■ The Israeli leader calls for a "time out" in the peace process.

By Ron Kampeas
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Ehud Barak called for a peace "time-out" Sunday, and Yasser Arafat told him to "go to hell."

The Israeli and Palestinian leaders seemed further than ever from the peace their U.S. and Egyptian sponsors have tried so hard to salvage.

The violence in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip showed no signs of abating, and the cease-fire called during last week's peace summit was little more than a memory.

In the fiercest fighting in the Jerusalem environs since clashes broke out on Sept. 28, Israeli helicopter gunships rocketed the Palestinian-held village of Beit Jalla. Some Palestinian homes were leveled. Electricity and phone lines were down, and Palestinians said the power plant had been hit.

The army said it warned res-

Dancin' & jammin' & sharing a birthday

A UI freshman got through midterms by dancing almost every night of the week away, a UI graduate student escapes through the blues, and a UI senior and a recent graduate take time out of their busy lives to celebrate their birthdays. This month, four UI students and a recent graduate share where they are at as the middle of the semester passes by in The Daily Iowan's third installment of the year-long "You are Here" series.

Escaping the blues through blues jam

To get away from the stress of midterms, preparing lesson plans and everyday pressures, UI graduate student Brian Davis flees into the world of music at least once a week.

Davis plays his Telecaster guitar for himself and often in the presence of others. Every Monday night he performs at the improvisational blues jam before in the standing-room-only audiences at the Green Room, 509 S. Gilbert St. Each week he plays with a different group of musicians thrown together at random for sets of blues songs decided by the group.

"I love it," he said. "It's like an escape."

Davis also enjoys being able to meet so many other musicians, including Derek Andre, a good friend and fellow guitarist, who plays with Davis at the blues jam every Monday.

Albright begins historic N. Korea visit

■ The secretary of State reaches out to North Korea in a groundbreaking journey.

By George Gedda
Associated Press

PYONGYANG, North Korea — Breaking down one of the last barriers of the Cold War, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright opened a historic visit to North Korea earlier today by paying her respects to the late Kim Il Sung, the Soviet-trained ruler who formed the communist nation 55 years ago.

No other U.S. secretary of State has visited North Korea, and none of Albright's predecessors had even considered the idea because of the grim state of the relationship.

Albright hopes to use the two-day visit to advance her goal of a tension-free

Northeast Asia for the first time in decades and to lay the groundwork for a visit by President Clinton, possibly as early as next month.

In between meetings with top North Korean officials, Albright planned to visit with kindergarten children and tour a food-distribution site. Also on her agenda was a performance of the Pyongyang Acrobatic Circus.

She was greeted at Pyongyang's airport shortly after dawn by North Korea's vice foreign minister, Kim Gye Gwan. An 8-year-old boy wearing a red kerchief around his neck presented her with a bouquet of flowers.

Her motorcade, which included vehicles driven up from the U.S. Embassy in Seoul, South Korea, drove down deserted boulevards to the Kim Il Sung Palace, where the remains of the longtime North Korean leader are on display. The sprawling edifice was once used as a meeting place for foreign dignitaries, but was converted to a mausoleum after Kim's death.

Down the road, a large sign attached to the front of one of the buildings read, "The Great

Dance Marathon fund raising gets a leg up

■ Organizers are optimistic they will meet this year's goal of raising $500,000.

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

Money may never stretch as far as cancer's touch, but UI students involved with Dance Marathon aren't letting that stop them from raising a half-million dollars this year to support children being treated in the pediatric oncology unit of the Children's Hospital of Iowa at the UI Hospitals and Clinics. They've bested themselves with each successive year since the marathon's inception seven years ago.

They say they'll do it again.

The half-million-dollar goal is nearly $140,000 more than the amount raised last year, but with 1,233 dancers — 400 more than last year — it's obtainable, said UI senior Karla Lee, the Dance Marathon executive director.

"It'll take a little work, but it's definitely feasible," she said. "I think it's gone great so far."

A $25 increase in the required fund-raising amount for each participant — from $350 to $375 — won't hinder this school year's Dance Marathon, said UI senior Andrea Cole.

Dance Marathon, an annual event in the IMU coordinated by UI students, will begin at 7 p.m. on Feb. 2 and run until 7 p.m. Feb. 3. Children with cancer and their families are invited to attend the 24-hour marathon, where they dance with UI students to raise awareness and funding for children's cancer.

Six hours has been cut from this year's marathon for the health of the participants and children in attendance,

I think it's fun to go canning. I enjoy it, especially after the bars close. You meet a lot of interesting people.

— Laura Santucci,
UI sophomore

The money raised during the event will help pay for the needs of children with cancer and their families, including current and outstanding hospital bills, gas vouchers and hotel accommodations.

"The money stretches in so many different directions," said UI sophomore Megan Dulgari, a morale captain. "People get pretty crazy and pumped up about (fund raising)."

Participants frequently write friends and family members for contributions or collect donations on street corners and at tailgates, also known as canning, she said.

Some Dance Marathon participants said canning is often the most fun and productive just minutes after local bars have closed their doors for the day.

"(Raising money is) not very hard at all," said Laura Santucci, UI sophomore and Dance Marathon participant. "I think it's fun to go canning. I enjoy it, especially after the bars close. You meet a lot of interesting people."

Several Dance Marathon participants were out canning this weekend because of Parents' Weekend, Cole said.

"It's definitely a popular weekend," she said. "Parents like to give us a lot of support."

Lee said $1,700 was raised through canning alone during Homecoming weekend. The results of this weekend's canning have not been tabulated, she said.

Canning this year began on Sept. 9 and will continue every Thursday and Saturday night until the marathon, Lee said.

San Diego based-Aurora acquires UI biotech firm

■ The Oakdale company is looking for a treatment for cystic fibrosis.

By Kellie Doyle
The Daily Iowan

Quorum Sciences Inc., a tenant of the Technology Innovation Center at the UI Oakdale Research Park, is teaming its efforts with a San Diego company in hopes of finding a treatment for a lung infection in cystic-fibrosis patients.

The Cystic Fibrosis Foundation put Aurora Biosciences Corp. of San Diego in contact with the UI-based biotechnology company a year ago. On Oct. 20, Aurora acquired Quorum, allowing Quorum to expand its business while also remaining in Iowa, said E. Peter Greenberg, a UI professor of microbiology and the founder of Quorum.

"It was a good fit," he said.

A UI biotech "spin-off," or company based on UI research, Quorum designs anti-bacterial treatments that target just the bacteria-causing problems, unlike other treatments that are broader and kill all bacteria, Greenberg said.

"This has been in the works for several months, and I'm really enthusiastic," he said.

Quorum started with the Technology Innovation Center in September 1999. Greenberg said renting space with the center enabled the business to get started without having to make any huge capital investments.

The Technology Innovation Center, which was founded in 1984, is a business incubator for new technology-based companies, said Tom Bauer, the associate director of Oakdale Research Park. It has accepted 55 new business ventures since then; currently, it has 14 tenants.

"We're pleased to have Quorum with us, and we're happy this has appeared to produce it for further growth at Oakdale," Bauer said.

"Aurora is the best company in the world for developing screens to identify new drugs," Greenberg said. "It has put state-of-the-art equipment in a pharmaceutical company, and now Quorum has access to that."

Greenberg said the merger will also allow Quorum to expand, may bring in a good management team, and will give the company a chance to develop new medicines.

Aurora's intervention also brought about a solution to a rising problem, he said.

"I found that Quorum was asking things of me I didn't want to do, such as manage and raise funds," he said.

I'm happy to help with the science the best I can, but I like being a professor — it's my vocation.

— E. Peter Greenberg,
UI professor of microbiology

Greenberg said Quorum will rent out more space from the center to allow for future expansion. Also, he said, he hopes to quickly expand its current three-member staff to 12-15.

CITY BRIEFS

Arson a possible cause of Iowa Avenue fire

The Iowa City Fire Department responded to a fire in a garage at 823 Iowa Ave. at 4:50 a.m. on Oct. 20, and although there are currently no suspects, officials say the cause may be arson.

Officials said they believe the fire started in the garage, which faces Governor Street, then extended to the white two-story unoccupied house, which faces Iowa Avenue.

As firefighters arrived on the scene, someone was seen fleeing the house, said Randy Evans, the owner of the property. Firefighters arrived on the scene at 4:53 a.m. and battled the blaze until it was extinguished at 5:35 a.m.

Fire officials would not comment on seeing a person at the scene.

"The case is still under investigation," said Iowa City Battalion Chief Elmer Brennen.

Most of the blaze was confined to the garage, with an estimated damage of $30,000, he said.

The house itself is not a loss and will be repaired, Evans said.

"With the investigation still pending, and the insurance estimates preliminary, I don't know when I'll be able to start repairs," he said.

The arrival of fire engines woke neighbor Teri Bostian.

"They were here when I left for work at 5 a.m. and were still here when I got home in the afternoon," she said. "But I didn't see anything."

People with any information on the cause of the fire are asked to contact the Iowa City Fire Department at 356-5260.

Man survives plane crash

John Maher, 59, of Cedar Rapids, was flying an experimental plane when the engine stopped and it crashed after less than five minutes of flight Sunday morning, Maher said.

The Johnson County Sheriff's Office received a call from Mildred Lovetinsky, 4908 American Legion Rd. S.E., after Maher walked approximately 1½ miles to her home, according to the Sheriff's Office report.

The plane fell 800-900 feet, Maher said. On the way down, he was concentrating on what he had to do, such as shutting the fuel off, shutting off the electrical power and getting the plane ready to land, he said. He also was looking for nearby farms that he could go to after he landed.

When the plane landed, Maher said, it flipped over, trapping him inside. A shard of glass from the plane happened to be right near his hand, and Maher spent 20-30 minutes digging his way out of the tight space by using the piece of glass.

The plane was built by Maher's friend. He made some adjustments to the plane and was testing it out to see if the improvements had worked. Maher said the adjustments probably don't have anything to do with the engine shutting down.

At Lovetinsky's house, Maher refused medical assistance. A deputy took him to Mercy Hospital, 500 E. Market St. He was treated and released after some X-rays. He didn't break any bones but had a few minor abrasions.

"Truthfully, I feel a really strong sense of being watched over," Maher said.

Summit backs off from cutting ties with Israel

■ The declaration by Arab leaders is condemned across the Arab world.

By Bassem Mroue
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Arab leaders wrapped up their two-day summit on Israeli-Palestinian violence Sunday with a carefully worded declaration that stopped short of an outright call for cutting ties with Israel.

Israel would be to blame if any nations choose to sever relations, the resolution said — a result quickly denounced across the Arab world, where anti-Israel protests and calls for harsh action have filled streets all month.

Late Sunday, Iraq urged Arabs to revolt against leaders who "exposed themselves as representing Zionist and American domination."

In Egypt, thousands of students staged noisy demonstrations to vent their frustration at the summit's failure to cut ties with Israel and to repeat calls for a holy war to liberate the Palestinians. "Where is the Arab army?" they chanted.

"It was a total failure, but we never expected anything more than lip service from our leaders," said Jordanian electrician Abdullah Ayyoub, 27.

In Israel, Prime Minister Ehud Barak praised summit host Hosni Mubarak, the Egyptian president, for making "considerable effort to maintain a balanced approach, which calls for peace and restraint, instead of an extremist stance." But he also said Israel "rejects the threatening language" of the final declaration.

The comments left the door open for Egypt, the first Arab country to sign a peace treaty with Israel, to continue as regional mediator, as the United States wants. Egypt sponsored the Cairo summit and was its main voice of moderation.

Even before the summit was over, Tunisia closed its liaison office in Israel and asked that a similar Israeli office in Tunis be shut in light of "the dangerous escalation ... of Israeli aggression against the Palestinian people," Tunisia's Foreign Affairs ministry said late Saturday.

Tunisia and Israel opened economic interest offices in 1996, one of the lowest forms of diplomatic representation.

Libya walked out of the Arab summit on Oct. 21, saying it was frustrated that the gathering would not clearly call for an end to ties with Israel.

Oman severed its low-level relations with Israel on Oct. 12.

But Mustafa el-Fiqqi, Egypt's assistant foreign minister, said Egypt was unlikely to change its formal relationship with Israel. On returning to Jordan, Jordanian Foreign Minister Abdul-Illah Khattab told reporters that the kingdom will not cut diplomatic ties with Israel.

"The peace process doesn't need more blows," Khattab said.

Iraq's representative did not vote on the final resolution, state-run Iraqi News Agency said.

Kostunica avoids debacle in Bosnia

■ The new Yugoslav president makes the first visit by a Serb leader to Bosnia since independence.

By Alexander S. Dragicevic
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Yugoslavia's new president averted a diplomatic debacle Sunday by meeting Bosnia's political leaders, defusing anger over his decision to use his first trip to the country to attend a ceremony that some said had ethnic overtones.

Vojislav Kostunica's visit was the first a Yugoslav leader has paid to Bosnia, a former Yugoslav republic, since the 3½-year war here ended half a decade ago. He spent part of the day in the small southern Bosnian town of Trebinje before flying off to Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, for the meeting.

Kostunica's stop in Trebinje seemed simple enough: He was in town to attend a reburial service for a prominent Serb poet. But in Bosnia — which fought to separate itself from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia in 1991 and was subsequently ripped apart by ethnic warfare between Serbs, Croats and Muslims — the visit caused an uproar.

The Croat and Muslim members of Bosnia's three-person multiethnic presidency considered it an insult that the new Yugoslav leader, who is a Serb, would choose an event with nationalistic Serb overtones for his first visit. Even though Kostunica attended the reburial privately, the Bosnian government believed it signaled that he had not fully accepted the country's independence.

Compounding the problem, Kostunica's visit fell just three weeks before national elections in Bosnia. The timing alarmed the international officials who run Bosnia under the 1995 Dayton peace accord:

Risto Bozovic/Associated Press

Some fear that extremists may use the vote to promote Serb nationalism.

Looking to head off an incident, the international officials hastily convened a meeting between Kostunica and the members of the multieth-nic presidency. Bosnia's top international official, Wolfgang Petritsch, persuaded Kostunica to take part in the symbolic 30-minute meeting, and U.N. officials dispatched a helicopter to fly him from Trebinje to Sarajevo for the talks.

Death toll climbs in Ebola outbreak

■ Uganda says 54 people have died, and 10 new cases have been identified.

By Henry Wasswa
Associated Press

KAMPALA, Uganda — The death toll in the latest outbreak of the dreaded Ebola fever in northern Uganda has risen to 54, and health officials have identified 10 new cases in their ongoing search for people who have come in contact with the deadly virus, the Ministry of Health said Sunday.

A statement signed by Francis Omaswa, the director-general of health services, said three people had died in the previous 24 hours, and the new cases were identified in the same period around Gulu, 225 miles north of the Ugandan capital, Kampala.

The ministry attributed the increase in the number of new cases to the village-by-village search by health officials, and it emphasized that no cases of Ebola had been reported outside Gulu and surrounding villages.

The statement said 149 people had fallen ill with the hemorrhagic fever since the outbreak was confirmed Oct. 14.

On Oct. 21, Dr. Sam Zaraman appeal for $848,000 to help the government, while the U.N. World Food Program is delivering food to hospitals treating victims.

Ugandan authorities have allocated $200,000 to fight the outbreak.

Traditionally, relatives help care for patients and feed them, but the possibility of the diseases spreading in this manner is too great to permit the practice.

The strain was last detected near the Ebola River in Sudan in 1979, creating suspicions that it may have been inadvertently brought to the district by Ugandan rebels, who have bases in southern Sudan.

Navy shipyard strike settled after 55 days

■ The machinists approve a contract, ending the walk-out at Maine's Bath Iron Works.

By Glenn Adams
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Maine — A 55-day strike at one of the Navy's largest shipbuilders ended Sunday, as nearly two-thirds of the 4,800 Machinists Union members voted to ratify their new contract.

The workers were to begin returning to their jobs today at Bath Iron Works. The shipyard is one of two that builds the Navy's most advanced Aegis guided-missile destroyers.

The 42-month contract includes wage increases of 4 percent, 4.5 percent and 5 percent in three steps, and cuts health-care premiums, with average savings per worker of $400 to $500 in the first year, the union said. It doesn't include provisions that would have allowed workers to perform duties outside of their regular jobs, a sensitive issue for the union.

"We won the strike. We got rid of cross-training. We got our raises," said Rock Grenier, the president of Local S6. "Everyone should hold his head high when we go back to work."

Without giving exact tallies, union officials said 65 percent of the workers voting Sunday approved the contract. Workers were being given a 10-day grace period to return to their jobs.

"We're looking forward to everyone getting back to the shipyard and building ships," said Bath Iron Works spokeswoman Susan Pierter. She could not confirm union estimates that at least 10 percent of those who walked out have left the shipyard for new jobs.

The mood Sunday was far different than two previous votes, on Aug. 27 and Sept. 3, in which members of the machinists union set fire to copies of the proposed contracts after rejecting them.

Steven Lackie, a welder for six years at Bath Iron Works, said there were still "a lot of mixed feelings," but he increases are slightly higher than the company's last three-year contract proposal but fell short of increases sought by the union.

the specialized lead to layoffs.

The strike brought production to a standstill at the shipyard. However, managers put on hard hats and completed the finishing touches to meet the Oct. 13 delivery deadline for the high-profile USS Winston S. Churchill.

The last strike against Bath Iron Works was a 99-day walkout in 1985. The shipyard is one of Maine's biggest employers, with approximately 7,600 workers in all.

General Dynamics' marine division, which includes Bath Iron Works, Electric Boat in Groton, Conn., and NASSCO in San Diego, Calif., accounts for a quarter of General Dynamics' profits, analysts said.

As election day nears, campaigns go on the offensive

■ Republicans and Democrats hurl accusations at each other as the final sprint begins.

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Twenty-eight Republican governors opened a 25-state barnstorming tour on Sunday designed to help put George W. Bush in the White House. Bush called it "the good beginning of the final sprint."

Al Gore also campaigned in his rival's home state, as both sides dispatched surrogates to rally support in the home-stretch.

Some of the exchanges became nasty, as Democrats waged a coordinated attack on Bush's competency, and Republicans pressed their challenge of Gore's trustworthiness.

The race remained tight in some polls, with Bush maintaining an edge in others. He had 44 percent to 42 percent among likely voters in a CBS News-New York Times poll released Sunday. An ABC News tracking poll gave Bush 48 percent to 45 percent for Gore. The latest CNN-USA Today-Gallup survey on Sunday showed Bush 9 points ahead.

Even in polls where the race remains close, Bush had a decided advantage in enthusiasm of his supporters, which has increased since the debates. The enthusiasm of Gore's supporters has dropped off, and that can affect voter turnout.

All but one of the nation's Republican governors joined Bush here to launch the cross-country tour. The governors, traveling in seven teams, will visit 48 cities in 25 states this week.

Missing: West Virginia Gov. Cecil Underwood, who had conflicting campaign events as he wages a difficult re-election effort.

"Simply put, George, we believe in you," said Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge at the ceremony.

"It's going to be the good beginning of the final sprint. And I'm glad I'm sprinting with these good folks," Bush said.

The Bush campaign hopes the traveling GOP governors — who encouraged Bush to run and supported him throughout the campaign — can help rally undecided voters and address Democratic statements belittling Bush's experience as a two-term governor of Texas.

Groups of both Republicans and Democrats were hitting the road this week to appeal to a dwindling — but electorally critical — band of independent voters.

Gore strategists said they'll cap the campaign with "a relentless focus" on the issues in a series of seven speeches on topics ranging from health care to the environment.

"Right up until the last minute of the last day, he'll be talking about the issues," said spokesman Chris Lehane even as aides debated in Nashville whether Gore should intensify his criticisms of Bush.

On Oct. 21, Gore criticized Bush for advocating a diminished U.S. peacekeeping role in Europe, saying it demonstrated a "lack of judgment and a complete misunderstanding of history." The vice president held back Sunday, however, from any personal criticism of his rival.

'Big Brother' secretly tracks Web-site use

■ Despite restrictions, government Web sites are using cookies.

By D. Ian Hopper
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite a White House prohibition, 13 government agencies are secretly using technology that tracks the Internet habits of people visiting their Web sites, and in at least one case provides the information to a private company, a congressional review has found.

The agencies range from the Federal Aviation Administration to the federal offices that provide disaster relief and administer Medicare, the General Accounting Office found in a study obtained by the Associated Press.

"How can this administration talk about protecting privacy when its own agencies jeopardize some of the public's most private information?" asked Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

Thompson's committee has jurisdiction over the 1974 Privacy Act and other laws that dictate the government's privacy practices.

At issue is the use by the 13 government Web sites of small text files called "cookies" that record information about Internet users' browsing habits when they visit sites.

In June, the White House Office of Management and Budget advised all federal agencies that they are not allowed to use cookies without approval from the agency head. If they are used, the OMB directive said, Web site visitors must be given "clear and conspicuous notice" of such use.

But the GAO, the investigatory arm of Congress, found that 13 agencies were using the technology to track visitors, although their formal Internet policy claimed they weren't doing so, and none of the Web site visitors were advised the technology was being used.

The study found all 13 tracked consumers' path during their visit to the site, and some were employing "persistent" text files that could be read for years after the initial visit.

Navy backtracks on Cole attack

■ The Navy revises its timelines, raising questions on how the attackers fooled the sailors.

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Navy has altered its account of events leading to the bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen last week. The changes raise new questions about how the attackers foiled Navy security.

The Navy said on Oct. 20 that the explosion occurred nearly two hours after the Cole was moored to a fuel dock in Aden harbor, not during the mooring operation, as it said before. That means the boat believed to have detonated the explosives did not use a flotilla of harbor craft as cover, as the Navy said previously.

It is now less clear than before how the attacking boat could have approached the Cole without raising suspicion. The Oct. 12 attack killed 17

U.S. sailors and injured 39. The last four bodies recovered from the Cole on Oct. 19 were flown back to the United States from Bahrain over the weekend. The remains of eight other Cole victims were returned to Dover Air Force Base, Del., on Oct. 20 in preparation for burial.

The first set of five remains were sent home last week.

In a brief statement, the Navy's Office of Information said earlier statements now known to be erroneous were based on initial reports from the ship that were either wrong or were misunderstood by Pentagon officials. The Navy said it now has obtained additional information from the Cole's records that change at least three points of fact in the official timeline.

• The explosion occurred at 11:18 a.m. local time (3:18 a.m. CDT), or approximately an hour earlier than originally reported.

• Refueling began at 10:30 a.m. and was ongoing at the time of the attack. Before, the Navy had said refueling had not yet begun.

Chief Gerald Logan presents the flag that covered the casket of Navy Operations Specialist Second Class Timothy L. Saunders to his wife Jacqueline on Saturday.

because it would seem to undercut the theory previously advanced by Navy officials that the small boat seen sidling up to the Cole at the time of the explosion used the mooring operation — involving several harbor work boats — as a means of masking its attack.

Despite the partial shutdown, Joe Stewart, the senior vice president of corporate affairs and chief ethics officer for Kellogg, said the Battle Creek-based food giant is confident in the quality and safety of its products that are currently on grocery store and home shelves.

"It was a precautionary measure to make sure none (of the corn) gets through. We have no reason to think this has gotten into our supply," he said.

DETROIT — The Kellogg Co. confirmed on Oct. 21 that it closed several lines at a cereal manufacturing plant in Memphis, Tenn., last week because a supplier could not guarantee its corn was free of a genetically modified grain not yet approved for human consumption.

Stewart wouldn't name the corn supplier but said it had stopped operating to test for the modified corn, called StarLink, which is thought to potentially cause allergies in humans. StarLink has been approved for animal consumption but not for humans.

U.S. jockeys for Jordan, Japan trade deals

■ President Clinton wants a free-trade agreement with Jordan and a new auto deal with Japan.

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, who last week signed landmark China trade legislation, is hoping to burnish his trade legacy with a free-trade agreement with Jordan and a renewed auto pact with Japan.

Negotiating teams from the United States and Jordan met in Washington on Oct. 20 in an effort to complete final details on a free-trade agreement that would remove all trade barriers between the two nations.

The administration also announced that it would dispatch a team to Hong Kong this week for meetings to determine what type of agreement should replace a 1995 auto deal with Japan, which is set to expire at the end of this year.

Those talks were expected to be contentious. Japan was forced to accept the original agreement five years ago under threat of $5.9 billion in U.S. economic sanctions against Japanese luxury-car imports. But it refused to go along with a U.S. demand for numerical targets, and both countries have spent the five years bickering as the trade deficit in autos and auto parts has widened.

Lee Kadrich, the vice president for governmental affairs for the Automotive Aftermarket Industry Association, said the deficit in auto parts alone could hit $13 billion this year, the same as it was in 1995 when the deal was struck. He blamed much of the problem on Japan's refusal to reduce red tape governing its repair garages and said it was critical for the 1995 deal to be renewed with more stringent goals.

"We have the world's most competitive suppliers. If the market were open in Japan, we would never have a trade deficit of this magnitude," he said.

Steve Collins, the head of the Automotive Trade Policy Council, which represents General Motors, Ford and Daimler-Chrysler on trade issues, said Detroit also wants to see the

Congress strives for overseas-abortion deal

■ GOP and Democrat bargainers narrow their differences on family planning aid.

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bargainers seemed to be moving toward an agreement over the weekend over restricting U.S. aid to groups that perform abortions overseas, one of the most intractable of the remaining budget disputes.

A deal would mean an end, for now, to a battle that has raged since 1984, when President Reagan used an executive order to bar family planning aid for groups that perform abortions overseas or lobby to liberalize other countries' abortion laws. President Clinton revoked the order upon taking office in 1993.

An agreement also would mean that one of the three spending bills for the new fiscal year that White House and congressional negotiators have yet to resolve could be ready for Congress to vote on early this week.

The $14.9 billion foreign-aid measure was all but certain to contain $435 million to help forgive debt owed by dozens of poor countries. That initiative has been supported by the Clinton administration, many congressional conservatives and others from Pope John Paul II to the rock star Bono.

While nothing was completed on family planning, Reps.

Sonny Callahan, R-Ala., and Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., respectively the chairman and top Democrat on the House Appropriations Committee panel that controls foreign aid, have discussed at least two options.

In each, last year's $385 million for international family planning would be boosted to perhaps $425 million, said aides and lobbyists speaking on condition of anonymity. The increase would be the first since Republicans took control of Congress in 1995.

"The more you go, the more people you know," he said. "Then you get to play with those you really enjoy."

After signing up on a list to play at the beginning of the night, Davis and dozens of other musicians socialize and enjoy the music of others, and wait their turn to perform.

Last Monday, Davis stood with a group of friends discussing various topics, including what blues songs the guitar duo wanted to suggest playing and laughing at past memories.

After Davis' name was announced, along with those of the other group members, the temporary band quickly decided on which songs it would perform.

Then the guys warmed up, tuned their instruments, and began their set with three clicks of the drummer's sticks. With red, green and purple lights shining down, the group played Ben Harper's "Steal my Kisses," causing some customers to dance in front of the small corner stage.

The set was followed by a round of applause and hollers from the 150-plus crowd. Davis just smiled at the audience and to himself as he exited the stage, displaying his satisfaction.

"It's always pretty fun," he said.

Never too old for toys

Elliot Royer doesn't care that he won't be going out to celebrate his 22nd birthday Saturday. He's going to stay in and play with the new Sony Play Station 2 that his girlfriend, UI senior Nora Clemons, is giving him and, hopefully, the new games his parents will give him to go with it.

For Royer's entire life, he has loved to get toys. When he turned 5, he got some Star Wars toys from his parents. But the memorable portion of his 5th birthday began when Royer was playing with a huge, round, bouncy ball.

Royer said he remembered that he thought it would be fun to try to jump over the ball, but when he accidentally landed on top of it, he was thrown up against the wall and knocked out.

When he woke up, he said, it was like having another birthday because his concussion had made him lose his memory of receiving the Star Wars toys. He was extremely joyous over his gifts, once again.

Davis

Royer

"It was like two birthdays in one," he said, laughing. "I was just as excited the second time."

Another shocker for Royer was his 17th birthday.

It was a Friday night, and Royer was out with Clemons. He came home slightly past curfew to find his parents sitting up, waiting for him. A very frightened Royer thought that they were going to ground him. However, his parents told him to look in the garage, and to his amazement he found a '96 red Toyota Corolla to replace his previous "piece of crap."

This soon-to-be 22-year-old still gets gifts from his parents and said he wouldn't want it any other way.

Royer said that although he's older, he'll never get to the point where he thinks it's better to give than to receive.

"I like giving gifts, but to make other people happy, you have to be glad to get gifts," he said.

Royer said he hopes to keep receiving fun presents, even when he is a father someday. He said parents tell their children that they don't want anything for their birthday because children don't give good gifts. A person can only get so many socks and ties, not to mention ashtrays for fathers and mothers who don't smoke, he said.

He is still enjoying the birthday rituals of his childhood, including receiving toys, and he isn't feeling too old, yet.

"When I turn 30, I imagine that won't be too good of a feeling," Royer said.

The accidental tourist

After living in the United States for almost two years, UI junior Toni Neykova, who left her home in Bulgaria to play tennis for the Hawkeyes, has set foot in more states throughout her short stay than many Americans have the opportunity to in a lifetime.

"It's strange because I have friends here in Iowa who have never been anywhere," she said.

With the UI women's tennis team, Neykova has visited the East Coast, West Coast, and the Midwest including, of course, all of the Big Ten states.

"When I travel with tennis, it's the only time I travel," she said.

Neykova

"It's huge, and I've always had a dream to go there," she said. "I never get to travel there with tennis because we don't have good opponents, but one day I'll save enough money to go there."

She returned from her first visit to Atlanta Sunday after winning her doubles match against Georgia Tech.

Because the team members were busy on the courts for most of the weekend, they were unable to do a lot of sightseeing. However, Neykova said, one of the highlights of the trip was ESPN Zone, where she could watch multiple sporting events at one time.

The skyscrapers, which she has seen on only a few occasions while in Chicago and Los Angeles, amazed her the most.

"Life there is different from here in Iowa," she said. "I grew up in a big town, so I liked the atmosphere in Atlanta."

Neykova's journeys with the tennis team have opened her eyes to much of the American culture, she said. Compared with her country, the biggest difference she noticed was the diversity in people.

"No one wants to emigrate to Bulgaria, so there's not as much variety in people there," she said.

A trip to New Orleans the weekend after Mardi Gras her freshman year was Neykova's favorite travel experience, she said.

"It was the first time I saw how America was like a party," she said. "I had so much fun that I didn't want to go home."

Neykova said she now thinks of America as an "amusement country" filled with a lot of "friendly" people.

She began collecting Big Ten shot glasses this year in memory of all the fun times she has had playing tennis in different places.

"I could buy them at all the Hawkeye stores, but that isn't as much fun as actually going there," she said.

After visiting Los Angeles enough times to become bored with the West Coast, seeing alligators roaming the University of Florida campus, and having attended school in an area surrounded by cornfields, Neykova hopes to visit New York City someday.

"It's huge, and I've always had a dream to go there," she said. "I never get to travel there with tennis because we don't have good opponents, but one day I'll save enough money to go there."

Party way of life seems to be working for UI freshman

One of UI freshman William Holscher's favorite songs to dance to at the bar is Wyclef Jean's version of "Staying Alive." Even after a difficult week of midterms and trouble at a local bar and his Burge Residence hall, Holscher has managed to keep on dancing and to stay alive.

Following his calculus midterm, which did not go as well as he hoped, Holscher said, he decided to go out with his friends to help him "get over his test." At the bar, Holscher lost his debit card and got in an argument with another patron who "pulled a knife" on him.

When he got back to his dorm room that night, he received a noise violation and was reported for failure to comply with his resident assistant, his second violation in the dorms, Holscher said.

"At first I didn't know whether I was going to get kicked out of the dorms. (The night) was pretty out of control," Holscher said. "Then I met with the hall manager, and we worked everything out."

Holscher said.

His "rough night out at the bar" has not scared Holscher from going out. In fact, last week, he went out every single day except Monday. Even though Holscher painstakingly "pimped out" for the "ladies" when he goes to the bars, he is still "as single as they come."

Despite his insatiable hunger for the night life, Holscher maintains that he is able to stay afloat in his classes. And, although he does not think he will get a 3.7 grade point average, as he did in high school, Holscher is confident he will do well in his classes.

"My parents know how much I like to party and are OK with it, but my mom reminds me all the time that I am here to get an education," he said.

The education aspect of college is still important to him, Holscher said, and he is learning how to balance school and his social life. He goes to his professors' office hours and studies most of the day on Sundays.

"I did better than I thought on my midterms," he said. "My study system seems to be working, so I'm not going to change what I'm doing."

Being a twin

Although UI Hospitals and Clinics nurse Amy Valesh and her fraternal twin sister, Liz Valesh, a Boys and Girls Club employee, live 85 miles away from each other, every October there is one thing that brings the two together — their birthday.

As Amy and Liz Valesh have grown older (they are now 24), they have come to look forward to Oct. 19. Their birthday has come to mean sharing a few days in celebration instead of just one.

"When we were little, we hated having to share our birthday," Amy Valesh said. "We had to sing 'Happy Birthday' twice because it became an issue fast."

During their first year at college, Amy Valesh attended Boston University, and Liz Valesh went to the University of Northern Iowa. Being thousands of miles apart on their birthday brought a depressing day full of tears. Sharing their birthday became a necessity, and they were able to work out a plan after Amy Valesh transferred to the UI.

Now Amy Valesh attends a party for Liz in Dubuque, and Liz comes to a party in Iowa City for Amy. Both sisters have a chance to spend their day together and to mingle with friends.

Although the Valesh twins are not identical, they share the same taste in clothes, and some people say they also have the same smile and laugh. The closest they come to tricking people about their identity is on the phone. Amy Valesh said they used to play tricks on each other's boyfriends.

"We really don't look alike, but it is fun to be a twin," Amy Valesh said. "You always have someone to talk to."

Differences become inflated when people are presented with twins, she said. The sisters see their differences as something admirable.

"The thing that is hard about being twins is everyone compares you," Amy Valesh said. "People make it a point to find differences and forget that you are two separate people."

For example, she said, while she and her sister were in high school, she was more academic while Liz Valesh was more athletic. Classmates made a big deal about the differences.

When Amy and Liz Valesh were younger, their parents never dressed them alike because they wanted both girls to develop their own personalities and tastes separately, Amy Valesh said. Their parents also made sure to treat the girls equally.

"We used to pull the stunt 'You love her more than me,' and 'She got a better present than me,' all the time," Amy said. "Now, I feel bad when I look back on it."

In their quest to treat their daughters as equals, their parents even gave the women identical cakes on their 24th birthday.

Amy Valesh said she does not get to see her sister as much as she wants to because of the miles between them, but knows she will always see Liz Valesh on their birthday.

"In the future, I hope we don't live far away from each other," she said.

The official did not elaborate, but Albright's main concern is North Korea's missile program and its export of missiles to Iran and Syria. She will confer with Kim on those issues but officials said no agreements are expected.

The United States is considering the creation of a national missile defense, partly out of concern that North Korea may someday direct ICBM's at American cities.

Tartuffe meets expectations

The essence of Molière's Tartuffe, that is, the ambling lines of verse that constitute the sociopolitical satire, has existed since 1664.

That's a long time.

Clearly, Molière's meeting of words, rhythm and ideas has proven to be extremely durable over the centuries. (Tartuffe is still performed annually in France by Molière's original company, the Comédie Française).

So when Iowa City's Riverside Theatre teams with Cornell College to stage play with 330-plus years of history, the question is not whether Molière's classic is worth your time, but rather, does the new production do justice to the work's legacy?

The answer: It does, but not in the way you'd expect.

The first thing that will strike you when you walk into Riverside Theatre's space is the economy of the Tartuffe set design. Three doors, four columns, two chairs, a divan and a table. That's all.

And further, you can't help but notice the color scheme of the set. The doors and columns are a gleaming white, while the pitch-black chairs and divan sit on a charcoal-gray floor. The only bit of color is the purple silk that covers the center table.

All this hits you before a masked actor hits the floor with her staff, announcing the beginning of the play.

But when the residents of Tartuffe's setting, an aristocratic household in 17th-century France, spill on to the stage and commence a raucous chase between and around the set pieces, you realize what scenic designer Scott Olinger and costume designer Erin Howell Gritsch have done.

Suddenly, the stage looks a lot like any number of hip clothing retailers who make their store interiors as sparse and monochromatic as possible, leaving the customer's eye to focus on the merchandise.

In Riverside/Cornell's Tartuffe, the actors themselves are not simply actors but also the most important pieces of the set.

Riverside Theatre, with Peter LaBruscianno (Tartuffe) and Sarah Ewick-Paple (Elmire), do justice to Molière's classic Tartuffe, a sociopolitical satire written in 1664.

The plot, in which the con man Tartuffe, sporting a facade of piety and charity, wins the favor of the wealthy Orgon and schemes for the hand of his daughter and a privileged place in Orgon's will, simply serves to set the actors in motion.

The bright oranges, reds, blues and purples of their costumes comet-tail across the stark set, making Tartuffe as much a production of physicality as of language.

Since 1664, Molière's Tartuffe has endured on the strength of its ideological content and the verse that transmits it, but Riverside and Cornell choose to convey a mood of comic through the exaggerated lean of the white columns and the cartoonish gold cross which sits prominently stage-center on the purple silk-covered table.

So by shifting focus from the acting and its transmission of Molière's political agenda, this particular production of Tartuffe calls for a spectator who appreciates the surface of things. While we are aware of the outstanding performance of Peter LaBruscianno as Tartuffe, his greasy wig and the comic prominence of the cross around his neck are more satisfying.

5 protesters convicted of criminal trespass ...

SAS violates rights

Last week, Students Against Sweatshops discovered that actions do have consequences. When SAS members camped out for six days last year in Jessup Hall, they violated the property rights of the UI. That is why the jury in last week's case convicted five members of SAS for criminal trespass.

SAS would have had you believe that violating property rights was not the issue in its case. The group's attorney argued that the SAS members had a free-speech right to be in Jessup Hall. One member, David Burnett, had the gall to suggest that the ends of his cause justified the property-rights violation when he said, "The jurors ignored the fact that what we were doing led to positive steps by the university."

Burnett and the SAS attorney obviously miss the point. The SAS regularly broke the law. UI has the power to restrict the time, place and manner of protest so long as those restrictions are not used to regulate the content of messages that people express. SAS could have protested for weeks in Jessup Hall during the building's hours. It could have moved outside when Jessup Hall was closed to the public. Instead, SAS regularly broke the law and trespassed on university property.

If anything, the UI went too far to accommodate SAS. UI President Mary Sue Coleman did not ask Public Safety to arrest SAS members when they stormed and took over one of her fire-side chats last year. UI officials filled out the required forms for the group members to help them comply with the regulations affecting campus protests. Ultimately, the UI tolerated criminal trespass on its property for days before taking action. These are not the actions of a university bent on content-based speech restrictions.

Members of SAS need to grow up and understand that a cause does not justify criminal trespass. It is not as if SAS does not have a voice. The group gets more press than any other group on campus. Its letters appear in the DI. Its legal protests are loud and frequent.

The UI properly cares about the First Amendment. It allows protests by a plethora of groups. Last week, Phillip Jones, the UI vice president for Student Services, pointed out that the university's commitment to the First Amendment even protects racist speech. In this case, the university was right and SAS was wrong. The First Amendment protects speech, but it does not give students license to commit crimes.

Iowa schools cancel 2,344 journal subscriptions ...

When dollars trump discourse

The commercialization of our education has to be watched carefully.

It's starting to cost too much to learn here at the UI, and that's not just with tuition. The subscription cost of academic journals has more than doubled in the last 10 years, forcing not just the UI but also Iowa State and the University of Northern Iowa to cancel a combined 2,344 journals during the last fiscal year alone. We're paying more for less, and the prospects for a recovery don't look very good.

The reason for the increased costs of journals? For-profit corporations are buying the journals, turning them into money-making operations and thus increasing their costs. In fact, the Iowa State University Press was recently turned into a commercial venture when it was folded into Blackwell Science, an international science and technical publishing house. These publishing companies are also enforcing strict copyright laws that take away ownership of authors' work from the writers. The commercialization of our education has to be watched carefully. Corporations are already funding research here at the university. The further they buy in, the less control it seems students and faculty have over matters. Because of budget shortfalls (the same thing that's increasing your tuition), libraries will have to continue cutting subscriptions for the foreseeable future.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

New coach disgraces Angie Lee's legacy

As a former Iowa women's basketball player and supporter of the women's basketball team, I am totally disgusted with the onslaught of Lisa Bluder greatness that has become the banner for the 2000-01 basketball season. If you people would open up your eyes and look beyond the doors of Carver-Hawkeye, you might see the real reasons for which Angie Lee left the program. Maybe the administration had a hand in the demise of the women's program as the reporters so eloquently detail. Have you questioned the marketing program that was dismal at best? Ticket sales are up, not because of Bluder, but because the marketing department may have finally gotten off its collective butt and done the job it was supposed to do the last three or four years. The team has a newly designed locker room. Why couldn't the UI have done that while Angie Lee was there? Where did all of the money come from? The team has new uniforms. Why not before? Bluder was given an additional full-time assistant. Why wasn't Lee afforded the luxury of another full-time person? Bluder is making $100,000 more than Lee? Same question — why now and not before? It seems that the Iowa women's Athletics Department did everything in its power to destroy Lee's program and then disguise its pitiful lack of running a topnotch department as Lee's lack of winning, attendance, etc. Don't look to place blame on Lee's shoulders. A coach can only work with what he or she is given, and if you are not given the resources to compete with the top 10 teams in the country, then don't put the expectations of beating the top 10 teams solely on the coach's shoulders. Iowa will never have a more dedicated coach walk the sidelines at Carver-Hawkeye Arena than Lee. The Iowa women's Athletics Department should be ashamed of itself for disguising pathetic administration efforts as a coach's poor coaching. Lee was an excellent basketball coach and a mentor to her kids. Lee quit so hopefully people might open up their eyes and look further than the stat sheet into the women's program. As reporters, it must have been easier to tarnish the reputation of a great coach than to get at the truth.

The administration destroyed what was great about Iowa women's basketball: Angie Lee. Bluder will never be a Hawkeye. She will always be a Bulldog dressed in black and gold. I have no desire to see Drake basketball at Iowa.

The Miss America Pageant during an election year...

The ego-enhancing effects of New York baseball

I was not amused to learn that this year's World Series would be contested by two New York teams, the Yankees and Mets. The ramifications of such an event, I figured, would be too costly for us to bear.

As a Bay Area native, I was hoping for an Oakland-San Francisco matchup in the series, but that wasn't going to be. Instead, I and all other self-respecting non-New Yorkers are left to stomach an event that poses a dire threat to all of us.

New Yorkers, you see, never pass up a chance to make the claim that theirs is the finest city in the world.

Most project an attitude of superiority that, if not deserved, is at least detectable. That baseball's championship will be played between two squads from Gotham will not put a dent in this feeling.

New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani summed up the World Series' phenomenon best. "It will give New York an opportunity to be even more arrogant," said Giuliani, not exactly a model of humility himself. "We'll be able to go around and say we have the two best teams in baseball."

This does not bode well for the rest of us. What we have here is a situation in which a city has: a) two successful baseball teams, and b) the largest media base in the world at its doorstep. Finally, the New York-based media have two of their own teams in a celebrated sporting event, with license to tout the superiority of the teams and their city's overall stature. The end result is that newspapers and networks alike are caught up in a large-scale massaging of New Yorkers' egos, to which there is no end in immediate sight. An incestuous relationship, indeed.

And this is more problematic than most would let on.

Currently, New Yorkers operate under the false presumption that their city is superior to all others, a beacon that inferior cities such as Chicago and Los Angeles must look toward.

Their geographical setting is assumed to give New Yorkers an innate sense of knowledge and culture, and they will never hesitate to mention where they are from.

Outsiders, not possessing this geographical gift, are typically met with cynicism.

Just ask Hillary Rodham Clinton.

This attitude, furthermore, is highly contagious. Many Midwesterners and Southerners spend time in efforts as a coach's poor coaching.

Lee was an excellent basketball coach and a mentor to her kids.

Lee quit so hopefully people might open up their eyes and look further than the stat sheet into the women's program.

their superiority over the poor saps in the South or Midwest.

Until the games end and the craze subsides, there's not much for us to do about it. So go ahead and let those people talk about their city, their culture and their baseball teams. As long as we have our Wal-Marts, bowling alleys and buffet restaurants, New York's got nothing on the rest of us.

English-only laws in Marshalltown draw fire

■ Participants at a Marshall County meeting say an English-only resolution incites racism.

Associated Press

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa — Ramona Chavez Lopez says she and other Latinos have been working hard to learn English, but a resolution making English the official language in Marshall County doesn't help them and only fuels racism.

Just recently, her son, Jose Grimaldo, 20, was at the Swift pork processing plant cafeteria and was told that if he didn't speak English, he couldn't buy food there.

"This is wrong," she said.

She was among the dozens of Latino families who turned out for a public hearing on Oct. 21 held by the Iowa Commission of Latino Affairs. The commission is holding several such meetings around Iowa as it sets its legislative agenda.

The Marshall County Board of Supervisors last month passed a resolution making English the county's official language.

At the Oct. 21 meeting, Latino Affairs Commissioner John-Paul Chaissson of Iowa City began by making it clear that the county's resolution, which applies to county records and correspondence, did not apply.

"Spanish is very welcome," he said.

People came from Ames, Des Moines, Urbandale, Waterloo, Coralville, Tama and Marshalltown to attend the hearing. They spoke about the difficult working conditions in meatpacking plants and expressed their frustration at the resolution.

"I am offended," said Braulio Pereyra of Marshalltown. "They can use us to work in the fields. They use us to work in the packing houses, which is difficult, heavy work. And they want to offend us by not letting us speak our language."

Lorenzo Jasso, the principal of McKinley Elementary School in Des Moines, said 52 percent of his students speak Spanish.

"To pass ceremonial resolutions that are only there to fire the intensity of anti-immigrant sentiments — as Iowans, we're smarter than that," he said.

The three county supervisors who passed the English-only resolution did not attend the hearing.

In a telephone interview, Marshall County Supervisor John Soorholtz of Melburne defended the resolution, saying it honored the 2,200-signature petition gathered by members of the local Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"I didn't see this as racism or Nazism," he said. "I think we responded to the veterans that were requesting that it happen. They're trying to make a statement nationwide. I think we have to respect their wishes."

Septuplet mom says faith gets her through long days

DES MOINES (AP) — Bobbi McCaughey, the Iowa septuplets' mom and author of a book called Celebrating the Wonders of Motherhood, admits there are times when she gets frustrated with so many young children creating havoc in her house.

But she said those moments are offset by the times when the children are playing together and break into a chorus of "Jesus Loves Me."

"I think it is times like those that keep you from killing your kids," McCaughey told a convention of Christian women.

McCaughey spoke on Oct. 21 to more than 12,000 women attending the "Extravagant Grace 2000" conference, part of a 24-stop nationwide tour this year by Women of Faith, a non-denominational Texas-based organization.

Since the birth of the world's first surviving set of septuplets — Nov. 19, 1997 — Bobbi and Kenny McCaughey have used their celebrity to share their religious beliefs.

The McCaughey family, which also includes 4-year-old Mikayla, lives in Carlisle, approximately 10 miles south of Des Moines.

Buena Vista gets wired, wirelessly

STORM LAKE, Iowa (AP) — It's a common site all over Buena Vista University, from the football field to the chapel: students with laptop computers tapped into a campuswide wireless network.

Buena Vista is providing Gateway Solo 2550 laptops to all 1,250 full-time students this fall. The computers have become as commonplace and essential as pens, pencils and notebooks.

"This has definitely changed student life," said senior student Kelly Heinen. "Everyone's always checking their e-mail. In my classes, there's always five or six of us taking notes on our computers."

The wireless network includes 130 transmitters placed around the 60-acre campus with a 2.4 gigahertz signal. Each transmitter has a reception range of 70 to 500 feet; the overlap enables a person to walk across campus and never lose the signal.

"More power, that's what we tried to do," college spokesman Ken Clipperton said.

Rams lose Warner hurt

Kurt Warner breaks his finger in a 54-34 loss to Kansas City

By Doug Tucker
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A broken little finger on Kurt Warner's right hand could sideline the NFL passing leader four-to-six weeks, the St. Louis Rams say.

Nonsense, says Warner, whose team also might be without Marshall Faulk.

"I'm going to be at home praying to try to get back next week," said the NFL's top passer, who was injured right before halftime of Kansas City's 54-34 victory over the previously unbeaten Super Bowl champs. "I'm not saying I'm going to be out for four weeks."

Ninth-inning surge not enough to stop Yankees

■ Roger Clemens shuts down the Mets for eight innings in the Yankees 6-5, game 2 victory.

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Roger Clemens didn't throw a ball at Mike Piazza this time. Just a bat.

And when the benches emptied in the very first inning, it was clear this Subway Series had a definite mean streak, fueled by a beaning that was far from forgotten.

Clemens set the tone right away and pitched eight shutout innings and the New York Yankees held off the Mets' five-run ninth for a 6-5 victory Sunday night and a 2-0 lead in the World Series.

Piazza seemed to unleash all his fury in the ninth, hitting a two-run homer off reliever Jeff Nelson. Jay Payton hit a three-run homer off Mariano Rivera, but it could not stop the Yankees from posting their record 14th straight World Series victory.

Scott Brosius homered off loser Mike Hampton and hit a sacrifice fly, and Paul O'Neill, Derek Jeter and Tino Martinez each had three hits for the Yankees.

For the second straight night, the Mets looked lost at Yankee Stadium, this time making three early errors as a sellout crowd of 56,059 hooted.

Now, when the Series shifts to Shea Stadium for Game 3 Tuesday night, the Mets must hope Rick Reed can somehow beat Orlando Hernandez, the only pitcher ever to win his first eight postseason decisions.

His cap pulled down low and his glove held high to shield all but his eyes, Clemens held the Mets to two singles.

The Rocket was clearly revved up from the start, bouncing all around the diamond to congratulate his fielders. He hardly needed a lot of help as he struck out nine and walked none.

Nelson took over to start the ninth and gave up a single to Edgardo Alfonzo, Piazza's homer high off the left-field wall.

Buckeyes make Iowa see red

■ Ohio State's Steve Bellisari has a career day in Iowa's 38-10 loss.

By Melinda Mawdsley
The Daily Iowan

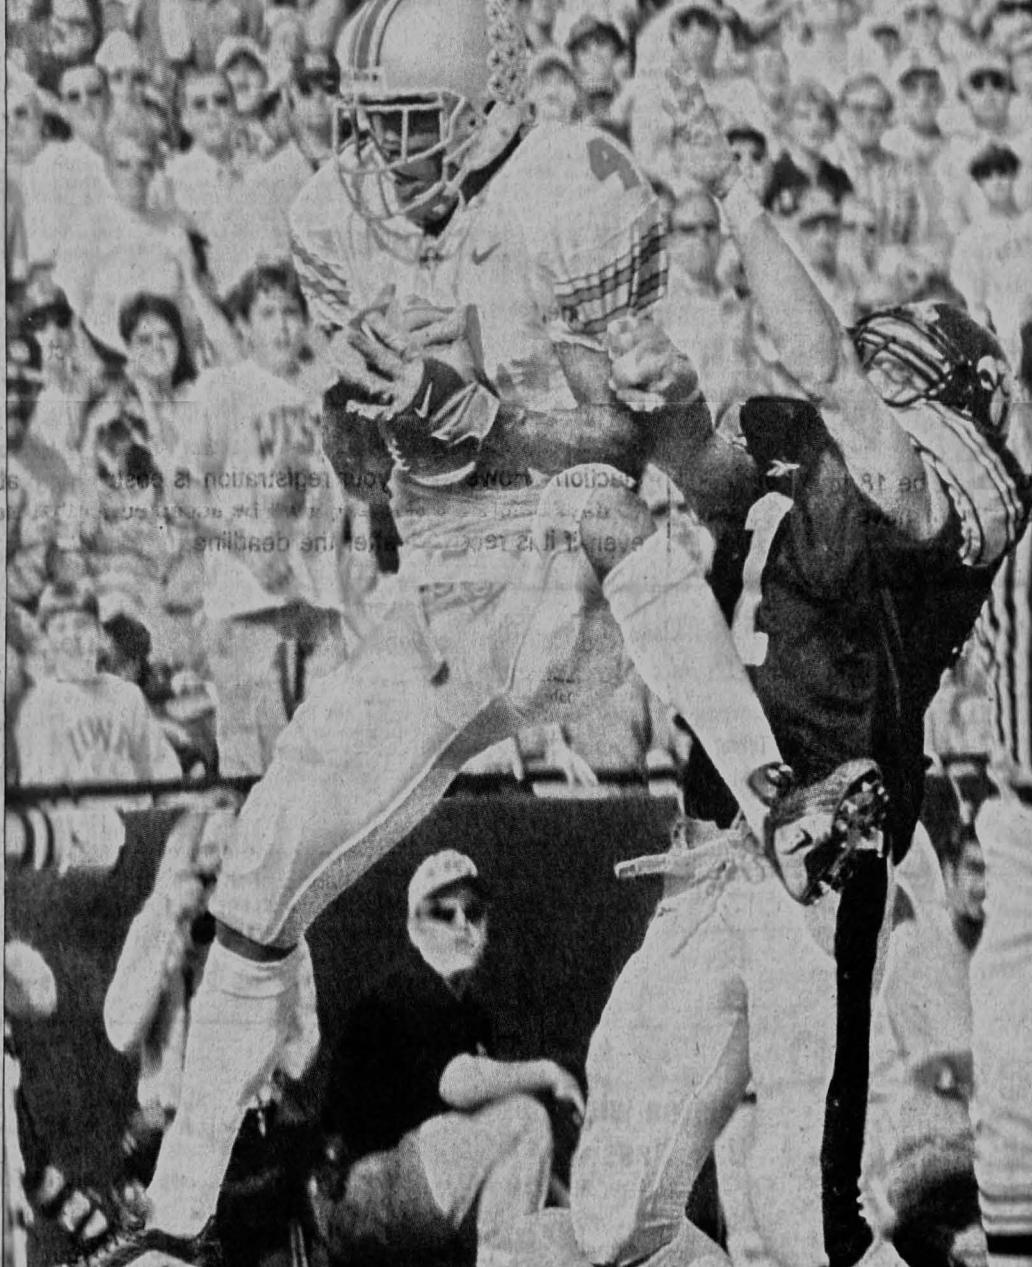

Slap a few more Buckeye stickers on Steve Bellisari's helmet.

After being criticized by Ohio State coach John Cooper earlier in the week, the junior quarterback responded with what Cooper said was Bellisari's "best game he's had throwing the football," as the No. 15 Buckeyes tossed Iowa 38-10 defeat on Oct. 21.

After Cooper was quoted as complaining of his signal caller's inability to see and work with what the opposition was giving him, Bellisari connected on 17 of 29 passes for 315 yards and three touchdowns, taking advantage of the huge patches of Kinnick Stadium grass the Iowa defensive backs left open.

He transformed into a left-handed marksman, passing through outstretched hands and over black-and-gold helmets of Hawkeye defensive backs all afternoon. The run defense effectively contained the Buckeye ground game, so Bellisari was forced to throw — something Iowa expected to see.

"Teams have had some success throwing against us, so obviously everyone's going to try doing that," senior cornerback Tim Dodge said. "When the guys up front stop the run like they do, it's going to cause

Iowa wins two thrillers

■ The Hawkeye volleyball team takes the first two of a four-match road trip.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

In perhaps its most daunting challenge to date, the Iowa volleyball team proved it was more than up for the challenge.

Iowa rallied for a five-game victory on Oct. 21 to down the No. 20 Michigan State Spartans, 3-2. The win came on the heels of another 3-2 victory on Oct. 20 against Michigan. The pair of victories give the Hawkeyes a 10-8 record overall, while allowing them to improve to 6-4 in the conference.

"This weekend was so important for us," said coach Rita Buck-Crockett. "It's important we continue to win the matches we should win, but we needed a victory in the top-20 teams."

Things did not look optimistic for the Hawkeyes on Oct. 21, as the Spartans burst out of the gates to take the first game, 15-11. Iowa fought back in game two, coming within two points of Michigan State at 10-8 before the Spartans won, 15-12.

Needing to win the final three games for the upset, Iowa slowly went to work. The Hawks blazed to a 9-0 start in the third game before the Spartans rallied to close the gap. The Hawkeyes eventually took the game, 15-10. They continued to build toward a victory in the fourth game, taking a 6-2 lead early. The two teams swapped points back and forth, and then, with the match tied at 13, Iowa tallied two straight to win 15-13.

The Hawkeyes showed they were determined to leave East Lansing as winners, opening the final game of the match with a 8-6 lead before reeling off five straight points for a 13-6 advantage. Michigan State managed only five more points as Iowa capped its weekend sweep with a 15-11 win.

The Oct. 20 match against Michigan was similar, as the Wolverines put the ball in Iowa's court by winning the first two games, 15-10 and 15-12. As if getting warmed up for the Michigan State contest, Iowa rallied to a 12-1 lead to open the third game. Behind three service aces from Evelena Ornelas, the Hawks remained alive with a 15-6 win. Game four proved to

Evans, Oliver shine at Black and Gold Blowout

■ The duo of Reggie Evans and Dean Oliver score 24 points apiece in the scrimmage.

By Todd Brommelkamp
The Daily Iowan

Players traded teams, and the competition wasn't quite so intense as a Big Ten contest, but the Iowa men's basketball team was still able to show off its considerable talent at the Black and Gold Blowout at Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Oct. 21.

A crowd of 8,722 Hawkeye fans turned out for the event, which was sponsored by Wells Fargo, to get their first glimpses of Steve Alford's promising team.

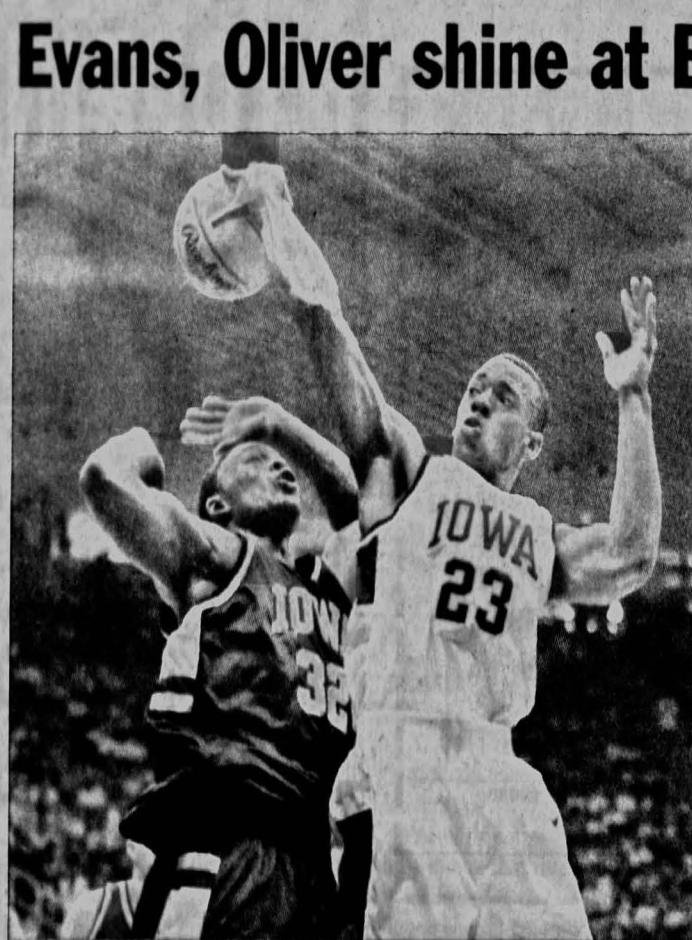

Senior guard Dean Oliver and junior-college transfer Reggie Evans scored 24 points each to lead the Black squad past the Gold, 92-69. Oliver and Evans were the only two players to remain with the Black team for the entire game. Brody Boyd remained with the Gold squad for the duration of the day, chipping in 18 points and 6 steals in the lopsided loss.

Oliver and Evans also highlighted various aspects of their personal games. Evans, who is expected to be a defensive force this season, pulled down eight rebounds and had six steals. Evans also showed his precision from the line, with 14 of his 24 points coming from free-throws. Oliver shot 66 percent from beyond the arc, nailing six 3-point attempts in nine tries.

Luke Recker and Ryan Hogan both got their first taste of competition since sitting out last season. Recker finished the day with 19 points, while Hogan tossed in 21.

Others contributing to the box score with double-digit performances were freshmen Sean Sonderleiter and Courtney Scott and junior Duez Henderson. The two new faces scored 11 and 10 points respectively, while the veteran Henderson added 14.

Dillon breaks Payton's record

Cincinnati's Corey Dillon runs for 278 yards, eclipsing the single-game record.

CINCINNATI (AP) — An incredulous Corey Dillon dropped to his knees, drove his facemask into the ground and prayed while jubilant teammates dumped containers of water on his back.

The icy shower and the NFL record were both quite a jolt.

Dillon ran for an NFL-record 278 yards Sunday and broke two long touchdown runs in the closing minutes that secured the Cincinnati Bengals' first win, 31-21, over the Denver Broncos.

He didn't realize he'd topped Walter Payton's single-game mark until he reached the sideline and the record was flashed on the scoreboard and announced to the crowd.

"I'm still in shock," said Dillon, who also topped Jim Brown's rookie record in 1997. "I still don't believe it. From how I was running, I didn't see that I had that many yards. I was just out there trying to get 4 yards."

Dillon's scoring runs of 65 and 41 yards in the final five minutes put him ahead of Payton, who had 275 yards against Minnesota on Nov. 20, 1977.

The breakaway runs also put the final stiff-arm on the biggest rushing game by an NFL team in 50 years. The Bengals (1-6) completed only two passes — none after the first quarter — but set a team record by rushing for 407.

It was the fifth-highest rushing total in league history and the most since the New York Giants churned out 423 against Baltimore in 1950. Akili Smith and Scott Mitchell were a combined 2-of-9 for 32 yards, tying the team record for fewest completions.

"Back when I was in high school, I think we had some games like that," Mitchell said. "I guess if you stay around long enough, you'll see everything. I saw something new today."

Redskins 35, Jaguars 16

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Albert Connell sprinted to his best day ever, helping the Washington Redskins shovel even more dirt onto the Jacksonville Jaguars and their miserable season.

Connell had 211 yards in receptions and three touchdowns, both career highs, to lift the Redskins to a 35-16 victory Sunday. It was the fifth straight win for Washington (6-2) and the fifth consecutive spirit-numbing loss for Jacksonville (2-6).

The Redskins expected big things from Connell this season, especially after a season-ending injury to Michael Westbrook. But Connell slowly worked his way toward the disappointment category, without a touchdown catch and with just one 100-yard game this season.

Raiders 31, Seahawks 3

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tyrone Wheatley had already run for a career-high 118 yards, and it wasn't even halftime.

Wheatley finished with 156 yards rushing on 15 carries, including a career-best 80-yard touchdown run, as the Oakland Raiders defeated the woefully ineffective Seattle Seahawks, 31-3, Sunday.

Rich Gannon found Tim Brown in the end zone with throws of 16 and 9 yards and threw a 24-yard scoring pass to James Jett as the surging Raiders (6-1) won their fourth straight. Sebastian Janikowski added a 32-yard field goal.

Steelers 22, Browns 0

PITTSBURGH — Just as the Cincinnati Bengals asked the week before, the Cleveland Browns must be wondering: Is our offense that bad, or is the Pittsburgh Steelers defense that good?

The Steelers shut out their second consecutive opponent, the first time they've done that since the Steel Curtain days in 1976, and their offense converted four Browns breakdowns into scores in a 22-0 victory Sunday.

The last time the Steelers (4-3) had successive shutouts were the final two games in 1976, when they beat Tampa Bay, 42-0, and Houston, 21-0, while shutting out five of their final nine opponents.

The Steelers' fourth consecutive victory, their longest such streak since a five-game run in 1997, was a near replay of a 15-0 win over Cincinnati, when their dominating defense overcame a lethargic offense.

Tom Uhlman/Associated Press

Cincinnati running back Corey Dillon scores on a 41-yard touchdown run against Denver Sunday. Dillon broke Walter Payton's single-game rushing record on the run and ran for 278 yards.

Jerome Bettis ran for 105 yards on 33 carries and the game's only touchdown in his third successive 100-yard game, and Kris Brown kicked five field goals, three following turnovers.

Vikings 31, Bills 27

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Vikings can win many ways, but in a jam they'll usually look for their biggest threat — Randy Moss.

Moss rescued the Vikings from an 11-point, fourth-quarter deficit Sunday with a spectacular 39-yard touchdown catch late in the fourth quarter of a 31-27 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

The Vikings (7-0), the NFL's only unbeaten team following St. Louis' loss to Kansas City, also needed a TD reception by Cris Carter, another dazzling fourth quarter by Daunte Culpepper and the record-breaking foot of Gary Anderson.

But to win, Minnesota needed Moss to get behind Bills defenders Daryl Porter and Kevin Irvin and keep his feet barely inbounds while catching the pass from Culpepper in the back of the end zone to tie the score at 27.

Saints 21, Falcons 19

ATLANTA — Ricky Williams hardly practiced during the week because of an aching right knee. He was at full speed when Sunday rolled around.

Williams rushed for 156 yards and three touchdowns to carry New Orleans to its third straight victory, 21-19 over the Atlanta Falcons.

The win gave Carolina (3-4) a season sweep over the 49ers and improved Seifert to 4-0 against his former team. The Panthers beat the Niners, 38-22, in Week 2.

Colts 30, Patriots 23

INDIANAPOLIS — New England seemed to have every advantage against Indianapolis on Sunday. It ran nearly twice as many plays, held a decisive edge in time of possession and did everything right — except put the Colts away.

Somehow, Indianapolis stopped the Patriots' ball-control offense just long enough to rally for a 30-23 victory.

"I took it easy in practice all week," said Williams, who had 29 bruising carries. "It turned out great."

Eagles 13, Bears 9

PHILADELPHIA — The artificial turf at Veterans Stadium struck again.

Donovan McNabb threw for 207 yards and one touchdown Sunday as the Philadelphia Eagles held on to beat the Chicago Bears, 13-9, after Cade McNown separated his throwing shoulder.

Jim Miller's desperation pass fell incomplete as time expired, and Chicago fell to 1-7, its worst start since 1997.

McNown injured his left shoulder when he was driven hard into the turf by Mike Caldwell on a 1-yard scramble early in the second quarter and did not return. McNown was 6-of-9 for 49 yards and was sacked twice.

"There's not a lot of give out there," said McNown, who'll be re-evaluated today. "The only thing that gave was my shoulder."

Unbeatens survive in college football

■ Virginia Tech, Clemson and TCU all scored unspectacular wins Saturday.

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

Every once in awhile, even the best in the business have a bad day at the office.

Just ask Virginia Tech's Michael Vick, Clemson's Woodrow Dantzler and TCU's LaDainian Tomlinson. All three Heisman Trophy contenders were virtually shut down on Saturday night, but their teammates came to the rescue, and the Hokies, Tigers and Horned Frogs remain in the national title chase with perfect records.

No. 2 Virginia Tech (7-0, 5-0 Big East) was down two touchdowns to Syracuse before rallying for a 22-14 victory at the Carrier Dome. Vick was sacked eight times, threw for 75 yards and carried 16 times for 9 yards. His 55-yard TD run with 1:34 left sealed the win after two third-quarter scores by Lee Suggs had put the Hokies ahead by a point.

"I'm not particularly interested in style points," Tech coach Frank Beamer said after ending a five-game losing streak at Syracuse. "I'm just glad to get out of here and get that streak over."

At Chapel Hill, N.C., No. 5 Clemson (8-0, 6-0 ACC) fell behind North Carolina by 17 points before backup Willie Simmons replaced an injured Dantzler and threw four TD passes in a 38-24 victory. Dantzler, averaging 298.5 yards of offense entering the game, was held to 22 yards rushing and 68 yards passing before leaving with a bruised left ankle with 6:33 left in the half. He could have returned, but coach Tommy Bowden decided to stick with Simmons.

"We overcame a lot of adversity," Bowden said. "That says a lot about our kids. Sometimes that takes years to build."

On a rainy night in Oklahoma, No. 11 TCU (6-0) managed a 17-3 victory over Tulsa despite Tomlinson's lowest output of the season — 119 yards on 27 carries. Tomlinson entered the game leading the nation with 194.8 yards per game. The Horned Frogs intercepted four passes — two setting up third-quarter TDs.

"I said to you guys all along that there would be games like this," Tomlinson said after his team ran its winning streak to 11 games. "I don't go out to win the Heisman Trophy. I go out to win games."

After Saturday's games, five teams are still perfect. The other unbeatens are No. 1 Nebraska (7-0, 4-0 Big 12), a 59-0 winner over Baylor, and No. 3 Oklahoma (6-0, 3-0), which did not play.

The first Bowl Championship Series standings will be released tonight, with Nebraska expected to be first and either Virginia Tech or Oklahoma second.

The BCS standings use the AP media poll and USA Today/ESPN coaches poll, eight computer rankings and a strength-of-schedule formula to determine which teams play in a national title game.

For now, the standings won't mean much because the Huskers visit the Sooners next Saturday, followed a week later by Virginia Tech at No. 4 Miami (5-1, 3-1 Big East) and Clemson at No. 6 Florida State (7-1, 5-0 ACC).

Florida State, meanwhile, is hoping to get to the title game a third straight time.

"We know we have to win out," Seminoles wide receiver Snoop Minnis. "We're taking each game like it's a playoff game, and it really is a playoff game because if we lose, we're out of it."

At Lincoln, Neb., the Huskers set a school record with 38 first-quarter points in handing Baylor its third consecutive shutout. The Bears (2-5, 0-4) have been outscored by a combined 117-0, while Nebraska has outscored last two opponents 115-3.

"We really dominated from the start and really just didn't make any mistakes," the Huskers' Dan Alexander said after running for 104 yards and two TDs. "I think our offense can do that to anyone."

In other games:

• Santana Moss returned a punt 71 yards for one TD and caught a 67-yard pass from Ken Dorsey for another as Miami defeated Temple 45-17 in Philadelphia. Moss had 241 all-purpose yards against the Owls (4-4, 1-3).

• Chris Weinkne threw for 274 yards and two TDs and Florida State held Virginia (4-3, 3-2) to 199 total yards in a 37-3 win.

■ After re-working its doubles team, the Hawkeyes saw some positive results.

By Nick Firchau
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's tennis team had arguably their best tournament of the season this weekend at the Yellow Jacket Invitational in Atlanta, highlighted by a singles flight title and titles in both doubles flights.

Sophomores Steffi Hoch and Beth Hayden both reached the finals of the tournament's C flight to Central Florida's Sonja Prokopek, 3-6, 0-6. Hochman has advanced to finals matches in each of this fall's three tournaments so far.

Haas once again had a strong showing in the tournament's singles A flight, winning her fifth-place match Sunday. Wardlaw said that he thought Haas was the second best singles player in the tournament.

"We have a lot of depth; we probably had the most depth of any team in this tournament," he said.

The team will wrap-up the fall season at the Midwest Regionals in Ann Arbor, Mich., on Nov. 2-6.

Ohio State continued its scoring ways in the second half, scoring two more touchdowns, one by Germany and the other by Chad Caccio.

Iowa put together a scoring drive of its own behind some solid running from Ladell Betts and passing from Jon Beutler. The drive was capped off by Beutler to Erik Jensen a 27-yard touch-down pass.

That would be Iowa's last score of the game and Beutler's last drive. The quarterback left the game with an ankle sprain late in the second quarter.

ohio state 38, iowa 10*Hawkeyes should've just stayed at home Saturday

Nate Kaeding would have litte more confidence in his leg if he hadn't been playing Saturday. Kaeding missed three field goals of 40, 31 and 33 yards.

Center A.J. Blazek wouldn't have got hurt either. He bruised his hip.

There are not a whole lot of good things to be said about the Ohio State game. Iowa had numerous players hurt. Many players had their confidence destroyed after the much more talented Buckeyes schooled them.

This game was very comparable with the Michigan State game last year. Iowa got smashed 49-3, managed only 107 yards rushing and basically did nothing right.

Well, on Saturday, Iowa did nothing right again, which brings up the topic of this team's improvement and whether or not there is any.

Iowa played terribly last week and played equally terribly this week. To be honest with you, these last two games Iowa has played in do not look a whole lot different from last year.

Junior receiver Kahli Hill could have taken the day off to spend with his family in their time of need. Hill's grandmother passed away Saturday morning.

Safety Chris Smith wouldn't have gotten a sprained ankle.

Hawkeyes managed at least 53 yards rushing last year.

The defense got outclassed by Ohio State's receivers, as it has many times this year, and last year.

After the game players said they thought they were getting better, but the facts are that this team lost by more points to Illinois and Ohio State than it did a year ago. Iowa also had fewer yards of offense in this year's Ohio State and Illinois games.

Iowa managed 336 yards of offense against the Buckeyes last year but only 246 this year. Against Illinois last year, the Hawkeyes put up 389 yards, 122 fewer than last year.

One could say that Iowa's one win so far this year was more impressive than last year's victory over Northern Illinois, but I'm not so sure even that is true anymore. Michigan State is last in the Big Ten at 0-4.

If there is improvement, it's so small it can barely be seen with the naked eye, or at least the eyes of fans that are showing up in fewer and fewer numbers at Iowa's games.

Teams that get turned around make visible improvements. So far, Iowa's improvements haven't been too visible.

Lynch leads soccer in win over Illinois

■ Iowa defeated Illinois 5-1 in Iowa City.

By Laura Podolak
The Daily Iowan

On Oct. 20, the Iowa soccer team embarrassed the Fighting Illini of Illinois 5-1, with Sarah Lynch playing the hero of the day and recording her second hat trick in her two-year career.

She is the only Hawkeye to score three goals in a game twice. The first time she recorded a hat trick was in the 1999 season against Wisconsin, Green Bay.

Iowa coach Wendy Logan was impressed with her team's play. Although the Hawks have scored 12 goals in the last two games, she tipped her hat to the defense.

"I think that even the team mentioned, 'Hey defense, great job today,'" Logan said. "And they did do phenomenal job."

The most amazing thing about the solid play of the defense is that the back line is so young, she said. The Hawkeyes have rotated one freshman, two sophomores and two juniors in the back line this year, all of whom have seen a lot of action in past years.

"It is like having four freshmen in the back," Logan said.

Also, the Hawkeyes have a new goalkeeper in Liz Hendel, who only played two games last season. But, this season, she has proved herself worthy of the starting position. Hendel recorded four saves on the day as Illinois pounded 22 shots on goal. The sophomore only let one goal past her late in the second half to deny her a shutout.

The Hawkeyes didn't waste any time scoring. Lynch pounded home her first goal of the day off of a pass from Julie Atkocaitus within the first minute of play. The Hawkeyes played stingy defense for the remainder of the half, scoring their final four goals in the second half.

Americans get big win in Presidents Cup

■ The U.S. gets its largest win in any cup since the 1967 Ryder Cup.

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Va. — The Americans got their revenge in the Presidents Cup and gave captain Ken Venturi the perfect ending to his career.

Hammered and humiliated in Australia two years ago, the American team — and yes, they were a team — played inspired golf from the opening match and turned the tables on the International team.

Not only did they reclaim the cup, they handed out an even worse beating than they took in the "Massacre at Melbourne" in 1998.

Natah Begay closed out the matches with a 1-up victory over Retief Goosen, giving the Americans the biggest rout ever in the Presidents Cup — 21½-10½ — and their largest margin of victory in any cup since a 15-point win in the 1967 Ryder Cup.

"We didn't want to go out today and let our guard down," said Tiger Woods, who beat Vijay Singh and finished his first winning record in team competition, at 3-2.

Leading 14-6 going into the 12 singles matches, Davis Love III clinched the cup with a 4-and-3 victory over Ernie Els, who became the first player in the Presidents Cup to lose all five matches.

That gave the Americans enough points to turn the rest of a gorgeous afternoon along the shores of Lake Manassas into a tribute to Venturi, who won the 1964 U.S. Open up the road at Congressional.

Venturi, a CBS Sports analyst the past 32 years, hugged Love as he walked off the green.

"This may be the one of the happiest days of my life," Venturi said. "I'm so proud of my team. I couldn't think of 12 finer people."

He couldn't have gotten any better play, from the time they took a 5-0 in the opening session and never let up.

"It's nice to be one of the 12 guys who got it for Kenny," Love said after his 4-and-3 victory. "This is his last great thing in golf. We didn't want to send him out on a sour note."

But they wanted more than the cup.

Coming off a 20½-11½ loss in the last Presidents Cup, the worst beating ever suffered by an American team, they wanted to fully repay the favor.

"Keep it up, you're point 21," Paul Azinger said to Tom Lehman, who struggled to stay in his match with Steve Elkington. Lehman didn't get it done, but a pair of rookies bringing up the rear — Kirk Triplett and Begay — managed to come through.

For Woods, it also was personal.

After missing a rare putt in his best-ball loss to Singh on Saturday, he noticed Singh's caddie, Paul Tesori, wearing a cap with "Tiger Who?" stitched on the back.

Few putts were conceded in a match between the players who won all the majors this year — Singh the Masters, Woods the other three. On the fourth hole, Woods already had a bogey but refused to give Singh a 10-foot birdie putt — or the 18-inch par putt that followed.

Woods finally closed him out with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 17th for a 2-and-1 victory.

"I wanted him, and I know he wanted me," Woods said.

That was the only sign of controversy in this Presidents Cup, a kinder, gentler affair. Not a heckle was heard the entire week, and Love even mocked the infamous American charge across the 17th green at the Ryder Cup last year.

After Stewart Cink closed out Greg Norman on the 17th, Love walked over to congratulate him and stopped on the fringe as if he were about to go over a cliff.

Instead, it was the International team that must have felt like jumping.

Trying to prove it could win on American soil, it suffered an equally embarrassing week on the Robert Trent Jones Golf Club, where it is now 0-for-3.

SPORTS BRIEF

Claxton out for season

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia 76ers top draft pick Craig "Speedy" Claxton will miss the season after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee during Sunday night's exhibition game against the Utah Jazz.

Claxton, a point guard out of Hofstra University who was the 20th overall pick in June's NBA draft, was driving for a layup on a fast break when he collided with Utah's Quincy Lewis. Claxton went down, grabbing his knee, and was carried off by Sixers medical personnel.

"It's a killer," Sixers coach Larry Brown said of Claxton's injury. "I don't know how you react to something like that. He was playing great. He was going to be a big contributor."

Khannouchi sets American marathon record

■ Khalid Khannouchi sets the record at the Chicago Marathon with a time of 2 hours, 7 minutes.

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

CHICAGO — This was Khalid Khannouchi's Olympics.

Still disappointed at not being able to represent the United States in Sydney, Khannouchi set the American marathon best on Sunday, winning the Chicago Marathon in 2 hours, 7 minutes, 1 second.

His wife, Sandra, gave him an American flag after he crossed the finish line, and he wrapped it around his shoulders after bending down to kiss the ground. Tears ran down his cheeks as he held the flag over his head and the crowd cheered.

"This one is for America and for me," said Khannouchi, who became a U.S. citizen in May. "This was another Olympics today."

Catherine Ndereba of Kenya, the Boston Marathon champion, won the women's race in 2:21:33.

Khannouchi's record smashed the previous U.S. marks, both official and unofficial. Bob Kempainen ran a 2:08:47 at Boston in 1994, but it wasn't recognized because it was done on a point-to-point course. David Morris ran a 2:09:32 at Chicago last year.

"When I'm here, I feel something is attracting me to the streets of Chicago. It's very special," Khannouchi said. "I didn't want to embarrass the crowd here. I knew they were counting on me as a favorite son of Chicago and as an American."

It was the third victory in Chicago for Khannouchi, who set the world best of 2:05:42 here last year, when he still ran as a Moroccan citizen. He's the first American to win the Chicago Marathon since Greg Meyer in 1982.

Josephat Kiprono of Kenya finished second to Khannouchi in 2:07:29. Moses Tanui of Kenya was third.

Khannouchi gets $75,000 for his victory plus a $30,000 bonus for finishing under 2:08. Though prizes are doubled for Americans who finish in the top 10, Khannouchi wasn't eligible because rules require runners to be U.S. citizens as of Jan. 1.

Ndereba missed the course record by 12 seconds, but bettered her personal best by almost five minutes. Fellow Kenyan Lornah Kiplagat, who'd won her last eight races 2:09:32 at Chicago last year.

"I didn't even know how close I was," Ndereba said of the course record, set in 1985 by Joan Benoit Samuelson. "If I knew, maybe I would have tried to use my negative splits to try to break the record."

No other American man finished close to Khannouchi. Morris, of Missoula, Mont., finished seventh in 2:12:00, and Eric Mack of Las Vegas was eighth in 2:12:42.

Libbie Hickman of Fort Collins, Colo., was the top American woman, finishing in sixth place in 2:32:09. Christine Junkerman of Leesburg, Va., was seventh in 2:32:45, and Kristy Johnston of Shepherdstown, W.Va., was eighth in 2:33:20.

A 45-year-old man collapsed at the 22½-mile mark and died of cardiac arrest. His name was not immediately released at his wife's request.

Born in Morocco, Khannouchi moved to the United States in 1993 and married Sandra, a naturalized U.S. citizen, three years later. Feeling embraced by Americans and abandoned by his country's track federation, he applied for citizenship in the hope he could run for the United States in Sydney.

But his case was delayed, and he wasn't granted citizenship until May 2. The U.S. marathon trials were held five days later, but Khannouchi skipped them because of injuries and a fear the Moroccan track federation would block him from running in Sydney.

"(The Olympics) were very important to me. Crying or thinking about it is not going to make it any better," he said. "So we set another goal. We decided to come to the second Olympics in Chicago."

Sunday's marathon was the first with seven sub-2:07 runners, and it was clear early that this would be a tactical race. Khannouchi and the rest of the top runners hung behind the pacers until the 16th mile, when Josephat Kiprono made a surge.

Ohio State's Reggie Germany loses the ball in the second quarter as he is tackled by Iowa defensive back Benny Sapp during Iowa's 38-10 loss over the Buckeyes.

teams to have to try to pass the ball. Unfortunately, we didn't stop the pass well enough today."

The Buckeye receiving duo of Reggie Germany and Ken-Yon Rambo combined for 153 receiving yards and two touchdowns, using their superior speed and height advantage to exploit the youth and inexperience of Iowa's defensive backfield.

Ohio State's defense set the tone early after turning two Iowa turnovers, a Jon Beutjer fumble and interception, into 10 points in the opening five minutes of the game.

Following the turnovers, Iowa's offense responded with a scoring drive that resulted in a field goal.

Two Ohio State touchdowns later, out of the shotgun and facing third and 21, Beutjer connected with freshman tight end Erik Jensen over the middle for a 27-yard touchdown completion. Later in the second quarter, Beutjer went down with an ankle injury and did not return.

Neither did the Iowa offense. The Hawkeyes were held to 13 total yards rushing for the game. Backup junior quarterback Kyle McCann was battered by Buckeye linemen at his first snap and was sacked five times in a little over two quarters.

"It's tough. It's not an ideal situation for anybody," he said on his abrupt entry. "Things like that happen in football, and you just have to try to make the best of the situation."

Junior wide receiver Kahlil Hill was also placed in a tough situation, learning during the game that his grandmother had died. He was forced to sit out the first quarter after missing Iowa's Oct. 15 practice — which he said he missed because of the emotional strain he was dealing with.

Hill wrote a statement prior to the Ohio State game, and Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz read it afterwards.

"... We expected to lose her (Hill's grandmother) at any time," Hill wrote. "I needed a time-out emotionally. In my frustration Sunday, I left the complex and practice without permission. I was wrong, and I apologize..."

The statement continued by saying, "The team has rules. We all have to abide by these rules. There are consequences to breaking team rules. We pretty much expect to play with a level of physical pain in this game, and now I am learning to play with some emotional pain."

Hill entered the game in the second quarter but was held to one catch for nine yards. Center A.J. Blazek, who went through a similar situation with his grandfather last year, didn't learn of Hill's grandmother's passing until after the game.

"He came into the game with a tear in his eye," Blazek said. "I know the kid likes to play so much. I thought it was just because he was out of the game. It's a real sad deal. I told him, 'If you want anything, come to me.'"

Up next for Iowa is Wisconsin. Kickoff for the game between the Hawkeyes and Badgers is scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday at Kinnick Stadium.

be a battle, with Michigan determined to get the victory at home. Trailing 12-9, Iowa rallied for four straight to take a 13-12 lead. The Wolverines then took a 14-13 lead before the resilient Hawkeyes posted three straight points for a 16-14 victory. Game five picked up where the previous one left off with the teams scrapping for points. With the match tied at 12, Jamie Lansing gave the Hawkeyes a shot in the arm and a 13-12 lead with a big kill. After trading points, Kelli Chesnut served an ace for the 15-13 winner.

Highlighting Iowa's efforts was Fabiana De Abreu. The Brazilian recorded back-to-back triple-doubles. They were her third and fourth of the season.

"It was such a group effort for us this weekend," Buck-Crockett said. "We needed to do well on this road trip and to already have won two games is big for us."

The victories keep hopes of an NCAA bid alive as well as give the Hawkeyes a boost of confidence as they continue a grueling road trip this weekend with matches at No. 6 Wisconsin and Northwestern Friday and Saturday.

and Super Bowl MVP, was hurt on what Rams coach Mike Martz said was the key play of the game. Trailing 27-14, the Rams (6-1) had driven to the Kansas City 8. But the ball was fumbled on the center snap, and Kansas City (4-3) recovered.

Warner said the ball hit his finger in an unusual way, causing the fumble and what he first thought was a dislocation.

"The ball came up and came off my fingers," Warner said. "I popped it back in but they X-rayed it, and it was broken. I just didn't have any strength in it."

Faulk injured his left shoulder in the second half, but returned to the game.

"Marshall unfortunately may be down," said Martz. "I'm really concerned about him. They said it was a bruise, but he was in a lot of pain after the game."

Although backup Trent Green passed for 205 yards and three touchdowns, the suspect defense coughed up 37 points in the second half as the Rams lost in Game 7 after starting 6-0 for the second straight year.

"We thought we had the momentum moving our way right before the half, and we fumbled that ball. That took the wind out of our sails," said Martz.

"Football is a game of momentum. I think the critical play was when we fumbled that at the end of the half."

The Chiefs lost quarterback Elvis Grbac to a bruised right elbow on their last play of the third quarter. But he was luckier than Warner, and hopes to be back next week.

"The X-rays were negative," said Grbac, who was 18-of-30 for 266 yards and two TDs. "I can move it around a little bit, and we'll see what it does the next couple of days."

The 54 points were the most the Chiefs have scored at Arrowhead Stadium, and the game total of 88 was second-most in team history.

"We're obviously a lot bigger than they are," said Chiefs coach Gunther Cunningham, who walked around the locker room hugging every player. "There were a lot of collisions out there."

While losing to Tennessee 24-21, last year in the seventh game, also their first game of the year on grass, the Rams fell behind 21-0 in the first quarter.

In this one, they trailed 20-0 before a raucous sellout crowd of 79,142.

"I said all week that we could match up with them," said cornerback James Hasty, who intercepted Warner's second pass of the game and got the runaway started. "It was nose-to-nose. It was a street battle, really."

Green came into the game trailing 34-14 after the Chiefs scored on their first possession of the second half. Grbac was replaced by 43-year-old Warren Moon, who was 3-for-3 for 78 yards and one TD.

Tensions high in Subway Series

WORLD SERIES

foul pole and a single to Robin Ventura.

At that point, Rivera relieved and closed it out, though it wasn't easy. Left fielder Clay Bellinger had to reach at the top of the wall to rob Todd Zeile of a two-run homer, and after Benny Agbayani singled, Payton homered. Rivera struck out Kurt Abbott to end it.

Throwing 97 mph fastballs — along with the barrel of a shattered bat in Piazza's path — Clemens evened his career postseason record at 5-5 in 16 starts. This win came after his one-hit, 15-strikeout shutout over Seattle in Game 4 of the ALCS.

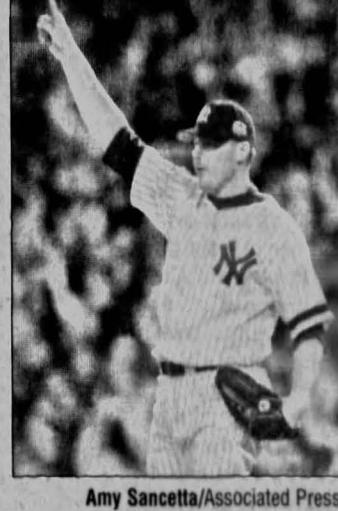

In that victory over the Mariners, Clemens showed he meant business by buzzing two fastballs past Alex Rodriguez in the opening inning.

But that did not nearly match the fury that erupted in the first inning against the Mets.

Ever since the Mets-Yankees matchup was set, the whole city wondered what would happen when Clemens faced Piazza for the first time since hitting him in the head with a fastball in an interleague game July 9.

Yankees manager Joe Torre even talked about how, given his choice, he'd prefer not to have Clemens start game at Shea, where he would have to bat and give Mets pitchers a chance to take revenge.

Before this game, Torre tried to play down the lingering feelings between the star players, and the local fans.

"I'd like to believe they'd rather watch the World Series than to see if Roger Clemens is going to hit him again, or if Mike is going to throw the bat at him," Torre said.

Fat chance.

Clemens struck out Timo Perez and Alfonzo to start the game, and that brought up Piazza.

Boos filled the ballpark as Piazza, 7-for-12 with three home runs lifetime against Clemens, slowly walked to the plate.

Then on a 1-2 count, all the tension that had been brewing suddenly blew up.

Piazza shattered his bat on a foul ball, and the barrel went skittering toward the mound. Clemens instantly reacted, grabbing the broken piece and furiously slinging it in Piazza's path as the Mets star jogged toward first base.

Piazza stopped with the bat handle in his hand, looked at Clemens and took a couple of steps in his direction. As plate umpire Charlie Reliford rushed between them, players from the dugouts and bullpens ran onto the field.

There was some pushing, but no punching, as Clemens and Piazza were kept apart and order was quickly restored.

When the inning ended, Clemens walked over to Reliford and said the words "my fault" during a 30-second discussion.

That was the last sign of trouble between the two stars, with Piazza going hitless in three at-bats against Clemens.

The problems for the Mets, though, were just beginning.

Hampton, the MVP of the NLCS with 16 shutout innings against St. Louis, retired the first two batters in the bottom half before walking David Justice and Bernie Williams. Tino Martinez and Jorge Posada followed with RBI singles, and the Yankees were ahead for good.

Brosius hit his seventh career postseason home run to start the second and O'Neill hit an RBI single in the fifth. Brosius added a sacrifice fly in the seventh off Rich White and Martinez singled home a run in the eighth off Dennis Cook.

Notes: Of the 46 previous teams to take a 2-0 lead in the World Series, 35 of them (76 percent) went on to win the championship. ... Jeter extended his World Series hitting streak to 11 games. ... Zeile caught some of the pre-game activity with his video camera.

SPORTS BRIEF

Jones' scoring leads WNBA stars

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — As a singer, Merlakia Jones offered a nice rendition of the national anthem. As a basketball player, she was even better. Jones led all scorers with 18 points to help the East beat the West, 81-79 Sunday night as the WNBA began a four-game off-season all-star tour before a lively crowd of 6,107 heavily sprinkled with youngsters.

Eight members of the gold medal-winning U.S. Olympic team played in the game, but the lesser-known Jones outshone them, going 5-of-7 from the field.

— including a 3-pointer — and grabbing six rebounds.

"I'm really not into all the hype," Jones said. "It doesn't matter if anybody knows me. But usually when I

Florida and Minnesota fight to tie

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Florida Panthers and Minnesota Wild skated to a 0-0 tie Sunday night, the NHL's first scoreless tie since Detroit and St. Louis did it on April 1 last season.

Minnesota goalie Jamie McLean stopped 24 shots to keep Florida (0-2-2-2) winless. Panthers goalie Roberto Luongo made 20 saves.

The expansion Wild (1-5-2-0) spent seven of the third period's final 11 minutes killing penalties, but were able to keep Florida's offense at bay for the first shutout in team history. It was the second time Minnesota has been blanked.

Florida killed a two-minute penalty in overtime to preserve the tie. The Panthers, off to the worst start in franchise history, were outshot 5-0 in overtime.

The Panthers were dominant everywhere but the scoreboard in the opening period, holding Minnesota without a shot on goal for the game's first 18 minutes and to two in the frame. Despite having to kill three penalties, Florida controlled both ends of the ice and had the period's best scoring opportunity.

Skating short-handed, Florida forward Pavel Bure picked off an errant Minnesota pass in the neutral zone and came in on a breakaway. Bure made a quick move to the left and came across the front of the goal looking to tuck a backhand shot under McLennan, but the goalie smothered the shot with a diving glove save.

Florida killed two more Minnesota power plays, and held the Wild to five shots on goal in the second period.

The game's most frightening moment came near the midway point of the third when Minnesota' Maxim Suchinsky and Florida's Mike Wilson got tangled up chasing a loose puck. Both collided with the end boards head first, then had to be helped off by trainers after laying motionless on the ice for more than a minute. Suchinsky was given a five-minute major penalty and game misconduct for boarding.

Wilson injured his right shoulder on the play and did not return.

Lightning 4, Rangers 2

NEW YORK — Fredrik Modin recorded his first career hat trick Sunday night, leading the Tampa Bay Lightning to a 4-2 victory over the New York Rangers.

Kevin Weekes, who has both of the Lightning's wins this season, made 32 saves. He beat the Rangers four times last season, twice with the Islanders and twice with Vancouver.

Modin capped his hat trick at 13:20 of the third with his seventh goal of the season, lifting a backhander past New York goalie Mike Richter, who was making his season debut.

Theo Fleury pulled the Rangers to 3-2 at 7:20 of the third on a 5-on-3 power play with a slap shot from the right faceoff circle for his team-leading fifth goal.

The Lightning took a 1-0 lead at 6:13 of the second period when Rangers defenseman Rich Pilon accidentally shot the puck into his own net. Modin was credited with the goal.

Brian Leetch tied it 1-1 at 18:32 of the second with his first goal of the season, converting Mark Messier's pass from behind the net.

Tampa Bay broke the tie with two goals in a 28-second span at the start of the third period. Mike Johnson scored his second of the season at 1:45 on a 5-on-3 man advantage, scoring into an open net after a cross-ice pass from Vincent Lecavalier. After the power play ended, Modin beat Richter with a slap shot.

Red Wings 2, Blue Jackets 1

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Kirk Maltby scored 2:02 into overtime as the Detroit Red Wings kept the Columbus Blue Jackets winless at home with a 2-1 victory on Sunday night.

Columbus' Steve Heinze ended Chris Osgood's shutout with 59.2 seconds left in regulation and forced the overtime.

After Osgood turned away two shots in the extra period, Sergei Fedorov glided through the point with the puck, then dumped it to Maltby on the right wing. Maltby lifted the puck over the left shoulder of Ron Tugnutt for his second goal of the season.

It was Detroit's only shot in overtime.

The game was dominated by the goalies, with Tugnutt turning away 34 shots and Osgood stopping all but one of expansion Columbus' franchise-record 47.

At times it sounded and looked as if the game was being played at Joe Louis Arena instead of before a capacity crowd of 18,136 at Nationwide Arena. A large and vocal crowd of Detroit fans — hundreds of whom wore Red Wings jerseys — roared on every shot by their team.

The Blue Jackets fell to 0-3-1 at home. The only time they won in Columbus, they beat the Red Wings 5-2 in the first exhibition game ever at Nationwide.

Columbus lost its fifth in a row since the only victory in franchise history, 3-2 at Calgary on Oct. 12.

The Red Wings took a 1-0 lead 4:34

Your time will be sufficient.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work on fitness. You can make job changes if you send out résumés or go for interviews. Don't neglect to fulfill the promises you've made to a loved one.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may find yourself obligated to help family members. Don't let your course of action be disrupted. Do what you must quickly, and resume your plans as quickly as possible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may find yourself in a predicament if you haven't dealt with important paperwork. You should look into ways of rejuvenating yourself. You need a little pampering.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will need to lend a helping hand. Don't let yourself become rundown because you have promised to do too much. You may want to do some research. Go to the library. You will be surprised.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Limitations will surface if you have been too compromising with your lover. You will have the energy to make those necessary changes to your living quarters. Get the OK before you go ahead.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Problems with pets will be expensive and heart-rending. Difficulties with children may be a direct link to financial concerns. Don't give too much cash to organizations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do some soul-searching. Lay your cards on the table. You may have difficulties with investments — avoid joint ventures. Children may be a problem if you haven't discussed your situation with them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 2
