City Council denies Etc. liquor license

■ The City Council narrowly turns down the bar's application for a liquor license.

By Peter Rugg
The Daily Iowan

In what may be its first refusal in years, the Iowa City City Council cited concerns over the character of Etc.'s owners in voting Thursday to deny the bar a liquor license.

"I don't ever recall (a denial) in my time here," said Steve Atkins, who has been the city manager for 14 years.

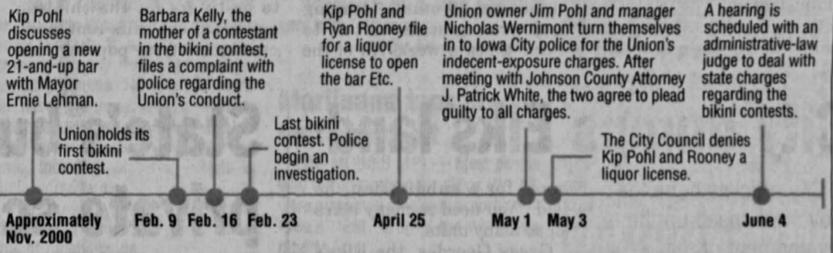

Etc. owner Kip Pohl said following the hour-long council meeting Thursday morning he would immediately file an emergency appeal with the state, which has the authority to overrule the council's decision.

Thursday's vote came despite the recommendation of Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White to issue the license. Union Bar owner Jim Pohl, Kip Pohl's son, and Union Bar manager Nick Wernimont turned themselves in to authorities for charges of public indecent exposure for the bar's February bikini contests Wednesday morning as part of an agreement they reached with White to gain his recommendation for the license.

Making the rounds with a sister of Mercy

■ Barb Freyermuth is Mercy Hospital's go-to person on the night shift.

By Megan L. Eckhardt
The Daily Iowan

After almost half of her shift Tuesday night, the "hospital problem-solver" Barb Freyermuth has assisted with several patient admissions and the birth of a baby, with another one on the way.

The assistant director of nursing walks the halls of Mercy Hospital, 500 E. Market St., checking on different units and working out solutions to various issues during her shift, from 10 p.m. until 7 a.m., four days a week.

Freyermuth has worked the night-shift at the hospital for 22 years, long enough to know how to solve most problems. As a registered nurse, she's available to help when necessary, too.

"My biggest job is to get people where they need to get," she said. "I'm the person they call if there're problems. You could say I'm the problem-solver. I've been here long enough to know whom to talk to to get what people need."

Because she wanted to be home with her children during the day, Freyermuth, 56, started working the night shift and decided to stay. Despite the late hours, she said, she enjoys it and everything it offers.

"It's a little like a small family," she said. "Most of the people on the night shift know the strengths and weaknesses of each other. But, for the most part, you don't see a lot of people, so you're surprised when you do."

2:30 a.m. — After helping to admit a new patient and checking some forms, Freyermuth quickly makes the rounds, gliding through the empty halls of the hospital to ensure that everything is running smoothly. "All clear for now," she says.

"Every night is new and different; every night, it's a change. One night there's a lot of crises, and others, it's quiet, which is good."

nurses ask the assistant director how to handle a situation.

Freyermuth consults her log book she keeps in her long white lab coat, which also houses her pager and cell phone so she can be contacted at any time. Her log book will aid her later in the night, when she determines how many people will be needed in each department the following day.

Freyermuth finishes her discussion, satisfied that the concerns will be taken care of.

"The night shift has a lot of decisions to make on its own," she said.

"We all work very closely together." Despite how busy her night is, Freyermuth says, she still has time for her husband, although it's hard at times.

"We're busy people, but for the most part, we have time for each other," she said. "Although there are times where we have to put up sticky notes on the bathroom mirror."

3 a.m. — Freyermuth walks through the entire hospital, stopping by the nearly vacant cafeteria and then back to her small office.

"I thought it would be fun to get one of those pedometers to see how far I walk each night," she says.

3:15 a.m. — A beep sounds, and Freyermuth reaches for her pager and then for her phone. A department needs another staff member. She tries a couple numbers and eventually finds an available nurse.

"You float — I mean, you're not in one place for the night," she says. "I think it would be hard to go back to just one floor because I want to know what's going on everywhere all the time."

3:30 a.m. — After looking at her log book and receiving yet another page, Freyermuth calculates the number of personnel needed on each floor for the following day in her computer. Thirty minutes later, she receives another page and goes to help out a department with a shortage of nurses.

FBI hid church bombing evidence

■ For 30 years, the agency withheld files from state prosecutors in the 1963 Birmingham bombing.

By Jay Reeves
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — For three decades, the FBI failed to disclose it had hundreds of hours of tape recordings and other evidence that could have helped to convict former Ku Klux Klansmen in the 1963 church bombing that killed four black girls.

When that information finally came out in court in recent weeks and clinched the conviction of ex-Klansman Thomas Blanton Jr. Tuesday, Alabama prosecutors who first broke open the long-dormant case in the 1970s were outraged.

"That is the most stunning revelation of this thing," said former Alabama Assistant Attorney General John Yung, who in 1977 helped send ex-Klansman Robert "Dynamite Bob" Chambliss to prison for the bombing. "I think it's shocking that someone sat on that evidence all those years."

Among the FBI evidence that had remained secret since the mid-1960s: secret tape recordings of Blanton talking about planning "the bomb" and the testimony of Mitchell Burns, a former Klansman and paid FBI informant who recorded other conversations.

"What excuse can the FBI have for allowing Mr. Blanton to go free for 24 years with this smoking-gun evidence hidden in its files?" former Alabama Attorney General Bill Baxley wrote in a commentary Thursday in the New York Times. Baxley reopened the church bombing probe in the 1970s and convicted Chambliss.

It's a safe place. For those who don't identify themselves as heterosexual, the UI's 30-year-old Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Union provides a sense of community in a world that's often hostile. The union, the oldest university-recognized and funded group of its kind in the nation, will celebrate its anniversary today at the IMU with guest speakers and a dance highlighting each decade of its existence.

No tax rebates this year, Grassley says

■ The Iowa senator also says the Senate will not support lowering the highest income-tax rates.

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress is unlikely to approve tax-rebate checks this year, seeing less of a need to stimulate the economy, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles Grassley said Thursday. The Iowa Republican also said the votes aren't there to lower the highest income-tax rates to 33 percent, as President Bush wants.

Grassley, in an interview with Associated Press reporters and editors, said the Bush administration "is still trying to find a way" to give taxpayers some of the budget surplus through rebate checks. But he said enthusiasm for it in Congress has waned amid evidence that the U.S. economy grew 2 percent in the first quarter and questions about how the program would work.

"There's a feeling that maybe that is not needed now," Grassley said. "You don't even hear the Democrats talking about it."

Lawmakers could, however, accelerate income-tax cuts to provide $100 billion in tax relief this year and next as part of the compromise budget deal.

Reading program celebrates UI student/tutors, kids

American Reads uses UI students as tutors in the local elementary schools.

By Sara Faiwell
The Daily Iowan

A year of tutoring local elementary-school students in reading culminated in a packed auditorium Thursday night.

Families, teachers and principals gathered at Twain Elementary School, 1355 DeForest Ave., to congratulate 136 children from six local schools and 46 UI student/tutors on their accomplishments in the America Reads program.

America Reads is a literacy-intervention program introduced in 1998 by the Clinton administration. The goal is to make sure all children are reading well by the end of third grade. UI junior Andrea Berry, the head tutor during the day at Mann Elementary School, 521 N. Dodge St., said she loves the program.

"That we are able to get out into the local schools and go one-on-one is great," she said. "And to be able to see the success is wonderful."

The program is free for the Iowa City School District because it is funded by the UI and the tutors' wages are paid for by the government.

America Reads offers individualized 30-minute reading and writing sessions two to three times a week. All of the tutors receive at least 18 hours of training and work under the work-study program. Some students participate as volunteers.

Phillip Jones, the UI vice president for student services, attended the program to thank all the tutors and participants.

"This is one of the best investments both the university and the government can make, and we are pleased to be a part of the program," he said.

At the celebration, the UI students sang a song about how glad they were to be tutors for the children and acted out skits containing characters from popular children's books. Program supervisor Joy Harrington, who has taught for 25 years, said she realized in second grade that she wanted to help kids and touch others' lives. Her involvement in the tutoring program is another way she has achieved her goal.

"Our tutors are so devoted to the children," she said. "And that is really great."

After the celebration, the parents went into classrooms where the students read to them in order to show their improvement from the beginning of the year.

First-grader Sunshine Zwolanek of Roosevelt Elementary School, 611 Greenwood Drive, said she liked the year-long program.

"I really like to read, and I have a lot of fun," she said.

City dumps Elks land

City officials hope the move will speed up the development of the Peninsula area.

By Pam Dewey
The Daily Iowan

In an effort to appease Elks Club members, the Iowa City City Council voted Thursday to rezone 24 acres near the organization's property.

The vote is expected to allow the city to move forward with plans for an 82-acre subdivision in the Peninsula area of the Iowa River near the Elks Club, 637 Foster Road.

On March 16, Elks members filed a lawsuit against the city, claiming the city's neighborhood-density study improperly included 24 acres of their land that covers two holes of their golf course. Because the Elks have exclusive easement on the land, the group argued, the city can't include it in the density assessment.

In order to avoid further legal problems, the council voted to jettison the Elks' land from the plans and instead include 24 acres south and west of the golf course.

Councilor Mike O'Donnell said even though the council rezoned the land, no plans exist for building on the land.

"It's just a certain requirement to have that amount of land" for a subdivision, he said. "You need so many acres for so many units."

Gregg Geerdes, the Elks' attorney, said that although the group is glad the city has recognized its property rights on the disputed land, the rezoning doesn't necessarily affect the lawsuit against the city.

"Whether the lawsuit will be affected) depends on how successful our discussions with the city are," he said. "We certainly hope to get things resolved with the city."

The group, he said, still wants to discuss safety issues with the city because the subdivision is being developed so close to the Elks' property.

However, Roger Behl, an Elks trustee, said the lawsuit was brought against the city not only as a response to the inclusion of the group's land in the city's density study but also because the city has ignored questions about safety.

City Manager Steve Atkins said the city is eager to move ahead with plans for the Peninsula project and hopes not to encounter any more problems.

"We will work with them on safety-related issues," he said. "And if all goes well, we will be able to avoid (delaying further the housing plans). But ultimately, it's up to the courts."

State's budget crisis may help private schools, Coleman says

The UI president says the state's severe budget slash may drive students to private universities.

By Tony Robinson
The Daily Iowan

State funding cuts may create an environment in which private universities will have more resources to offer than the state's three regents' institutions, UI President Mary Sue Coleman warned Thursday.

"The competition between public and private colleges really worries me, because they will have more to offer students and faculty if this trend continues," she told 50 faculty and staff members.

The employees filled the IMU North Room to express their concerns to Coleman and UI Provost Jon Whitmore about state budget cuts. They mentioned several issues, including possible layoffs and a decrease in salary appropriations, but a large portion of the meeting discussed the competition with private universities.

Coleman said attitudes about state funding for public universities are changing, and because private universities do their own fund raising, administrators need to fight for public education.

UI law Professor Sheldon Kurtz said he attended the meeting to raise his concerns regarding a potential decrease in the quality of services offered. The education the UI offers may be affected by the cuts, he said.

"If the cuts go as planned, the overall quality of the university will be harmed," he said.

Coleman added that undergraduates come to the UI to experience a great institution, but they may have to pay more tuition in the future to make up for state-funding shortfalls.

Some equipment purchases and building renovations will be deferred, she said, but she offered no specifics.

The state Legislature is expected to pass the annual budget for regents' universities soon, Whitmore said, noting that no action can be taken until the university receives accurate figures. He estimated that the cut will produce losses between $18 million and $19 million for the next academic school year.

Any new information will be posted on the UI Web site, he said.

"We know bits and pieces about the cuts, but there are still some details that are undetermined," Whitmore said. "As soon as we know, everyone will know."

Another issue raised during the hour-long discussion was a salary bill that is also expected from the Legislature soon. Officials predict this cut could amount to losses of about $9 million in salary funding and may even lead to layoffs. Coleman said this subject has been the administrators' top priority because everyone in the institution is already underpaid.

"We need these buildings and facilities, but first of all we need the people," she said.

ELECTRIFYING ENCOUNTER

Nick Tremmel/The Daily Iowan

Lightning flashes over downtown Iowa City Thursday evening after a thunderstorm slowly built up throughout the afternoon.

CITY & STATE BRIEFS

Man pleads guilty in liquor-van theft

A man who allegedly stole a van carrying liquor reached a plea agreement Thursday.

Robert Palmer, 37, pleaded guilty to five counts and two simple misdemeanors after pleading not guilty to nine charges and 17 misdemeanors. The charges stemmed from an alleged theft of a Hy-Vee van that carried an estimated $2,300 worth of alcohol on Feb. 17.

According to the terms of the agreement, Palmer will be fined $4,500 and will serve up to five years in prison for the felonies, a concurrent sentence.

Three of the five counts are Class D felonies: a third-offense OWI, theft in the second degree and second-degree criminal mischief. Palmer also pleaded guilty to the serious misdemeanors of assaulting a peace officer and eluding police.

Richard Klausner, Palmer's attorney, told the court that the case had many facets to it, and he discussed Palmer's lengthy history of alcohol-related problems. He said his client had never had the advantage of an inpatient abuse program. Klausner also said Palmer has several health problems, including diabetes, which is made worse by alcohol consumption.

The judge added he hoped Palmer's incarceration would be a time of rehabilitation.

Public Safety warns of book thefts

After a string of recent book thefts at Iowa State University, UI students should watch their books carefully during the next week, Public Safety warned Thursday.

More than 10 book thefts have been reported at ISU, which is one week ahead of the UI schedule, over the past few weeks, said Brad Allison, a crime-prevention officer for Public Safety. He suspects that the books are being stolen and then sold for money.

Allison said UI students should keep an eye on their books at all times. Also, he said, students in the dormitories should keep their doors locked to prevent people from coming in and searching for books.

Although no crimes of this nature have been reported at the UI recently, Allison said, they could happen, and students should take measures to prevent it.

"We want to try to catch it before it gets here," Allison said.

Marijuana tops drug-testing report

DES MOINES (AP) — Most people who tested positive for drugs in 1998 were marijuana smokers, according to Iowa's first drug-in-the-workplace report.

The report by the Iowa Department of Public Health said private employers conducted 31,740 drug tests on workers or job applicants, and 1,379 — 4.3 percent — contained traces of drugs.

According to the report, marijuana was, by far, the most commonly discovered drug in positive tests.

Experts say that may be because marijuana is detectable for up to a month after its use. Traces of most other drugs vanish in a few days, they said.

The report is the first of what will become an annual statistical accounting required by state law.

Dems attack GOP on education

Statehouse Democratic leaders say the GOP will turn Iowa into a "Southern backwater."

By Mike Glover
 Associated Press

DES MOINES — Democrats launched a fresh attack Thursday on Republican legislative leaders, warning the school-spending cuts they propose would turn the state into "a Southern backwater."

"This is the worst education session in 20 years," said Senate Democratic Leader Mike Gronstal, D-Council Bluffs.

"There is no area in state government where Republicans have promised more and delivered less," said House Democratic Leader Dick Myers of Coralville. "They have decided that on education, they are going to turn this state into some kind of Southern backwater."

The attack comes as lawmakers, already working past the scheduled end of the session, seek budget agreements that would allow adjournment. There are huge gaps between House and Senate leaders, and with Democratic Gov. Tom Vilsack that are likely to delay that adjournment well into next week.

Republicans have accused Democrats of delaying the session's end by debating endlessly on budget measures.

"We have no interest in delaying the session, but that doesn't mean we're going to roll over and play dead," Gronstal said. He accused majority Republicans of having no strategy to end the session and predicted a protracted battle.

"At this point, we don't even know whom to negotiate with," Gronstal said.

House Speaker Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs, conceded that Republicans are cutting deeply throughout state government, including schools, but have been forced to take that step because of declining revenues.

"We're doing the best we can," Siegrist said.

He rejected the 20-year comparison, saying schools fared worse in a 1992 budget crunch, when officials imposed a 4.5 percent across-the-board spending cut. Later that year, they increased the sales tax.

Siegrist said lawmakers are planning an orderly end to the session and will adjourn next week "no ifs, ands, or buts." May 8 is the most likely day, he said.

In pointing to education, Democrats are hoping to highlight an issue they want to use in next year's election, saying Republicans have broken campaign promises on issues such as a $40 million teacher-pay increase, to a $41.7 million cut to the state of Iowa Board of Regents and deep cuts to community colleges, all reductions that will be felt as quickly as next year.

Oxford effort leads to art gallery

Volunteers renovate an old building and turn it into a new art gallery.

By Karen Schmiedeskamp
The Daily Iowan

Oxford, Iowa, is small-town U.S.A.

Downtown consists of one main street lined with old, empty buildings. But that began to change when one of these buildings was restored to its original condition and filled with more than 100 pieces of artwork from students throughout the area.

The building, now named the Mandala Community Art Gallery, will have its grand opening, featuring an exhibit titled Opening of the Doors, on May 6 from 1-5 p.m. All work in the exhibition has been created by elementary through high-school students in the Clear Creek-Amana School District. The formal opening ceremony will begin at 2 p.m. and will include refreshments, raffles and live music.

The gallery will be operated by Clear Creek-Amana students for the most part, said UI graduate student Mary Pat Hanson-Karstens, a Clear Creek-Amana High School art teacher. The students will learn how to run a business, as well as how to curate, organize a show, and present their own artwork, she said.

Hanson-Karstens said the Mandala Community Art

Gallery will eventually also include artwork from UI students and artists living in the Clear Creek-Amana area.

The building is located in a 100-year-old storefront on Augusta Avenue, Oxford's main street. Oxford Mayor Don Saxton is leasing the space for free until the students begin to make a profit, Hanson-Karstens said.

Donations funded the gallery's restorations, but once it opens, the gallery will become more self-sufficient, she said. Since last spring, students, teachers and community volunteers have been returning the building to its original condition.

"We weren't trying to get it to look like a new building. We were just trying to make it presentable," said Roger Gwinnup, a carpenter and Oxford resident. So far, he said, he has invested more than 80 hours of volunteer work in the project.

Not only did volunteers paint, scrub and sweat, they also tore out multiple layers of old flooring, removed a drop ceiling, patched the existing one, added new electrical work throughout the building, sanded and varnished the floors, added an entryway, and installed a new double-pane front window.

"It was so dirty and grungy when we began — the ceiling was metal, and the floor had about five layers of stuff on it, including concrete and chicken wire, but now it all looks really pretty," said Gwinnup's daughter, Sarah Gwinnup.

Sarah Gwinnup, a sophomore at Clear Creek-Amana High School, has also spent hours upon hours working on the project. She said creating the gallery has taught her a lot.

"Making something that everyone can enjoy takes a lot of work and a lot of dedication," she said.

Hanson-Karstens said the gallery will provide more than just a forum for community members to buy and sell artwork — it will also enhance the business community in Oxford and promote cultural and community awareness.

"The way it's going now, most of the small towns are turning into Wal-Marts," Roger Gwinnup said. The gallery will help keep business flowing in the community, he added.

Students also incorporated a sense of community into the name they gave the gallery, said Hanson-Karstens.

"Our students named it Mandala, which is the Sanskrit word for circle," said Hanson-Karstens. "They interpreted it as the circle of our community and as something that brings people together."

Plans for upcoming gallery shows include artwork by UI graduate students, historical photographs of Oxford and a traveling exhibit of the works of Dan Eldon, a collage artist and photographer from Cedar Rapids who was killed in Somalia while photographing the war.

Regular gallery hours have not yet been set; they will be posted during the opening.

Tom Cruise denies gay-affair accusation, files defamation suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Cruise filed a $100 million defamation lawsuit against a pornography actor who allegedly claimed he had a gay affair that broke up Cruise's marriage.

Chad Slater told the French magazine Actustar that "he had a continuing homosexual relationship during Cruise's marriage and that the relationship was discovered by Cruise's wife, who ended the relationship," according to the lawsuit filed Wednesday in Los Angeles Superior Court.

"Cruise is not and never has been a homosexual" and "does not even know" Slater, the lawsuit said.

Cruise's attorney, Bert Fields, said Actustar has agreed to publish a retraction.

Slater uses the stage name Kyle Bradford. There was no telephone listing for either name in the Hollywood area.

Cruise filed for divorce from Nicole Kidman in February after 10 years of marriage. They have two adopted children.

The divorce case is pending, but Cruise's divorce lawyer, Dennis Wasser, issued a statement Wednesday saying, "The children are his life, and he will always provide for them and their security. Tom will provide Nicole with one-half of the community property, consisting of tens of millions of dollars."

1. What you say to the police is always important. It can be used against you, and what you say can be used against you, and what you say can be used against you, especially if you bad-mouth a police officer.
2. You don't have to answer a police officer's questions, but you must show your driver's license and registration when stopped in a car. In other situations, you can't legally be arrested for refusing to identify yourself to a police officer.
3. You don't have to consent to any search of yourself, your car or your house. If you DO consent to a search, it can affect your rights later in court. If the police say they have a search warrant, ASK TO SEE IT.
4. Do not interfere with, or obstruct the police — you can be arrested for it.

- IF YOU'RE STOPPED IN YOUR CAR
- Upon request, show them your driver's license, registration, and proof of insurance. In certain cases, your car can be searched without a warrant as long as the police have probable cause. To protect yourself later, you should make it clear that you do not consent to a search. It is not lawful for police to arrest you simply for refusing to consent to a search.
 - If you're given a ticket, you should sign it; otherwise you can be arrested. You can always fight the case in court later.
 - If you're suspected of drunk driving (DUI) and refuse to take a blood, urine or breath test, your driver's license may be suspended.
- IF YOU'RE ARRESTED OR TAKEN TO A POLICE STATION
- You have the right to remain silent and to talk to a lawyer before you talk to the police. Tell the police nothing except your name and address. Don't give any explanations, excuses or stories. You can make your defense later, in court, based on what you and your lawyer decide is best.
 - Ask to see a lawyer immediately. If you can't pay for a lawyer, you have a right to a free one, and should ask the police how the lawyer can be contacted. Don't say anything without a lawyer.
 - Within a reasonable time after your arrest, or booking, you have the right to make a local phone call: to a lawyer, bail bondsman, a relative or any other person. The police may not listen to the call to the lawyer.

- IF YOU ARE STOPPED FOR QUESTIONING
- It's not a crime to refuse to answer questions, but refusing to answer can make the police suspicious about you. You can't be arrested merely for refusing to identify yourself on the street.
 - Police may "pat-down" your clothing if they suspect a concealed weapon. Don't physically resist, but make it clear that you don't consent to any further search.
 - Ask if you are under arrest. If you are, you have a right to know why.
 - Don't bad-mouth the police officer or run away, even if you believe what is happening is unreasonable. That could lead to your arrest.

- What To Do If You're Stopped By The Police
- Be polite and respectful. Never bad-mouth a police officer. Stay calm and in control of your words, body language and emotions. Don't get into an argument with the police. Remember, anything you say or do can be used against you. Keep your hands where the police can see them. Don't run. Don't touch any police officer. Don't resist even if you believe you are innocent. Don't complain on the scene or tell the police they're wrong or that you're going to file a complaint. Do not make any statements regarding the incident. Ask for a lawyer immediately upon your arrest. Remember officers' badge & patrol card numbers. Write down everything you remember ASAP. Try to find witnesses & their names & phone numbers. If you are injured, take photographs of the injuries as soon as possible, but make sure you seek medical attention first. If you feel your rights have been violated, file a written complaint with police department's internal affairs division or civilian complaint board.

4. Sometimes you can be released without bail, or have bail lowered. Have your lawyer ask the judge about this possibility. You must be taken before the judge on the next court day after arrest.
5. Do not make any decisions in your case until you have talked with a lawyer.

IN YOUR HOME

- If the police knock and ask to enter your home, you don't have to admit them unless they have a warrant signed by a judge.
- However, in some emergency situations (like when a person is screaming for help inside, or when the police are chasing someone) officers are allowed to enter and search your home without a warrant.
- If you are arrested, the police can search you and the area close by. If you are in a building, "close by" usually means just the room you are in.

We all recognize the need for effective law enforcement, but we should also understand our own rights and responsibilities — especially in our relationships with the police. Everyone, including minors, has the right to courteous and respectful police treatment. If your rights are violated, don't try to deal with the situation at the scene. You can discuss the matter with an attorney afterwards, or file a complaint with the Internal Affairs or Civilian Complaint Board.

Students boycott exams

■ Parents and community members support the anti-testing boycott.

By Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press

SCARSDALE, N.Y. — Nearly 200 eighth-graders boycotted a state science exam with their parents' blessing Thursday in this well-to-do community of doctors, corporate executives and other high-achievers.

The school district in this New York City suburb said 195 of its 290 eighth-graders skipped the test to protest standardized exams and the increasing amount of classroom time spent preparing for them.

"Maybe now the state will listen to us," said Deborah Rapaport, one of the parent organizers.

The students in one of the nation's top-ranked school districts will not face any punishment, and they will likely be offered another chance to take the exam.

The boycott is part of a nationwide movement against the tests; there have been boycotts in Michigan and Massachusetts. Critics say test preparation is interfering with the curriculum and costing students in-depth instruction in broader subjects.

Teachers and principals are increasingly being evaluated on how well their students perform on the exams.

States insist that schools need not revamp their curricula to meet the standards. But tests scores are often published in local newspapers, giving residents and prospective residents a guide to evaluate schools.

All states now require students to take math and reading tests in at least two grades, and 38 reward or sanction schools and school districts on the basis of student performance, according to the Education Commission of the States.

Defenders of annual testing say it gives schools valuable information about students' strengths and weaknesses. President Bush has proposed linking federal school funding to test results.

U.S. booted off U.N. rights panel

■ The U.S. loses its seat on the U.N. Human Rights Commission, which it had held since 1947.

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The United States, a vocal critic of human-rights records of China and Cuba, lost its seat Thursday on the top U.N. rights body for the first time since the commission was formed in 1947.

The 53-member U.N. Human Rights Commission, which usually meets in Geneva, makes recommendations for the protection and promotion of human rights — either on its own initiative or at the request of the General Assembly or the Security Council.

Regional groups at the United Nations nominate candidates for the commission, and the Western Europe and Others Group proposed four candidates for three seats: the United States, France, Austria and Sweden. In the balloting, France got 52 votes, Austria 41 and Sweden 32 votes — edging out the United States with 29 votes.

"It was an election, understandably, where we're very disappointed," acting U.S. Ambassador James Cunningham said after the vote. "This won't at all, of course, affect our commitment to human-rights issues in and outside of the United Nations. We'll continue to pursue them."

The United States has been in the forefront of efforts to condemn the rights records of China and other countries at the commission's Geneva meetings.

The United States has been at a diplomatic disadvantage since the January departure of Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, an appointee of former President Clinton. President Bush nominated veteran diplomat John Negroponte to be U.N. ambassador in March, but his nomination has not yet been sent to the Senate.

Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., who is co-chairwoman of the Bipartisan Congressional U.N. Working Group, called the vote "an embarrassment for our country" and blamed Bush for dragging his feet in getting key foreign-policy officials confirmed.

"It is unacceptable that we still have no U.N. ambassador, and this vote is a painful blow to our global leadership on human rights and democracy," she said. "The U.S. commitment to human rights has fallen victim to the administration's laissez-faire attitude toward diplomacy and foreign policy."

Cunningham refused to speculate on whether the U.S. ouster from the commission was the result of growing anger against the United States for taking too many unilateral positions on important issues such as a national missile-defense shield and pulling out of the 1997 Kyoto treaty to curb global warming.

"I don't want to speculate on what might have been the motives underlying the outcome of the election," he said.

Bush orders energy conservation

■ The president tells federal facilities in California to cut their power use as much as possible.

By Sandra Sobieraj
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal workers in power-strapped California could be taking the stairs and sweating out the summer under an energy-conservation directive signed by President Bush Thursday.

His order came after criticism of his proposed budget cuts in energy-efficiency programs.

"We'll work to help California in any way we can. And the best way we can is to be good citizens," Bush said after a Cabinet Room meeting with his top energy-policy advisers.

He ordered federal facilities in California to cut power use "to the maximum extent consistent with the effective discharge of public responsibilities." For military facilities, which use 1 percent of the state's energy load, that means cutting peak-hour use by one-tenth, said Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

Meanwhile, California lawmakers approved a bill Thursday to create a public power authority, sending the measure to Gov. Gray Davis for his signature that would put California in the power business.

The authority is touted as a key step toward pulling California out of its power crisis, which has forced one utility into bankruptcy court and sent blackouts rolling across the state.

Supporters say the authority will give the state more control over the wholesale electricity market by building and operating its own plants. State-owned plants could charge lower rates and adding plants would boost supply, easing prices.

Democrats on Capitol Hill said Bush had a good idea, but it didn't go far enough.

"We ought to be using federal agencies that have the power now to hold down on these outrageous price increases that are going on the West Coast and might spread throughout the whole country," said House Democratic leader Dick Gephardt.

The president, who has been criticized as doing too little to address California's energy crisis, dispatched Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham to meet with Davis Thursday night in Sacramento and to visit an energy-efficient federal building in San Francisco today.

On Capitol Hill, Abraham had come under sharp criticism as he testified before a House Appropriations subcommittee, explaining his department's budget request for the coming year.

Rep. Norm Dicks, D-Wash., said Bush's plan to cut millions of dollars from programs to develop energy-efficient buildings, more fuel-efficient automobiles, new appliance standards and more efficient lighting doesn't make sense.

Rep. Jim Moran, D-Va., cited a General Accounting Office study that concluded $7 billion in energy-efficient investments produced $51 billion in energy savings.

Except for increases for a program that helps low-income people weatherize their homes, "the department's conservation budget frankly is a disaster," added Maurice Hinchey, D-N.Y.

Abraham defended the cuts as "very justified" and said that many of them were in areas where private companies "are in a position to pick up a greater share of energy research."

Even before Abraham left Washington, Davis, a Democrat, sniffed at Bush's directive. "Surely the federal government can do more and match California's 20 percent savings at all state buildings," he said.

Raising thermostats to 78 degrees, closing "nonessential space," turning off excess lighting and switching off escalators during the "stage-2 alerts" are among the Energy Department's recommended conservation measures. In California, a stage-2 alert is called when electricity reserves drop, or are expected to drop, below 5 percent.

The White House, too, will do its part, Bush said.

"We're focused right now on California because that's a state that's going to suffer blackouts. But we always have to be mindful of being energy efficient. And since I've asked other agencies to review their policy, I'm going to ask the White House to do the same."

N. Korea to keep missile moratorium

■ European Union officials say North Korea will not test any missiles until at least 2003.

By John Leicester
Associated Press

PYONGYANG, North Korea — North Korean leader Kim Jong Il pledged to keep a moratorium on missile tests until 2003, but he said there would be no inter-Korean summit as long as Washington is reviewing its policy on the North, a European delegation said Thursday.

The promise to adhere to the moratorium, which began in September 1999, was a significant advance in a process that has stalled amid U.S.-North Korean tension.

While Kim feted European Union head Goeran Persson and his entourage with toasts from tumblers of red wine, his government was reacting furiously to the release this week of a U.S. State Department report that again listed North Korea as a sponsor of terrorism.

"Washington had better mind its own business," KCNA, the North's foreign news outlet, said in a commentary that characterized U.S. air strikes on Iraq as an example of terrorism.

It said the United States would be "well advised" to wash "its own terrorists' hands stained with blood ... before taking issue with others."

The mood was more cordial during five hours of talks between Kim and Persson, the Swedish prime minister who traveled to one of the world's most secretive countries to try to energize efforts to end the decades-old enmity on the Korean peninsula.

"Kim Jong Il said that the moratorium on testing would last until 2003," said Persson, the first Western European leader to visit the totalitarian North. After that, he said, the North "would wait and see."

Earlier this year, the North threatened to end a two-year moratorium on long-range missile tests. Pyongyang halted the tests in September 1999, a year after testing a rocket that flew over Japan into the Pacific Ocean. The North agreed to the moratorium as long as negotiations continued with the United States.

North Korea also agreed to send officials to Europe this summer to discuss opening talks about its widely criticized human-rights record, European envoys said. Kim, who enjoys a personality cult and tolerates no dissent from his 22 million people, would not yield easily to European efforts to persuade him to relax his control.

"We don't think it's going to be an easy process, but we think it's important to start talking, and they've agreed to do that," said Chris Patten, the EU's commissioner for external relations.

The talks were held as news came that a man Japanese and South Korean authorities believe could be Kim Jong Il's eldest son, Kim Jong Nam, 29, was detained Tuesday at an airport outside Tokyo for attempting to enter Japan illegally. There was no suggestion about what Kim Jong Nam's motives would be.

After their overnight trip, the EU delegation flew Thursday to Seoul to meet South Korean President Kim Dae-jung, who was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts to reconcile with North Korea.

Blair: Foot-&-mouth under control

■ The prime minister says Britain is on the home stretch in fighting the disease.

By Sue Leeman
Associated Press

TOLLESHUNT KNIGHTS, England — Prime Minister Tony Blair said Thursday that Britain is in the "home straight" in its fight against foot-and-mouth disease — but pig farmer Peter Morley remains unconvinced.

Last weekend, 1,644 sheep and 112 pigs were culled on a neighbor's farm after foot-and-mouth antibodies were found in two sheep, and Morley fears a new outbreak in his rural corner of Essex County, which had been on the verge of being declared disease-free.

"The disease is not under control yet and won't be for months," said Morley, who had to have 250 of his healthy animals destroyed Monday because the restrictions bar them from traveling to slaughterhouses and they had outgrown his facilities. "Blair is just saying that because he wants to hold an election in June."

Blair's cautiously upbeat assessment of the crisis reinforced speculation that he will call a national election on June 7, at the same time as local government elections.

Recent opinion polls show Blair's Labor government still well ahead of its chief opposition, the Conservative Party.

Tim Yeo, the agriculture spokesman for the Conservative Party, said he feared Blair "is driven by spin doctors and the need for a good soundbite, rather than by the substance of the policy."

"We must not relax policy before it is safe to do so merely because there may be an election coming up," he said in an interview with a British Broadcasting Corp. radio program.

The prime minister told a news conference that Britain has caught up with the disposal of slaughtered animals and will soon be able to stop burning carcasses.

"The battle is not over yet, but I believe we are in the home straight," Blair said, adding that the country "cannot in any way be complacent, and it is essential that we be vigilant."

One last pyre is to be lit Thursday in Devon, one of the worst-hit counties, but that should be the last, he said.

Nine more infected farms were confirmed Wednesday, raising the total to 1,534 since the first case was announced on Feb. 20, the Ministry of Agriculture said.

The rate of new cases has declined steadily from a high of more than 40 per day at the peak of the outbreak. The government has relaxed its policy of slaughtering livestock on farms next to infected sites and has lifted restrictions affecting some 16,000 farms, Blair said.

Peres, Bush find common ground

■ While agreeing with the president, the Israeli foreign minister disagrees with Ariel Sharon.

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres cemented ties with President Bush Thursday but was ensnared in a long-distance rift with Prime Minister Ariel Sharon on their assessment of Palestinian violence.

Praising Bush as informed and decisive, Peres said after a White House meeting, "We see eye to eye on how to handle the peace process."

Also, Peres told reporters, the United States was giving the highest priority to countering terrorism in the Middle East.

For his part, Bush, in a speech to the American Jewish Committee's 95th anniversary dinner, affirmed his "steadfast support for Israel against terrorism and violence and in seeking the peace for which all Israelis pray."

Describing Israel as a small country living under threat throughout its existence, Bush said he told the National Security Council at his first meeting with the council as president that "a top foreign-policy priority is the safety and security of Israel."

Back home in Jerusalem, Sharon's office said Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat had given a "green light" for attacks against Israel.

This seemed designed to counter remarks by Peres earlier in Washington that "some dissident groups and some forces under Arafat participate in the killings without the knowledge of Arafat."

Peres sought to play down any appearance of a rift. "We've never denied we come from two different schools of thought," he said.

But, he said, the Israeli leaders agreed on stopping terror and returning to negotiations.

"We are a democracy and don't get orders every morning what words to use," Peres said.

The hawkish Sharon and the dovish Peres long have taken different approaches on issues in the Arab-Israeli dispute. Now serving with Sharon in a unity government, Peres said, "I can assure you that whatever I say and Sharon says is coordinated."

Peres also credited the prime minister with trying to improve living conditions for the Palestinians — a goal Peres has stressed during his visit to Washington, saying repeatedly he did not consider Palestinians an enemy.

Sharpening his rhetoric, Peres urged Arafat "to take a clear stand against terrorism."

"We are not asking for miracles or things he cannot do, but to stand up against terrorism," the foreign minister told the American Jewish Committee Thursday. "We would like to have a clear commitment from him. We cannot have a little bit of terrorism and a little bit of diplomacy."

From there, Peres went to the White House, and later said he came away from the meeting with Bush "reassured and with a sense we can move ahead."

Peres, who urged the administration to act as a "facilitator" but not as the main negotiator in peacemaking with the Arabs, said of Bush: "He doesn't want to impose, he wants to help."

NATION BRIEFS

Under Bush, U.S. toes hard line

■ The administration's foreign policy is harsher than that of the Clinton administration, many say.

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In his first three months in office, President Bush has hardened the American line on China, North Korea and Russia. This administration sees little to gain from business as usual overseas.

As Bush put it Thursday: "We've got to review all policy that we inherited."

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's slip this week on China policy — first suspending all military contacts, then adjusting that to require all future contacts to be approved in advance — demonstrated the difficulty of knowing how tough to get without crippling relations and undercutting U.S. interests abroad.

And yet, as the president also made clear this week in proposing to open a new strategic dialogue with Russia, the administration's tougher stance does not mean it sees no value in pursuing cooperation.

"The president and his team genuinely have a different degree of skepticism" about the value of the diplomatic engagement with Russia, China and others that was emphasized by the Clinton administration, said Alton Frye, a foreign-policy expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

"Once they have recalibrated a stance, then they'll do business. So this is not an end to business, this is a resetting of the baseline from which business is done," he said.

Even on China, which Bush views as a strategic competitor rather than partner, the president struck a measured tone Thursday in explaining why Rumsfeld decided that he must review and approve in advance all future contacts and activities with the Chinese military on a case-by-case basis.

"What the secretary was rightly doing was saying that we're going to review all opportunities to interface with the Chinese. And if it enhances our relationship, it might make sense. If it's a useless exercise, and it doesn't make the relationship any better, then we won't do that," Bush said.

"We've only been in office for 104 days," he said. "We've got to review all policy that we inherited. But what the Chinese must understand is that we'll be firm in our philosophy, consistent in our beliefs, and we want to work to have a relationship that is a positive relationship for both countries."

A Rumsfeld spokesman, Rear Adm. Craig Quigley, said the Defense secretary believes that the United States should take "a more measured approach" to military-to-military relations with China and that U.S. military openness must be reciprocated.

"This is a more cautious and prudent and deliberate step than the old way," Quigley said, adding, "This is not business as usual with the Chinese government at any level."

The same could be said of the administration's approach to Russia, North Korea and Iran.

Rumsfeld has accused Russia of contributing to the global spread of weapons of mass destruction, and the administration has balked at pursuing the missile-limitation talks with North Korea started by the Clinton administration.

On Capitol Hill Thursday, Secretary of State Colin Powell struck a sterner tone toward Iran.

Powell said the United States will be ready to open official talks with Iran "when engagement makes sense." The administration has been mostly silent on Iran since taking office, and Powell's comments seemed to mark a switch from the Clinton's policy of seeking a dialogue with Tehran without conditions.

Dan Goure, a foreign-policy expert at the private Lexington Institute, said the administration's intent is to "decouple" America's business interests from its security interests. He cited the example of Taiwan, which is the primary source of U.S. tension with China. Bush has shown he is willing to sell advanced weapons to Taiwan, over China's strong objections, even at the risk of hurting U.S.-China trade.

Amish urge looser rules for child labor

WASHINGTON (AP) — The centuries-old Amish tradition of allowing teen-agers to serve apprenticeships in sawmills and woodworking shops clashed Thursday at a Senate hearing with the government's desire to ensure workplace safety.

Amish children only attend school through eighth grade. The Amish want the law changed so that when their sons leave school, they can legally work in family owned shops and learn the trade that will provide their livelihoods as adults.

"You try to teach them learning by doing, and that is the way of the Lord," said John Byler, a sawmill owner from Harrisville, Pa., who was fined $3,000 four years ago for employing teen-agers.

Federal labor laws prohibit children under 16 from working in manufacturing operations such as sawmills and children under 18 from working in other occupations deemed hazardous.

Ford targets global warming

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. has created an executive team to find ways to fight global warming.

In a letter included in the automaker's corporate-citizenship report Thursday, Ford Chairman William Clay Ford Jr. wrote that climate change "stands out from other environmental issues because of its potentially serious consequences and its direct relationship to our industry."

President and Chief Executive Jacques Nasser wrote: "There's no doubt whether sufficient evidence exists to move from argument to action."

The 88-page report comes a year after the company's first such document, in which Ford wrote about the conflict between the automaker's gas-guzzling sport utility vehicles and its commitment to the environment. The company previously announced a program to improve fuel efficiency of its SUVs by 25 percent within five years.

In this year's report, the company announced the establishment of a team of senior executives to study global warming and consider "a range of possible measures for reducing greenhouse-gas contributions" from Ford products, manufacturing and other activities.

Fliers face more airline delays this summer

■ The U.S. government wants the airline industry to revamp its schedules to cut down on delayed flights.

By Jonathan D. Salant
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Airline passengers face another summer of delays unless carriers shift flights from peak travel times, the Transportation Department's inspector general said Thursday.

Efforts to improve technology, build new runways, and open new routes for airplanes will not come fast enough to reduce delays, Inspector General Kenneth Mead told the House Appropriations transportation subcommittee.

"Actions most likely will be voluntary ones by airlines to revamp schedules," he said.

Last year, more than one of every four flights was delayed, and the number of late flights during the first three months of 2001 mirrors that of 2000, Mead said.

At the same time, a Federal Aviation Administration study found airlines sometimes scheduled more flights than there is airport space for on-time landings. The FAA recommended that the airlines review their scheduling practices.

FAA Administrator Jane Garvey agreed that rescheduling flights was a short-term solution, but, she said, the agency's efforts to reroute planes and open new airspace would pay dividends this summer as well. Just recently, some 200 to 300 planes flew through Canadian airspace to avoid some bad weather in the U.S., she said.

"We haven't seen all the benefits yet" of the new routes and airspace, she said. "We will see some improvements."

Some airlines already are rescheduling flights away from peak times. Delta has spread out its flights in Atlanta, American has done it in Dallas-Fort Worth, and Continental has adjusted its schedule in Newark, N.J. In all three cases, the airline carries a large share of the passengers in and out of the particular airport.

But at airports where no single carrier has the major share of flights, airlines are reluctant to unilaterally change their schedules, said Edward Merlis, a senior vice president at the Air Transport Association, the trade group for the major airlines.

The industry supports legislation that would waive antitrust laws so airlines could discuss scheduling issues among themselves, he said.

"When you have a large number of competitors, the issue becomes who moves first," Merlis said.

The problem is that airlines could lose high-paying business travelers if they don't offer frequent flights, said Duane Woerth, the president of the Air Line Pilots Association. "They're not going to give up competitive frequency unless everybody else is," he said.

One way to encourage airlines to shift flights at peak hours would be to require them to tell passengers when buying a ticket that a particular flight is more likely to be delayed.

"When you're buying that product, the airline ought to tell you that," Mead said. "The people who are about to book those flights may book another flight."

Major airlines already give that information if a passenger asks for it, he said. But he objected to requiring the major airlines to automatically release that data when smaller carriers do not have to track their late flights.

"We don't believe it's appropriate to disparage our own product," Merlis said.

Airline passengers will be receiving new information about delays and cancellations.

Later this month, the FAA plans to provide data to the CNN Airport Network, which will run it as a ticker under its programs. CNN Airport Network is seen at 1,600 gates at 35 airports handling more than 400 million passengers.

Earlier Thursday, Rep. Bob Ney, R-Ohio, the chairman of the House Administration Committee, told of how panel press secretary Jim Forbes was bumped from three flights and had to stay overnight at his own expense when he tried to return from a committee hearing in Arizona.

"It's a war zone out there. Something has to change," Ney said.

THE IRRELEVANCE OF GRADES ...

Measure what really counts

What is the point of going to college? The answer to this question depends on whom you ask, but the central themes are always learning, thinking and understanding. No one ever says we go to college to get good grades. Grades are something we strive for while in college, but they have little bearing after graduation. Why then is there so much importance put on grades and grade point averages? Grades are essentially meaningless letters, yet we give them meaning by requiring specific GPA levels for things such as scholarship eligibility and dean's list acceptance.

Most people know that, realistically speaking, the difference between an A, B or C is often very subjective. This is especially true in many liberal-arts classes. What one teacher considers a B paper might be considered a B- by another teacher. Does the liberal-arts office distinguish on transcripts which teachers grade harder than others? No, all B's are 3.00 and all B-'s are 2.67. When your scholarship and continued attendance at the university hangs in the balance, that one-third of a point can make quite a difference to your life. Because of this emphasis on grades, most students are more interested in learning what the professor wants to hear rather than understanding the material.

College is not about memorizing facts ... college is about learning, thinking and understanding.

Grades are an oversimplification of our college experience. Saying you have a 3.00 GPA says nothing about who you really are. It gives no real insight into what you have learned or accomplished at school. All it says is that you were able to figure out what the professors wanted you to say. In order to foster better learning, less emphasis should be put on grades. Instead, emphasize other aspects of college that relate directly to learning. One that receives almost no attention is personal interaction with the instructor. Students need to utilize office hours, and professors need to reward them for coming. Do not grade what the students say; just give them an A+ for showing up and talking. Force them to think about and discuss the material. If they do not understand the material, then keep them talking until they do understand. After all, college is not about memorizing facts to present on a test or in a paper, college is about learning, thinking and understanding.

THE NECESSITY OF A PRE-EXAMS BREAK

Allow students to prepare

As we approach finals, thousands of students are panicking about their finals, racing from class to the library to the ITC, working to finish their semester well. Many students will have five or even six exams to study for, as well as final projects and papers. In some cases, these final exams and projects can count for more than half the grade in the course. However, students begin taking tests on May 7, leaving them only two days to study for their first final. It is unfair of the university to expect students to prepare for such important performances in such a short amount of time. There need to be two or three extra days to study at the end of the semester.

A complete week without classes would be too much time off. Students would waste time and end up complaining that they had to stay in Iowa City for an extra week. However, the university could move tests back until the Tuesday after classes end, giving students three days to study for their first exams. Tests could run until Thursday, giving students another three-day weekend to study, with tests resuming on Monday.

It is unfair of the UI to expect students to prepare for such important performances in such a short amount of time.

This way, students' tests would be broken up into two blocks, and they would have three days to study for each block. The university could lessen student stress even more significantly by giving students until the end of the second exam week to move out of the dormitories. As it stands, students are forced to pack, study, take tests, and write papers all in one week.

UISG President Nick Klenke, during an election debate, said his administration's main goal was to give the student government back to the students. He also claimed that he would work to shorten Winter Break and lengthen Thanksgiving break. So far, it appears that Klenke has put most of his efforts into recycling programs. He should stay true to his promise of promoting the interests of the students and put his green agenda on the back burner until all students have adequate time to study for their finals. If we shortened Winter Break by one week, we would be able to lengthen fall break and finals each by two days and still have one day left over.

Get Real

On the trail to the future

The estate rode out before us in all its glory — gardens, pools, forests and even the chateau spread themselves beside our car.

Later, when my mom and I had canvassed upper parts of the house — sunroom, billiards room, banquet hall, breakfast room, alarmingly formal family bedrooms and 33 guest rooms, each with its own bathroom and fireplace — we descended at long last into the basement.

So far, despite a promise of sunshine to burn off morning fog and wind, I sensed a distinct chill. Though a veritable army of workers keep the chateau — the Biltmore Estate, at the edge of Asheville, N.C. — in mint condition, the house felt as cold and distant as the icy moons of Jupiter. No hint of emotions swayed the heavy curtains; no sign of human existence lay strewn on the floors of the game rooms. Only one or two quirks — a lamp with a turtle-shaped base, a silver-framed snapshot of a woman in a flapper dress, a lace parasol sized for a child — betrayed the story beneath the trappings.

Through the tunnels of stone we walked, down to a cool expanse. My eyebrows people around me paid the paintings the slightest attention. Dutifully they walked from label to label along the exhibit's path. Granted, the exhibit also interested me — its focus being the people who labored to build this obscene reminder of robber barons — but I could not help enjoying the whimsy evident on the walls.

At last I drew out my guidebook. In 1924, the owner's daughter — then young and newly married — invited down a host of friends for a party at Halloween, and they promptly decorated the walls for their grand party. At last! Evidence of life. A band of revelers — annoyingly wealthy and obnoxious, to be sure — surrounding the laughing young lady of the house, carrying out their fun with creativity and energy. I longed to hear more of the story, but as we walked on, the estate spoke no further on the subject of high spirits and good cheer, and eventually we moved to other destinations.

Milosevic refuses U.N. arrest warrant

Despite the refusal, the war-crimes tribunal considers the indictment to have been delivered.

By Misha Savic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A defiant Slobodan Milosevic refused to accept an arrest warrant from the U.N. war-crimes tribunal delivered to his jail cell Thursday, a day after the court threatened Yugoslavia with sanctions for failing to serve it.

The warrant and a list of the war-crimes charges against the former president were delivered to Belgrade's Central Prison, where Milosevic has been held since his arrest on April 1. Belgrade District Court said the warrant was brought to him so he could "get acquainted with its content."

But a defense lawyer representing Milosevic told the Associated Press on the condition of anonymity that Milosevic refused to accept the documents from a court official, who eventually left them tucked between the bars on the tiny window of his cell door.

Even so, the tribunal said it considered the warrant delivered, ending a long-running dispute over whether it had actually been given to Milosevic after it was formally presented to Yugoslav authorities last month by Hans Holthuis, the chief registrar of the tribunal, which is based in The Hague, Netherlands.

On Wednesday, Yugoslav Justice Minister Momcilo Grubac received a letter from Holthuis outlining how failure to deliver the warrant could result in the filing of a noncompliance report with the U.N. Security Council — a step that could lead to new sanctions.

The tribunal indicted Milosevic on charges of crimes against humanity for his regime's 1998-

99 crackdown on ethnic Albanians in the Yugoslav province of Kosovo. Milosevic also faces domestic charges of alleged corruption and other violations of Yugoslav laws during his 13-year rule.

"As far as we are concerned, Milosevic now has to be handed over swiftly to the tribunal," court spokesman Jim Landale said Thursday. He called the delivery of the warrant "significant because it's an acknowledgment by the Yugoslav authorities of the tribunal's jurisdiction, and now they have to live up to the legal obligation and transfer him."

But Vladan Batic, the justice minister of Yugoslavia's main republic, Serbia, was quoted as saying by the BETA news agency Thursday that delivering the warrant was a procedural matter and "has no influence" on Milosevic's possible extradition.

Yugoslav authorities have cited a constitutional ban on extradition as the main reason for their refusal to hand over Milosevic to The Hague. Grubac said Thursday that a draft law enabling full cooperation with the U.N. court has been completed and soon will be discussed by the government and the Parliament, the official Tanjug news agency reported.

Milosevic originally was to be detained in the Belgrade prison for one month. On Monday, his detention was extended by two more months to give authorities more time to build a case against him at home.

Milosevic's supporters assert that the former president's health has deteriorated while in prison and that his life is in danger. However, doctors who examined Milosevic have said he only has high blood pressure, which is not life-threatening.

Milosevic's Socialist Party claimed in a statement Thursday that his health was "exceptionally grave and dangerous," and demanded he be set free.

Fighting flares up once again in Macedonia

The Macedonian army launches a new assault against Albanian rebels.

By Konstantin Testorides
Associated Press

SKOPJE, Macedonia — Macedonian forces backed by helicopter gunships launched a fresh offensive Thursday against ethnic Albanian rebels after two soldiers were killed and at least one was kidnapped in an ambush.

The rebels were holding as many as 2,000 villagers as "human shields" against government troops and had taken up positions in the upper floors of houses, said army spokesman Blagoja Markovski.

"These people are going to sacrifice their children," President Boris Trajkovski said in an interview with CNN. "They don't care about killing the innocent civilians."

The army and police had ordered residents of 11 villages near the city of Kumanovo to evacuate, the army said.

Ali Ahmeti, the political head of the rebel National Liberation Army, told Voice of America there was fierce fighting in the villages around Kumanovo and villagers who had not left were taking cover in underground shelters.

Rebel fighters "have taken all measures to protect the civilian population," he said. "All our forces are in their positions and are fighting in self-defense to prevent the government forces from penetrating their lines."

Macedonian television reported that the army was using "all available means" against the insurgents.

Rebel leaders accused the government of shelling the villages of Slupcan and Vaksince in northern Macedonia.

Macedonian helicopter gunships fired at targets in the lush green hills and in the center of Vaksince, where thick smoke rose from among orange-tiled rooftops. The fighting ended at nightfall.

"They are shelling indiscriminately in the villages, and some houses are already on fire," a leader of the rebel National Liberation Army who goes by the name Commander Hoxha told the Associated Press.

But military spokesman Gjorgji Trendafilov said the army was "acting only selectively" in an effort to protect civilians and observers from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe who had been allowed in to monitor the situation.

He said the offensive was prompted by the ambush on government troops near the border with Serbia and Kosovo.

"The Macedonian army started action for the elimination of the Albanian terrorists," Trendafilov said.

The security forces were returning from a border patrol when they were fired upon before dawn in Vaksince, about 3 miles from the border north of Skopje. Two soldiers were killed, and Trendafilov said a third soldier was "kidnapped" during the attack when he fell out of a vehicle.

The rebels later fired mortars at government positions in the same area. No one was injured.

A joint army and police command appealed to the rebels to lay down their arms. Later Thursday, a dusk-to-dawn curfew was imposed in the Kumanovo region.

The rebels issued a statement calling for a cease-fire and urging Trajkovski to start talks to prevent the bloodshed and "maybe civil war." The Macedonian government, however, refuses to negotiate with the rebels.

Council denies liquor license for Etc.

ETC

Councilors questioned Kip Pohl, who owns Etc., 118 S. Dubuque St., and general manager Ryan Rooney on their legal history. State law requires that applicants for liquor licenses to be of "good moral character," a judgment determined by the board that issues the licenses.

According to police records, Rooney, who also manages Malone's Irish Pub, 121 Iowa Ave., has a pending assault-causing-injury charge as well as $332 in fines due the city. According to police, a patron of Malone's fell onto and broke a car window when Rooney and others allegedly pushed him out of the establishment.

Kip Pohl said Rooney's legal problems were behind him.

"I don't think that Mr. Rooney is doing anything like that anymore," he told the council. "In my opinion, who didn't sow their wild oats when they were kids?"

Councilor Steven Kanner questioned why Kip Pohl still employed Rooney, 27, who has been ticketed three times for disorderly house violations.

"In my wild days, I never had assaults or obstruction or three disorderly house violations," Kanner said.

Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman said the possible connections between the bars were cause to withhold the liquor license.

"If we establish a nexus between the people running the Union and these other bars, then we connect that to the charges they've admitted to," he said. "It absolutely shows they're not of moral character."

Both the Union Bar and Malone's are owned by Downtown Iowa City Entertainment L.L.C. Kip Pohl acts as a consultant to the group, which is owned by his children, Jim, Jeffrey and

Under the agreement that Jim Pohl and Wernimont reached with White, the two will pay up to $4,500 in fines and accept at least a 15-day suspension of the Union's liquor license at an undetermined date. The Union will still have to come to an agreement with Iowa's Alcohol Beverages Division on state charges during a hearing before an administrative judge on June 4.

Connie Champion, one of the councilors who voted to approve the license, said White's memo was one of the reasons for her vote.

"I didn't really want to give them a license," she said. "But I thought that the attorney had put a lot of work into a compromise, and I didn't want to go over his head."

Kip Pohl denied having any interest in the Union or Malone's. He also said he considered himself to be a good person.

"I believe that I have a Christian moral character," he said. "I teach Sunday school, I'm active in my community, and I've tried to behave in a moral way."

Councilor Irvin Pfab said Pohl's record spoke louder than his words.

"I think you talk a good talk, Mr. Pohl," Pfab told him. "But in the Bible it says, 'You shall know a tree by the fruit it bears,' and the incidents you're involved in don't speak of a moral character."

The decision came after Kip Pohl spent what he referred to as "most of his life savings" renovating the bar. Iowa law states that a bar must be in good condition before one can apply for a liquor license.

The business is now in the hiring process and hopes to open as soon as a license is granted.

Birmingham bomb files withheld for 30 years

FBI spokesman Craig Dahle said there was no easy answer for the agency's failure to hand over everything it had years earlier. But he denied the FBI deliberately delayed justice.

"I think it is wrong to assert there was any effort to block anything," Dahle said.

Intentionally or not, then-FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover prevented a quick trial in 1965, when he concluded that Birmingham's racial climate meant a guilty verdict was highly unlikely. Juries in Birmingham were all white at the time, and the police force included Klan sympathizers.

"It was just a different time," Dahle said.

Also, he said, the FBI has a policy against revealing the identity of confidential informants such as Burns unless they agree to go public. And agents may have been leery about sharing the information with state and local police forces, which were known to have Klan sympathizers.

As for the tapes secretly made in Blanton's kitchen in 1964, computers were used to enhance the murky recordings and help decipher the voices for the jury at his trial — technology unavailable in the 1960s and extremely time-consuming in the 1970s when Baxley was pursuing the church bombers.

The tapes were only "moderately intelligible" without enhancement, said Anthony Pellicano of Forensic Audio Laboratory, the Los Angeles company that performed the work.

But the FBI did not let Baxley know the tapes even existed in the 1970s. It wasn't until the latest investigation began that Baxley found out about the tapes and the informant. Yung said he learned of the long-secret evidence as the Blanton trial unfolded.

"They denied having any more evidence than what they gave us, and it was hard enough getting what we got," Yung said.

With Hoover running the FBI, the case was closed in 1968 without any charges. The file of FBI evidence against Chambliss, Blanton and others sat dormant.

Group celebrates 30 years of being a haven

GLBTU

Association. And throughout those 30 years, it has always been a haven.

"You've got a safe place," said UI junior John Bollenbacher, the president of the union. "A place you can come and be yourself."

The celebration, which is free and open to the public, will start with a social hour at 6 p.m. in the IMU Main Lounge. Speakers and a dance will follow through midnight.

It's a celebration of where the group has been and where it is now. It's a night for heterosexuals and for queers — a term used by some in the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender community to identify the community itself. It's a celebration of battles won and a reminder of those still being fought.

Although UI senior and group member Brandon Hayes thinks Iowa City is a great place, he said "it's a fact of life" that he faces hostility because of his sexuality.

Two years ago, Hayes and his boyfriend were holding hands on the Pedestrian Mall when they were confronted by an angry passerby who demanded they leave the area. The same year, they were followed at night by a car whose driver jumped out and threatened to assault them. Hayes and his boyfriend escaped harm in both incidents.

"It scared me," Hayes said. "It's unnerving. We don't go downtown and hold hands anymore. You don't let it bother you."

Iowa City resident and UI alumna Michael Blake, who will speak at the celebration, remembers a time when such hostility deeply pervaded the public and UI administration. Blake was an active member of the group in the late '70s and early '80s — a time of "exuberance" and "in-your-face" politics in the gay and lesbian community.

"When I joined the group, there was this naiveté that we would obtain our goals in five to six years," Blake said. "It's been 30 years, and some of those goals still haven't been met."

Today, members of the organization continue to fight for more gay and lesbian rights and to carry on the tradition of educating the public about queer issues. Members speak with UI classes about queer rights and misconceptions and sex roles. The group often co-sponsors university events as well.

The union remains focused on creating a community for the queer population, organizing social events such as queer literary and movie nights, said Iowa City resident and union member Joe Wilson.

"What you have to get across to people is that prejudices don't occur in a vacuum," Bollenbacher said. "Prejudices are interrelated. If you have a problem with gays or lesbians, what else is wrong with you? You have to wonder."

Grassley: Support for tax rebate vanishing

TAXES

component to this tax bill. It just may not come in the form of a check," said Mike Siegel, a spokesman for Sen. Max Baucus of Montana, the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee.

The committee, evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, is searching for compromise on the tax-cut elements that would fit into an 11-year, $1.35 trillion package that is much lower than Bush proposed.

In the interview, Grassley laid out an ambitious agenda beyond taxes for the committee this year, including action on Medicare prescription drugs and a comprehensive trade bill.

"You're going to find me and my committee right in the middle of the things the president wants to accomplish," said Grassley, who travels home to Iowa every weekend and still lends a hand on his family's corn and soybean farm.

On income-tax cuts, Bush has repeatedly insisted that no taxpayer should pay the federal government more than a third of her or his income. But Grassley said 12 of the 20 Finance Committee members now oppose reducing the current 39.6 percent and 36 percent rates to 33 percent as part of the 11-year, $1.35 trillion tax-cut compromise.

"I hope we can get a consensus for something not too far above 33 percent," he said.

One number suggested for the highest income-tax rate is 35 percent, which would ensure all the tax brackets are reduced. It also is equal to the corporate income-tax rate.

Democrats and moderate Republicans want more of the tax cut to flow to lower-income people, arguing that they need a greater share of the overall tax relief. Maine GOP Sen. Olympia Snowe, for example, is pushing a plan to enable lower-income people to claim the $500 child credit — which Bush wants to raise to $1,000 — even if they don't pay income taxes.

"In order to get a compromise, we may have to accept something in that area," Grassley said.

Other proposals to make the tax cuts bigger for lower- and middle-income Americans would also give Congress a way to provide more tax relief this year and next — even if rebate checks are not approved — by letting people keep more of their paychecks.

I hope we can get a consensus for something not too far above 33 percent.

IOWA BRIEF

Iowa women qualify for NCAA meet

The already hectic end-of-the-school-year schedule for the Iowa women's tennis players just got a little worse. And the Hawkeyes couldn't be happier about it.

The NCAA announced Thursday that the Hawkeyes (12-9, 6-5 in the Big Ten) have been accepted into the 64-team national tournament for a third-straight season. Iowa will travel to Berkeley, Calif., where it will open the tournament against the North Carolina Tar Heels on May 12 at the Hellman Tennis Center. The Hawkeyes will head into the tournament ranked 48th in the nation.

"We couldn't have asked for a better draw," Iowa coach Paul Wardlaw told his team after learning of the tourney bid. "North Carolina is a struggling team right now. They're not firing on all cylinders."

The Tar Heels will make the trip West with a 15-6 overall record and a 6-3 mark in the ACC. After earning the third seed, the Heels were upset, 4-3, by Virginia in the ACC Tournament quarterfinals.

Wardlaw said he wasn't sure exactly what formula the committee used in the selection of the Hawkeyes for their seed, but he entertained the thought that Iowa could have been one of the last teams to make it into the tournament.

"The important thing is that we've made it into the tournament for the third-straight year," he said.

The Iowa men's and women's track and field team will host their only home meet of the season at the Twilight Invitational Saturday at Cretzmeyer Track. Field events are scheduled to begin at 5:15 p.m., with track events starting at 6 p.m.

Lights, smoke and action to grace Cretzmeyer Saturday

Iowa's men's team hoping to carry success over from Drake

By Julie Matolo
 The Daily Iowan

It's showtime for the Hawkeyes Saturday night, as the men's track and field team showcases its style on its own lit-up track.

Iowa will host the annual Twilight Invitational, and this time the Hawkeyes will see lights like they have never seen before.

Added lights, smoke and special effects will be used to accent the opening of the co-ed event.

"When they turn on the lights it creates a Field of Dreams moment," said Hawkeye coach Larry Wieczorek. "It creates something out of nothing. The end of the season is the time for good performances. We want a little glamour for the track athletes and the big crowd."

Iowa will bring its own ball of fire from last week's success at the 92nd-annual Drake Relays. Numerous season-best and personal-best performances were led by freshman Adam Kunkel, who ran a personal-best of 51.19 in the 400-meter prelims to earn a NCAA provisional qualification time. Kunkel also ran with senior Tim Dodge, sophomore Russell Peterson and freshman Juan Coleman in the 4x400 relay team that provisionally qualified with a time of 3:07.00 and placed third. The same quartet went on to also place third

Iowa women look to get good runs with charged home crowd

By Jeremy Shapiro
 The Daily Iowan

All was quiet Thursday morning at the Francis X. Cretzmeyer track, with the exception of a jogging class running along Highway 6. There was no indication of the burst of energy that will grace the track this weekend.

Welcome to the Twilight Invitational — a unique evening celebration of track and field that always ranks among the highlights of the Iowa women's track season.

With the backdrop of the looming Big Ten championships, the Hawkeyes will look to dazzle the home crowd in a highly charged environment. The field events kick off at 5:15 p.m., while the entertaining steeplechase jump-starts the running events at 6 p.m. Minnesota, Illinois State and Wichita State will provide the competition.

"The meet is exciting, and we get a really good crowd," said senior Colleen Prendergast. "Being in the evening, it's something different."

In 1999, the meet's organizers decided to switch it to the evening to do something different. Hawkeye coach James Grant said that at this point in the year, the evenings usually bring nice weather with little wind. This makes for ideal conditions for runners to qualify for the NCAA meet.

As an added bonus, the change to evening sparked an

Confident Hawkeyes could clinch title this weekend

■ If Iowa beats NU twice, it win its second regular-season Big Ten title in a row.

By Melinda Mawdsley
 The Daily Iowan

It's not a cockiness, it's simply confidence that fills every member of the No. 15 Iowa softball team these days.

At least those were the words sophomore Kristin Johnson used to describe the attitude among her teammates following the Hawkeyes' two-game sweep over Drake Wednesday.

The Hawkeyes are riding a 10-game winning streak, during which they have rediscovered both their focus and their offense, and the late season surge couldn't have come at a better time.

Iowa has a chance to win its second-straight Big Ten regular season championship this weekend, which would give the Hawks the rights to host the Big Ten Tournament. The Hawkeyes are 15-3 in the conference, tied with Michigan.

Should Iowa and Michigan, which finishes its season against Michigan State, remain tied, the Hawkeyes would share the regular-season crown with the Wolverines but would host the Big Ten Tournament because they own the head-to-head tiebreaker by defeating Michigan twice last weekend.

The current late-season position jockeying is an all-too-familiar story line for the Hawkeyes.

Last year, the conference race came down to the final regular-season game as well, with Iowa defeating the same Northwestern team that will travel to Pearl Field Saturday, 4-1.

But that is about all the team or Iowa coach Gayle Blevins would discuss about the importance of the upcoming contests versus the Wildcats, choosing to focus more on themselves and their individual game preparation — the common theme over the course of the season.

"We've said hey, let's just focus on what we can control," Blevins said. "They're on track, and that's where we want them to stay. It's a real credit to our young people, because many players can't keep that focus. When I see people get into a must-win mentality, they press."

Sunday's contest will mark the final regular season game for six Hawkeye seniors, though they are hoping it isn't their Pearl Field finale.

Veterans such as Lisa Rasche, Katy Jendrzewski and Erin Doud have seen significant action in their time at Iowa, while fellow seniors Brooke Cross, Megan Atkins and Melissa Stuber have been used largely in reserve roles.

However, each individual understands her importance to the team.

"Sometimes my role is to come in and spark the team with a hit," Atkins said. "Our lineup is amazing, and playing on a team like that is great. No one thinks 'I'm a benchwarmer.' Even if a player who's used to starting is taken out, that's still her attitude. That is what makes this team great."

"Not a single member doesn't make us better," Blevins said. "Everybody helps us win. Our success this year is a huge reflection on their growth as a class together."

Saturday's game is scheduled for 6 p.m., and the May 6 contest, 1 p.m.

Cleveland passed by NCAA

■ The senior did not make the 64-player field at the NCAA tournament.

By Nick Firchau
 The Daily Iowan

Only one week after being the first men's tennis player in history to be named the Big Ten Player of the Year two-straight seasons, Iowa senior Tyler Cleveland was denied a bid to the NCAA Tournament Thursday.

Despite finishing his senior campaign with a 19-3 overall record and a conference-best 8-2 mark, the NCAA decided to pass on Cleveland while accepting four other Big Ten players.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton said that when the tournament brackets were announced and Cleveland was not included, he was stunned to learn that Cleveland had beaten seven of the players who had been admitted into the tournament this season.

"He was named the Big Ten Player of the Year by the coaches of the conference," Houghton said. "For him not to get in at the expense of four players who at best had a 6-4 conference record is pretty confusing."

Attempts to reach Cleveland at home for comment failed.

Among those included in the tournament were Illinois' Graydon Oliver, Purdue's Jason Marshall, Minnesota's Harsh Mankad and Ohio State's Phil Metz. Cleveland defeated both Marshall and Metz in straight sets while losing to Oliver and Mankad.

Houghton provided a couple of possible reasons for why the NCAA omitted Cleveland from the draw, including the senior's fall entry in satellite tournaments on the ATP Tour in California. Without the fall season at Iowa, Cleveland could not bolster his national ranking by beating what Houghton called "national opponents" who were not in the Big Ten.

Because of his lack of results in the fall, Cleveland did not enter the national rankings until late in the spring season. Even then, according to Houghton, Cleveland's ranking of no higher than 50th was an inaccurate representation of the top Hawkeye.

"In my opinion, Tyler's in the top 20 or 30 in the nation," Houghton said. "The selection process has failed if a guy as good as Tyler Cleveland didn't get into the tournament."

Hawkeyes hope to be on target for Big Tens

Iowa's up and down season will continue if the Hawks win and get an automatic bid to NCAAs.

By Jeremy Shapiro
The Daily Iowan

Predicting how the Iowa men's golf team will fare at this weekend's Big Ten championships would be like trying to predict the toss of an inexperienced dart thrower — a bull's-eye may be just as likely as a complete miss.

Ideally, the Hawks will hit a bull's-eye, playing 72 holes of mistake-free golf and walk away champions, with the added bonus of having an automatic bid to the NCAA regionals. Then again, Iowa could miss its target completely and sputter to a low finish to end a disappointing spring campaign.

While the Hawkeyes had their best fall season in recent memory, only frustration has bloomed this spring, as the team could never find a rhythm. Inconsistency and double bogies plagued Iowa as sixth- and seventh-place finishes replaced firsts and seconds.

Jason Wombacher, Matt Stutzman and Tyler Stith are averaging four strokes higher in the spring.

"They haven't played well lately," said coach Terry Anderson. "Hopefully, those guys will just take one shot at a time, gain confidence, and get hot."

Psychology could play a major role in the Hawkeyes' chances. Iowa has previously played well at Illinois's Stone Creek Golf Club, and with two seniors, the Hawks have plenty of big-tournament experience. They can't let the frustrations of recent weeks get them down.

"We can win this tournament if we think we can win it," Anderson said.

Iowa's fortunes often rest on the shoulders of Wombacher. When he was on fire in the fall, the team was soaring; with Wombacher struggling in the spring, the rest of the team has dropped off, too.

Stutzman has been all over the place recently. He impressed many people with a 69 on April 28, and then celebrated with a lackluster 79 the next day.

Wombacher
Iowa leader

Sophomores Bo Anderson and Mike Tapper have been a bit more consistent but have yet to put together a mistake-free tournament.

Northwestern and Purdue figure to have the best chances for the title, but Iowa should not be counted out. In order to win, the Hawks will have to play their "A" game and revert to what worked for them in the fall.

The Hawks will get some help. The course they are playing is one of the longest in the region, which could work to Iowa's advantage.

"It's a very good course," Anderson said. "There's hardly a tree on it. It's wide open with fairways. We are a long-ball-hitting team, so this suits us pretty well."

Sundin powers Toronto past New Jersey, 3-1

TORONTO (AP) — Mats Sundin got help on offense, and the Toronto Maple Leafs clamped down on defense, grittily bouncing back from two consecutive overtime playoff losses.

Sundin registered his third goal and sixth point of the Eastern Conference semifinal series, while checking center Shayne Corson and Sergei Berezin also scored, sparking Toronto's 3-1 victory over the New Jersey Devils on Thursday night.

The Maple Leafs evened the best-of-seven series at 2-2, with Game 5 in New Jersey on Saturday.

The game was marred with 7.4 seconds remaining when Devils defenseman Scott Niedermayer was knocked cold — and had to be carted off the ice on a stretcher— by an elbow to the head from Toronto's Tie Domi.

Niedermayer was able to walk into the Devils dressing room following the game.

Devils captain Scott Stevens, in the penalty box at the time, saw the hit and reacted angrily and was issued a 10-minute misconduct. A minute earlier, Stevens traded punches with Domi in the New Jersey net.

Keying the win was the Maple Leafs' ability to revert to the defensively patient and offensively opportunistic style that won them the series opener, 2-0. In between, Toronto was inconsistent — and the victim of unlucky bounces — in losing 6-5 and 3-2 in overtime.

IOWA BRIEF

Iowa baseball
This weekend: The Iowa baseball team takes a break from Big Ten play with three games against the University of Illinois-Chicago. The Hawkeyes and Flames will meet under the lights at 7 p.m. today for a single game before meeting once again Saturday for a double-header, beginning at 1 p.m.

On Iowa: The Hawkeyes improved to 18-23 with a thrilling, 6-5 win over Bradley Wednesday night. Iowa has now won four games in a row, its longest win streak since the middle of March. The team seems to finally have put everything together, said coach Scott Broghamer.

On UIC: The Flames are 23-25 and have had the week off because of finals. Last season, the Hawkeyes took all three games from the Flames, which will surely weigh heavily on the minds of UIC players this weekend.

Iowa's key: Simply keep the ball rolling. Pitching has been solid from the starting four to the bullpen and everyone in between. The offense has proved it can come through in the clutch, and the defense has been back in old form during Iowa's streak.

Eyes on the prize: Ask any member of the team about the race for the sixth and final spot in the Big Ten Tournament, and you will likely get a number of scenarios. While it's unclear just exactly what must happen, Iowa can only hope the other contenders beat up on one another during the Hawkeyes' bye week. Iowa will close out Big Ten play next weekend with four games at conference leader Purdue.

Coach's comment: "Every play, every at bat means something. I think our guys have finally realized that, and we're seeing results."

Knoblauch endures fans' wrath

■ Metrodome fans almost caused the Twins to forfeit after pelting Chuck Knoblauch with batteries.

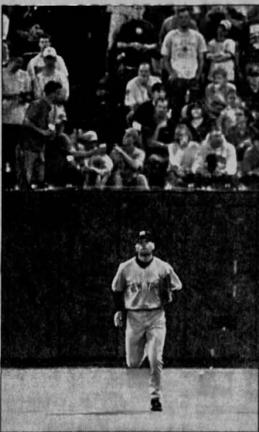

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Chuck Knoblauch asked the Minnesota Twins to trade him in 1998. He couldn't wait to get out of town again after being harassed throughout the New York Yankees' three-game series at the Metrodome.

Fans still angry at Knoblauch for leaving the team when it was down threw golf balls, hot dogs and plastic beer bottles at Knoblauch Wednesday night, causing umpires to pull the Yankees off the field for 12 minutes in the sixth inning of Minnesota's 4-2 win. The game also was delayed in the eighth for about five minutes, and umpires said they considered calling a forfeit. More than 40 fans were ejected.

"They need to turn the page," said Knoblauch, who also was pelted in the series opener Monday. "It's been four years. I don't know what's going on here."

Twins manager Tom Kelly

Jim Mone/Associated Press
New York's Chuck Knoblauch comes off the field after the eighth inning Wednesday as fans in the left field stands look on.

went into left field during the first delay to plead with the fans, and he later escorted Knoblauch back to his position. Though he and Knoblauch don't get along, he was livid about the fans' behavior.

"It was a terrific game, and in my mind it was ruined," Kelly said. "Hopefully, they can clean it up around here."

Several Twins worried about retaliation when they visit

Yankee Stadium for a three-game series on May 8.

"It's going to be a death trap for us," outfielder Torii Hunter said.

Fans threw quarters Monday at Knoblauch, playing left field in his former home stadium for the first time. Knoblauch, a rookie second baseman on the Twins' 1991 World Championship team, has earned three more World Series rings since being dealt to New York in '98.

On Tuesday night, after a second-straight game filled with taunts and boos, Knoblauch joked about being smart enough not to retrieve beach balls that left the stands and landed on the warning track.

"I wasn't in the mood for any beer," he said.

Wednesday, he refused to be critical.

"Even after all this, I won't say anything bad about the city," Knoblauch said. "It's probably a bunch of 16-year-olds who don't have a clue who Chuck Knoblauch is."

After Monday's game, the Twins doubled security in left field. Tuesday brought more taunts and boos, but Wednesday's crowd of 36,825 included walk-up sales of 16,000 and a return of the flying objects.

Carter to retire after season's end

■ One of the best wide receivers in history says this season will be his last.

Associated Press

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio — Cris Carter, one of only two players in NFL history with more than 1,000 receptions, plans to retire after this season, the Middletown Journal reported Thursday.

The Minnesota Vikings wide receiver, No. 2 behind Jerry Rice in receptions and touchdown catches, made the announcement Wednesday night during a banquet speech in Middletown, where he was a high-school star.

"Just where everything began, right here in Middletown, I think that, at this point, I'm going to make the announcement that this will be my last year of playing," Carter said, according to the newspaper.

The 35-year-old Carter had previously said he would return for at least one more season, but he hadn't announced when he would retire.

His agent, Mitchell Frankel, was traveling Thursday and was not immediately available for comment. Vikings owner Red McCombs and team spokesman Bob Hagan did not immediately return phone calls from the Associated Press.

When Carter told the banquet crowd of several hundred people that the 2001 season would be his last, there was a moment of stunned silence.

"It's not because I can't play anymore," he said. "It's not because I don't love it anymore. It's because my assignment in the NFL is complete as a player. My dream is realized, it's come true. I don't want to play one extra day and deny another man from wearing the No. 80 jersey and keep him from enjoying the kind of opportunities that I've had."

Carter caught his 1,000th pass last season and finished with 1,020; Rice has 1,281. Carter also played in his eighth-consecutive Pro Bowl. He is the Vikings' career leader in touchdowns (104) and yards receiving (11,512).

Carter has talked about a broadcasting career after football, and he will miss the Vikings' minicamp this weekend to work as an analyst Sunday on DirectTV's broadcast of an NFL Europe game.

He spoke at the Pigskin-Roundball Spectacular banquet, which honors the accomplishments of Middletown and Ohio athletes and coaches. He and his brother, Butch, former coach of the Toronto Raptors, were the main attraction.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Socializing with colleagues will lead to better rapport at work. Friendships are fine, but don't become intimate with a co-worker. Rumors will be damaging to your position.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Volunteer to help an organization that you believe in. New friendships will develop at the functions you attend. You can make some personal changes to enhance your looks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can do well with real-estate sales, but expect opposition. Not everyone in your household will be in favor of the changes you are proposing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be able to mesmerize your mate for a while but don't try to pull the wool over his or her eyes. You're likely to be dropped if you aren't honest.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You must concentrate on your career. It is crucial that you don't miss any opportunity that comes your way. Your emotional involvement with a colleague will backfire if you haven't been honest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Loosen up. Concentrate on enhancing your looks and your appeal. It's time you started to enjoy life. Join in activities that will expand your circle of friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Secret affairs will not be in your best interests. Take the time to make your home environment better. Changes will be necessary if you wish to keep things amiable.

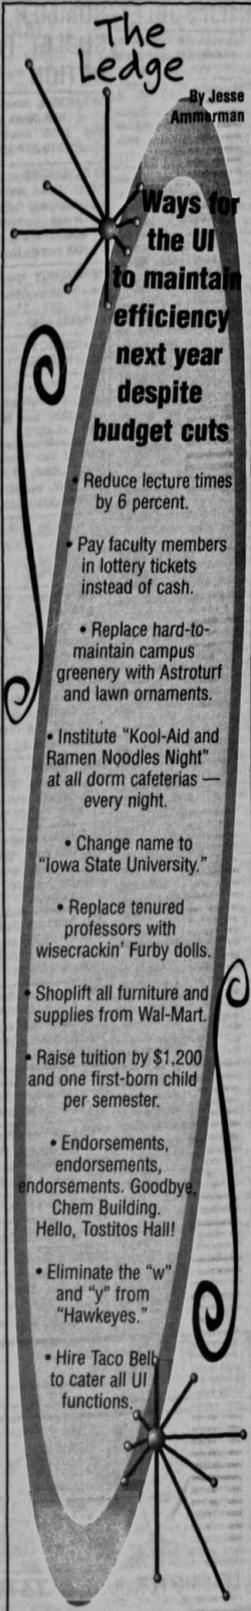

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Group activities will lead to business opportunities and romantic connections. You will gain valuable knowledge through those you talk to. Go after your personal and professional goals.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your involvement in other people's affairs will not turn out as planned. Don't put your trust in individuals going through an unstable period. You'll be blamed for their problems.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Travel will be to your benefit. You will learn easily if you attend seminars that interest you. Be honest and tell those who have been meddling in your affairs that you don't appreciate it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will have to deal with the backlog of personal papers you've neglected for so long. Take your time; you don't want to make a costly mistake when it comes to your financial affairs.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be original in your correspondence, especially when it involves someone you love. Take care of the needs of those who depend on you. Pleasure trips will be successful.

Ways for the UI to maintain efficiency next year despite budget cuts

• Reduce lecture times by 6 percent.

• Pay faculty members in lottery tickets instead of cash.

• Replace hard-to-maintain campus greenery with AstroTurf and lawn ornaments.

• Institute "Kool-Aid and Ramen Noodles Night" at all dorm cafeterias — every night.

• Change name to "Iowa State University."

• Replace tenured professors with wisecrackin' Furby dolls.

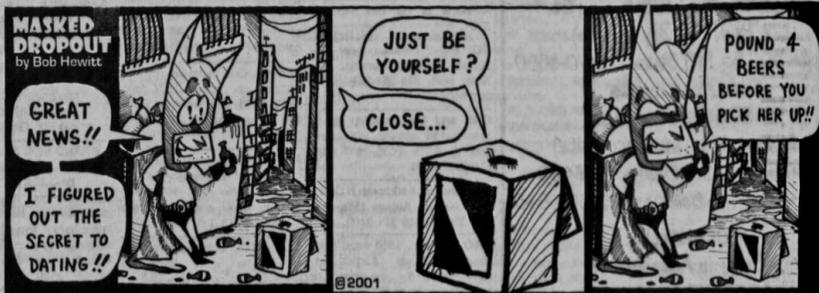

• Shoplift all furniture and supplies from Wal-Mart.

• Raise tuition by $1,200 and one first-born child per semester.

• Endorsements, endorsements, endorsements. Goodbye, Chem Building. Hello, Tostitos Hall!

• Eliminate the "w" and "y" from "Hawkeyes."

• Hire Taco Bell to cater all UI functions.
