Iowa backs inmate labor

■ UI purchases of items made by prisoners has skyrocketed recently.

By Grant Schulte
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa prison inmates who manufacture UI furniture for 50-90 cents per hour may appear as though they're being abused, but their work benefits both them and society in the long run, a top prison official said Monday.
 State law requires the university and other state institutions to bid on items made in the Iowa prison system, and purchases are increasing dramatically. Over the past five years, regent institutions' purchases from the Iowa Prison Industries have risen by a factor of 19, according to a report from the state of Iowa Board of Regents.

Staff at the state's universities meet with prison-industry officials to find ways to increase purchases, the report says.

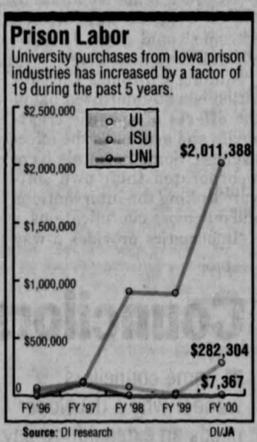

At the UI, spending on inmate-produced products increased from $43,408 in fiscal year 1996 to more than $280,000 during fiscal year 2000. This year, the university bought $103,000 worth of goods made in prisons. Products include everything from window cleaners to school desks, said prison-industry Director Roger Baysden.

Some critics have questioned the university's relationship with prison labor, but officials say their hands are tied.

Union Bar shuts it down till July 10

■ Signs posted in the windows say the bar is closed due to violations; a state official says that's not so.

By Ryan Foley
 The Daily Iowan

Downtown Iowa City's largest bar will be closed for the next two weeks, but it is unclear if the temporary shutdown is tied to an alleged string of liquor-license violations that the state asserts occurred in February.

Signs hanging in the windows of the Union Bar announce the club's closing through July 10 at 6 a.m. "License suspended due to violations by order of the ... state Alcoholic Beverages Division," the yellow signs read.

But Lynn Walding, the administrator of the division, said that is not the case. The bar has neither worked out a settlement with the state nor appeared in front of an administrative law judge, who would make a judgment on the bar's innocence or guilt and dole out a punishment if needed.

"I can assure you there's no agreement because I personally would have filed the order," Walding said Monday. "Anything they're doing now is on a voluntary basis."

"I'm surprised, with the Iowa City Jazz Festival coming up, they'd want to do that," he added.

The bar's attorney, Jerry Crawford of Des Moines, said settlement discussions with Walding and the state attorney-general's office about the length of a license suspension are ongoing. He declined to say whether the two-week shutdown was part of a possible deal.

"It's not appropriate for me to discuss the specifics of the settlement," Crawford said.

If a settlement cannot be reached, representatives from the Union will appear in front of an administrative-law judge later this summer, he said.

The bar faces up to $3,000 in fines and the possibility of losing its liquor license in connection with two bikini contests held in February. The bar was charged with five counts of indecent exposure, serving alcohol to minors, and knowingly giving alcohol to contestants who were intoxicated. The attorney-general's office brought the charges.

Police officers allegedly watched on two consecutive Thursday evenings as entertainers exposed their breasts and genitals — a violation of the liquor-license statute, police records said.

Further, police said, they

Police bust four on meth charges

■ Authorities claim that local methamphetamine use is increasing.

By Kellie Doyle
 The Daily Iowan

Police have arrested and charged three men and one woman for alleged possession of materials used to manufacture methamphetamine in the past four days.

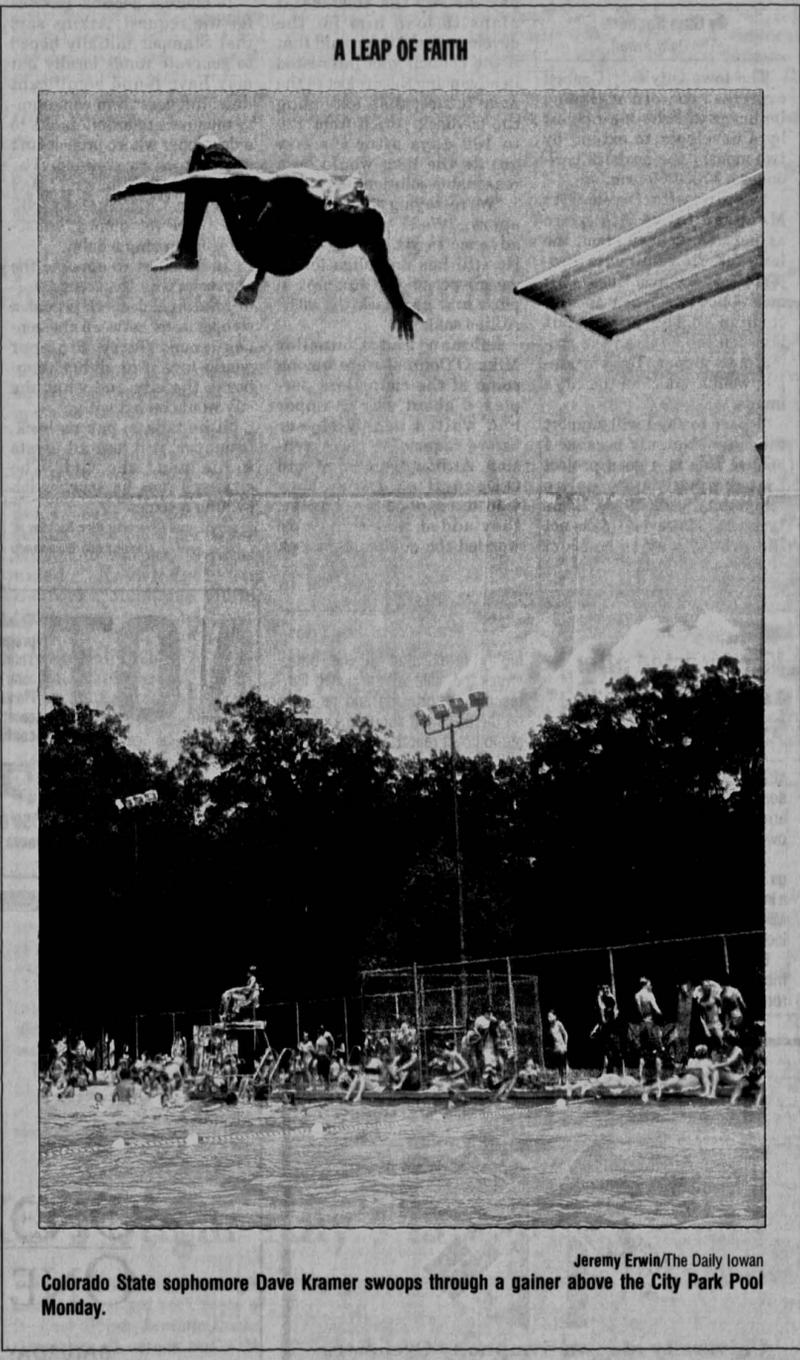

The arrests add to a growing list of meth-related charges that began with the alleged discovery in March of the first meth laboratory within Iowa City limits. Police say the arrests reflect an increase in use of the drug.

"I think meth use is on the rise, and we're seeing more locally manufactured meth," said Coralville police Lt. Ron Renman. "I think [the growth in arrests] is a combination of that and an increase in the number of people aware of meth."

On the afternoon of June 22, Iowa City police responded to a call from Cub Foods, 855 Highway 1 W., reporting that two men had allegedly purchased several boxes of cold medicine containing ephedrine or pseudoephedrine, a component of meth, according to court reports.

Police located Iowa City residents Dale Fleming, 41, and Jeremy Perkins, 30, near Highway 1 and allegedly found the men in possession of 18 boxes of the medicine. Fleming and Perkins, both charged

UI study targets new factor in addiction

■ A malfunction of the brain's decision-making ability may contribute to addiction.

By George Pappas
 The Daily Iowan

A new study by UI researchers may link addictions to a malfunction in the brain's decision-making process, consequently enabling researchers to better understand causes of addictions and methods used to treat them.

The research shows that addiction may be a developmental problem and that people may be born with the malfunction, said Antoine Bechara, a UI assistant professor of neurology and the head of the team that conducted the study. The study, which was published in Neuropsychologia earlier this year, may help disprove a myth that anyone is subject to an uncontrollable addiction, such as one to gambling, alcohol, or drugs.

"People have made us believe that people who pump enough drugs or alcohol into their system will become addicts," Bechara said.

Some people can ingest large quantities of drugs or alcohol and still not become addicted because of their control over the decision-making process, researchers say. Others only need a small amount to develop an addiction.

"If you group patients according to this, you can identify people who can be easily helped, people who need help, and others who are somewhat hopeless," Bechara said.

Researchers who carried out the clinical test, called the Iowa Gambling Test, attempted to relate decision-making impairments to patients with damage in an area of the brain

Addiction brain types
 A new UI study finds three brain types that are linked to how people handle addiction:

1. Those who have no problem with the frontal lobe. They have never suffered consequences from addiction. If they do suffer consequences, they have the power to control their addiction and quit.
2. Those with the most severe frontal lobe damage suffer from a disease that does not allow them to learn from previous mistakes. Little can be done to treat them.
3. Most addicts fall between the above groups. They experience some weakness in the brain, but with rehabilitation, they can be helped.

that controls decision-making ability, called the ventromedial prefrontal cortex.

Many people who have addictions show no desire of getting help despite negative consequences that may arise as a result of their addiction, researchers say. Loss of occupation, prison sentences, fines, and even the threat of losing their children do not deter some people from continuing their addictions. The study, researchers say, may now attribute this to a psychological

High court upholds campaign-spending limits

■ The 5-4 decision is hailed by supporters of the McCain-Feingold bill.

By Anne Gearan
 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A closely divided Supreme Court upheld Watergate-era spending limits on political parties Monday in a decision that supporters said could shore up broader campaign-finance restrictions before Congress.

The 5-4 ruling affects the money that state and national political parties spend on advertisements, mass mailings, and other activities in support of specific candidates. The ruling does not directly affect the two central goals of the McCain-Feingold campaign-finance overhaul: banning "soft money," the unregulated and unlimited donations that corporations, unions, and individuals make to political parties, and putting restrictions on the political ads that special-interest groups run in the final days of an election.

Still, the court's reasoning cheered Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., and others who have been pressing for wider regulation of political money.

"Clearly, this decision demonstrates that McCain-Feingold restrictions on campaign contributions are constitutional," he said.

The court rejected the Colorado Republican Party's contention that government limits on such spending violate the First Amendment guarantee of free speech.

In other action, the court remained silent on race-conscious admissions policies in higher education, refusing to hear Texas' challenge of a ruling that its law-school affirmative-action program discriminated against whites.

Without comment, the decision not to take the case showed the justices are not yet ready to break years of silence on preferential admissions in public colleges. This may not be the last word, however, because challenges to the University of Michigan's preferential policies could reach the court in the October term.

Digital care aids nurses

■ A four-day UI program helps nurses from around the world.

By Deidre Bello
The Daily Iowan

Nurses from the United States, Brazil, and Iceland are meeting in Iowa City this week to discuss a computerized system of treatment that has given them more credit and international recognition.

As part of a four-day program through the UI College of Nursing's Institute on Nursing Informatics and Classification, a group of more than 60 nurses will tour Genesis Medical Center in Davenport today to explore the effectiveness of standardized language and computer software in patient care.

"The goal of the institute is to enhance people's knowledge about informatics and computerized patient records," said

Joanne Dochterman, a UI professor of nursing and the director of the Center for Nursing Classification.

The institute helps facilitate interaction and the exchange of ideas among nurses, she said.

Development towards a standardized language for nursing began in 1987. Since then, ongoing editions of classifications, available in computer software and print, have been implemented to help nurses with patient care. The classifications have been translated into eight different languages.

Through use of computer software, nurses are gaining more visibility in their practice, Dochterman said.

"Nurses are receiving more credit for patient care, whereas in the past they had no way of documenting their efforts," said Tom Woods, a staff nurse at the UI Hospitals and Clinics specializing in informatics.

"The use of nursing informatics will enhance patient care in the near future," he said. "The classifications use specific terminology so you can see if the diagnosis is doing any good."

Various methods of treatment can be defined through Nursing Interventions Classification, which contains a standardized list.

"The software lets you select which interventions will lead to specific outcomes of care and gives you a scale from one to five for which to measure the outcome," said Mary Jo Dowell, an Illinois staff nurse.

Nursing Outcomes Classification is a standardized list of the effects of specific treatments and evaluates the effectiveness. Some hospitals have incorporated their own software linking the interventions and outcomes classifications.

"Informatics provides a way for charting a patient's progress and studying possible outcomes," said Janice Heyer, a Davenport pre-admission scheduling nurse.

This is the third summer that the internationally known

Center for Nursing Classification and the UI informatics program has hosted the institute, which will end Wednesday.

Council divided on police-board powers

■ Councilors Irvin Pfab and Steven Kanner question limiting the board's power.

By Chao Xiong
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City City Council may take a few steps back from its initial efforts to limit the power of the Police Citizens Review Board following discussion at Monday's informal work session.

At least two councilors, Steven Kanner and Irvin Pfab, reacted negatively to the council's proposed amendments to limit the powers of the board.

"This is a necessary board with every right to express its opinions just like everyone else," Pfab said. "My belief is that some members of the council wanted to gut this organization, and you've successfully done this."

Kanner proposed amendments that would extend the power of the board, allowing it to track racial profiling by hiring outside investigators, expanding the length of time that complaints can be filed by citizens from 90 days to six months, and giving it the authority to suggest disciplinary action to the police chief for officers found at fault.

Mayor Ernie Lehman and Councilors Dee Vanderhoef and Mike O'Donnell said they wanted to implement amendments that require the board to go through the council when reviewing police policy and citizen complaints. Councilor Connie Champion appeared not to side with either group and could be the deciding factor when the council formally votes on the police-board amendments at tonight's formal session.

"I do think it's important for this group to have a public say, but it's also important to go through the City Council," Lehman said. "The council is the policy-making body of the Iowa City government."

The amendments, as outlined by City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes last week, include eliminating the "sunset clause," which would discontinue the board as of Aug. 1, requiring the council to review the board every two years, and limiting the board to its current ability to only review complaints filed with it and not those filed with the police department.

"If you attended our last general public forum, you might have seen some people become angry about a specific issue or general police policy. I think that anger needs an outlet, and why not let people express what they feel?" said board Chairman John Watson.

If the amendments are approved by a majority of the councilors tonight, they still must pass two more votes before Aug. 1 or the board will cease to exist.

However, in previous discussions earlier this month, a majority of councilors said they were in favor of renewing the board at the end of July.

Just last week, local activists began to petition for an amendment that would make the board permanent. The city formed the board in 1997, after an Iowa City police officer killed local artist Eric Shaw in August 1996. A petition with 784 signatures must be submitted to the city clerk by Aug. 30 for the amendment to make it on the Nov. 6 ballot.

Councilors fret about peninsula

■ Some councilors wonder why a developer needs an extension to pay back a loan.

By Gian Sachdev
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City City Council expressed concern regarding its image in light of a request by a developer to extend by two months the payback period for a $700,000 loan.

Despite efforts by City Manager Steve Atkins to assuage the council about the loan for the Peninsula Project, some councilors still questioned how recent modifications to the agreement between the city and the project's developer, Terry Stamper, would reflect on the city's image.

"I have to say I will support the extension only because I believe this is a good project that compounds our entire community," said Mayor Ernie Lehman. "However, this is not the proper way to conduct business."

At Monday night's informal work session, Atkins urged councilors to permit Stamper a two-month extension to repay the city the $690,000 it plans to loan him for the development. Atkins said that if the council was interested in advancing the project in the near future, then extending the payback period from 120 to 180 days after the city grants the loan would be a reasonable solution.

"We're saying to the developers, 'We'll give you an advance to get this started.' He still has an obligation to get his permanent finances in place and pay back the city," Atkins said.

Lehman and Councilor Mike O'Donnell were among some of the councilors perplexed about why Stamper had waited nearly a year before requesting the extension. Although Lehman and O'Donnell said that they would support the project, they added that they were worried the public might look unfavorably on a city's decision to risk loaning a large amount of money to someone who may not understand his financial limitations.

To address possible reasons for the request, Atkins said that Stamper initially hoped to generate funds locally but may have found significant unwillingness from community members to forfeit assets to a developer whose project isn't guaranteed to succeed. The unwillingness, he said, may be forcing Stamper to look elsewhere for money, subsequently causing a delay.

In an effort to appease the doubters, City Assistant Attorney Sarah Holecheck provided comparisons between the consequences Terry Stamper would face if he didn't reimburse the city and what the city would be left with.

"If he fails to pay us back, [Stamper] will lose all assets to his land," she said. "The city will just be stuck with owning a street."

CITY BRIEF

Man arrested after allegedly striking 6-year-old

An Iowa City man, accused of striking his girlfriend's 6-year-old son while in a drunken state, was arrested for child endangerment over the weekend.

Charles Miller, 41, and his live-in girlfriend were allegedly involved in a lengthy oral altercation concerning Miller's drinking on the day of the incident, according to court reports.

During the argument, his girlfriend's son allegedly walked in the room. Miller, who was allegedly highly intoxicated at the time, struck the child with a closed fist, resulting in bruising and redness on the boy's left shoulder, according to court reports.

Police later responded to the domestic-abuse call from the couple's 1205 Laura Drive address, after Miller had already driven away. Police pulled over the red-eyed, slurred-speaking Miller soon after, according to court reports.

Miller was charged with child endangerment and his second operating-while-intoxicated violation. He remains in the Johnson County Jail on $13,000 bond.

Where do you begin? Which books will you drop after reading the first chapter and forget about forever? Which will you have to fight to put down? Which will leave you feeling let down? Which will enrich your life? I turned to local book experts for answers to these questions and came up with a list of 10 books that will make your reading experience worthwhile.

1. His Master's Voice by Stanislaw Lem, translated by Michael Kandel (Northwestern University Press, 1999). A message has come from outer space, and a team of 2,500 scientists have been brought to Nevada to help decipher it. "This novel is a parable about interpretation," said Professor Brooks Landon, the head of the UI English department. "The different interpretations of things we don't understand."

2. Little Big Man by Thomas Berger (Bantam Double Day Dell, 1989). Jack Crabb, the 11-year-old narrator, has an interesting perspective on life. He is the son of two fathers, one white, the other Cheyenne Indian, and he has experienced the best and worst of each culture. "This is a great book about the American West," Landon said. "It shows the American West is a myth constructed by writers."

3. The Waste Land and Other Poems by T.S. Eliot (Harcourt, 1976). Editors were able to bring together some of Eliot's most important poems, leading up to what is considered his greatest work, The Waste Land. "This is one of the most important poetry books of the century," said Jan Weissmiller, the poetry buyer for Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St.

4. Night by Elie Wiesel, translated by Stella Rodway (Bantam Doubleday Dell, 1982). A terrifying story of a young Jewish boy's experience in a Nazi death camp, Night serves as a reminder of the atrocities of the Holocaust. "This is a vivid portrayal of the Holocaust," said Weissmiller. "The Holocaust is an event that we are still feeling the reverberations from; we haven't completely dealt with it."

5. The Invisible Man by Ralph Ellison (Random House, 1995). Since it originated in 1952, The Invisible Man has resonated with readers. The story tells of an unnamed narrator's journey from growing up in a black community in the South to his position as chief spokesman for the Harlem branch of "the Brotherhood" and his eventual retreat. "This is the greatest American novel ever written about race relations," said Paul Ingram, a buyer for Prairie Lights.

6. Franny and Zooey by J.D. Salinger (Little Brown & Co., 1991). Salinger wrote these two novellas of an eccentric brother and sister in 1961. "This is a book about youth," Ingram said. "It shows that the discoveries of young people make for some of the finest literature in the world."

7. Earth Abides by George

Stewart (Fawcett, 1986). After a disease wipes out the human race, the lone survivor must go forward in a journey that leads to astonishing discoveries. "It is a science-fiction story without the technology or the science. It covers a lot of territory," said Rock Williams, the owner of Northside Book Market, 203 N. Linn St. "It is often overlooked, yet it is very special. It speaks to many people."

8. Human Stain by Philip Roth (Houghton Mifflin, 2000). The last installment in Roth's trilogy (American Pastoral; I Married a Communist), Human Stain is the story of college professor, Coleman Silk, who is forced to resign after allegations of racism. The charge is false, but Silk is guilty of something much more astonishing. "Roth is smart when writing about post-war issues in the U.S.," said John Cumiskey, a University

Bookstore employee. "He is simply one of the best writers of the 20th century."

9. The Love Artist by Jane Alison (Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2001). The Love Artist is a fictional account of the life of Ovid, including his banishment from Rome and introduction to Xenia, his muse for The Metamorphoses. "Ovid is using Xenia to establish himself, to gain the inspiration, and become established as a part of Roman history," Cumiskey said. "It deals with strong issues, the struggle for freedom and independence, especially for women."

10. Trout Fishing in America, the Pill Versus the Spring Hill Mine Disaster & In Watermelon Sugar by Richard Brautigan (Houghton Mifflin, 1989). This volume contains two novels and a collection of poetry about Brautigan's comic observations of American life. "I have recently had several people rediscover Brautigan," said Pat Minor-Nidey, a University Bookstore employee. "He is an amazing author."

The full Global gang's groovin'

Nubreed
 mixed by Anthony Papa
 Global Underground
 Rating unavailable

Destructive earshots of white, wheezing handfuls of sound, spongy, rusted bass lines, and noggin' jerking transitions that loosen the earwax from a listener's sockets are why Anthony Pappa is now a full-fledged member of the Global Underground staff. In Pappa's debut release, he pulls out all the stops with a double-disc set covered in jaw-dropping drool.

Along with Nubreeders Danny Howells, Steve Lawler, and Sander Kleinenberg, Pappa and Global Underground are at the forefront of electronic music's progression. Pappa prefers tracks that deliver dark-midnight beats and bass lines that are decorated with piercing high-definition melodies and an array of bleepy rage.

Pappa utilizes frequent Global Underground producers Narcotik, Moonface, Timo Maas, Trancsetters, Medway, Cass and breakbeat remixers Hybrid mixing narcissistic house music, creepy trance cuts, and nu-era progressive tunes.

Disc one begins with Narcotik's "Conditions." A wispy and hollow aura rolls over the floor as the track's beat suddenly breaks, and the chiming echoes grow more persistent. Witty and warped, "Synchronized Knowledge" by Bedrock's Moonface sounds like merry-go-round music played in those reoccurring Clownland theme park dreams I keep having.

The moment gets impermissibly trancy as the first disc winds down. Odessi's "Moments of Space" includes some handsomely decorated whiny whirrs and a female vocal with a painstakingly evil intent. Racy trance vocals meet hard-nosed techno bites in Nova's "Welcome to the Future" (Humate Mix). The song's intertwining of a horrific beat structure with a sexy female vocal repeating the simple lyrics of "The future is beautiful" insinuate the message that a delicious occasion is waiting.

Disc two reaps techno havoc, with corroded industrial beats and treble-less melodies; the atmosphere can't get much darker. Midway through the disc, Pappa implements some stringy, tranced-out programming with an onslaught of suffocating sound and forbiddingly pleasuring crevices and peaks. Cass' "Emotion Surfer (Hyperion Remix)" is what progression is all about, and the Astral Projection's "Liquid Sun (Cass and Slide Remix)" also fits in well.

Pappa's presentation of the bleaker side of electronic music is not intended for the listener who prefers gleeful afternoons at the park. Rugged, nasty content accents this disc set that embraces listeners' psychotic sides and sends their psyches on a twisted journey through a shadowless underworld.

Trite goo KO's Sugar Ray's latest

Sugar Ray
 Sugar Ray
 ★★ out of ★★★★★

Sugar Ray's 15 minutes of fame are up, hopefully.

With its new self-titled release, Sugar Ray, the band has stooped to an even lower level than its previous two pop hits, Floored and 14:59. It looks as if the band has predicted its own fate.

However, the joke is on the group with this piece of work. The album is flat and unoriginal, rivaling those of pop rockers Third Eye Blind and the Goo Goo Dolls. The album lacks any bite or personality. Where Sugar Ray used to rock and make it funky, the members now write trite lyrics to some of the lamest guitar work I've heard in a while. There are no traces of funk or soul on this album, unlike on past releases.

Just when I was expecting the band to shed its pop-ish, teenybopper image and get back to the hard rock roots of its first album, Lemonade and Brownies, it comes out with the worst of its recent pop rock woe. In fact, the band couldn't even get the pop thing right on this one. With previous mega hits such as "Fly" and "Every Morning," one would expect to hear the similar work on this album. However, one will be less-than-surprised to find out there isn't any. The "vibe track," as lead singer Mark McGrath calls it (Fly was the "vibe" hit off Floored), "Stay Out," has little or no vibe at all. Unfortunately, 311 front man Nick Hexum has his name on this track. Hexum helps McGrath on this pitiful attempt at a pop hit, and to my surprise, doesn't help the cause at all.

Yes, this is what happens to rock bands when they start to get old and fall in and out of love. Their lyrics may be a little deeper than previous hits. They tackle love, mostly, and past relationships. However, that doesn't make the album cool by any means. The world has enough sappy love songs as it is; Sugar Ray doesn't need to make bad ones.

If you're into soft rock that has no originality (judging by today's popular music, that's a heck of a lot of people) then run to the stores and pick this album up.

If you're anything like me, though, and wish people still rocked as they used to, the only good thing this album will be used for is a baseball substitute for batting practice.

HOME RULE CHARTER AMENDMENTS BENEFIT IOWA CITY ...

End the police state

It happens all the time. Being arrested, however, is a serious deal. It means riding in the back seat of a police officer's car. Those windows are not tinted, and even if they were, they would not keep a person from being seen.

What's worse than the ride itself is where one ends up. Although the South Capitol area is nothing to complain about, the inside of a jail cell certainly is. Being fingerprinted is not a happy occurrence. Having one's mug shot taken does not do much for a person's self-esteem, nor does the degrading orange jumpsuit. Arrest, at this point, is not the happening of choice.

Now for the officers themselves: Imagine doing all of these things because the man or woman you picked up was acting less than sober while walking home from the bar. Maybe this person was urinating, keeping a disorderly house, or refusing to disperse. An officer may feel a good deal of contempt for these people, but certainly not that they pose a threat to society. No officer fears for her or his life or safety while bringing in a citizen who was in a room where illegal drugs were present or in use. Other examples of nonviolent crimes include disorderly conduct, criminal mischief in the fourth and fifth degree, some types of interference with official acts, avoiding apprehension, some petty thefts, and some burglaries. Even possession of certain drugs, as long as there is no intent to deal, are considered nonviolent in given quantities.

Iowa City officers spend a great deal of time on these people. They spend so much time that within the past voting year city officials considered building a new jail to handle all of the traffic.

What a waste. Citizens for Accountable Local Government has, because of this, developed Home Rule Charter amendments to combat the degradation of citizens and the waste of resources in the city. While some may argue that there are too many or too-strict laws regarding nonviolent crime, the fact remains that they exist.

The effect of these amendments include that in any and all possible cases, the police would issue a citation in lieu of arrest. For all the aforementioned cases, local residents would be cited and would later appear in court to testify. This not only would maintain the mental health and ability to function in society of residents of this great city, it would also allow for a better allocation of resources by the police force. Officers would be able to continue on their beats, protecting citizens and businesses from such crimes as assault and vandalism, instead of driving to the jail with individuals who couldn't hold it and took that "world-as-urinal" thing a bit too literally.

The amendments also declare Iowa City police to be a peacekeeping force. Further, they formulate a policy regarding community policing and also introduce the option for citizens to vote on whether to retain the city manager and the chief of police, allowing the citizens to better hold them accountable for their performance.

These amendments give a great deal of power to the people and require a level of accountability from the government that should be expected.

KING OF POP'S RETURN ALREADY ATTACKED ...

Judge the 'King' by his music

Michael Jackson's upcoming album, Invisible, slated for release this summer, already has his critics on the attack. Jackson has not released a body of original work for 10 years, and some think his work will not be accepted in a culture that now worships such teen idols as NSync and Britney Spears.

Jackson's last original album, Dangerous, came out in 1991, followed by the compilation album HIStory in 1995. However, the years since the smash success of his chart-topping Thriller have been filled with a great deal of controversy. His two marriages, to Debbie Rowe and Lisa Marie Presley, both ended in divorce under a watchful media eye.

It is premature to dismiss Jackson's album even before its release.

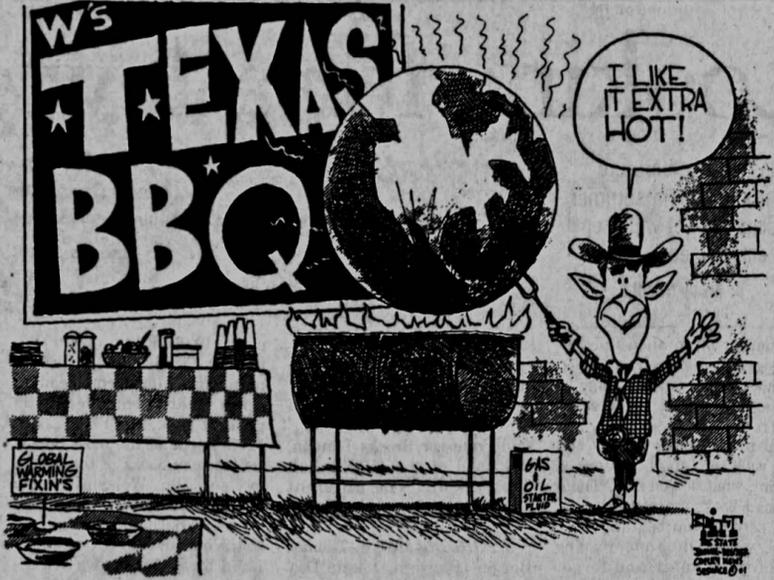

From plastic surgery flaws to child-molestation charges, Jackson has endured many tribulations during his reign as "King of Pop."

However, it is not inconceivable to imagine Jackson making a triumphant return to the music world. Madonna has proven the possibility this summer with her first U.S. tour in eight years. Though Madonna's songs have continually flooded the airwaves, her music has changed dramatically in the years of her absence from touring. Despite the stylistic differences in her music, her fan base has remained large, and she is still highly in demand, with tickets to her shows being sold for up to $4,000.

Representatives for Jackson have promised a blazing return for the star with the tracks off Invisible. Name recognition and curiosity may intrigue some enough to buy the record, but it is only true talent, the kind possessed by Jackson, that will sell albums. It is premature to dismiss his album even before its release. Though the star will be 43 in August, critics must remember that this man making his return to music helped create the pop world Britney Spears lives in.

Life in the really slow lane

Tower Place clock watch: 16 days; still five minutes slow.

Ain't it great? City officials spend umpteen million dollars dressing up a parking ramp so that it looks like ... well ...

A parking ramp. A parking ramp wearing a brick façade in order to remain incognito. And all those millions of dollars later, they can't get the clocks in the tower to run on time.

At least we know they're not fascists. Luckily, our city officials are not doing anything really important in the world.

Unlike local developer Mark Moen, who has proved himself to be a true Einstein at arithmetic. Not that Einstein himself was.

Moen, the owner of, among other things, the Mondo's building and the old Iowa Theatre building (which was recently the home of the Whopper until the Whopper opted not to have it its way), also owns the old house at the corner of Iowa Avenue and Linn Street, which he has decided to bulldoze.

It's not so much that the place is a grand old house — it's not. It's merely a nice old house. But it does serve as a reminder of an era when everything, including tomatoes, was not made of injected-mold plastic.

Moen's reason for sending the old place to the graveyard is that he can't afford to renovate it.

So he's going to raze it and construct a four-story building. I frequently run into the same problem myself. Can't afford to spend a couple hundred thou renovating an old structure, so my first thought is to spend several million knocking it down and building a new one in its place.

Scoff all you want, it's bright, forward thinking like this that's made (and continuing to remake) Iowa City what it is:

Five minutes slow, according to the official municipal clocks. Maybe the city's just trying to save energy.

That's actually a good idea, given that we're in some type or another of energy crisis. Not that you'd know it from some of the UI's policies.

Oh, I know; the university has some sort of deal with MidAmerican Energy to cut back on power use during peak-demand times this summer, which basically means not running all the air conditioners on-campus all the time. The university wants to be a good citizen. That's what it says, anyway.

Then why, you just have to wonder, does the UI send its parking minions driving all over creation in gas-guzzling four-wheel-drive pickups? In the summertime?

I suppose the answer is that when you're driving around, checking the university's parking lots, you'd probably better have a four-wheel-drive guzzler just in case one of Iowa's notorious late-June blizzards blows in. And then there's the university's late-night air conditioning. You should check it out sometime, especially in the old engineering building.

Just take a stroll up or down Washington Street around midnight, as I do five nights a week because that's when I get off work. There are these empty labs in the engineering building because they're renovating the place. And when I say empty, I mean stripped of everything that isn't attached to the walls.

And there, at midnight, you will notice air conditioners chugging away, cooling down utterly vacant rooms. You can look right in through the windows because someone always leaves the lights on.

It makes you think that Stealth President Cheney is running the university's energy-conservation policies.

You remember the Stealth President. He's been running around, saying we need to drill for oil everywhere and build more refineries because we face an energy crisis.

However, in the case of refineries, it appears that the oil industry itself might be to blame.

Internal oil-industry documents released recently by Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., suggest that five and six years ago, the companies themselves were trying to cut refinery output in order to increase their profits. "If the U.S. petroleum industry doesn't reduce its refining capacity, it will never see any substantial increase in refinery margins [profits]," goes one internal memo from Chevron in November 1995.

A Texaco memo from 1996 says excess capacity is creating "very poor refining financial results." And a 1996 Mobil memo says the company was prepared to put on a "full court press" to ensure that an independent refinery in California that had closed would not reopen. The independent refinery did not reopen, by the way.

No wonder it looks as though we have an energy crisis. Between oil companies dampening refinery output and the university air-conditioning vacant rooms, I'd say something was going on.

Talk about five minutes slow.

UNITED NATIONS — One after another, African leaders at the United Nations' first global gathering on HIV/AIDS made emotional pleas for help in ending the devastation wrought by the epidemic. Nigeria's president warned that entire populations face extinction.

Secretary-General Kofi Annan, seeking $7 billion to $10 billion for a global AIDS fund, said AIDS spending "in the developing world needs to rise to roughly five times its present level." U.S. officials pledged to provide more aid, but they did not say how much.

Annan, a native of Ghana who has made the fight against AIDS his personal priority, opened the three-day special session by urging world leaders to set aside moral judgments and face the unpleasant facts of a disease that has killed 22 million people and ravaged many of the world's poorest nations.

Noting the weeks of infighting among delegates leading up to the gathering, Annan told the 189-nation General Assembly: "We cannot deal with AIDS by making moral judgments or refusing to face unpleasant facts and still less by stigmatizing those who are infected. We can only do it by speaking clearly and plainly, both about the ways that people become infected, and about what they can do to avoid infection."

Kenya and Nigeria are each home to more than 2 million HIV patients. In Botswana, more than 20 percent of the adult population is infected, and in South Africa, AIDS will knock off 17 years of life expectancy by 2005.

"The future of our continent is bleak, to say the least," Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo said. "The prospect of extinction of the entire population of a continent looms larger and larger."

Obasanjo and others called for "total cancellation of Africa's debt," which takes badly needed money away from health and social programs, including those in the fight against AIDS.

Board once again to discuss Boy Scouts

■ The School Board's desire to charge the scouts a fee may conflict with a Jesse Helms amendment.

By Sara C. Konrad
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City School Board will discuss its next move in the ongoing debate over the Iowa City Boy Scouts' use of public-school facilities at a meeting tonight.

The debate surrounds the School Board's decision last month to charge the scouts $150 a week for one two-hour meeting in a school's gymnasium. The new building-use policy came in reaction to the national scout policy banning homosexuals, which conflicts with the district's equity statement.

But now the School District could face a $1.7 million loss in federal funding because of a recent Senate measure, sponsored by Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that prohibits school districts from discriminating against select groups.

Both the School District and the Boy Scouts have retained lawyers, and the scouts have threatened a suit if the fee is implemented.

"This has become very divisive," said John Gross, the scoutmaster of Iowa City Troop 204. "Damage has been done, and that's too bad."

Local scout leaders have made it clear to board members that they do not share opinions with the national scouts over the homosexuality issue, he said.

"There has never been a scoutmaster removed in this district for being gay," Gross said. "Now, we've all been labeled homophobic."

School Board member Lauren Reece said the meeting will give the board members a chance to discuss the legal issue that now surrounds the debate.

"It will be an open discussion of where we're at and a discussion of the [new law]," she said.

The School District's attorney, Kirsten Frey, will attend today's meeting as a consultant to the board members.

"If they decide to stick with the current path, it is possible I will represent them in a lawsuit," she said. "If the Senate amendment is passed, I think it is possible the School District could change its position."

School Superintendent Lane Pluge said the board will evaluate how its policy will co-exist with the Helms amendment.

"Our position may need to change due to the Helms act," he said. "We will be looking at how that will affect our decision."

Gross said he believes the board will move more quickly in light of the legislation, but he expressed concern for other groups that could be discriminated against by the board.

"This could affect other groups, such as the girls' choir or the Girl Scouts," he said. "I would like to see the School Board policy rescinded, and I would like to see the schools open to all groups."

UI purchases of prison items rises

PRISON LABOR

and request a bid on anything they make," said UI General Counsel Mark Schantz. "We have a greater degree of responsibility than other purchasers, but we don't have a choice."

Iowa State University has purchased $1.6 million worth of products, ranking it as the state's biggest buyer, Baysden said.

The prison industry, which employs inmates at 10 correction facilities statewide, offers training and work opportunities in a variety of occupational areas, the group's Web site says. Inmates can keep no more than 20 percent of their wages, which end up at approximately 50-90 cents per hour. The rest goes toward taxes, child support, restitution, and room and board.

Those who can purchase prison-made products are limited to nonprofit organizations, tax-supported institutions, and governmental entities such as universities, school districts, and hospitals.

Prison labor has been used in Iowa for 53 years, Baysden said. "The alternative is nothing," he said. "This is all about rehabilitation. If nothing occurs, inmates are released with no discipline or work ethic. But if they can go to an employer after learning a marketable skill, everyone benefits — prisoners learn to behave, the taxpayer benefits, and the inmate population decreases."

"What does an inmate have to spend his money on? They don't have movies or malls, and the hamburgers are free. What we teach has to have value, or it's meaningless."

The work is not forced because inmates can opt to perform prison duties such as mopping floors or cafeteria work, Baysden said.

"Inmates who work generally don't return to prison," he said, adding that he is conducting a study with the University of Baltimore that compares employed and unemployed inmates.

The prison industry's primary concerns are to occupy the time of long-term inmates, he said, which keeps them from mischief, and to give short-term prisoners marketable skills.

Members of UI Students Against Sweatshops say they have been aware of the university's inmate-produced furniture, and they will address the issue later this summer. SAS members said they would like to see the policy that governs the manner in which companies that produce UI apparel treat their workers, called the Code of Conduct, applied to all university purchases.

The code outlaws the use of forced labor, including work done by inmates.

SAS wants all university affiliates to "treat human beings fairly, compensate them, and seek work for non-prisoners, especially considering Iowa's [economic] trouble," said UI graduate student David Deifell.

Other students, including Rob Russell, the president of the graduate student union, have spoken out against the use of prison labor.

Police arrest four locals on meth charges with possession of precursors to meth, admitted to gathering the materials from three different Iowa City stores, court reports said.

Perkins also faces a charge of driving while barred, according to the reports.

Although Cub Foods manager Mike Route did not know details surrounding the particular incident, he said, it was not the first time it has happened.

"And we're not the only retailer it's happened to, either," he said, recalling a similar situation at the Coralville Wal-Mart Supercenter in March. Iowa City residents Tammy Koehn and Michael Dooley were charged in connection with that incident.

It is important for employees to be trained so they can recognize suspicious purchases, Route said.

Methamphetamine is an extremely addictive stimulant that stimulates the central nervous system, like adrenaline, according to the National Clearinghouse for Alcohol and Drug Information's official Web site, www.methamphetamine.org. It causes users to feel pleasurable and content with life, the Web site said. Many users take meth to help them stay awake.

Also on June 22, Coralville police arrested Van Horne, Iowa, resident Sara Bramow, 36, and Joseph Boots, 31, residence unknown, after receiving a call reporting a suspicious vehicle. The two were allegedly found with anhydrous ammonia, lithium batteries, and engine-starting fluid, according to court reports.

All four suspects remain in the Johnson County Jail on $9,750 bonds. Perkins must post an additional $6,500 for his second charge to be released from custody.

UI research may show addiction malfunction cal disorder.

Bechara said the mental deficiency itself doesn't cause addiction, but there are many contributing factors to an addiction. However, the study could have important implications for future treatment.

"Just as drugs are being used to treat Alzheimer's Disease, the same methods may be used to help treat the decision-making section of the brain," he said.

Dan O'Leary, a UI research scientist in psychiatry who conducts research on marijuana addiction, said he was optimistic about the implications of the study.

"Obviously, the most hopeful [implication] is, if it is a cognitive nature, we might be able to understand what directly causes addiction, making it easier to treat it," he said.

High court approves campaign-finance limits wrote for the majority that allowing political parties to spend whatever they pleased in support of candidates would open the door to corruption.

The court's more liberal wing won the vote of center-right Justice Sandra Day O'Connor to prevail. O'Connor's fellow swing voter, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, joined the three conservatives, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas in dissent.

The court agreed with the Justice Department, which argued that the kind of regulated money at issue in this case, called coordinated expenditures, could be used to flout the federal limits on how much individuals may contribute to candidates.

"Coordinated expenditures of money donated to a party are tailor-made to undermine contribution limits," Souter wrote.

The term refers to party spending done in concert with a particular campaign but kept separate from the candidate's coffers.

Largely eclipsed by unregulated soft money, coordinated expenditures are used less often now than when the case began with a dispute over radio ads in a 1986 Colorado Senate race.

The ruling applies to party spending for House and Senate candidates, a category that totaled $427 million for Republicans and $265 million for Democrats in the 2000 elections.

Republicans stood to benefit more directly from an end to party spending limits, because of the historical fund-raising advantage the party enjoys.

GOP officials played down Monday's ruling, noting that it preserves a status quo in place since the Watergate era.

STATE BRIEF

Boswell headed for 3rd District

DES MOINES (AP) — Democratic U.S. Rep. Leonard Boswell said Monday he's decided to move to Central Iowa's 3rd District, where he'll run for a fourth term in Congress.

In a telephone interview with the Associated Press, Boswell said he made the decision after consulting with his wife, Dotie.

"We have sat down together at the kitchen table, and we're going to the 3rd District," Boswell said. "Of course, I think I can win."

Boswell has been struggling for days to decide where he will move, with the decision coming down to the new 3rd District or the 2nd District, which includes Iowa City, after he was put into a heavily Republican west Iowa district under new congressional maps.

"We went through an exhaustive study of how this plays out," said a Boswell associate who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Boswell likely will buy a house in Polk County, home to more than 70 percent of the Democratic primary vote in the new district, although that decision has not been officially announced.

Boswell said he feels comfortable in the district, noting that he already represents seven of the 12 counties in that district.

"I've got some unfinished business," he said. "I'm confident I can build on that."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone you work with may be trying to make you look bad. Just stick to your job, and you will come out on top. You may have to deal with institutions. Be sure to have your facts and papers in proper order.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get out and fight for your cause. You need to feel that you've helped someone to feel satisfied. You will enjoy the company of those with the same views.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't let anyone twist your arm. You need to make your own decisions even if they may appear to be somewhat bizarre. Curtailed freedom will be the reason you end your relationship.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You need to interact with people from all walks of life to feel fulfilled. Introduce yourself to those who may be able to inspire you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will be emotional regarding money matters. Don't expect to get back money you lent. It is wise best to invest in conservative, long-term portfolios.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will want to play both ends against the middle. Your emotional partner is probably fed up with your ways. Try to be honest.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be fantasizing about someone you work with, but you had better keep those thoughts to yourself. Use your intuition when dealing with peers. You need to stay ahead of everyone else if you really want to make progress.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can win favors if you talk about some of your unique ideas. Changes in your home will be positive. Property investments will pay off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put yourself into your work. You will have personal problems if you have idle time. Keep busy and refuse to discuss any matters with your mate that could lead to a potential dispute.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You're in the mood to snuggle up and enjoy the one you love. Prepare a great meal. After all, that's the way to your mate's heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will have to bend a little to take care of small but important details for someone you care about. Don't let minor health problems get any worse. Visit your physician.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will be emotionally raring to go, passionate, giving, and eager to please. Don't wait; tell your mate how you feel and make plans for your future together.

"So anyway, when the scab broke out ..."

"You should really come to the bank with us tomorrow. The heist will only take about 10 minutes or something."

"Hey, what's your phone number?"

"Honey, I'm pregnant."

"So, umm... do you like Legos?"

"The food here is great. Much better than the stuff they served us in prison."

"Leaving so soon? But you haven't seen my stamp collection yet!"

"I'm an engineering major."

"What do you mean, 'Do I look fat?' You've only gained 5 or 10 pounds."

"So, have you ever thought about becoming a dentist?"

"I think I need to take my pants off."

Iowa gets commitment from California forward

The incoming high school senior made an oral commitment on Sunday.

By Jeremy Schnitker
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa basketball team received its third oral commitment Sunday night, from forward Josh Rhodes of Santa Cruz, Calif.

According to Rhodes' summer-league coach, Bob Bramlett, the 6-6, 215-pound senior-to-be gave his commitment to Iowa coach Steve Alford Sunday. He will join the Hawkeyes for the 2002 season.

Rated by some recruiting experts as one of the 50-best prospects in his grade, Rhodes was happy to get the decision out of the way before his senior year, Bramlett said.

"He wants to have a fun year, which is rare, because most of these guys end up being stressed out their senior year," Bramlett said.

"Having it out of the way, he can enjoy being a student. He said Iowa was a home away from home; he liked it a lot there."

As a freshman, Rhodes was named the MVP of his conference and Santa Cruz County. Bramlett said he has averaged more than 20 points per game for four years in summer-league play.

Apparently Rhodes' work ethic has made him into one of the better players in the country.

"He's both a gym rat and weight room rat and has a body to die for — there's no body fat on him," Bramlett said.

Rhodes is the third high-school senior-to-be to commit to play basketball at Iowa. Greg Brunner of Charles City and Jeff Horner of Mason City, who is considered one of the top point guards in the country, have said they will attend Iowa.

Garcia hangs on for Buick Classic victory

Tiger Woods finishes 12 shots behind Garcia in 16th place.

By Joel Stashenko
 Associated Press

HARRISON, N.Y. — Sergio Garcia takes criticism of his game personally, seeing it as a knock against his swing coach and father, Victor.

Talk that his father had to go has been powerful motivation during a five-week span in which Garcia has won his first two PGA Tour events. The second victory came Monday in the rain-delayed Buick Classic, which he won by three shots over Scott Hoch. He also won at Colonial in May.

"Everybody was thinking, well, you got to change your swing, you are done, you are over, you better retire," Garcia said. "I don't know what is going on. All of a sudden it looks like I am the best player in the world. This is crazy, but it is the way it is."

With his strong play starting to establish Garcia as a serious rival to Tiger Woods — he was also near the lead of the U.S. Open last week before fading with a final round 77 — the 21-year-old Spaniard said a lot of people are being proven wrong about both his swing and his father's "great" coaching.

"I think that everybody who said that my swing was bad and I had to change it, I think they're going to have to eat all those words that they said," Garcia said. "I think it's a pretty good swing."

It was better than pretty good on Monday, when Garcia shot a nearly flawless 4-under 67 to finish with a Buick Classic-tying total of 16-under 268.

Woods, meanwhile, was never a factor in the final two rounds and finished 12 shots back of Garcia in a tie for 16th. He said after his final round he was golfed out and was going fishing.

Hoch, who shot 68 Monday while playing in the same threesome as Garcia, was alone in second at 271. Billy Andrade, Stewart Cink, and J.P. Hayes were two strokes behind Hoch at 273.

Garcia was uncomfortable Monday with questions whether beating Woods made his victory more satisfying. He said such talk "disrespects" all the other golfers on the tour.

But Garcia also said he wants to be the best player in the world, a perch now occupied by Woods.

"I think I'm getting closer and closer," Garcia said, adding that to supplant Woods he'd have to start winning every other week on the PGA Tour.

Hoch said Garcia isn't in Woods' league yet, but he's also not far behind.

"Hey, he has got all the game right now," said the 45-year-old Hoch, who started on the PGA Tour in 1980 — the same year Garcia was born. "Obviously, he is not at Tiger's level, but right now I'd put him in anybody else's level."

Hoch started the day at 10 under, two behind Garcia, and briefly caught the leader at 12

Learfield keeps Iowa's radio rights

IOWA CITY — Learfield Communications Inc. has been awarded the contract for exclusive live radio broadcast rights for Iowa football, men's basketball, women's basketball and ancillary programming for three years beginning with the 2002-2003 academic year, Iowa Athletic Department officials announced Monday.

Learfield Communications Inc. is entering the fifth year of a five-year agreement with the university to produce live radio coverage of UI football and men's basketball, and the weekly radio call-in shows of football coach Kirk Ferentz and men's basketball coach Steve Alford. In a separate agreement, Learfield also owns the rights to provide live radio coverage of Iowa women's basketball.

Learfield Communications Inc., Gazette Communications, and HostCommunications each provided a comprehensive bid on the project that addressed such mat-

Bourque calls it quits

Sources say he will announce his retirement today.

By John Mossman
 Associated Press

DENVER — Raymond Bourque, his quest for the Stanley Cup realized, will retire at a news conference scheduled for today.

A source close to the Colorado Avalanche told the Associated Press on Monday that Bourque will announce his retirement after 22 NHL seasons.

The Avalanche scheduled a news conference for Tuesday, saying only that the star defenseman will make an announcement about his hockey career. While the team would not reveal what Bourque, 40, planned to announce, the Denver Post said Bourque will retire, primarily for family reasons.

The highest-scoring defenseman in NHL history said previously he wants to spend more time with his family after more than two

Darryl Moore explodes for 51

Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing stormed back and trailed only by a few points throughout the second half. Adam Jones sunk a 3-pointer with 4:54 remaining to give Imprinted Sportsweat/Goodfellow Printing its first lead. But Iowa City Ready Mix/Deli-Mart got the job done and increased its record to 2-1 with a 94-90 victory.

current UNI player Aaron Middendorf provided 20 points and 7 boards.

Imprinted Sportsweat/Goodfellow fell to 0-3; both Evans and coach Gary Close said the team needs to work on its defensive game and getting the ball into more hands.

Fitzpatrick's Brewery and Steakhouse 113, Community Motors/Goodfellow 102

Hawkeye guard Duez Henderson continued to put up big numbers with a double-double performance Monday night. He finished with 37 points and 11 rebounds.

Ex-Loyola University player Brian Wolf had 29 points and 16 boards for Community Motors/Goodfellow. Fitzpatrick's pulled out the victory though with large numbers as well. Iowa players Sean Sonderleiter and Pierre Pierce had 21 and 31 points respectively. Ex-Hawkeye Jason Price exploded with 25 points and 11 boards.

Lepic Kroeger Realtors/Active Endeavors 81, Merrill Lynch/Nike 77

In his first Prime Time League game of the summer, Iowa center Jared Reiner put up 16 points and seven rebounds. Peter Bullock of Alaska-Anchorage scored 28 points in the victory for Lepic Kroeger Realtors/Active Endeavors.

HawksNestOnline.com 123, Mike Gatens Real Estate 115

Former Hawkeye star Darryl Moore exploded for 52 points and 11 rebounds in an overtime victory over Mike Gatens Real Estate. Moore wasn't the only one to get in the scoring frenzy, however. Iowa incoming freshman Marcellus Sommerville put up 40 points and 7 rebounds in his team's loss. Teammate Brandon Sain added 17 points for Mike Gatens Real Estate.

declined to discuss their relationship.

Also unclear is the status of Hingis' sometimes strained relationship with her mother and coach, Melanie Molitor. Twice Hingis tried touring without a coach, most recently this spring, before rehiring her mother for the job.

Molitor refused to talk with reporters Monday. Hingis quoted her mother as telling her: "You tried your best. Now it's over. You have to decide what you're doing next."

Added Hingis: "Sometimes you just need some time to recover your body and soul. Now I will have time to do it."

She was eliminated just five hours into the tournament, despite a new seeding system designed to reduce the number of early round upsets.

Hingis' loss aside, the biggest surprise on the opening day was the weather - sunny and warm, with temperatures in the low 80s. Britons are unaccustomed to such conditions, especially at Wimbledon, and 50 fans and two ballgirls fainted because of the heat.

It had little effect on the play, which included victories by tournament favorites Pete Sampras and Jennifer Capriati. American teenager Andy Roddick won his Wimbledon debut, and Serena Williams and Marat Safin also advanced. No. 11-seeded Jan-Michael Gambill lost to fellow American Chris Woodruff.

The top-seeded Sampras, bidding for his eighth Wimbledon title, survived a couple of awkward moments to beat Francisco Clavet, 6-4, 7-6 (5), 6-4.

At the start of the second set, Sampras was chagrined to realize he was standing at the wrong end of the court. And he won the final point of the set sprawled on the court after slipping, as Clavet hit a backhand into the net.

The 18-year-old Roddick, touted as the next American Grand Slam champion, beat Ivo Heuberger, 6-4, 6-4, 7-6 (0). Capriati, halfway to a Grand Slam sweep, overcame a slow start to beat Maria Alejandra Vento, 6-3, 6-2.

"I think Jennifer right now is the favorite, definitely," Hingis said. "She's playing very well. She looks fitter than ever. She's very hungry. She's believing in herself."

Although Capriati has become the dominant player on the women's tour, Hingis will retain the No. 1 ranking after Wimbledon, thanks to her success in second-tier tournaments.

Big catch: The Iowa basketball team receives an oral commitment from a 6-6 forward, Page 7.

Swails resigns as Iowa's cross-country coach

The four-year coach cited personal reasons for the departure.

By Laura Podolak and Jeremy Schnitker
 The Daily Iowan

Citing personal reasons, Iowa women's cross-country coach Sara Swails announced her resignation Monday along with track assistant coach Kim Bodey. Swails, who was also an assistant women's track coach and who had been at Iowa for four years, said that the stress of coaching a Division I program along with raising a family became too much.

"Coaching Division I athletics is very time consuming," she said. "I wanted my life back. It got to the point where it was taking away from my family."

"I loved it here; it's hard to leave. Our distance group was close, but I think I need to pursue some other things."

Swails has left her mark on the Iowa track and cross-country programs. Under her direction, the cross-country team finished seventh at the 1999 NCAA Midwest Regionals. On that squad, Swails coached then-freshman Sarah Arens and Anne Ruffcorn, who received All-Region honors. Swails' distance medley relay team took second place at the 2001 Big Ten Indoor Championships.

While leaving for mostly personal reasons, Swails did say she was a little disappointed that track doesn't get much consideration at the university. She said she was "disappointed in some things."

"They delayed the indoor track stuff, the new cross-country course, and removed our sports dietitians," Swails said. "But those were just little things. I really enjoyed this job and the people I work with."

One of the persons she works with, Bodey, is also leaving Iowa for personal reasons.

"I decided that I am nearly finished with a Ph.D., and I felt that it was time to finish that," she said. "I want to go back to teaching. I wanted to work in a different department from coaching."

Bodey served as Iowa's field-events coach for three years and led the Hawkeyes to 18 Big Ten Championship finals and broke four school field-event records.

Before coming to Iowa, Swails coached women's track and field, and men's and women's cross country at Iowa City West High School. In 1988, she earned the 3A Boys State Cross Country Coach of the Year when her team won the state title, making her the first woman ever in Iowa to lead a boy's team to a state title in any sport.

Swails says she may continue coaching, but for now she just needs some time off.

"It's hard to leave, but it's something I need for myself," she said. "I'm going to take six to nine months off, see what I want to do. I do want to work again, maybe coaching or teaching."

Arens was surprised to find out about Swails' resignation.

"I'm sad to see her go, and she will be missed, but I respect her decision and her need to do what she needs to do," Arens said.

Arens said the search for a new coach is underway and university officials are narrowing down prospects.

Swails resigns after 4 years

Evans and Earl face off in PTL

Reggie Evans puts up 37 points on the former Hawkeye.

By Annie Gable
 The Daily Iowan

The past met the present Monday night in North Liberty, as ex-Hawkeye center Acie Earl matched up against current Iowa power forward Reggie Evans in Prime Time League action.

Evans downed 37 points for Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing, and Earl scored 27 in the contest.

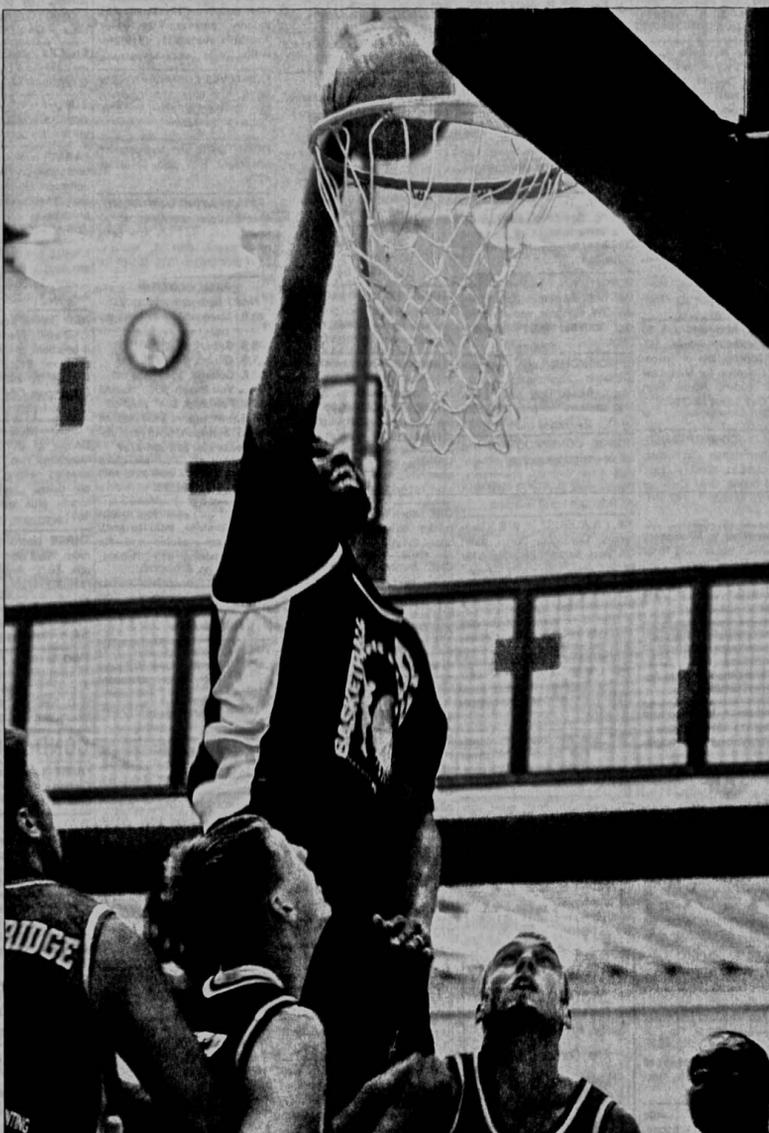

The matchup was even, and both players battled hard, which was evident in the number of fouls they each committed. Unofficially, Evans committed 11 and Earl 6. Tension seemed to run high between the two, but both had nothing but kind words to say after the game was over.

"It's good to play against Acie," Evans said. "He's a veteran, he's been through it all: high school, college, the NBA. It's a thrill to play against him."

Earl, who was a lottery draft pick with the Boston Celtics after his playing days at Iowa, felt the same way.

"It's not a personal matchup," said Earl, who had a team-high 13 rebounds. "It's a team matchup. [Evans] is an ideal college player. He plays hard, he goes after loose balls. He's the type of player this [Iowa] program needs."

Iowa City Ready Mix/Deli-Mart, led by Earl, grabbed a large lead in the first half and ended the half with an 11-point lead. However, the second half provided a hard-fought battle, and Imprinted

Hingis falls in round one of Wimbledon

She said she was bothered by tendinitis in her lower back.

By Steven Wine
 Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Because of her turbulent love life, rifts with mom, and a 2½-year Grand Slam slump, Martina Hingis carried a lot of baggage into Wimbledon.

No wonder her back hurt. The top-ranked Hingis blamed previously undisclosed tendinitis in her lower back for Monday's listless 6-4, 6-2 loss to Virginia Ruano Pascual. But the real explanation may be more complicated.

It's the second time in three years that Hingis has lost in the opening round at Wimbledon. The defeats are part of her streak of 10 consecutive Grand Slam tournaments without a title, all as the top-seeded player.

"I don't think it's such a big failure," Hingis said. "I know if I'm 100 percent, I can go out there and beat anybody."

Hingis appeared fine against Ruano Pascual, a Spaniard ranked 83rd who won a match at Wimbledon for the first time since 1998. But Hingis said she was hampered by an ailing back that flared up a week ago and restricted her practice routine.

"I was just afraid of moving," she said. "Against any player these days you have to just be able to run."

Hingis, 20, didn't repeat her recent admission that because of men, she's no longer focused on tennis. She has dated several players, including Swedish standout Magnus Norman last year, and recently she was romantically linked to attorney Christopher Calkin, the prosecutor in the Miami trial of a man convicted of stalking Hingis.

She said Calkin wasn't at Monday's match, but she has point/counterpoint

Is the NBA draft filled with players who are too young?

That only three out of the many draft picks from last year's NBA draft scored in double digits this past season shows that players are definitely getting too young to enter the league.

Only a few of those under the age of 20 can hang in a league that is loaded with so much talent. A high-school kid shouldn't expect to be able to come into the NBA and face off with Kobe Bryant, Allen Iverson, or Shaquille O'Neal. There's just no way.

Their bodies aren't developed, nor are they in any way mature enough to handle both on- and off-court situations in the fast-paced life of an NBA player.

It isn't fun watching a draft in which you know the players picked will not have an impact for at least a couple of years, as was the case with recent draft picks. The NBA draft doesn't have the excitement used to when guys such as O'Neal and Alonzo Mourning, who were high school college players, were being chosen. Unlike the NFL draft, which is loaded with familiar names of college stars, the NBA has a bunch of high-school kids and college freshmen whom most of us may have heard of but never have seen in action.

With high-school entries, we're watching kids being drafted who will most likely not make it big in the league, as few high-schoolers have.

The number of young draftees this year will not only make the draft boring, but it will make the NBA boring to watch next year because none of the draft picks will be playing significant minutes.

— Jeremy Schnitker

Saying that a high-school senior or college sophomore is too young to enter the NBA draft is like telling a child prodigy to slow down his learning. If a man has the skills to compete at the highest level of competition, no one should be able to tell him differently.

The opposing opinion will argue that these men — or boys, in some cases — are not mature enough to know how to handle the fame and fortune that comes with being a superstar. It is impossible to put an age restriction on when someone will be mature enough to handle million-dollar contracts, shoe deals, and television interviews. Basically, there isn't much of a difference between the way an 18-year-old and a 22-year-old man deal with that kind of money.

Also, why is the NBA draft surrounded by so much hype about the young talent entering the draft? The No. 1 pick in this year's MLB draft was a high-school senior, yet no one made a peep.

There should be no difference between a high school baseball player entering the major leagues and one entering the NBA. Maybe the reasoning goes deeper than just the participants' ages.

Stereotypically, baseball players are middle-class white men, while the men entering the NBA draft tend to be lower-class black men. Is it assumed that the white athlete is better qualified to handle fame and fortune than his black counterpart?

I think sometimes this is the case.

If an athlete has the skills to compete at the highest level of competition, he has a right to play.

— Laura Podolak

Despite hearing heavy criticism, the Iowa City Council voted 5-2 to approve a $690,000 loan to the developer of the Pe Project, and it gave 18 months to pay it back. Developer Terry Stamper, Troy, Mich., will use the money to continue developing the structure, including sewer lines, in the mixed-use neighborhood.
