Peace in Israel hinges on election

Tuesday's prime-minister election may decide the future of the peace process

■ Hard-liner Ariel Sharon faces off against the moderate Ehud Barak.

By Cori Zarek
The Daily Iowan

With Israel's much-anticipated prime-minister election slated for Tuesday, campaign posters plastered along major Israeli highways and throughout cities may sum up how Israelis feel about the election. "Only Sharon will bring peace" reads the Likud Party candidate's posters, while "It's forbidden to return to the days of Sharon" counter the Labor Party's posters. Both sides are adamant that their candidate is the only way for Israelis to finally achieve peace with the Palestinians, either with Likud Party candidate Ariel Sharon's more direct and forceful methods, or with current Prime Minister Ehud Barak's more conciliatory means.

Barak was elected prime minister in May 1999 and has consistently advocated peace. His push for peace talks with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat ended on Feb. 1, when he put them aside to focus on the election. Sharon's platform includes peace talks, but he says he does not intend to give Palestinians any more land than they currently control.

In December, Barak resigned from his post and has been leading the country without the majority backing from the Israeli Parliament — the Knesset. He had hoped a new election would give him a ■ Local residents with connections to Israel and Palestine doubt peace will come with election results.

With Israel's election for prime minister only a day away, UI graduate student Osama Saba said he believes the two candidates, Ehud Barak of the Labor Party and Ariel Sharon of the Likud Party, "are two faces of one coin."

"In the end, they are both the same," said Saba, a Palestinian citizen from the West Bank who is studying biomedical engineering at the UI. Saba's opinion echoes the sentiments of many Iowa City people with personal connections to both the Israeli and Palestinian sides of the decades-long conflict.

UI senior Arik Wald, whose hometown is Nazareth, Israel, said although he hopes for peace between the two countries, it won't make a big difference who wins the election.

"Barak couldn't calm down the situation," he said. "I hope Sharon will be able to, but

Hoofers hit record in Dance Marathon

■ The event's participants raise $500,000 to help fight cancer.

By Bridget Stratton and Anne Webbeking
The Daily Iowan

Surrounded by the heat of more than 800 dancers in the IMU Main Lounge, Mary Carstensen, with her 14-year-old daughter nearby, could feel the energy and spirit in the room. She looked around at the UI students dancing to the pulsating sounds of the music and smiled as her eyes filled with tears — these are the people who make a difference in her family's life.

UI students danced for 24 hours in the seventh annual Dance Marathon, which started on Feb. 2 at 7 p.m. The dancers raised $504,222.77 — approximately $150,000 more than last year — for 140 families, such as Carstensen's, with children who have been diagnosed with cancer and have been treated at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

"There are tons of fund-raisers out there. The difference with Dance Marathon is it gives the families a connection with each other and the dancers," Carstensen said. "It provides a sense of community."

Participants change throughout 24 hours

The 24 hours spent dancing were an emotional roller coaster filled with laughter, tears and sweat for several of the participants. As the night began, spirits were high for some participants.

As UI freshman Abby Reser ate dinner just two hours into the event, she said she felt energized and excited to be there.

Ethan Fry/The Daily Iowan

Adam Clendenen and his father, Kevin, participate in the Dance Marathon festivities on Feb. 2 in the IMU Main Lounge. Kevin lost his daughter to leukemia and has participated in Dance Marathon for three years.

"I'm having the time of my life. This is so much fun. I know tomorrow night I'm still going to be completely wired," she said.

UI junior and second-year participant Laura Pfeiffer was a bit more low-key. She knew how exhausted she became last year, but the cause made it worth dancing again.

"I know how I will feel later in the event, so right now, it's not good," Pfeiffer said. "Last year was so amazing. I didn't know that it would affect me so much. It drains you physically and emotionally, but it's totally worth it, so I had to do it again."

Less than 12 hours later, the room had changed. The dancer's eyes were sagging, and the room smelled of body odor.

"At one point (during the night) it kind of died, but we got them up again," said morale-group two captain Karol Dymkowski, a UI senior, as she gave a back massage to a dancer.

It was Dymkowski's job to keep participants motivated. Her smile remained strong.

The night had changed Reser slightly. Her eyes were feeling heavy, and her feet ached.

Iowa officials taking California power woes as a warning

■ Some state legislators say more power plants are needed to avoid electricity blackouts.

By Nick Narigon
The Daily Iowan

Local legislators and economists say they're taking notes to ensure that the energy crisis plaguing California isn't repeated in Iowa. California, which deregulated its electricity industry several years ago, has suffered rolling blackouts and power shortages this winter, with major utilities facing bankruptcy.

House Minority Leader Dick Myers, D-Coralville, said the key to avoiding the problems that California suffers is building more power plants in an effort to generate more energy capacity.

"There is a very good chance that we could be facing the same problems as the other states in two to three years," he said. However, there is no need for the state to deregulate the utility industry, he said, because the Iowa's current system is adequate.

Michael Balch, a UI associate professor of economics, said

California's energy crisis is largely the result of a flawed deregulation scheme that the state embarked upon in 1996. California legislators deregulated the price the utility companies had to pay for power but kept a regulated price on what customers could be charged.

"It was the kind of deregulation that tied one hand behind their backs," Balch said.

The California legislators also forced its two largest suppliers of electricity, Southern California Edison and Pacific Gas and Electric, to sell off their power-generating stations, forcing them to purchase power elsewhere, Balch said. While the move prevented a monopoly, the legislators made one further fatal move

Iowa students' scores decline

■ The Iowa Test of Basic Skills indicates a dip in reading comprehension.

By Peter Boylan
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa Testing Program released its results for the 2000-01 Iowa Test of Basic Skills, which showed a slight drop in the performance of Iowa students during the past seven years.

The numbers are not indicative of a significant problem, but they are dropping, said David Frisbie, a UI professor who works with the Iowa Basic Skills Testing Program.

State reading comprehension, for example, is down by a factor of 0.22 — meaning that Iowa students in are two and one-fifth months behind the national average (22 percent of a 10-month school year).

"We don't have a good explanation for why achievement has declined since about 1990," Frisbie said. "Of course, there has been plenty of speculation but no definitive explanation. No doubt there are multiple factors occurring."

The basic-skills tests, administered to kindergarten through eighth-grade students, measures students' ability in reading, language and mathematics.

Council wants to pump up tax base

The council will wrestle with funding for human services during budget talks today.

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City City Council will debate how to best increase the city's tax base and encourage economic growth with budget allocations in a special work session today.

The council will discuss funding for human-services agencies and other concerns during a special 4 p.m. budget work session that will precede its regular work session, scheduled for 6:30 p.m.

Mayor Ernie Lehman said he expects fiscal year 2002 funding for human-services agencies to remain the same as the previous year. Funding for such agencies during fiscal year 2001 increased by 6 percent because of surplus funds, totaling $466,900. Typically, funding increases by 3 percent annually, Lehman said.

The main focus of the budget is to build more industrial and commercial property, he said.

"Human services and community events don't do anything for tax base," Lehman said. "Most cities do not fund human services."

Lehman and some councilors said philosophical questions will probably dominate today's budget talks.

Human-services agencies, funded by property taxes taken from the city's general fund, can benefit the city more than road and commercial projects, said Councilor Steven Kanner.

"The majority of the council and the mayor say, 'No, (human-services agencies) are not priorities,'" he said. "To put more money into programs like RiverFest ... those kind of events make us a safer and stronger community in the long run."

Kanner opposes replacing retiring police officers and recommends adding $24,877 to fund human-services agencies in fiscal year 2002, which will begin on July 1 and end on June 30, 2002.

Councilor Connie Champion said she would support maintaining the funding for human-services agencies and postponing a few road-construction projects.

The council must approve its budget before March 15.

In other council news, councilors plan to discuss adding traffic signals at the Kirkwood Avenue intersections with Dodge and Keokuk streets. Each installation would cost the city $75,000. The issue comes after the controversial re-paving project of Kirkwood Avenue in the early 1990s.

The majority of the council and the mayor say, "No, (human-services agencies) are not priorities."

Two local developers have expressed interest in building businesses on the lot since the library expansion referendum passed on Nov. 7, 2000, said Karin Franklin, the city's director of development.

If both the lot's development and library expansion are pursued at once, the Pedestrian Mall would be disrupted for two to three years. Disruption could last as long as six years if the two projects are pursued consecutively. Subterranean or grade-level parking will be available for the library if the area is developed, Franklin said.

Carnival features games, ice sculpture

Iowa City pleases many with its fourth-annual Winter Carnival, full of fun things to do in the snow.

By Jeffrey Kramer
The Daily Iowan

A crowd of approximately 750 people engaged in a variety of snow activities during the fourth-annual Winter Carnival on the Pedestrian Mall on Feb. 3.

Joyce Carroll, a program supervisor for the city Parks and Recreation Services and an organizer for the event, said she was happy with the turnout. "Last year, it was colder and more windy," which led to a lower turnout, she said.

There were about a dozen attractions for children, including an Ice Fishing Hut, Bubble Pass, Pin the Nose on Frosty and various games such as the Peppermint Ring Toss. Gift certificates donated by downtown merchants were among the prizes children could receive at the carnival.

Carroll said approximately $1,600 was raised for the carnival by local businesses.

The biggest crowd throughout the two-hour event was huddled around three ice sculptors — Earl Gesling, Ron Hall and Dave Dettman — who collaborated in making an ice castle.

"I think the adults as well as the kids enjoy the ice sculpting," said Rita Krause, 40. "It's something fun to come back to, and it's interesting to watch all three people work on the same final project."

Krause brought a few of her nephews and nieces with her. One of those, Laura Schwager, 6, said she thoroughly enjoyed the carnival.

"I liked everything," she said. "I liked the playground with the slides, the swing set, and the snow slide."

Katherine Habley, an event organizer and a children's librarian at the Iowa City Public Library, kicked off the carnival by reading stories about playing in the snow to a group of 60 children in a children's reading room at the library. As the story time session drew to an end, the inspired kids started buttoning their coats before they went to play in the snow themselves.

Two snow hills lay outside the library in the parking lot — one that was small for the younger children and one that was bigger for the older ones. Parents watched or assisted their children slide down the hills on folded boxes of cardboard. Most of the children were between the ages of 3 and 7.

"I think they loved story time, and the creative dramatics I used to get them going," said Habley, who accompanied her reading with several physical illustrations. "This was the best Winter Carnival we've had."

Meghan Bruno/The Daily Iowan

Sarah Hannah, 5 years old, slid down the larger hill five times.

"I liked that one because it is longer," she said.

Her father, Kip Hannah, said he would like to bring his daughters to the carnival next year as well.

"It's nice just to bring the kids out of the house and going outside to have some fun," he said.

RAGBRAI 2001 to make stop in Coralville

City officials believe that the event could bring the community nearly $900,000.

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan

The city of Coralville is already starting to prepare for its moment in the spotlight — RAGBRAI is coming to town this summer.

Event officials chose Coralville as the final overnight stop for this year's RAGBRAI — the Register's Annual Great Bicycle Ride Across Iowa — a six-day event started in 1973 by famed Des Moines Register columnist Donald Kaul and Register writer John Karras. The event is now seen by Iowa towns as a chance to boost local economies. The last time Coralville hosted an overnight stop was 1995, which, according to the official RAGBRAI Web site, was as tremendous success. Coralville Mayor Jim Fausett said the city is doing everything it can to ensure the second time will be a repeat success. He said he was disappointed that Coralville was not included as one of last summer's stops, but, he said, he knows that his town being on the last leg of the trip means a lot to the community and will create a lot of excitement.

The city already made various preparations, such as recruiting volunteers from the community to help plan the event. Coralville City Councilor Dave Jacoby said the council is looking for volunteers to provide housing for the riders so they can have a good meal and a shower. "We have a good base to start with and will expand from there," Fausett said.

Some of the veterans of the 1995 RAGBRAI stop will be able to work together again, he said. The city is considering such things as camping spots in S. T. Morrison Park, in addition to other places to stay, entertainment, shower facilities and food. The Des Moines Register, RAGBRAI's sponsor, provides a manual for all cities involved on how to pull this together, and Coralville will act from experience, Coralville Councilor Diana Lundell said.

Coralville's being the last overnight stop causes some concerns, because it is toward the end of the week when people can become more rowdy, Jacoby said.

RAGBRAI Route 2001

The city of Coralville was recently selected to be the final leg of the 29th annual RAGBRAI, a well-known bicycle ride across the state. Here is the route for the event, which will take place in late July.

Source: www.ragbri.org DULB

"Last time, we were pretty much prepared, but you can never quite be prepared," he said.

Coralville will work with local fire departments as well as Iowa City police for crowd control. Medical teams will be on hand in the case of emergencies.

Coralville Councilor Henry Herwig estimated that RAGBRAI brought approximately $38,000 to Coralville in 1995. Coralville should see an increase in this amount because RAGBRAI officials estimate that the last overnight stop of the event tends to attract the most people, bringing in as much as $900,000, Herwig said.

"The 1995 stop was not so much an economic boost but community spirit," Lundell said. "Lots of support was shown."

Educators march to State Capitol

Gov. Tom Vilsack and Republican leaders promise at least $40 million to up teacher pay.

By Tony Robinson
The Daily Iowan

Approximately 800 educators, business directors and state legislators gathered in Des Moines on Feb. 3 and marched to the State Capitol to demand higher teacher pay.

The three-hour rally began at East High School shortly after noon, when 15 speakers addressed the issues of teacher salaries and shortages.

"The atmosphere was very positive both during the rally and after we left," said John Hieronymus, the vice president of the Iowa State Education Association and a math teacher at Iowa City High School. "We are just glad so many people showed up."

Gov. Tom Vilsack, one of 15 speakers to take the podium during the event, stressed the importance of children's education. He said the two things needed to ensure a good education are involved parents and quality teachers. A projected 368,000 teachers are set to retire in the next 10 years, and only 114,000 are ready to replace them, he said.

Vilsack joined with some Republican legislators on Feb. 3 in promising to set aside at least $40 million to increase teacher pay this year. With the minimum salary for starting teachers in Iowa at $23,000, the governor said he is trying to persuade teachers to remain in Iowa.

"Everyone was hoping for more money to come out of the budget, but teachers know it will take a while for the compensations initiative to have any effect," said Mary Schleuter, the head of the Parent Teacher Student Organization at City High.

She said she attended the event because many parents in Iowa City are extremely concerned about these teacher issues and are looking for ways to combat the problem.

According to the signs carried at the rally, increased salaries, better recruitment and continuing education for teachers are teachers' primary concerns.

After hearing speeches from teachers, students, business people and state education official, protesters proceeded to the Capitol, carrying signs and chanting, "It's about time." Members of Iowans for Quality Schools — the hosts of the rally — gave thanks to everyone for coming and presented roughly 1,000 letters of support to lobbyists with recommended changes. The letters are scheduled to be turned over to Vilsack today.

"Iowa is blessed with an education system that's envied by most of the country. If it wants to continue this, it will have to take some serious steps," said Helen Moorhead, a City High teacher.

The Associated Press contributed to this article.

Fire marshal determines cause of duplex fire

A four-alarm fire that destroyed the home of seven Iowa City residents on Feb. 1 was started by discarded smoking materials, the Iowa City Fire Marshal's Office said on Feb. 2.

Fire investigators have estimated damage to the structure at $75,000.

The duplex, 817 Clark St., was completely engulfed by flames when firefighters arrived around 1:40 p.m. on Feb. 1, and the fire took them nearly four hours to extinguish. Departments from West Branch, Coralville, Solon and North Liberty assisted the Iowa City Department in fighting the blaze.

Two residents of the duplex were injured in the fire. They were treated and released from Mercy Hospital.

A 1988 blue Jeep Camanche was stolen from an alley near the Pedestrian Mall on Feb. 3 at 3:36 a.m.

According to police records, the theft occurred in the alley behind Burger King, 124 S. Dubuque St.

There are no suspects or leads in the case, said Iowa City police Lt. Dan Sellers. He could not confirm whether the vehicle's doors were unlocked or if it was running at the time.

The vehicle is described as having several rusty holes in its bed, Sellers said. Its Iowa license plate is 627 JBX.

GOP leaders prepare for school funding

DES MOINES (AP) — Majority Republicans plan to begin work on education funding next week amid concerns that state revenues will provide less cash than expected.

Legislators are required to approve basic aid to schools within the first month of the session, setting the rate of school districts' funding two years in advance.

Gov. Tom Vilsack has proposed a 4 percent increase — $60 million — for the 2002-03 school year. Republicans said they would reach a decision today.

"Obviously, revenues are very much a concern. We have said since the beginning it will be somewhere between 3 and 4 (percent)," House Speaker Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs, said. "We really don't know."

School aid is one of the big-ticket items legislators consider every year. School budgets are composed of a mixture of state and local taxes. The Legislature sets the growth each year, which determines property-tax levies in local districts.

Israel-Palestine peace process could hinge on election chance to remain prime minister and regain a popular mandate in the body. The original election was scheduled to take place in 2003, but Barak's resignation moved it up to Tuesday. The 2003 election would likely have pitted Barak against former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. Netanyahu is ineligible for Tuesday's election because he is not currently a member of the Knesset.

For weeks, polls have shown Sharon leading Barak by 17-20 percentage points. Some predict that Sharon will take the election because Israelis are frustrated with the slow rate at which Barak's talks and negotiations have been going between Israel and the Palestinian Authority (PA). Even members of the Labor Party are aware that Israelis are becoming disenchanted with Barak's philosophy.

"The Labor Party is to be ousted because it made concessions for the peace process," said Amir Tadmor, a member of the Labor Party and the founder and chairman of Children of Abraham, an Israeli-Palestinian peace-education group based in Jerusalem. "(The party) has been pushing very hard."

Tadmor, who formerly served as Director of International Affairs at the Ministry of Economy and Planning for the Labor Party, said Barak made the concessions because most Israelis want peace at any cost. If peace can truly be guaranteed, Israelis will likely take it.

"Today we're willing to accept what a few weeks ago we would not," he said. "But Arafat is a terrorist; there is no mutual interest in peace. Compromising is a demonstration of weakness in this part of the world."

Israelis have consistently wanted peace for the last 20 years, said Michael Keren, a professor at Tel Aviv University. He said the struggle between the Israelis and Palestinians has voters unsure who would better lead the country.

"Barak seems impatient about the peace process. He has good intentions, but the rational world doesn't operate in such terms," he said. "The confusion may lead to voters putting in 'white' (blank) ballots."

"These are not a young country's growing pains. There's no easy solution."

The Likud factor

Sharon, 72, has the support of right-wing conservative Israelis and has the reputation of being a warrior from his service in the army. He is possibly best known for leading the re-crossing of the Suez Canal in the Yom Kippur War in 1973. He was the Minister of Defense during the 1982 invasion of Lebanon, which led to the massacre of some 800 Palestinians in refugee camps. Most Israelis considered Sharon unlikely ever to be the prime minister, but he has worked his way back to the top of the political arena.

He has advocated action over peaceful negotiations for land. The PA blames Sharon for the most recent acts of violence, which started in September after his march on the Temple Mount, the area in the Old City of Jerusalem of central importance to both Jews and Muslims. On Sept. 28, Sharon visited the holy site — where the Muslim Al Aqsa mosque and Dome of the Rock are located, and the Jewish temples had been located — declaring that the Temple Mount is part of Israel.

The intifada has left 383 dead as of Feb. 2, including 322 Palestinians, 13 Israeli Arabs, 47 other Israelis and one German doctor.

It's likely that Sharon will receive high levels of support from the religious sectors of Israeli society. Announcements Sunday printed in Israeli newspapers traditionally read by members of the ultra-Orthodox Jewish sects urge voters to support Sharon.

The one-Israel factor

Barak retired as the most decorated soldier in the Israeli army in 1995. He then became Interior minister under former Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin in the Labor, or One Israel, Party. After Rabin's assassination, Shimon Peres took over as his successor, but Peres was defeated by Netanyahu in 1996. Barak took over as Prime Minister in May 1999, defeating Netanyahu. The 58-year-old has the support of left-wing Israelis, including most of the more secular Jews.

Until Feb. 2, fellow Labor Party member Peres posed a possible challenge to take over as the party's candidate for prime minister. Israeli election law states that parties may change candidates up to four days before an election. Peres has since thrown his full support to Barak. Both Labor Party leaders expect Barak's support to rise in the polls now that Peres is no longer considering entering the race.

But Israeli polls are known not to be as accurate as polls in the United States. In 1996, for example, Peres led the polls until Election Day, and he was defeated by Netanyahu in a close election. Jerry Sorokin, the director of the Aliber/Hillel Jewish Student Center in Iowa City, said Israeli voters were knowingly trying to mislead the pollsters.

"They were lying to pollsters — it's as simple as that," he said.

Sorokin said the election may turn out to be closer than recent polls have predicted, but, he said, it's hard to imagine Barak making up that much ground.

"I was in Israel earlier in January, and everyone I talked to thought Sharon will win," he said. "But no one I know wanted him."

The Israeli-Arab factor

The Israeli Arabs, who make up 18 percent of the country's population, have proven to be another key factor in the election. As Israeli citizens living predominantly in Arab villages, these Arabs, many of whom consider themselves Palestinians, retain the same rights and privileges as other Israelis, including the right to vote. However, polls from Feb.

when he is elected — which I think he will be — it might not matter."

Wald said Sharon is likely to win because Israeli citizens — especially the Arab-Israeli sector, which makes up 18 percent of the country's population — will choose a "white-ballot," the equivalent of voting "none of the above." This Arab support base would normally vote heavily in Barak's favor, but as a result of Sharon's past military aggressions against Palestinians, it is equally disenchanted with Barak's inability to reach satisfactory compromises in the peace process.

Jerry Sorokin, the director of the Aliber/Hillel Jewish Student Center at the UI, agreed that the white-ballot vote will be a decisive factor in the election's outcome.

Although current polls show Sharon to be nearly 20 points ahead of Barak, Sorokin cautioned, "(The polls) are often way off."

Still, the lack of Israeli confidence in Barak's peace-making ability has shaken his Labor Party support base noticeably.

UI graduate student Yaser Abudagga, who last talked with his family in the Gaza Strip on Sunday, said Arabs in both countries would have been more enthusiastic if Barak's main contender from within the Labor Party, Simon Peres, would have run against Sharon.

"Peres has shown an understanding of the Palestinian situation," Abudagga said. "And, most importantly, he is not a military guy."

Sharon's military past has caused many citizens to flinch at the possibility that he will soon lead the country.

"Israelis don't trust Sharon to behave constructively," said Sorokin, who recently visited Israel with a group of UI students. "They see him as something of a loose cannon."

Wald, like Saba, said he sees both candidates as similar in terms of policy, but that the concerns over Sharon's tendency towards uncompromising action could jeopardize negotiations.

"Sharon will have the same policy as Barak has had, but with more action," Wald said. "It's hard to say if this will be a good or a bad thing for the peace process."

"I can only hope the election won't infuse renewed warfare in the region," he said.

DI reporter Jesse Elliott can be reached at: jesse-elliott@uiowa.edu

2 say 50 percent of Israeli Arabs do not plan to vote in Tuesday's election.

One reason the Israeli Arabs might not vote is because they may not see a direct benefit in putting either candidate in power. Sorokin said the Arabs who vote in this election will overwhelmingly support Barak. But it is difficult for Barak to convince the Arabs they would be treated markedly better than if Sharon were prime minister, which is why many may put in "white ballots" and not choose either candidate.

"It's obvious we're not equal," said Kifah Massarwi, an Israeli Arab living in Baqa El-Gharbiya, an Arab municipality in northern Israel. "You can see that buildings and schools don't get government help."

Massarwi is active in the peace process between Israel and Palestinians; she is the director of the Department for Culture and Women in Baqa El-Gharbiya. As a member of Israel's left-wing Meretz Party, which believes in continuation of the peace process, Massarwi formerly served in the Knesset. She said when Sharon visited the Al Aqsa mosque, he didn't expect people there would be violent. Before the intifada started, Massarwi said, there were several political and educational projects in existence between the Israeli Arabs and the Palestinians, but they have all since stopped.

The peace factor

Even if peace is achieved, there are no guarantees it will ever be carried out, said Yossi Ben Aharon, a representative of the Likud Party.

"You don't have peace even if you have a peace treaty with your neighbor," he said. "We live in a part of the world devoid of democracy."

But it's not democracy that determines peace.

"People-to-people, that's who will carry it out, not government-to-government," Tadmor said.

"Real peace starts with the people. We want the Palestinians to have dignity, be happy with peace, and have good salaries and food," Tadmor said.

Some Palestinians say they want peace just as much as Israelis, but it's hard for them to be pro-peace because they'll be shot and deemed traitors, said Eve Harow, the former president of the Israeli Efrat settlement, outside Jerusalem in the West Bank.

"They're not allowed to have opinions on their own," she said of the Palestinians.

Khaled Abu Aker, a Palestinian and the acting executive director of the TV news show "InterNews Middle East" in East Jerusalem, agrees.

"Palestinian people are thirsty for democracy and freedom; the ordinary Israeli can disagree with his leaders — not in Palestine."

Dance Marathon raises record amount

DANCE MARATHON

"It'll be better this afternoon, because more friends are coming to visit," she said. "That will be fun to see them and dance with them."

Mail call came shortly after 8 a.m. Smiles appeared as morale-group two members read their mail.

Pfeiffer got a special package from her mom after the mail call. The box was filled with goodies — socks, noise-makers, chocolates, and foot insoles, which she immediately tried out.

Dymkowski took a short break from reading her pile of mail and went over to a group of guys who were sitting on the floor.

"Get up, get up, get up," she yelled as they got back on their feet.

Another 12 hours later, the end came. After an emotional closing that included a video of the early hours of Dance Marathon 2001, a video of children who had lost their lives in their battle with cancer, and one last song, "Angels Among Us," sung by the entire room as they swayed back and forth in an enormous circle, the dancers exited the room.

"No matter how many times you think, 'I never want to do this again,' by the end of the event, you realize it's worth it no matter how hard it was to get through it," Pfeiffer said outside the Main Lounge.

She said that she was on her way home to shower and then go to bed.

At the end, Dymkowski, a four-year participant, said this year was by far the hardest but best year of all for her. As a morale captain, she said, she found it difficult to keep others motivated because she was emotionally and physically drained.

"It got hard," Dymkowski said. "I'd look at a poster (with pictures of children with cancer), think about the children and that would get me through it."

At the end, though, she couldn't help herself. Her smile was still there, but tears rolled down her cheeks as people came up and gave her hugs.

"I'm so emotionally drained. We've been working on it for a year, and now it's over," Dymkowski said. "It's indescribable."

Carstensen shares Kira's story

Carstensen always carries her rosary beads, a childhood gift from an aunt, wherever she travels. She said she prays with them in times of need. She keeps them near as she relays her daughter Kira's journey with cancer, a story she has told almost as many times as she has prayed on her beads in the past 14 years.

Kira was diagnosed with leukemia at the age of 1. After six years of remission, she relapsed in the spring of 1995, when she underwent a bone-marrow transplant. Laura, her younger sister, was the donor. Now, at the age of 14, Kira is experiencing kidney failure, is on dialysis, and waits for someone with type "O" blood to donate a kidney.

Despite her illness, Kira has ventured on in life with a confidence that Carstensen believes she gained from the people in Dance Marathon. Carstensen said when Kira was younger, she felt out of place among her fellow classmates because of the emotional and physical toll of the cancer.

"When she was with the people of Dance Marathon, it was the first time people didn't look at her because she was different. She was with other kids who were going through the same thing she was," Carstensen said as she pointed to the picture of another Dance Marathon child who lost her battle with cancer.

Dance Marathon has become a large part of her family's life, Carstensen said. The families get to know each other, their children become close friends, and they care about each other.

Kira said she wants to be a child-life specialist, a person who does activities with the children in the hospital to keep their minds off of their treatments. "Dance Marathon has done so much for me," she said. "I want to be able to do more for others (like me)."

Iowa watching Calif. power woes carefully

by prohibiting the power companies from setting up long-term contracts with power suppliers and required them to purchase energy only on a spot, or day-to-day, market — which, Balch said, is extremely volatile.

"Some have charged that the wildly high spot market prices reflect an OPEC-like cartelization of this market by the handful of wholesale power generators," he said. "California has given us a classic case study in how not to perform the deregulation of the utility sector."

Last year, the Iowa Legislature considered a measure that would have deregulated Iowa utility companies — which, said Sen. Joe Bolcom, D-Iowa City, was similar to the deregulation plan set up by California.

"It essentially froze the rates and allowed companies to sell their power stations," he said. "The utility industry is presenting a bill this year that we will have to take a close look at."

Iowa gets 98 percent of its natural gas from out of state, Bolcom said, which costs the state approximately $1.5 billion a year.

Deregulation can work for Iowa, said Rep. Brad Hansen, R-Council Bluffs, the chairman of the House Commerce Committee, if Iowa can generate the power consumers need. To generate sufficient power, Hansen said, the state needs to build more power plants.

"There are several barriers to building new plants in Iowa," he said. "We're looking at ways of taking down some of those barriers while still protecting the environment."

Iowa students' basic reading scores fall off

IOWA TESTS

The language development of children entering the education system has deteriorated compared with that of students 20 years ago, Frisbie said. Factors such as single-parent families, television viewing and work schedules all might contribute to a reduction in parent-child interactions, which, he said, help children develop their aural-language skills and their understanding of language structure.

"Obviously, this doesn't happen to all kids," he said. "But it happens to enough of them to cause average performance to decrease."

Jill DeVore, a Des Moines-area educator employed by the Moulton Learning Center, said television and a lack of parental involvement contribute heavily to the decline in statewide scores.

"I suspect kids spend lots of time watching television — that might be a reason for test scores going down," she said. "Kids not reading at home is a big factor, as well as kids not seeing their parents reading. I have heard teachers say that the tests are very difficult for at-risk students because they don't ask information relative to what is being taught."

Iowa City schools have not contributed to the state's downward trend. Iowa City students score higher than the national average in more than one category, said Pam Ehly of the Iowa City School District.

"Our third- and fourth-graders are not varying notably in their performance. Our seventh- and eighth-graders scored significantly above the nation and Iowa," she said.

"My first reaction to the state decline is that the students are different," Ehly said. "There is a higher percentage of kids on free or reduced lunch, now that more children are living in poverty. Student academic achievement and poverty are correlated but not conclusive."

The state is now putting an emphasis on reading and reading comprehension, she said, which was not so true in the past. Iowa City schools have instituted reading-improvement plans. Each school analyzes a student's performance through a battery of tests aimed to assess the areas that need attention. The Criteria Reference Test, which focuses on material taught in the classroom, and the Developmental Reading Assessment Test, in which the student is asked to read aloud from classroom materials, are some of the other means that the state Department of Education is using in addition to the basic-skills tests in an effort to improve students' learning abilities.

The school then examines ways to improve the overall learning environment.

"The basic-skills test is just one part of the criteria that we use," Ehly said. "Those results, along with the other exams, provide us with the information that we need."

Iowa City schools have instituted an early release program on Thursdays, allowing students to leave an hour ahead of schedule in order for teachers to conduct conferences with one another. Each local school has a committee of faculty and parents that meet to build plans for improved student achievement.

Charity requires selfless, personal giving to others ...

Theft is not charity

Last week, Johnson County saw government control itself and not spend more taxpayer money. The Iowa City City Council voted to not increase funding for community events. Additionally, it rejected funding for RiverFest, Arts Iowa City and various other planned events. Then, it slashed funding for the Jaycee's Fourth of July fireworks display by $2,500.

However, the councilors were not entirely in support of reducing the burden they place on taxpayers. There was a $464 increase for the Johnson County Historical Society and an $8 increase for Disability Awareness Days. The City Council must consist of mostly selfish people. Instead of chipping in just over a buck each for Disability Awareness Days, they have to steal money from the good people of Iowa City to cover the increase.

While scaling back "charitable" expenditures is a good move for city government, the very fact that government is in the business of subsidizing community events is a problem. It is immoral and unproductive.

It is immoral because government cannot be charitable. Money that government gives was extorted from a taxpayer who was coerced into giving up the money. The councilors who read this article need to understand that this money is not theirs to give. It is the money of the people of Iowa City. If the councilors wish to be charitable, then they should give their money. The moment they take from the wallets of taxpayers, they stop being charitable and start committing the moral equivalent of theft.

Even if the councilors were morally vacuous, they should see that subsidizing charity discourages genuine charity. Instead of asking the people for charitable donations, charities look to government mandated theft for support. As government gives more to "charity," charities replace fund raising with lobbying. In the long run, it turns a system of voluntary goodwill into a system of bribery and theft. Genuine charity is destroyed.

Of course, the City Council will probably not change its ways. This is likely a minor blip in the progress to the massive Iowa City police state. In a couple months, the council will likely escalate the war on alcohol. It will likely raise taxes and grow government next year. And when they do it, the councilors will go to sleep feeling good about how much they "gave" to "charity." They will probably feel even better when they realize that their "charity" didn't require them to take a dime from their own pockets.

Suds, duds and fascism on the downtown scene

A grave problem exists within Iowa City's bar scene — one which threatens thousands and has not been addressed by the City Council. In fact, as insidious as this quandary is, it receives no attention from officials or coverage by local media outlets. The consequences of this problem grow more severe as each weekend passes.

Deciding what to wear downtown, you see, is a troublesome task for multitudes of bar-goers. Yet, as is typical with such dark epidemics, denial runs rampant. People brush it off, scoff at the notion that they, too, are afflicted. "I'm not overly concerned with my appearance," they say. "I am who I am, regardless of attire or cosmetic products." Then they spend the next 45 minutes furiously combing through the closet, trying to pin down an ensemble that will guarantee approval and satisfaction from the patrons at the Union Bar.

This process, simple as it sounds, is most often ugly and brutish; when vanity asserts itself, frustration reigns supreme. Women seem to suffer most acutely from this problem. It is not uncommon, at 8 p.m. on a Friday, to observe a college sophomore immersed deeply in the struggle.

After scrutinizing and assessing the comparative qualities of her entire collection of shirts, in relation to each's potential to impress drunken men at a dimly lit bar, she angrily gives up. Every item in her wardrobe, she concludes, makes her appear shockingly obese. However, that a purple Gap sweater can give a 125-pound girl the appearance of an overfed water buffalo remains scientifically unproven as of yet.

Following the grudging acceptance of a shirt-pants combination, there is of course the Application of the Makeup, followed closely by the Doing of the Hair. The order is actually inconsequential, but both activities are given extreme importance. Where multiple women share a location, this can also become a thrilling group activity. After squandering 30 to 60 minutes of precious binge-drinking time, the girls are ready to make their triumphant appearances at Brothers.

Go ahead and chuckle, fellas, but realize that men are not exempt from scrutiny here. The hairgel and jewelry give us away all too easily. Prep time, it's clear, is as vital for the boys as it is for the girls. Granted, we seldom hear the phrase, "Hey, does this backward baseball cap make me look fat?" But guys can succumb to the what-to-wear crisis just as easily as any girl. This occurs whenever a young male engages in the noble pursuit known as getting "pimped out."

Ironing shirts, dousing oneself with copious amounts of cologne and selecting necklaces and earrings are all tactics used by many in order to create a get-up that "chicks will dig." This is often capped with a systematic application of gel, forcing clumps of hair askew to create that "Whoa! I just woke up in this turtle-neck and pair of Doc Martens!" look. The Doing of the Hair, apparently, is an activity that is not gender-specific.

And so we all have a bit of a problem. But the solution, fortunately, is simple. While the City Council crafts plans such as the elimination of drink specials and a ban on pitchers at bars, it can take things a step further by establishing a standard dress code for all downtown nightspots.

Fascism, by all appearances, is as stylish in Iowa City these days as leather jackets and Abercrombie gear, so why hold back? The thing to ask around town these days is, "What would Mussolini do?" Well, who knows what he'd say about 2-for-1 rum & cokes, but he'd certainly do away with the whole self-expression thing. By plaguing Iowa City residents with uncertainty and wasting their time, individualized outfits are detrimental and must be banned immediately.

What to replace them with, of course, will be subject to debate by the City Council. Loincloths, wind-pants and "Star Trek" costumes are among the options, but we'll see. Iowa City needs to reduce fun and variety while saving us time as well. The fight must go on.

Jesse Ammerman is a DI columnist.

JESSE AMMERMAN

As some UI groups seek to ban 'the beer song' ...

UI should be consistent

The UI needs to be consistent with its ludicrous ideas and rules. On Jan. 20 the Pep Band was forbidden to sing the words to "In Heaven There Is No Beer." The band members were only allowed to play the song and let the crowd sing the words. This song has been a UI tradition for over 20 years, and now the Athletics Department and the University Bands want the tradition to stop. Several groups and individuals have complained about the message sent by the song. Are people saying that singing a song with the word "beer" in it somehow adds to the binge drinking problem on campus? Doubtfully.

If the UI wants to ban "In Heaven There Is No Beer," that is fine. But, it should ban some of the following UI traditions, too. The second UI tradition to ban: the fight song. The lyrics to the fight song go, "We are going to fight, fight, fight, for Iowa." These words are instructing the spectators to become physically violent. If this song stands, then it looks like the UI is a fan of physical violence and brutal beatings. Someone quick, ban this tradition!

The third UI tradition to ban: away-game tailgating for football. The whole purpose of tailgating is to get unbelievably intoxicated. The UI Athletics Department pays for this condonance of binge drinking and alcoholism. If the UI continues this tradition, it looks like it condones alcoholism and irresponsibility. So, we better cross that tradition off the list, too.

Banning these traditions sounds absurd — well, not as absurd as forbidding the Pep Band from singing the words to "In Heaven There Is No Beer." It may be a silly tradition, but it is one that spectators enjoy. Singing a little song with the word "beer" in it really doesn't change the social structure of the UI. So, the UI might as well let the Pep Band members sing it and make the crowd happy. If it doesn't want to give in to allowing the Pep Band to once again sing, then it should seriously consider banning the fight song and football tailgating. The UI needs to be consistent.

Valentine no treat

Film: Valentine
Director: Jamie Blanks
Writers: Donna Powers, Wayne Powers, Gretchen J. Berg and Aaron Harberts
Starring: David Boreanaz, Denise Richards and Marley Shelton
Length: 97 minutes
Rated: R

Excuse me, is this where all the beautiful people hang out? Welcome to the world of Valentine, where, despite what demographics indicate, every single person is young, good-looking and successful. Sounds great, right? Sure it does, until about 20 minutes into the film, when you realize that you couldn't care less about any of these people. Think back to those horror-movie rules that Scream laid down. Not included on the list are the unwritten and obvious: "Always make your audience care about your characters." Apparently, it wasn't so obvious to director Jamie Blanks and the writing team behind Valentine.

A horror film with characters devoid of any redeeming virtues is an impossible sell, but Valentine tries to put it over on us, anyway. It really sucks the suspense out of a chase scene when you're half-hoping the killer comes out on top.

For example, take Paige (Denise Richards), one of five 20-something best friends being stalked circa Valentine's Day by a former classmate whom she and her friends spurned back in junior high. After the first of her friends turns up dead, Paige deals with her grief by sporting a halter top to the funeral and then flirting with the investigating detective.

Richards sure knows how to play stuck-up and sleazy. As far as I can tell, the key to sleaze is moving your mouth as little as possible when delivering your lines. Also, a high-arching eyebrow is a must. That's all there is to it. Genius.

Granted, you're really not supposed to like Paige, but even the cute, innocent Kate (Marley Shelton) is tough to sympathize with. Kate spends most of her time changing her mind about her feelings for Adam (David Boreanaz), her ex-boyfriend, who loves his liquor a little more than he loves her. Kate's emotional seesawing gets really old, really quickly.

Throw in the saccharine, hyperactive Lily (Jessica Cauffiel) and Dorothy (Jessica Capshaw), who has a permanent chip on her shoulder, and you have a group of girls you wouldn't be very excited to hang out with. The only promising character, the fifth friend, Shelley (Katherine Heigl), dies in the first 10 minutes of the film.

On the bright side, Valentine does manage to rack up a body count with a glimmer of originality. Of course you have your standard ax and knife killings, but a combination drill and hot tub demise is entertaining.

Valentine also serves up a few look-away moments, including a nasty glass-shard sequence (think curb stomp from American History X).

But that's all the ground-breaking Valentine can muster.

Visually, the film's killer is straight out of Scream, with a cherub mask and wool coat standing in for the ghost face and black cloak. As for the killer's calling card, Valentine lifts the menacing note technique from I Know What You Did Last Summer, only it's not stealing because this killer leaves valentines instead.

As you watch a group of spoiled little girls scamper and scream while a psychopath moseys on after them, you do start to feel a hint of typical horror-film emotion. Unfortunately, you quickly realize you're not jumpy from suspense; you're just itching to get out of the theater.

Gigs weekend Music Reviews

Stobberbone, Mayflies, Sam Knutson and the Shame Train Gabe's, Feb. 1

On a night when the temperature dipped to minus five degrees, Stobberbone blasted Gabe's with a fiery, intense style of country music that was balanced by ironic lyrics and an underlying joy.

Sam Knutson and the Shame Train opened the show with slow, bluesy country. The Mayflies, a more traditional country band, followed. The Mayflies answered Sam Knutson's melancholy with a tide of exuberance. The group included a fiddle and played extensive instrumental pieces that inspired dancing in the audience.

Although Stobberbone was billed as an alt-country group, lead guitarist Jess Barr described the group's style as rock 'n' roll. The group's country roots were apparent in songs that included a banjo and lyrics about alcohol and loneliness. However, Brent Best's lead vocals had a punk roughness and urgency, and most songs included rock-style guitar solos.

The group had great interaction with the small audience and created an intimate environment but at the same time poured out waves of energy.

Bohemian Soul Tribe The Q Bar, Feb. 2

The funk was "goin' round the room" on Feb. 2, when the Bohemian Soul Tribe returned to Iowa City. The familiar Cedar Rapids group drew an energetic crowd to hear its re-vamped sound with new lead singer Nassor Cooper. It was hard for anyone in the audience to sit still as Cooper and friends worked their way through a large array of funk covers.

Songs by artists such as James Brown, Tower of Power and the P-Funk All-Stars got the Tribe's fans up and dancing from the very beginning of the show. The Tribe's rhythm section also provided the needed tight cohesion on such original funk songs as "In the Sauce" and "Empty Spaces." The highlight of the night, though, was its talented horn section; Johnny Cord and Luke Ziegenhorn consistently blew the crowd away with their explosive trumpet and saxophone solos.

The Chicago groove quartet Callico Cats opened for the Bohemian Soul Tribe. Making its first trip to Iowa City, the group was a special surprise with its consistent ability to produce high-powered jams. If you missed the Bohemian Soul Tribe's performance on Feb. 2, it will be at the Airliner on Feb. 13 and the Green Room on Feb. 22.

Dennis 'Daddy-O' McMurrin and Dan 'D.J.' Johnson The Mill, Feb. 2

The effort appeared minimal. The sound was incredible. Dennis 'Daddy-O' McMurrin and longtime collaborator Dan 'D.J.' Johnson provided a history of rock, rhythm and blues at the Mill Friday. Covering an impressive lot of artists including the Beatles, Johnny Cash, Lou Rawls, Santana, Elvis and the surfer sounds of the Chantays, it seemed McMurrin and Johnson could have played all night.

The smooth sounds McMurrin coaxed from his Gibson guitar revealed a love between a man and his instrument. A finesse most guitarists are simply void of radiated from his fingers onto the strings, flitting and flying over the frets. He is a virtuoso. Name the song and watch Daddy-O go.

Bass in hand and hat pulled down low, D.J. Johnson's finger-work on the bass was rhythmic to a t.

McMurrin's husky, nicotine-enhanced baritone shone on Lou Rawls "You're Gonna Miss My Lovin'." Johnson echoed in choir-boy backup vocals. The two seemed telepathic, like boyhood comrades throughout the performance. Daddy-O's shades stayed on as they always do, but his soul he could not hide.

BOX OFFICE

Wedding Planner fends off slice-and-dice Valentine

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Traditional Valentine's romance won out over the slasher variety at the box office.

Jennifer Lopez's The Wedding Planner remained the No. 1 movie for the second straight weekend, taking in $11 million, according to studio estimates Sunday. Lopez also is riding high on music charts with her album J.Lo., which debuted at No. 1 last week.

The horror flick Valentine, about a serial killer preying on beautiful women, overcame bad reviews to open in second place with a respectable $10.1 million. The movie stars David Boreanaz and Denise Richards.

The weekend's other new movie, Head Over Heels, fared poorly with just $5 million, finishing at No. 7. Freddie Prinze Jr. and Monica Potter star in the comedy about a woman who suspects her new beau may be a murderer.

While no one film dominated the market, the overall box office still managed to increase. The top 12 films grossed $73.8 million, up 2.3 percent from the same weekend a year ago, when Scream 3 opened with a whopping $34.7 million.

"This is just a testament to the strength of the holdovers that are in the marketplace right now," said Paul Dergarabedian, the president of Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc., which tracks the box office.

Estimated ticket sales for Feb. 2 through Sunday at North American theaters, according to Exhibitor Relations:

1. The Wedding Planner, $11 million.
2. Valentine, $10.1 million.
3. Cast Away, $7.41 million.
4. Save the Last Dance, $7.4 million.
5. Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, $7.35 million.
6. Traffic, $6.3 million.
7. Head Over Heels, $5 million.
8. Finding Forrester, $4.4 million.
9. Snatch, $4.1 million.
10. Chocolat, $3.7 million.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You need to interact with relatives who will be able to shed some light on your past. Trips will be rewarding but expensive. Try to get along with those you live with.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It won't do any good to become angry over money matters. You have to set a budget and make sure that everyone in the family sticks to it.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You will be emotional about a family problem. Deal with the situation as quickly as possible and get back to doing the things you enjoy most.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): You will have to be careful that someone you work with doesn't misinterpret your actions. Your intentions may be honorable, but your approach may be questionable. Don't be too eager to let anyone know your secrets.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get involved in groups that offer intellectual stimulation. You can meet potential new mates. However, make sure they aren't already involved with someone else.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Unite with colleagues, and you'll be surprised how well strength in numbers works.

You can also make suggestions that will improve working conditions and financial well-being.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You're in love with life. You should get out as much as possible. Lectures will bring you information as well as open up doors to interesting new connections.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Children will be frustrating. Don't give in to their financial demands. It is best not to take risks. Be sure to get enough rest. Fatigue will lead to minor health problems.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Courses you sign up for will turn into a form of entertainment. You are likely to meet someone special through those you befriend. Don't take on too much. Focus on your goals.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can accomplish a great deal if you focus on your job. Avoid becoming sidetracked by those eager to spread rumors about colleagues.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can please your partner by just being there. You will enjoy challenging and competitive games. Your strong need to be first will lead you to the winner's circle.

Injuries continue to plague Recker

Doctors say Luke Recker's knee will put him out indefinitely.

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa's run at a Big Ten Championship was dealt a major blow on Feb. 2, when it was announced that Luke Recker would be out indefinitely with a knee injury.

John Albright, the men's basketball team physician, said the 6-6 guard apparently suffered a chip-fracture of the right patella in Iowa's win over Indiana on Jan. 27.

"There was never any swelling until after that (Indiana) game, which leads us to that conclusion,"

Albright said. "It's the type of injury that could keep him out for as little as six weeks or possibly more."

He added that his staff wasn't considering surgery at this point. Instead, doctors plan on using new cutting-edge technology to accelerate the recovery time.

Recker, a native of Auburn, Ind., had left town and was unavailable for comment. Recker's father, Clair Recker, said his son will attach an ultrasound device to his knee and be able to conduct the treatment himself. Professional athletes such as Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman have used the same treatment to quicken their return to action.

Prior to the fracture, Recker was suffering from tendonitis and a bruise on the knee after colliding with a Missouri player on Dec. 16.

"He's extremely disappointed," Clair Recker said. "For at least the next six weeks he'll go through the treatments prescribed. Ultimately he'll listen to the doctors."

Recker, an All-American candidate, was averaging a team-high 18.1 points a game with a season total of 49 assists and 20 steals. He started all 18 games he played in, including his last game prior to the fracture. Against his former Hoosier teammates, he scored 27 points and pulled down eight rebounds in a winning effort.

"Luke's loss is a big one," Iowa coach Steve Alford said.

"His scoring and leadership on the court are why we're tied for first in the league standings, but the physical well-being of Luke is our first priority. As a team, we will need others to step up their game, and I believe we have the type of individuals who will meet this challenge."

Senior guard Dean Oliver said the loss of Recker is obviously a devastating blow to the Hawkeyes as they try to chase a Big Ten title. Iowa is currently second in the standings. Oliver said he will be one of the men Alford has challenged to step up.

"With the loss of his 20 points, I'm going to have to look for more buckets," Oliver said. "Teams will focus more

Galloway to start practice

After quitting Iowa's team before the season, Kyle Galloway will rejoin the team today.

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

Kyle Galloway couldn't sit on the sideline any longer. The lingering back pains that forced the junior guard to leave the Iowa men's basketball team in mid-September are, for the most part, a thing of the past.

In addition, Galloway said, the recent departure of Joe Ferrino coupled with Luke Recker's knee injury left the Hawkeyes were practicing with 11 players. He will the much-needed 12th man.

"I'll be an extra body," he said. "I know the system, so I can help out in practice, and that's why I'm back right now. I'm looking to help out the team in whatever way possible."

This isn't the first time Galloway has made a comeback. The Sioux City native took a medical redshirt in 1998-99 and came back strong the following season, starting 18 games and averaging 8.5 points a contest.

However, it has been nearly a year since he has played basketball at a competitive level. He admits he has not lifted weights, and while he is in good shape, he is not in basketball shape. He said he doesn't know how long it will take before he is back at the level when he left.

After he made the difficult decision to walk away from college basketball, he took up a volunteer coaching position with Iowa City Regina. He said he has enjoyed working with the boys and plans on continuing to help. In the workouts he has done, the back has remained relatively pain free.

In fact, he said since the beginning of January, he has felt pretty good. His health, the need for his presence and conversations with senior Dean Oliver helped complete

Hawkeyes beat up on Hoosiers

The Hawkeyes continues its winning streak with a convincing 83-56 win against Indiana

By Roseanna Smith
 The Daily Iowan

The feeling on Iowa women's basketball team is verging on "unstoppable."

Crediting a team confidence and riding a three-win streak, the Hawkeyes cruised to an 83-56 blowout of Indiana Sunday.

"I feel this win was very important and a changing point," Iowa coach Lisa Bluder said. "We continue to raise the bar, even after we proved we could win on the road against Northwestern."

After playing back-and-forth for the first five minutes, Indiana's Rachel Honegger fouled Leah Magner, who sunk three free throws and the Hawks took the lead for good. Mary Berdo sunk a long 3-pointer before Jerica Watson tossed in a layup at the 12-minute mark, putting the Hawkeyes up, 24-13.

Iowa's Jennie Lillis sparked on offense and defense, scoring 16 points and grabbing eight rebounds, something Bluder said she expected from the freshman.

"It was a struggle at first, because I take everything to heart," Lillis said. "When I shoot the ball, I try to be confident."

Lindsay Meder came up for a big 3-pointer with just under six minutes remaining in the first half, after a breakaway lay-up assisted by Cara Consuegra. The Hoosiers then threatened, as Rainey Alting and leading scorer Jill Chapman brought Indiana to within eight points as first-half play wound down.

The Iowa women's gymnastics team loses to Iowa State despite its best score of the season.

By Jeremy Shapiro
 The Daily Iowan

It was the best of times and the worst of times for the Iowa women's gymnastics the evening of Feb. 2 at the Field House.

The GymHawks compiled the best score in team history, set new records in the uneven bars and floor exercise, yet it still wasn't enough to defeat archrival Iowa State. The 196.325-195.925 final score gave the Cyclones their 15th consecutive win over Iowa.

Despite not being able to end the pesky streak, Iowa gymnasts were all smiles.

"We did awesome tonight, and we had a lot of fun," said junior Michele Ford. "Iowa State has always been a top-15 club. They are very good. We did our best, and we will beat them eventually."

Unlike many of the other 15 meets that weren't close, Iowa didn't so much lose this one as Iowa State won it. A NCAA team a year ago that returned a majority of its starters, Iowa State proved it had no weakness as the Cyclones consistently nailed their routines.

"They are very well coached, and tonight they hit their landings, which was important," said Iowa coach Mike Lorenzen.

The Hawkeyes (4-3, 2-2 in the Big Ten) were not intimidated by Iowa State or a strong contingent of Cyclone fans waving red-and-gold pompoms. In fact, in terms of points, it was Iowa's best meet ever. The Hawks shattered the previous mark, 195.435, set in 1998.

The Hawkeyes also broke the uneven-bars school record with a 49.300. Senior Giselle Boniforti dazzled the crowd putting up a 9.9. Not to be outdone, freshman Alexis Maday twisted and turned her way to a 9.9 as well. Yet, Iowa State's Tanya Huey managed to top them both, scoring a 9.925.

In fact, this is where the worst of times might kick in. Every time Iowa would put up two or three solid scores in each event, figuring it was in good shape, one of the Iowa State gymnasts would top it by 0.25, leaving Maday or Boniforti or freshmen Stephanie Gran into second.

Iowa State won all four individual events, and Shelly Kringen barely topped Iowa's Maday and Gran in the all-around.

Nevertheless, in the final event Iowa overshadowed its rivals in the floor exercise. Superb routines by Maday (9.9), Boniforti (9.85) and freshmen Brandy Killian (9.85) helped Iowa win the event and nearly catch the

The Iowa men's track team is gearing up for the Big Ten Championships and the Cyclone Open.

 The Daily Iowan

The low-key atmosphere of the UI Recreation Building on Feb. 3 disguised the fact that three critical weeks remain before the Iowa men's track and field team competes in the Indoor Big Ten Championships.

The meet was used as preparation for next weekend's competition, the Cyclone Classic, a big meet with similar style to the Big Ten Championships.

"Today, we were not worrying about times but more about winning," said senior Tim Dodge. "Next week, we will be more focused on times. You always want to run as best you can. Next week will be a great facility to run our fastest times."

While team scores were not kept, Iowa had numerous winners.

Dodge led the Hawkeyes with three wins in the meet against Western Michigan and Truman State. The senior won the 60-meters in 6.86, the 200-meters in 21.84, and ran the lead leg of the 4x400-meter relay, which hit 3:15.51. Dodge

XFL's first games raise curiosity, questions

■ The XFL doubles its expected ratings on the opening night of play.

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — David Diaz-Infante pulled the black jersey over his shoulder pads and looked in the mirror. He chuckled at the blinking red lights on the wireless microphone under his Las Vegas Outlaws uniform.

"Wow. That's different," the offensive lineman said before his game. "But it's pretty cool. Only in the XFL, I guess."

With fireworks blazing and red-and-black footballs flying, the XFL's first weekend of made-for-television games attracted enthusiastic sellout crowds from Orlando to San Francisco. At home, millions of curious viewers tuned in to this hybrid of sports competition and reality-based programming.

In the coming weeks, the fledgling league owned by the World Wrestling Federation and NBC must prove it can sustain that momentum with intriguing competition and more innovation. It's a challenge XFL founder and wrestling impresario Vince McMahon can't wait to tackle.

"I think we can do even better than this. Tonight was a fantastic experience, but we've still got changes to make," McMahon said moments after the Las Vegas Outlaws beat the New York/New Jersey Hitmen 19-0 Saturday night.

The XFL scored a ratings victory on opening night. NBC's broadcast drew a preliminary overnight rating of 10.3, meaning an average of 10.3 percent of U.S. TV homes were tuned in at any given moment. That's more than double what NBC Sports chairman Dick Ebersol told advertisers to expect.

While viewers at home were happy, the thousands of fans in the stands seemed to enjoy themselves, too, with a lot of beer, colorfully painted faces and hair, and raucous ovations for barely dressed cheerleaders.

"I don't think anyone came expecting it to be the NFL," said Chris Phippen at the game between the Chicago Enforcers and Orlando Rage. "It's going to take a while for the players to catch on with the fans, just like anything else that's new."

McMahon's creation arrived with all the technology, flash and questionable taste he promised. Cameras, at times showing dizzying, in-your-face angles, were on the field during play and in the locker room at half-time. Replays were shown to the crowds on 1,000-square-foot video boards the XFL installed at all of its stadiums.

Then there were the cheerleaders in shiny hot pants and push-up bustiers. Cameras rarely missed a chance to show them, and at one point a Las Vegas cheerleader gushed to the TV audience, "Quarterback Ryan Clement knows how to score."

"I don't think there's ever enough sex," McMahon said. "I thought that there was the right complement of sexuality and the right complement of confrontation and the right complement of real good, hard-hitting football."

Several players wore microphones, which Ebersol said will "allow fans to follow the game through the players' totally unique perspective. That's what we've really got here: a totally different way of watching football."

But most observers think the league won't survive unless the quality of play is high enough to keep NFL fans interested.

McMahon has boldly predicted the league could turn a profit within three years, but history doesn't support that view. Over the past 25 years, rival leagues such as the USFL and WFL have failed after several seasons.

Chmura acquitted; hopes to resume NFL career

WAUKESHA, Wis. (AP) — Mark Chmura says he's sorry. "I know as a Green Bay Packer and as a professional athlete, I've disappointed many, many people. And for that I am truly sorry," Chmura said Sunday, one day after a jury acquitted him of sexual assault.

"I promise you nothing like this will ever happen again."

The foreman of the jury that acquitted Chmura of sexually assaulting a 17-year-old girl said the football star is guilty of one thing: bad judgment.

"He put himself in a bad situation by being drunk with kids and in a hot tub in his underwear," foreman Brad Breidenstein, a 38-year-old bar manager from Janesville, said Sunday.

But the jury disagreed with District Attorney Paul Bucher's contention that Chmura went from frolicking around in wet boxers with drunken teen-agers to luring the girl into a bathroom and sexually assaulting her last April 9.

Chmura was acquitted Feb. 3 of charges of child enticement and sexual assault that carried up to 40 years in prison.

"None of us believed nothing happened. We all believed something happened in there," said a 59-year-old female juror who asked that her name not be used. "But we had no evidence to prove it."

Olympic team during the NHL All-Star game

They stole the spotlight from their North America captain Mario Lemieux Sunday in a, 14-12, victory over the World team in the highest-scoring All-Star game ever.

Guerin, one of three Boston linemates in the game, had three goals and two assists to win the MVP award.

Alexei Kovalev's goal got the World to 12-11 with 5:32 left and snapped the combined record of 22 goals in 1993. The game was the third penalty-free All-Star game. Last year's 9-4 contest won by the World team had one.

IOC board meets without Samaranch

DAKAR, Senegal — For the first time in his 21 years as International Olympic Committee president, Juan Antonio Samaranch will miss the opening of an executive board meeting.

Stricken by the flu, the 80-year-old Samaranch was advised by his doctors not to travel Sunday to Senegal for the first meeting of the IOC's ruling body in Africa in 23 years.

IOC Director General Francois Carrard said it was uncertain whether Samaranch would make the trip today or Tuesday, or miss the entire three-day meeting. The proceedings will open today with the IOC first vice president, Anita DeFrantz of the United States, acting as the chair.

Michigan State pummels Purdue

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Purdue played Michigan State tough before the No. 5 Spartans went on one of their trademark runs.

Trailing 15-14, the defending national champions scored the next 22 points and went on to beat the Boilermakers 72-55 Sunday, extending the nation's longest home winning streak to 41 games.

Five players scored the first five baskets during the run, in which Purdue (13-7, 5-4 Big Ten) missed 10 consecutive shots. Andre Hutson scored 14 points, Zach Randolph had 12 and Marcus Taylor added 10 for the Spartans (18-2, 7-2).

"We've been a team that feeds off of spurts," Hutson said. "Luckily, we got a big one and that won us the game. We look forward to getting big runs and getting leads that we can sit or build on."

Jimmy Buffett thrown out of seat at Heat game

MIAMI — NBA referee Joe Forte isn't a "Parrothead," apparently. Forte ejected singer Jimmy Buffett from his seat along the baseline at Sunday's game between the Knicks and Heat.

Forte said he tossed Buffett for using profanity.

"He was there with his son," said Heat coach Pat Riley, who had a front-row seat for the commotion. "I don't think it was that bad. I mean, come on, a few words."

The altercation delayed the game several minutes in the fourth quarter. Heat officials said Buffett, whose fans are called "Parrotheads," was escorted to another seat in the arena for the remainder of the game.

"He was using profanity," Forte

Hawkeyes split over weekend

Iowa beat Middle Tennessee State and lose to Vanderbilt.

By Nick Firchau
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's tennis team got a taste of what coach Paul Wardlaw called "reality" last weekend, as it fell to 11th-ranked Vanderbilt, 7-0, before rebounding with a 5-2 victory over Middle Tennessee State Sunday in Nashville, Tenn.

The 44th-ranked Hawkeyes (2-1) failed to win a set against the Commodores in singles matches and came as close as a 8-6 loss at the No. 2 doubles spot with the team of freshmen Deni Alexandrova and Pascale Veraverbeke.

"They're a top-10 team, probably in the top eight," Wardlaw said about Vanderbilt. "I think it was realistic; we're not in a position to beat a team such as Vanderbilt right now. But I think it was a very good test for us, and I was pleased with the competition."

Sunday's victory was fueled by two Iowa wins in doubles and strong showings from the team's freshmen, who were competing in only their third collegiate dual meet. The team of junior Toni Neykova and freshman Jody Scheldt posted its third victory of the season at the No. 1 doubles spot with a 8-6 win.

Freshmen Veraverbeke, Alexandrova and Jennifer Hodgman all posted victories against Middle Tennessee, while senior Erica Johnson also pulled in a win at the

No. 6 spot. It was the first collegiate victory for Alexandrova, who joined the team this spring from Bulgaria. Neykova and sophomore Steffi Hoch lost both of their singles matches over the weekend.

Wardlaw said he expects the team's lineup to change in the near future as sophomore Cassie Haas should return to the team from an injury. He said while the 23rd-ranked team of Neykova and Scheldt will stay together at the No. 1 doubles spot, he expects Haas to team up with Johnson at the No. 2 spot.

The Hawkeyes will travel to Milwaukee Saturday for their next meet, squaring off against Marquette.

Oklahoma outscores Hawkeyes

The Sooners sweep the first three spots in three of six events.

By Melinda Mawdsley
The Daily Iowan

Despite recording a season-high 210.475 points, the Iowa men's gymnastics team suffered its first dual-meet loss of the season after Oklahoma posted its best score of the year — 215.550 — at the UI Field House on Feb. 3.

Before the meet, Hawkeye coach Tom Dunn said the No. 2 Sooners had already established themselves as a team No. 4 Iowa would be forced to chase for a national title. After seeing Oklahoma's routines and final score, his feelings solidified.

"We made a lot of mistakes. I don't know if we had any event that was really complete," Dunn said. "We're going to have to do better, but we're a young team. We have some time."

The Sooners swept the first three spots in three of the six events. Freshman Antonio Cesar was the only victor for the Hawkeyes, flaring his way to a season-high 9.0 on the pommel horse.

Cameron Schick's all-around performance marked another bright spot for Iowa. He took third overall, behind Sooners Daniel Furney and Jock Stevens.

With injuries hampering several Hawks, Schick was called upon to compete in all six events for the first time this season. The sophomore's 9.1 on both the floor exercise and vault set new team marks for the 2001 campaign.

"Last year, I usually did three or four events," he said. "This year, I'm in three. I've gotten a little stronger. I think Tom wanted to give me a little try-out."

Following the meet, Dunn said the Hawks will have to increase the difficulty in their sets if they hope to contend for the NCAA championship. The Sooners' team score was higher than the Hawkeyes on each apparatus. Kevin Agnew agreed with his coach and noted that the level of difficulty is something the Hawkeyes will continue to address in the gym.

"Oklahoma looked good. I was impressed," the senior co-captain said. "We have to increase our difficulty. When you're learning a trick, it's hard to put it in because we don't have the repetitions, but toward the end of the year, we're going to get more of the repetitions in and put the more difficult tricks in that we're working on in the gym."

With the passage of another quadrennial, the governing rules for gymnastics changed. The requirements are different, and the standards are much more challenging.

Instead of posting 9.8 or 9.9, the men frequently show jubilation for a 9.0 on a 10.0 scale. Oklahoma's Brendan O'Neil is currently the nation's top-ranked man on the floor with a 9.6. Last season, Schick's 9.775 placed him eighth at the Big Ten Championships. Agnew said making the adjustments have been difficult and frustrating, especially in his senior season.

"The new scoring is tough, but everyone knows it's part of gymnastics," he said. "Everyone knows that every four years, after the Olympics, they change it."

"That doesn't always make it fun in the gym, especially as a senior, because you're kind of expected to ride out at the top of your game, and having to readjust to the whole scoring system makes it challenging not only physically but mentally."

IOWA WOMEN'S TRACK

Hawkeyes record lots of record times

Tamara Dixon and Jiselle Providence have strong performances for Iowa.

By Jeremy Shapiro
The Daily Iowan

The fourth meet turned out to be the charm for the Iowa women's track team.

Iowa recorded a slew of season-best times at the Mayo Invitational held at Notre Dame on Feb. 2 and 3. Although the meet did not keep team scores, many Iowa athletes put up their highest scores or best times and placed in the top five.

Freshman Tamara Dixon posted a season best time of 25.18 to finish fourth in the 200-meter dash.

"I really wanted to cut my time down," she said. "I'm happy to set a personal best cause it shows I'm improving."

but now I want to cut it down further next time."

Dixon and teammate sophomore Jiselle Providence faced stiff competition in the 60-meter dash. After three heats, Providence took bronze in the final with a time of 7.70. Dixon was close behind at 7.74.

"I'm happy for Jiselle," Dixon said. "She had a hard heat and did really well."

A couple of Hawkeyes named Sarah took home silver medals. Sarah Arens sat out last week because she was sick. Just seven days later, she ran the 1,500-meters in 17:31.47, trailing only Kim McGregor. Sarah Steffen matched her season best with a time of 8.74 in the 60-meter hurdles.

Senior Gina Shannon tied her indoor high with a pole vault mark of 10-6. Shannon wasn't quite satisfied with the height but was pleased with her fifth-place finish.

"I was a little disappointed because I had better jumps in practice," she said. "Still, considering the field was pretty competitive, I was happy with fifth."

Dixon said she enjoyed her visit to Notre Dame. While the weather wasn't great, and it was a long bus ride, she thought the team had a fun trip.

Shannon competed on Feb. 2 and then had some time on Feb. 3 to explore the city.

"Saturday, I got to look for lunch and see the sites," she said. "Seeing Touchdown Jesus was my favorite."

Iowa will head to the less-exciting town of Ames this coming weekend for the Cyclone Invitational, which starts Friday. This will be the second trip to Ames for the team; it competed in the Iowa State Open on Jan. 20.

Women swimmers lose to Penn State

The Hawkeyes drop the meet to the Nittany Lions by a score of 177-111.

By Julie Matolo
The Daily Iowan

After the long haul to State College, Pa., the Iowa swimming and diving team came up short on Feb. 30.

Though Penn State beat the Hawkeyes in a dual competition, 177-111, neither team was focused on winning the meet. Every competitor's mind was concerned with preparing for the most important competition in two weeks, the Big Ten Championships.

"This meet we focused on good effort and mental effort," said coach Garland O'Keefe. "This was a chance to see where everyone is."

Iowa tried to keep the Lions at bay with a few wins of its own. Allison Lyle led the Hawks with one individual win, a relay win and two second-place finishes. The junior shepherded the Hawkeyes in a three-place sweep in the winning the 200-yard IM in a time of 2:09.19. Kati Wise, a freshman slid into the second spot, touching the wall in 2:12.76.

Lyle also helped her team win the 400-yard freestyle relay in 3:31.39. The toughest competition for the junior came in her strongest event, the 200-yard breaststroke, in which she held onto a second-place finish (2:19.74) against Penn State's Kristen Woodring, the nation's No. 1 competitor in the event. Lyle also brought home a second-place finish in the 50-yard freestyle (24.39).

Freshman Christie Hooper showed her strength by winning the 200-yard butterfly in 2:06.78. She was able to add a second-place finish in the 500-yard freestyle (5:08.83).

"The meet was a positive experience because we saw where everyone is, and we are looking forward to Big Tens," O'Keefe said.

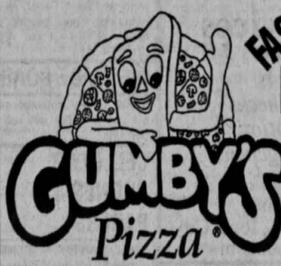

Senior strength came through, as senior Stacey Wertz won the 200-yard freestyle in 1:53.31. Loredana Zisu also placed second in her strength, the 200-yard backstroke.

Iowa had an impressive finish in diving with Sara Wolchko placing second in both events. The senior earned her spot in the 1-meter event with a total of 250.05 and in the 3-meter with 273.82.

Melissa Loehndorf, a junior added a second-place finish in her best event, the 1,000-yard freestyle (10:24.96).

"We will now be working on resting and fine-tuning details," O'Keefe said. "We are working to be 100 percent at Big Tens, and we are on the right track."

HONOLULU — Rich Gannon got the AFC off to a winning start in the Pro Bowl, then took the rest of the day off.

Gannon, who led the Oakland Raiders to their best season in 10 years, passed for 160 yards and two touchdowns in the first 11 minutes Sunday as the AFC rolled to a 38-17 victory over the NFC.

It was enough to earn MVP honors for the 35-year-old veteran playing in his second straight Pro Bowl after languishing in a backup role for most of his first 11 NFL seasons.

By winning for the fourth time in the last five Pro Bowls, the AFC trimmed the NFC's lead to 16-15 since the game went to its present format in 1971.

The AFC scored the first three times it had the ball on Gannon's two scoring passes and a 29-yard field goal by Matt Stover, and led by at least two touchdowns the rest of the way.

Less than two minutes into the second quarter, the AFC had 14 first downs and 231 yards of total offense to no first downs and six yards for the NFC.

Galloway anxious to get back

Galloway's decision. "Dean and I have a class together," Galloway said. "He had been trying to get me to come back for quite a while, and this time I just couldn't say no."

After speaking with Iowa coach Steve Alford, it became official—Galloway will resume practice today.

Galloway's father, Stanley Galloway, said his son had mentioned something about a comeback when he returned home to Sioux City a week ago but hadn't been in contact with him to hear his final decision.

One thing Stanley Galloway does know is that his son loves basketball and being away from the game and the team was hard for him. When Galloway left, his father said, his back was so sore it was almost a relief to walk away.

Now that Galloway is back, he hopes his son's back will hold up, but Galloway isn't worried about his back. He isn't thinking long-term. He's thinking now.

The Hawkeyes have six weeks to prepare for a possible berth in the NCAA Tournament, and they need his help. If it's from beyond the arc — great. If it's from the sidelines, that's fine too.

"I would like to get my full game back as soon as possible. Whether I can do that in six weeks or not, we'll see," Galloway said after a quick shoot-around in Carver-Hawkeye Arena Sunday. "It's not like they need help winning games. They don't need me to help them win games. They may need me to help them prepare to win games. I think the team's cool with it. The coaches are excited to have me back, and I'm excited to be back."

on me. We're going to fight through this. Championship teams fight through it."

Junior guard Ryan Hogan and freshman guard Brody Boyd will also be expected to play extended minutes and pick up some scoring slack. Oliver said Hogan's minutes could increase to 30, while Boyd will probably have to play 20 solid minutes at both point and shooting guard.

Senior Jason Smith said Recker was wondering what else could possibly go wrong. This knee injury is the latest in a long line of obstacles Recker has had to overcome to even be on the basketball court.

He received heavy criticism for leaving the Indiana program and transferring to Arizona following his sophomore season. While enrolled at Arizona, he was involved in a tragic car accident. The repercussions of the accident and the distance from his home caused Recker to leave the Wildcats to start anew at Iowa. He was on pace to have his best collegiate season.

"He's proven everything he's needed to prove," Clair Recker said. "If anyone questioned whether or not he could come back, he proved he could. He came back a better player. He did what he had to do. It would have been nice to have a happy Luke Recker all year."

Clair Recker and Recker's teammates said he's shooting to be back at least by the March 15 start-up of the NCAA Tournament.

Throwers key to Iowa's success

MEN'S TRACK

credits his teammates, Liam Card, Russell Peterson and Scott Williamson, for the Hawkeye success in the event. Card, a sophomore, also had a second-place finish in the 200-meters (22.12).

The Hawkeye throwers can again be credited for helping the Hawkeyes. Senior Jeremy Allen won the shot put for the fourth time this season (60-5), and placed second in the weight throw (64-7.75). Allen, who is working on a new technique this year, fell short of a season-best in the win.

Iowa throwers know they will be depended on in the big meets, such as Big Tens. The Hawkeyes have throwers ranked in the top six in both the shot put and the weight throw.

"There is pressure on the throwers, but we are up for it," Allen said. "It has been like this for a while, and we are used to it. We are big-meet guys. Having the pressure is not a bad thing."

Other event winners included sophomore Justin Poots in the 60-meter hurdles in 8.33, while Tim Orris, a freshman, won the 800-meters in 1:58.81. The Hawkeyes had strength in the distance events, with two runners strutting their stuff. Iowa's Shaun Allen, running unattached, won the mile run in 4:18.03; he was followed by Iowa senior Sean Moeller at 4:20.14. Luke Nessa, a sophomore, posted a personal best in the high jump for a second-place finish (6-8).

Mike Cunningham who normally runs the 800-meter, stepped up to win the 600-meters in 1:22.57.

"We had a lot more distance guys run," he said. "We have had a lot of guys hurt, so hopefully, they will come back for Big Tens. They were back this weekend."

The Hawkeyes enter their last preparation for Big Tens this weekend as they travel to Ames for the Cyclone Classic. The caliber of competition will be comparable with that of the Big Tens on Feb. 24-25. Iowa State will host a two-day competition on Feb. 9-10.

"Now, we can rest for the big Iowa State meet," said coach Larry Wiczorek. "This is a critical time in the last three weeks before Big Tens, so we really have to step it up."

Wrestlers split on the road

Iowa loses to Michigan before rebounding to beat Penn State.

By Nick Firchau
The Daily Iowan

The third-ranked Iowa men's wrestling team failed to recover from an 18-0 deficit against the fifth-ranked Michigan Wolverines in Ann Arbor on Feb. 2, as the Wolverines handed Iowa an 18-16 conference loss.

The Hawkeyes (16-3, 4-2 in the Big Ten) made a split of the weekend's two Big Ten meets by traveling to Penn State Sunday and routing the Nittany Lions, 33-10.

Michigan, which lost to Iowa 20-18 in the quarterfinals of the N.W.C.A. National Wrestling Duals on Jan. 20, got major decision victories in three upper-weight matches to take a 18-0 lead into intermission before the Hawkeyes' highly ranked lower weights could get in on the action.

"We just gave up too many bonus points," Iowa coach Jim Zalesky said. "It was a team loss. We actually won one more match than we did in the last one, but got behind early and the pressure was on guys to catch up."

Senior Jody Strittmatter posted a major decision over Michigan's A.J. Grant at 125 pounds, while seniors Eric Juergens and Doug Schwab grabbed decisions at 133 and 141 respectively. Junior Mike Zadick's 2-1 victory in the tiebreaker over Mike Kulczycki set the stage for the last match of the meet, in which Iowa needed a pin to complete the furious comeback.

Senior T.J. Williams settled for a 7-3 decision at 157 pounds, which secured the meet for the Wolverines.

Sunday's win was fueled by a Jurgens pin and technical fall wins from Strittmatter and Schwab. The Hawkeyes' only two losses of the meet came at 197 pounds and heavyweight, where Ryan Fulsass lost a 17-5 major decision and twin brother Randy Fulsass was pinned in 1:49.

Schwab's two victories over the weekend put his season record at 27-0 for the top-ranked wrestler at 141 pounds. Williams upped his season record to 20-0 and maintained his top national ranking at 157 pounds, while Juergens, who was named the Big Ten wrestler of the week last week, also remains as the top wrestler at 133 pounds.

"We need some guys to pick up the pace," Zalesky said. "With two starters out, we need someone to step up."

the game away.

"When you get a lead, you can't let them creep back and think they can play with you," Bluder said. "You have to have that killer attitude."

The same attitude will be important this week, when Iowa hosts No. 6 Purdue, which is undefeated in Big Ten conference play, Thursday at 7 p.m.

"We're very excited and think we're ready for that," Consuegra said. "To me, it's time to go against a team that great. It's our game, and we have that confidence."

Cyclones in the overall score. With the Hawkeye fans making noise, the fired-up GymHawks danced their way to a school record 49.250.

"It was so much fun out there competing," Boniforti said. "The energy level was incredible."

Iowa set yet another record when Maday, Gran and Boniforti scored 39 or better overall. It marked the first time ever three gymnasts had all scored 39 in one meet.

All these school records means Iowa now belongs in the same gym as a national powerhouse Cyclone team.

"I think we showed that we can definitely complete with Iowa State," Lorenzen said.

Running the winning streak to sweet 16 will not be easy when Iowa goes to Ames for a rematch on March 13.

The GymHawks will travel to North Carolina to battle North Carolina State, William & Mary and Kent State in Raleigh Friday.
