drink free on Friday and Saturday. And I'll make sure underage customers will have a non-alcoholic alternative to drink so they're not left out."

"Ladies' Night" promotions have been illegal in the state of Iowa since 1989, when the Iowa Supreme Court ruled they were a form of discrimination in the case of Ladd v. Iowa West Racing Association. Bluffs Run, a racing track in Council Bluffs, Iowa, had been running a special for women to be admitted for free on Wednesday afternoons and to be granted discount prices on food, drink and souvenirs. When a man attempted to get the same discounts as women and was denied, he filed a complaint with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission that the promotion was discriminatory. Laz Pittman, a human-rights investigator for the Iowa City Human Rights Commission, said he feels that the law serves an important purpose.

Hippie Cab offers a trip

■ An upstart cab company hopes to add some fun to its rounds.

By Andrew Bixby
The Daily Iowan

Brothers Aaron and Gary Burnett had a dream — to bring psychedelic colors, the Grateful Dead and Scooby Doo to the people. Four months later, they've combined it with a taxi company and are doing business in Iowa City.

Hippie Cab, which was nothing more than an idea in May, took its first passenger for a retro ride in Iowa City on Sept. 15, said Aaron Burnett, the 20-year-old co-owner, operator and driver of Hippie Cab.

In their dream, the "cabs" — a Volkswagen Vanagon and a Toyota LE van — had an array of psychedelic colors. The Iowa City government, however, had other ideas.

"The city told us the cabs had to be one or two colors," Aaron Burnett said. "So we decided on bright green."

Operating with only two cabs and a cell phone, Hippie Cab is hoping to expand to more cabs and 24-hour service in the future, he said. As of now, Hippie Cab runs from 9 p.m. to 4 a.m.

Because the Burnetts are the only drivers, and because they are the same age as most of their riders, they can offer interesting features and "deck the cabs out."

"We're playing around with putting Nintendos in the cabs," Aaron Burnett said. "And

Nick Tremmel/The Daily Iowan

because one of our cabs looks like the Mystery Machine, we're trying to get a blow-up Scooby-Doo doll for the back seat."

Not everybody buys into the hippie attitude, however.

"It's just a gimmick," said UI graduate student Albin Jones. "The real issue for me would be their fares. If I'm trying to get somewhere, I'm not really looking for style."

Compared with Yellow Cab and Old Capitol Cab in Iowa City, Hippie Cab's prices are slightly lower. For residents within a mile of downtown, a ride to the Pedestrian Mall would cost approximately 25 cents less with Hippie Cab.

Aaron Burnett said he and his brother were worried at first that other taxi companies wouldn't look too kindly upon their creative approach to the business.

Alan Martin, 54, a manager for Yellow Cab, 404 E. College St., said he has outgrown his 1970s hippie stage and thinks UI students will have the same attitude toward the idea.

"They don't worry me," he said. "We haul UI kids around all the time."

UI students are looking for whatever is cheapest and available when they need it, but something different is always good, said UI junior Carrie Rosenfeld.

"It's a cool alternative to Old Capitol Cab," she said.

Hippie Cab's catch phrase, "If you're drunk, we're driving," tells an all-too familiar story of weekends in Iowa City, Aaron Burnett said.

I.C. woman works to stop gun violence

■ Kathy Folk wants to start a local chapter of the Million Mom March.

By Erica Cox
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City resident Kathy Folk is taking steps to start a local chapter of the Million Mom March for two simple reasons: "Because I'm a mom, and I care," she said.

On May 14, Mothers' Day, 750,000 people marched on Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C., to protest gun violence, and tens of thousands of supporters marched in cities across the nation, including Des Moines.

The Million Mom March has become a national chapter-based organization dedicated to preventing gun death and injury and supporting victims and survivors of gun violence. Currently, the group has more than 230 chapters, said Steve Young, the Midwest director of the Million Mom March.

Folk

The chapters are focusing on education and advocacy, and they are lobbying for stronger gun laws and resources responsive to the needs of victims of gun violence, he said.

Folk said she felt a local chapter would help get people in Iowa City involved. Though no one close to her has been directly affected by gun violence, she has seen issues in the news that alerted her to the serious effects of guns.

"In the midst of organizing this group, I have realized how many people in the area are concerned about the issue of gun violence," she said. "The more people involved, the more educated people are on the issue."

In an effort to gain more members for the chapter, Folk will hold a meeting on Nov. 2 at 7 p.m. in Wild Bill's Coffee Shop, North Hall. In preparation for the meeting, she said, she's trying to spread the word and has had several concerned mothers approach her. She has also been in contact with Young in promoting the chapter.

Tom Gilsenan, a member of Iowans for the Prevention of Gun Violence who spoke at the march held in Des Moines in May, said he was surprised at how much response the event had. Approximately 100 people attended; two-thirds were mothers.

"It was extraordinary, and one defining moment of the march was the words of one woman," he said. "She said, 'You expect your children are going to outlive you, and here I am, a relatively young woman about to attend my son's funeral.'"

The recurrence of gun use in murders, suicides and accidental deaths is what convinced Folk to take a stand.

"We rather not think about it, but it's happening all around. This is a serious problem that needs attention," she said.

A span of one month saw shootings in a church in Texas, a trucking dispatch office in Alabama and in a synagogue in Los Angeles, Young said.

The driving force behind the Million Mom March, he said, is to prevent such acts with the help of legislation. However, Congress has made few steps in that direction.

"Congress is finding ways to stall and delay any action on gun laws," he said. "The resolution it came up with was to post the Ten Commandments in all schools. Though that is a positive step, it doesn't deal with the subject at hand. Congress is moving away from the focus."

The Million Mom March is not out to ban all guns, Young said.

"That would be impossible," he said. "We want people to understand that owning guns is not a right, it's a grave responsibility."

Gilsenan added, "There's been a shift among the general public's attitude, and people are saying we're not going to tolerate this type of violence anymore."

Council discusses plans to rezone

■ No new apartments or co-ops would be built in the historic neighborhood.

By Megan Eckhardt
The Daily Iowan

Plans to outlaw new apartments and cooperative housing to be built in an southeast Iowa City neighborhood were discussed Tuesday by the Iowa City City Council.

The rezoning plan, supported by City Development Director Karin Franklin and her department, would change the area marked by Summit, Washington and Governor streets and Muscatine Avenue, to an RCN-12 zone.

Changing to an RCN-12 zone would not allow any apartment complexes or cooperative housing to be built or added on to. Another option is to change the entire area to an RS-8 zone, which would be similar to the RCN-12 but would not allow apartments or co-ops to be rebuilt if an existing one is destroyed. The council is considering the rezoning because residents of the historic area want their neighborhood's character to be preserved.

Neither zoning classifications would allow owners to expand their property, but they would allow property to be remodeled.

Kaveh Mostafari, an owner of an apartment complex that would be affected, said he was strictly against rezoning because of the loss of his investment.

"An RS-8 ordinance would force us to put only three people in a four-bedroom apartment," he said. "It would leave us close to bankruptcy."

Iowa City resident Jack Tank, also a property owner in the affected area, said that his best recommendation would be for a RCN-12 zone.

"I want to maintain and enhance my property," he said. "I cannot do that with RS-8."

Ted Cizadlo disagreed with the property owners, saying he was strongly in-favor of a RS-8 zone to stop the spread of multi-family dwellings in the area.

"I think we need to make a strong statement to stabilize the neighborhood as it is," he said.

The council will further discuss the plans at its Oct. 17 meeting after councilors hear additional public discussion.

Before the meeting, several Iowa City residents crowded into the Council Chambers to express their support for a smoke-free restaurant ordinance.

After marching from the UI Pentacrest to the council meeting, local youth and members of Clean Air for Everyone expressed their support for the council's decision to consider a no-smoking ordinance governing the city's restaurants.

The council has told the clean-air group that it will pursue an ordinance, but it has delayed considering the issue in order to focus on underage and binge drinking in local bars.

Scientists identify Arctic pollutants

■ A waste incinerator in Ames is named as a contributor to ozone depletion.

By Matt Crenson
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For the first time, scientists say they have pinpointed many of the industrial pollutants responsible for the dioxin that is ending up in the Arctic.

To perform the study, scientists at New York City's Queens University modified a computer program originally designed to track fallout in the event of a nuclear accident.

They found that 35 municipal waste incinerators, cement kilns and steel plants in the eastern and central United States account for one-third of the dioxin reaching Nunavut Territory in the Canadian Arctic.

For example, during the one-year study, a single municipal waste incinerator in Harrisburg, Pa., accounted for nearly 5 percent of the dioxin reaching Broughton Island, just north of the Arctic Circle on Baffin Bay.

Another waste incinerator in Ames contributed about 5 percent of the dioxin reaching Chesterfield Inlet on Canada's Hudson Bay, 2,000 miles away.

"I think the study demonstrates that we should revise our concept of neighbors," said Greg Block, the director of the North American Commission for Environmental Cooperation. The organization funded the study.

Dioxin is of particular concern in the Arctic because it is an extremely long-lived pollutant that tends to build up in the fat of animals and people. Native people in the Arctic consume a diet high in fish and sea mammals, so on average, their bodies carry about twice as much dioxin as a person living in southern Canada or the United States.

Dioxin has been shown to cause cancer, brain damage and reproductive abnormalities in animals, but the degree of its threat to humans remains unclear.

"We are increasingly worried about this situation," said Sheila Watt-Cloutier, the Canadian president of the Inuit Circumpolar Conference. "The environment is actually our supermarket."

The computer program, developed by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, used in the study simulates the weather across North America on an hour-by-hour basis.

The Fellowship offers myriad career opportunities; in fact, a Pulliam Fellow from our first class of 1974, Barbara Henry, now serves as president and publisher of The Indianapolis Star. Moreover, a new graduate of our year 2000 class has just been hired as a full-time staff reporter at The Indianapolis Star.

Now entering its 28th year, the 2001 Pulliam Journalism Fellowship helps build a bridge from the classroom to the newsroom. Fellows are assigned to The Indianapolis Star or The Arizona Republic in Phoenix for 10 weeks each summer as staff reporters. We award 20 fellowships annually. The stipend is $5,775.

Traditionally, our fellowships have been open only to graduating college seniors. In 2001, we will be expanding eligibility to include college sophomores and juniors as well as seniors pursuing a career in newspaper journalism. We will be accepting applications for our Summer 2001 program in September 2000.

A virus that helps fight cystic fibrosis.

Microscopic worms that prevent Crohn's Disease. Genetically altered cells that prevent blindness.

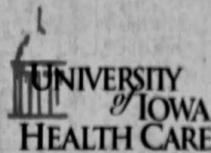

Throughout University of Iowa Health Care, some of the most remarkable discoveries are being made in the tiniest of places—human genes and cells. And they are making a big difference in the lives of people all over Iowa.

Looking in small places leads to big discoveries.
What Next?

The recent discovery of the maspin gene, for example, may one day explain why and how breast cancer cells like Ruth Scharnan's invade and multiply. Imagine if this gene helps us to develop less invasive treatments than the surgery and radiation Ruth needed to eradicate her cancer.

Researchers at the UI College of Medicine are working closely with clinicians at the NCI-designated Holden Cancer Center at The University of Iowa and throughout UI Hospitals and Clinics. This "bench to bedside" approach brings the benefits of the latest research to patients in the form of new and continually better treatments.

Gore, Bush duel in first debate

tal. Over and over, he accused Gore of "fuzzy math."

Gore and Bush met for the first of three presidential debates over the next two weeks, each man seeking advantage in a race so close that poll after poll shows them within a point or two of one another. Their vice presidential running mates, Democrat Joseph Lieberman and Republican Dick Cheney, will debate Thursday in Kentucky.

Jim Lehrer of PBS was moderator, operating under strict rules negotiated in advance by the Gore and Bush camps. It was, he said at the outset, the first of three 90-minute debates between the two major party rivals — a format that excluded Ralph Nader and Pat Buchanan, running as minor party candidates.

Outside the hall, dozens of protesters knocked over police barricades and blocked a road leading to the debate hall to protest the exclusion of Buchanan and Nader, who were turned away at the door.

Inside the hall, the audience heeded Lehrer's admonishment to remain silent.

In a reprise of his acceptance speech at this summer's Democratic National Convention, Gore said it was important to stand up to special interests, pharmaceutical companies among them. "Big drug companies support Gov. Bush's prescription-drug proposal," he said. "They oppose mine."

Bush made a sour face when he heard that, and in his next breath offered a swift rebuttal.

"I've been standing up to Big Hollywood and Big Trial Lawyers," he shot back, mentioning two groups that have lavished campaign donations on Gore and Democrats.

Stepping onto the podium a few minutes before the debate began, the vice president blew a kiss in the direction of his wife, Tipper, a reminder of the embrace they shared on stage at the convention six weeks ago. Gore and Bush shook hands twice, once before debating and then afterward.

Each man came equipped with a refrain.

For Bush, it was the accusation that Gore was practicing "fuzzy math" with his attacks, sometimes rendered as "fuzzy Washington math."

For Gore, it was a loud, audible sigh, meant to convey profound skepticism over Bush's claims about the economy, prescription drugs and other issues.

The criticism grew sharper in the debate's closing moments, when Bush criticized Gore over the fund-raising scandals of the Clinton era. He mentioned Gore's controversial visit to a Buddhist temple, at which robed priests later made donations, and said Gore needed to take responsibility for what went on in the White House.

"I believe they've moved that sign, 'The Buck Stops Here,' from the Oval Office desk to the Lincoln Bedroom, and that's not right," Bush said.

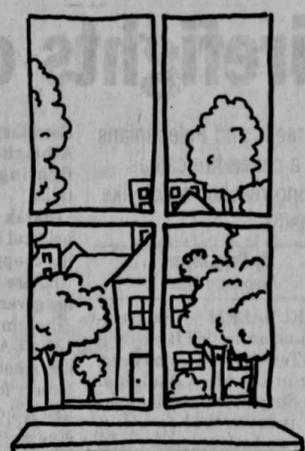

"You may want to focus on scandals. I want to focus on results," Gore countered, maneuvering to turn the spotlight away from questions of his own fund-raising activities.

But when the vice president challenged Bush to support campaign-finance legislation, the Texas governor said bluntly: "This man has no credibility on the issue."

The two men argued at length over prescription drugs for Medicare recipients, a key issue, particularly in the key battleground states of the Midwest. Bush blamed Washington for failing to pass legislation, and touted his own plan to have states offer benefits. "You've had your chance, Mr. Vice President," the governor said.

But Gore, who favors a prescription-drug benefit available to all Medicare recipients, said that under Bush's plan only low-income seniors would receive immediate help. Everyone else would have to wait up to four years, he said. In addition, he added, seniors could be forced into HMOs to get a prescription-drug benefit.

"I cannot let this go by, the old-style Washington politics, trying to scare you with phony numbers," Bush swiftly replied. He accused Gore of "Medi-scare."

losing power and votes, said UI sophomore Alex Pickett, a UI Students Against Sweatshops member and Nader supporter.

"We're being silenced and controlled by what's in your wallet, the dollar," he said about corporations sponsoring the presidential debate.

Because corporations are sponsoring the presidential debates, any party should be allowed to participate if the candidate proves there is adequate public support, said Christy Ann Welty, the Johnson County chairwoman for the Libertarian Party. Libertarian Party presidential candidate Harry Browne has proven that, she said.

"I think what's at the root of this is that they are afraid to have Harry Browne enter the debates because people would realize how close Gore and Bush are on the issues," Welty said.

The debates allow the media, scholars and public to analyze which candidate looks better, not address what issues are at stake, said UI graduate student Mark Dowdy, a member of Students for Nader.

"They won't be talking about the issues. They will be asking, 'Did Bush muck up the words and enunciate, or did Gore look wooden,'" he said.

Although speakers made good arguments for Nader at the rally, UI senior Ben Greenbowe said, he will vote for one of the two major political party candidates because it is a close election.

'Ladies' Night' promotion a no-go at Serendipity

SERENDIPITY

"Anything that is going to divide people in any way is bad," said Pittman. "If a bar was doing a promotion that said all Muslims can drink free, or if they weren't allowing Jewish people in the door, then you can see just how serious these issues could get."

Richards said he was unaware of any problems with the law when he decided on the promotion.

"Before I did anything, I'd gone to the city clerk's office to make sure there wouldn't be any problems with having a special like this," he said. "It seemed that I'd been given a go-ahead on it, but I don't blame the clerk because they can't be expected to know everything on this issue."

Sondrae Fort, a licensing specialist at the city clerk's office who advised Richards, was unaware that "Ladies' Night" specials are against the law.

"That surprises me that it is illegal," Fort said. "It's not necessarily our responsibility to know whether or not these things are illegal. We check up on them if a certain number of people call us requesting to know about them."

Richards is not the first owner in Iowa City to have this problem. Fatah Teganemt, the owner of Vito's, 118 E. College St., tried to promote a "Ladies' Night" a few years ago.

"We were also stopped because of the ordinance when we tried a 'Ladies' Night,'" Teganemt said. "I'd never heard of any law against it, and we got a letter from the (City Human Rights Commission) telling us not to do it again. I suppose it's making sure there's equality between men and women."

Ingrid Madsen, the manager of the Q Bar, 211 Iowa Ave., said she was disturbed when she heard an Iowa City night spot may be offering a "Ladies' Night" drink special.

"We'd never have a 'Ladies' Night' here because it's a very valid law not to. Should women drink free just because they're women? The whole thing is absurd to me," she said.

Not all women feel that the drink special would be discriminatory.

"I don't think it's discrimination at all," UI student Andrea Meyer said. "I actually think it'd be cool. If I heard about someplace having a 'Ladies' Night,' I'd definitely go."

Richards said he feels that the issue has been blown out of proportion.

"While I do appreciate people having altruistic motives, I just think they could be better applied to more important issues than this," he said. "I think that the whole 'politically correct' movement in this country has actually put up more divisions than it's healed. Besides, this is a far cry from some of the promotions that other bars do, such as wet T-shirt contests or something worse."

Firefights continue in West Bank

■ Israelis and Palestinians defy a cease-fire call as fighting reaches a war-like intensity.

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Palestinian gunmen battled Israeli soldiers Tuesday at isolated army posts in the West Bank and Gaza Strip that have degenerated into virtual free-fire zones, as both sides defied a cease-fire call on the eve of a U.S. attempt to salvage peace-making.

Tuesday's death toll of five was the lowest since the fighting began last week. In addition, 206 people were injured, according to the Palestinians. Overall, 56 people have died, and at least 1,300 have been wounded, the vast majority Palestinian.

"The results have been very painful," Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak said, adding that he had called on Israel's security forces "to make a supreme effort to prevent further casualties."

Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat head to Paris on today in hopes that

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright can help end the fighting and revive peace talks.

Barak also was battling for political survival at home, trying to appease Arab legislators who are threatening to topple his government over the harsh crackdown on rioters in Israel's Arab towns. The internal rebellion, the worst since Israel's founding 52 years ago, has blocked highways and closed schools, paralyzing large parts of northern Israel.

With the Israelis blasting away with heavy weapons, such as rockets launched from helicopters, and with the Palestinians routinely firing automatic rifles, the intensity of the fighting sometimes resembles a war. It has surpassed levels seen during the 1987-93 Palestinian uprising and three days of firefights in 1996.

"I have been dealing with such riots since 1987 and ... there have never (been) anything on this level — not when it comes to clashes and certainly not when it comes to the use of weapons," said Yisrael Yitzhak, the commander of Israel's paramilitary border police in the West Bank.

Adel Hana/Associated Press

A Palestinian shouts anti-Israeli slogans as Palestinian police transport the coffin of 26-year-old Palestinian police officer Hatem Al-Najar in Khan Yunis City, in southern Gaza Strip, Tuesday.

The heaviest clashes Tuesday were again in the chaotic West Bank and Gaza Strip, where a hastily arranged cease-fire quickly unraveled at a pair of chronic trouble spots.

Palestinian television broadcast an appeal in Hebrew to Israeli soldiers not to open fire, and a senior Palestinian official said an international inquiry into Israel's actions would be a condition of reviving the peace talks.

"We think that the Israeli crimes committed against our people attacked the heart of the peace process," said Nabil Abourdeneh, a top aide to Arafat. But Barak's office said he "totally rejected the call for an international investigation."

Thousands still stranded in Asian floods

■ In Bangladesh, air force helicopters have joined the rescue efforts.

By Farid Hossain
Associated Press

CALCUTTA, India — Air force helicopters in Bangladesh rushed Tuesday to flood-ravaged villages, trying to lift to safety marooned villagers clinging to trees.

In signs of fraying patience, residents in one isolated village in Bangladesh attacked the car of an administrator because of delays in providing relief, a newspaper said.

Other villagers attacked four policemen who tried to prevent them from cutting a hole in a dike to divert the waters away from their village.

Since Sept. 18, floods have killed more than 1,000, swept away millions of homes, and left 20 million people marooned or homeless in India and neighboring Bangladesh. The death toll in Bangladesh has climbed past 50.

Air force helicopters in Bangladesh joined army and navy boats to deliver relief goods and rescue marooned villagers.

Thousands of people are stuck on the rooftops of their submerged houses or clinging to trees, waiting to be evacuated to safer areas, officials said.

Nearly 400,000 people have taken shelter in emergency relief camps set up on mud embankments or highways, they said.

In Satkhira town, thousands of residents on Monday piled sand bags to prevent floodwaters from gushing through cracks that developed along a 3-mile mud embankment, the Bengali-language daily Janakantha reported.

Some people attacked the car of a district administrator near Satkhira town for delay in providing relief and failing to protect them from looters, the newspaper said.

In Calcutta, India, the sky remained overcast Tuesday, causing fears that rains may wash out Durga Puja celebrations, the biggest Hindu festival in eastern India.

The fresh rains blocked efforts by relief workers to reach many remote villages that have been inaccessible for the last two weeks. In some areas, the rain washed out the relief distribution networks.

"The rains are a real setback for relief and rescue efforts," Krishnendu Roy, a relief worker, said.

As flood waters receded from some of the hardest-hit areas, relief workers found more bodies.

"The death toll is rising, and the devastation is of enormous magnitude," West Bengal state's chief minister, Jyoti Basu, said in an appeal for help. The appeal appeared in Calcutta newspapers.

Vietnam's most severe flooding in decades has spread to Ho Chi Minh City, the country's commercial hub as the nationwide death toll rose to 241, said Do Ngoc Thien, the deputy director of the Flood and Storm Control Department.

In Binh Chanh and Hoc Mon districts, suburbs of Ho Chi Minh City, some families have been moved to higher ground, and hundreds of acres of rice paddy have been inundated, he said.

The situation in the city itself is not serious, said Thien.

Meanwhile, many people hit by the floods in Bangladesh were reluctant to return to their homes, saying they have lost everything.

"The flood has destroyed my crops, my cattle and my home. I have nothing to go back to," said Monjur Islam, a farmer at a relief camp.

Milosevic cracks down on strikers

■ As the Yugoslav strikes and protests spread, the president orders arrest of opposition leaders.

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Escalating the Yugoslav crisis, President Slobodan Milosevic's government Tuesday ordered the arrest of leaders of one of the strikes launched to drive him from power.

The announcement by the Belgrade prosecutor followed a government statement warning of "special measures" against those responsible for the wave of strikes and blockades called to force Milosevic to accept defeat in Sept. 24 elections.

The arrest order raised fears that Milosevic may resort to the army and police to hold on to power, despite calls at home and abroad for him to step down in favor of challenger Vojislav Kostunica.

The opposition showed no signs of backing down; it has called on Yugoslavs to come to Belgrade Thursday for a final push to drive Milosevic from power.

On Tuesday, strikes spread to a key copper mine, and 50,000 demonstrators took to the streets in Yugoslavia's two largest cities — 20,000 in Belgrade and 30,000 in Novi Sad — while barricades were up around the central town of Cacak.

In the capital, an estimated 20,000 people chanting "the police are with us" marched toward Milosevic's residence. Hundreds of riot police turned them away without incident.

Milosevic acknowledges that Kostunica won more votes in the five-candidate contest, but the president insists that his opponent fell short of the required majority and called a runoff for Oct. 8. Milosevic's opponents claim Kostunica won the election outright and refuse to participate in the runoff, claiming the Yugoslav president would only cheat again.

In a statement late Tuesday, the Belgrade prosecutor's office ordered the arrest of 13 alleged organizers of the strike at the Kolubara mine, which provides coal to a major electric power station.

The 13 include Nebojsa Covic, a former pro-Milosevic mayor of Belgrade who joined the opposition after disputed 1996 local elections.

In the televised statement, the government warned that it would not tolerate "violent behavior" that disrupts vital institutions and threatens the lives of citizens.

"Special measures will be taken against the organizers of these criminal activities," the government said, clearly threatening opposition leaders with arrest. "These measures also apply to media that are financed from abroad and are breeding lies, untruths and inciting bloodshed."

Despite the warning, the opposition remained defiant.

"The government is branding us saboteurs and enemies, so why don't they put us on trial?" Kostunica told 40,000 cheering supporters Tuesday in Kragujevac. "Let them dare. Milosevic is the biggest creator of chaos in Serbia."

Late Monday, Milosevic dispatched the army's chief of staff, Gen. Nebojsa Pavkovic, to the Kolubara mine to demand that the strikers return to work. It marked the first time Milosevic has used the military in any role during the current crisis.

There were other signs the government was preparing to get tough.

But the miners told him early Tuesday they would remain on strike until Milosevic accepts defeat. The government struck back by introducing four-hour power cuts to opposition-controlled cities, blaming the strikers for a shortage of coal.

New Jersey voters might have the right idea ...

Bring Megan's Law to the Web

On Nov. 7, New Jersey voters will mark their ballots in favor of or against a constitutional amendment extending Megan's Law to the Internet. If the vote passes, New Jersey's Constitution will be amended to allow the state to put its registry of local sexual predators and offenders on the Internet. If other states know what their best interest entails, they ought to follow suit.

Ever since Megan's Law originally took effect in 1994, bureaucratic powers have quietly modified its regulation, complicating the notification process. What began as a simple ambition of justice and precaution has grown unreliable as criminals and predators whom the government deems to be "low" or "moderate" threats now often retain anonymity.

As a result, anxiety once again infects the collective peace of mind in the birthplace of Megan's Law, reversing its original intent. Internet registries combat concern in allowing community members to actively ease their apprehension by searching neighborhoods for predators.

The notion of Internet access to directories of sexual criminals is not a new one. Seven other states judiciously offer the service on comprehensive Web sites. For these states, Internet users can find a listing of all types of sexual predators, their risk classification, address and, often, their photograph.

Regrettably, 43 states — including Iowa — have yet to provide this public service. Until now, no state has had to alter its Constitution in order to make this information readily available to the public. This impediment compels other states to resist such change.

A favorable election by New Jersey voters will embed the importance of Megan's Law and the right of people to assess the safety of their community into society. Legislators must eradicate all obstacles that obstruct public-security precautions. Rigid state Constitutions ignore the changing needs of society and impede rational solutions to preventable problems.

With the passing of this amendment, other states, perhaps even Iowa, may finally find the confidence to further conform to the implementation of public awareness.

Protests against the IMF and WTO continue ...

Do protesters understand capitalism?

The rioters in Prague and their more civilized counterparts who protested here last week obviously do not understand capitalism. Capitalism is usually associated with laissez-faire free trade.

However, these protests opposed capitalism as embodied in the IMF, WTO and World Bank. While these organizations deal with trade, they represent capitalism about as well as Stalinist Russia represented socialism.

Under the WTO, some countries have accepted marginal movements toward liberalized trade. However, those movements are dwarfed by the anti-libertarian controls that trade organizations threaten to impose.

The WTO uses sanctions, a non-liberal trade restriction, to enforce its agreements. Furthermore, it operates on a mercantilist view of the world in which countries try to maximize exports and minimize imports. This is not market capitalism. The worst part of the WTO is that it could serve as a platform for global trade restrictions that impose socialist controls upon the more liberalized economies of the world.

The anti-capitalist actions of the IMF and World Bank are worse. These organizations use tax dollars to prop up foreign currencies and economies. This type of international welfare creates dependency for the recipient countries.

Usually, the dependency results in less trade liberalization and more poverty. The crisis that recently plagued Southeast Asia was the most tragic example. Ethnic violence erupted, and poverty rose throughout the region. If the IMF had not attempted to control the Thai bhat and the Indonesian rupiah, this tragedy would not have happened.

If this country were serious about global capitalism and free trade, we would not use trade reciprocity and global intervention as our tools. Sometimes we impose embargoes on countries to harm them economically. It is odd to think that the same controls on ourselves in the form of quotas and tariffs could somehow help us.

Those controls help neither us nor our trading partners. Imagine if your household imposed an embargo on the grocery store (because of a trade deficit) or your employer (for "forcing" you to work). Such an arrangement would harm you and the other party.

The United States does the same thing with tariffs and quotas. Tariffs and quotas are less dramatic and on a different scale, but the effect is the same. That is why the United States should unilaterally drop all trade barriers. That would be real capitalism. That would be a real solution for global free trade. We would lead the world by our example. The prosperity that would follow trade liberalization here would compel other countries to liberalize without imposing WTO-type interventionism.

Of course, in such a circumstance, the protesters here and in Prague would be even more upset. But, at least their target would be real capitalism.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Gore's education record is superior

One of Christian Kurasek's main complaints in "Letter overstated Gore's record" (DI, Sept. 29) was that Mayrose Wegman did not cite sources in her letter to the editor ("Gore is the man for the job — and his record backs him up," DI, Sept. 21), yet he doesn't cite a single source in his! If you really want the facts on the candidate's education records, here is a brief sample (sources included):

Christian claims that education is a priority for Bush, yet in 1998, Bush himself said "Higher education is not my priority" (San Antonio Express-News, March 22, 1998). The facts support this assertion. In 1999, Texas ranked 48th in the nation in percentage of high school students who enroll in and graduate from college (Fort Worth Star-Telegram, June 2, 1999). Texas also ranked 37th in the nation in grant dollars according to a 1997-98 study by the National Association of State Student Grant Aid Programs.

Bush's lack of commitment to education also shows in his record on K-12 education. Time and again, he tries to take credit for education policies put in place by his predecessors in the office of governor and state Legislature. This is also what Christian does in his letter.

Many of Texas' slight improvements have been attributed to its 22-student class size limit, instituted before Bush came into the office; in fact, Bush has tried to undo this limit as governor.

What Christian calls "squandered opportunities" in the Clinton/Gore administration, we call major improvements. For example, in 1997, Clinton-Gore began the Hope scholarship tax credit, which offers a $1,500 tax credit toward the first two years of college

(New York Times, Aug. 4, 1997). I saw no sources for Christian's claims about Gore's record on Pell grants, either. The truth is that 1997 was the largest one-year increase in Pell grants in two decades, helping more than 4 million lower- and middle-income students go to college (Associated Press, Nov. 13, 1997).

As vice president, Gore has also shown a commitment to K-12 education including adding 200,000 children to Head Start, a program that Republican vice presidential candidate Dick Cheney was one of only four senators to vote against. While I could go on forever, I won't — but please look at Gore's Web site, www.AIGore.com, for more information on his education record and agenda.

On a final note, it's interesting that the large membership claims of Students for Bush actually includes staff and faculty. Students for Gore is

Quoteworthy

ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

BY SETH BRIGHT

The war against movie mediocrity

It's not too often that Bruce Willis movies become the subjects of congressional hearings. But when a Senate committee convened to discuss the marketing of violent films last week, that's exactly what happened.

In response to pressure from Al Gore, Joe Lieberman and an assortment of Congress members, the Motion Picture Association of America agreed to scale back its marketing of violent films to young viewers. Seemingly, a victory was scored for those who want Hollywood to clean up its act.

Throughout all of this, however, politicians neglected to focus on another dark aspect of the entertainment industry — one that threatens the cultural fabric of our nation and, indeed, the world. Yes, as innocent children flock to the movies, the film industry continues to shower the world's theaters with flicks that are simply terrible.

Never mind the violence and sexual content. For every gorefest and sex romp that hits the big screen, there's a Mr. Nanny or Air Bud II to go along with it. Devoid of any redeeming value, such films pose a major threat to all our futures.

Quite simply, dumb movies make for dumb people. Esteemed psychologists recently established the Steve Guttenberg Scale, which holds that for every minute spent viewing a film such as Police Academy 7, Son In Law or either of the Weekend at Bernie's installments, brain cells are killed off at a proportional rate.

The exact amount of brain activity lost hinges on the Pauly Shore Quotient (the number of tired catchphrases plus the number of fart jokes, multiplied by the number of household pets cast in leading roles). This varies from movie to movie, but an alarming number of films register PSQs that are dangerously high for people of average intelligence.

Overall, the insidious effects of these movies are far greater than one would expect. Yet, Americans of all ages continue to put themselves at risk without even knowing it. This is mainly because movie studios advertise these films in a manner that is known to lead millions of rationally thinking human beings (including young children) to view them.

action be taken to stop the spread of such films.

Congressional committees must look into this matter thoroughly and decide on a course of action. Gore and Lieberman, meanwhile, would do well to make this a top priority on the campaign trail. One can only dream of the day when our next president can confidently announce, "The era of bad movies is over."

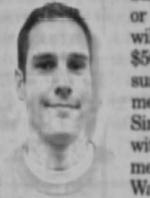

It can happen. Without delay, the federal government must enact tough regulations to guard against further assaults on movie viewers. To begin with, any studio that knowingly releases a film with Sinbad, Steven Seagal or Whoopi Goldberg will be subject to a $500,000 fine and the suspension of its commercial license. Similarly, any movie with direct ties to any member of the Wayans family will be forced to carry a warning label for vulnerable viewers.

In addition, limits must be placed upon the number of movie characters that can be transformed into lovable snow men and the amount of floppy-haired children in supporting roles. Films in which any animal is engaged in a professional sport will be strictly banned. Dennis Rodman, Jean-Claude Van Damme and Sylvester Stallone will also be prohibited from appearing in any studio releases.

The solutions, as you can see, are fairly simple. At this point, it is merely a matter of mobilization. Write your congressman and demand that action be taken in Washington to bring decency back to America's movies. With everybody's help, it can be made certain that there will be no Weekend at Bernie's III.

Atlas shrugs off the ordinary fare

The new downtown restaurant specializes in Mediterranean and Caribbean cuisine.

By Jennifer Aistrop
The Daily Iowan

If Pier One Imports and the Java House were to merge, the result would look something like the Atlas World Grill, Iowa City's new "world cuisine" restaurant.

Located at 127 Iowa Ave., Atlas' bright blue exterior and stellar lighting draw a passerby's attention. Inside, one is warmly greeted and taken past the bar to a cozy seating area.

The selection of food available is different from anything else Iowa City has to offer.

"We specialize in world food such as Mediterranean, Caribbean and Asian cuisine," said Jack Piper, who co-owns the store with fellow UI alum James Adrian.

Atlas specializes in little details that can give a typical American meal a unique cultural flair. Daily dinner specials are available with choices such as beef tenderloin with Worcestershire sauce and grilled portabella mushrooms or an organic salad with seven types of tomatoes. The restaurant also prepares a variety of desserts for those with a sweet tooth.

A specialty of the restaurant - chocolate cake with liquid chocolate middle, topped with raspberry sauce and ice cream - is made fresh for the customer. It is brought out warm from the oven and with such perfect presentation that it at first seems a sin to cut into it and release its river of chocolate sauce.

Atlas employees are extremely proud of the extensive training the bartenders have undergone and the unique drinks they are able to produce. Specialties include the "mojito," a Cuban drink, and the "sexy alligator," a tri-colored drink that has become one of the bar's most requested beverages.

Meals at Atlas typically run about $8. The food is well-portioned, with plenty left to take home.

Cafe society comes to downtown Iowa City

One Twenty-Six strives for that European feel.

By Jennifer Aistrop
The Daily Iowan

One Twenty-Six, located at 126 E. Washington St., could easily have been moved from the streets of Europe and transported to Iowa City.

The building is barely recognizable as the former home of Great Midwestern Ice Cream Co. Its orange exterior and large open windows under an orange-and-brown awning give One Twenty-Six a distinctive look.

Since its opening on Aug. 28, One Twenty-Six has attracted many visitors who want to check out the building for themselves. A chance for a window seat is much greater than one would expect (there are two tables in front of the windows), but be prepared for pedestrians to stop and chat as you sip your coffee. Although it's not the perfect place for newspaper reading (thanks to a nice gust of wind), the structure of the restaurant allows outside sounds to fill the room and lets a comforting breeze cool one down after eating a bowl of spicy chili.

The restaurant has an ever-changing menu of sandwiches, wraps and soups that offers a selection for any taste. Chef Geoff Donovan prepares light-yeet-flavorful plates, and the restaurant offers a wall-size rack of wine choices to complement the entrees. In fact, there are more wines available than meal options.

One Twenty-Six features live music Friday and Saturday nights after 10 p.m. Upcoming acts include Villalobos, which will perform this coming weekend in the upper level of the restaurant.

Owner Derek Perez already has plans for additions. He is interested in carrying out the original concept for the building, which would include open doors much like the open windows already present. Perez also plans to include a Sunday brunch, which he will test this week.

"We're trying to get a European feel with an outdoor look," he said.

He has achieved his goal. One Twenty-Six could easily pass for an authentic European cafe, complete with casual conversation and a diverse group of people.

The staff is eager to serve, and meals are brought out promptly. The food comes in large portions; an average meal is priced at around $7.

Lennon's killer denied parole

■ The New York state parole board says Mark David Chapman is still a threat.

By Carolyn Thompson
Associated Press

ATTICA, N.Y. — State parole officials rejected a bid for freedom Tuesday for ex-Beatle John Lennon's killer, saying Mark David Chapman hadn't lost his need for publicity, a drive that fueled his "most vicious and violent act."

It was Chapman's first attempt for parole stemming from the December 1980 shooting death. Chapman won't be eligible for parole for two more years.

Chapman was interviewed for 50 minutes Tuesday morning at a closed hearing at the maximum-security Attica state prison by three parole board members, said Tom Grant, a spokesman for the state Division of Parole.

About four hours later, Chapman was given the board's one-page determination beginning: "Parole is denied."

The board called Chapman's killing of Lennon "calculated and unprovoked." In addition to being one of the most famous musicians in the world, Lennon was also a "husband and a father of two young children," the board said.

"Your most vicious and violent act was apparently fueled by your need to be acknowledged," the board said. "During your parole hearing, this panel noted your continued interest in maintaining your notoriety."

In a recent interview, Chapman said he believed that Lennon would have approved of his release.

But the board concluded that releasing Chapman at this time would "deprecate the seriousness of the crime and serve to undermine respect for the law."

The parole board did note that Chapman has an "exemplary disciplinary record" while in prison. But it added that because he has served his time in special protective housing, "you have been unable to avail yourself of anti-violence and/or anti-aggression programming."

Chapman, 45, is serving 20 years to life in Attica. He pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in June 1981 for fatally shooting Lennon as the rock star and his wife, Yoko Ono, were entering their Manhattan apartment following a recording session.

Federal Reserve leaves interest rates alone

■ The central bank declines to change the rates for the third-straight time.

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve policy-makers decided Tuesday for a third-straight time to leave interest rates unchanged, but they signaled that further rate increases are possible because of rising energy prices.

The central bank said soaring crude oil costs have had only a "limited effect" on underlying price pressures so far, but it added that higher energy costs posed the risk of "raising inflation expectations" down the road.

That revelation disappointed Wall Street, which had hoped the central bank would sound a definite all-clear as far as future rate increases were concerned.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which had been up more than 140 points before the Fed's midafternoon announcement, shed those gains as traders focused on the new inflation worries. The Dow finished the day up just 19.61 at 10,719.74.

"The markets shouldn't have been surprised," said Allen Sinai, the chief global economist at Decision Economics in New York. "For a central bank to declare victory on inflation before these energy questions get settled would have been a big mistake."

The decision to leave rates alone followed similar stand-pat decisions at the Aug. 22 and June 28 meetings of the central bank's Federal Open Market Committee, composed of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and colleagues who meet eight times a year to set interest rates.

The last rate change occurred on May 16, when the Fed boosted its federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other, a half-point to 6.5 percent.

In a brief statement explaining Tuesday's decision, the Fed said the demand for goods and services had moderated to a pace closer to the economy's potential to produce, helped by continued strong advances in the productivity of American workers.

But the Fed cautioned that labor markets remain exceptionally tight. For the first time, the central bank said an increase in energy prices "poses a risk of raising inflation expectations."

Going forward, the Fed said it viewed the balance of risks as weighted toward higher inflation. Wall Street had hoped the Fed would switch to a neutral stance at this meeting, indicating a view that future risks were equally balanced between the threat of inflation and the threat of weaker growth.

The inclusion of rising energy prices as an inflation threat, analysts said, was meant to put markets on notice that future interest rate increases remain a distinct possibility.

"Not only is inflation still a concern, but oil prices have been added to (tight) labor markets as a threat," said Joel Naroff of Naroff Economic Advisers. "We will have to see not only growth slow and labor market pressures ease, but also oil prices fall before we can feel confident that the Fed is done."

NHL season kicks off

Two familiar foes meet as Dallas and Colorado begin the season tonight.

By Ira Podell
 Associated Press

The first puck of the NHL season drops in Dallas — the same place last season came to a sudden end.

Less than four months after New Jersey's Jason Arnott beat Dallas goalie Ed Belfour in double overtime to win the Stanley Cup, Reunion Arena welcomes the Colorado Avalanche, the team the Stars beat to advance to the finals the last two seasons.

"There is a real respect level between the teams," Dallas coach Ken Hitchcock said Tuesday. "There is a really intense individual competition."

The Stars and Avalanche, who battled through consecutive seven-game Western Conference finals, will play the NHL opener tonight — the only game on the schedule.

"Their team is the best so far out of the gate," Hitchcock said of the Avalanche. "They're already in mid-season form."

Wednesday's opener starts a season in which Minnesota and Columbus join the league and Mark Messier comes back to the New York Rangers.

The NHL resumes a regular schedule on Thursday, with Ottawa at Boston, Chicago at Buffalo, Vancouver at Philadelphia, Detroit at Calgary and St. Louis at Phoenix. All 30 teams, including expansion clubs Columbus and Minnesota, will play by Iowa hopes to avenge its 49-3 loss to Michigan State Saturday at Kinnick.

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz remembers last year's contest with Michigan State vividly. The Spartans scored touchdowns in their first five possessions on the way to a 35-0 halftime lead and a 49-3 thumping of the Hawks in East Lansing, Iowa's worst loss of the 1999 season.

"Of all the games we played last year, that's one ball game we never got into in any phase," Ferentz said in Tuesday's press conference. "They beat in every phase of the ball game, and it wasn't ever competitive from the get-go."

On Saturday, Michigan State will come to Kinnick Stadium fresh off a 37-17 defeat at the hands of Northwestern, the surprising Big Ten co-leaders. However, Ferentz said, he doesn't expect the Spartans to suffer from the same offensive woes, despite the questions surrounding their starting quarterback.

"Probably the biggest question for them right now would be the quarterback situation," he said. "Whoever is in there I would think would play well, and we've got to expect that. Probably the big key in the game for them last week was third down. They really had a poor day on third down, offensively."

Iowa, on the other hand, will start quarterback Jon Beutjer for the second-straight week. Other than his slow start, which, Ferentz said, he expected to see in Beutjer's first college game, the coach was pleased with the plays the redshirt freshman made once he settled down. Ferentz noted that Beutjer gave Iowa a chance to win in the fourth quarter. But it was a chance the defense squandered. For the first time since the season's opener, Ferentz didn't answer any questions about the losing streak. Instead, the defense was the area of uncertainty after it surrendered 544 net yards to Indiana, most notably 440 on the ground.

He said part of the defense's problem is that it's going head-to-head with some of the premier football players in the country. Quarterbacks such as Eric Crouch and Antwaan Randle El are hard for any

Bowen finds niche in Denver

When training camp officially started for the Denver Nuggets on Tuesday, former Hawkeye standout Ryan Bowen began his second season in the NBA. Despite averaging only 11 minutes and 2.5 points per game in his rookie season, Bowen was widely accepted and praised for his play by Denver fans and players. DI reporter Nick Firchau talked with Bowen about his role and the fans in Denver, seeing movie stars in Los Angeles and guarding the likes of Ray Allen in the NBA.

DI: What has it been like playing in Denver now that you've been there for a full year?

RB: It's been unbelievable. Denver is such a great city, and I'm very glad to have the opportunity to play in the NBA. It's been a dream come true, and I'm so thankful for the chance to play here. And right now we're all practicing and getting ready, and we're very excited for the chance we have this season.

DI: Did the altitude affect you at all?

RB: No, not really. It took about two or three days to adjust to it. Now, we'll go on a long road trip and come back here feeling dog-tired because of it, but it gives us an advantage that other teams have to come in here and play.

DI: Do you like living in Colorado?

RB: I love it. My wife and I just bought a house in February in Littleton.

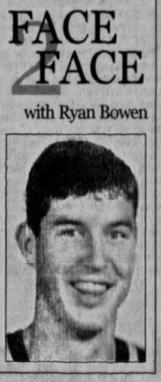

DI: You've developed a strong base of fan support in Denver. How does it feel having the fans supporting you and the local sportswriters praising your play?

RB: That's something that has been really neat, everything with the fans and all their support. It's really exciting to have everyone cheering for me when I get in the game — I think they've really enjoyed the hustle. They like watching me doing the hustle things, like diving on the court for the ball or whatever it takes. That's my thing. That's how I got to play at Iowa, and I hope that I can just keep it up and do the same things this season. But I really have appreciated the fans here.

DI: How is the game-time atmosphere different in the NBA from the collegiate level?

RB: It varies from place to place. Certain places have more energy and louder fans. But there's always a good feeling when I look down the court and I know I have to guard Kobe or Scottie Pippen. It's different from Iowa because there's no pep band or student section, but it's still very exciting. It's intense, but in a different way than at Iowa.

Hill triumphs on and off the court

Renee Hill earns a starting spot on Iowa's volleyball team as well as overcomes dyslexia.

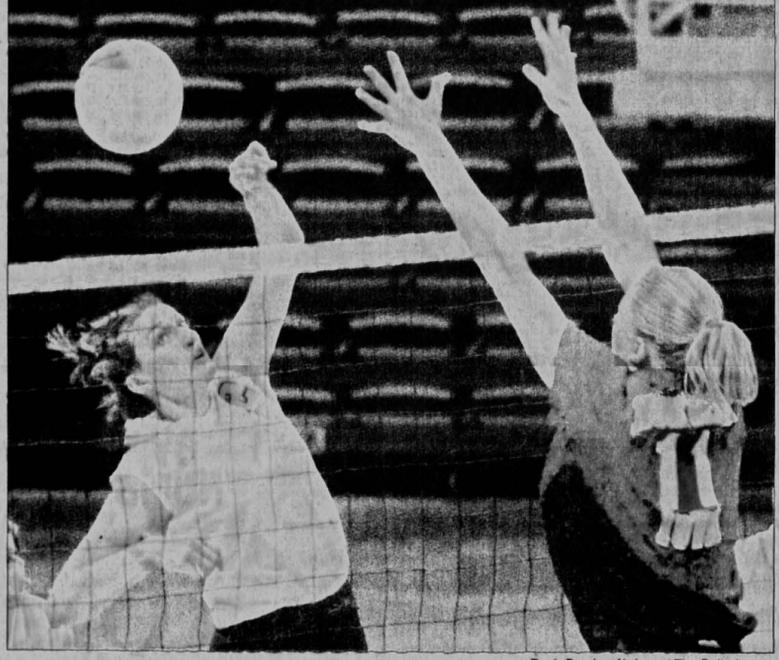

By Todd Brommelkamp
 The Daily Iowan

Renee Hill has faced some tough competition on the volleyball court during her freshman season, but her biggest challenge comes away from the game. The Spring, Texas, native has dyslexia.

Life is not easy for any athlete at the Division I level, but for the few with disabilities, it is even tougher. While teammates may have an easier time juggling the rigors of practice with academic responsibilities and their social lives, Hill sometimes has to take more time for school work. She has never known any different.

"You're a little kid, and you want to be outside having fun with all your friends," Hill said during an interview with a Houston-area television station last year. "Instead, you're inside the house trying to read — period."

Hill is not alone in her battle with the disorder. An estimated 10 million Americans suffer from dyslexia or some other form of reading disability. People from all walks of life cope with the disorder, and many famous historical figures, including Albert Einstein, were known dyslexics.

Renee Hill spikes the ball against Northern Iowa Sept 26. Hill has overcome adversity both on and off the court.

There are an estimated 229 students at the UI with dyslexia or some other form of learning disability, said Mary Richard, the coordinator of services for students with disabilities at the Office of Student Disability Services. Richard says the biggest problem with dyslexia is that doctors often use it as a "junk term" to label other disorders. The biggest problem most people face is admitting they have a disability and then seeking help, she said.

Hill has never hidden from her disability. Instead, she chooses to be open about it in the hope of helping others who may think of themselves as different because they have a disorder. She credits much of her strength to her faith in God and the strong support of her parents, Suzanne and Anthony, whom she calls on a regular basis.

It was her parents who raised her in a spiritual envi-

Cardinals rough up Maddux in wild Game 1

Maddux allows six runs early and St. Louis overcomes five wild pitches by Rick Ankiel.

By R.B. Fallstrom
 Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Tony La Russa won his Game 1 gamble, although not the way he had planned.

The St. Louis Cardinals scored six runs off Greg Maddux and Atlanta's shoddy defense in the first inning, then survived rookie Rick Ankiel's epic wildness for a 7-5 victory over the Braves in their NL playoff opener Tuesday.

Ankiel, 21, was a surprise starter. He was only 11-7 in the regular season, but his 3.50 ERA led the staff and he had a 7-2 record at Busch Stadium.

La Russa even shielded Ankiel from the media on Monday, sending 20-game winner Darryl Kile to the interview room so the rookie could escape before the manager announced his rotation.

Then the script fell apart. Ankiel looked like a kid three years removed from high school, which he is, becoming the first pitcher in 110 years to throw five wild pitches in one inning as the Braves scored four runs in the third.

St. Louis pitcher Dave Veres celebrates after getting Atlanta Brave Keith Lockhart to pop-up to end the game Tuesday.

"He threw some outstanding pitches, and he threw some funny ones that weren't so outstanding," La Russa said. "I mean, there's no doubt about it, he struggled."

But he didn't hesitate to say Ankiel will start again in Game 4 on Sunday.

"If we're going to win enough games, Mr. Ankiel is going to have to be there for us," La Russa said.

La Russa said Ankiel will do better after he and catcher Carlos Hernandez, who caught him for the first time, review game tapes. Ankiel wanted no part of that.

"I'm not even going to go back and look at it," Ankiel said. "Why look at something bad?"

With the help of two errors and a fly ball that dropped between Gold Glove center fielder Andruw Jones and left fielder Reggie Sanders for a hit, St. Louis got to Maddux in the first.

"A crazy inning where things kind of went haywire," Braves pitching coach Leo Mazzone said. "I guess that's the best way to describe it."

Maddux — who has thrown six wild pitches in his last four seasons — lasted four innings, giving up seven runs, five earned, and nine hits. But Maddux, who dropped to 10-11 in the postseason, didn't seem that unhappy about his outing or his stuff.

"It was good," Maddux said. "No better or worse than it's been the last couple of months."

Placido Polanco, who started ahead of slumping Fernando Tatis and went 3-for-4, hit a two-run single as the Cardinals tied a postseason record for runs in the opening inning. Jim Edmonds added a home run in the fourth.

Elkington fights through injuries to regain form

Kinfe' Moroti/Associated Press

Steve Elkington hits out of a fairway bunker on the 18th hole of the Buick Challenge on Sept. 28. Elkington is playing pain-free for the first time in five years.

■ Steve Elkington says golf should be "like falling out of bed."

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

He never thought golf should be painful, not with a swing as sweet as his.

Steve Elkington couldn't understand why he had to ice his hip after a round, why he had so little energy for anything else after a short day of work, why he lost some of his power and, eventually, some of his confidence.

"Golf is supposed to be — for someone who swings like me — just play 18 holes and run around," he said. "The game of golf for me should be like falling out of bed."

That's the way it was when Elkington won the PGA Championship at Riviera in 1995 and was awarded the Vardon Trophy for having the lowest scoring average on the PGA Tour.

That's the way he hopes it will be again.

Dragged down by so many injuries that he stopped counting, Elkington followed the advice of his fellow Australian, Greg Norman. He had arthroscopic hip surgery in August by Marc Philippon, the same Florida doctor who operated on Norman.

The surgery might be the biggest craze to hit golf since titanium drivers.

Norman had his surgery after the U.S. Open, came back five weeks later and nearly won The International. Jesper Parnevik had it two weeks ago and hopes to return in time for the Tour Championship.

Elkington didn't win the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens, but he felt every bit as optimistic about the future as David Duval.

It was his second tournament after surgery to repair what he called a "bucket handle" tear in his labrum. Rounds of 66-68 on the weekend gave him a top 10 finish for the first time this year.

"My hip is so smooth. It's like being 15 again," Elkington said. "I think it's just a matter of time before I put four rounds together and get my confidence back. It's hard to believe it feels so good."

The hip wasn't all that plagued Elkington.

He twice has taken time off with sinus problems, including surgery that kept him from defending his title in The Players Championship in 1998.

A year ago, he was within five strokes of the lead going into the final round of the Houston Open when he had to withdraw because of meningitis. He missed Houston this year after injuring his wrist.

But the hip is what held him back the most, a small tear that probably began in late 1995 and got progressively worse each year. Whether he could have done anything about it any sooner is hard to say because the surgery is relatively new.

Along with three top golfers, others who have had the surgery include Miami Dolphins quarterback Jay Fiedler and gold medal figure skater Tara Lipinski.

"When Tara found out, she was devastated," said Elkington, who lives near Lipinski in Houston. "Me? I was elated. I knew everything was going to turn around. I knew there was something wrong with my back and hip, and it wasn't just me thinking it."

Indiana group sues trustees

■ Bobby Knight supporters contend IU violated an open-meeting law when it fired the coach.

By Steve Herman
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — A lawsuit contends Indiana University violated the state's open-meeting law last month when trustees discussed the firing of basketball coach Bob Knight without advance public notice, an attorney said Tuesday.

The complaint was filed in Monroe Superior Court in Bloomington on Monday by lawyers Roy Graham and Gojko Kasich on behalf of 46 plaintiffs, most of them either IU alumni or basketball fans.

"It's a whole range of people who are pretty perturbed with the way these things went down," Kasich said by telephone from his office in Hebron, Ind.

The lawsuit contends the meetings between IU President Myles Brand and separate groups of four trustees were public meetings as defined by state law. As such, the university should have given 48 hours notice, the complaint says.

Brand met with trustees on Sept. 9 and announced the firing the next day, saying Knight had violated a "zero-tolerance" behavior policy imposed in May. But the university has said the Sept. 9 meetings did not trigger the open meetings law because fewer than half of the nine trustees attended any one meeting with Brand.

"What we would hope is a court finds what was done was improper, that it violated the spirit of the open-door law and consequently the open door law," Kasich said. "We would hope the court issues an injunction that IU nor any other university, really any other agency, can skirt the open door law by jumping through these hoops."

Kasich, who said he has never met nor had any contact with Knight, said the intent of the suit wasn't necessarily to overturn the firing.

"We realistically don't expect coach Knight to be sitting on the IU bench," he said.

The lawsuit asks Judge Elizabeth Mann to declare the Sept. 9 meetings in violation of Indiana's open-door law.

"We would anticipate they would call a public meeting for the purpose of terminating coach Knight, and that's their prerogative. But at least do it in public. At least have enough guts to stand up," Kasich said.

Graham called it an issue of fairness.

"The issue is not what Bobby Knight did or didn't do," he said.

"I personally respect Mr. Brand and the trustees very much, but after some research and investigation, I determined this was an honest case to bring forward. I'm just proud to be a part of it," Graham said by telephone.

University counsel Dorothy Frapwell told The Bloomington Herald-Times, "We did what we did. People were in town and Myles was sharing information. We did not want a quorum there. That is true."

Purdue tries to end special teams problems

■ Punting errors plague the Boilermakers in losses this season.

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The Purdue Boilermakers cannot ignore the obvious — that their special teams were anything but that against Penn State.

Or Minnesota or Notre Dame.

But coach Joe Tiller isn't about to change gears yet.

"If we change the personnel at this stage, it extends the learning curve," Tiller said Tuesday during his weekly news conference. "We want to shorten the learning curve."

Meaning Tiller intends to correct the problems that have been plaguing Purdue since a loss to Notre Dame on Sept. 16.

Already there have been two blocked punts, three missed field goals and countless errors, inexplicable errors that have baffled Tiller.

"I've never been around one place where one unit found a way at a different spot to mess it up," Tiller said, showing a hint of frustration.

He expects a better performance Saturday when the Boilermakers (3-2, 1-1 Big Ten) play host to No. 6 Michigan (4-1, 2-0).

Three weeks ago, Tiller did make changes, but now he believes what will make his punt unit special is continuity. So he's trying to simplify matters.

"We put a number of new players in there after the third game," Tiller said. "What we've got to do is get players executing better."

After the last three games, it would be difficult not to show improvement.

Against the Irish, Notre Dame's outside pressure turned two botched punts into touchdowns, and Purdue lost 23-21.

Then, one week after implementing Tiller's changes, Purdue continued to struggle. Minnesota's outside pressure again got to punter Travis Dorsch and the Golden Gophers accounted for 10 more points. Purdue survived, 38-24, despite the miscues.

"We made some switches after the Notre Dame game and that caused some problems the next week against Minnesota," quarterback and Heisman Trophy candidate Drew Brees said. "Against Minnesota, we had a block and a mess up from just about every place on our punt team."

Brees did what he could, speaking to the punt unit last week and reinforcing just how critical the special teams are to the Boilermakers' success.

But it didn't seem to make much difference.

On Saturday, at Penn State, the Nittany Lions twice rushed so hard up the middle, Dorsch couldn't even get the punt off inside his own 15-yard line. Penn State took advantage by scoring 13 points and won, 22-20.

That's 37 points, two losses and plenty of frustration just in the last three weeks.

"Of course we could be 5-0; there's not much you can say about it," Brees said. "It can be corrected. We know it can be corrected, and the coaches are going to figure it out."

Chrebet enjoys new nickname

■ New York's Wayne Chrebet is being referred to as the "Green Lantern" in New York.

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

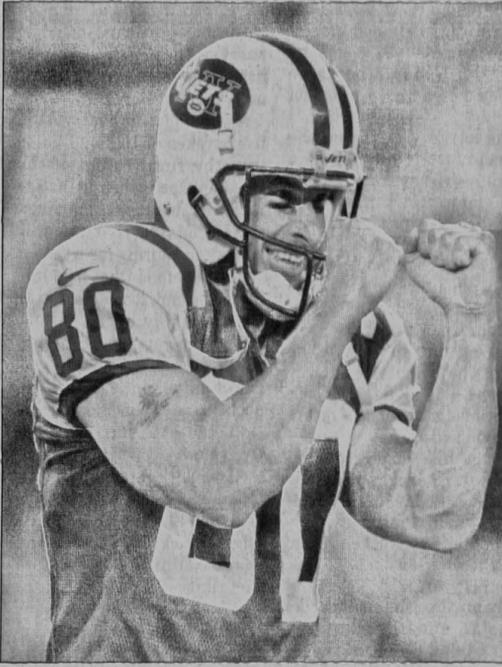

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — The Green Lantern had arrived, complete with T-shirt, ring and special powers. Or was that just New York Jets receiver Wayne Chrebet playing the part of superhero?

One week after his winning catch against Tampa Bay, Chrebet still was getting a kick out of his new nickname. A fan on Chrebet's Internet site suggested the monicker after Chrebet outshined his nemesis, Keyshawn Johnson, in the Bucs game.

Johnson's pregame declaration that comparing himself to Chrebet was like matching a star to a flashlight made for some great copy. When the Green Lantern, uh, Chrebet, outperformed the evil Dr. K, uh, Johnson, it inspired further headlines — and, perhaps, a new persona for the quietly efficient receiver.

On Monday, the team's first day back from its bye week, Chrebet entered the locker room wearing a Green Lantern T-shirt, sporting a plastic green ring and flashing a huge smile.

"I was on 'Inside the NFL,' and the guys at HBO gave it to me," Chrebet said with a mischievous look. "They told me they had this stuff and I said to send it to me, that I will wear it. Vinny (Testaverde) heard it and started calling me it, and then Al Groh started. I think it's hysterical."

Bill Kostroun/Associated Press

New York wide receiver Wayne Chrebet has emerged as the top receiver on the undefeated Jets this season.

Then he held up the ring and said forebodingly, "This is very dangerous if put in the wrong hands."

The Green Lantern, a comic book hero, draws much of his special powers from his ring. Chrebet is only 27, far too young to remember the character that was sketched by Gil Kane, who also drew Spiderman, Captain Marvel and Hulk.

But he didn't care. He was having too much fun portraying the modern-day hero of Jets fans, who still are gloating about Chrebet's catch and Johnson's near shutout (one catch for a yard).

"I'm the Green Lantern, and your words can't faze me," Chrebet said.

"I've never seen it, but people told me it's an average, normal man who turns into a superhero, and I like that," added the former undrafted free agent from Hofstra, where the Jets train.

Chrebet was invited to the 1995 training camp as a courtesy often extended by the Jets to a Hofstra player. All he did was make the team, then lead it in receiving.

Web sites cry foul over Olympics

■ Some of the world's leading media players protest the blanket ban of Internet sites in Sydney.

By Anick Jesdanun
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Many of the world's leading media organizations are demanding greater freedom to broadcast the Olympics on the Web following the blanket Internet ban of the Sydney Games.

To protect NBC and others with television rights, Olympic officials prevented Web sites from offering even short audio reports. So while CBS could run highlights on its TV news programs after NBC's broadcast day ended, the CBS Sport-sline Web site could not.

"It's shortsighted," said Joe Ferreira, Sportsline's vice president of programming. "They either don't understand the Internet or don't know the Internet is legitimate media."

Reporters from MSNBC.com and several other Web sites were forced to get media credentials through their parent company. FoxSports.com reporters covered events by buying tickets or watching them on TV.

Olympic organizers even hired a London company to police the Net, fearing online coverage would interfere with broadcast contracts awarded by region. NBC paid $4 billion for exclusive U.S. rights to the Olympics through 2008, including $705 million for the Sydney Games that concluded Sunday.

The ban meant MSNBC.com could not run footage, despite ties with NBC. And NBCOlympics.com, the NBC online joint venture with Quokka Sports, used only still images from television feeds.

The International Olympic Committee rules prompted such major news outlets as the British Broadcasting Corp., which had broadcast rights at home, to stop posting radio bulletins online.

Franklin Servan-Schriber, the IOC's director of new media, said organizers will likely change Internet policies before the Winter Games in Salt Lake City 16 months from now. He would not elaborate.

White Sox blow lead, lose Game 1

Seattle hits back-to-back home runs in the 10th inning to down the White Sox.

By Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Mike Cameron unnerved his former team with his speed, then Edgar Martinez and John Olerud provided the power for the Seattle Mariners.

Martinez hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning after Cameron's stolen base, and Olerud followed with a home run as Seattle beat the Chicago White Sox, 7-4, Tuesday in the opener of their AL playoff series.

"I've been spoiled for seven years playing with Edgar," Alex Rodriguez said. "He's just been incredible, taking this team to another level."

The consecutive homers came off Chicago relief ace Keith Foulke, who'd surrendered just nine home runs in 88 innings all season.

Martinez said Cameron's stolen base changed his approach.

"When Mike was at second, I tried to make contact and make my swing a little shorter," Martinez said. "By him being at second, I was able to wait more for the pitch and make a better swing."

Cameron, traded away by the White Sox two years ago to Cincinnati and acquired by the Mariners in the Ken Griffey Jr. deal this February, singled in the tying run in the seventh.

He singled again to start the 10th. Rodriguez popped out before Cameron, once projected as Chicago's next star, was nearly picked off first.

Seattle's Edgar Martinez hits a two-run homer in the top of the 10th inning Tuesday. The Mariners won, 7-4.

In a strange but effective move, manager Lou Piniella came out of the dugout and talked to Cameron at first. After a pitchout, Cameron stole second.

"He said, 'Relax,'" said Cameron. "Whatever he told me, it worked. The only time you see that in Little League."

"I can't tell you exactly what he said. It's a secret we have to keep under the sheets. I guess it was a moment of truth. He wanted to shore things up and make sure I was comfortable," he said.

Martinez, who led the AL with 145 RBIs and had a career-high 37 homers, hit a two-run homer to left field to silence a crowd of 45,290 that came to see the White Sox's first playoff appearance in seven years.

A's overcome Yankee threat

Oakland takes Game 1 with a 5-3 win over New York.

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Even the comfort of the postseason couldn't break the New York Yankees out of their deep funk.

Ramon Hernandez drove in two runs, including a go-ahead double in the sixth inning off Roger Clemens, and the Oakland Athletics defeated the struggling Yankees 5-3 Tuesday night in the opener of their playoff series. In a matchup of near-opposites, a small-market A's club making its first playoff appearance since 1992 was patient enough to outlast Clemens and a mega-rich Yankees club trying to defend its two straight World Series titles.

Overpowered for the first four innings, the A's scored four times in the fifth and sixth off a tiring Clemens — he threw 111 pitches in his six innings — and then held on to take a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five AL division series.

The Yankees stumbled into the playoffs this year, ending the regular season with a seven-game losing streak — the worst skid ever for a team entering the postseason — and 15 losses in their final 18 games.

They hoped the postseason would provide a panacea — after all, they had won 18 of their previous 19 postseason games heading into this series, including a record-matching 12 straight World Series victories.

The slump prompted Yankees owner George Steinbrenner to issue a statement earlier in the day about his team.

Bowen still keeps tabs on Iowa

BOWEN

place to play on the road in the NBA?

RB: It's really neat to play in Los Angeles, playing against the Lakers. You look up at the crowd and see all these movie stars sitting around the court. At one game, you can see 15-20 stars watching you play. It's kind of the same in New York — they have some stars come to their games, too. And it's really exciting to play in Madison Square Garden with all the excitement they have there. There are other places too, though, like Sacramento and Portland. I'd have to say out of all the arenas, those two are the loudest to play in.

DI: Where is the worst place to play?

RB: There's not one place that I can say I don't like playing in. I just can't believe I'm playing at this level.

DI: The Nuggets have gone through a lot of changes during the off-season. Do you think either your playing time or your role on the team will change this season?

RB: I think I'll have the same kind of role, and I'll probably be looking at a similar amount of playing time. I might be playing a little more at the four spot, but I don't think my role on the team will change too much. It's an 82-game season, and I really just have to keep doing the things I've been doing and prove myself to the coaches. I never know how much I'll play; sometimes, I only got a few minutes last season. But you know, one second I was sitting on the bench, and the next I played for 30 minutes in one game, so I just have to be ready so that I can prove what I can do.

DI: Who's the best player you've matched up against?

RB: I'd have to say Ray Allen — he's just so quick, he's probably the best I've had to guard. But, I'll say that there was a stretch last year where I had to guard Ray Allen and the next night it was Garnett, the next was Tim Duncan and then Kobe. That's because I was switching a lot between the three and four positions so I had to be matched up against those guys. And Grant Hill, too, I had to guard him. I'd say Hill and Allen are the hardest guys to play.

DI: Do you still follow Iowa basketball?

RB: Oh yeah. I'm always interested in how the season's going to go or how the team's doing. I hope everything goes well this season. Looking from the NBA, everyone talks a lot about their alma mater, and it's really important. There are some rivalries and a lot of respect involved. (Laughs.) I just hope I can brag a little this season because Iowa's putting up a good team.

Hill contributes right away for Iowa

ment and instilled in her the values of faith. Hill said she strives to glorify God in everything she does and is actively involved with Christian organizations on campus, such as 24-7 and Athletes in Action.

While in high school, Hill found in foreign language a rather unique way of dealing with her dyslexia. While other students studied more popular languages such as Spanish, Hill turned to Latin. Her work with the language not only won her the outstanding foreign-language student award at Klein High School, but it helped her better understand the English language.

"It was kind of a cross-trainer for English," she said. "There are a lot of words whose roots are based in Latin."

For all her accomplishments in the face of adversity, it is hard to ignore Hill's work on the volleyball court. After being named district MVP her senior year and outstanding female athlete for her play as a member of the Lady Bearcats, Hill seems to have picked up in college right where she left off in high school.

In her freshman year, she has earned a starting spot in coach Rita Buck-Crockett's starting lineup. Both Buck-Crockett and her high-school coach, Cindy Miksch, laud Hill for her all-around style of play. Hill's mother, who was a college volleyball player at the University of Houston, credits Renee's play to her selflessness.

"There are players who are excellent but don't do the grunt work," Suzanne Hill said. "Renee has always been a team player who digs just as well as she hits."

Already she has played herself into the Iowa record books by recording the third-highest individual hitting percentage in team history. At the Hawkeye Invite on Sept. 9, Hill tallied a .688 percentage to earn a spot on the All-Tournament squad. In addition to the honor, she is among the team's leaders in hitting percentage and kills per game.

Both Hill and her mother hope that successes on and off the court can make a difference in the life of someone who is struggling with a disability.

"I hope she is able to communicate to people with problems not to give up," Hill's mother said. "Without a doubt, you will always be able to accomplish your goals if you work hard and believe you can do it."

Ankiel's location brought Atlanta back in all, contributing to two unearned runs, just two days after Chipper Jones' ninth-inning error cost the defending NL champions home-field advantage in the first round.

Mike James relieved Ankiel and got the final out of the third, then pitched two more innings for the win. Dave Veres worked the ninth for the save, allowing an RBI single to Brian Jordan.

"I don't care about the save," Veres said. "I wanted us to score four or five more runs in the eighth."

After a day off Wednesday, the series resumes with Kile pitching for St. Louis against Tom Glavine in a matchup of the NL's only 20-game winners, then travels to Atlanta for the weekend.

Ankiel is only the second pitcher in major league history to throw five wild pitches in an inning. On Sept. 15, 1890, Bert Cunningham did it for Buffalo of the Players League in the first inning of the second game of a doubleheader.

All but one of Ankiel's wild pitches were fastballs, most of them high over the head of Hernandez. The fifth was a curve that bounced about five feet in front of the plate.

After Maddux walked, he took second on a wild pitch, advanced to third on a wild pitch and scored on wild pitch.

Hernandez also made a leaping grab to prevent what would have been another.

"A couple of them were too high," Hernandez said. "If I'm Superman, maybe. But I don't think I can fly."

Ankiel threw 12 wild pitches in 175 regular-season innings. More than half (34) of his 66 pitches Tuesday were balls.

Mark McGwire, limited to one plate appearance per game because of knee pain, pinch hit in the eighth and was intentionally walked by Kerry Ligtenberg.

Columbus, Minnesota enter league

NHL

Saturday. Minnesota is back in the league for the first time since the North Stars packed up for Dallas after the 1992-93 season. The Wild start out with a two-game road trip that will take them to Anaheim on Friday and Phoenix on Saturday. Minnesota will play its first home game on Oct. 11 against Philadelphia.

The Blue Jackets play their first game Saturday night, when the Chicago Blackhawks come to Columbus.

The additions of Minnesota and Columbus conclude the latest round of expansion, which also brought Atlanta and Nashville into the league in the past two seasons. Since the first expansion in 1967, the NHL has grown from the "Original Six" franchises to 30.

While commissioner Gary Bettman welcomes Minnesota back, New York will cheer the return of its captain Messier to the Rangers when they play their home opener on Oct. 11. Just as when Messier first came to New York, the Rangers will be on the road for a game (Saturday at Atlanta) before No. 11 can pull on his home white jersey.

Arnott's sudden-death goal in Game 6 of the Cup finals ended Dallas' hope of repeating as league champion. The Devils begin their quest for two straight titles when they raise their championship banner at home against the Montreal Canadiens, owners of 23 Stanley Cups, Friday night.

Nashville and Pittsburgh open with a two-game series in Japan on Friday and Saturday at midnight (CDT).

Seven new coaches will begin new jobs this week: Alpo Suhonen (Chicago), Don Hay (Calgary), Dave King (Columbus), Craig MacTavish (Edmonton), Jacques Lemaire (Minnesota), Ron Low (Rangers) and Ivan Hlinka (Pittsburgh).

The Boston Bruins will open a season without Ray Bourque for the first time since he was a rookie in 1979. Bourque re-signed with the Avalanche after he was dealt by the Bruins late last season so he could have a chance to win his first championship ring.

The Avalanche start a countdown on opening night as goalie Patrick Roy needs only four victories to reach 448 and break Terry Sawchuk's career victory record.

"The wins are one thing," Hitchcock said, "but Patrick has done it in such a short period of time. The winning percentage is amazing."

Allen, Barr expected to play

defense to contain, but, he said, there are still adjustments that need to be made.

"Third down continues to plague us," he said. "Two weeks ago, we had trouble against the pass, and last week it was the run. It's been tough to pinpoint one thing. I think we've made some strides in certain areas, but obviously we've had some problems, and they mostly show up on third down."

Injuries have hampered Iowa all season, and it will start the same lineup on both sides of the ball for the first time this year. Junior Jeremy Allen, who saw limited time last week, is expected to see more action Saturday. Sophomore Fred Barr, who didn't travel to Indiana because of an ankle injury, is expected to play.
