A rebirth for downtown I.C. TAs dissatisfied

New venues in the Old Capitol Town Center could improve the business district.

Downtown has experienced a series of closings and vacancies since the growth of Coralville's business district, causing some to think Iowa City's "heart" had begun to

But several city officials and business owners said through the revitalization of the Old Capitol Town Center, the heart of Iowa City may find its beat again.

After the value of the mall steadily declined from its apex in 1995, the shopping center is one of the establishments making progress to bring in downtown customers and create a new image for itself at the same time. Currently, there are plans to open a sports bar, a recreational venue and a coffee shop. An ice cream store has already opened in the mall.

State representative Vicki Lensing, D-Iowa City, said revitalizing the Old Capitol Town Center will play a major role in how successful downtown can be.

"Having a vital downtown shopping mall would enhance the existing businesses and entertainment venues." Lensing said. "This can happen none too soon.

"I think in the last year, we have seen activity happening again. We have seen the remodeling of businesses and reinvestment in our downtown."

Last July, Pennsylvania-based CB Richard Ellis took over management of the mall, and has since worked steadily to renovate and recruit more tenants. Along with remodeling and new renters, the shopping center's name has been changed from the Old Capitol Mall to the Old Capitol Town

Royer's stint on the rowing team has been a big part of his college career, and this weekend will conclude three years of early morning practices, creating friendships and learning the

Although he will miss graduation, he said he would much rather row than sit through a long and boring ceremony.

Then it's back to Iowa City, from where Royer and fiancee Nora Clemons will head east to Rochester, N.Y., to search for an apartment. But they won't move in until late summer. Royer still has places to travel before he takes up permanent residence in New York, but he is definitely ready to speed things up. "I'm ready for a change of

A lost box turtle presumed dead, a finals week without tests or projects and an uncertain future in Los Angeles in design and marketing - this is the life of graduating UI senior Lisa Schooley. "It hasn't hit me yet that I'm graduating," she said. "I'm just working and finally relaxing after four years."

She's taking things PROFILES slowly as her time at the UI ticks away and her job search takes an unexpected turn. Earlier this year, Schooley sent out 25 resumes to companies in California - most of them in San Diego — seeking a job that would combine her interest in marketing and design. Schooley said she spent $500 on her portfolio and traveling expenses to California.

There were no takers.

Like Needles, her turtle who eventually emerged from underneath a roommate's bed after a week's absence, Schooley believes she'll pull through. So does her mother, Ann Schooley.

"Of course we're concerned," Ann Schooley said. "But she's always done fine as far as jobs are concerned. She'll find something."

The 21-year-old Schooley hasn't stopped working since she snagged her first job at age 15 selling Halloween merchandise at a large pumpkin farm near her hometown of Hoffman Estates, a northwest suburb of Chicago.

Not to be defeated, Schooley created an effigy of herself out of life-sized boards plastered with resumes, rejection letters, maps and her business cards drenched in muddy water for sculpture class. Among the mess she placed fresh business cards, a statement of her relentless efforts to succeed in the face of adversity.

Divided House passes Bush budget

The budget calls for a $1.35 trillion, 11-year tax cut, lower than what the president wanted.

WASHINGTON Republicans pushed a final 2002 budget through the House Wednesday, a first stride toward enactment of the big tax cuts and spending restraint favored by President Bush.

Group rails against 'CHILD-ishness'

Quality of life will improve the economy, not a rain forest, say lowa Child opponents.

> By Kathryn Anderson The Daily Iowan

Local residents voiced concerns Wednesday that a proposed artificial rain forest would not be responsible economic development for the state.

Members of Iowa Citizens Against CHILD-ishness, a group organized in response to the Iowa Child Project's proposal to construct a five-acre artificial rain forest in Coralville, held a public forum to discuss alternative options to improve Iowa's economy.

According to information gathered by the group, the latest estimated cost for the tourist attraction, which would include the rainforest, an aquarium, an I-Max theater, a 600-room hotel and school, is $293 million.

Osha Davidson, a member of the group and author of Broken Heartland: The Rise of America's Urban Ghettos, urged that projects encouraging economic development should be taken in small steps.

"Grand schemes that include huge sums of money should be looked at very warily," he said. "Grandiose schemes often lead to grandiose flops."

One of the concerns raised at the forum was that the artificial rain forest would not celebrate Iowa's natural resources, but would rather bring in resources from a completely different geographical area. The group also believes the projected number of visitors, from 1.1 million to 1.5 million per year, is unrealistic.

"The lure of the local is what draws people to a community,' said Robert Sayre, a member of the group and author of Take the Next Exit: New Views of the Iowa Landscape. "When tourists go somewhere, they want to know about the place where they are.'

Executive director of the Iowa Humanities Board, Chris Rossi, suggested the Iowa Child Project look at projects such as the Mississippi River Project in Dubuque that celebrates local attributes of the river, such as carp, and not for-eign species, such as piranhas of the Amazon.

'A local commitment is absolutely necessary," he said. "A sense of identity and a sense of place are notions that have resonance."

Iowa City resident Ken Atkinson said he was concerned about reports in newspapers that have said Iowa has an aging population, a lower-thanaverage rate of business startups and that many college graduates are leaving the state.

"We need to do things to build business and build the right kind," he said. "We need to realy pay attention to economic development at the high end."

Iowans need to consider many activities, said Bruce Wheaton, the director of the Iowa Technology Innovation Center. An emphasis on tourism is not necessary to achieve economic development, he said. Sayre proposed that improving local restaurants and hotels might be a better investment than the Iowa Child Project. "We need to think more about the quality of life and less about the dollar sign," he said. "If we improve the quality of life, the

A committee on overcrowding encourages looking at jailing alternatives.

> By Mary Sedor The Daily Iowan

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors asked local city officials for their help in easing an overcrowded county jail during a joint meeting of the county's governing bodies Wednesday.

A committee on jail overcrowding, headed by supervisors Carol Thompson and Pat Harney, asked the City Councils of North Liberty, Coralville and Iowa City if they would look at their own enforcement practices and sponsor public forums to discuss jailing alternatives to help overcrowding.

The county plans to spend $550,000 to repair the jail renovations such as a new roof and upgrades to heating and ventilation. But that is not enough, she said.

"We need to cut the average daily use by 12 to 15 people," Thompson said of the facility that houses an average of about 94 inmates but only has 92 available beds.

Thompson presented the attendants with a chart showing how much each agency uses the jail. Last year, the Iowa City police used the jail the most, but each county government agency is using the jail roughly proportionally to what is expected.

Some inmates sustain injuries as a partial result of the overcrowded conditions, she said. Eventually, the sheriff will have to start paying to transport inmates to other counties if overcrowding continues.

While the county is aware that it needs to begin transporting inmates to other facilities, officials haven't yet because of a lack of funding, Johnson County Sheriff Robert Carpenter said. Although Wednesday's collective session came up with no alternatives or ideas on how to ease overcrowding, the councilors said they would support any effort made.

Anything that any city would do should be in consultation with the police chief and county attorney," Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman said.

The councilors also discussed the alcohol and smoking ordinances in Iowa City. Ernie Lehman mentioned that since the council passed the first reading of a new alcohol ordinance, which aims to cut down on binge and underage be the aftermath of the ordinance. Some drinkers may travel to bars outside of Iowa City and therefore, the county should step up enforcement in rural areas, he said.

"If they have to go out of town to break the law, so be it,' Ernie Lehman said.

None of the other cities showed interest in formulating their own alcohol ordinances or further enforcement until it becomes an issue, he said.

state of Iowa Board of Regents allow the current plan to expire on June 30, 2002. Administrators may choose to follow that advice when they report to the board staff this summer.

The current early retirement program has been in place for 10 years. It allows employees over the age of 57 the option of retiring if they have worked for 15 years at a state-funded Iowa university.

The early retirement program as been helpful in the past, but it is defeating the purposes of the UI right now due to budget cuts and some short-staffed departments, said Robert Foldesi, UI associate vice president for human resources

'We are recruiting like heck for some positions, but we still have a program where people are leaving early," Foldesi said.

The current plan has received criticism for being age discriminatory and will likely be revised if not abandoned. "There have been a number of problems with it according to a variety of different people," said Pat Kenner, former Staff Council president. If the board allows the plan to expire, it could be left up to each institution to develop The University of Northern Iowa and Iowa State University want to continue early retirement programs, Foldesi

"I would anticipate that there will be short-term, not long-lasting programs," Foldesi said about the future of early retirement at the UI.

Though all the schools have been under the same plan, Foldesi said the other two have been selective of who could retire early, making resulting turnover smaller. The UI has been more liberal with the policy.

"In almost all cases, if you apply, you get it," Foldesi said.

A sub-committee of the Funded Retirement and Insurance Committee will meet in early retirement that could be instituted at a later date, should the need for such a program arise. The Funded Retirement and Insurance Committee will not advocate for this program to be put into place as soon as the current plan is

The phased-retirement program, which allows for a gradual decrease in employee hours, will be available regardless of the early retirement program's fate.

Jim Clark, who owns AUR partments and the old public library, 307 E. College St., wants to raze the 98-year-old building to make way for a tall apartment complex with offices on the first floor, similar to the Main Street apartment complex on College

But Clark's plan has been met with opposition from local historians, who want to declare the building a historical landmark, which would halt Clark's plans.

The Iowa City Historic Preservation Commission will hold a public hearing tonight to decide whether the building should be considered a landmark. After a consensus is formed, the commission will make its recommendation to the city's planning and zoning commission.

This summer, the Iowa City City Council will make the final decision.

Regardless, Clark could alter the inside for use as office space or apartments, City Councilor Connie Champion said. The major stipulation of the historical landLocation of the old public library in Iowa City Burlington S mark classification is that the building must be left standing and the exterior structure maintained, she said.

On Tuesday, the council voted 6-1 to hold a public hearing in June to decide whether to name the building a landmark. As a result, Clark will not be able to demolish the building until after the council reaches a decision. "I probably won't spend the taxpayers' money to buy it and keep it from being torn down," Champion said.

Mayor Ernie Lehman, the only dissenter, was concerned the city would be forced to purchase the building to prevent its demolition.

The library, built in 1903, is one of many libraries funded by the Carnegie Foundation across the country. Champion said that although hundreds of similar libraries were built across the U.S., this one is

DES MOINES - Gov. Tom Vilsack refused Wednesday to rule out calling lawmakers back into special session "to mitigate the damage" caused when they cut deeply into his budget proposal.

Republican leaders said such a session would be useless because they have fundamental disagreements with the governor. The two sides are in a gridlock that could run through the next election.

Vilsack summoned reporters to his office to make it clear he will make use of his veto pen liberally as spending measures land on his desk

The Republican lawmakers' work product is so haphazard we will need 30 days to gauge the extent of the harm their budget has imposed on the people of Iowa," the governor said. The governor has 30 days to

We need to take a look at how extensive the damage is and how we'll manage the chaos that ensued," Vilsack said.

Gov. Vilsack would rather grow government than grow Iowa, so it really doesn't surprise me that he is disappointed with the outcome of the session," said Senate Majority Leader Stewart Iverson, R-

Iverson said he had no interest in negotiating any further with Vilsack until the governor changes his views.

Asked directly if he was considering a special session, Vilsack said: "I'm not ruling it in

Specific complaints issued by the governor included:

· Allowing a surcharge on businesses to lapse, which will force 56 satellite offices of Iowa Workforce Development to close. · Rejection of his proposal to create new incentives for the creation of venture capital and to reorganize economic development efforts.

"Despite the fact this Legislature was in session for 121 days, lawmakers just didn't do the job they were sent here to do," Vilsack said.

The governor said the partisan stance Republicans have taken could block real progress in the next legislative session as well.

"Once the election is over, it should be over and the governing should begin," the governor said. "That for some reason didn't occur. A decision was made that we were going to continue the election.' Lawmakers already must return for one special session because they couldn't agree on new congressional and legislative maps, and Vilsack said some of his budget complaints could be resolved at that time.

Mindful of the conservative acrimony toward Clinton's nominees, the president asks for "civility."

> By Sandra Sobieraj Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush began putting his conservative imprint on the judiciary Wednesday, as he announced his choices to fill the first of 100 vacancies on the federal bench. Postponing controversial selections, Bush appealed for "civility and dignity" in the Senate verdict on his inaugural slate of 11 nominees.

"I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee," the president said at an East Room ceremony.

The would-be appeals court udges - chosen after White House consultations with their homestate senators and meant for smooth confirmation by the evenly divided Senate — stood beside Bush on a three-tiered riser.

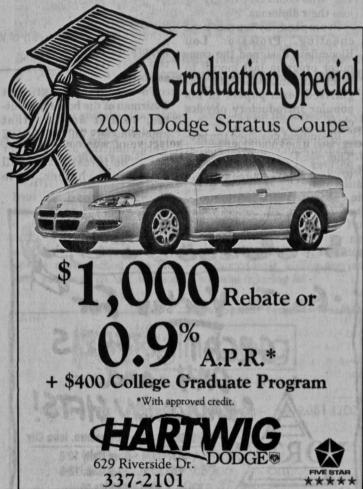

"Individuals of experience and character," he called them. Seven are sitting judges, three practice law, and one is a law professor.

Vermont's Patrick Leahy, the only Senate Democrat to show up, welcomed Bush's first round of picks, which include two nominees previously tapped by former President Clinton — Barrington Parker Jr. and Roger Gregory.

"Had I not been encouraged, would not have been here today," said Leahy, ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee. He brought a camera and prevailed upon an audience member to snap him mugging with Republican Sens. Strom Thurmond and Orrin Hatch.

But even before the White House ceremony began, Democratic leaders reminded reporters that Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., could make good on his promise to block the nomination of Terrence Boyle of North Carolina.

Comeback Kid comes back again

■ Bill Clinton has focused on humanitarian issues during the past two months.

> By Katherine Roth Associated Press

NEW YORK - Bill Clinton, the master of the comeback, is rehabilitating his image yet

After a messy White House exit marked by uproars over pardons, gifts and pricey office space, the former president has focused on humanitarian issues during the past two months, taking his message across four continents to receptive and often adoring crowds.

"Basically, he's decided to take things he knows work and adapt them to other countries," said Joe Lockhart, the former White House press secretary who is now among his few close advisers.

"Only two or three former presidents have had the platform to bring international focus to disaster relief, citizen service, economic empowerment and health care. And he still has a very strong following.'

Since leaving office, Clinton has helped found an organization of Americans who want to rebuild villages destroyed in January by an earthquake in India. Already, the group has raised $8 million. He also visited India this spring and plans to help launch the India Service Corps, modeled on the U.S. Peace Corps.

Recently he attended an AIDS summit in Africa and embarked on extended trips to Europe and China. He also started a Clinton Democracy Fellowship program, which brings South African students to the United States to learn how to run community-service

In remaking his image, he has employed strategies proven effective during his darkest days in office.

After appearing adrift for weeks without his presidential staff, Clinton has assembled a circle of advisers, including former Chief of Staff John Podesta, with whom he consults regularly.

In traveling the world, Clinton has largely succeeded in focusing news coverage on a few select causes. At home, he has made himself less accessible to the media. Reporters are excluded from his paid speaking engagements, and audience questions are typically pre-selected.

Nearly gone now are the tabloid headlines such as "Clinton Legacy: Wanna walk? Money talks" that blared from newsstands throughout February.

Presidential scholar James Pfiffner, a professor of government and politics at George Mason University, said the 54year-old Clinton should have no problem reshaping his image if he continues to pursue the service projects he has championed in recent weeks.

"One key thing is that he's relatively young as ex-presidents go," Pfiffner said. "Nixon rehabilitated his image, or tried, by writing his books, conferring with world leaders and being a wise elder statesman. He came amazing-

He added: "The international arena, especially with Africa and AIDS and pressing problems in the developing world, seems like a natural place for Clinton to work on his image.'

Aides said Clinton's recent travel schedule is typical of the way he plans to spend much of his time. He plans to devote most of the rest to public appearances and his memoirs.

Despite embarrassing early setbacks on the lecture circuit Morgan-Stanley, for example, announced it regretted having him speak at a conference in Boca Raton, Fla. -Clinton is in great demand as a speaker.

The Harry Walker Agency, which books Clinton's engagements, says it has assigned extra personnel to keep up with demand. Clinton has made dozens of appearances at a minimum of $100,000 each, with the fee typically higher overseas.

He is expected to earn about $1 million for appearances this month alone, which would go a long way toward paying his estimated $4 million in legal fees. Those costs continue to accumulate; a federal grand jury is investigating Clinton's presidential pardons.

Robert Barnett, Clinton's literary agent and lawyer, said the former president will sign a hefty memoir deal within the next few months. The contract seems likely to eclipse Hillary Rodham Clinton's $8 million book deal, which Barnett also helped arrange.

Aides said he has turned down tens of millions of dollars' worth of commercials and endorsement offers and has declined offers to work in the media and in teaching.

Clinton has also kept his hand in politics. He stays in touch with British Prime Minister Tony Blair and other foreign leaders, including South Korean President Kim Daejung and German Chancellor Gerhard Schröder.

With his wife in Washington as a senator and his daughter, Chelsea, away at Stanford University, Clinton's white house in suburban Westchester County is rarely inhabited by anyone except Clinton and his military valet, who cooks meals and tends to his clothing and household needs.

Clinton and his wife have had a mostly long-distance relationship since leaving the White House, though just this month they began making public appearances together again.

The controversy that marked his first weeks out of office isn't necessarily a bad thing, said Skip Rutherford, the head of the foundation that is planning Clinton's presidential library in Little Rock, Ark.

"The more controversies there are and the more interesting a president is, the more exciting a library will be to tourists, historians, journalists and others," said Rutherford, who claims the foundation's $200 million fund-raising effort has continued unabated. "Clinton will be one of the most studied presidents of all time."

Annan enlists Cabinet in fight against AIDS

The secretary-general seeks the help of rich nations to develop a fund to fight the virus.

> By Anjetta McQueen Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan sought the Bush administration's help Wednesday to pay for a multibillion-dollar program to fight AIDS in Africa.

The administration is considering an initial pledge of $200 million to the global AIDS fund. Secretary of State Colin Powell and Tommy Thompson, the secretary of Health and Human Services, are considering trips to Africa to see firsthand the devastation wrought by AIDS on the continent.

The secretary-general, who met Wednesday with the two Cabinet members, is seeking the help of rich nations in developing a $7 billion to $10 billion fund. Of 36 million people around the world infected with HIV, roughly 26 million live in Africa. The virus has killed 23 million people worldwide, including 17 million in sub-Saharan Powell said the meeting was "excellent" and that the administration might have more to say about Annan's request later in the week.

Amid the U.N.'s struggles to help the infected in Africa and prevent the disease's spread, AIDS in Africa has emerged as a foreign-policy issue for the administration.

AIDS activists have charged that the administration is paying more attention to the worldwide problem rather than looking at it as a domestic issue.

Last month, Thompson defended the administration's decision against increasing funds for popular AIDS-treatment programs such as the $1.8 billion Ryan White project while concentrating on developing vaccines at the National Institutes of Health research centers. The NIH budget includes $2.5 billion for HIV and AIDS research.

"We think that is a much more important place, because we got to have that vaccine in order to control this epidemic that's going around worldwide," Thompson said.

'What we have to do is develop a Marshall-like plan in order to do something about the prevention problem and come up with a way to curtail the problem in Africa," he said.

The world's response to AIDS in Africa has grown. For instance, drug companies from India and the United States have cut the cost of expensive drug therapies prevalent in richer nations so that Africans can better cope

The NIH Wednesday also outlined a global healthresearch plan for fighting AIDS, malaria and tuberculo-

Annan has appealed to wealthy nations to help build a fund to fight AIDS, malaria and other killer diseases. He said fighting AIDS, especially in Africa, is critical to cutting the number of people living in abject poverty in half by 2015.

Plagiarism detector finds 122 red flags

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. A computer program designed by a physics professor to catch duplicated phrases in term papers has triggered one of the biggest plagiarism investigations ever at the University of Virginia, with 122 students or recent graduates under suspicion.

The university's studenthonor committee will begin hearings this summer for the 122, who could be expelled or lose their diplomas.

Prompted by rumors of cheating, Professor Lou Bloomfield designed the computer program last month to catch students who had plagiarized term papers in his popular introductory physics Bloomfield designed the pro-

KUMANOVO, Macedonia — Macedonian troops pounded suspected ethnic Albanian rebel positions with artillery Wednesday and besieged part of the border with Kosovo amid fading hopes for a political settlement.

The chances of forming a national unity government between parties representing the majority Slavs and minority Albanians dimmed when a key ethnic Albanian party demanded the offensive end before talks begin.

The spokesman for the largest Macedonian Slav party, the VMRO, acknowledged that the coalition's formation would have to be postponed at least until next week.

The militants pledged to fight on and insisted that they must allowed a role in negotiations to end the crisis. "The government has to face reality," said a rebel leader, Commander Sokoli. "It has to face us."

The midday assault began after rebels fired on troops with machine guns, prompting the army to answer with shelling that it said destroyed the insurgents' sniper nest, the army said.

The rebels struck back, sending mortar rounds crashing near army positions. But there was disagreement on who fired first.

The army called for the evacuation of some 2,000 civilians it says are in the northern hills north of Kumanovo, toward the border with Kosovo — a sign a broader assault may be coming, but few heeded the call. Kosovo is Serbia's largely ethnic Albanian-populated province.

The army claims the rebels are forcing civilians to stay as human shields — charges the guerrillas deny.

Sokoli said the rebels had also asked civilians to leave — "but they are resolved to stay here," he said.

As the army stepped up its 10-day offensive, Macedonia's political parties struggled to forge a unity government to present a united front to the rebels, who say they are fighting for greater rights for ethnic Albanians.

But the influential ethnic Albanian party, the Party for Democratic Prosperity, demanded an immediate ceasefire as a condition for joining an all-party government.

Caught in the shooting Wednesday were two British journalists who had traveled to the Northern village of Slupcane during what was supposed to have been a cease-fire.

The two reporters were able to walk out of the village to government positions after the International Committee for the Red Cross persuaded both sides to hold their fire.

Their armored car was destroyed, but army spokesman Col. Blagoja Markovski insisted the Macedonian military was not responsible.

Thousands of frightened villagers have been streaming from villages about 15 miles north of the capital, Skopje, and into neighboring Kosovo. Many said they left behind homes leveled in the army offensive.

Sharon blames Arafat for deaths

■ The Israeli prime minister denounces Arafat as a partner in peace.

By Karin Laub Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Two Jewish teen-agers — one an immigrant from Maryland — were beaten to death with rocks in a West Bank cave after skipping school to go hiking. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said Wednesday he held Yasser Arafat personally responsible.

The boys' bodies were found around dawn Wednesday in a cave in the Judean Desert. The walls of the cave were covered with blood, reportedly smeared there by the killers, who dipped their hands in the teen-agers' blood.

Sharon blamed Arafat for the killings, saying the Palestinian leader was doing nothing to stop attacks on Israelis and was not a partner for peace.

Asked about the slayings, Arafat responded by saying Palestinian children have been victimized by Israel. He cited a 3-month-old Palestinian girl who was wounded

Wednesday when she was hit in the head with a piece of shrapnel in an Israeli shooting attack on a Gaza Strip refugee camp.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher called the killings "horrible, brutal," adding, "Our chief concern at this point is to be in touch with the families." And Pope John Paul II said in Malta that he was saddened by "news from the Holy Land of terrible violence even against innocent young people."

Soldiers wrapped the bloodied bodies of Kobi Mandell and Yossi Ishran in tarps and tied them to stretchers to carry them from the cave up the rocky slope of Wadi Hariton, a dry riverbed about a half mile from the boys' homes in the Tekoa settlement.

in the Tekoa settlement.

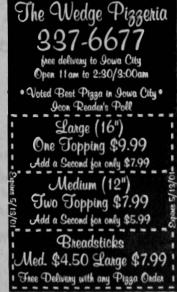

Yossi was 14, and Kobi was a month shy of his 14th birthday, his grandmother Marilyn Lederman said in New York.

Israel's Channel Two TV said police believed there were at least three assailants who dipped their hands into the boys' blood after the killing and smeared it on the walls of the cave. The killers remained in the cave for a considerable time after the slayings, the report said.

At least 100 killed in Ghana soccer stampede

ACCRA, Ghana — A stampede at a packed soccer match between top Ghana teams killed at least 100 people Wednesday night, a top government official said. Panic set in when police fired tear gas to subdue unruly fans, witnesses said.

Hometown team Accra Hearts of Oak was leading, 2-1, against Asante Kotoko with five minutes left when Asante supporters began throwing bottles and chairs onto the field, witnesses said.

Police responded by firing tear gas, creating panic in the stands as spectators rushed to escape the gas, they said.

Ambulances raced through the streets of this seaside capital more than an hour after the stampede at Accra Stadium, the city's main playing field. Radio stations were broadcasting appeals for all doctors to report to work to help treat the injured. "It is a great national tragedy," said Minister of Presidential Affairs Jake Obetsebi-Amptey, who visited the hospital. "Many people have died and many more are wounded and are bleeding."

He said at least 100 people were killed. Hospital officials also gave that figure, but some local media reported that more than 120 fans were killed in the melee.

The hallways of Ghana's military hospital No. 37, were crowded with bleeding, injured people, as relatives frantically searched for loved ones.

This is the latest in a string of soccer disasters in the past month Officials in northeastern Iran said overcrowding was the main reason the roof of a stadium collapsed Sunday, killing two people and triggering riots with police. At least 20,000 people were packed into Mottaqi stadium in the town of Sari — twice its capacity.

This was the fourth African soccer tragedy in the past month. Forty-three people were killed April 11 at a stadium in Johannesburg, South Africa. Another stampede April 29 killed seven people in Lubumbashi, Congo. And on May 6, fighting broke out among fans at a soccer match in Ivory Coast, killing one person and injuring 39.

Congolese tell of hunger, years spent in hiding

■ A recent study estimates that the Congo's civil war killed more than 2 million people in eastern Congo.

By Ellen Knickmeyer Associated Press

KABINDA, Congo — Ntambue Ntambue fed his seven children rats and cassava leaves for the 15 months they hid from rebels in warring Congo. When there were no more rats, they ate only leaves.

Sent running by shelling that set their southern village aflame on March 15, 1999, the 36-year-old farmer and his neighbors watched from the scrub as Rwanda-backed rebels laid claim to the village's cattle and stripped its fields.

"We would go in the night, to enter the fields and see what had been left by the rebels," but sometimes "it was nothing," said Ntambue, who lost two of his malnourished children to measles while in hiding.

With a cease-fire in Congo's 2½-year-old war taking hold, Ntambue's account is one of many revealing the hidden humanitarian disaster in rebel- and Rwandan-controlled eastern Congo. Just this week, a study released by the New York-based International Rescue Committee estimated that the war left 2.5 million people dead — most from disease or hunger — in eastern Congo alone.

Rebels — who block access to their territory — deny the hunger is severe. Adolphe Onusumba, the leader of eastern Congo's dominant rebel group, the Rwandan-backed Rally for Congolese Democracy, told the Associated Press in late April that "aid agencies exaggerate the scale of the problem to justify pleas for additional funding."

But AP reporters visiting

But AP reporters, visiting isolated communities and hospitals in Congo's northeast and southeast, saw emaciated children and adults and heard direct accounts of years of running and hiding and of starvation that persists to this day.

"I wanted to save them," said one woman, whose family carried two young sisters 30 miles on foot in hopes of finding help at Kabinda's hospital, which is already overcrowded with the starving and the sick.

The younger sister, Mwembo Nkongolo, who weighs only 26 pounds at age 11, sat on a cot at the hospital begging strangers for food.

Her 13-year-old sister died the day before.

The villagers straggling into Kabinda — a government-held southeastern city of 140,000 encircled by rebel territory — spoke of many more dying at home.

THE END OF GRADE MAILINGS ...

New plan deserves an A

Don't expect to get your grades in the mail after this semester. UI officials have changed the way final grades will become available by implementing a new phone service, which will start on May 22.

Now, checking grades as soon as they become available will be as easy as dialing 1-800-305-4000, the number of the student-services network Campus Direct. In addition to the phone service, grades will still be available on ISIS. And students who wish to receive a grade report in the mail can request one from the Registrar's Office.

Students will soon realize that the administration has made a smart move in deciding to do away with the wasteful process of mailing out thousands of grade reports, many of which remain unopened or are Offering the option to use one of a variety of methods for checking their grades shows that administrators are attempting to accommodate both the financial reality that the UI faces and also the convenience of its students.

The variety of options that the university is offering students is commendable. Because it may not be convenient for many students to check their grades online, the university has combated the problem by adding the toll-free

Another reason the university needed to do away with mailing grades is the untimeliness factor. Even if students don't have their own Internet access, by the time grades have been sent across the state or country, those students most likely have already had the chance to check their grades via Internet using a friend's computer or at a pubic library. In the face of severe budget cuts, the university has done the right thing by offering this toll-free service, which costs only a fraction of what it would cost to mail out all the grade reports individually.

Even the boys of summer must grow up someday

he end of school has always meant one thing for me: summer employment. I remember being a 14-year-old kid who jumped from day-caddying to baby-sitting gigs just to earn money to waste on the weekends.

STEPHEN BALSLEY

I made a promise to one of my

up. I have been pretty successful with that promise so far ...

I have had a lot of summer jobs after the school year ended, but this time I know something different is going to happen: My summer job will not end with the beginning of another school year.

I talked to my brother about this last fall as he secured full-time employment for the first time in his life. Like me, he had worked odd jobs as a lifeguard and a lawn-care specialist during the summer months, only to return to the rigors of academia every August. I don't think my brother was fazed by the realization that he was entering into a real job - that he could no longer hide behind the veil of college life. I am not sure I will be so lucky.

I loved my summer jobs when I was in high school. I worked a ton, made enough money to waste during the year and always had fun. I remember umpiring baseball games, teaching kids how to swim, delivering papers, life guarding and working in a snack shack. They were all ideal jobs for the time. Sure, at the time I probably complained about a lack of free time or needing more money, but those were summers to remember. Not that graduating from college means that I suddenly have to grow up. I made a promise to one of my friends, whom I worked with for three summers, before returning to school my sophomore year that I would never grow up. I have been pretty successful with that promise so far, enjoying my childish ways and having fun at any opportunity. My friend, however, got married and put his English-philosophy degree to good use as a bank teller in the Denver area. The last time we talked, he had completely quit all of his boyhood hobbies and did not even know about the breakup of one of his favorite bands. All of these things would be somewhat justified if it I hadn't run into his mom at a grocery store last Christmas break, when she told me much my friends ... that I would never grow friend had grown up since he got married. I didn't have the heart to tell her about our promise. Another person I worked with one summer was doing everything in his power to earn a ton of money before he was 30, which would guarantee him the chance to retire young and play for the rest of his life. I always told him I was taking the opposite approach and would gladly work half a year to take the other half and blow all the money on meaningless pursuits. That was a dream you could have when a beautiful summer day turned into a stormy evening and the pool completely emptied. Two summers ago, I worked at the now defunct Englert movie house. I still have good friends whom I met at that job, we shared a summer filled with Star Wars premieres and late night Austin Powers showings with the ability to sleep late every morning. In a lot of ways, the Englert was one of the last places I will ever work where responsibility is not a requirement for the job. One could come and go from a job in a movie theater with no one hindering the process.

Last summer, like this upcoming summer, I worked two jobs at places that I had worked during the school year. Both jobs require some form of responsibility, which I am getting used to as I grow older. I have the chance now to try different things, to move to different places and to learn different patterns of life. No longer will my summers end with the inauguration of a new school year. I may never truly grow up, but I know I will always miss the summer jobs of my youth, as I learn what it means to be an adult.

SWANZEY, N.H. - The father of a student who killed himself 19 months after his older brother did said Wednesday he regrets not stopping the younger teen from taking the lead role in a school play about suicide.

"It was kind of a chilling idea to do the play, clearly. Anybody might have looked at it twice," David Kochman said in a telephone interview. "The thought was that it would be cathartic... that he could act out some of his feelings.

Kochman, 45, found his son's body at home early Sunday. Gregory was 17, the same age his brother Eric was when he committed suicide in 1999.

Gregory had the lead in Ordinary People, a play about a suicidal teen-ager racked with guilt over the death of his older brother in an accident. The school production, which had been scheduled to open Wednesday, was canceled.

School officials say they don't think the play contributed directly to Gregory's death, and his father agrees.

"I don't want there to be any controversy or bitterness. I think everybody tried to do the right thing. I don't think any blame should be placed anywhere. I just want people to remember Greg and Eric as the people they were," he said. Kochman, an insurancecompany audit supervisor, took a softer tone than he did in an interview with the Boston Globe the day before.

"When I heard about the play, I thought it was a sick joke," he told the Globe. "I couldn't believe it. I blame myself for not stopping it outright.

Kochman said Gregory's therapist was asked about the role and "thought it was OK."

'Greg was a lot like me he's someone that doesn't always express himself," Kochman said Wednesday. "We thought maybe this would be an opportunity to express something that would be hard to do otherwise."

He said he could have stopped the play at any time. "If I had picked the phone up and called the administration or the drama director, they would have stopped the play," he said. "I don't want to put that kind of guilt or blame on anybody, because I don't feel it."

Gregory was ranked third in his class academically and was on the track and soccer teams at Monadnock Regional Junior-Senior High School. He had been accepted for a summer advanced-studies program and had applied to the U.S. Military Academy at West

Kochman said he is pondering everything that might have contributed to Gregory's death. Approximately a month ago, he and his son discussed that Gregory had been alive longer than his older brother had

"If you look at the number of days each was on Earth, they almost lived the same numbers of days: 17 years, two months and X number of days," he

He said Gregory had discussed the milestone with his

Like Eric, Gregory shot himself at home with a family owned gun. Kochman said the gun Gregory used was locked up and had a trigger lock. There was no ammunition in the house. He said he was the only one who knew the combination to the trigger lock.

"It kinds of spooks me out to think of it — he must have gone through hundreds or thousands of numbers to try to get the right combination," he said. "That's all I can think of, because I never wrote the combination down.

The boys lived with their father after the parents divorced in 1997. Gregory had been hospitalized twice since Eric's suicide for his own protection and was closely watched at school.

Kochman told the Globe the brothers were "were unbelievably close. They lifted weights together, they played soccer together, they worked together they were best friends in addition to being brothers, and at the time I was very proud of that. But now it's turned into a

NATION BRIEF

Physician bias unlikely to explain racial differences in heart treatment

BOSTON (AP) — Black patients often get less aggressive care than whites for heart attacks, even if they have black doctors, a study found.

Experts have long noticed racial differences in medical treatment. Blacks often do not get the most upto-date, high-tech treatments. But the reasons for this are unclear, and some have wondered whether physician bias might play a role.

However, a new study suggests that whatever the reasons, racism on the part of doctors is unlikely to be a major contributor.

Dr. Jersey Chen and others from Yale University analyzed Medicare data on more than 53,000 heart attack patients who were treated in 1994 and 1995 by 17,550 white and 588 black physicians.

Whites were more likely than blacks to receive diagnostic tests called angiograms, but the race of the doctor did not matter. If the doctor was black, 38 percent of black patients and 50 percent of white patients got these tests. If the doctor was white, 38 percent of black patients and 46 percent of whites

The difference in testing seemed to have no effect on patients' outcome, though. Black patients' survival was as good as or better than that of whites up to three years later.

U.S. mistakenly shells German school

No one was injured in what the Army calls a "rare incident."

> By Geir Moulson Associated Press

BERLIN — The U.S. Army admitted Wednesday that it had misfired two training rounds, which hit and slightly damaged the roof of a southern German elementary school where children were playing in the yard.

Classes were over for the day Tuesday when the rounds hit in the town of Kirchenthumbach, said Mayor Johann Kleber, and no one was injured. The town is a halfArmy's largest European training range at Grafen-

The Army apologized for the incident and launched an investigation.

"This is really a rare incident, and it's bad," said Capt. Jeff Settle, the public-affairs officer for the 7th Army Training Command. "That it hit a school, of all things, is terri-

The incident occurred during live-fire training. The rounds involved were 25-mm aluminum training rounds.

"They were not high explosive; they were not depleted uranium," Settle said.

It remained unclear Wednesday how the accident occurred, mile from the edge of the Settle said. But the rounds, ing grounds fired approximately two miles from the school, "went in the wrong direction."

"It's the first time I know of that there's been a misfire by the U.S. Army," Kleber said. "It's in the interests of both sides to clear this up" and discuss ways to prevent future accidents.

Although relations between the Army and town residents remain predominantly good, there is growing concern about military safety standards. New life for I.C.'s downtown first alteration in an effort to give the mall more of a feeling of being a community center, rather than just a shopping headquarters, said general manager Kerry Sanders.

"We want the Old Capitol Town Center to be more a part of the community than ever before," he said.

Currently, the center is negotiating with numerous potential retailers interested in opening entertainment, restaurant or shopping venues, Sanders said. The four new businesses that have or are going to open in Old Capitol Town Center include Planet X, T-Spoons, Buffalo Wild Wings and the Ice Cream shop.

Buffalo Wild Wings, which Sanders described as "a very college-related business," is a sports bar and grill that has received numerous awards for its wings. The restaurant's slogan is "Wings. Beer. Sports. Like you need anything else.

"They are a wonderful player in the food and entertainment area," Sanders said. "As far as I am concerned, they are the best at what they do."

Other construction that is taking place this summer at Old Capitol Town Center will include facade renovations, a new transit building and doors that will open to the sidewalk for Clinton Street stores. Renovations made to provide dual entrances for Clinton Street stores and open the other new businesses are all expected to be completed this fall.

Other downtown improvements help

Other important improvements that have been made downtown include the rebuilding of the Whiteway Building where Mondo's Downtown is located and the revitalization of the Englert Theatre building, officials said.

Mondo's operations manager Jason Lepper describes the restaurant as "a staple in downtown Iowa City," and said its reopening has been good for downtown, as well as the business itself. It reopened last December after a 1999 fire destroyed the Lepper said the reason that businesses like Mondo's can succeed downtown is because "the culture of Iowa City is a smallbusiness state of mind."

The pedestrian mall continues to add flavor to the downtown with its wide assortment of restaurants and events, like the Friday night concert series, said Iowa City Mayor Ernie Lehman.

There are a lot more things going on downtown than just shopping," Lehman said.

'Prosperous' in the 1980s and early 1990s

Lensing said even though there are still many unique, locally-owned establishments in the area, she has seen "fewer mom-and-pop or family-owned businesses" that she remembers from her childhood. Family-owned business like Kirwan Furniture and Piper's Candy Store are some of the Lucy Hall, an employee of the new Ice Cream Shop, reads while waiting for customers at the Old Capital Town Center Wednesday. Though new stores have planned to move into the mall, there's no telling downtown establishments that Lensing recalls fondly from her whether they will find success.

Lehman said the first major blow to the downtown was dealt back in the late 1960s when the Sycamore Mall opened. Although the opening caused a drop in business downtown, it didn't take long for business to rebound, Lehman said.

Throughout the 1980s and most of the 1990s, Lehman said, the downtown regained its strength and once again became the center of commerce.

"I don't think there was hardly a downtown in the U.S. that was as prosperous as Iowa City [during this time]," Lehman

But on July 29, 1998, the Coral Ridge Mall in Coralville opened its doors, offering 1.2 million square feet of retail and entertainment space.

For the downtown area, especially the Old Capitol Town Center, this was a devastating blow. Since then, a litany of stores left the mall. JC Penney left. Then other smaller stores, like the Buckle, B. Dalton Bookseller, and Jewelers, followed suit.

"If you look around downtown, there are almost no vacancies except in Old Capitol Town Center," Lehman said. "It will help a lot when Old Capitol gets more tenants."

House passes budget near party lines

trillion tax reduction but accepted the smaller package as the price for ensuring support from moderate Senate

"Let's recognize where those tax dollars come from," said Rep. Jim Nussle, R-Iowa, who chairs the House Budget Committee. "And let's take the opportunity to provide tax relief for the American people."

Details of the tax cut and spending will be worked out in subsequent bills.

But Democrats said the tax cut is far too large and too weighted toward the rich, while sopping up funds needed for schools, creating new prescription drug subsidies and other domestic needs.

"This budget is a farce, and it's a fraud," said House Leader Dick Minority Gephardt, D-Mo. "And in the end, America deserves better than that."

overwhelming Despite Democratic opposition, it was a cluster of centrist Democrats who were poised to supply the pivotal votes needed for passage in the Senate.

"I think that's correct," Sen. John Breaux, D-La., a leader of those moderates, said of GOP predictions of moderate Democratic support.

The Democratic votes were needed because a pair of maverick Republicans - Sens. James Jeffords of Vermont and Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island

- were balking at supporting the budget because they said the tax cut was too large and its education funds too small.

Breaux's group includes 14

Democrats who voted for an earlier Senate version of the budget that had a slightly smaller tax cut. One other Democrat - Sen. Zell Miller of Georgia - has already said he will vote for the GOP fiscal

Any Republican strategy that successfully splits the Senate moderates would underline the fragility of the coalition centrists' and decrease their clout, while increasing the power of both Bush and Senate GOP leaders.

The budget calls for reducing the publicly held national debt by $2.4 trillion over the coming decade - the most that Republicans say is feasible. Democrats say the GOP is skimping on debt reduction to reserve money for their tax cut.

In addition, the budget would set aside extra money for defense, schools, farmers, health insurance for the poor and prescription-drug coverage.

Overall, it would allow 4 percent more money than this year for all federal programs except automatically paid benefits such as Social Security. That one-third of the budget would grow from $635 billion this year to $661 billion next year — the same amount Bush requested.

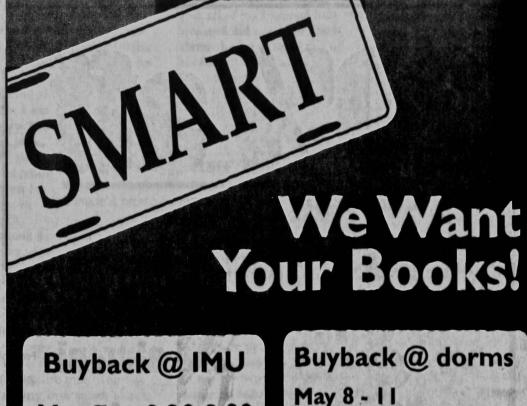

But because the military, education and other programs would get relatively large increases, other programs within this category of spending were likely to get small boosts or be cut. The budget contained little information about which programs those would be, and decisions on that will be made in later bills.

Democrats - and in private some Republicans - say lawmakers will likely pass spending bills that will exceed the 4 percent boost. Besides annual efforts by legislators to win money for favorite programs, the figure ignores a request for a big Pentagon increase that is likely to be sought by Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

The budget sets tax and spending guidelines that lawmakers are supposed to follow - but often ignore - when writing later bills that finance federal programs and change tax law. It does not need the president's signature.

But under congressional rules, budget passage would ensure that the tax cut the measure envisions could not be killed by a Senate filibuster delays that would require 60 votes to end. The budget vote is also an important signal of where congressional sentiment lies on a president's fiscal proposals.

If the Senate completes action on the budget today, that would be nine days after Republicans, Bush and centrist Democrats announced they had reached an agreement, with days of further negotiations needed to complete the last details.

lowa set to slam into Big Ten Tournament play

■ The Hawkeyes take on Ohio State or Wisconsin today at 1:30 p.m.

By Melinda Mawdsley

The Daily Iowan

No team in the Big Ten Tournament cares how Iowa played during the regular season, including the No. 15 Hawkeyes

The double-elimination postseason tournament will begin today in Ann Arbor, Mich., and overall records have been erased. The only benefit Iowa, 16-4 in the Big Ten, receives from finishing second during the regular season is a No. 2 seed.

The Hawkeyes will open play at 1:30 p.m. CST against the winner of the contest between No. 3 seed Ohio State (14-6) and No. 6 seed Wisconsin (9-11). Iowa swept both during the regular season. Michigan (17-3), Illinois (12-8) and Penn State (9-11) round out the Big Ten Tournament field as the No. 1, No. 4 and No. 5 seeds, respectively.

During the regular season, the Hawkeyes dropped both contests to Illinois, one to Penn State and one to Northwestern, which failed to make postseason play, but Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said her team has no preference in opponent.

"You can't key in on one par-ticular team," she said. "I don't know who's going to win. I think the big thing is to continue keeping it one game at a time and not letting it get bigger than that. It's the same approach that we've built for all season long."

Defending last season's Big Ten championship was also a year-long goal for Iowa, but a 2-1 loss to Northwestern on May 6 cost the Hawkeyes both a share of the conference championship and a chance to host the Big Ten Tournament for the second-straight season.

Michigan seized the regularseason title outright, bringing the tournament to Alumni Field. Ironically, the Wolverines' home field is arguably the site of the best 15 innings of softball Iowa has played all

Behind an energy many Hawkeye players cited as the highest in memory, they swiped both contests April 28-29 and moved into a tie for first with Michigan, until the disappointing loss in the regular season finale on May 6.

"We played well at Michigan," Blevins said. "And we have that in our memory banks.'

Since 1995, either the Wolverines or the Hawkeyes have finished atop the league standings. However, Iowa has never won the Big Ten Tournament crown since the postseason tournament's inception in Alumni Field does not have lights, so the tournament will be played during the day. The first-round begins today at 8:30 a.m. Elimination games will take place in the morning, beginning Friday at 8:30 a.m., with the championship round set for the afternoon starting at 1:30 p.m. Friday. The championship game is slated for 1:30 p.m. (CST) Saturday.

As a double-elimination tournament, the Hawkeyes could lose a game and still fight back for a shot at the final.

"Confidence is key," Blevins said.

And that is one emotion there's plenty of in the Hawkeye dugout.

"This team has come a real long way," senior co-captain Katy Jendrzejewski said. "I have the more confidence in this team than any other in my four years here."

High school changes mind on former Dolphins receiver

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP)- The high school that brought in former Miami Dolphins receiver Mark Duper as an assistant coach abruptly changed course and announced he would not join the staff.

Duper, an admitted cocaine addict in the 1990s, began coaching receivers at Bishop Kenny High School in Jacksonville last Friday. But on Monday, the school issued a brief statement saying he would not be coaching.

'Mr. Duper will not be joining our coaching staff," the statement said. "It is our policy not to discuss personnel issues involving employees or applicants to ensure the rights of everyone involved."

Duper did not immediately return telephone messages Wednesday. Bishop Kenny officials would not comment beyond their Duper blamed a column that ran Sunday in The Florida Times-Union for the school's change of heart. The column detailed some of Duper's past problems, but also portrayed him as a man who had overcome his addiction and started a better life.

'The article came out on Sunday and they fired me on Monday, Duper told the Times-Union. "I think it's clear what happened."

PHOENIX - When it comes to records, there is no room in baseball for common sense.

On Tuesday night against Cincinnati, in one of baseball's most magnificent performances, Randy Johnson became the third pitcher in major league history to strike out 20 in nine Roger Clemens did it twice, Kerry Wood once.

Yet Johnson won't share the record because the game didn't end until the 11th. To his misfortune, his Arizona teammates couldn't score more than a run for him, and he left after nine innings in a 1-1 tie.

The Elias Sports Bureau is the official record-keeper of the game. It's an organization with roots dating to 1917, and its rules are unbending.

The strikeout records are in two categories: a nine-inning game and an extra-inning game. Elias president Seymour Siwoff is sympathetic but says there have to be categories.

"It's discouraging," Siwoff said. "Nobody said life is fair. He didn't even get the win. ... It's a game. It's not an exact science."

Johnson will be in the record book - for the most strikeouts in an extra-inning National League game.

Johnson shrugged off Elias' decision, but he believes he shares the record he has been chasing for years.

"I think I do, so when someone says I don't, well I did what they did in nine," Johnson said Wednesday. "I'm not losing sleep over it. I know what I did. I'm not making a big deal out of it.

It's something I may never come across again, and I'm very fortunate that I was able to do it."

The major league record for an extra-inning game is 21 strikeouts by Tom Cheney, who went all 16 innings - seven more than Johnson — for the Washington Senators against Baltimore on Sept. 12, 1962.

Johnson's 100 mph fastball is nothing compared with the heat Elias is taking for this decision.

Devils win Game 7 minus Niedermayer

■ New Jersey will play either Pittsburgh or Buffalo next round.

> By Tim Canavan Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. - Loaded with heart and talent, the New Jersey Devils didn't need Scott Niedermayer to come back against the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Patrik Elias scored twice and Scott Stevens had a goal and an assist in a four-goal second period that carried the defending Stanley Cup champions to a 5-1 victory in Game 7 of their Eastern Conference semifinal on Wednesday night.

Sergei Nemchinov and John Madden also scored and Martin Brodeur made 15 saves for the Devils, who for the second-straight year staged a major comeback to keep their hopes of a championship alive.

New Jersey will play the winner of the Pittsburgh-Buffalo series, which has its Game 7 tonight, in the conference finals. That best-of-seven series opens Saturday at New Jersey.

In extending the Maple Leafs' cup drought to 34 years, the Devils rallied from a 3-2 series deficit. They won in Toronto 4-2 on Monday and then blew out Toronto before a home crowd that started chanting "67" in the third period, the last year the Maple Leafs won the cup.

The one-sided loss overshadowed how well Toronto played in the hard-fought series. There was an opening-game shutout by Toronto goaltender Curtis Joseph, overtime wins by New Jersey in Games 2 and 3, and a cheap shot by Tie Domi late in Game 4 that caused Niedermayer to suffer a concussion and Domi to be suspended for the playoffs. There was also a controversial gamewinning goal in Game 5. However, the Devils overcame it all, just like they did in overcoming a 3-1 deficit in the conference final against Philadelphia last year.

Elias' line keyed the win in Game 6, and the Devils then dominated in the deciding game despite finding out just hours before that Neidermayer would not be able to play because of post-concussion headaches.

Steve Thomas, who had six goals in the series, even staked Toronto to an early 1-0 lead with a first-period power-play goal with Jason Arnott off for a bad hooking penalty.

Though she'll no longer dress for the Hawkeyes, Consuegra's legend will not soon be forgotten. In her final season, Consuegra bested the career assist record set by Michelle Edwards in 1988, with a new figure of 560.

She also finished the season as the 13th player in Big Ten history to record 1,000 points (1127) and 500 assists. She also led the Big Ten with 116 conference assists and the highest assist to turnover ratio of 1.87.

Consuegra was voted to the All-Conference first-team by the coaches and second-team by the media. She was an Associated Press All-American honorable mention and was nominated to the Academic not done learning yet.' A native of Pensacola, Fla., Evans was a catalyst in turning the Iowa program around from a 14-16 team during coach Steve Alford's first season two years ago into the team that went 23-12 last season. Alford has said Evans provides an intensity that is unrivaled by any other member of the Iowa squad.

"Reggie believes that every loose ball and every rebound belongs to him," Alford said. "I'd like my entire team to have that attitude.'

The belief that every loose ball belonged to the 6-8 forward was a major factor in Evans' 22 double-double games this season, including 10 in a row to begin the season.

In addition to being honored as the 2001 DI Male Athlete of the Year, Evans has a host of other awards to his credit. He was named Big Ten Player of the Week in December 2000 when he led the Hawkeyes to victories over Georgia Tech, Tennessee-Chattanooga and Tulsa. He was also named MVP of the Hawkeye Challenge for scoring 47 points and pulling down 26 rebounds Postseason play provided Evans with another opportunity to shine, as he was named Big Ten Tournament MVP for his part in helping the Hawkeyes win four games in four days. He set a tournament record by pulling down 50 rebounds over the course of the event and was the only Hawkeye to grace the squad.

Others took note of Evans' performance as well, and he was forced to call a press conference in March to dispel rumors he would leave Iowa for the NBA. Luckily for Hawkeye fans, the myths turned out to be just that, and Evans will return for his senior season.

"The state of Iowa has been just lovely to me," he said at the time. "It's been wonderful."

Iverson puts up 54 in victory

■ The Sixers even the series with Toronto.

> By Rob Maaddi Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Allen Iverson didn't need any help this time.

Iverson scored 19 of his career playoff-high 54 points in the fourth quarter as the Philadelphia 76ers evened their second-round series at 1-1 with a 97-92 victory over Toronto Raptors Wednesday night.

Game 3 of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal is Friday night in Toronto.

Iverson, who had 36 points on 11-of-34 shooting in the opener, scored 19 of Philadelphia's final 20 points.

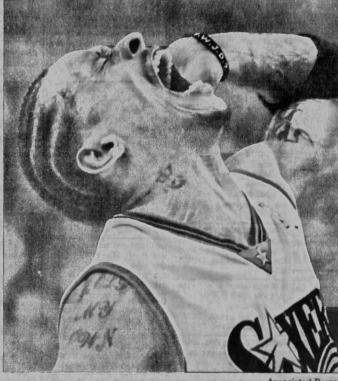

Vince Carter had 28 points and Antonio Davis added 19 for the Raptors.

With the Sixers leading, 89-86, Iverson hit a running jumper, got fouled and completed the three-point play, giving the Sixers a 92-86 lead with 1:16 left.

After Charles Oakley nailed a 3-pointer, Iverson drilled an 18-footer to make it 94-89. Following a miss by the Raptors, Iverson got fouled, cupped his ear, implored the crowd to make more noise and screamed toward the sky. "The Answer" went on a tear. Iverson was 8-of-11 in the second as he brought the Sixers back from a 14-point deficit. He scored 20 of Philadelphia's 28 points in the quarter, including 17 of the last 21.

After the Raptors took their biggest lead, 35-21, on a 15-footer by Oakley that capped another 10-0 run, the Sixers scored 11 straight.

Champion, Iowa women's basketball coach Lisa Bluder is The Daily Iowan's 2001 Coach of the Year.

The one-year turnaround in her first season is the positive story the Hawkeye program wanted, but even Bluder admitted a 21-8 season and Big Ten Tournament title was beyond her own expectations.

Curry's Boilermakers fell to the Hawkeyes twice this past season — a 96-87 loss during the regular season and a 75-50 defeat in the Big Ten Tournament championship game. Purdue went on to the Final Four, finishing runnerup to Notre Dame in the NCAA Tournament.

"It's my first exposure to international basketball," Bluder said. "It's a dream, if not to compete, to coach in the Olympics."

Songs 1993-1998

After the financial failure of alternative summer tours such as Lollapalooza and Horde, music fans have been left with basically two festival options, Ozzfest and the Warped Tour. But Moby is trying to change this. This summer Moby's bringing together a such artists as Paul Oakenfold, the Roots, Outkast, Incubus and Nelly Furtado for the new festival Area: One.

If you haven't heard Moby or have only caught pieces of his recent disc, Play, check out Songs 1993-1998. It's a compilations disc from four albums that Moby released under the Elektra label. Songs isn't as pop-friendly as Play and isn't as hardcore as his excellent early recordings. such as his self-titled debut, but it's still an excellent record. Songs takes you through a wide range of feelings and emotions with its surreal sounds and hypnotizing beats.

If you're planning on going to Area: One this summer, familiarize yourself with Moby by picking up a copy of Songs 1993-1998. (Dan Fletcher)

Survivor Destiny's Child Columbia

"Job security" isn't in the vocabllary of Destiny's Child. After its turnstile approach to hiring and firing band members, a Cleveland radio DJ commented that being a member of Destiny's Child is like participating on the show "Survivor" — it's only a matter of time before you're kicked out. In response to this, lead singer Beyonce Knowles and company named their latest CD Survivor, referring to the persistence of the band members (whoever they are at the current moment). The ironic part of the title Survivor is that on this latest CD, Knowles takes over the spotlight, leaving the other two members (Kelly Rowland and Michelle Williams) wondering if they'll be the next ones to be voted off the Destiny's Child island.

Musically, Survivor is a mature step forward for the young group. Frequent tempo changes and interesting progressions are rare in pop music, but Survivor actually throws in a few of these curve balls to keep the listener entertained. Knowles takes most of the lead vocals, which isn't a problem because her 19-year-old voice is powerfully solid. Like other Destiny's Child albums though, her lyrics are cheesy and predictable. She tries to get the listener to scream out "You go girl," but her ill-fated attempts leave them instead yelling, "Be quiet before you embarrass yourself."

Destiny's Child is a straight-ahead pop group, but it doesn't make any apologizes for it. Survivor is much more interesting and enjoyable then most of its pop counterparts (Vitamin C, Angie Martinez, Janet Jackson etc.), but really, does it take

Trouble in Shangri-La Stevie Nicks

Stevie Nicks has been through a lot. She first reached superstar status as the lead singer for the popular group Fleetwood Mac and then was more commonly in the headlines for her frequent love affairs and multiple drug addictions. Nicks then left Fleetwood Mac in 1981 to pursue a solo career. But after the lackluster performance of her first album, Nicks doubted her personal musical ability. Then after a long talk with good friend Tom Petty in 1996, Nicks was once again motivated to write songs. Her latest release. Trouble in Shangri-La, is a modest success and a step in the right direction for the once-heralded singer.

On Trouble in Shangri-La, Nicks is joined by an army of Lilith Fair veterans to help out with a variety of tasks. Sheryl Crow is the most prominent supporting figure, producing five tracks and adding various guitar, bass and vocal parts on a variety of songs. Sarah McLaughlan also appears a few times, even bringing her whole band along on the Surfacing-esque "Love Is." Unlike Carlos Santana on Supernatural, Nicks is still the main focus of Trouble in Shangri-La. Her nasal voice sounds young, and her songwriting is still fresh and unique. The highlight of the album is Nick's country-twinged duet "Too Far From Texas," which features Dixie Chick Natalie Maines.

Nicks has a voice that listeners usually love or hate. If you have enjoyed her previous solo material or her work with Fleetwood Mac, you won't be disappointed by her latest release, Trouble in Shangri-La.

The Mummy Returns Director: Stephen Sommers Writer: Stephen Sommers Starring: Brendan Fraser, Rachel Weisz, John Hannah and Arnold 125 minutes

Rated: PG-13 The classic Hollywood adventure flick has been resurrected in the form of The Mummy Returns. With a self-reflexive sense of humor and a story line of mythic proportions, the sequel to 1999's actionpacked romp through Egyptian legend returns to its tested formula of modern-day good versus ancient evil. Ten years after vanquishing the nefarious Egyptian priest Imhotep, Rick and Evelyn O'Connell (Brendan Fraser and Rachel Weisz), now married with a son, go snooping through a few more tombs and temples and what do you know? - unleash a fearful force of evil. This time the threat to humanity is the army of Egyptian god Anubis. Then, when a villainous museum curator revives the pesky mummified Imhotep (Arnold Vosloo), the rival forces of ancient evil prove to be plenty for the O'Connells to handle. As advertised, The Mummy Returns its special effects very ly by Fraser. Whether dodging the pincers of the mammoth Scorpion King or saving his son from a tribe of undead spear-wielding, natives, Fraser's brawny archeologist always has time to deadpan an understated assessment of the situation ("This is not looking good"). This seemingly sophomoric dialogue is meant to keep the mood light. The Mummy Returns has no interest in exploration the inner motivations of its characters. As long as the audience understands that Rick is the tough one and Evelyn is the smart one, these archetypes can get on with fighting evil.

Like the classic adventure movies of old, The Mummy Returns seeks to entertain, not enlighten. Frenetic action sequences such as Evelyn's swashbuckling duel against Imhotep's evil mistress and the good guys' escape from a gang of ghouls aboard a speeding doubledecker bus keep the film moving from one spectacle to the next.

Granted, The Mummy Returns is not a sensational film. But by embracing its middlebrow status, the film invites you to forget your cynicism and get caught up in the fantasy.

By Tracy Nemitz The Daily Iowan

When one contemplates all the forces governing life, a few obvious things come to mind: The government sets the laws we live under, the university administration sets the academic standards we follow, and the seasons often determine our attire as well as our levels of activity. Often, we overlook the one force society has implemented that dictates all of the aforementioned: the force of

"Without an agreed-upon standard of time, we cannot mark or measure change, Clark Blaise writes in his newest historical nonfiction book, Time Lord: Sir Sandford Fleming and the Creation of Standard Time. "Even when we leave society behind, our very sanity depends on periodicities. What day is it? How long have I been here?"

How did Standard Time come to be? Standard Time is a man-made convention, so who invented it? What influence has Standard Time had on our society? What is the future of Standard Time?

Blaise, the former head of the UI International Writing Program, tackles all of these questions in his intriguing book, which tells the story of surveyor and the inventor of Standard Time. Prior to 1884, time was an arbitrary measure determined by individual locations. Three towns, located next to one another, for example, would have completely different time zones. What Fleming did was mathematically and geographically divide the world into 24 working time zones, the Standard Time zones we use today. Yet for this major accomplishment, few have ever heard of Fleming.

"This is partially because Fleming was Canadian, and he did not have great constituents out pushing his name," Blaise said. "More importantly, he was an engineer. It was his job to make the path smooth for others to tread on. He was modest; he didn't seek credit for what he

Because Fleming is not a celebrated historical figure, Blaise had to research a great deal of his story from scratch.

"I spent months studying Fleming's papers, his letters and his books in order to write this book," Blaise said.

He also explored the many vays time has influenced our lives and how, because it is often so deeply ingrained in our psyche, we fail to recognize its presence. Included in his discussion are technology, sci-

Fleming, a Canadian engineer, ence, art and religion.

"My agenda was to make people aware of Standard Time and how it changed culture and history," Blaise said. "Thoughts of Standard Time are often limited to something the railroads did. But it led to science, social science, literature and art."

Among other examples, Blaise includes the way such writers as James Joyce, Virginia Woolf, Ernest Hemingway and Gertrude Stein came to manipulate time in their narratives and consequently created one of the defining characteristics of literary modernism.

"Modernism is about the cutting and faceting of time, breaking up of continuity, in favor of emphatic shards, away from tion," Blaise writes in Time Lord Before Standard Time, people adopted a passive role in nature and toward abstractheir relationship with the phenomenon, he said.

"People assumed (time) came from God, it flowed like a river past life, and people had no control of it," he said. "Hindu time, for example, is received as a vision of God. The day starts at sunrise; you can't change that."

Since Fleming's invention, Blaise said, people have had more control over time.

"Ever since then, we have been able to refine it, to manipulate it," he said. "We can save time, calculate profit, all sorts of things. The feeling we can control it makes all things pos-

Blaise also speculates about the future of Standard Time, which he feels will be replaced soon by what Fleming dubbed Universal Time, time "free of any geographical determinant."

Life is moving at such a speed that it reaches out of Standard Time zones," Blaise said, "I, for example, am living in Pacific time, yet it is more important to me to know what time it is in London or Tokyo. Somehow, we will come to an arrangement in which we operate on a universal time and reserve local time for local activities."

The Bellrays

9 p.m. today

Where:

Gabe's, 330 E.

Washington St.

In-your-face band the BellRays will play in Iowa City tonight.

> By Becca Sutlive The Daily Iowan

There are a number of subjects one should avoid when talking with Lisa Kekaula, the woman behind the almighty, earth-shattering set of pipes that front L.A. punk/soul rockers the BellRays. To start with, there are no such things as goals or visions; to her, no such distinctions exist. As for influences, Kekaula simply calls these "fodder." And don't even try to ask her to describe her band's

"I would never describe the BellRays' sound," Kekaula said. "I'm so sick of people describing music. It's like trying to describe a hamburger — just take a fing bite of the thing. If you want to know what they sound like, come out to a show or buy a CD; make up your own mind by listening to it yourself."

Even describing the group by comparisons is taboo. Reviewers have likened Kekaula's vocals to those of singers so renowned.

many would tote them around in an expensive leather portfolio so as not to tarnish them. But not Kekaula. She says when writers and critics make these flattering comparisons, they're just "dumbing down."

"They should try to use their own form instead of regurgitating someone else's line," she said. "It's not valid when it comes from evervone."

Furthermore, don't ask where the group is at this stage in its career. This four-piece, selfdescribed "maximum rock 'n' soul" outfit is simply 10 years into its collective life. Period.

Simply put, the BellRays is an abrasive, defiant, gritty, rock 'n' roll in the truest sense of the term, band. It is a power chordripping gang fronted by Kekaula's large and in-charge vocals, pioneers of the so-called "soul punk revolution."

Because this phrase is inscribed inside the sleeve of the group's 1998 release, Let It Blast, one might think this "revolution" would be a safe area to discuss. Yet, as it seems natural for all preconceived notions, ideas and questions, for that matter, she has issues with this categorization as well.

"It shouldn't even be called a revolution," she said. "Punk bands came from a soul base to begin with; it was never a divorcing of punk from soul."

Kekaula will confirm the band's on-stage mentality. "We really are ready to kick somebody's ass at any moment when we're on stage," she warned. 'We're there to work. It's not about acting like rock stars, it's about being able to rock."

The BellRays' pending assault on Iowa City tonight will put it near the last leg of a six-week nationwide tour in support of its latest album, Grand Fury (Uppercut Records). Technically, Grand Fury is the BellRays' fourth full-length album. The first two, recorded before 1995, were released on cassette only and reached few listeners outside of a 60mile radius of the band's true home in Riverside, Calif., Kekaula said. But Let It Blast, released on the group's label, Gesture, sparked critics' interest and fueled a buzz that has since surrounded the the group. Grand Fury carries on the BellRays' guitar-fueled, lyrically in-your-face music. Recorded on eight track, the band progressed from the six tracks it used for Let It Blast but recorded the album in its own small practice space with no outside financial back-

"We're not just trying to be 'lo-fi,'" Kekaula said. "This is all we can afford."

As the American radio audience has been deemed not-ready for the BellRays, the band remains dependent on live shows and word-of-mouth advertising.

'Radio's an expensive game,' Kekaula said. "It's an area I can't afford to participate in; we're more at the grassroots level,

And so the BellRays will continue its grassroots effort tonight but be advised.

"Get ready, get ready, get ready," Kekaula said. "And be ready to show something and be a part of something. You can't just stand in a corner in the back. We ain't goin' down like that."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your quick wit will win you favors. Get involved in activities that present you with a challenge. It's time to pick up where you left off and finish those projects on the back burner. Good luck will be yours if you play your cards right.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Infatuations are confusing. Don't become involved in more than one relationship at a time. Choose your partner carefully. Luck is on your side. Take your time and don't let anyone pressure you. Go ahead and make that extra effort this week.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your financial future is looking brighter. A better position may mean a residential move, but you mustn't make the decision by yourself. The rest of your family may not be so eager to leave.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Present your ideas at work. Your concept for making your job more efficient will go over well with the boss. Co-workers will appreciate the work you've done and help you to implement your LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Selfimprovement projects will turn out well. Sign up for courses or join fitness clubs that offer a coed atmosphere. You can get into shape and meet interesting people at the same time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Hold on to what you've got. This is no time to gamble on personal investments. Emotional upset will disrupt your domestic scene if you've neglected your household duties. It is time to be the peacekeeper that you're known as. by Eugenia Last LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get out with friends. Old romantic interests may try to re-enter your life. Luck is on your side. Don't exaggerate or leave work unfinished. Minor mishaps will result if you aren't cautious. It is time to relax and let yourself go a little bit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Help the underdog. You may want to volunteer your time to a group you believe in. New romantic connections can be made while assisting those in need. Keep an eye out for a new friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You'll be emotional. Try to understand your lover's reason for being upset. You may be at fault for a situation that you're blaming someone else for. You'll end up paying the price. But keep your chin up, get some fresh air, and enjoy yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't be too eager to let others know how you feel or what you're up to. Your anger will be hard to contain if co-workers or employers continue to take you for granted. Work hard, but play hard AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't spend money in hopes that you'll make yourself feel better. Your depression is due to a lack of funds, and an added bill will only contribute to your misery in the long run. Try other avenues of self-gratification instead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Relatives and children will cost you dearly if you give in to their demands. Don't trust others with your possessions. It is wise to pass on lavish forms of entertainment. Luck is on your side.
