Alford, UI ink multi-year new deal

■ The university will guarantee the basketball coach $900,000 per year through 2008-09.

By Jeremy Schnitker
The Daily Iowan

UI officials announced Monday that Iowa basketball coach Steve Alford signed a new five-year contract extension worth a guaranteed $900,000 annually.

Alford and the university had agreed on the contract, which will run through the 2008-09 season, in late March.

"Both sides wanted to make sure all the t's were crossed and the i's dotted," Alford said in a press release. "I'm very happy, and I think the administration is happy."

This signing comes two and a half months after Iowa won its first-ever Big Ten Tournament title and advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament. Iowa finished the 2000-01 season with a 23-11 record. Alford's record in two years at Iowa is 37-28.

University General Counsel Mark Schantz said Iowa wanted to extend Alford's contract to both recognize him for his good performance and keep recruits confident that he will be around for years to come.

"If you are pleased with things, you want to have a contract out far enough that recruits are confident he will still be coaching," he said. "It's fairly common for coaches to get contracts for longer terms."

This signing comes in the wake of massive university cuts in state funding that will take $18.7 million from the school's budget. Schantz said Alford's pay increase

Unrestricted donations pour in to UI

■ The flexible donations fall far short of the $18 million in lost state funding.

By Ryan Foley
The Daily Iowan

A recent push by the UI Foundation to persuade more donors to give unrestricted money to the university has paid off, foundation President Michael New said Monday.

But those unrestricted donations — which more than doubled during 2000 — could never make up for the $18.7 million the university lost in state funding this year, officials say.

The amount of money that poured into the unrestricted Iowa Impact Fund still only made up approximately $2 million of the record $65.4 million in outright gifts the university's fund-raising arm brought in last year. The more than 52,000 donors earmarked the rest for specific projects and departments.

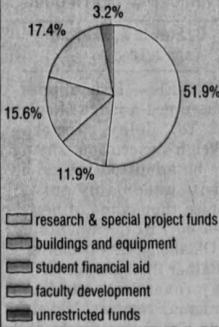

University President Mary Sue Coleman, along with other administrators, doles out the unrestricted funds for projects as necessary. These funds have the most effect on the university, officials say, because they provide the greatest flexibility.

In 1998, only 1.3 percent of outright gifts the foundation received were for unrestricted use. In 1999, the number slowly climbed to 1.5 percent and then jumped to 3.2 percent in 2000.

"We made a decision a year or two ago to emphasize getting more unrestricted funds — before we even knew about the state budget cuts — because they are very important to the university," said New, who has headed the foundation since 1998.

Here's where the $65.4 million in donations the UI Foundation raised in 2000 went:

"But we could probably double our amount of our overall donations, and it would still not address state budget cuts," he said.

Getting unrestricted funds does help, if only slightly, and the university is aggressively seeking these funds. The foundation's Web site, www.uiowafoundation.org, lists the impact fund at the top of places to donate and points out that these funds are of "maximum impact" and "especially valuable."

The foundation puts an asterisk on the names of those who gave unrestricted money in their annual

City may snatch up East Side farmland

■ Annexing 95 acres near Court Street could lead to a new housing development.

By Casey Wagner
The Daily Iowan

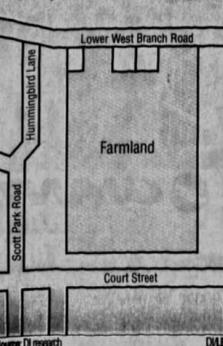

A meeting of the Iowa City Planning and Zoning Commission Monday night drew a small crowd curious about plans for the annexation and rezoning of 95 acres of farmland for the development of single-family housing on the city's East Side.

The Southgate Development Co. applied for the voluntary annexation and rezoning of the land, located along Court Street east of Scott Boulevard, in early March, requesting that the land be rezoned to accommodate low- and medium-density housing. The annexation and rezoning would mean that the land would be connected to city water and sewer lines for future development.

"As a part of the city, [the area] has a better chance of being developed," said Robert Miklo, the city's senior plan-

UI looks ahead to a long, hot summer

■ The university will enact aggressive energy measures this summer.

By Libby Tucker
The Daily Iowan

Things could heat up in nearly 50 campus buildings this summer, when the UI decides which will and will not have air conditioning as part of the cost-saving energy-curtailment program.

For the first summer ever, university officials said, the cutback will affect nearly every building on campus as the school strives to deal with rising fuel costs and budget cuts. The energy-curtailment plan is included in the university's contract with MidAmerican Energy Co. so that it can receive electricity at a lower rate, saving the school approximately $450,000 annually.

The biggest factor in deciding whether to enact the curtailment is the demand for energy, said Marge Burke, the

WASHINGTON — Texas jurors who sentenced a men-

The ruling overturned the death sentence of Johnny Paul Penry. His lawyers say he has the mind of a 7-year-old and likes to play with coloring books.

AIDS outlook better 20 years later

■ The life expectancy for HIV-positive patients has improved dramatically.

By Libby Tucker
The Daily Iowan

Today marks the 20th anniversary of the day the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention documented the first three cases of AIDS in the United States. While the incidence of the disease has grown to become an international health crisis, with approximately 900,000 people infected in the United States alone, patients diagnosed with HIV today have more hope for a longer life than they did in 1981.

Therapy was nonexistent until the development of the first drug treatment, AZT, in 1987. Even then, the disease could only be delayed one to two years. With the 1996 development of antiviral treatments, often administered in groups of three known as "drug cocktails," the life expectancy of patients has risen dramatically.

"Far more than half are still alive six years later," said Jack Stapleton, the director of the UI Levitt Center for Viral Pathogenesis and Disease.

Six years ago, AIDS was the leading cause of death among men ages 25-44. Today, it's "not even in the top 10," he said.

Stapleton's HIV treatment clinic, which opened in 1988, is the largest and oldest in Iowa. The clinic tests new drugs, vaccines, and approaches to treating HIV.

The disease has changed "dramatically" in the past 20 years, he said. Complications, such as pneumonia, that are a result of a weakened immune system in HIV patients have almost disappeared, causing the clinic's work to focus almost solely on attacking the system in HIV patients have almost disappeared, causing the clinic's work to focus almost solely on attacking the virus that causes AIDS.

The improved treatments for the disease have also lightened the atmosphere of the clinic. It now has more patients, who are healthier and living longer.

Kristine Davis, a nurse practitioner who has been with the clinic since it opened, said that initially, there were many patients in home-intravenous therapy, being hospitalized, or in hospice care. Today, it is rare that people are so ill, she said. Instead, the focus is on health maintenance with a complicated and costly regimen of medications.

However, improved treatment of the disease does not mean that the problem has been solved.

Johnson County has the highest number of AIDS patients per capita in the state, according to a study by the CDC, which is why the Iowa City-based nonprofit group Iowa Center for AIDS Resources and Education is working hard to prevent the further spread of the deadly virus. For ICARE, this means educating the target groups most likely to be infected with HIV — teens, women, and minorities.

This spring, ICARE organized a new group of peer educators called the Youth TEC Team, or Teens Educating the Community. The group of 20 area high-school students will train with ICARE to teach other high-school students about HIV and AIDS.

ICARE's philosophy is that the best defense against HIV and AIDS is prevention, and the best prevention is an educated public.

U.S. urges no delay in McVeigh death

■ Prosecutors say the missing FBI documents do not affect McVeigh's guilt.

By Steven K. Paulson
Associated Press

DENVER — Federal prosecutors urged a judge Monday not to delay Timothy McVeigh's execution, saying that he admitted the crime and is "undeniably guilty" despite thousands of newly released FBI documents on the Oklahoma City bombing.

"Rather than answer for his own proven and admitted murderous conduct, McVeigh would like to put the federal government on trial," prosecutor Sean Connelly said in court papers.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch will hear arguments Wednesday on McVeigh's request to postpone his June 11 execution. The judge sealed a portion of the government's filing.

McVeigh has asserted that the government committed a "fraud upon the court" by failing to turn over nearly 4,500 pages of FBI material on the bombing before his 1997 trial. McVeigh asked for a postponement to see if the documents offer grounds for seeking a new trial and to force the government to explain its failure to turn over the material.

In a strongly worded response, Connelly argued that the material has no bearing on McVeigh's conviction and death sentence because he confessed in a book and said he and co-conspirator Terry Nichols acted alone.

"Timothy McVeigh does not and could not suggest he is actually innocent of the charges of which the jury convicted him," Connelly said. "He does not and could not suggest the death penalty is unwarranted for his exceptionally aggravated crimes."

McVeigh has identified nine items he claims could have helped his defense, but none prove his innocence, Connelly said. Under the anti-terrorism law under which McVeigh was convicted, he cannot receive a new trial unless he has strong evidence of his innocence, the prosecutor said.

"McVeigh is undeniably guilty, and there is no case in which the death sentence can be more appropriate than this one," Connelly said.

McVeigh was convicted of murder and sentenced to die for the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which killed 168 people and injured hundreds more.

McVeigh, who is at the federal prison in Terre Haute, Ind., had dropped all appeals, and he was set for lethal injection on May 16. But six days before, the Justice Department began turning over more than 4,400 pages and 11 CDs of FBI material that should have been given to McVeigh's defense.

Defense attorney Richard Burr said last week that McVeigh decided to seek a stay because he "has been deeply concerned about the overreaching of federal law-enforcement authorities," and he thinks the last-minute disclosure of the documents overrides his earlier decision not to fight execution.

New math + I.C. schools = debate

■ Local parents are concerned about a new "problem-solving" mathematics program.

By Sara C. Konrad
The Daily Iowan

An open forum concerning a curriculum change in Iowa City junior-high schools mathematics sparked a heated debate Monday night among teachers and parents that ran an hour over the time allotted.

Parents raised questions about what they termed their lack of freedom to choose between the current, more traditional program and Connected Math, a new program being tested in local pilot programs.

"If we switch to Connected Math, the traditional program will die off by attrition," said Tami Bryk, a parent. "This is a diverse enough School District that we should be able to offer both programs."

The new program, in the final stages of implementation, focuses on encouraging each student to develop individual solutions while justifying and explaining ideas instead of simply teaching formulae. Proponents of the program believe it is positive to teach students how to understand concepts rather than have them simply learn and memorize. Connected Math features problem-oriented teaching that employs three steps: launching, exploring, and summarizing.

Opponents of the program say it is a step back from the more traditional approach to teaching math.

Sarah Sobocinski, a sixth-grade teacher at Coralville Central School, believes that the traditional approach is too focused on the textbook.

"This program makes teachers work," she said. "It forces them to draw from different resources to create a program that works in the classroom."

In response to audience concerns about the teacher training that would be necessary to begin the new program, Sobocinski said, "We don't need 40 hours of training for this program. We need to take it to the kids to find out what works."

Parents also raised questions about how teachers cover the current material. Several opponents of Connected Math proposed that teachers cover the traditional program more thoroughly. Many times teachers are not able to get through the entire textbook, opponents said.

"After three years of Core-Plus math, many students arrive at college unable to do the math in basic chemistry, biology, and business courses," said Paul Muhly, the chairman of the UI mathematics department. "If teachers could get through the entire textbook that is in place now, the students would be prepared."

Connected Math was among several programs considered by a committee in 1998 before the district approved the curriculum change in the spring of 2000. A basic requirement for the program was that it be a National Council of Teachers of Mathematics Standards Based Material. In addition to receiving support from the council, Connected Math is included on the U.S. Department of Education list of exemplary math programs.

If implemented, the program will be phased into the junior highs at the sixth-grade level this fall, seventh-grade level in 2002, and the eighth-grade level in 2003.

"We have a lot to learn about sharing new information with a larger group such as parents," said Bill Dutton, the director of curriculum for the School District.

Gaza battle threatens cease-fire

■ As the gun battle rages, Hamas says it will join Yasser Arafat's proposed cease-fire.

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A gun battle raged in the Gaza Strip Monday, threatening a fragile cease-fire, as Israelis — anguished by deadly terrorist bombings — debated creating a buffer zone to ward off Palestinian attacks.

The Palestinian militant group Hamas, meanwhile, said it would join the cease-fire declared by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, and it pledged to stop attacks in Israel as of midnight (4 p.m. CDT).

A statement by Hamas and Arafat's Fatah group said Israel would be given a chance to show that it has stopped its policy of assassinations and destruction.

Hamas took responsibility for a suicide bomb attack on June 1 that killed 20 young Israelis in front of a Tel Aviv disco, and its compliance with Arafat's cease-fire call is seen as vital to its success. However, the other violent militant group, the Islamic Jihad, was not at the meeting in which the statement on the cease-fire was issued.

West Bank's powerful security chief Jibril Rajoub pledged a "100 percent effort" Monday to enforce a cease-fire to end eight months of fighting.

Diplomatic efforts persisted, meanwhile, to end the fighting that has killed hundreds and paralyzed the decade-long effort to bring peace to the Holy Land.

Secretary of State Colin Powell urged Arafat in a telephone conversation to arrest those responsible for the nightclub bombing, leaning on the Palestinian leader to go beyond his offer of a cease-fire, said a U.S. official, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

Trying to build on Monday's reduced violence, Powell also telephoned Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon to urge him to refrain from retaliation.

"We feel that we've seen statements that are encouraging; we've seen instructions that are encouraging," said State Department spokesman Richard Boucher. "We need to see further efforts, and we need to see a further reduction in the violence to make it a real cease-fire and to make it last."

Eighteen Palestinians were injured Monday in Gaza, four critically, hospital officials said. Two were shot in the head. One Israeli officer and two soldiers were slightly injured, the army said.

Vigil in Hong Kong marks Tiananmen

■ Thousands gather to protest the Chinese army's 1989 massacre of demonstrators.

By Margaret Wong
Associated Press

HONG KONG — Hong Kong's chief executive praised China's leaders Monday as the most enlightened in the country's history, even as more than 20,000 people held a candlelight vigil to recall Beijing's military massacre of pro-democracy protesters on Tiananmen Square 12 years ago.

A sea of flickering candles lit up Hong Kong's Victoria Park Monday night as crowds sat on a grassy field and a soccer pitch around a stage bedecked with banners reading, "Educate the next generation, pass on the baton of democracy."

Witnesses said more than 20,000 people were present, though organizers claimed there were more than 40,000. Police did not give a figure.

Earlier, Chief Executive Tung Chee-hwa defended Chinese leaders against criticism of their suppression of public dissent in a speech he made to the World Newspaper Association meeting here.

Speaking before Tung, association President Roger Parkinson praised Hong Kong's civil liberties, guaranteed under a "one-country, two-systems" arrangement that protects Hong Kong's capitalist, Western-style freedoms. But Parkinson lambasted the Chinese government for its limits on public dissent.

In his speech, Tung did not refer directly to the June 4, 1989, crushing of the Tiananmen demonstrators or to Chinese limits on the media, assembly, and use of the Internet. But he said he had "noticed the comments" made by Parkinson.

"I do not speak for China," Tung said. "But I'm proud and I'm patriotic."

"Indeed, today China is far more open, far more stable, and far more prosperous than at any time in her recent history," he said. "You should appreciate that the current leadership in China is one of the most enlightened and progressive in our history."

Thousands of people were killed when tanks and troops crushed the student-led Tiananmen demonstrations.

The Chinese government says the demonstrations were an attempt to overthrow it and that the military crackdown was justified.

But people in Hong Kong saw the incident differently. They have not hesitated to stage anti-Beijing protests as the territory enjoys a high degree of autonomy following its return to Chinese sovereignty in 1997.

"I wept when I witnessed the massacre on TV. I fully support the democratic movement here and wish that one day, the verdict on June 4 can be reversed," said 69-year-old Sze Pak-yin, who fled mainland China in 1950 to seek opportunity in Hong Kong.

Funeral wreaths at the park surrounded a 10-foot-tall monument that read: "Democracy martyrs shall never die," while black banners reading "End the one-party dictatorship" and "Reverse the verdict on June 4" fluttered in the air.

The protesters called on Beijing to "end one-party rule" and sang patriotic songs.

Six teen-agers ignited a torch on the stage to symbolize that young people will continue fighting for a democratic China.

The protest was organized by the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements of China, which is branded as "subversive" by Beijing.

"We want to let them (the teen-agers) understand the most vigorous event in the history of modern China and that many lives have been sacrificed in the fight for democracy," said Szeto Wah, a lawmaker and the chairman of the alliance.

In Beijing, security was noticeably increased on Tiananmen Square Monday. Police vans usually in place to pick up protesters from the banned Falun Gong spiritual movement had withdrawn to the south of the giant plaza. Police occasionally checked bags and identification cards.

Tough task awaits Peru's new leader

■ "Indian with a cause" Alejandro Toledo faces a stagnant economy and the vestiges of racism.

By Rick Vecchio
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — Peru's president-elect was swept to power largely by the poor, Indian majority. Now Alejandro Toledo faces the daunting task of not letting them down in one of South America's most troubled nations.

The self-styled "Indian with a cause" must battle a four-year recession, deliver jobs and higher wages in a nation mired in poverty, and root out the remnants of corruption left by the previous government.

Toledo, 55, became Peru's first freely elected president of Indian descent Sunday, when he defeated former President Alan Garcia in an election that international observers described as a model for the region. With 89 percent of the vote counted Monday, Toledo had 52 percent to Garcia's 48 percent.

"In Peru, there exists profound racism under the surface," Toledo said on cable news station Canal N, his first interview since his victory. "For many, it is difficult to accept the possibility, now consummated, that a person of my ethnic extraction and background could be president of Peru."

He said that within 100 days of taking office, he would implement "an aggressive program to reactivate the productive capacity of the economy."

PAY ATTENTION TO W., NOT HIS DAUGHTER ...

Jenna's drinking isn't news

President Bush's teen-age daughters, Barbara and Jenna, were cited for misdemeanor alcohol offenses on May 31. Jenna Bush, in her second legal infraction in the past two months, was ticketed for attempting to purchase a drink in a restaurant with false identification. Her twin sister was also ticketed for possession of alcohol by a minor.

Jenna and Barbara, students at the University of Texas and Yale respectively, are 19 years old. Texas law prohibits anyone under 21 from consuming alcohol.

Ironically, the "zero tolerance" under which the twins were cited was signed into law by President Bush while he was the governor of Texas. The law allows authorities to suspend the driver's licenses of minors convicted of alcohol-related offenses, with the suspension lasting up to 30 days. Fines upward of $2,000 and jail time may ensue for third and subsequent offenses.

The media should be concentrating on the politics of George W. Bush and leave the gossip to tabloid magazines.

Jenna Bush pleaded no contest recently to a charge of possession of alcohol by a minor and was ordered to perform eight hours of community service and attend a six-hour alcohol awareness course. Naturally, the incidents have been thoroughly covered by numerous media organizations.

Noelia Rodriguez, a spokeswoman for Laura Bush, told the Associated Press that both the twins are private citizens and the matter belongs within the family.

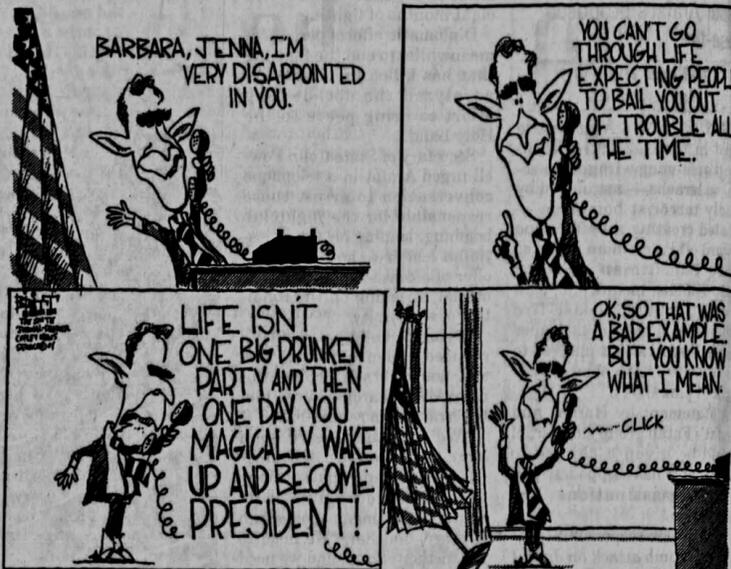

Nineteen-year-olds on college campuses around the country drink every weekend — every day in certain cases. According to Harvard Medical School studies, 44 percent of students engage in binge drinking. So, the president's daughters are part of the masses of "average" college students. Imagine that.

Susan Ford Bales, the daughter of former President Gerald Ford, told Larry King that the media should leave the Bush twins alone. After all, they are not the leaders of the free world.

The president's daughters must be given the opportunity to grow up. The women did not ask to be hurled into the limelight. As well they should, the president and first lady have declined to comment on the present situation. The White House may be a minefield set up by American media, but the women don't even inhabit the mansion. The public should not expect the first daughters to be the exemplification of perfect. The media should be concentrating on the politics and decisions of George W. Bush and leave the gossip to tabloid magazines.

Zero proof for zero tolerance

Perhaps the most important part of growing up is making mistakes and learning from them. It is only by acting and studying the results of our actions that we come to understand both how the world works and what our place in it.

Professor Experience is without a doubt our most essential instructor.

I knew a young man in high school who made a poor decision and luckily was allowed to learn from his mistake. An aspiring hunter, he brought a small crossbow he'd recently received as a birthday gift from his father to school to show his aspiring-hunter buddies. It stayed in his locker all day, except for a single five-minute period between classes during which he showed it to his friends.

However, a student who didn't know him also saw the weapon and reported it to school authorities. By the end of the day, he'd been suspended for a few days — a tough-but-fair punishment for a stupid mistake. After paying his penance, the young man returned to school, avoided any further run-ins with the school's rules, graduated, and is now a successful college student on his way to a business degree.

This young fellow was extremely lucky. It was his fortune to grow up in a school district that understood the importance of learning from one's mistakes. Were he a student in a district touting a "zero-tolerance" discipline policy, he most likely would not have been allowed to return to school and would probably not be on the road to success he currently travels — simply because he was excited about a birthday gift.

Zero-tolerance disciplinary policies are part of the legacy of Ronald Reagan's presidency. His attorney general, Edwin Meese, popularized the term in the early days of the failed War on Drugs. While it originally referred to the government's policy of seizing property regardless of how small the amount of drugs involved was, it has since morphed into a misguided and damaging educational-discipline philosophy. In essence, any student committing a "substantial" infraction is to be punished severely, usually by extended suspensions or expulsion.

Beyond the obvious problems with such policies ("substantial" is a subjective qualification, leading to the suspension of 5-year-olds for kissing and of teenagers for bringing cough drops to school), a recent study from the Safe and Responsive Schools Project of Indiana University's School of Education found that zero-tolerance policies simply do not accomplish the goals delineated for them. Furthermore, such policies actually produce ill effects and tend to be somewhat racially biased in the punishments they hand down.

IU Professor Russell Skiba's project reviewed schools' use of zero-tolerance disciplinary policies since their inception in the 1980s. He reported that the suspensions and expulsions given out lead to increased dropout rates and other negative consequences and that black students consistently receive such punishments disproportionately. In addition, he found that students lower in socioeconomic status are more likely to receive zero-tolerance punishments, though socio-economic status alone does not account for the racial difference in punishments. Skiba also reported that there is no evidence that black students were deviant more than were white students.

Such findings are especially distressing, given the general plight of blacks in this country. One's level of education provides the best prediction of one's future economic status and chance of general success later in life. Increasing the dropout rate of black students through zero-tolerance policies only decreases the group's already lower life chances relative to whites.

Independent of the displayed racial disparities in the implementation of such policies, zero-tolerance discipline hurts all students. Skiba's report found that suspension and expulsion have done nothing to make schools safer or to improve students' behavior. Instead, he recommends that school districts simply use common sense: They should replace the misguided one-size-fits-all punishments with graduated systems of consequences in which punishments fit offenses; they should also expand school options for dealing with misbehavior. Of course, such substitutions would require a great deal more money to pay for increased staff and facilities than does simply sending deviant students home. But if taxpayers want the best education for their children, they must be willing to pay for it.

"Zero tolerance is a political response, not an educationally sound solution," said Skiba in a recent Drug Reform Coordination Network article. "It sounds impressive to say that we're taking a tough stand against misbehavior, but the data say it simply hasn't been effective in improving student behavior or ensuring school safety."

Now, if we can only get politicians to listen to the facts ...

THE TIANANMEN SQUARE MASSACRE, 12 YEARS LATER ...

Democracy in China still on hold

Twelve years ago, on June 4, 1989, thousands of students were peacefully protesting on Tiananmen Square in Beijing. They were calling for democracy and increased freedom throughout their nation. In response to these protests, the Chinese government brutally cracked down with tanks and soldiers. No one knows how many students were killed in the ensuing massacre, but many estimates put the number in the thousands. Worst of all, as far as progress is concerned, these students died for nothing.

Today, democracy is still unattainable in China. The Communist Party still rules with an iron fist, and its ruthlessness is especially visible during the Tiananmen anniversary. For the past week, party officials were busy intimidating and imprisoning anyone who was brave enough to mention Tiananmen Square. Imagine not only having brothers or sisters slaughtered but being told by the government that you cannot commemorate them.

China has assumed its place as a world power. Economically, it rivals the United States and other industrial nations. Agriculturally, China is a major exporter of corn and silk. However, when it comes to human rights, the Chinese government is still uncompromising and harsh. The Communist Party still stifles free speech and freedom of the press. Political dissidents are routinely rounded up and imprisoned. Outspoken critics are silenced. These are not the actions of a civilized government; these are the actions of an evil oligarchy.

Because it is illegal to commemorate the Tiananmen Square massacre in China, it falls to the rest of the world to remember the bravery of the young students. They recognized the inherent evil in any government that oppresses its own citizens, and they attempted to change things. These revolutionaries were murdered, and now their government wants to erase even the memory of their sacrifice.

From 'Gilligan' to unadorned truth

Novelist and essayist Tony Earley's latest work explores pop culture and family.

By Tracy Nemitz
The Daily Iowan

Most of us know the story: a lovely lady, who was bringing up three very lovely girls, met a man named Brady, who was busy with three boys of his own, and that's the way they all became the Brady Bunch.

Fast-forward to the present, when the Brady Bunch are still every bit as popular and influential in American culture. For author Tony Earley, the Bradys have, at different times in his life, represented various things. Jan was his first crush. He, like the TV family, grew up in a split-level ranch house. And, most importantly, the man he is today is largely a result of two separate forces colliding and fusing together: those of conventional and pop culture values.

Earley explores these roots in his newest book, a collection of creative nonfiction stories, Somehow Form a Family: Stories That are Mostly True, which he will read from at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., at 8 p.m. today.

"I wanted to accurately represent my life as a child of an Appalachian farming family as well as a child of TV culture," he said. "I go around telling anyone who will listen that I am from the country, but deep down I know it is a lie. I grew up on Gilligan's Island, in Mayberry — I'm not sure where."

Like all great TV shows, Earley is able to immerse his audiences in a world separate from their own — a world in which they are running with Earley down the hallway of his grandparents' house, or later, standing with him in a New Orleans theater, waiting and hoping for the appearance of a ghost.

Similar to his novel Jim the Boy, the writing style of Somehow Form a Family is beautifully simple and honest. Earley attributes this largely to the four years he worked as a reporter.

"Telling stories as succinctly as possible for those four years was a huge help," he said. "It was my biggest writing influence."

After reflecting on his life through the "mostly true" stories he compiled, Earley feels that in the struggle between his TV and family values, one side has now taken the upper hand.

"At one time, I saw myself as Mr. Contemporary," he said. "But now, that is decreasingly so. I have come to realize I am more influenced by family and community than pop culture."

Writing essays for his latest book also made him examine his memories to see which ones were true and which had become distorted over time.

"While it is necessary for our sanity to keep the line between fiction and nonfiction clearly drawn, that particular boundary, as with the boundaries of nations, is more arbitrary than we might care to think," Earley said.

"The personal essayist recounting a conversation he participated in 25 years ago and the short-story writer making up a conversation between fictional characters are basically engaged in the same exercise."

Best known for Jim the Boy, Earley said writing fiction and nonfiction is very similar. Yet in Somehow Form a Family, he felt a special sense of responsibility towards himself and his relatives, having opened up their personal lives to the public.

"There wasn't any thought that I was invading the privacy of myself or my family," he said. "I thought that if I was fair and accurate, things would be OK. I wanted to avoid sentimentality, to tell the truth in as an unadorned fashion as possible."

Producers blitzkrieg Tonys

Mel Brooks' madcap musical spoofing Hitler on Broadway sets Tony record.

By Mark Evans
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Say goodbye, Dolly!

The Producers, Mel Brooks' musical comedy about two showmen scheming to get rich by staging a theatrical flop about Nazis, shattered a Broadway record Sunday when it won 12 Tony Awards.

Sweeping every category in which it was nominated, including best musical, it topped the 10 Tonys that Hello, Dolly! won in 1964.

David Auburn's Proof, which earlier this year won the Pulitzer Prize for drama, won three awards, including best play.

But Sunday was Brooks' night. In between one-liners, he giddily found time to thank just about everyone for his musical juggernaut: cast, crew, supporters, and family among them.

He also cracked, "I want to thank Hitler — for being such a funny guy on stage."

With a torrent of gushing reviews and record box-office numbers, The Producers was an odds-on favorite to dominate the Tonys. And in quick succession Sunday, it swept a half-dozen of the coveted awards: choreography, orchestration, direction of a musical, lighting design, costume design, and scenic design.

Brooks clearly sensed the evening's inevitability. After one early acceptance speech, he cockily informed the Radio City Music Hall audience, "I'll see you in a couple of minutes."

However, even The Producers couldn't produce a ratings winner for the Tonys.

Sunday's two-hour Tonycast on CBS continued its tradition of anemic Nielsen's, despite enormous interest in the smash Broadway musical.

According to preliminary national numbers released Monday by CBS, "The 55th Annual Tony Awards" logged a 6.4 household rating and a 10 share of all homes watching TV from 8-10 p.m. CDT — a gain of just 3 percent from last year.

Both ABC, with "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" and "The Practice," and NBC, with basketball playoffs and "Weakest Link," beat out CBS.

Three of the The Producers' actors won Tonys: Nathan Lane (best actor-musical) for his portrayal of the creatively devious Max Bialystock, Cady Huffman (best featured actress-musical) for her role as the sex-starved clueless blonde, and Gary Beach (featured actor-musical) for his portrayal of self-absorbed director Roger De Bris, who flamboyantly leads the cast in "Springtime for Hitler," the show's most-famous number.

Susan Stroman accepted the awards for musical direction and choreography; the latter honor marked the second-consecutive year she has won it, after last year's Contact.

Brooks, who first brought The Producers to audiences in the 1960s as a madcap movie, won for original score and, along with Thomas Meehan, for best book of a musical.

Most upstaged by The Producers was the musical The Full Monty, which won much critical acclaim and got 10 nominations. But it took home no Tonys.

Daniel Sullivan, who took the direction-play award for Proof, feigned disbelief at the honor: "There must be some mistake," he said. "I had nothing to do with The Producers."

Sullivan's leading lady, Mary-Louise Parker, took home the best actress-play award.

Other winners included 42nd Street, for best musical revival; its star, Christine Ebersole, got the top female musical prize.

The play revival award went to One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest.

Richard Easton, who plays poet A.E. Housman in The Invention of Love, took the top actor-play prize, while Robert Sean Leonard, who plays a younger incarnation of the same character, won in the featured category.

Viola Davis, the fiery wife in King Hedley II, also received the featured-actress award.

Journalists and 702 theater professionals selected the recipients of this year's Tony Awards.

Newly found Chagalls open in Budapest

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Newly discovered paintings by the Belorussian-born French artist Marc Chagall will go on display for the first time in Hungary next month.

"There are seven so far unknown paintings that have been with Chagall's heirs until very recently — among others, Mother in Front of the Furnace and Lisa at the Window from 1914 and Prodigal Son from 1975," said Reka Gyoerfi, art manager of the French Institute in Budapest.

The show will open on July 6 at the Budapest Jewish Museum and run through Oct. 14. It is jointly organized by the museum and the French Institute.

Gyoerfi said the 59 paintings and drawings in the exhibition reflect the themes of Jewry, Eastern Europe, religion, and family.

The exhibition also will include paintings on loan from the Pompidou Center in Paris.

Pearl Harbor rumbles on, tough sell Moulin Rouge proves itself

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pearl Harbor edged out the story of a humble ogre to remain No. 1 in weekend box office for the second week.

Pearl Harbor, the action/love story about the Japanese attack on Dec. 7, 1941, took in $30 million. The digitally-animated Shrek ran a close second with $28.4 million, according to studio estimates.

The Animal debuted in third place with $19.8 million.

The comedy stars ex-Survivor Colleen Haskell and Rob Schneider as a wimp who becomes a supercop after being implanted with the DNA of wild beasts.

The Nicole Kidman and Ewan McGregor musical Moulin Rouge, considered to be a tough sell for modern audiences unaccustomed to song-and-dance films, had a solid first weekend in wide release. After two weekends playing to sellout crowds in one theater each in New York City and Los Angeles, Moulin Rouge grossed $14.2 million to finish at No. 4.

Estimated ticket sales for June 1 through Sunday at North American theaters, according to Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc.

Final figures were to be released Monday.

1. Pearl Harbor, $30 million.
2. Shrek, $28.4 million.
3. The Animal, $19.8 million.
4. Moulin Rouge, $14.2 million.
5. What's the Worst That Could Happen?, $13.3 million.
6. The Mummy Returns, $7.5 million.
7. A Knight's Tale, $3.4 million.
8. Bridget Jones's Diary, $2.1 million.
9. Angel Eyes, $1.8 million.
10. Memento, $1.1 million.

Wider is better, Scorsese says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Martin Scorsese wants television viewers to go widescreen.

Scorsese is joining TV manufacturer Philips Consumer Electronics to promote widescreen movie images, which preserve films in their original proportions instead of formatting them for TV.

The director of Raging Bull and Goodfellas said many viewers are unaware that big chunks of theatrical films are sliced off from the sides to fit the movies onto box-like TV screens.

"The idea really is to educate the public to the reality that they're losing half the image," Scorsese said.

The growing popularity of DVD, which generally presents movies in widescreen letterbox, with blank borders above and below the image, should help convert more viewers to seeing films in their original proportions, Scorsese said.

Philips and other manufacturers have introduced high-definition projection televisions whose shape approximates the proportions of films shown in theaters.

With prices starting at approximately $2,000, the widescreen TVs now cost more than most consumers will want to pay.

"As volume increases on widescreen tubes, the product will become more affordable," said Bob Nocera, the Philips vice president for digital TV marketing.

will come from the Athletics Department's budget.

"We are expecting a projected growth in revenue that will permit some increased expenditures," Schantz said. "We will be getting some additional revenue from the NCAA next year that includes money made from TV contracts."

Alford's original contract was worth $580,000 per year when he signed with Iowa in the spring of 1999. Under his current contract, he could receive more than the $900,000 base salary because of incentives based on his team's academic and on-the-court performances.

The extension was drawn up earlier in the spring — approximately the same time that there were rumors that Alford would return to his alma mater, Indiana, to coach. Schantz said, however, that the contract was not brought about as leverage to keep him from leaving.

"The university wants to keep him, and we take the steps that seem reasonable in that regard," he said. "There were no threats of his leaving."

According to Iowa Athletics Director Bob Bowlsby, it was not out of the ordinary for negotiations to take a few months.

"These things aren't done overnight, and this was no exception," he said. "It's important that both parties are happy when a contract like this is negotiated. I can say without hesitation that we are happy that Steve will be our coach for many, many years."

City may annex 95 acres near Court St.

ZONING

Charles Lindemann, adding that the family has owned the land since the 1930s.

Two adjoining plots of land, which are already owned by the city, have been developed, Charles Lindemann said, and he feels that he would be doing the city a favor by giving it the land.

City officials have already identified the land as an area for potential growth, saying it is in the city's best interest to control development to ensure that the area benefits from city services.

If commission members decide to approve the annexation and rezoning proposals, the area would begin a metamorphosis that will leave it looking similar to neighboring East Side developments. Plans for the area call for a system of interconnecting streets and cul-de-sacs.

When Southgate first applied for rezoning, area residents were led to believe that it was planning on developing apartment complexes. However, according to the zoning commission, Southgate would not be able to construct apartments because of the zoning plan it requested.

"Right now, we're looking at developing just single-family housing," said Glenn Siders, Southgate's manager of the project. "We won't really know what we're going to be building until we start building."

In letters addressed to the commission, some local residents expressed concern that the city would have to construct a new sewer line, possibly forcing some homeowners to abandon their septic tanks in order to be connected to the city sewer system. Homeowners have also voiced concerns about a rise in property taxes if their land is annexed by the city.

In addition to new housing development, commission members also anticipate the reconstruction of Lower West Branch Road so that it can act as the main arterial for the area as side streets are constructed.

The commission also stressed that the area's natural features — such as stream corridors and wetlands — will be preserved and that a trail system will be built.

Siders said that development could begin as early as this fall. However, he added, the process can go on longer than expected because the development has to gain the approval of the City Council after a public hearing is held.

Charles Lindemann remains upbeat about the project.

"It only seems natural that the city expand in all directions," he said. "Plus, the city is always looking for ways to improve its tax base."

unanimous in ruling that a Texas court properly admitted evidence of Penry's future dangerousness.

Penry was convicted of murdering Pamela Moseley Carpenter in Texas in 1979. She was the sister of former Washington Redskins place-kicker Mark Moseley.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the majority, said the instructions to the jury were "constitutionally inadequate" to protect Penry's rights.

The Texas trial court did not follow previous Supreme Court guidance issued when Penry's case reached the court before on the jury-instruction issue. The earlier ruling by the high court overturned Penry's death sentence, and he was sentenced to die a second time.

The second sentencing — as did the first — left no vehicle for jurors to express the view that Penry should get life, not death, based on mitigating evidence, O'Connor said.

O'Connor wrote that jurors were asked to vote "no" to specific questions if they thought the death penalty was inappropriate — even if their answers to those questions would have been "yes."

"The jury was essentially instructed to return a false answer ... in order to avoid a death sentence," O'Connor

Flexible donations double at UI

report and gives them periodic updates on how their money was used to improve the university, New said.

For instance, unrestricted donations were used to expand the university's Presidential Scholarship program from 20 recipients per year to 50. Other examples include funding for UI Foundation Distinguished Professorships, which are given to honor the most accomplished of the university's professors.

Still, persuading donors is a tough sell — even though these donations have the most effect — because most want to give money to programs or departments in which they have an "intense interest," Coleman said.

"In my experience, donors firmly believe that their gifts should enhance and provide leverage for state funds," she said. "In other words, they are not interested in providing money for the regular operating budget of the university."

The notion that private funds can make up for lost state support is simply wrong, she said.

Overall, the university's fund-raisers — including the foundation staff as well as key administrators — had a record-breaking year during 2000. A total of $65.4 million was received in outright gifts, with another $82.2 million in commitments for the future.

"It was a very, very good year," said New. "We were fortunate in that some significant gifts were received ... It is truly a team effort."

E-mail DI Metro Editor Ryan Foley at: ryan-foley@uiowa.edu

Economy could slow donations

Like many not-for-profit fund-raising groups across the nation, the UI Foundation is starting to feel the effects of a slowing economy.

The university's fund-raising arm reported Monday that it has thus far raised money only at the same rate as it did during the first five months last year.

At this point last year, the foundation had raised 22.4 percent more than in the same months in 1999 on its way to bringing in a record $65.4 million in outright gifts. That was an increase of more than 14 percent over 1999. Total donations have risen at significant rates every year since 1995.

Experts say that during economic downturns, private donations are some of the first things to go.

"We can tell that there's been a difference," foundation President Michael New said about the faltering economy. "Many people don't have the resources they had a year ago, which makes our job a little more challenging."

"But we are going to do the same things we always do."

Whether the foundation will raise more than last year depends on a variety of factors, some of which can't be controlled, New said. For instance, a few unexpected but significant donations could be a huge shot in the arm.

Also, many donations are in the form of bequests, which do not mature until the donor dies, New said. "You can't predict that," he said.

UI moves to curtail energy use

manager of customer communications at MidAmerican. The cutback, which would only take place on weekdays, won't happen unless there are several days of mid- to upper-90 degree weather, when demand for energy is at peak levels, she said. Measures can be taken a maximum of 16 times between June 1 and Sept. 30.

Curtailed strategies include increasing air-conditioning temperatures, cycling air conditioners on and off, or shutting them down. Ventilation systems and non-essential lighting may also be turned off.

Not all 47 buildings will be affected in the same way, said John Amend, the UI associate vice president for the Facilities Services Group. The department will work with other departments "to identify what their borderline" energy use is to minimize interrupting their activities, he said. For example, cooling systems will not be shut down during events at Hancher Auditorium, said Chuck Swanson, the associate director of Hancher.

The energy-curtailed program is part of a larger effort by the facilities group to reduce energy costs at the university. In the previous year alone, the department calculates that the university saved nearly $2 million with energy-conservation measures installed in university buildings over the last decade.

Prasanna Kumar, an energy and environmental engineer with the facilities group, said that in the past, the increased cost of fuel has been offset by the amount of money saved through conservation efforts. But with an estimated $1 million increase in the utility bill this year, costs are unlikely to completely balance savings.

The facilities group is requesting that in addition to mandatory energy conservation, members of the university community help voluntarily reduce costs through simple things that ultimately add up. "It's not a single person's job," Kumar said.

Four of the five most energy-consuming buildings are research facilities. For Erick Agrimson, a graduate student in physics, this means he must alter his schedule in the lab.

The plasma-diagnostic machine he uses in his research consumes energy at a quarter of a million watts per minute, making it the most expensive machine to operate in the department. The facilities group has requested that Agrimson change the timing of his experiments to the early morning, bringing him to work at 6 a.m. in order to finish by the peak energy-consumption hours of the afternoon.

Not all buildings will be affected by the curtailment plan. Some do not receive power from the UI Power Plant but will be asked to conserve energy. Air conditioning in others will not be affected for various reasons.

E-mail DI reporter Libby Tucker at: elizabeth-mckinstry@uiowa.edu

Energy Curtailment

June 1-Sept. 30 is energy-curtailed season. This means that on specified days, students and staff will be asked to limit their electrical use during peak periods.

How will we know when energy-curtailed days occur?

- The DI will include a "curtailment alert" graphic with the forecast in the upper right-hand corner of the front page.
- The UI will send a mass e-mail to students and staff.

How can we help?

- Turn off non-essential equipment such as lights, window air conditioners, coffee pots, computers and copy machines.
- Close window blinds or shades on east, west and south sides of a building.
- Do not open windows.

Why should we help?

- Saves money for the UI.
- Reduces the effect on the environment.

horoscopes

Tuesday, June 5, 2001 by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You need to be excessive will work against you. If you can control yourself, you will enjoy the outcome of the day's events much more. Be yourself, and you will attract the right kind of attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may be having trouble fulfilling your desires. Talk to your partner about your likes and dislikes. Compatibility is not measured by physical contact alone; you have to relate mentally first.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone will openly oppose you if you try to push your way into her or his heart. Aggressive action will cause alienation and a lack of trust. Take your time and build on a friendship first. Your feelings will be hurt if you put trust in those you are not trustworthy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You'll have to keep busy if you want to take your mind off unpleasant memories. Put the past behind you; it's time to build a better future for yourself and those you love.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't overspend on children or entertainment. You can pamper yourself without being extravagant. Changes regarding colleagues should be to your benefit. Stay on your toes and make sure that you aren't blindsided.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Contain your anger. Heal the pain. Family members may shirk their responsibilities, leaving you with all the work. Do your share and leave the rest for them. Stand your ground — but silently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You just want to have fun. You're up for new and exciting adventures. Attend functions that will allow you to connect with unusual individuals. You need to add some spice to your life.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You're likely to take on too much at work. Be careful: You'll make yourself look bad in the eyes of superiors. You may be dedicated, but you can't take on the whole world by yourself. Enlist help, but don't appear desperate. Good luck is in the cards today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Past partners will reappear, leaving you confused about your present relationship. Don't make hasty decisions. It won't work if you start seeing her or him while you're still involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can bet that someone is trying to undermine you at work. Talk frankly to superiors or colleagues. Don't leave any room for misunderstandings or misinterpretation. It is time to abandon unhealthy habits. You will feel better and thank yourself for it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You need to distance yourself from those who have been leaning on you too much. Get on with the things that you like to do. You've given up too much for others.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful not to hurt someone's feelings. You'll be popular with those who don't know you that well, but loved ones will feel left out, insecure and put off.

Baseball madness hitting football state

■ The Nebraska baseball team is preparing for the College World Series with a huge fan following.

By Kevin O'Hanlon
Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — The billboard downtown is clear: "Welcome to the Center of the Football Universe." Now the town is teeming with fans worked into a frenzy about — of all things — baseball.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers clinched their first College World Series berth by sweeping Rice over the weekend in a best-of-three super regional. Husker fans set attendance records both June 1 and 2 at the expanded Buck Beltzer Stadium.

"I took a day off work just to come down and watch," said Tim Ekhardt of Omaha, sporting a "Husker Baseball" T-shirt.

Summer is normally a time when this college town of 200,000 people slips into laid-back mode for three months until Nebraska football players report for fall camp.

Dave Weaver/Associated Press

Members of the Nebraska baseball team celebrate with fans on June 2 after winning an NCAA super regional over Rice, 9-6, in 10 innings in Lincoln, Neb.

Not this year. Baseball is enjoying a renaissance in Lincoln.

The Cornhuskers have never been to the College World Series, which since 1950 has been played just 50 miles up Interstate 80 in Omaha. In fact, it's just the second time the CWS will have a team from Nebraska. In 1991, Creighton, a private Jesuit school in Omaha, made it.

All of this seemed quite unlikely just four years ago, when longtime coach John Sanders was fired after a 27-35 season and Nebraska baseball seemed destined for mediocrity — or worse.

Dave Van Horn, the coach at Northwestern State University in Natchitoches, La., was hired as Nebraska's new coach and the Huskers soon found themselves flying with collegiate baseball's elite.

Callers to local radio sports talk shows lately show more concern about the back problems of NU pitching ace Shane Komine than Husker quarterback Eric Crouch's off-season shoulder surgery.

Nebraska baseball memorabilia and apparel have enjoyed soaring sales, but not all fans have gotten on the sartorial bandwagon.

Todd Ringwald of Lincoln, a truck driver, showed up for the June 1 game wearing a T-shirt touting Nebraska's five national championships in football.

"I just haven't updated my wardrobe yet," he said.

Fans lined up hours before the June 1 game at Nebraska's 5,000-seat Buck Beltzer Stadium, a 23-year-old dinosaur in today's world of top-drawer venues with skyboxes and state-of-the-art instant replay screens.

Still, "The Buck" was home and with additional bleachers set up in the outfield, Friday's game drew a crowd of 5,353, breaking the record of 4,936 set the weekend before in the regionals. The June 2 attendance was 5,484.

Los Angeles places pitcher Brown on DL

■ Kevin Brown, with his 6-3 record, has an irritated nerve in his neck.

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Los Angeles Dodgers, already plagued by injuries, placed ace Kevin Brown on the 15-day disabled list Monday with an irritated nerve in his neck.

Manager Jim Tracy said Brown would miss three or four starts. His place in the rotation will be taken by Terry Adams, who will make his first career start tonight against Arizona's Robert Ellis.

Tracy also announced that Eric Gagne, the No. 5 starter, was being sent to the bullpen and replaced by Giovanni Carrara. Gagne is 1-3 with a 6.05 ERA in 12 starts.

Gagne lasted just 2 2/3 innings in Sunday's 9-8, 10-inning victory over Houston. He allowed eight runs on six hits and hit three batters in his shortest outing of the season.

The Dodgers activated infielder Chris Donnels from the DL to take Brown's roster spot.

Brown, 36, goes on the DL for the seventh time in his 15-year major league career. He has a 6-3 record and is second to Greg Maddux in the National League with a 2.60 ERA.

It is Brown's second trip to the DL this season. He was sidelined from March 24 to April 10 with a strained right Achilles tendon.

Brown was sent back to Los Angeles Sunday because of neck pain that had persisted since May 30, a day after he took the loss against the Rockies at Colorado.

"The day after he last pitched he woke up with severe irritation in his neck," Tracy said.

Brown, 36, was examined by Drs. Frank Jobe and Luga Podesta, and they determined he should go on the DL.

Brown's injury is the latest in a series that have hit some of the biggest names on the Los Angeles roster. He joins fellow Dodgers Gary Sheffield, Eric Karros and Andy Ashby on the DL.

Earlier, Adrian Beltre, Dave Hansen and Paul Lo Duca all spent time on the disabled list.

Lakers not taking Sixers lightly be Dikembe and Shaquille, and if they choose to double-team (O'Neal) that will open up the game for us," he said.

The teams split their two meetings in the regular season, both of which took place before the 76ers acquired Mutombo from the Atlanta Hawks for Theo Ratliff, Toni Kukoc and Nazr Mohammed.

Mutombo and O'Neal did not face each other this season, although they have played each other in the past during the playoffs.

"Anybody can guard Shaq; it's a question of whether anybody can stop him," Horry said.

In 1996, O'Neal's Orlando Magic defeated Mutombo's Atlanta Hawks, 4-1, in the Eastern Conference semifinals before Jackson's team at the time, the Chicago Bulls, swept the Magic in the conference finals. "I remember preparing to play against Orlando, and I was impressed that particular year that Shaquille dismantled Atlanta's team with Dikembe in there," Jackson said.

Mutombo and O'Neal have faced each other 12 times in regular season games, with O'Neal's teams going 10-2. O'Neal outscored Mutombo 22.0 to 10.9 in those games, although Mutombo averaged 12.7 rebounds to O'Neal's 10.5.

Coming off their Game 7 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks Sunday night, the 76ers gathered at their practice facility in Philadelphia before flying across-country.

With almost 72 hours between games, the 76ers are in the middle of their longest layoff since mid-May, when they had two days off between Games 4 and 5 of their series against Toronto.

They have been playing exhilarating and exhausting games every other night since then, going through the types of highs and lows that the Lakers haven't experienced since late March, when the Shaq-Kobe feud had not yet died down and no one was quite sure whether they had even earned home-court advantage for the first round of the playoffs.

Los Angeles has not lost since April Fools' Day, whereas the Sixers have already lost seven playoff games and have been declared near-dead almost as many times.

That recent history of thriving under adverse circumstances has caught the attention of the Lakers, who are not taking this opponent lightly.

"The (76ers) are prepared to handle the type of pressure that this situation demands," Jackson said. "The one thing you know is that they will come in here with an extreme amount of intensity that was generated in that series, so that is to their advantage."

meet. Allen, a two-sport athlete, retains one year of football eligibility; he will play fullback in the fall.

Van der Westhuizen had a strong season as well, finishing second at Big Tens and ninth at NCAAs in the hammer throw. He said he was satisfied with his performance at nationals.

"I was happy but not too happy about my distance," van der Westhuizen said. "It was a good way to end my season."

Overall, van der Westhuizen said, his season went pretty well.

"I set myself a goal and only threw one meet below that, so I was satisfied," he said.

Originally from South Africa, van der Westhuizen said he plans to try out for the South African Olympic team when he returns home. Wieczorek said van der Westhuizen and Allen will leave quite a hole in the lineup next season.

"They're two of the greatest guys we've ever had. It's tough to replace those guys the very next year, but we certainly look forward to the class coming up," he said.

This year's emergence of a strong freshman class makes the future look bright for the Hawkeyes, Wieczorek said.

"If we could put together a class like this one every year, we'd win the Big Tens every year," Wieczorek said. "They're a really remarkable group of guys."

The class, headlined by sprinters Adam Kunkel and Juan Coleman and throwers Ken Kemeny and Bill Neumann, gives the Hawkeyes a strong base to build on for the coming years.

The Big Ten meet gave the freshmen the stage they needed to display their talent.

Neumann finished second in the javelin, Kunkel finished third in the 400-hurdles, Kemeny was seventh in the shot put, and Coleman finished sixth in the 400-meter dash.

Wieczorek said he was satisfied with the fifth-place finish at the Big Tens because of the character his team showed.

"You're not always happy being fifth because you want to win the Big Ten Championship, but given the fact that we had some injuries to deal with, we felt that everyone on our team had a great effort," he said.

Finishing in the upper division of the Big Ten is always a goal and is quite an accomplishment, Wieczorek said.

"We'd be going to the NCAAs and hanging banners if we were the basketball team."

Pittsburgh Penguins and 1997-98 Detroit Red Wings. Only three of the 16 teams that previously won Game 5 in a series tied 2-2 didn't win the cup, and it hasn't happened since 1971.

After losing to Dallas last two seasons on the road in Game 7 of the Western Conference finals, the Avalanche made it a season-long goal to have home ice this time. However, they may not make it to Game 7 this time.

Now, Ray Bourque's Mission

16W — his attempt to win his first Stanley Cup in 22 seasons — may end at Exit 16W of the New Jersey Turnpike, where the Devils' arena is located. The 16W represented how many victories are needed to win the cup.

The Avalanche had scored the opening goal in three of the first four games, but the Devils got it this time with one of their five odd-man rushes in the first period — more than they had in any previous game.

The 'A' may have been missing from the Devils A-Line, but his linemates got the opening goal as Elias scored his second in as many games on a 2-on-1 break with Petr Sykora at 3:09 of the first.

Avalanche defenseman Adam Foote was caught between the two on the break, and Roy gambled Foote could break up the pass. But Foote couldn't and, with Roy shifted to his left, Elias flipped the puck in an open left side of the net for his ninth of the playoffs.

With Arnett out with an apparent concussion, Devils coach Larry Robinson moved defensive forward Bobby Holik up to the Elias-Sykora line so Holik and defenseman Scott Stevens would always be on the ice against Joe Sakic's line. It worked, too, as Sakic had a quiet game, even though

More 2002 Olympic tickets on sale

■ Some 200,000 more tickets went on sale.

By Paul Foy
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Just when it seemed Winter Games tickets were all but sold out, another 200,000 became available.

Some of the seats opened up when corporate sponsors or foreign Olympic committees didn't snap up their full entitlements. Organizers added other tickets after deciding seats would not be obscured by

Covering the range of winter sports, many of the tickets are for qualifying or preliminary rounds of competition for the February games.

Buyers will find tickets for bobsled and luge, hockey, figure skating, short-track speedskating, snowboarding, ski jumping, curling, biathlon, and cross-country skiing.

The leftovers were to go on sale this morning.

"My guess is these tickets will be gone by the end of the day," SLOC president Mitt Romney said.

The latest batch of tickets will go on sale for face value, ranging from $35 for luge or curling to $885 for opening or closing ceremonies.

Romney had been criticized for hoarding 1,000 of the best Olympic seats for auctions on the Internet site eBay. He's already auctioned 66 tickets at up to nine times face value, raising nearly $200,000 for the Paralympics.

Romney defended the auctions by saying those tickets normally would go — at face value — to corporate sponsors or Olympic VIPs.

Third-ranked Agassi prevails in fourth round

■ The 31-year-old uses his physical prowess to outlast the younger Franco Squillari.

By Steven Wine
 Associated Press

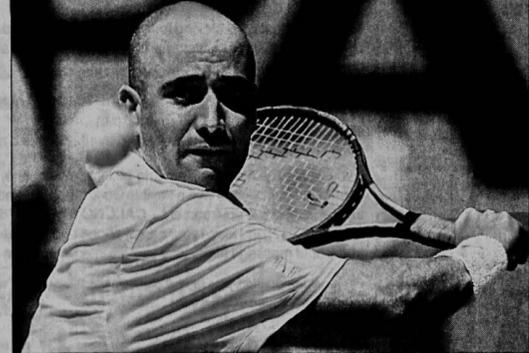

PARIS—Andre Agassi's day was already off to an annoying start when several young spectators shrieked throughout a rally he lost with a missed backhand.

Agassi glared toward the noisy section in the upper deck, where some fans were oblivious to tennis etiquette and overcome with joie de vivre.

"Come on!" he shouted. "Shut up!"

The kids did, aside from perhaps joining the cheers for Agassi as he beat Franco Squillari, 4-6, 6-2, 6-4, 1-6, 6-0, in the fourth round at the French Open.

In the midst of a typically grueling clay-court duel, Agassi could be forgiven his uncharacteristic outburst. For three hours both players wore tracks behind the baseline. But because Agassi is in the best shape of his life at 31, he found a higher gear in the final set just as his 25-year-old opponent faded.

That made the victory encouraging for the third-seeded Agassi, seeking his second-consecutive Grand Slam title. He won the Australian Open in January, and he believes he's finding his footing on clay at just the right time.

New king, but no new explanations

■ Nepal gets a new monarch, while protesters demand an explanation of the June 1 massacre.

By Neelsh Misra
Associated Press

KATMANDU, Nepal — Prince Gyanendra inherited Nepal's throne from his dead relatives Monday, becoming king as police fired tear gas at rioting youth who demanded an explanation of a shooting that killed 10 royals.

Thousands of angry mourners, who refused to believe Crown Prince Dipendra killed his family before shooting himself, lobbed rocks outside the palace, chanting "Dipendra is innocent" and "We don't want Gyanendra." Armed riot police fired tear gas to disperse them.

Witnesses said soldiers beat demonstrators with batons and fired warning shots in other parts of Katmandu. Two people were killed and 19 others injured, hospital officials said. Police ordered an overnight curfew; the state-run radio warned residents to remain indoors.

But some 2,000 people defied the curfew, burning tires and raising banners in the streets before police dispersed the protests with tear gas.

By the time Dipendra's funeral procession got under way just before sunset, the streets were deserted. Much of Nepal had already shut down for a five-day mourning period for the slain royals, and ahead of the curfew, soldiers in Katmandu had pointed their guns at people, ordering them to get home.

Dipendra's body was placed on a pickup truck and taken through streets littered with stones and bricks. In contrast, hundreds of thousands of mourners accompanied the palanquins carrying the bodies of his parents, King Birendra and Queen Aiswarya, and six other royals through the heart of the city on June 2.

Dipendra's body was placed atop a pyre of sweet-smelling sandalwood logs in the forecourt of the Pashupatinath temple on a bank of the Bagmati river. As a military band sounded the last post, a Brahmin priest lit the pyre in line with Hindu custom.

Dhirendra Shah, youngest brother of King Birendra, died Monday of gunshot wounds sustained in the June 1 palace massacre, the official National News Agency said, quoting doctors in the military hospital.

Earlier Monday, thousands lined the path of a somber royal procession as King Gyanendra rode in a horse-drawn carriage from the palace where he was enthroned to the official royal residence, the scene of the killings that stunned this Himalayan nation of 22 million people.

There was hardly any applause, and few people clasped their hands together in the traditional Hindu greeting of respect as their new monarch passed. A lone supporter shouted "Long live the king" as he arrived at the residential palace, but that got no response from the crowd.

Appearing at a palace enthronement ceremony, his head shaven in a traditional show of respect for the dead, Gyanendra sat on his throne with a crown topped with a large cream-colored plume.

He promised a full explanation of the palace killings — a day after blaming the deaths on "accidental" fire from an automatic weapon. The king planned to call for an independent investigation into the royal killings, a palace source said on the condition of anonymity.

The killings took place on the night of June 1 as the royal family gathered for dinner to discuss Dipendra's marriage. Gyanendra was out of town at the time.

Sources close to the family said the prince wanted to marry the daughter of a former government minister who is a member of an aristocratic family — but Queen Aiswarya rejected the match, preferring a traditional arranged marriage.

Officials initially said Dipendra shot his parents and six other royals before turning the gun on himself. But as Dipendra lingered on life support, the new king, Gyanendra — named acting monarch — called the shooting accidental.

Dipendra, 29, died early Monday. It was unclear whether he was taken off life support. The State Council overseeing royal affairs met that morning and proclaimed Gyanendra, King Birendra's younger brother, the new king.

"In this sad hour, I would like to assure the people that the facts on the Friday night incident will be made public," King Gyanendra said in statement. "The facts could not be made public in yesterday's statement because of legal and constitutional hurdles. I will make the facts of the incident public after an investigation."

He gave a partial explanation for the differing versions of the shooting: Dipendra, technically the king over the weekend, was above reproach under Nepal's Constitution and by tradition, he said.

Some blame a political or military conspiracy for the deaths.

Maoist rebels, who launched an insurgency in 1996 to seek an end of the monarchy, pointed to a "grave political conspiracy" in a statement signed by Prachanda, the president of the underground CPN-Maoist party. He called the shootings a "pre-planned massacre."

Devils top Avs in Game 5

New Jersey jumps to a 3-2 lead in the series.

By Alan Robinson Associated Press

DENVER — So much for the home-ice advantage the Colorado Avalanche played for all season. The Stanley Cup will be in New Jersey on Thursday night — and it may not be leaving.

The New Jersey Devils, who won hockey's biggest prize on the road last season, moved within a victory of winning it again Monday night by beating the Avalanche on their own ice for the second straight time, a 4-1 victory secured by Alexander Mogilny's first goal in 15 games.

Sergei Brylin also ended a long streak with his first goal in 12 games and Patrick Elias, playing without injured A-Line center Jason Arnott, scored his second in as many games as New Jersey won for the third time in the last four games to seize a 3-2 series lead.

The Devils' only problem in trying to win their third Stanley Cup since 1995 might be that they're going home for Game 6 Thursday night. They're 5-1 on the road in the finals against Dallas and Colorado the last two years and 8-3 on the road in these playoffs but only 7-5 at home.

Last year, the Devils held a 3-1 lead and could have closed out Dallas at home, only to lose 1-0 in triple overtime. New Jersey bounced back to win the cup at Dallas in Game 6.

"We got one more to go, and it's going to be the toughest one," Devils forward Scott Gomez said.

This series of ever-shifting momentum may have swung when Patrick Roy abandoned the net in Game 4 and let in the tying goal just when Colorado seemed ready to take a 3-1 series lead. Roy's problem Monday was he was anchored in the net.

The Devils took advantage of Colorado's repeated attempts to force the offense after being limited to 12 shots in Game 4. However, the Avalanche not only couldn't get to goalie Martin Brodeur, who played his best game of the series, they often were trapped in the Devils' zone, creating a succession of odd-man breaks that led to the goals by Elias and Mogilny.

History certainly is on the Devils' side as they try to become the third team in the last 10 years to win consecutive cups, joining the 1991-92

Lakers finally learn of opponent

After having over a week off, the Lakers can now focus on whom they play in the finals.

By Chris Sheridan Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — For the first time in a long time, the Los Angeles Lakers showed up at practice Monday and had something to focus on — the Philadelphia 76ers.

After more than a week of waiting, the Lakers finally know exactly who stands in the way of their becoming repeat champions — and perhaps the first team in NBA history to go undefeated through the postseason.

"We've been off for what, 20 years?" forward Robert Horry said. "So it's going to be hard for us to get our rhythm."

While the vast majority of the NBA universe expects the Lakers to roll over the 76ers in a mismatch, the players themselves were taking a much more piecemeal approach to getting ready.

Monday was a day for studying their opponent, today will be a day for shaking off some rust, Wednesday will be the day when the talking stops and the basketball begins with Game 1 at the Staples Center at 8 p.m. CDT.

"If you asked the players who are going to play whether they believe we're an overwhelming favorite, right now we have too much respect for the Philadelphia 76ers and what they've accomplished to think we're that big of a favorite," forward Rick Fox said. "That's a dangerous mindset to have."

Still, there are plenty of legitimate reasons why the Lakers are expected to win fairly easily.

They have a 19-game winning streak, including 11 straight in the postseason. They have Shaquille O'Neal, the most dominant big man in the game, and Kobe Bryant, who is considered in most NBA cities to be the pre-eminent shooting guard in the league.

Of course, the folks in Philadelphia would take issue with that assessment, arguing that Allen Iverson proved this season that he is the better player.

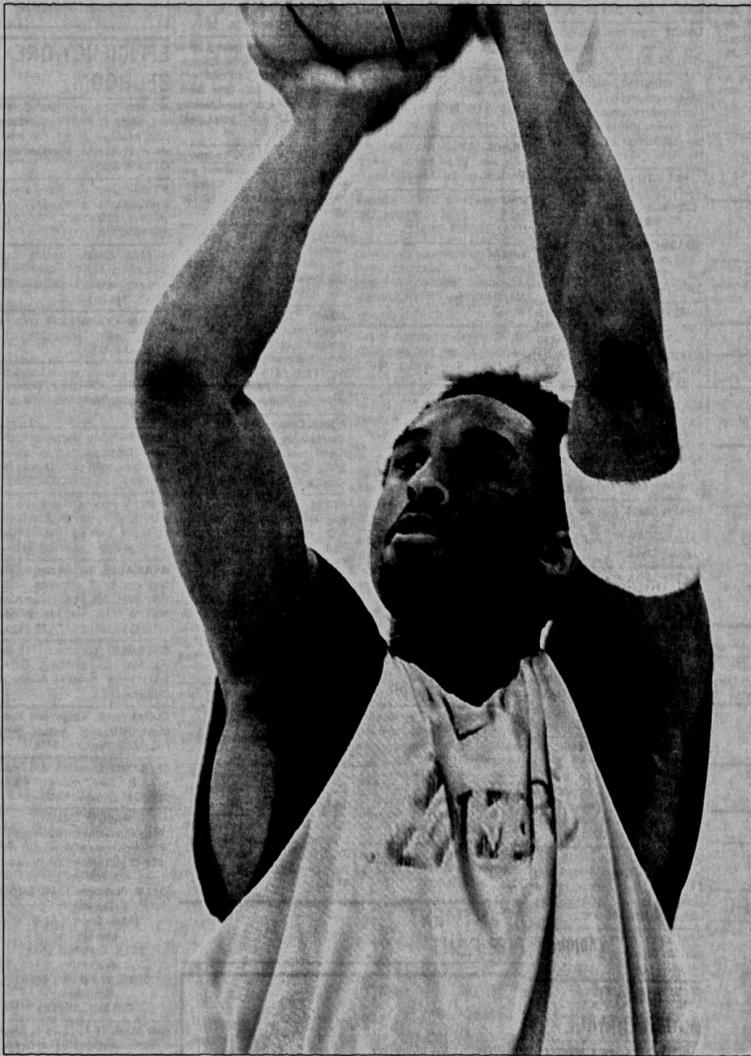

After all, he didn't win the MVP award for nothing.

Lakers coach Phil Jackson used the words "little rascal" and "monster" in discussing Iverson after the Lakers practiced for about two hours at their training facility in El Segundo, Calif.

While praising Iverson and his teammates for their resilience and talent, Jackson also said the Iverson-Bryant matchup will not be the key one in this series.

In his opinion, the mar-quee matchup is O'Neal vs. Dikembe Mutombo.

"Obviously, Iverson vs. Kobe brings a lot of attention, but the matchup is going to

Throwers, freshmen lead Iowa

Seniors end strong season and careers; freshmen anticipate continued success.

By Tyler Lechtenberg The Daily Iowan

With a strong showing at the NCAA Championships, the Iowa men's track team finished a solid season highlighted by record-breaking throwers and a talented freshman class.

Senior throwers Jeremy Allen and Arno van der Westhuizen closed out their Hawkeye careers with strong finishes at the national meet.

Allen ended a brilliant career at Iowa with a fifth-place finish in the discus and 10th-place finish in the shot put at nationals. "Jeremy goes down as one of the all-time greatest track-and-field athletes in the history of Iowa," Hawkeye coach Larry Wiecezorek said. "He's had a big hand in the successes we've had during his four years here."

Allen became the first Hawkeye thrower to be named a five-time All-American with his performances at nationals. He also was a double champion at the Big Ten meet, with wins in the shot put and the discus, helping the Hawkeyes to a fifth-place finish at the point/counterpoint Will the Lakers sweep the Sixers in four games?

The 76ers and the Lakers split their two regular season meetings, but that was a very different Lakers team from the one that will take the floor for four games beginning Wednesday.

The Lakers have gotten past the egos of their two star players and are finally focusing on what really matters: winning.

Since the mid-season power struggle between Shaquille O'Neal and Kobe Bryant was reconciled, Los Angeles has become the team everyone thought it would be before the season began.

The Lakers have won 19-straight games, including 11 in the playoffs, and are now on the doorstep of becoming the first team to complete the playoffs without a blemish on the playoff record. The wins have been decisive ones, including a 39-point white-washing of the league's best team in the regular season — the Spurs.

There will be plenty of interesting matchups in the series because the Lakers' opponent, the 76ers, pose a lot of tough matchups, especially at center and shooting guard. But in this series, look for the Lakers to dominate both. A rested Shaq and Kobe will have all of the answers as they run circles around a playoff-fatigued Mutombo and Iverson.

The 76ers have shown a lot of heart throughout the playoffs, but heart won't get you a win against these unified Lakers, as the Spurs showed us all in the Western Conference finals.

An undefeated playoff run sounds unattainable, but then again so does a 56-game hitting streak and a 13-year-old in the U.S. Open. Lakers in four.

— Tyler Lechtenberg

Before we all flip our lids about how fantastic this Laker team is and how awesome it would be if it were to go the entire playoff series undefeated, let's not forget about Philadelphia's toughness and savvy.

Unlike the Lakers, who, I admit, have ravaged each and every one of their opponents this past month and a half, the Sixers have fought to a series game seven and have been through clutch situations in which they had to win.

The Lakers, while they have won 18 games straight, have not been in a clutch situation since last year.

In the playoffs, that sort of thing matters. The Bulls didn't win consecutive championships by sweeping every team in the playoffs. They learned how to win tough nail-biters with their backs against the wall. While it is amazing that Los Angeles has done this well, it really isn't had any competition to threaten or challenge it. That could hurt.

While Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal have been sitting around in the beautiful Southern California weather, Allan Iverson and Dikembe Mutombo were busy fighting off the pesky Bucks. It's that experience that gives Philly the moxie to get in at least a couple of jabs against the Lakers.

Iverson will go off at least one night and put up 40 on Bryant for win No. 1. Mutombo will hopefully prove that, at least for one game, somebody can stop O'Neal for Philly win No. 2. After that, I will admit, the Lakers play too much good defense.

Having a 13-year-old girl play professional golf is pretty amazing. But this Laker team, still quite young, is not going to go an entire playoff without losing a game. Trust me.
